We differentiate between the Palestinian leadership and the Palestinian population who wants to live in peace with Israel, which would have been achieved long ago if not because of the extremist demands of their leaders, their corruption making them very rich as long as the conflict persists, and the absurd demand that the Palestinian refugees would return to their homes. Their number was 500,000 to 700,000 thousands, and most of them fled to the request of their leaders to leave their homes for a few weeks until they would exterminate the Jews and they would receive the Jews' assets as well. Since 1948 there were 900,000 Jewish refugees who fled the Arab countries – Egypt (including Jacques Cory), Iraq, Yemen, Syria, Lebanon, etc. Most of them were fully integrated in Israel within a few years by a country which was much poorer than the Arab countries with all their oil, and without the support of UNWRA. The Jews have left assets which were much larger than what the Palestinians have left. Nobody asks for the right of return to the Germans, who were expelled from Poland, Czech Republic, etc. in the forties in the same years of the Arabs, the Greeks who were expelled from Turkey, the Turks who were expelled from Greece, the Poles, and many millions of refugees who fled their countries after World War II, only the Palestinians think that they have to return to their homes, and as their descendants are now five million (actually only 50,000 of the original refugees still live), it would mean the end of Israel. But BDS, the UN and many anti-Semites demand it, while they don't ask for the right of return of millions of other refugees who fled their countries.

But the Nazi's link with the Palestinian ideology of their leaders did not start today. We've written about the best concert that I have ever seen that took place at the Staatsoper Unter den Linden – with the Staatskapelle Berlin conducted by Daniel Barenboim – a concert of Schumann's works – on June 1, 2010. Outside there was a violent demonstration against Israel and the Gaza Flotilla Raid. Thousands of people full of hatred marched on Unter den Linden, exactly at the same location where the worst Nazi demonstrations took place, and I thought that probably Hitler and his Palestinian ally Haj Amin Al-Husseini were watching the demonstration from above (or below), delighted that the hate of the Jews still persisted. According to his memoirs, Al-Husseini preconditioned the assistance of Arabs to Germany by letting the Arabs exterminate the Jews in Palestine and other Arab states. He wrote that he submitted to the Nazi German Government during World War II a draft declaration of German-Arab cooperation, containing the clause: "Germany and Italy recognize the right of the Arab countries to solve the question of the Jewish elements, which exist in Palestine and in the other Arab countries, as required by the national and ethnic (völkisch) interests of the Arabs, and as the Jewish question was solved in Germany and Italy." But while the demonstrators showed hate and brutality, Barenboim, the Israeli conductor, achieved musical perfection with the most profound humane feelings in this concert. If the demonstrators would be contented to criticize Israeli conduct, rightly or wrongly, it would be legitimate to do so, but they demonstrate against the people of Israel, against their right of existence, against the Jews, and don't condemn the killing of innocent Jews in Argentina, France, and Israel, by terrorists who are brainwashed by their propaganda. There is a direct link between the Palestinian propaganda, so similar to Der Stürmer's, and the murder of innocent civilians in Israel and the West Bank.

I met a German businessman in New Orleans who told me that the problem of the German Muslims is that they don't want to assimilate in the German society (the demonstrations on Unter den Linden showed their extremism). If they would be assimilated it would solve all the racist problems against the foreigners. I answered him that there was once a minority in the Germanic countries who assimilated totally into the German culture from Heine to Mendelssohn, from Marx to Freud, from Kafka who wrote in German to Mahler, but this was apparently not enough for some Germans during World War II... Nevertheless, I appreciate very much the attitude of the German government towards the Holocaust, they don't deny it as many do, as Palestine's president does, as Iranian's president does, they don't say like many countries who were allied to the Nazis that they were not responsible for the murder of hundreds of thousands Jews in their countries with the assistance of part of their population. Germany knows exactly how the genie of anti-Semitism starts and stops it from the incubator. They educate their children with full transparency, taking responsibility of what their country has done without saying like other governments that it was the Nazi regime (or Mussolini, or Petain, or that the Anschluss was forced by the Nazis, forgetting the support of millions of their citizens to the Nazis) and not the new democratic regime of Germany that did the atrocities. The Museums of the Holocaust in Germany are most accurate, schoolchildren, policemen and soldiers come to visit them, Germany is an ally to Israel and if it has criticism it keeps it within the boundaries of friendship.

A HISTORY OF THE PALESTINIAN HATRED TO THE JEWS AND ISRAEL

The hatred towards Israel since Haj Amin Al-Husseini in World War II, the hatred that I encountered in January 1952, when I was 7 in Cairo, when the Egyptian shabab burned the European Cairo, almost killing all my family as well, the hatred of Egypt, Syria and Jordan to Israel during the 1948 war, and in 1967 prior to the Six Day War - threatening that they will burn and ruin Israel, killing the population in a Jihad, the hatred of the Palestinian leaders and first of all Arafat, the Nobel-Peace prize winner who was personally responsible of killing thousands of civilians during the Intifada, until the hatred against Israel in the violent demonstration in Berlin and elsewhere, is only a link that started in the persecution of the Jews in Christian Europe and in the Middle East, because the "Jews" presumably killed the Jewish Jesus forgetting that it was the Romans, forefathers of the Italians who did it, expelled the Jews from Spain, forced the Jews to convert in Portugal, expelled the Jews from many other European countries, from England to Germany, and culminated in the Holocaust. The defamatory allegations against Israel by Palestinians and Europeans, so called defenders of the human rights, is in direct continuation of the anti-Semite conduct of the Arabs in Syria, Iraq and Egypt to their Jewish minorities, and the Europeans against the Jews in recent history. Those defenders of human rights in world organizations and the UN don't say a word against the atrocities of the Syrians, Iraqis, Afghans, Algerians, etc., murdering hundreds of thousands of their brothers but they accuse Israel of atrocities while the total number of Palestinian casualties is only a few thousands killed during wars instigated by their leaders and taking their populations as shields. But those facts don't bother those anti-Semites from the intellectual left to the fascists who back terrorists and the Hamas, which want to achieve supremacy of the Islam not only in Israel but all over the world.

I specialized in my historic studies and readings in the history of Europe between the two World Wars and I notice flagrant similarities between the backing, or at most the indifference, of the Europeans toward the Nazis and Herr Hitler, and their conduct towards the Palestinian leadership and Muslim extremists, as they are brainwashed by the Nazi propaganda of the Israeli boycott organizations who have adopted Goebbel's saying: Lie again and again until all would believe that you tell the truth. Those lies and hatred were practised by the Nazis, the Inquisition, all the anti-Semites who maintained that the Jews drink blood of Christian children, and they are practised by the boycott organizations against Israel. But Israel will not be the victim of its foes and defamators, it is strong enough to defend itself, the victims will be the Europeans and Americans who favor the Palestinian/Muslim Fundamental leadership and they will suffer in due time from terror against their civilian populations, even atomic, chemical and biological terrorism, like the Europeans and the Germans were those who suffered from Nazism after the Nazis murdered the Jews. You always start with the Jews and end up with your own population, as happens today to the Arab populations in Syria, Iraq, Yemen, etc., who are those who suffer most from the civil wars. The fundamentalist ideology wants to conquer the Western world and to replace democracy by the Sharia/Islamic Law. The Europeans need a leader like Winston Churchill, who was the only one to see the truth, to perceive the danger of Nazism, and after he came to power he changed the course of history, not like some of the Western leaders who try to accommodate the extremists in Iran, Palestine, Mursi's Egypt (Mursi is the liberal/democrat but Mubarak is not), and will pay the price of their blindness, following the Pied Piper of Hamelin.

I have a profound esteem for the Palestinian population and see no basic difference between the two people. Both are Semitic, speak similar languages, and in most of the cases look also alike. The food is similar, and even some segments of Israeli music resembles Arab music. Furthermore, a large percentage of the Israeli population originates from Arab countries – Morocco, Tunisia, Iraq, Yemen, Syria, Egypt, Libya, Lebanon, etc. Learning Arabic at school is mandatory, and the Israeli government does its utmost to eradicate anti-Arab feelings and discrimination, which is very minor in comparison to other countries, bearing also in mind that the Israeli Arabs perceive themselves as belonging to the Palestinian people, with whom Israel is in war in the last hundred years. When I visit the Balkans I cannot understand why there were such atrocious wars (except for the time when Tito was in power) – they speak basically the same language, look alike, have the same food and culture. There are of course the religious differences – Serbs are Orthodox, Croats are Catholic and Bosnians are Muslims, but this did not prevent them in the past to live in peace with a high degree of inter-marriage. Anyhow, that is also what my European friends tell me when they visit Israel about the Jews and Arabs.

The problems between the people originate primarily from the Palestinian leaders who promote a state-campaign of hatred and anti-Jewish feelings, with caricatures and school texts similar to the Nazi texts. They don't want to reach any peace agreement that will not be based on the right of return of more than five million so-called refugees, as only 10% of them left Israel during the 1948 war which was declared by the Arab states against Israel, and most of them followed the orders of their leadership to leave their homes in order to let the Arabs exterminate the Jews. Palestine was never a free Arab state. During the times of the Jewish kings there were no Arabs, and after they came to Palestine in very low numbers (the maximum numbers of Palestinians in Palestine was 700,000 in 1948, and the Jews reached a few millions within a few years in Israel), they lived under Turkish rule, British rule, Jordanian and Egyptian rule. It goes without saying that there was not a major international or even Palestinian pressure on Jordan and Egypt to establish a Palestinian state. Israel conquered the Arab West Bank and Gaza strip during the Six Day War, which was launched against Israel by Egypt, Syria and Jordan, that were convinced that this time they would succeed in exterminating Israel and kill all the Jews – that is what they said in their propaganda – Atbah el Yahud – slaughter the Jews. So, Israel occupied the West Bank and Gaza only in order to prevent the aggressors to conquer Israel and it was not planned.

Everybody knows what has ensued - the occupation of the territories and of the people was detrimental to both countries. Yet, the Israelis as an occupying force behaved much more humanely than most of the occupiers in history, except maybe the occupation of Germany and Japan by the allies. The world is in turmoil when Gaza civilians are killed not intentionally because the Hamas launches thousands of rockets near houses and schools, but the killing of ten thousands or more Palestinians (were they freedom fighters?), most of them civilians including women and children, during Black September by Jordanians remained quite unnoticed. Jordan is today de facto a Palestinian state, as more than 70% of its population are Palestinians. Ultimately, the solution of the Palestinian conflict will be reached by acknowledging that the Kingdom of Jordan is the Kingdom of Jordan/Palestine, as even the heir to the throne is half Palestinian born to a Palestinian mother. At the beginning of the British mandate, Palestine comprised two would-be countries: Transjordan/East Bank of the Jordan – the Arab state, and Cisjordan/Palestine/West Bank of the Jordan – the Jewish state. Only throughout the years this policy changed due to the strong pressures of Arabs. Jews didn't conquer a foreign land, as the British did in Uganda, the French did in Vietnam, and the Italians in Libya. They came back to their homeland, as they never left it and throughout 2,000 years most of the time there was a Jewish presence in Israel. History and archeology, religion and language are the proofs of the strong ties of the Jewish people to Israel. During all those years nobody claimed or aspired to a Palestinian Arab state that came as a reaction to the Jewish homecoming to Israel.

AN ANALYSIS OF THE ISRAELI-PALESTINIAN CONFLICT

Anyhow, if we examine what is the present situation, we find an inextricable imbroglio that nobody knows how to solve. Those who believe that the Palestinians would be satisfied with a nation-snail in parts of the West Bank and Gaza, that has not the minimum conditions required for a state, demilitarized, with a very high density, divided in two (only Kaliningrad is an enclave, but nobody dares to ask for the right of return of the Germans to Koenigsberg, as they don't want to mess with Russia), even Pakistan and Bangladesh separated after a war between the two parts of the Muslim state. As a matter of fact, the chances that the Hamas in Gaza and the Fatah in the West Bank would live in peace are lower than the chances that Israel and Palestine would live in peace. Even if Israel would withdraw totally from the West Bank as it did in Gaza, which would ruin Israel by paying hundreds of billions in compensations to the settlers who settled in part of the promised land – in many cases on lands that belonged to Jews even before Israel, a withdrawal that might even be a cause of a civil war, as some of the extremists declare... Even if we split Jerusalem in two, withdrawing from the Wailing Wall (the Jordans never let the Jews to pray there, while Israel lets the Muslims and the Christians to pray in their holy shrines), the Palestinian state would become an irredentist country wanting to exterminate Israel, exactly like Arafat stated in his salami/step-by-step theory of reconquista of Palestine from Israel.

Even in this case, they would not settle for less than the right of return, with five million Arabs coming back to Israel and the West Bank – destroying de facto Israel. Anyhow, within a few weeks or months the Hamas or Daesh would rule Palestine, continuing an attrition war with Israel, but this time from Natanya, Kfar Saba and Ben Gurion Airport, from East Jerusalem and Latrun, until Israel would not have any alternative but to conquer back the Palestinian territories, as it did during the 2nd Intifada, after more than a thousand Israelis civilians were murdered by suicide bombers, sent by the Palestinian leadership, by Arafat the Nobel-prize Peace winner. The massacre of Israeli civilians ceased only after Israel conquered again the West Bank, and built the Fence (so-called Wall) that came into being only in order to prevent the suicide bombers sent by the Palestinian leadership to come and kill freely Israelis. So, the so-called Apartheid, with the Fence, and the checkpoints, came only as a reaction in order to prevent the slaughter of the Jews, and effectively ceased the massacre that was not condemned. As a matter of fact, every time that Israel withdrew from territories they became the base for launching thousands of rockets against innocent civilians and suicide bombers – in the West Bank (Arafat), in Gaza (Hamas), in Lebanon (Hizballah), and the quietest place is the Golan Heights that Israel has annexed while Syria, its worst enemy didn't send rockets or attempted any aggression, as the Palestinians did.

The Middle East has changed totally after the "Arab Spring", it has become much more extremist instead of more democratic, much more fundamentalist – Daesh, but not only them, Al Qaeda, the Salafites, are much worse opponents than Saddam Hussein, Kaddafi or Assad. It will be a matter of weeks or months before the extremist Palestinian leadership of Hamas/Fatah would succumb to a Daesh revolution, sending hundreds of suicide bombers and thousands of rockets to Israel. So, the only peaceful situation would be that Jordan would be proclaimed as the Jordanian Palestinian state, with Gaza and the West Bank's Arab cities and villages. The Jewish cities and villages in the West Bank/Judea and Samaria will remain in place, and the West Bank will be ruled jointly by Israel and Jordan. Jordan is a very large state, with the critical mass of a state, with a record of a sound government, with access to two seas, with a population which is in majority Palestinian, and will not be less democratic than in the present situation where both Fatah and Hamas don't make any elections. Israel and Jordan will be part of the European Union, with open borders, but the refugees will be allowed to return only to the East Bank, as the Jordanian territories in the West Bank and Gaza have an extremely dense population anyhow.

THE DANGER OF ISIS EXPANSIONIST AMBITIONS – RIGHT OF RETURN TO EUROPE

Many Europeans and Americans have a fixed idea that the reason for all the problems in the Middle East is the Palestinian conflict and Israel is to blame for all the troubles from Afghanistan to the Maghreb, passing thru Egypt, Lybia, Syria, Iraq, Yemen, Sudan, Lebanon, Iran and so on. This ideology reminds us of the anti-Semite doctrine that all the problems of the world are caused because of the Jews, World War I, the Great Depression, World War II, 9/11 terrorist attacks, the Black Death, the crucifixion of Jesus, the Dreyfus treason, Soviet Union's failures, Irish famine, the Holocaust, communism, capitalism, Palestinian genocide, liberalism, etc. Jeremiah 5:21 says: "Now hear this, O foolish and senseless people, Who have eyes but do not see; Who have ears but do not hear." שְׁמַעוּ-נָא זֹאת, עֵם סָכֵל וְאֵין לֵב: עֵינֵיהֶם לֹקֶם וְלֹא יִרְאוּ, אָזְנוֹיהֶם לֹקֶם וְלֹא יִשְׁמְעוּ. Most of the conflicts in the Middle East have nothing to do with Israel, today in the Arab Spring and recently – the civil wars in Algeria, Iraq, Afghanistan, Yemen, Syria, Lebanon, Lybia, Sudan, the coups in Egypt, the Tunisian revolution – there are no Jews there, Israel was not involved, and the conflicts are totally local with foreign intervention from Iran, the US, coalitions between Arab and European countries, and so on. Israel and the Jews were not responsible for any of those events, as they were not responsible for World War I or II or III... Daesh or the Islamic State is by far the most eminent danger to the Middle East and potentially also to Europe. Within a short time it has succeeded to conquer a large part of Syria and Iraq, including major oil fields, military bases and large quantities of weapon, wanting the world (not only the Middle East) to return to the seventh century golden age of the Islam. They state openly what their target is: to conquer all the Middle East, half of Africa, Western Asia, a large part of Europe, and then launch the final war against the West. In growing numbers citizens of Western countries are leaving their homes to fight alongside jihadists of the Islamic State. The pan-Islamic caliphate intends to control within the coming decade the following ten states:

1. Orobpa – Europe: all the Balkan states, including former Yugoslavia states, Greece, Romania and Bulgaria, but also Hungary, Austria, Moldova, and Black Sea Ukraine (Crimea – Odessa). (probably ISIS plans also that Scandinavia, Germany, France, UK, Benelux will come next...)
2. Andalus – Portugal and Spain.
3. Sham-Iraq – Saudi Arabia, Iraq, Syria, Lebanon, Jordan and Israel.
4. Anathol – Western Turkey.
5. Khurasan – Russian Caucasus (Chechnya, Dagestan, Ingushetia), Azerbaijan, Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan, Turkmenistan, Tajikistan, Uzbekistan, Eastern Iran, Afghanistan, India, Pakistan and Indonesia.
6. Hijaz – Arabian Gulf States, Southern Saudi Arabia and Northern Oman.
7. Al Kinana – Egypt, Eastern Libya, Northeast Chad and Northern Sudan.
8. Maghreb– Libya, Tunisia, Algeria, Morocco, Mauritania, Mali, Niger, Nigeria, Guinea, Ghana
9. Yaman – Yemen and Southern Oman.
10. Habasha – Ethiopia and Somalia, Kenya, South Sudan, Chad

Actually, ISIS demands the same thing as the Palestinians – the Right of Return, but to Europe. Islam was predominant in Europe since the Arab invasions of the 8th century, the Ottoman invasions of the 16th century, in the 21st century millions of Muslims live in almost all the countries of Europe. Islam has conquered Spain, Portugal, part of France (up to Tours), part of Italy (up to Bari), part of Austria (up to Vienna), Hungary, all the Balkans – former Yugoslavia, Romania, Bulgaria, Greece, part of Ukraine and Russia, they even made war to Poland. Nowadays, millions of Muslims live in most of those countries, but also in Germany, the Netherlands, and Scandinavia. I sincerely hope that the Scandinavian countries, which I admire as the best countries of the world, that condemn again and again Israel for using excessive force against the Palestinians, will return to the heroic times of the Vikings if ISIS will make an attempt to conquer them. Otherwise, the Caliph of Sweden and Norway might distribute all the Nobel Prizes to Muslims in order to overcome the terrible discrimination against Muslims.

If Daesh or the Islamic State will gain popularity among the millions of Muslims in Europe, the ambitions of Daesh might extend also to countries like UK, France, Netherlands, Germany, Italy, etc. However, the people of Bangladesh have nothing to fear from Daesh... It is terrible to fight against a country or a movement that has no scruples, and Europe has experienced it twice with the Muslim invasions, and recently with the German Nazi invasion. But it is even worse if the enemy is backed by a sympathizing population that is brainwashed by extremist Islam in your own land, that has already sent thousands of fighters to fight with Daesh in the Middle East. To this threat we have to add the threat of the nuclear weapons of Iran and Pakistan, the civil war in Syria that has caused hundreds of thousands deaths and millions of refugees trying to enter into Europe and being received as heroes in Germany, the civil wars in Iraq and Afghanistan, Yemen, Libya, etc., the threat of the Muslim Brotherhood in Egypt, Saudi Arabia, the Gulf states and Jordan, the civil unrest in the Maghreb, continuous civil war in Lebanon, etc. In comparison to all those threats the Palestinian conflict is a minor threat and Israel, the West Bank and even Gaza strip are a peaceful island in comparison to their neighbors. Amnesty International, the UN, and many European countries and organizations are accusing Israel to close its borders from the tens of thousands who can become millions refugees – from Africa, Syria, Palestinian refugees.

I will not remind those European countries where were they when Jewish refugees tried to cross the border escaping from a sure death from the Nazis, and they were denied in most of the cases entry into those countries: "the boat is full" they were told. Only fascist Spain and Portugal agreed to receive thousands of Jewish refugees, as the Ottoman Empire – the fiercest enemy of Europe - agreed to receive the tens of thousands of Sephardic refugees from Spain and Portugal in the 16th century (including my forefathers). Israel has enough problems of poverty (we break all the records among the OECD members...) and really we cannot afford to receive much more refugees after we have successfully integrated millions of Jewish refugees from the Holocaust, from Arab countries, and from communist Russia, who came without any money to Israel, as opposed to the Arab countries that did nothing to integrate a few hundred thousands Palestinians. Yet, the European countries agree to receive millions of Arabs and Muslims refugees risking that among them thousands of ISIS terrorists will infiltrate or that extremist Imams will brainwash the children of the refugees to act against the European hospitality and become terrorists, as we have seen once and again in France, UK, US, etc. Is it right to punish all the Muslim communities because of a few extremists? I think that the answer is – if the refugees are willing to integrate and adopt the European norms they should be welcomed – they will of course keep their faiths, their folklore, their language, as the Jewish, Spanish, Russian or Polish refugees did. But they have to learn at European schools, be familiar to European norms, including full rights to women, who can dress as they like, learn at universities, and marry whoever they chose.

The readers who are interested in realistic opinions should listen to the lectures and read the articles by Professor Uzi Rabi, Director of the Moshe Dayan Center for Middle Eastern and African Studies, the Tel Aviv University. I recently heard a 1.5 hour fascinating lecture where he explained to us what Daesh does and intends to do. The Islamic State wants to establish a Caliphate based on an ideology of the seventh century with the means of the 21st century, using the media to win its enemies and convince new youngsters to join its army. They intend to take us full steam ahead back to the past, while Israel is only an insignificant problem for them as they aim high, to conquer first of all most of Syria and Iraq who are governed by Shiites, their archfoes as they are Sunnis, then to conquer the Shiite Iran, Lebanon and Jordan are probably a piece of cake for them if they could win the strong armies of Iraq and Syria. But they are against all those who are not with them (exactly with the same methods, like the Nazis operated), Sunnis and Christians, Jews, Kurds and Druzes, in fact they are against everyone who is not an obedient follower of the Caliph, the successor of the prophet Muhammad. They are so orthodox that they even are against the common term to most Muslims: Muhammad Rasoul Allah – Muhammad is the messenger of God, and in their black flag they wrote the other way round: on top Allah, then messenger, and finally Muhammad, as Muhammad cannot come before God. After conquering all the countries of Islam they intend to conquer Europe, starting with Andalous, Spain, but also Romania, Greece, all the Balkans, and even Hungary and Austria. We shouldn't be surprised that such fierce and small organization can conquer so many countries and vanquish strong armies, as what counts is not the number of soldiers but their fierceness and conviction that they are the envoys of God, exactly like the first Muslims conquered the world.

A SOBER POINT OF VIEW ON THE MIDDLE EAST CRISIS

We should read articles by Guy Bechor, a realistic journalist and academic of the Middle East.

Ethnic wars and interests in the Middle East

Analysis: While everyone claims to be fighting ISIS in order to deceive the US, they are actually engaged in their own wars: The Turks are destroying the Kurds, the Russians are destroying Sunni jihadists, the Iraqi army is destroying Sunni forces, and the Iranians are glad the Sunnis are keeping busy in Syria and Iraq.

Once again, many countries will gather soon to "end the conflict in Syria," as it is presented by US Secretary of State John Kerry. Well, there will be no "ending." It's not a "conflict" but a global war, and there is no more "Syria." The United States, Russia and a number of European countries are caught in illusions, and the area which was once Syria and Iraq will keep serving as the arena of a huge storm. Even worse is the fact that Lebanon, Jordan, Saudi Arabia and Turkey are being dragged into the center of this storm against their will, and 2016 could be a critical year for some of them. First of all, we are talking about a Sunni-Shiite world war, which has been going on for 1,300 years now, and so the Sunni-Shiite problem must be solved before anything can be done in Syria. This ethnic rift clearly outlines the camps: The Shiite camp, which includes Iran, the Baghdad government, the Damascus government, Hezbollah, some of the Kurds and the Russians; and rival Sunni camp, which includes Turkish President Recep Tayyip Erdogan, Saudi Arabia, most of the Gulf states, al-Qaeda (through the al-Nusra Front, its arm in Syria), the jihadist rebels, some of the Kurds, and at a distance - but still in the same camp - the Islamic State. The West is teaming up with the Sunni axis.

We are talking about wars within wars, and countless sub-wars. Everyone claims to be acting against ISIS, in order to deceive the Americans, but they are actually waging their own ethnic wars: The Turks are destroying the Kurd PKK underground; the Russians are destroying the Sunni jihadists, who in Western eyes could serve as an alternative to Syrian President Bashar; the Iraqi army (which is already mostly Shiite) is destroying the Sunni forces in Iraq; and the Iranians are happy that the Sunnis are being kept busy in Syria and Iraq, so that they will not reach their territory so fast. The Sunnis themselves are split into hundreds of militias which are hostile to each other. How can this mess be solved? It's a case of hatred in which no side can give in, because if it does it will be annihilated by the other side. The Sunni jihadists have vowed to infiltrate Lebanon and slaughter all the Shiites there. They plan to saturate the Mediterranean Sea's water with the blood of the Alawites. The war is feeding itself, and it's only expanding. It's a dead end. The ethnic interests exceed the considerations of the war on ISIS. Who is more dangerous as far as the Saudis are concerned - the Shiites or ISIS? The Shiites of course. And the same applies to Erdogan. So why should they actually fight ISIS? Assad needs ISIS, because the West may then have to support him for lack of any other choice; and ISIS needs Assad, because the Sunnis will then have no choice but to support the Islamic State. Now, with the $150 billion the Americans are about to release to the Iranians, Russian weapons will flow into the ground even more and the ethnic fire will reach the sky. Iran versus Turkey, Turkey vs Baghdad & Syria. The circles of shock will expand.

And there is the presence of the Islamic State, a magnet for tens of thousands of volunteers which are flowing in from around the world. The jihadist system has created perpetual motion ("perpetuum mobile") with Europe: Thousands of radicals are flowing into Europe from the Middle East, and Europe is sending thousands of volunteers to ISIS. This process can no longer be stopped. And let's assume that the Islamic State's lands are occupied by the West. So what? Out of 80,000 fighters, 20,000 will be killed, and then the rest will move to Europe to shake it even more? And finally, the migration of the millions will only intensify: Three million this year, five million next year. 26% of the Arab world's residents want to immigrate to the West. The strong ones have already immigrated, the economy has immigrated, and the hope has left too. The locked demons have been released, and the Pandora's box of the dying Arab states will not be closed in our generation. Whether the miserable West likes it or not, it's already irreversible.

Israel remains the Middle East's only anchor

Once again, US Secretary of State John Kerry has returned to Israel after a long absence. This time, we can hope and pray, he already sees the Middle East differently.

The heads of the current American administration believed from their very first day in office that the Archimedean point in the Middle East is Israel. If you pressure it and "solve" the "Israeli" conflict, the entire region will fall at your feet. That's why the Obama administration dealt with the Israeli issue was so intensively. Obama and Kerry wouldn't let go, and in the president's second term they even launched long, exhausting negotiations which they imposed on Israel and on a certain group of Palestinians called "the Palestinian Authority." I have often written that it's a serious mistake. I have warned that the White House doesn't have the time to deal with a conflict which has become old and marginal, while huge conflicts are about to take place in the region and in the entire world. And so, for about two years, the American administration focused on us, focused on past, while the Syrian meat grinder expanded, Iraq collapsed, Libya turned into a jihadists' springboard to Europe, Yemen collapsed and its ruins fell on Saudi Arabia, and Europe began spinning under the burden of millions of refugees. It's reasonable to assume that it's not the administration's fault, that it has fallen victim to different "experts," "diplomats" and "academics," who have turned the "conflict" into the source of their livelihood, and to other righteous people who want to take a bite at Israel and minimize it.

For years, these "experts" dealt with the conflict (it's no longer called the Israeli-Arab conflict because it has shrunk to the Israeli-Palestinian conflict), without realizing how marginal it is and without understanding that it serves as a tool for diverting the attention from the real problems of the Middle East. Every Arab ruler who didn't want people to see the religious-ethnic-tribal national complexity within his home, diverted the attention towards Israel. As far as he was concerned, Israel was actually an asset, not a burden. It's reasonable to assume that Obama already understands the manipulation around Israel, but it may be too late as far as the region is concerned. Had the roots of the Islamic State been dealt with on time, it's possible that this organization would not have developed into the monster it is today. And had Bashar Assad's evil regime been dealt with on time, it's possible that the Syrian tyrant would no longer be here today. And the same goes for the other crises in the Middle East and Europe. Yes, Europe has also been busy with Israel while its own home is on fire.

What is there today on the other side, opposite Israel? A big void. There is a group of elderly people in Ramallah, with no power or legitimacy, and no agreement they could have reached would have been accepted by the Arab public in Judea and Samaria or in Gaza, and in any event, they had no intention of reaching any agreement. Their only goal was to gain the territories and use them for the next attack aimed at minimizing and weakening Israel. Apart from that, there is nothing: No democracy, no economy, no law and no future. And there were those who wanted to give this void land from which they would attack central Israel with missiles. The Arab regimes have accepted Israel's existence and are, secretly and openly, seeking its assistance. The conflict with the Palestinians exists, but it's tiny compared to the Sunni-Shi'ite demon, the huge battle with radical Islam and the world powers' infiltration of the Middle East in a military drive. In the huge storm, the likes of which the area has not known since the Mongol invasion a little less than 800 years ago, Israel has remained the only island of stability. In the Middle East, which is desperately searching for a balance, we remain the only anchor.

Israel must use UN as an offensive tool

On the fifth year of the Middle Eastern destruction, which is going to last for decades, it's time to determine that the United Nations has become irrelevant here, except in regards to one country, which is the last remnant of the old regional order – Israel. Can the UN do anything in Syria? In Iraq? In Yemen? In Saudi Arabia? In Egypt? In Libya? That's why it focuses on Israel. It gives this organization's institutions a feeling that they have some advantage, that they are useful. The larger the failure in the region, the more the obsession towards Israel will grow, to the point of a farce. The more the Arab regimes fall apart, their attempt to divert the attention towards us becomes more desperate. Israel is defending itself – at the grotesque "Human Rights" Council, which is controlled by dictators, at the delusional UNESCO and at the Security Council, where some members don't even recognize Israel. So it might be time to change direction, to turn the regional void into something which could assist us. It's time to use the UN as an offensive tool, not just as a defensive tool. It's time to move the warfare into enemy territory. From now on, the UN institutions should be flooded with complaints, reports and information about the destruction taking place around us. Every day, a complaint, a report to the media, a resolution in the different institutions. The quality will create the quantity. Even if it isn't accepted, the conscious effect will eventually become fixated. We should embarrass them, just like they seek to embarrass us.

Every day, we should file a report about the Mahmoud Abbas gang which is carrying out mass arrests, including torture, which is persecuting minorities, where UN funds have been disappearing for years, which is responsible for racist incitement against Israel on a daily basis. The world doesn't know this, and the UN institutions are the tool for flooding the world with information. And again, we must not be gentle or cautious, but flood on a daily basis. An industrialization of information. And what about the horrors committed by Iran against the country's ethnic minorities? The executions which are only increasing, the persecution of homosexuals? The destruction of Syria, Iraq and Lebanon through Tehran's emissaries? The barrel bombs and chemical weapons of the Assad regime? Hezbollah's terrorism in Syria? And what about the Turkish and Saudi support for the Sunni jihad organizations in Syria and Iraq? And how is it possible that the UN isn't flooded with reports and complaints about Hamas' terror? And what about Qatar, which won't stop bribing everyone in the West, including perhaps people in the UN itself? Or the shocking human rights situation in the Persian Gulf dictatorships? And what about Tunisia, which abandoned human rights at once following the latest terror attack on its soil? This is just partial list of what has to be turned into a weapon from now on, into deterrence. Israel shouldn't defend itself, it should attack. That way, it will be able to "trade" for the first time in its history in the UN – in other words, reduce the offense dosage in return for a similar dosage reduction among the Arab parties, which know exactly what will happen when the truth about them is revealed in the West. They are obsessing with you? You obsess with them. And so, by giving this degenerated institution – the UN – access to the truth, the world will understand that Israel is a fortress of democracy and human rights despite the military and political challenges around it and within it. Despite ISIS and similar organizations, which are the product of radical Islam. That way, the world will understand where the paradise of the Middle East is and where its hell is."

A SOLUTION TO THE ISRAELI-PALESTINIAN CONFLICT

The only countries where the extremist ideologies do not prevail are the moderate kingdoms of Jordan, Morocco and the Arabian Peninsula, now – also Egypt, but it became almost a fundamentalist state elected democratically that would have ruined the peace agreement with Israel and start terror from Sinai to Israel. The moderate kingdoms and the secular Egypt have an intrinsic interest to cooperate with Israel against the extremist fundamentalists Islamic movements such as Daesh and the Shiite fundamentalist Iran. The king of Jordan does not want to mess with the Palestinian conflict, but he has no alternative, as the Palestinian state that will be founded in the West Bank bordering Jordan will become within months a terrorist state ruled by Daesh, so he has to choose between losing his kingdom or becoming a Jordan-Palestinian kingdom, like he was de facto before the Six Day War and it worked quite well. The only change will be that he shall rule the West Bank jointly with Israel which is the strongest country in the Middle East and this will ensure his kingdom from falling into the rule of the fundamentalists.

The Western world has to do its utmost to prevent Daesh and the like to endanger the regimes in those countries. If those countries are not too democratic to the taste of some Americans/Europeans they should be comforted by the fact that Daesh, Al Qaeda, and Taliban are much less democratic, hoping that in a near future the Middle East will become democratic and ethical like Scandinavia, and the tiger will not eat the lamb. As far as Syria is concerned, the solution de facto is going to be the dissolution of the country into its ethnic entities – Alawis, Kurds, Sunnis, and Israelis in the Golan Heights. If Israel would have withdrawn from the Golan, Daesh and its like would be launching rockets to Israel from Lake Tiberias, even worse than what the Syrians did before the Six Day War. In the Golan Heights there are no demographic considerations like in the West Bank and Gaza. Those ideas of mine are shared by the best Israeli orientalists, by a large segment of the Israeli population, and by many Europeans and Americans who see without false ideologies in what jungle do we live, what is the interest of the West, of the countries with a large Muslim population becoming more and more extremists, not wanting to assimilate in the countries where they reside. How these ideas confer with my ethical ideology? By the fact that this solution is the most practical solution for all the parties involved – the Palestinians would be better off under the rule of the Jordanian king, as their brothers who prosper in the East Bank and in the Gulf states. For sure the Palestinians in Gaza would prefer the kingdom of Jordan/Palestine over the Hamas. They don't lose the potential of a democratic regime as they don't have today any democracy and if there would be one – it would be a one-election vote as happened in Gaza with the Hamas and in Germany with the Nazis. Their economic situation would improve substantially, they would live in an Arab moderate state, there would be no terrorism, they would benefit from the peace with Israel, from the membership in the EU, no more walls, no more checkpoints, joint ventures with Israelis, Europeans and Americans, the right of return to the East Bank, peace with prosperity.

ON BDS AND DEFAMATORY ORGANIZATIONS

A few words on BDS, the worst defamatory organization since the Nazi propaganda, whose purpose is to annihilate Israel, with three false allegations: 1. The right of return of Palestinian refugees, which should be tied if they are so keen for justice to the right of return of the Greeks and Turks, the Germans and Poles, and above all the right of return of twice as much Jewish refugees including me to their native countries in the Arab world with full compensation for the money that they have left there. I have dealt at length on this issue in my book, but BDS counts on the ignorance of the people with good intentions who always pity refugees. Anyhow, the refugees want to return to one of the most advanced countries of the world after having left one of the most backwards countries. We see how they have contributed to the prosperity of the countries in which they lived for almost 70 years, with terror and subversion which peaked during Black September in Jordan and the Civil War in Lebanon, and they probably intend to contribute to the prosperity of Israel in a similar way. 2. Full equality of Arab-Palestinians in Israel, which should be tied if they are so keen for justice to full equality for Arab citizens in all the Arab countries, including the right to live in peace, preservation of human rights to women, secular citizens, homosexuals, minorities, and so on, in Saudi Arabia, the Gulf States, Iraq, Yemen, Lebanon, Syria, Sudan, Algeria, Libya... Si non e vero e ben trovato/A fairy tale!

I advocate of course for full equality for the Arabs and the Ultra Orthodox in Israel, in rights and in duties as well, they are entitled to work in all the state and private organizations, to live in all the towns and neighborhoods, but also to serve in the Israeli army – men and women – for the same periods as the other citizens, paying taxes as all the other Israelis should do without participating in a shadow economy where no taxes are paid and no income is reported – this applies of course also to Jews who avoid paying taxes as well and all tax evaders should be sent to jail like in the US, building their homes only with the proper authorizations – like the Jews who are obligated to do so as it must be enforced with the same rigor to Jews and Arabs, and most of all an obligation for a full allegiance to the state of Israel, like the American or French Jews for their states, regardless of the conflict with their brother Palestinians, as the allegiance to the state supersedes the allegiance to their people. Imagine that a German Jew in World War I would object from joining the German army because in the English and French armies there were other Jews. He would be court martialed and sent to 20 years imprisonment. In the same way serving in the Israeli army should be compulsory to Arabs, Christians, men, women, Ultra-Orthodox, Doves who don't want to serve in the West Bank, Hawks who don't want to enforce expulsion from settlements. There is only one allegiance – to the state of Israel, and all the citizens of Israel should comply to this and to the laws.

3. The end of Israeli occupation and colonization of Palestinian land, which was never Palestinian but under occupation of Jordan and Egypt, and during those times nobody ever said that they were occupied and should be called Palestine. Even resolution 242 of the UN does not call for end of occupation of all the territories, and BDS forgets that the Jewish state existed for two thousand years in history while there was never a Palestinian state. Nevertheless, occupation is bad for both Israel and the Palestinians and a peaceful solution should be sought with Jordan, which is the true Palestinian state, where de facto 80% of the population is Palestinian. The Palestinians of the Gaza strip and the West Bank should be citizens of Jordan, the Israelis living in the West Bank should be citizens of Israel, both Jordan and Israel would be admitted to the European Union, with open borders, cooperation, and the right of return of the refugees to Jordan. This solution was presented at length in my book, the Jews have returned back to their homeland including Judea and Samaria, they are not settlers in a Palestinian state which never existed. The Jews accepted in 1947 the two state solution but the Palestinians rejected it and the Arab states started an annihilation war in 1948 against Israel aiming to finish what Hitler did not succeed. Even after they failed against all odds they continued to fight Israel with terror and boycott, exactly like they do now, peaking during the Six Day War when they tried once again to fulfill the common goal of Hitler and their leader Haj Amin Al Hussein, Arafat, the other terrorist organizations, Egypt, Syria and Jordan – destroying Israel and killing all the Jews. After they failed once again, they continued in Yom Kippur War, this time without Jordan that learned at last what are the Palestinian goals during Black September in 1970 where 20,000 Palestinians were killed almost all of them "civilians" like the few thousands who were killed in the Israeli-Palestinian conflict. When a country who starts a war loses the winning country has the full right to annex the territories of the losing side, like it was done by Russia, the US and Europe. Otherwise what price do they pay for their aggression? In spite of that Israel has agreed to withdraw from Sinai in return to a peace agreement with Egypt. But Israel cannot afford to do that in the Golan Heights and the West Bank even with a peace agreement which has no worth as we see over and over again with Syria in its civil war, Palestine with extremism winning over and terror subsiding even after withdrawing from the West Bank in the late nineties and Gaza after 2006. So, the solution should be sought with Jordan as was explained in my book.

ISRAELI BOYCOTT BY OUR IRISH FRIENDS

I'll bring here an example of boycott by Irish citizens and organizations, that some people think are the most vehement followers of a boycott against Israel, although others differ, stating the UK boycott is much stronger. Since 2010, over 250 Irish artists, students, and professors have pledged to boycott Israel along with over 140 Irish academics. Ireland Palestine Solidarity Campaign makes a very thorough research on Israeli products, actually you must be full of hate in order to work so hard on a campaign that favors a terrorist organization like the Hamas which has conquered Gaza, killing much more Palestinians than the Israelis ever killed in legitimate defense after the Hamas launched thousands of rockets to innocent civilians in Israel. How a nation that fought so fiercely for independence favors a nation that has invested most of the aid it has received in weapons and corruption. The Hamas leadership lives like millionaires, while their people who could have prospered like Singapore live in poverty and suffer from a never ending war in spite of the withdrawal of all Israeli troops and settlers, proving that what interests them is only the annihilation of Israel and not the welfare of their people. All those who contribute to this defamation campaign are in favor of a terrorist organization aimed to set back its people a thousand years in the past, in a retrograde regime, based on religion, murder and ignorance. They work against a nation that managed to obtain magnificent results in spite of war, like Ireland has done brilliantly. Actually, there is so much affinity between Ireland and Israel, that it is completely incomprehensible how a nation that fought a super power that oppressed them for centuries does not favor another European nation like Israel that fought the same oppressor during thirty years. Ireland has managed to achieve a turnaround with a flourishing economy based on progress and a secular nation after they suffered so much from religion.

The boycott campaign is based on monstrous lies. First of all Apartheid, the right of return, and no equal human rights for the Israeli Arabs. I deal on those issues at length in this book. The Irish who boycott Israel have no problem in dealing with Iran, North Korea and Sudan, proving that the boycott is based primarily on anti-Semitism inculcated from early childhood that the Jews have crucified Jesus. I don't want to argue on the issue of the crimes committed by some of those who inculcated anti-Semitism to young boys and girls, to unmarried mothers and to free thinkers. The boycotters are outraged by the death of four or one Palestinian child killed during a war of retaliation against the sites where the rockets were launched, but are completely serene when hundreds of Israeli children were killed by the Intifada terrorists in 2001-2004, when tens of thousands children are killed in Syria, Sudan, Iraq, Lebanon, and Afghanistan, by the allies of the Hamas that rules Gaza. This proves that those who have double standards are anti-Semitic as they accuse only the Jews for all the world's troubles and not the dictatorships' regimes who kill hundreds of times more in Arab countries, in African countries, and elsewhere. I don't want to argue on the issue of the thousands of innocent civilians killed by the IRA, many of them children. The Irish boycotters don't boycott also the US that killed hundreds of thousands of civilians not only in World War II with the atomic bombs in Hiroshima and Nagasaki, and with the UK the bombing of Dresden, Berlin and other German cities. The US bombed North Vietnam, and more recently killed many civilians in Iraq and Afghanistan. I could go on and on, and I don't want to judge at all the Americans who killed the civilians, and prevented much more killings. Anyhow, all my remarks on Irish apply also to organizations in UK, US, Scandinavia, and other European countries. Israel was boycotted for dozens of years by the Arabs and many multinational companies such as Coca Cola, and it didn't prevent the country to become one of the most advanced countries of the world. The Irish boycott will not change the picture either, but it is hurting that such an admired and admirable country has elements that hate Jews and Israelis, and we are aware of the fact that they are not probably the majority of the Irish people, and other Europeans individuals and organizations boycott Israel as well, including admired artists as Mikis Theodorakis and director Ken Loach, Scandinavians, English, Dutch, French, and Greeks. I advise the reader to read more on anti-Semitic and anti-Israeli slurs in recent years.

THE MONSTRUOUS ANALOGY BETWEEN THE HOLOCAUST AND THE NAKBA

Nowadays, we hear the Arabs complaining, following the War of Independence and Six Day War, that their Nakba/Naksa is similar to the Jewish Holocaust. This is of course pure nonsense, as what happened to the Arabs was that they lost the war in which they wanted to exterminate the Jews in 1948 and in 1967, after they started the wars, their losses in casualties were a few thousands, while the refugees fleeing the country, in most of the cases at the instigation of their leadership, was 500,000 – 700,000 in comparison to 900,000 Jews including me who fled the Arab countries. This is compared by the Arabs and by many Europeans to the Holocaust when the Nazis murdered six million Jews – men, women and children, not one, four or hundreds, but millions of children, killed on purpose by the Nazis and their collaborators, many of them sympathizing the Arabs, when the Jews did nothing to the Germans, did not launch missiles against the Germans from neighborhoods with children, and did not start the war - unless you believe to the anti-Semitic propaganda that the Jews are responsible for World War I, II, 9/11, Nakba, Naksa, crucifixion of Christ, plagues, the crisis of the Arab World in Syria, Iraq, Yemen, Libya, Lebanon, and the killing on purpose of four children on the beach of Gaza. The tragedy of the Arabs, and I agree that it is a tragedy, but they have to blame their leaders for this tragedy and not the Jews who miraculously won the war, is a much lesser tragedy than the tragedy of the Indians and Pakistanis at exactly the same period of 1947-1948 who lost half a million people and 14 million refugees crossed the borders to India and Pakistan.

One should not get the impression that I blame only the others on the wars, racism, economic and social injustice. In this book and in my other books and articles, most of them in Hebrew, I deal at length with what is wrong in the Israeli society and conduct. As the blame is meant to Israeli ears I write about it mostly in Hebrew to Israeli readers. But nevertheless I dealt with those issues also in this book. My friend Joshua Sobol wrote an excellent play Jerusalem Syndrome that I read and saw, but the syndrome consists of a group of mental phenomena involving the presence of either religiously themed obsessive ideas, delusions or other psychosis-like experiences that are triggered by a visit to the city of Jerusalem. It is not endemic to one single religion, but has affected Jews, Christians and Muslims of many different backgrounds.

Otherwise you cannot understand the conduct of some Muslims who whenever they hear the false mantra "Al-Aqsa is in danger" they start killing and stabbing old women of 80, boys of 13, Yeshiva boys and Rabbis, women, children, men, and risking their lives as well, as most of them get killed. The Christians suffered also from this syndrome when they sent thousands of crusaders to conquer the holy places, killing tens of thousands of Jews in Europe and Muslims in Palestine, in a vain attempt to conquer Jerusalem where Jesus who was a pacifist and social activist operated and he would have condemned undoubtedly the conduct of those crusaders/believers. The inquisitions operated also irrationally and against the precepts of Jesus.

But I deplore also the conduct of extremist Jews who burn mosques, churches, kill innocent Palestinians (not the Army or the settlers as a group, just unorganized extremists, while the Moslem syndrome is managed by their leaders as Haj Amin Al- Husseini, Arafat and Abu Mazen) – men, women and children, and even murder the beloved prime minister of Israel Yitzhak Rabin. Many believe that the Oslo agreements were a mistake, as they welcomed the terrorists Arafat and Abu Mazen to the West Bank and later also the Hamas in Gaza and they seized the opportunity to start a war against Israel, launching thousands of rockets against innocent populations and murdering more than a thousand civilians on the second Intifada. But I don't have any doubt that Rabin and Peres meant well when they signed the agreements and truly believed that they will bring peace. I don't think that the murder of Rabin killed the peace process as he would have conducted exactly like Peres, Barak and other Labor leaders, Sharon and Netanyahu, did when they were faced by the mass murders committed by the Palestinians.

THE PALESTINIAN AND ISRAELI IMPASS PREVENTING THEM TO MAKE PEACE

Those who killed the peace process are only the Palestinians who would never agree to a mutilated state of Gaza, the most populated country and one of the poorest on earth, and the West Bank – a country with no critical mass of a state, meant to be a demilitarized state when even now they have unlimited weapons and when they will be an independent state they will acquire mass murder weapons as well and never relinquish war and terror, a state with no right of return of their 5 million brothers in refugee camps in Lebanon, Syria, Egypt and Jordan. This at least is not a syndrome, it is a rational conduct and Israel should be aware of it, to the great sorrow of the doves, some of them are my best friends, who believe that peace can be achieved on the basis of the withdrawal of the "occupied" territories (we occupied/liberated/returned to territories that were previously occupied by Egypt, Jordan, Britain, Turkey, the Crusaders, etc.).

The tragedy of Israel is that we have hallucinating people, with the Jerusalem Syndrome or the Fata Morgana Peace Now Syndrome, extremist hawks and extremist doves. The extremist hawks do their utmost to exasperate the Arabs, settling on every hill in the West Bank, burning churches and mosques, killing innocent Arabs, issuing Pula deNura (killing curse) against Rabin, and possibly other leaders even from the Likud party, killing Muslim worshippers in the Cave of Machpela in Hebron. But the Israeli government, the police, our FBI and army are doing their utmost to prevent those catastrophes, most of the times with success, but we did not prevent the killing at the Cave of Machpela and the murder of our beloved prime minister Rabin (I admired him also, as he was my Chief of Staff when I was a young lieutenant, and he won the Six Day War, and some of his achievements as a prime minister), and we do not act vehemently enough against those who break the law in the West Bank and in Israel, Jews and Arabs.

The extremist Doves have not killed people yet, but I am afraid that it will come as they deligitimize and vilify so much Netanyahu that someone would try to murder him. They have the syndrome of the Israeli guilt, not Jerusalem Syndrome but Shenkin (in Tel Aviv) Syndrome. Only the Jews and Israelis are to be blamed, the Doves are sometimes financed by Israeli-haters organizations (the extremist Hawks are also sometimes financed by Arab-haters organizations), they advocate in many cases boycott against Israel (we had in the past also such guilt-complexed Jews who justified the anti-Semites, trying to find the fault in the Jews and not in the anti-Semites, like those who think that the women who are raped are guilty of being raped and not the rapists...). They also advocate a forced settlement, even if it will mean compelling the settlement by force?, as was achieved (after visiting the Balkans I am not so sure) in Serbia, Kosovo, Bosnia...? I just wonder where will they be when the enforcers (the UN, Nato or whom?) will bomb Tel Aviv, where will they hide or will they emigrate to Australia or Canada, as many of them have already done. My only problem is how those extremist Doves, some of them are my friends, act rationally in all other aspects of life, some of them advocating social and economic justice, but only when it comes to the Arabs – they worship and justify them, even as Shahids, while on the other hand they hate the Israeli settlers in the West Bank, the Hassidic Jews, etc.

They don't see that their Dovish attitude has failed, and they say: don't confuse me with facts. The Hawkish attitude has failed as well, and I believe in a Middle Way policy, as I am not a dove nor a hawk. Every time that we have withdrawn from territories when we faced terrorists as the Palestinian Authorities (the Fatah was a terrorist organization and we have brought them with our own hands to rule the West Bank and Gaza) and Hizballah they saw our desperate willingness for peace as a weak point and instead of ameliorating our relations and signing a peace agreement they sent us thousands of rockets from Lebanon after the Left Wing Labor party has withdrawn from Lebanon. Lebanon is to blame, because they are the sovereigns in Lebanon, but nevertheless hundreds of Israelis have died from their attacks. I don't blame Barak or the Labour party for that, as they truly believed that it will bring peace, but they should draw the conclusions that a peace agreement with terrorists is impossible. The same result happened when Israel has withdrawn from most of the West Bank. Those who did it truly believed in peace, but the arch-terrorist Arafat has applied his Salami policy and used the West Bank and Gaza to launch terrorist attacks against Israel in 1994/2000 and onwards killing more than a thousand Israeli civilians. And then, in 2005 the withdrawal from Gaza has brought the Hamas to rule Gaza, launching thousands of rockets to Israel, disrupting our economy and killing more Israelis. The Dovish attitude has failed with the Palestinians, and the only government that has made peace and giving back all Sinai was the Hawkish government of Begin that made peace with Egypt. But the Hawkish policy to continue ruling millions of Palestinians did not succeed as well, although the settlements and the "occupied" territories (that were before occupied by Jordan) did not contribute to terrorism and the Intifadah, as the Palestinians leaders want to exterminate Israel, deligitimize it, boycott it, killing thousands of Israelis, and will never accept peace, even if we will withdraw from all the West Bank, Eat Jerusalem and the Wailing Wall, just continuing the war from the "demilitarized" state until they achieve their goal to kill all the Jews, finishing the Nazi job that their ally (with Haj Amin Al-Huseini) Hitler has started in 1940.

And speaking of irrationals, the Yugoslavian countries wars were irrational as well, people who were friends, marrying each other, collaborating at work, speaking the same language (Croatian, Serbian and Bosnian languages are much closer than Hebrew and Arabic), looking the same, living in the same homes and towns, decided all of a sudden to murder each other, remembering long-ago conflicts, raping, transferring hundreds of thousands over the border, causing tragedies that the Europeans thought will never again occur after the atrocities of World War II. The Pakistan-Indian wars were also irrational, and especially the conduct of Muhammad Ali Jinnah (becoming religious after being secular for so many years), who provoked violence against India, when his opponent was Mahatma Gandhi who wanted an undivided and peaceful non-violent India with Hindus, Muslims and others sharing the power. Gandhi who was also murdered by a Hindu extremist, with three bullets into his chest at point-blank range, exactly like Yitzhak Rabin was murdered by an extremist Jew, Anwar Sadat who was murdered by an extremist Muslim...

This extremist conduct, this Jerusalem/Belgrade/Delhi/Cairo/Ramallah/Karachi syndrome that brought such tragedies to Yugoslavia, Egypt, Palestine, Israel, Pakistan and India, reminds me of two old and typical stories. The first one is about the Middle Eastern scorpion who asked the frog to take him to the other side of the river. The frog agreed but on one condition that the scorpion will not bite him, the scorpion agreed (signing an agreement?), but in the middle of the way it bit the frog. "What have you done, now both of us will die" said the frog and the scorpion answered "Well, that's how we operate in the Middle East...". The other story is about a Middle Eastern (you can choose to call him a Jew, a Muslim, or a Christian) who delivered a Genie from a bottle and the Genie promises him that he will reward him by giving him whatever he chooses, but on one condition that his foe (Jew, Muslim or Christian) will get twice of what he gets. The Middle Eastern thinks for a few seconds and tells the Genie: "Tear off one of my eyes!"

THE MUSLIM SOCIETY'S BLAME ON NOT CONDEMNING THE FUNDAMENTALISTS

I always write that the problem is with the Islamic fundamentalists and not with the Muslims. It is true, but not completely. One has to blame also the Muslims that they do not excommunicate the extremists. In Palestine Abu Mazen names streets in the names of the Shahids and finance their families, Arab leaders finance terror and war, as well as Nazi propaganda against the Jews and Israel, yet there are almost no Palestinians or Arabs that would condemn this conduct. I understand their fear but actually the moderate Arabs and Muslims, even if they are 99% of the population, should revolt otherwise their fate will be like the fate of the civilians in Germany and Japan in World War II. They also remained quiet and even cooperated in many cases with the bellicose regimes, they were soldiers, officers, worked in the weapon factories, and ultimately millions of them died in the bombardments of Dresden, Berlin and the other German cities, in Hiroshima, Nagasaki, and of course in the war. There will be a cultural war, in this I have no doubt, but I don't know what form it will take as the wars of Iraq, Afghanistan, and the Western interventions in the "Arab Spring" were a complete failure. The Muslim extremists think that the Western World is too weak, the Scandinavians and the Irish have not strong armies, and they might force them to join the Islamic state, but the Americans and British that may be Peace Now pacifists in the short run, will in the long run use excessive force and solve the conflict like they did in World War II, but millions might be killed as during the war. If their governments, and the governments of Germany and France would not want to use such drastic measures, extreme right governments that will replace them will do the work as the citizens who advocate democracy, human rights and compassion to refugees and the "poor Arabs", want first of all to live and preferably as free citizens and not ISIS-like Muslims. So, the moderate Arabs and Muslims have to take their fates in their own hands and destroy ISIS and all the terrorist organizations, the Muslim Brothers, and all the belligerent Islamic organizations, otherwise they might find themselves in concentration camps, or expelled from Europe, or killed. This is what happened with the Germans and Japanese, and after the war German and Japan have become the most prosperous countries in the world, peace loving, very ethical, with the best ranking in all the parameters of democracy, GDP, social progress, quality of life, education, health, culture. The moderate Arabs and Muslims have three choices: either to destroy ISIS et al now or after World War III with millions of casualties, most of them coming from their populations, or God Frobids/Auzu billahi if ISIS wins to live in a retrograde Islamic Caliphate of the Middle Ages.

The only countries that defend themselves from the Islamic threat and don't accept to take Muslim refugees, with ISIS infiltrators, are Hungary, Russia, Israel, Greece, former Yugoslavian countries, Bulgaria. That is because all of them had to deal in the past with Muslim threat in wars and occupation. The Greeks and the Yugoslavs know what it is to be occupied by an Islamic Caliphate, much more moderate than the present Islamic State. The Russians and the Israelis are fighting for a hundred years Muslims, the Oriental Israelis know what it is to live in an Arab country, so they don't have any doubt on the course of action to take (except some hallucinatory pacifists). What I don't understand is why the Spaniards are so much pro-Arabs, after all they were conquered by the Arabs for hundreds of years until the reconquista. Francoist Spain did not recognize Israel citing an international conspiracy of Jews and Freemasons against Spain, the "contubernio judeo-masónico". In 1949, the State of Israel voted against lifting sanctions against Spain in the United Nations General Assembly due to the Francoist regime's sympathy and material support for the Axis Powers. Situation has much improved over the years but still Spaniards are basically pro-Arabs, and I hope that they don't miss the epoch when they were part of the Islamic Caliphate. Anyhow, the ISIS map shows Andalus (the whole Iberian peninsula) as part of the Islamic state, and if they'll continue with their liberal immigration policy, their support to the Palestinian cause, and their criticism towards Israel, the reconquista will happen once again but this time in the opposite direction. It will be a pity as I admire Spain and Portugal, their culture & people, I feel myself there at home, and I wish them to remain European/liberals.

And a piece of advice for Muslims and Arabs – stop to complain about discrimination, racism and poverty. You are in Europe, Israel and the US in much better conditions than what you were when you lived in Arabic or Moslem states, first of all you are not killed in civil wars, then you receive free education and health care, furthermore you have jobs that maybe are not the best but still are much better than the jobs you had in your countries. Take an example from the other immigrants who came to Europe – the Jews, the Spanish, Portuguese, Poles, Greeks, Italians, Germans – they suffered more than you from racism, from discrimination, from numerus clausus, even from pogroms, the Jews came from the Holocaust, the worst tragedy in humankind, but they didn't complain, they tried to excel without receiving any assistance from the UN (which allows the refugees to stay forever in refugees camps, otherwise they would work and integrate in the societies where they live), and they have become wealthy and prosperous. They did not remain in a status of refugees for almost seventy years, complaining about the lands that they have left. Germans fled from Poland, Czechoslovakia, Russia, East Germany, and look at them now – prosperous and happy. Stop living in refugees camps, in Ghettos, integrate in the population, in the local culture, let the women get the same standing as men, don't opt for terrorism, opt for life, there are no 72 virgins waiting for you in heaven, don't call your children Jihad and Shahid, mothers – don't send your sons and daughters to die as Shahids in Jihad, be realistic and try to find the best way out of the impasse in which you are living in Europe or Israel. After World War II Germans, Japanese were in much worse conditions than your Nakba/Naksa.

You talk all the time about "the massacre of Deir Yassin" where 107 villagers were killed during and after the battle for the village, including women and children—some were shot, while others died when hand grenades were thrown into their homes. Several villagers were taken prisoner and you maintain that they have been killed after being paraded through the streets of West Jerusalem, though accounts vary. Four of the attackers were killed, with around 35 injured. The killings were condemned by the leadership of the Haganah—the Jewish community's main paramilitary force—and by the area's two chief rabbis. The Jewish Agency for Israel sent Jordan's King Abdullah a letter of apology, which he rebuffed. During the Second Intifada the Palestinians terrorists sent by Arafat killed more than a thousand civilians, most of them women and children and none of your leaders have rebuked it. But you compare this massacre, the Nakba and the Naksa to the Holocaust where six million Jews were murdered, all of them civilians and none of them had sent warriors and terrorists against Germany. And the anti-Semites "swallow" this propaganda with pleasure saying how wretched you are and how murderous are the Jews who kill women and children. Your terrorists kill almost only women, children and old people, not only nobody apologizes, but you glorify them, sending them to heaven to look for the 72 virgins. Your brothers in Syria, Iraq, Yemen, Algeria, Sudan, kill hundreds of thousands of your people, yet only the Jews and the Israelis are blamed by you, by the UN, and by the "choir" of your supporters who are yearning to join the Islamic State, willingly or by force. No Israelis have plans to conquer Europe as Muslim Arab ISIS, and none of them have murdered hundreds or thousands of Russians, French, and other Europeans.

You complain of the miserable condition of Gaza, which is in a "blockade", the only thing that the Israelis want to ensure is that you will not receive additional thousands of rockets to launch against innocent civilians. Yet you are the "wretched" and the peacelovers at Oxford, Scandinavia and Dublin justify your murders as legitimate opposition to Israel "the conqueror". If Gaza would have opted to be like Singapore and to live in peace with Israel, you would prosper not less than Singapore and maybe more. But, aha, you don't have leaders like Lee Kwan Yew who made his tiny country a first world country, one of the most prosperous in the world. While your leaders, spiritual and political, prefer to keep you in poverty, launching a Nazi propaganda against the Jews and Israel, prefer to invest most of the aid in weapons and rockets, with the dictatorial Hamas not recognizing Israel and trying to kill as many Jews – women and children – as their spiritual forefathers Hitler and Haj Amin al-Husseini. People of Gaza, revolt your oppressors, your extremist leaders, who want to keep you in the Middle Ages, in poverty, without human rights, without gender equality, with 72 virgins awaiting your Shahids in heaven.

MUSLIM NOBEL PRIZE LAUREATES

Many Muslims and Arabs succeeded to integrate, to think positively and not negatively, without promoting hate but love, not war and terrorism but peace and living in harmony with your neighbors, not backwardness but progress, not despair but courage, courage to live and prosper not courage to kill yourself and a dozen others, as Islam is not against progress as many Muslim leaders preach, and your people – Muslims and Arabs can be wealthy and content with their lives. If you'll do so within two or three decades you'll not have only a dozen 12 Muslim Nobel laureates but many dozens, in proportion to the Muslim 23% of the world's population. You are as clever as the Jews, the Christians, and the Japanese, and nothing hinders you to be as successful as they are. Seven of the twelve winners have been awarded the Nobel Peace Prize. If we disregard the controversial award to the arch-terrorist Palestinian Yasser Arafat (1994), Anwar al-Sadat the President of Egypt was awarded the prize in 1978 for a peace that is holding until now in spite of all the problems, although he was murdered by extremists. Shirin Ebadi (2003, Iran) was awarded for her efforts for democracy and human rights. She has focused especially on the struggle for the rights of women and children. She lives in exile in the UK, as the retrograde regime of Iran does not give equal rights to women and human rights either. In 2005, the Egyptian Mohamed El Baradei was awarded the Nobel Prize for his efforts to prevent nuclear energy from being used for military purposes, mainly against the Iranian efforts to become nuclear. I am very skeptical that this will be achieved but at least he tried and so did many European and American leaders, however they may prove wrong as you can't trust a deceitful regime as the Iranian regime, as you could not trust Hitler's regime either.

I believe that the Nobelist who deserved most the prize was Muhammad Yunus (2006, Bangladesh), whom I admire, but he deserved to receive the prize in Economics (awarded unfortunately to too many neoliberals) for his efforts to create economic and social development from below with microcredit given by Grameen Bank to the poorest women to run their own business, helping hundreds of millions all over the world to get out from the vicious circle of poverty and exploitation. Tawakel Karman (2011, Yemen) was awarded the Nobel Peace Prize at the age of 32 for her non-violent struggle for the safety of women and for women's rights to full participation in peace-building work. She became the international public face of the 2011 Yemeni uprising that is part of the Arab Spring uprisings. She has been called the "Iron Woman" and "Mother of the Revolution" by Yemenis. So, there is an alternative to wars and terror...

In 2014 Malala Yousafzai (Pakistan) was awarded the Nobel Peace Prize at the age of 17. She is known mainly for human rights advocacy for education and for women in her native Swat Valley in the Khyber Pakhtunkhwa province of northwest Pakistan, where the local Taliban had at times banned girls from attending school. Yousafzai's advocacy has since grown into an international movement. On the afternoon of October 9, 2012, Yousafzai boarded her school bus in the northwest Pakistani district of Swat. A gunman asked for her by name, then pointed a pistol at her and fired three shots. One bullet hit the left side of Yousafzai's forehead, travelled under her skin through the length of her face, and then went into her shoulder. In the days immediately following the attack, she remained unconscious and in critical condition, but later her condition improved enough for her to be sent to the Queen Elizabeth Hospital in Birmingham, England, for intensive rehabilitation. On 12 October, a group of 50 Islamic clerics in Pakistan issued a fatwā against those who tried to kill her, but the Taliban reiterated their intent to kill Yousafzai and her father, Ziauddin Yousafzai. The assassination attempt sparked a national and international outpouring of support for Yousafzai. She received the Nobel Prize as she fought for the right of all children in education. She lives in the UK. In 2015 the Tunisian Dialogue Quartet received the Nobel Peace Prize for its decisive contribution to the building of a pluralistic democracy in Tunisia in the wake of the Jasmine Revolution of 2011. We see here a trend of the Peace Prize committee to support peace in Moslem countries, human rights, political rights, women equality, education for women, as opposed to the policy of ISIS and the other terrorist groups. That is why I am afraid that the next attack of ISIS could take place during the Nobel Peace Prize award ceremony on December 10. The Norwegian committee has done too much against ISIS and Taliban, Islamic organizations and fundamentalist countries. Norway and Sweden (the other ceremonies take place in Stockholm on the same night) are easy targets for the terrorists and if they can they will attack the ceremonies broadcasted live all over the world. It makes much more sense than attacking a rock concert in Paris or a restaurant managed by a Muslim woman.

I myself was interviewed live several times during the ceremony of the award of the Chemistry Nobel Prize to my in-law Danny Shechtman in Stockholm on December 10, 2011. The TV crew came to our house, showed the small grandchildren of Shechtman whom we kept in our home while all the family were in Stockholm, and asked me about Danny. With a split screen the viewers of the national TV network could see the King of Sweden and me, so it was almost as if I was there. I appreciate very much the courage of the Nobel Prize committee that is not afraid of potential threats by the terrorist organizations. Furthermore, because only 12 Muslims have won the Nobel Prize and 22% of the Nobel Prize winners are Jews, the Nobel Prize committees are accused of being pro-Jews, Eurocentrists, and backing only Muslim dissidents such as most of the Muslim Nobel Peace Prize winners. So, let us hope that the prizes award ceremonies at Oslo and Stockholm will not be disturbed, and this bastion of world culture will continue its activities

Other Muslim Nobelists are Naguib Mahfouz (Literature, 1988, Egypt) of whom we've written at length in this book – known to be a liberal and strong supporter of the peace agreement with Israel, Orhan Pamuk (Literature, 2006, Turkey) who describes himself as a Cultural Muslim who associates the historical and cultural identification with the religion while not believing in a personal connection to God. Mohammad Abdus Salam (Physics, 1979, Pakistan) together with Sheldon Lee Glashow and Steven Weinberg (Both of them are Jewish...) for their contributions to the theory of the unified weak and electromagnetic interaction between elementary particles, including inter alia the prediction of the weak neutral current. He was a member of the Ahmadiyah Muslim community, which the government of Pakistan declared to be non-Muslim in Pakistan in a 1974 constitutional amendment. So, we see here a clear pattern to award most of the Nobel Prize for Muslims who are dissidents and opposed to extreme Muslim ideology. May God protect from any harm the Nobel committees who award "too few" prizes to Muslims, "too many" prizes to Jews – 22% of all the winners, and Israelis – 12, exactly like the number for all the Muslims, while Israel exists only since 1948 (Prizes started in 1901) with a population of 8 millions compared to 23% of the world's population for the Muslims, and what is worse most of the Muslims are not "Kosher" Muslims according to the extremists, being liberals, supporting the Peace agreements with Israel, advocating equal rights for women, education for girls, not believing in a personal connection to God, dissident Muslims, building a pluralistic democracy instead of a Sharia-ruled Islamic Caliphate, advocating human rights, trying to prevent nuclear energy from Iran. Until now we have only two Nobelists who might deserve the prize, according to the extremists: Yasser Arafat the arch-terrorist and Muhammad Yunus who is of course not an extremist but he is not a dissident either. Finally, Ahmad Zewail (Chemistry, 1999, Egyptian-American) – he left Egypt as a young man and is a US citizen, and Aziz Sancar (Chemistry, 2015, Turkey) – both of them are liberals. So, out of the 12 laureates (from Egypt – 4, Pakistan – 2, Turkey – 2, Yemen – 1, Iran – 1, Tunisia – 1, Bangladesh – 1), 8 are dissidents or not Kosher, 3 are liberals, and only Arafat was an extremist in terrorism but not so much in Islam.

ISRAELI NOBEL PRIZE LAUREATES

List of the 12 Israeli Nobel Prize winners in Literature, Peace, Economics and Chemistry:

Year	Winner	Field	Contribution
1966	Shmuel Yosef Agnon	Literature	"profoundly characteristic narrative art with motifs from the life of the Jewish people"
1978	Menachem Begin	Peace	"for signing a peace treaty with Egypt "
1994	Yitzhak Rabin Shimon Peres	and Peace	"for the peace talks that produced the Oslo Accords"
2002	Daniel Kahneman	Economics	for prospect theory
2004	Aaron Ciechanover and Avram Herskho	Chemistry	"for discovery of ubiquitin-mediated protein degradation"
2005	Robert Aumann	Economics	"his work on conflict and cooperation through game-theory analysis"

2009	Ada E. Yonath	Chemistry	"her studies on the structure and function of the ribosome in cells"
2011	Dan Shechtman	Chemistry	"for his studies on atoms in rigid crystals"
2013	Arieh Warshel and Michael Levitt	Chemistry	for "the development of multiscale models for complex chemical systems"

ON MUSLIMS CALLED JIHAD AND SHAHID

I have searched on Facebook how many men and women are called Jihad (48), Djihad (32), Jeehad (18), Djehad (1), Jehad (34), altogether – 133. I could have started a whole argument on how the Muslims call their children Jihad – holy war, and that shows how belligerent they are. But as I am a researcher and I search ten times before I express my opinion, I looked at the meaning of Jihad. Well, Jihad /dʒɪˈhɑːd/; Arabic: جهاد jihād [\[dʒɪˈhæːd\]](#) is of course what everybody knows "holy war", fight, battle against the infidels, but it is also an Islamic term referring to the religious duty of Muslims to maintain the religion. In Arabic, the word jihād is a noun meaning "to strive, to apply oneself, to struggle, to persevere". A person engaged in jihad is called a mujahid, the plural of which is mujahideen (مجاهدين). The word jihad appears frequently in the Quran, often in the idiomatic expression "striving in the way of God (al-jihad fi sabil Allah)", to refer to the act of striving to serve the purposes of God on this earth. Muslims and scholars do not all agree on its definition. Many observers—both Muslim and non-Muslim—as well as the Dictionary of Islam, talk of jihad having two meanings: an inner spiritual struggle (the "greater jihad"), and an outer physical struggle against the enemies of Islam (the "lesser jihad") which may take a violent or non-violent form. Jihad is often translated as "Holy War", although this term is controversial. According to "Orientalist" (historian of the Middle East) Bernard Lewis, "the overwhelming majority of classical theologians, jurists", and specialists in the hadith "understood the obligation of jihad in a military sense." Javed Ahmad Ghamidi states that there is consensus among Islamic scholars that the concept of jihad will always include armed struggle against wrong doers. In Modern Standard Arabic, the term jihad is used for a struggle for causes, both religious and secular. The Hans Wehr Dictionary of Modern Written Arabic defines the term as "fight, battle; jihad, holy war (against the infidels, as a religious duty)". Nonetheless, it is usually used in the religious sense and its beginnings are traced back to the Qur'an and words and actions of Muhammad. In the Qur'an and in later Muslim usage, jihad is commonly followed by the expression fi sabil illah, "in the path of God." It is sometimes used without religious connotation, with a meaning similar to the English word "crusade" (as in "a crusade against drugs"). The word jihad (or variations based on its root—the letters J,H,D) appear 164 times in the Quran according to one count. According to Jonathan Berkey, jihad in the Quran was originally intended for the nearby neighbors of the Muslims, but as time passed and more enemies arose, the Quranic statements supporting jihad updated for new adversaries.

This encourages the use of jihad against non-Muslims. In the twentieth century, one of the first Islamist groups, the Muslim Brotherhood emphasized physical struggle and martyrdom in its credo: "God is our objective; the Quran is our constitution; the Prophet is our leader; struggle (jihad) is our way; and death for the sake of God is the highest of our aspirations." In a tract "On Jihad", founder Hasan al-Banna warned readers against "the widespread belief among many Muslims" that struggles of the heart were more demanding than struggles with a sword, and called on Egyptians to prepare for jihad against the British, (making him the first influential scholar since the 1857 India uprising to call for jihad of the sword). The group called for jihad against the new Jewish state of Israel in the 1940s, and its Palestinian branch, Hamas (rulers of Gaza, supported by many of those who boycott Israel), called for jihad against Israel when the First Intifada started. In 2012, its General Guide (leader) in Egypt, Mohammed Badie also declared jihad "to save Jerusalem from the usurpers and to [liberate] Palestine from the claws of occupation ... a personal duty for all Muslims." Muslims "must participate in jihad by [donating] money or [sacrificing] their life ..." Many other figures prominent in Global jihad started in the Muslim Brotherhood -- Abdullah Azzam, bin-Laden's mentor, started in the Muslim Brotherhood of Jordan; Ayman al-Zawahiri, bin-Laden's deputy, joined the Egyptian Muslim Brotherhood at the age of 14; and Khalid Sheikh Mohammed, who planned the 9/11 attack, claims to have joined the Kuwaiti Muslim Brotherhood at age 16. Middle East historian Bernard Lewis argues that in the Quran "jihad ... has usually been understood as meaning 'to wage war'", that for most of the recorded history of Islam, "from the lifetime of the Prophet Muhammad onward", jihad was used in a primarily military sense, and that "the overwhelming majority of classical theologians, jurists, and traditionalists" (specialists in the hadith) also "understood the obligation of jihad in a military sense." I am quite confused, well, this is what they want...

DOUBLE MEANING STATEMENTS OF PALESTINIANS

So, why so many parents call their children Jihad? Actually, I think that the total number of people called Jihad is much more than what I have found on the English Facebook, hundreds or maybe thousands. Do they want that their children will strive in the way of God or launch a holy war against the infidels? The Israelis, orientalist and Oriental Jews have become experts in double meanings, the arch-terrorist Yasser Arafat (a compatriot, as he was born also in Cairo) excelled in that – he managed to fool some Israeli leaders telling them that all the clauses against Israel in the Palestinian National Covenant/Charter are caduc/obsolete, as well as the Norwegian Peace Prize committee awarding him the Nobel Peace Prize because of the Oslo Accords, all happened in Oslo actually – the Accords that brought Arafat to the Palestinian territories where he received arms and launched terrorist attacks killing more than a thousand Israeli civilians (when he operated in Jordan, Lebanon and Tunisia the Israeli casualties were substantially minor), and the Nobel Peace Prize award. Israel has always strongly objected to the Charter, which describes the establishment of the state of Israel as "entirely illegal" (Art. 19), considers Palestine, with its original Mandate borders, as the indivisible homeland of the Arab Palestinian people (1-2), urges the elimination of Zionism in Palestine and worldwide (Art. 15), and strongly urges the "liberation" of Palestine throughout by ethnic cleansing of Jewish presence.

On 14 December 1988, following an outcry from his 13 December General Assembly speech, Yasser Arafat called a press conference in Geneva to clarify his earlier statement by specifically mentioning the right of all parties concerned in the Middle East conflict to exist in peace and security, including the State of Palestine, Israel, and their neighbours. He also renounced terrorism. Israel dismissed these statements of moderation from Arafat and the PNC resolution in Algiers, 1988 (which had been sufficient to open a dialogue with the United States) as "deceptive propaganda exercises" because (among other objections), "the PLO Covenant has not changed." (Shlaim, p. 466) In May 1989, Arafat, in a statement later criticized by Edward Said as being beyond his authority, and properly a matter for the PNC, told a French TV interviewer "C'est caduc", meaning that it, the Charter, was null and void. (transcript in Journal of Palestine Studies, Vol. 19, No. 2 (Winter, 1990), pp. 133–188). In August 1993, Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin insisted on changes to the Charter as part of the Oslo Accords. Following Yasser Arafat's commitment to "submit to the Palestinian National Council for formal approval" the changes to the Charter confirming that "those articles of the Palestinian Covenant which deny Israel's right to exist, and the provisions of the Covenant which are inconsistent with the commitments of this letter are now inoperative and no longer valid" in the September 9, 1993 letters of mutual recognition, the PNC met in Gaza and voted on 24 April 1996. The decision was adopted by a vote of: 504 in favor, 54 against, and 14 abstentions. The official English translation used by Israel, the PLO and the United States reads:

A. The Palestinian National Charter is hereby amended by canceling the articles that are contrary to the letters exchanged between the P.L.O. and the Government of Israel 9–10 September 1993.

B. Assigns its legal committee with the task of redrafting the Palestinian National Charter in order to present it to the first session of the Palestinian Central Council."

At one time the text of the Charter at the official website of the Palestinian National Authority appended these amendments to the text of the 1968 charter; the redrafting process referred to in the second amendment still remains uncompleted. An earlier version of the above translation is still available on the website of Palestinian American Council. The relevant text reads:

The PNC held a special session on April 24, 1996 and listened to the report made by the legal committee, reviewed the current political conditions, which the Palestinian people and the Arab nations encounter, and so the PNC decided: "Depending on the Independence Declaration and the political statement adopted by the PNC in its 19th session in Gaza on November 11, 1988 which stressed resolving conflicts by peaceful means and adopting the principle of two states, the PNC decides to:

First: Amend the articles in the National charter that contradict with the letters exchanged between the PLO and the government of Israel on Sept. 9-10, 1993.

Second: The PNC authorizes the Legal Committee to draft a new charter to be presented at the first meeting to be held by the Central Council."

This earlier version had appeared on the Palestine Minister of Information's website. Many commentators noted that the text only indicated a decision to amend the charter, not an actual amendment. Official Palestinian websites have since replaced the vague translation with the concrete version quoted above. Yitzhak Rabin said in a speech to the Knesset on 5 October 1995, at the time of the ratification of the Oslo II Interim Agreement: "The Palestinian Authority has not up until now honoured its commitment to change the Palestinian Covenant ... I view these changes as a supreme test of the Palestinian Authority's willingness and ability, and the changes required will be an important and serious touchstone vis-à-vis the continued implementation of the agreement as a whole". And if Rabin, a strong believer in peace, maintained that, we have to believe him as he learned the hard way about the dubious conduct of Arafat and the Palestinian terrorist authority. We cannot learn from that dubious conduct nothing about the conduct of Arabs and Muslims, as Israel has signed peace agreements with two trustworthy statesmen who launched wars against Israelis but knew also how to make peace and keep it in spite of all the hurdles – Anwar Sadat, president of Egypt, who was murdered because of that, and King Hussein of Jordan, who died a few years later. As Rabin was also murdered by an Israeli extremist a month after his speech we do not know of course what he would have done, but I think that if Rabin, Sadat and Hussein would have lived longer a comprehensive peace agreement would have been signed, with the three statesmen solving together the Palestinian conflict within a joint sovereignty of Israel, Egypt and Jordan. As Arafat was not only dubious towards Israel but also towards Jordan (remember Black September), Lebanon, and Egypt.

When Rabin's government was replaced by Benjamin Netanyahu's Likud government, the issue again became even more controversial, with Israel's demand for greater clarity and precision eventually expressed in the Wye River Memorandum. Reportedly, an internal PLO document from the Research and Thought Department of Fatah stated that changing the Covenant would have been "suicide for the PLO" and continued:

The text of the Palestinian National Covenant remains as it was and no changes whatsoever were made to it. This has caused it to be frozen, not annulled. The drafting of the new National Covenant will take into account the extent of Israeli fulfillment of its previous and coming obligations... evil and corrupt acts are expected from the Israeli side... The fact that the PNC did not hold a special session to make changes and amendments in the text of the National Covenant at this stage... was done to defend the new Covenant from being influenced by the current Israeli dictatorship.

In January 1998, before the second Gaza meeting, Faisal Hamdi Hussein, head of the legal committee appointed by the PNC, stated "There has been a decision to change the Covenant. The change has not yet been carried out". The AP reported that:

In a surprise development, the PLO's Executive Committee decided to take no action on amending articles in its charter... Palestinian Information Minister Yasser Abd Rabbo gave no reason why the committee failed to act on the charter.

UNISPAL, citing AFP and Reuters reported that:

The PLO Executive Committee, meeting in Ramallah, took no action on amending articles in the Palestinian charter which Israel views as seeking its destruction. The PA Information Minister Yasser Abed Rabbo told reporters the committee had only "reviewed" a letter PA President Arafat had given to President Clinton, listing the charter clauses annulled by the PNC.

PLO spokesman Marwan Kanafani was videotaped telling reporters, "This is not an amendment. This is a license to start a new charter."

In 2009, Fatah officials, among them Azzam al-Ahmad and Nabil Shaath, confirmed that the Charter would remain unchanged.

And why have I brought all that? Because I believe that in the Middle East agreements are relative even if you mean it when you sign them. I have no doubt that Sadat meant to keep the peace agreements and indeed he and Mubarak kept it rigorously, although only as a cold peace without economic and cultural exchanges. But when Morsi, a leading member in the Muslim Brotherhood, came into power in Egypt, the peace agreement was endangered and if he would not have been replaced by Abdul Fatah al-Sisi, I am quite sure that the peace agreements would have been abrogated. Luckily, Al-Sisi replaced the Islamic extremist Morsi. Al-Sisi was born on 19 November 1954 in Cairo (after I left), to parents Said Hussein Khalili al-Sisi and Soad Ibrahim Mohamed Al Shishi. He grew up in Gamaleya, near the al-Azhar Mosque, and in a quarter where Muslims, Jews and Christians resided, and in which he later recalled how during his childhood he heard church bells and watched Jews flock to the synagogue unhindered. So, al-Sisi at least remembered the same Egypt as I knew, a cosmopolitan Egypt with Muslims, Christians and Jews and not an ultra-orthodox country, as Iran, as Morsi wanted it to become.

It goes without saying that if something happens to King Abdullah II bin Al-Hussein and ISIS takes over the peace agreement with Jordan would be abrogated as well. We saw how the minimal agreements that were still kept with the Palestinian Authority became caduc in Gaza when Hamas took over, launching thousands of rockets against Tel Aviv, Haifa and southern Israel. The Palestinians leaders did not keep most of the agreements from the beginning, with double-talks, caduc and whatsoever, trying to convince us that Jihad is not a holy war but a peaceful solution, that they mean peace when they launch terrorist attacks, that what they say in English to the Western leaders and their fooled adherents at universities in the West and peacelovings in Israel, is also what they say in complete contradiction in Arabic to their people, that the incitement at schools and in Mosques is a propaganda in favor of Israel. To finish this Jihad saga I must say two more things: that I didn't find any Israelis called war or holy war on Facebook, nor any American, but I found many Spaniards called Guerra, Guerrero and Germans called Krieg, but at least those were surnames and not given names, so the mothers and fathers did not chose for their children a given name of Jihad, whatever it means, caduc or not. The second thing is that I looked on Facebook how many people are called Shahids. Shahid and Shaheed (Arabic: شهيد shahīd, plural: شهداء shuhadā') originates from the Qur'anic Arabic word meaning "witness" and is also used to denote a "martyr". It is used as a honorific for Muslims who have died fulfilling a religious commandment, especially those who die wielding jihad, or historically in the military expansion of Islam. The act of martyrdom is istishhad. So, here again the double-talk Palestinian propaganda would say to the peaceloving students in Dublin and Oxford that Shahid means "witness" when actually they mean "martyr", and the students will believe it, as they believe all the lies of the "boycott Israel" movements. Nevermind that dozens of people are called Shahid as a given name, some of them maybe would even die as martyrs when they will murder those students who believe in the lies of the Palestinian propaganda...

THE DANGER OF MUSLIM EXTREMISM TO THE WESTERN WORLD

The problem with Jihad and Shahids is that sooner or later, ISIS, Hizballah, Iran, Al-Qaeda, Hamas, et al will obtain chemical, biological and nuclear weapons, and employ it against Israel, the US, Russia, and Europe. Shahids are going to die anyhow, so what could be better than instead of killing a 13 year old kid or an old woman aged 80 (this is their courage...), they would be able to murder all the population of Haifa where I live, hundreds of thousands of Parisians, including dozens of my friends, while some of them donate plenty of money for the poor refugees from Syria including the ISIS infiltrators who killed and wounded hundreds as a token of gratitude, Heidelberg and Berlin hosting and helping millions of Muslim refugees and gastarbeiters, Oxford where I have friends who ask me all the time about "the Wall", and the "murderous crimes" of Israel against women and children, and I answer them vehemently, Washington advising Israel not to use excessive force against terror, as they want probably that we would use the same moderate force that they used in Iraq, Japan, Germany, and Afghanistan. If I was not afraid for the future of my children and grandchildren, my friends all over the world, including Beirut, I would have remained silent and politically correct. But I know that the situation is worsening, that it is just a question of time until terrorist individuals, organizations and countries will obtain mass murder weapons and employ them, as they want to die, as their leaders incite them to die as Shahids, while they steal millions from the aid to their people as Arafat and other Arab and Muslim leaders did, they live in golden palaces, and enjoy from the 72 virgins not in heaven but here on earth. In all human society nobody used so cinically the innocence of their people as some of the Arab and Muslim leaders do. Even if they will not use the mass murder weapons for killing hundreds of thousands or millions (they don't care as they murder hundreds of thousands anyhow in their own countries, while complaining about the Jews who killed 107 people in Deir Yassin), they will use their weapons to extort and blackmail Europe and the US. After the "World War III" as many Western leaders calls it, after millions will die on both sides, but mainly on the Muslim and Arab side, as the West and Russia are much stronger, the Muslim states may prosper like Germany and Japan did, they may renounce forever terrorism and wars, opting for progress as Germany and Japan did, but at what cost? Why not do it right away, why not switch the key now and not after a catastrophe, or maybe the leaders don't mind a catastrophe, like Hitler and belligerent Japan did not mind, maybe they believe that they'll win as the West is too weak, as they have "batallions" of millions already living there who will take arms on the decisive day? We have to convince the Arabs and Muslims to vow allegiance for their new countries in Europe and the US, not to listen to the ISIS propaganda, nor joining their forces, as their welfare, prosperity and life depend on that, once and for all!

ISIS et al will not stop their terrorist attacks against Europeans in Europe. Instead of occasionally they'll launch attacks every day, several times a day, not only against Bataclan, but also against the Comedie Francaise, the Louvre and the Picasso Museum in Paris, and especially against the Avignon Theater Festival that was so sympathetic to the Arabs when I saw their plays, against Albert Hall, National Gallery and Covent Garden in London, Ireland, Scandinavia. Many British, French, Irish, and Scandinavians think that if they'll fawn on ISIS, negotiate with them – did Churchill negotiate with Hitler?, understand their motives – which are uniquely to conquer Europe and kill all the non-believers – ISIS will spare them – did Hitler spare Norway and Denmark? They don't know that in the Middle East if you are a peaceloving you are perceived as a weakling. Israel has learned it the hard way, most of the Israeli peacelovings who were a legion in the past have reached the same conclusion as the Hawks and Oriental Jews – that unless you are strong and act vehemently against terrorism you are not respected. Unless Belgium, France, the UK, Scandinavia, Germany, Spain, Portugal, Italy, and the Netherlands act with "excessive force" as Israel does against terrorism, the Muslims who are now many millions will get more and more radical and they might seize power democratically (like Hitler did) or by force. You do not resolve the problems of terrorism suavely but harshly, but even so you might fail like the US has failed in Iraq and Afghanistan, with more than six thousand casualties – more than twice the casualties of 9/11 - and loss of trillions dollars. Yet, after 9/11 the Muslim extremists have ceased to attack the US in America and most of the casualties were military and not civilians. Before the terrorist attacks in Paris on 13/11 the French politicians did not speak about Muslim terrorism in order not to offend the Muslims, but now they speak overtly on Muslim terrorists and not just terrorists (otherwise one might think that it is a Hindu or Jewish terrorism), saying that they are in war against barbarism – barbarism? Even I don't use such harsh terms as I don't think that Arabs or Muslims are barbaric, but just their extremist leaders! The Europeans, fearing for their lives, are no more afraid to stigmatize Muslims. Although as the years go by, you don't speak anymore about German barbarism in World War II but Nazi barbarism, obviously because not millions of German soldiers and policemen contributed to the atrocities of war and the Holocaust, but just a few Nazis, as Hitler, Eichmann, and a dozen more.

European polices are no more afraid to fight terrorism in their own capitals of Paris and Brussels in the bastions of terror within the cities limits. They could have done it ten or twenty years ago, when extremism was minimal, but they have waited for massive attacks in order to take action. Unfortunately, Israel acted in the same way in the past, and waited for more than a thousand civilian casualties in the early 2000s in order to conquer again the West Bank, after they brought there the arch-terrorists to take control of "Palestine" and instead of solving their population problems, their refugees problems, they invested their money (actually the money that they have received from Europe, the US and the oil-rich Arab countries) in weapons, incitement, and terrorism. The same ordeal happened in Gaza, where the Hamas launched thousands of rockets against Israel, forcing Israel to make a blockade on Gaza and launch preentive attacks in order to prevent them to bring in even more weapons and cease launching rockets but with many civilian casualties on both sides – by Israel because the rockets were launched from civilian neighborhoods and by the Hamas on purpose to kill as many civilians as possible. There were and still are many naïve Western leaders who believe in the "Arab Spring", in Arab democracy, in Arab Human Rights, and so on. And instead of the tyrants or undemocratic leaders as Gaddafi, Saddam Hussein, Mubarak, Assad, in Yemen, Afghanistan, Palestine – came into power tyrants and organizations of the worst kind, with civil wars and hundreds of thousands casualties, with ISIS, Hamas (elected democratically, but like Hitler democracy stopped after they were elected), Morsi (with dubious elections, and a retrograde Muslim Brothers regime), and anarchy. So, what is the alternative? To leave in peace the tyrants killing thousands or after the intervention of the West to raise the level of casualties to hundreds of thousands like in Iraq? Israel made the same mistake when it intervened in Lebanon, but we don't intervene anymore as we've learned the lesson that in the Muslim Middle East peace and democracy will arrive with the Messiah.

We do not intervene in Syria, first of all because Assad father and son kept strictly the cease fire agreements after the Yom Kippur War, although we didn't withdraw from the Golan, unlike the broken ceasefire/Oslo agreements with Lebanon, Gaza and Palestine, where we have withdrawn from all the territories in Lebanon and Gaza and most of the territories in the West Bank, showing that occupation has nothing to do with the conduct of belligerent terrorist regimes/organizations as Hizballah, Fatah and Hamas which attack Israel even more after they have withdrawn from all the territories, but Israeli peacelovings, the UN and our best friends in the West still believe that we have to withdraw once again from the West Bank and instead of suffering a thousand casualties we'll suffer from hundreds of thousands casualties, as it is the norm in the Middle East. In all the conflicts with the Arabs in the last hundred years less than 25,000 thousands Israelis/Mandate citizens were killed – soldiers and civilians. This is a similar number to the casualties in one day during the Holocaust. The conclusion is obvious, Israel will never rely on others as far as its security is concerned and if withdrawal from territories might cause Holocaust-like casualties, Israel will not withdraw from any of the remaining territories (we have withdrawn from Sinai, Lebanon and Gaza) – as withdrawal from the Golan Heights will bring ISIS to the Galilee, and withdrawal from the West Bank will bring ISIS to Tel Aviv, Natanya, Kfar Saba and Jerusalem. Nevertheless the occupation of the Palestinians West Bank towns and villages will end according to the outlines which I have developed at length in this book, and as far as the Golan Heights is concerned there are only a few thousands living there.

ARE FUNDAMENTALIST MUSLIMS THE ONLY TERRORISTS NOWADAYS?

Terror is a terrible weapon – 8 or 19 people might cause the death of hundreds of Parisians in 13/11 and 3,000 Americans in 9/11. In other terrorist attacks committed by Fundamentalist Muslims throughout the world tens of thousands were killed. In the civil wars in Muslim countries in Syria, Iraq, Afghanistan, Algeria, Yemen, Sudan, Lebanon, etc. millions were killed, mostly civilians. In modern history there were many organizations and countries that resorted to terror, there were civil wars, but nowadays most of terrorist attacks and civil wars occur in Muslim countries by Muslim fundamentalists and totalitarian regimes. In the Nazi propaganda against Israel and the Jews they try to compare Palestinian Nakba, the defeat of the Arab countries during Israeli war of independence, to the Jewish Holocaust. I think that it is essential to put things in proportion in view of the massive lies of Abu Mazen and the Palestinian leaders denouncing Israel of war crimes, comparing what they have suffered from the Jews to the Holocaust. It has become an equation – you the Jews have suffered from the Holocaust, although the Iranians and Abu Mazen deny that there ever was a Holocaust, and we have suffered from the Nakba and from "massacres" of thousands innocent civilians like the Nazi did during World War II. They repeat this lie so often that at the end they believe it, the poor kids who study it at school believe it of course, and the peacelovings boycotters believe it as they want to believe it, being notorious anti-Semites even if some of them are Jews. In the Holocaust 6000000 – six millions civilians Jews were murdered by the Nazis and their German, Romanian, French, Italian, Polish, Ukrainian, Dutch, and other collaborators, civilians who have never done anything wrong to their murderers, not them nor their brethren, while in a hundred years of conflict with the Arabs a few hundreds Arab civilians were killed on purpose as a retaliation to massacres of Jews, almost exclusively before the establishment of the State of Israel, and even if we add to them the thousands of civilian casualties killed because of the launching of rockets from populated areas during the wars and the operations of Israel, the numbers are similar to the number of Jewish civilians killed on purpose by the Arab terrorists, PLO, Hamas, et al.

According to Wikipedia's Israeli's Casualties of War 1,013 Jewish civilians were killed in conflicts with Arabs prior to Israel's Independence (first list), 2,373 Jewish civilians were killed by Arabs during the War of Independence (third list), 1,329 Jewish civilians were killed since the War of Independence at the Intifadas and during wars (third list), in terror attacks were killed (fourth to sixth lists) – 544. In total 5,258 Jewish civilians were killed by Arabs, but this number is much lower than the actual number, as many incidents have an unknown number of victims and many of the thousands wounded died after the attacks. Arab leaders complain that the Israelis don't want to assimilate in the Middle East, maybe they intend that we'll comply with the horrendous figures of millions of casualties in Arab/Muslim conflicts in the Middle East and North Africa, mostly civilian casualties in Algeria, Iraq, Syria, Lebanon, Yemen, Black September (the world remained silent when 3,400-5,000 Palestinians were killed by the Jordanian Army, mainly civilians)... To receive an objective survey on the Israeli-Palestinian conflict you are invited to read the website of the Israeli Ministry of Foreign Affairs.

Not six million, not even six thousand Palestinian civilians killed on purpose at war, as the Arabs killed about 6,000 civilian Jews, no more than 600 civilian Arabs (and 100 British) were killed on purpose in Palestine/Israel in the 100 years of the conflict. Israel disagrees with the Arabs that the civilian Arabs killed during the Gaza retaliation operations are killed on purpose as all of them were killed when Israel retaliated to the thousands of rockets launched against its civilian population from populated areas. But even if we take into consideration exaggerated figures of Palestinian civilian casualties, they amount to thousands – a similar amount of the Israeli civilian casualties. The Sabra and Shatila massacre where hundreds of Muslim Palestinians were killed was committed by Lebanese Christians, but Jews/Israelis are accused as usual for a murder that they have not committed from the crucifixion of Jesus by the Romans/Italians until today. Palestinian leadership throws names and numbers and the world thinks that the atrocities committed were at least as Auschwitz. In Deir Yassin during the war of Independence - 107 Palestinians were killed by Irgun and Lehi, in the Cave of the Patriarchs - one Israeli murdered 29 Arabs before he was beaten to death by the survivors. In Kfar Kassem - 48 Palestinian villagers returning from work during a curfew were killed by border police on the eve of the Sinai War. In the King David Hotel Bombing 91 civilians were killed by the Irgun. In Balad el Sheikh 60 Palestinians were killed by the Haganah. If we add to those numbers all the other civilian Arabs killed before or during the war of Independence and about 10 Arabs killed by Israeli individual terrorists, we arrive to a figure of at most 600, most of them killed in retaliation to mass murders of Jews, as thousands of Israeli civilians were killed on purpose by Arab terrorists in a 100 years of war between Jews & Arabs. The figures given by the Palestinians and Israeli peacelovings are of course much higher, as they tend to exaggerate all their statistics and in particular the statistics of the refugees. The most flagrant example of double standards is how the peacelovings and international press treated the terrorist attack of Israeli individuals against a civilian Arab family burning the house of the family and killing a baby and his parents – the Dawabsha family. Almost all Israelis condemned this atrocious attack that killed 3 civilians, while when hundreds of Israelis civilians – babies, mothers, and old people – are being killed nobody even notices that, and the Palestinian Authority's leadership glorifies the terrorist acts.

This is the huge lie of the Palestinians, there is nothing to compare between what they suffered from the wars – all of them were started by them wanting to annihilate us and after they have lost the wars they cry out that they are the victims of the Nazi Zionists. Who are the Nazis – the Arabs and Iranians wanting to exterminate Israeli and all the Jews as the Nazi wanted, killing on purpose thousands of Jewish civilians not because they don't want to kill more but because they are unable in spite of the thousands of rockets they launch on our cities, and the thousands of terrorists they send to kill us? So, they act as Nazis while accusing us of being Nazis, as their teachers the Nazis accused the Jews of all the trouble that came over Germany, the war that they have lost, the bankrupt of their nation, their Nakba. And who are those who accuse the Israelis of all those war crimes? A corrupt PLO leadership that were and remain a terrorist organization, a fundamentalist Hamas, glorifying terror like the Nazis glorified war, wanting to impose a retrograde undemocratic state as opposed to the democratic, humane and progressive Israel. It goes without saying that almost all the Jewish population condemned the murders of innocent Arab civilians, instead of glorifying those who have committed them as the Palestinians do for their Shahids. So, in the most extreme case we have a situation where a few hundreds Arabs civilians were killed on purpose by individuals or pre-independence organizations as a retaliation to killing of ten times more Jewish civilians. Even if we take into consideration exaggerated amounts of Palestinian civilian casualties they are similar to the number of Israeli civilian casualties. Furthermore, there is a huge difference between the fighting ethics of the pre-Israel organizations and the Palestinian terrorists. Indiscriminate killing of civilians by Jews as in the Cave of the Patriarchs is unforgivable, un-Jewish, brings shame on all the Israelis. But it is monstrous to compare it to the Nazis atrocities, as Palestinians are preaching to the choirs.

But there was no Israeli nor there was any Jew who was ever a terrorist in Europe and the US, or throughout the whole world. If this is the case, I don't understand why we encounter the wave of anti-Semitism and boycott by the Europeans and Americans who were never murdered by any Jew. Why are they so keen to complain about killing of Arabs in legitimate defense, they like so much the Arabs and Muslims, that some of them, a tiny fraction but still Arabs and Muslims murdered thousands of them? I don't have any answer besides that it is caused by sheer anti-Semitism, or excessive "peacelovingism", or Stockholm Syndrome. Arabs and Muslims, 8 or 19 kill thousands of Europeans and Americans, and the Jews are blamed because they kill civilians in response to thousands of rockets launched from civilian neighborhoods, four children, one child. And who condemns the Jews - citizens of countries that kill much more civilians in their present wars and in their past wars, citizens of countries who suffered thousands of casualties because of Arab and Muslim terrorism. While no Israeli, not even 8 Jews killed any European or American in Europe/US, as Arab/Muslim killed by the thousands. Not even 7, not even 6, 5, 4, 3, 2, 1... Oh!, was there one Jewish terrorist who killed a European in Europe?

There was one, his name was Herschel Grynszpan. In Kristallnacht hundreds of Jews were killed, 30,000 were arrested and incarcerated in Nazi concentration camps. Jewish homes, hospitals, and schools were ransacked, as the attackers demolished buildings with sledgehammers. Over 1,000 synagogues were burned (95 in Vienna alone) and over 7,000 Jewish businesses destroyed or damaged. Kristallnacht was a pogrom against Jews throughout Nazi Germany and Austria on 9–10 November 1938, carried out by SA paramilitary forces and German civilians. German authorities looked on without intervening. The name Kristallnacht comes from the shards of broken glass that littered the streets after Jewish-owned stores, buildings, and synagogues had their windows smashed. The pretext for the attacks was the assassination of the German diplomat Ernst vom Rath by Herschel Grynszpan, a German-born Polish Jew living in Paris. Kristallnacht was followed by additional economic and political persecution of Jews, and is viewed by historians as part of Nazi Germany's broader racial policy, and the beginning of the Final Solution and The Holocaust. So, the Germans killed hundreds of innocent Jews, incarcerated 30,000 innocent Jews, burned 1,000 synagogues, and destroyed 7,000 Jewish businesses because a Jewish "terrorist" – Herschel Grynszpan assassinated one German Diplomat in Paris in 1938. In 2015, 8 Arabs/Muslims not 1, not 2, not 3 – 8 kill and wound hundreds of innocent Parisians, and the French don't kill in retaliation hundreds of Arabs, nor arrest 30,000 Muslims in concentration camps, nor ransacked Arab homes, hospitals and schools, nor demolish buildings, nor burn 1,000 mosques, nor destroy 7,000 Arabs and Muslims businesses. I do not want of course to incite anyone to do to the Arabs what the Germans did to the Jews, or even a hundred times more as the only Jewish terrorist who murdered a European in Europe killed only one German and Arab terrorists killed hundreds of Parisians, thousands of Americans. I am against the use of force, unless it is for legitimate defense. But if the Muslim fundamentalists will continue their terrorism, it is possible that fascist governments will reappear in Europe, even now there are many extreme right parties with increasing power, and they might do to the Arabs/Muslims what the Germans did to the Jews, bearing in mind that besides Grynszpan none of the Jews committed any act of terror in Europe and still six millions of them were murdered, and there are probably now thousands terrorists in Europe waiting for the appropriate timing to murder thousands or even hundreds of thousands Europeans with unconventional weapons, incited by extremist Imams and some of the Muslim Europeans who support the terrorist organisations, backed by unscrupulous Arab/Iran terror countries.

But the lesson that we learn here is that if a Jew kills a European it brings havoc to thousands of Jews, but if Arabs and Muslims kill hundreds of Europeans and thousands of Americans, the Europeans don't burn any mosque, ransack any Muslim business, and don't kill hundreds of innocent Muslims, not even arrest 30,000 Arabs and put them in concentration camps. What the Europeans do is to arrest a few terrorists, kill some of them as they resisted the arrest, and bomb with a few bombs the ISIS strongholds in Syria. And who is to blame? The Jews, as some European ministers draw analogies between the Paris attacks and the Palestinian conflict. The terrorist did what they did because they were "frustrated" by racism, no employment, the 'barbaric occupation of Palestine by Israel'. But there are thousands, millions in Europe and the US who are also frustrated by racism, unemployment, neoliberal governments favoring the rich and enlarging inequality, favoring the top 1% of the population at the expense of the 99%, encouraging by law the absurdity that the richest people and the most profitable companies pay minimal taxes if at all. But in Occupy Wall Street, in all the demonstrations of the unemployed in Europe and the US did any Christian or Jew resort to terrorism? Not even one, but if the Arabs and Muslims do, we condone them and blame as usual the Jews, the Israelis, the West Bank occupation, the Gaza blockade, the killing of one or four children. Why? Is Jewish blood of hundreds of children murdered by the Palestinians cheap, is the European or American blood of thousands of civilians cheap, why blame only Israel and the Jews when they kill in legitimate defense Palestinians? Are all the Arabs and Muslims in the Ghettos of Brussels and Paris innocents, do they support vehemently or tacitly terrorism against the Europeans and much more against French and Belgian Jews, against Israelis, and what about the Imams – do they encourage terrorism, Shahids, and extremism in the name of Islam, and if they do are they punished? Are the Arab countries, Iran, Lebanon, oil-rich Arab countries that finance terror and pay the terrorists and their families compensations punished, does anyone condemn the Palestinians that they incite in their schools and mosques the killing of Jews and Israelis, has anyone read the Hamas propaganda calling for the occupation of Europe and killing of non-believers, and what about the Muslim brotherhood that some Western leaders favor their election – has anyone read what they preach and what danger it brings to Western civilization, does anyone think that if the Iranians will have Nuclear weapons, and they will have due to the mistaken policy of the West, they will not use it against the West? It always starts with the Jews but it ends with the gentiles!

FIRST THEY CAME FOR THE OTHERS AND WE DID NOT SPEAK OUT

First they came for the Socialists, and I did not speak out—Because I was not a Socialist.

Then they came for the Trade Unionists, and I did not speak out—Because I was not a Trade Unionist.

Then they came for the Jews, and I did not speak out—Because I was not a Jew.

Then they came for me—and there was no one left to speak for me.

"First they came ..." is a famous statement and provocative poem written by Pastor Martin Niemöller (1892–1984) about the cowardice of German intellectuals following the Nazis' rise to power and the subsequent purging of their chosen targets, group after group. Many variations and adaptations in the spirit of the original have been published in the English language. It deals with themes of persecution, guilt and responsibility. Niemöller says: "I believe, we Confessing-Church-Christians have every reason to say: mea culpa, mea culpa! We can talk ourselves out of it with the excuse that it would have cost me my head if I had spoken out."

I accuse the intellectuals, academics, peacelovings, boycott Israel organizations, the anti-Semites, who condemn Israel, the Jews, and favor the Hamas, Fatah and other terrorist organizations, of cowardice, fawning indiscriminately Arabs and Muslims and always condemning the Jews – in Europe, the United States, the United Nations, in Arab Countries, throughout the world, and also in Israel – they contribute as stated brilliantly by Pastor Martin Niemöller to the advent of the new Nazi regimes – the fundamentalist Arab and Muslim movements: ISIS/ISIL/Daesh – Islamic State, Boko Haram, al-Qaeda, Hezbollah, Jabhat al-Nusra, Hamas, Fatah/PLO, Iran Islamic State, et al. First they came for the Jews killing thousands of civilians and soldiers and the world did not object – on the contrary when we reacted in legitimate defense we were accused of using excessive force killing a child or four children, then they came for the Americans killing three thousands in 9/11 and the Europeans continued to condone them, then they came for the Arabs killing hundreds of thousands in civil wars with the other dictatorial regimes in Algeria, Syria, Iraq, Afghanistan, Yemen, Libya, Lebanon, etc. and the Europeans did not speak out, the intellectuals, the academics, the peacelovings, the boycott Israel and anti-Israel, pro-Arab organizations in Ireland, the UK, the US, Spain, France, Germany (I witnessed a huge demonstration in Unter den Linden of all places, where Hitler paraded in Berlin, of thousands of Muslims against Israel and the Jews because of the Mavi Marmara incident where 9 aggressors were killed) all those hallucinatory organizations continued to blame Israel, they spoke out but against the Jews, not the Arabs and Muslims extremists, they are the victims and the Jews are the aggressors (never mind that their grandfathers didn't protest either when the Jews were persecuted and murdered in the 30s and 40s, while the Jews didn't have a state and did not kill any European, they believe in human rights only in favor of the Arabs but never in favor of the Jews). Then, ISIS, Al-Qaeda, et al. are coming for them in Europe, in Paris, in Brussels, in London, in Madrid, in Moscow (although the Russians are among the fews who know with whom they are dealing but they support nevertheless the dictatorial regimes of Syria and Iran). But we'll not tell them "We've told you and you didn't listen", without malicious delight, feeling a strong compassion for the victims, as if they were our own people, and indeed I love my European and American friends not less than my Israeli friends, and I contacted all of them to see if they were affected by the attacks, offering our aid as unfortunately we have become experts in the war against terrorism. We could have cooperated a decade, two decades, five decades ago, in the war against terrorism, when the Muslim Europeans were not so extremists, when there were much less Arab refugees, when they could be integrated much more in the European population like the Jews were integrated, when most of them were seculars and their women had equal rights. But it is too late to regret that, we have still time to react, the European nations have a strong army and police, they need just the will to use them, to enforce the law, to expulse all those who preach against them, to kill all the terrorists in the Kasbas or in Syria and Iraq. They don't have to be afraid to enter the Muslim Ghettos, they are the foreigners who live in the European homelands, and the minimum that they can do is to be faithful to their new nations, integrate in the European culture or return to Syria, Algeria, Iraq, Turkey if they feel frustrated or victims of racism. In Syria there is no racism of course, I just bring here the list of the belligerents, do they want to impose a similar list in Paris?

 Ba'ath Government (MOD) <ul style="list-style-type: none"> Armed Forces NDF Ba'ath Brigades Allied groups <ul style="list-style-type: none"> Hezbollah al-Abbas SR ANG PFLP-GC JM Sootoro AAH KSS Houthis^[1] 	 Opposition (SRCC) <ul style="list-style-type: none"> FSA Islamic Front Ajnad al-Sham Fastaqim Kama Umirt ADF al-Zenki movement Support: [show] Other allied groups: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> Alwiya al-Furqan 	 ISIL <ul style="list-style-type: none"> Military Yarmouk Martyrs Brigade^{[9][10]} Jaysh al-Jihad^[11] 	 Rojava (SDF) <ul style="list-style-type: none"> YPG YPJ Syrian Arab Coalition <ul style="list-style-type: none"> BF Al-Sanadid Forces MFS^[b] Allied militias: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> PKK Sutoro^[b] MLKP^[12]  Iraqi Kurdistan <hr/> CJTF-OIR:  United States
---	--	---	---

 Iran  Russia  China^[2] Support: [show]	 Jaish al-Fatah <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • al-Nusra Front • Ahrar ash-Sham • Sham Legion Support: [show] Allied militias: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • MWAA • JAAD 	 Canada  France^[13]  Australia  Saudi Arabia  Qatar  Jordan  Bahrain  United Arab Emirates  Morocco  United Kingdom
--	--	---

IS ISRAEL AN APARTHEID COUNTRY AND SHARIA A DEMOCRATIC LAW?

The famous Muslim author from Kenya Ali Mazrui was one of the first to try to link the treatment of Palestinians with South Africa's apartheid. He has also argued that sharia law is not incompatible with democracy. He is not the only one to link both issues and many others try to refute them, stating that it is an oxymoron, and that the Islamic fundamentalists, or Islam in general, are anti-democratic and pro-apartheid. We'll try to deal on those issues as objectively as possible, although my opinions are known. After all there are thousands if not more who maintain that Israel is an apartheid state, including intellectuals, professors, students, artists... Furthermore, I'll not act as many of them who slander Israel without leaving their opponents to express themselves, or who issue fatwas against those who allegedly oppose Islam, encourage terrorism against Europeans, Americans, and most of all Jews, while blaming them for all the wrongs of the world, which reminds us very much the Nazi allegations against the Jews. So, let us contain our anger, frustration, disgust, & examine those honorable men & women allegations.

There is a Jewish saying: "haposel bemumo posel", meaning that if you want to refute an allegation accuse your opponent of this allegation. So, if you have an apartheid antidemocratic policy in your state, religion or society, accuse your opponents to behave in apartheid and against democracy. The Nazis used this saying against the Jews blaming them for all their shortcomings. So, if you infringe the human rights of your citizens in Iraq, Syria or Yemen, blame Israel that they infringe the human rights of their citizens, and preferably receive the automatic backing of the anti-Israeli majority. So, we see Libya and Syria, the bastion of democracy and human rights, accusing Israel of their shortcomings. Who cares about the truth that the Israeli Arabs, and even the West Bank population have the best human rights from all Arab countries, that Israel is governed by law which is the same law for the Jews and Arabs, that Arabs students are studying at all our universities (I had classes with one third Arabs, most of them were excellent students), that there are many Arab doctors, nurses and managers in all our hospitals, I guess that even in a higher percentage than in our population, excellent and wealthy contractors, academics, owning restaurants, garages, working in gardening, metal and wood industries, hotels and services, entering Jewish homes and benefiting from Jewish hospitality without discrimination.

Sometimes, they even take advantage negatively of our hospitality. When we built our house in Mount Carmel we had an Arab foreman who was in excellent terms with us. One day my wife came to the building site and saw a few words written in Arabic on one of the walls. She asked the foreman what is written there and he answered that he has just written his name. When I came to the site she told me and I saw in huge letters "Ihrab elBeit", the worse curse in Arabic – Let your house crumble, and that was written by a foreman who received an excellent payment and who told us that we are like "family". He probably thought that as I don't look "Egyptian" I cannot understand or read Arabic. He was fired of course, but not before harming our installation which caused us later a lot of problems and costs. But, this is an exception, as throughout my life I had excellent relations with the Israeli Arabs, and with students from Arab countries at Insead. We face today in Israel a situation where we cannot foresee that an Arab going behind you will stab you in the back or a car driven by an Arab will run over you and kill you. This has happened to hundreds of Israelis and we really cannot guess when a peaceloving Arab will turn terrorist. I even suggested a device – special spectacles – like a rear mirror in a car that will enable you to see what is going on behind your back, if someone is trying to stab you – a man, a woman, or a schoolboy or to run you over. Is it racism to try to protect you from death, but then why only against Arabs, it can be also a Jew, or a lunatic. Nevertheless, until now there was never a Jewish suicide bomber while there were thousands of Arabs and Muslims suicide bombers.

Is it politically correct to mention it? I live in a mixed city, Haifa, where we live in perfect harmony – Jews, Christians, Muslims, Druzes and Bahais. If I am afraid that an Arab will stab me, how I would teach my students that up to a third of them are Arabs? What shall I do when I go to an hospital when an Arab doctor or nurse will attend me? Can I trust my gardener to whom I open the door of the patio to cut the trees with an immense saw, as in a moment he can cut chop up my head and I would appear in an advertisement for ISIS? And what about the other skilled workers? And the Arab taxi driver? And Arab partners and clients? In Israel we have now a joke about an old woman who was afraid to go out because of all the murders, so she decided to stay at home. After a few days she had to order some groceries from the supermarket and she did it on the Internet. A few hours later someone knocks at her door – who is it she asks, I am Ahmed from the Supermarket deliveries... In 2014 I organized a tour to twenty of my friends to Provence. It was in the middle of one of the operations against Gaza when thousands of rockets were launched against Israel and there were hundreds of Palestinians casualties in Gaza. The bus driver came to take us from Marseille airport, and he said Hello, I am Muhammad, your driver.

He was very nice and we got along very well. But in one of the afternoons he drove above the valley of the Ardèche which is very scenic, in particular a 30-kilometre section known as the Ardèche Gorges. The walls of the river there are limestone cliffs up to 300 metres high. Suddenly I thought that he can in a moment shout Allahu Akbar and jump with the bus and the 20 Israelis to the abyss. We would appear in the front news of France and Israel, as among the Israelis were some well-known people, one of the richest men in Israel, Israelis who contributed very much to the state security in developing and supplying to our army electronic devices. I did not ask to change the bus driver as I am not a racist, but if he would have heard a convincing sermon from his Imam the night before inciting him to kill Israelis, I would be lying down now in the ground with Ruthy and the other 18 friends, and on my tomb would be written "Here lies in peace a politically correct Israeli, who believed in fraternity with Arabs, and abhorred racism". Still, I am convinced that as our relations with Arabs is so intertwined - we cannot separate. Two states for two peoples is a myth, first of all because the Palestinians don't agree that Israel would be a Jewish state and insist on the right of return that will turn Israel into another Arab state. Then, because even if there is no right of return we have twenty percent of population who are Arabs and it is impossible to separate from them. Apartheid is impossible in Israel because we live together for better and for worse, and in most of the cases we live peacefully, Arabs live in the same neighborhoods and houses, work in the same places, we go to the same malls, movies, buses, trains, they come to our houses and we go to theirs, we eat in their restaurants, they learn at our universities. We take the risk that some of them will become Shahids, but the risk is much lower than the risk to die from the pollution of the chemical industries near Haifa.

Israel is described as an apartheid country, being the sole democracy in the Middle East. Yet a Muslim African author as Ali Mazrui calls Israel an apartheid country, knowing exactly what happened in South Africa and what happens in Israel and in the occupied territories. But this is not enough, as he states that the sharia law is not incompatible with democracy. According to Wikipedia, Sharia is a significant source of legislation in various Muslim countries. Some apply all or a majority of the sharia code, and these include Saudi Arabia, Sudan, Iran, Iraq, Afghanistan, Pakistan, Brunei, United Arab Emirates, Qatar, Yemen and Mauritania. I wonder which one of those countries is democratic according to Mazrui – Sudan? Iran? Iraq? Afghanistan? Yemen? In these countries, sharia-prescribed punishments such as beheading, flogging and stoning continue to be practiced judicially or extra-judicially. The introduction of sharia is a longstanding goal for Islamist movements globally, including in Western countries, but attempts to impose sharia have been accompanied by controversy, violence, and warfare.

Most countries do not recognize sharia; however, some countries in Asia, Africa and Europe recognize parts of sharia and accept it as the law on divorce, inheritance and other personal affairs of their Islamic population. In Britain, the Muslim Arbitration Tribunal makes use of sharia family law to settle disputes, and this limited adoption of sharia is controversial. The concept of crime, judicial process, justice and punishment embodied in shari'a is different from that of secular law. The differences between sharia and secular law have led to an ongoing controversy as to whether sharia is compatible with secular forms of government, human rights, freedom of thought, and women's rights. Sharia includes Marital jurisprudence, including Nikah, the marriage contract; and divorce, known as Khula if initiated by a woman. Criminal jurisprudence, including Hudud, fixed punishments; Tazir, discretionary punishment; Qisas or retaliation; Diyya or blood money; and apostasy. Military jurisprudence, including Jihad, offensive and defensive; Hudna or truce; and rules regarding prisoners of war. Dress code, including hijab. Other topics include customs and behaviour, slavery and status of non-Muslims.

Sharia courts treat women and men as unequal, with Muslim woman's life and blood-money compensation sentence as half as that of a Muslim man's life. Sharia also treats Muslims and non-Muslims as unequal in the sentencing process. Human Rights Watch and United States' Religious Freedom Report note that in sharia courts of Saudi Arabia, "The calculation of accidental death or injury compensation is discriminatory. In the event a court renders a judgment in favor of a plaintiff who is a Jewish or Christian male, the plaintiff is only entitled to receive 50 percent of the compensation a Muslim male would receive; all other non-Muslims [Buddhists, Hindus, Jains, Atheists] are only entitled to receive one-sixteenth of the amount a male Muslim would receive". Saudi Arabia follows Hanbali sharia, whose historic jurisprudence texts considered a Christian or Jew life as half the worth of a Muslim. Jurists of other schools of law in Islam have ruled differently. For example, Shafi'i sharia considers a Christian or Jew life as a third the worth of a Muslim, and Maliki's sharia considers it worth half. The legal schools of Hanafi, Maliki and Shafi'i Sunni Islam as well as those of twelver Shia Islam have considered the life of polytheists and atheists as one-fifteenth the value of a Muslim during sentencing.

Several major, predominantly Muslim countries have criticized the Universal Declaration of Human Rights (UDHR) for its perceived failure to take into account the cultural and religious context of non-Western countries. To the best of my knowledge all the Muslim countries have adhered to this Declaration, which is the basis for human rights in the world, the basis of ethics in all fields, the basis of the free world. If a fundamentalist Muslim country does not concur with this declaration which is mandatory to all the members of the UN it is free to leave the UN as it is incompatible with their beliefs. Iran, the bastion of human rights, declared in the UN assembly that UDHR was "a secular understanding of the Judeo-Christian tradition", which could not be implemented by Muslims without trespassing the Islamic law. Islamic scholars and Islamist political parties consider 'universal human rights' arguments as imposition of a non-Muslim culture on Muslim people, a disrespect of customary cultural practices and of Islam. In 1990, the Organisation of Islamic Cooperation, a group representing all Muslim majority nations, met in Cairo to respond to the UDHR, then adopted the Cairo Declaration on Human Rights in Islam.

Ann Elizabeth Mayer points to notable absences from the Cairo Declaration: provisions for democratic principles, protection for religious freedom, freedom of association and freedom of the press, as well as equality in rights and equal protection under the law. Article 24 of the Cairo declaration states that "all the rights and freedoms stipulated in this Declaration are subject to the Islamic shari'a". In 2009, the journal Free Inquiry summarized the criticism of the Cairo Declaration in an editorial: "We are deeply concerned with the changes to the Universal Declaration of Human Rights by a coalition of Islamic states within the United Nations that wishes to prohibit any criticism of religion and would thus protect Islam's limited view of human rights. In view of the conditions inside the Islamic Republic of Iran, Egypt, Pakistan, Saudi Arabia, the Sudan, Syria, Bangladesh, Iraq, and Afghanistan, we should expect that at the top of their human rights agenda would be to rectify the legal inequality of women, the suppression of political dissent, the curtailment of free expression, the persecution of ethnic minorities and religious dissenters — in short, protecting their citizens from egregious human rights violations. Instead, they are worrying about protecting Islam."

H. Patrick Glenn states that sharia is structured around the concept of mutual obligations of a collective, and it considers individual human rights as potentially disruptive and unnecessary to its revealed code of mutual obligations. In giving priority to this religious collective rather than individual liberty, the Islamic law justifies the formal inequality of individuals (women, non-Islamic people). Bassam Tibi states that sharia framework and human rights are incompatible. Abdel al-Hakeem Carney, in contrast, states that sharia is misunderstood from a failure to distinguish sharia from siyasah (politics). Fundamentalists, wishing to return to basic Islamic religious values and law, have in some instances imposed harsh sharia punishments for crimes, curtailed civil rights and violated human rights. Extremists have used the Quran and their own particular version of sharia to justify acts of war and terror against Muslim as well as non-Muslim individuals and governments, using alternate, conflicting interpretations of sharia and their notions of jihad. The sharia basis of arguments of those advocating terrorism, however, remain controversial. Some scholars state that Islamic law prohibits the killing of civilian non-combatants; in contrast, others interpret Islamic law differently, concluding that all means are legitimate to reach their aims, including targeting Muslim non-combatants and the mass killing of non-Muslim civilians, in order to universalize Islam. Islam, in these interpretations, "does not make target differences between militaries and civilians but between Muslims and unbelievers. Therefore it is legitimated (sic) to spill civilians' blood". Other scholars of Islam, interpret sharia differently, stating, according to Engeland-Nourai, "attacking innocent people is not courageous; it is stupid and will be punished on the Day of Judgment [...]. It's not courageous to attack innocent children, women and civilians. It is courageous to protect freedom; it is courageous to defend one and not to attack". Yet, many Muslim refugees in Europe want to impose sharia.

Many scholars claim Shari'a law encourages domestic violence against women, when a husband suspects nushuz (disobedience, disloyalty, rebellion, ill conduct) in his wife. Other scholars claim wife beating, for nashizah, is not consistent with modern perspectives of the Quran. One of the verses of the Quran relating to permissibility of domestic violence is Surah 4:34. In deference to Surah 4:34, many nations with Shari'a law have refused to consider or prosecute cases of domestic abuse. Shari'a has been criticized for ignoring women's rights in domestic abuse cases. Musawah, CEDAW, KAFA and other organizations have proposed ways to modify Shari'a-inspired laws to improve women's rights in Islamic nations, including women's rights in domestic abuse cases. But why improve women's rights if we have the UN Declaration which mandates fully equal rights to all women all over the world, regardless of religion or nation.

Shari'a is the basis for personal status laws in most Islamic majority nations. These personal status laws determine rights of women in matters of marriage, divorce and child custody. A 2011 UNICEF report concludes that Shari'a law provisions are discriminatory against women from a human rights perspective. In legal proceedings under Shari'a law, a woman's testimony is worth half of a man's before a court. Except for Iran, Lebanon and Bahrain which allow child marriages, the civil code in Islamic majority countries do not allow child marriage of girls. However, with Shari'a personal status laws, Shari'a courts in all these nations have the power to override the civil code. The religious courts permit girls less than 18 years old to marry. As of 2011, child marriages are common in a few Middle Eastern countries, accounting for 1 in 6 all marriages in Egypt and 1 in 3 marriages in Yemen. UNICEF and other studies state that the top five nations in the world with highest observed child marriage rates — Niger (75%), Chad (72%), Mali (71%), Bangladesh (64%), Guinea (63%) — are Islamic-majority countries where the personal laws for Muslims are sharia-based. Rape is considered a crime in all countries, but Shari'a courts in Bahrain, Iraq, Jordan, Libya, Morocco, Syria and Tunisia in some cases allow a rapist to escape punishment by marrying his victim, while in other cases the victim who complains is often prosecuted with the crime of Zina (adultery). Sharia grants women the right to inherit property from other family members, and these rights are detailed in the Quran. A woman's inheritance is unequal and less than a man's, and dependent on many factors. For instance, a daughter's inheritance is usually half that of her brother's.

Until the 20th century, Islamic law granted Muslim women certain legal rights, such as the right to own property received as Mahr (brideprice) at her marriage, that Western legal systems did not grant to women. However, Islamic law does not grant non-Muslim women the same legal rights as the few it did grant Muslim women. Sharia recognizes the basic inequality between master and woman slave, between free women and slave women, between Believers and non-Believers, as well as their unequal rights. Sharia authorized the institution of slavery, using the words abd (slave) and the phrase ma malakat aymanukum ("that which your right hand owns") to refer to women slaves, seized as captives of war. Under Islamic law, Muslim men could have sexual relations with female captives and slaves without her consent. Slave women under sharia did not have a right to own property, to move freely, or to consent. Sharia, in Islam's history, provided a religious foundation for enslaving non-Muslim women (and men), but nevertheless encouraged the manumission of slaves. However, manumission required that the non-Muslim slave first convert to Islam. A non-Muslim slave woman who bore children to her Muslim master became legally free upon her master's death, and her children were presumed to be Muslims like their father, in Africa and elsewhere. Starting with the 20th century, Western legal systems evolved to expand women's rights, but women's rights under Islamic law have remained tied to the Quran, hadiths and their faithful interpretation as sharia by Islamic jurists.

Blasphemy in Islam is any form of cursing, questioning or annoying God, Muhammad or anything considered sacred in Islam. The sharia of various Islamic schools of jurisprudence specify different punishment for blasphemy against Islam, by Muslims and non-Muslims, ranging from imprisonment, fines, flogging, amputation, hanging, or beheading. In some cases, sharia allows non-Muslims to escape death by converting and becoming a devout follower of Islam. Blasphemy, as interpreted under sharia, is controversial. Muslim nations have petitioned the United Nations to limit "freedom of speech" because "unrestricted and disrespectful opinion against Islam creates hatred". Other nations, in contrast, consider blasphemy laws as violation of "freedom of speech", stating that freedom of expression is essential to empowering both Muslims and non-Muslims, and point to the abuse of blasphemy laws, where hundreds, often members of religious minorities, are being lynched, killed and incarcerated in Muslim nations, on flimsy accusations of insulting Islam. I am against blasphemy of Islam, Christianity and Judaism. But charity begins at home, if the Muslims are so vehement against any form of blasphemy they should punish as harshly blasphemy against Jews and Christians and not allow anti-Semitic allegations and cartoons inspired by the Nazis, as it takes place in Palestine and elsewhere.

According to the United Nations' Universal Declaration of Human Rights, every human has the right to freedom of thought, conscience and religion; this right includes freedom to change their religion or belief. Sharia has been criticized for not recognizing this human right. According to scholars of Islamic law, the applicable rules for religious conversion under sharia are as follows:

- If a person converts to Islam, or is born and raised as a Muslim, then he or she will have full rights of citizenship in an Islamic state.
- Leaving Islam is a sin and a religious crime. Once any man or woman is officially classified as Muslim, because of birth or religious conversion, he or she will be subject to the death penalty if he or she becomes an apostate, that is, abandons his or her faith in Islam in order to become an atheist, agnostic or to convert to another religion. Before executing the death penalty, sharia demands that the individual be offered one chance to return to Islam.
- If a person has never been a Muslim, and is not a kafir (infidel, unbeliever), he or she can live in an Islamic state by accepting to be a dhimmi, or under a special permission called aman. As a dhimmi or under aman, he or she will suffer certain limitations of rights as a subject of an Islamic state, and will not enjoy complete legal equality with Muslims.
- If a person has never been a Muslim, and is a kafir (infidel, unbeliever), sharia demands that he or she should be offered the choice to convert to Islam and become a Muslim; if he or she rejects the offer, he or she may become a dhimmi. Failure to pay the tax may lead the non-muslim to either be enslaved, killed or ransomed if captured.

On the issues of slavery in Islam in the past and nowadays – see Wikipedia article.

On the issues of anti-Semitism in Islam in the past and nowadays – see Wikipedia article.

See also Wikipedia articles on – Holocaust Denial, History of the Jews under Muslim rule, Human rights in the Palestinian territories, Human rights in Islamic countries, New anti-Semitism, Antisemitism in the Arab world, Anti-Zionism, Arab alliance for freedom/democracy.

I'll not quote WikiIslam as it is perceived as an anti-Islamic wiki. I'll not quote either The Divine Vision No God but Allah, which was written in order to refute allegations made by WikiIslam.

IS THE JEWISH, ISRAELIS, SWEDISH et al. CRITICISM AGAINST ISRAEL JUSTIFIED?

I have referred many times in my books about the difference between a discloser/whistleblower and a squealer/informer. A discloser denounces the crimes of the mighty while protecting the rights of the weak, trying to organize the weak against the mighty. Is it ethical to denounce a criminal act committed against the weaker parties of society? By denouncing the mighty the discloser suffers from ostracising, from persecution, from loss of income, sometimes he even risks his life. On the other hand a squealer has only to gain from denouncing the weak to the mighty, he gets a reward, he is praised and honored by the mighty, becoming an example to follow. Aleksandr Solzhenitsyn was a discloser and that is why he was sent to a Gulag, Emile Zola writing J'accuse was a discloser and was sentenced to prison, the Israelis very few businessmen who disclose the unethical acts of the tycoons are disclosers and they are ostracised, losing 90% of their income, fired from their lucrative jobs. On the other hand the squealers who denounced hiding Jews to the Nazis in France got the Jews' apartments and their belongings.

In order to denounce immoral crimes in society, as for discovering the crimes of Mack the Knife, we have to be assisted by disclosers, as nobody sees the knives of an immoral society, which keeps an impeccable facade and are assisted by the best lawyers and public relations. We need transparency otherwise nothing would ever be disclosed, and the law will never be able to safeguard the interests of the citizens, whether they are rich like Schmuel Meier or poor like Smith. Therefore, only light can raise the curtain on the unethical acts of society. Religious persons should conduct themselves morally as they believe that God examines their acts at every moment and nothing escapes him. For businessmen, governments, leaders, army and police officers, who are slightly less religious the fear of the disclosure of their acts to the public should replace the fear of God, because if they do not have anything to hide they will not have to fear anything. On the other hand if citizens utilize the liberty of disclosure to reveal the secrets of the state to other states or for reasons that have nothing to do with ethics, they would be subject to reprisals, exactly like the newspapers, which benefit from the liberty of the press and cannot disclose state secrets. The disclosers have to divulge only systematic and permanent cases of abuse of human rights which are inherent to the operations of the state, which wrong citizens, and which are backed by irrefutable documentation. They have to resort to outside bodies only after having exhausted all the internal bodies, which are meant to deal with those cases, such as the courts, the State-Comptroller, or even the press, Internet blogs, public opinion, etc.

The transparency of a society will force every citizen to ask himself at every moment the question: 'what is my ethical attitude toward this ethical problem?', because the following day his acts will be disclosed in the press or on the Internet, and his family, friends and congregation will learn about his acts. We will not have to ask ourselves anymore if our acts are legal or not, if they concur with the mission of the company and its ethical standards, but how they concur with our ethical standards, as we will not be able to hide anymore in anonymity. It will be like in the senate committees for the appointment of high officials, or with presidential candidates who are obliged to disclose their life transparently. Of course, we would have to beware not to resort to McCarthyism, to the open eye of the 'big brother', or to the denunciations of the sons and colleagues, as in the dictatorial regimes. Societies should be made transparent with measure and moderation and excesses will have to be condemned. Full disclosure should be made only on important cases, where the evidence is irrefutable, where there are no ulterior motives, and after having exhausted all other instance within the society, the state, the army, or the police.

I strongly favor disclosure of immoral acts, which is contrary to our most innate hatred of whistle-blowers. I wrote this chapter in my other books and in this book after a long meditation, and following a conviction based on the analysis of case studies, the sources of my book, and a thorough empirical research. It is practically impossible to complete an ethical revolution without the publication of unethical acts of society. The measures envisaged will take a long time to be established and to prevail. In the short-term, it is principally the Internet and the disclosers which will be the vehicle for the promotion of ethics in society. Are the disclosers of those cases, Americans or Israelis, heroes? Or will they be condemned to join Brutus and Judas in hell? We shall prove their contribution to the transparency of society and the safeguarding of the interests of the weak, and only the future will judge if they are traitors, martyrs or heroes.

Throughout the centuries, history repeats itself. Disclosers are called squealers and whistle-blowers by the legitimate forces that try to conceal their crimes. Progress is always linked with discoveries and disclosures, which the 'majority' tries to hide. Brutus makes a coup d'état against a tyrant, although the majority worships Caesar. Galilei says 'e pur si muove' although the Church in 'majority' tries to silence him. The Dreyfusards try to acquit the poor Dreyfus although the 'majority' cannot admit that a Christian officer has betrayed his country. The financial tycoons of modern economy try to hide their actions, which transgress ethics and even the law. The Internet, the press, and transparency reconstitute the Athenian democracy, as it is the modern Agora where nothing can be hidden. And when all societies will act openly, will be transparent, will not be able to hide dubious cases, the members of societies, and especially the weaker members, will have the possibility to be treated equitably, without discrimination.

I will not fall into the pit of double standards, being one of the fews who disclosed the unethical actions of the Israeli tycoons, the first person in the world who wrote academic books and dissertations on the wrongdoings to minority shareholders, foreseeing the Corporate Scandals of the early 2000s, the Great Recession of 2008, condemning neoliberal economical regimes, being accused of communism and anti-business, a "leftist", anti-capitalist, a high-minded person or bleeding heart. And on the other hand denouncing the crimes of the Muslim fundamentalists/Palestinians "freedom fighters", who are the weak, the underdogs, who suffered from colonialism, who suffer from occupation, who suffer from dictatorships. In Hebrew/Yiddish we have a term "Nebehdiger Shimshen" – the strong who plays the role of the weak. For me, the Palestinian/Muslims extremists will always be the strong playing the role of the weak. One of my defining moments occurred in Cairo when I was 7 years old when the Shabab almost burned our family alive, together with hundreds Europeans murdered or wounded. Yet they said that they were the weak and the British were the strongs. My earliest memories are linked to fears from Arabs, from Muslims, from a watermelons seller who wanted to stab my mother because she refused to buy the "too rosy" watermelon, from my father who was afraid that he will be arrested because of his Zionist activities and books, from the Jews who were arrested, tortured and even murdered by the Egyptians, from terrorist attacks since 1953 and until today murdering thousands of innocent civilians, from extreme Muslim/Arab violence.

I hate violence – Arab, Jewish, European or American. In all my life I never used violence against anyone, and I don't have any pity against those who use violence until it is in self defense. In this category I include all the wars and operations of Israel against the Arabs, as all of them were done in self defence, from the War of Independence, Six Day War, Yom Kippur War, Intifadas, anti-terrorism, Gaza and Lebanon retaliation, and so on. I am the first to condemn the very few acts of terror committed by Israelis and Jews, and the very few murders by our soldiers and policemen against Arabs. But they are exceptions in an almost impeccable record of purity of arms, used for legitimate purposes only, the most clean record of all the armies in the world. The very rare cases where the army does not act according to the highest moral standards should be investigated by the courts – military or civilian, or even disclosed in the Israeli press, the Israeli army, police and all the government institutions should be transparent to the Israeli public. However, I condemn the cases when Israeli organizations and individuals go to international organizations, to foreign press, to other countries in order to condemn Israel and its soldiers, without substantiating their allegations, to the delight of the anti-Semites, of our enemies, of all those who are waiting for the occasion to blame Israel. Furthermore, in many cases they are allowed to lecture at schools or in the army. This hallucinatory policy of letting defamatory organizations to brainwash children and soldiers, of letting religious movements to lecture at school or in the army, brainwashing small children and young and inexperienced soldiers by missionary envoys, should stop. Israel has to keep its heritage of a secular country (at least in the secular schools), while all the other schools should be private schools not financed by the government but by religious organizations. Arab schools in Israel should teach their children to be loyal to their country, exactly as American and French schools. It is unbearable to finance religious or Arab schools that teach their children dissident materials, when the graduates don't go to the army or the civil service, that should be compulsory to 100% of all the citizens, men and women, Jews and Arabs, religious or secular. In this way we shall solve all the poverty problems of Israel, as all children will receive the same education, including foreign languages, science, civic bases, history, etc. In this way we shall solve all discrimination problems as the Arabs and the Jews will receive the same education and have access to all government positions.

Obviously, the peaceloving statements are quoted by our enemies, and our information policy is very adversely affected. Some of those organizations even advocate boycotting Israel, cooperating with BDS, wanting to put an end to Israel by advocating the right of return. I give them the benefit of the doubt, by maintaining that their intentions are pure, and of course they should be allowed to speak freely in Israel and abroad. When I look at the names of the members of their public councils, all of them honorable men and women, I see there a well known Israeli singer who sympathises with the rights of the Palestinian refugees but not with the rights of the German refugees in the city where she was born. I see there well known actors, professors, authors – some of them were chosen by me among the best authors of the twentieth century in the survey of this book, Jews, Arabs, a Rabbi, orientals and ashkenazis, la crème de la crème. The only question that I have is why we almost never hear them on social justice issues, why do they take almost always the side of our enemies without giving the Jews, their own people, the benefit of the doubt, how can they receive donations from UNICEF, that is known by its anti-Israel policies. They assist the double standards policies of all the organizations condemning Israel. As of 2013, Israel had been condemned in 45 resolutions by United Nations Human Rights Council since its creation in 2006—the Council had resolved almost more resolutions condemning Israel than on the rest of the world combined. The 45 resolutions comprised almost half (45.9%) of all country-specific resolutions passed by the Council, not counting those under Agenda Item 10 (countries requiring technical assistance). During those years the alleged violation of human rights by Israel was the smallest from the violations of Palestine, Arab countries, Muslim countries, and even Western countries fighting in Iraq and Afghanistan killing a higher percentage of civilians than Israel during wars, but most of the blame is on Israel.

Everybody advocates human rights, freedom of speech, of the press, everybody advocates peace, everybody is against occupation of another people, against torture, against indiscriminate killing of civilians. This is easy, but like in business ethics the dilemmas start when you have to choose between two courses of action which are not clearcut. US is for human rights but after 9/11 they opened the Guantanamo Bay Detention Camp – how this concurs with human rights? What about the human rights of the Iraqis, the Afghans, the Syrians, the Libyans, the Palestinians by the Palestinians, the human rights of most of the countries that condemn Israel of violation of human rights, when human rights in Israel and the West Bank are much better than in most of the countries that condemn Israel. If there is an infringement of human rights the Israeli courts deal with those issues, as we are a democratic country ruled by law. To the best of my knowledge such infringements take place only in cases of extreme danger from terrorism and are approved by our courts. What about freedom of speech when you tell complete lies, defame Israel without any ground, go to the UN and tell them that you have heard from a soldier that he has stolen some money from a Palestinian when he was searching the house of the family of a terrorist who killed two Israelis the night before. The soldier denies it of course, but the UN issues immediately a statement that this is a crime of war, as everybody knows that looting is prohibited in the occupied territories. I have initiated, edited and participated in the translation into Ladino of the UN Universal Declaration of Human Rights, so I should know a thing or two about that. And I can tell without any doubt that Israel abides by the human rights better than any other country at war, towards occupied territories, and facing daily acts of terrorism, better than the US, better than the UK, better than France, better of course than Palestine, Syria, Iraq, Yemen, Saudi Arabia, I am not sure about Fidji or Micronesia, but I am sure that Israeli keeps human rights better than Sweden in a similar situation. To those who care about the human rights of the terrorists I want to remind that the victims have also human rights, and so had human rights hundreds of thousands civilians killed in World War II in Dresden, Berlin, Hiroshima, Nagasaki.

We have learned from the Talmud that there is a clear precedence in assisting needy persons –

עניי עירך קודמים – בבא מציעא ע"א א

First you should take care of your poors, than poors from your city, than poors from another city, than foreign poors. And in case that there is a poor and a rich man, take care first of the poor. One should be close first of all to his family, than to his community, than to his people, and then to humanity. You should not disregard the needs of the others, but you should take care first to the needs of the closest to you. Because if you take care first of the poors from another city, who will take care of the poors from your city? Israel is such an "ethical" country that it has issued regulations that in case there are many wounded people caused by a terrorist and the terrorist is in the worse condition the doctors should take care first of the terrorist and then to his victims. I beg to differ, because the human rights of the victims have precedence over the human rights of the agressor, and you have to take care first of all to the rights of the victims. However, it goes without saying that if there are wounded victims who are Jews, Arabs, and tourists, the doctors have to take care first of all to those who are more wounded, regardless of whether they are Jews or Arabs, Israelis or foreigners. Israeli human rights organizations should take care first of all of infringements on human rights of Jews and Arabs in Israel, regardless of the fact if they are poor or rich, Orientals or Ashkenazis, religious or secular, settlers, from the periphery, or from Haifa. If there is a conflict between human rights of illegal immigrants and Israelis, for example if both are looking for a job, the Israelis have precedence. And who should take care of the human rights of the Palestinians from the West Bank – first of all the Palestinians themselves, and Israeli organizations should take care of their human rights only after they take care of the Israelis.

We should not forget that the Palestinians from the West Bank and Gaza are our enemies, we are in a state of war, they were citizens or inhabitants of Jordan and Egypt that started a war against Israel in an attempt to annihilate it. And if a peaceloving British asks me (in Dresden) why we have built a so-called wall or fence, he should know that prior to the murder of more than a thousand innocent Israeli civilians there was no wall or fence, and the wall/fence has reduced the casualties to almost zero. So, if we have to weigh what is more important – to save the lives of innocent Israeli civilians – Jews or Arabs – or to make the life of the Palestinians tougher with the wall/fence, checkpoints, and searches – according to the Talmud and according to what we have learned from the conduct of the British in the mandate of Palestine and in the bombardments of Dresden and Berlin, the welfare of the Israelis comes first as the welfare of the British in World War II came first. In our case even more as the Nazis did not want to annihilate Britain just to conquer it while the Palestinians and Iran want to annihilate Israel. The Palestinians can have today all the human rights if they cease terrorism, make peace with Israel, recognize its right of existence as a Jewish state (and the state of all its citizens as I have suggested to add), cooperate with Israel to build an exemplary economy, with progress & peace.

In the US there are more weapons than citizens and if a burglar breaks into your property you are allowed to shoot at him. So, if somebody runs at you with a knife are you allowed to kill him? If someone runs over a group of people and is about to step out his car with an ax are you allowed to kill him? Those events take place unfortunately every day in Israel. Yet, the Swedish Minister for Foreign Affairs states that we use excessive force. It is true that Sweden does not use excessive force in the immigrant quarters of Malmo, but if the Swedes will not regain sovereignty in those neighborhoods they could find themselves in a much worse situation than the Parisians and the citizens of Brussels, Tel Aviv and Jerusalem. It is very easy to give advices to belligerent countries when you live in the best and most peaceful country in the world – Sweden, but they should remember what happened with the Nazis in Europe – first they started to persecute the Jews, and subsequently they destroyed all Europe, bringing havoc also to their own people, with more than fifty millions casualties (together with the Japanese aggression). But this time Islamic fundamentalists and Iran might cause casualties of a hundred millions, with nuclear, biological and chemical weapons that they will not hesitate to use as they favor death for their own people/shahids that will get their rewards in heaven (with millions of virgins), and even more death to the unbelievers – Christians, Jews, French, Americans, British, and Swedish.

The US also did not grasp the danger of radical Islam (or radicals in politically correct language) until 9/11, the French are starting to grasp the danger after 13/11, and what is terrible is that the instigators of terrorism today are mainly French, Belgian, British and American Muslim citizens. Swedes, and most Europeans, host millions of immigrants without demanding from them one precondition – to abide the Western civilization norms, not to renounce their religion, folklore, or language, but to learn the language and abide to the norms of their new countries. The Muslims have fled their countries of origin because of the tragic results of their undemocratic and anti-human rights norms, and they should not try to impose those norms on the European countries. Those that would abide would be welcome, and those that will not want to – should return to their homelands, the Imams inciting against the European norms should be expelled, as in Singapore, and the European police should be present all the time in the immigrant quarters. This has nothing to do with religion persecution and ethnic cleansing, as the same policy should be adopted if a Swede Christian or Jew opts to terror. Muslims abiding the European norms of conduct, including women's rights, would be welcomed, provided of course that the European countries can afford to integrate tens of millions of immigrants without losing their culture, their Judeo-Christian heritage, and the ranking as the most ethical, rich, and democratic states.

Many of the peaceloving movements would condemn as well the infringement of the human rights of the terrorists, not the victim, as they take care mainly of the aggressors' human rights. You probably should ask the terrorist running to stab you very politely what his intentions are. If he speaks only Arabic, you should find a translator to translate him what you want to tell him. You can of course call the police and wait for an hour until they come. You should try to shoot him in his leg trying to stop him and if he continues in his attempt (all that happening in fractions of seconds...) shoot at the other leg. Don't worry if the terrorist kills you, nobody would ever mention the act in Europe, the UN, or by the Israeli peacelovings. But if you kill the terrorist you will be blamed by the European countries, by the UN, UNICEF, and the Israeli peacelovings will say that it is a crime of war, because as everybody knows going to the supermarket in the center of Tel Aviv is being at war. Abu Mazen will state of course that you just killed an innocent Palestinian and you put the knife in his hand, and this crime is a Nazi crime (what about the murders of Palestinians by Palestinians in all the Palestinian territories?), worst than the Holocaust, which he and warmonger Iran deny that it took place anyhow.

If something could be said about Israel is that we treat too humanely terrorists, doctors are requested to treat them first if they are more wounded than the victims, they receive at the hospitals the best treatment, they get a fair trial, they can study at the university and get a degree in prison, and finally they are released after a few years – a thousand terrorists who killed hundreds of civilians in return to one Israeli soldier, while they are only requested to sign an obligation that they will not resort anymore to terror, an obligation that they revoke on the spot when they return to their homes, received as heroes, as killing Jews is always a rewarding achievement since the Nazis Germans until the Nazis Palestinian leaders. The terrorists continue their terrorist acts as Samir Kuntar and many others did, killing hundreds more civilians, are arrested, released, and so on. Because if murderers are killed in self-defense the Swedish Minister for foreign affairs and the Israeli peacelovings, the UN, UNICEF, American (what about Guantanamo?) and British (what about the killing of innocents in Afghanistan?) students, Irish (what about the killing of innocents by the IRA?) and Swedish organizations (remember Malmö!), boycotters and artists, would blame Israel for using excessive force, as Palestinian rights are sacred and Jewish blood is worthless, at least for them but not anymore in Israel.

B'Tselem (Hebrew: בצלם, "in the image of [God]") describes itself as an independent non-profit organization, whose stated goals are to document human rights violations in the occupied territories, combat denial and help to create a human rights culture in Israel. Its executive director is Hagai El-Ad.¹ B'Tselem also maintains a branch of the organization in Washington, D.C., called B'Tselem USA. B'Tselem was founded in 1989, during the First Intifada, by Israeli academics and members of civil rights and leftist organizations. B'Tselem's funding comes from private individuals (both Israeli and foreign), together with European and North American foundations focusing on human rights. B'Tselem has published over a hundred reports on various issues such as torture, fatal shootings by security forces, restrictions on movement, expropriation of land and discrimination in planning and building in East Jerusalem, administrative detention, house demolitions, violence by Israeli settlers and Palestinians, and Israeli operations in the occupied territories. In December 1989, B'Tselem shared the Carter-Menil Human Rights Prize with the Palestinian group, Al-Haq. B'Tselem has been harshly criticized by Israeli nationalists. In 2011, Foreign Minister Avigdor Lieberman charged the group with abetting terrorism and weakening Israel's defense forces. In August 2014, the Executive Director Hagai El-Ad attracted criticism in Israel for refusing to call Hamas a 'terror organization' on a radio interview.

Peace Now (Hebrew: שלום עכשיו Shalom Achshav, IPA: is a non-governmental organization, "liberal advocacy" and activist group in Israel with the aim of promoting a two-state solution to the Israeli-Palestinian conflict. The objectives/positions of Peace Now are: Two states for two nations — Israel and Palestine. A Palestinian state alongside the State of Israel, based on the borders of June 1967 with land swaps agreed upon by both sides. Jerusalem — two capitals for two states – a solution based on demographic breakdowns with a special agreement for the Old City. Peace with Syria — A peace agreement based on secure and recognized borders, and the regulation of relations between the two countries is the primary strategic issue for the people of Israel and Syria. Peace Now views the settlements as a threat to the existence of Israel as a democratic and Jewish state. Peace Now views the settlements as a main obstacle to any future peace agreement. Peace Now views the settlements as an element that harms the State of Israel on many fronts: security, economically, morally, and culturally. Peace Now views the settlements as harmful to Israel's standing in the international community. In a report, Peace Now said that "a large proportion of the settlements built on the West Bank are built on privately owned Palestinian land," including 86.4 percent of Ma'ale Adumim's land and 35.1 percent of Ariel's. Overall, the report said, "Palestinians privately own nearly 40% of the land on which settlements have been built." This is disputed by the government, who argue it cannot have been privately owned, as it was "not under the legitimate sovereignty of any state". On the specific issue of Ma'ale Adumim, Peace Now faced criticism for downgrading their estimate of the proportion built on privately owned Palestinian land from 86%, to 0.5%. The group's revision was based on government information which had newly been released to them.

Breaking The Silence (BtS) (Hebrew: שוברי שתיקה Shovrim Shtika) is an Israeli Non-Governmental Organization (NGO), located in a western section of Jerusalem, established by Israel Defense Forces (IDF) soldiers and veterans who collect and provide testimonies about their military service in the West Bank, Gaza Strip, and East Jerusalem since the Second Intifada, giving serving and discharged Israeli personnel and reservists a platform to confidentially describe their experience in the Israeli-occupied territories. The organization's stated mission is to 'break the silence' of IDF soldiers who return to civilian life in Israel and "discover the gap between the reality which they encountered in the [occupied] territories, and the silence which they encounter at home". Since 2004, Breaking the Silence has run a testimonies collection project called "Soldiers Speak Out". They have collected several hundred testimonies from "those who have, during their service in the IDF, the Border Guard, and the Security Forces, played a role in the Occupied Territories". By publishing soldiers' accounts, Breaking the Silence hopes to "force Israeli society to address the reality which it created" and face the truth about "abuse towards Palestinians, looting, and destruction of property" that is familiar to soldiers. The organization was criticized for providing anonymous testimonies which are unverifiable and exploiting them for propaganda, having a clear political agenda so it cannot be described as 'human rights organization' and promoting Anti-Israeli lawfare. "Breaking the Silence" representatives who tour to campuses and US Jewish communities, criticizing the IDF policy in the West Bank are sponsored by Jewish and Palestinian organizations. In 2010, according to Moshe Dann, writing in The Jerusalem Post, Breaking the Silence's budget was 3,100,000 NIS. It received 1.5 million from the EU, UK and Spanish governments. The rest came from Oxfam, the New Israel Fund, Dutch, German, Danish and Irish church organizations, and NDC, the Palestinian NGO which promotes Boycott/Divest/Sanctions (BDS) campaigns.

Moked (Hebrew: המוקד, Center for the Defence of the Individual) an Israel based human rights organization founded by Dr. Lotte Salzberger with the stated aim of assisting "Palestinians subjected to the Israeli occupation which causes severe and ongoing violation of their rights." HaMoked states that it works for the enforcement of the standards and values of international human rights and humanitarian law. According to Israel's Justice Minister, Ayelet Shaked, HaMoked engages in "apartheid rhetoric" and supports what she described as the anti-Israel boycott movement Boycott, Divestment and Sanctions. According to the JTA, HaMoked received US$300,000 from the Ford Foundation in 2002. HaMoked received "at least 8,500,000 NIS in European funding" from 2006-2009. According to a 2011 article in The Forward, HaMoked received, in 2009, $300,000 from the "Ramallah-based NGO Development Center (NDC)" which in turn, had received funding from the "Geneva-headquartered Welfare Association." In 2010, HaMoked also received 25,000 Euros from the Finnish government.

The Public Committee Against Torture in Israel (PCATI; Hebrew: הוועד הציבורי נגד עינויים בישראל) is an Israeli human rights organisation specifically dedicated to combating torture, and cruel, inhumane and degrading treatment and punishment (CIDT). PCATI, an independent human rights organization, was founded in 1990 in reaction to what it describes as "the ongoing policy of the Israeli government, which permitted the systematic use of torture and ill treatment in GSS interrogations". PCATI monitors detention centers and continues the struggle against the use of torture in interrogation in Israel using legal means, supporting relevant legislation and an information campaign aimed at raising public awareness of the subject. PCATI cooperates with other human rights organizations, Israeli, Palestinian and international, in its struggle against the use of torture in Israel and for the implementation of international law and international humanitarian law in Israeli law and practice. PCATI acts on behalf of all people—Israelis, Palestinians, labor immigrants and other foreigners residing in Israel and the Occupied Palestinian Territories—with the aim of protecting them from torture and ill-treatment by the Israeli security authorities. Dr. Ishai Menuchin is the Executive Director of PCATI.

PCATI won a historic victory when, on 6 September 1999, in response to petitions of principle PCATI began submitting to the High Court of Justice in 1991, and petitions filed together with the Association for Civil Rights in Israel, Hamoked—Center for the Defense of the Individual and others, the High Court prohibited the use of various means of torture that were systematically employed by the GSS until that time. Following this, there was a significant decrease in the number of complaints regarding torture or the use of the harsh methods previously used. However, following the onset of the Second Intifada in September 2000, there was, again, a sharp increase in the number of complaints of torture and ill treatment indicating a reversion to the methods prohibited by the High Court of Justice. This resulted from the exploitation of "necessity defense" opening allowed by the Court in its ruling, or by altogether denying the fact that physical force was used in interrogation, which victims would find difficult to challenge.

Yesh Gvul (Hebrew: יש גבול, can be translated as "there is a limit", as "there is a border", or as "enough is enough") is a movement founded in 1982, by combat veterans, at the outbreak of the Lebanon War, who refused to serve in Lebanon and has expanded its opposition to the war in Lebanon to the negation of service in the occupied territories, reflected in the current Yesh Gvul slogan: We don't shoot, we don't cry, and we don't serve in the occupied territories! Yesh Gvul's members performance of military duty is selective and dependent upon the nature and location of service. As "Selective refusal" is a form of "civil disobedience" (modelled on methods pioneered by Mahatma Gandhi) the combat veterans are open to military and civil charges. Yesh Gvul's campaign of selective refusal played a part in the Israeli governments decision to withdraw from south Lebanon. Yesh Gvul operates in three main areas: personal support for each "refusenik"; activities for an end to the occupation; and a broad campaign of public education for social change within Israeli society. Currently it sees its main role as "backing soldiers who refuse duties of a repressive or aggressive nature" with both moral and financial assistance. Yesh Gvul have found over the years that an effective support mechanism for jailed refuseniks is by having support groups from outside Israel adopt the "refusenik". Support groups are alerted, triggering a range of activities. Emails, letters and phone calls go out to the refusenik's family and to the jail where he is held; the adoption group exerts political pressure with protests to the nearest Israeli diplomatic mission, while conducting extensive actions within its own community. The adoption group also offers material assistance, raising funds to help the refusenik's dependants. Yesh Gvul also engages in human rights activities, such as petitioning British courts to issue arrest warrants for IDF officers accused of human rights abuses and war crimes. One would think that an Israeli peace organization would petition the British courts to issue arrest warrants against the Palestinians who committed war crimes against Israelis killing hundreds of civilians, but no – they require to issue arrest warrants against the soldiers who protected them, and who were founded not guilty of war crimes by the relevant courts. Is it self-hatred, is it logical?

Amnesty International (commonly known as Amnesty and AI) is a non-governmental organisation focused on human rights with over 7 million members and supporters around the world. The stated objective of the organisation is "to conduct research and generate action to prevent and end grave abuses of human rights, and to demand justice for those whose rights have been violated." Amnesty International was founded in London in 1961, following the publication of the article "The Forgotten Prisoners" in The Observer 28 May 1961, by the lawyer Peter Benenson. Amnesty draws attention to human rights abuses and campaigns for compliance with international laws and standards. It works to mobilise public opinion to put pressure on governments that let abuse take place. The organisation was awarded the 1977 Nobel Peace Prize for its "campaign against torture," and the United Nations Prize in the Field of Human Rights in 1978. In the field of international human rights organisations, Amnesty has the longest history and broadest name recognition, and is believed by many to set standards for the movement as a whole. Amnesty International reported, concerning the Iraq War, on 17 March 2008, that despite claims the security situation in Iraq has improved in recent months, the human rights situation is disastrous, after the start of the war five years ago in 2003. In February 2011, newspaper stories in the UK revealed that Irene Khan had received a payment of UK£533,103 from Amnesty International following her resignation from the organisation on 31 December 2009, a fact pointed to from Amnesty's records for the 2009–2010 financial year. As I am sure that Irene Khan, a Bangladeshi compatriot of Muhammad Yunus, one of the personalities I admire most, is a honorable woman, with only humanitarian motives, I would ask her two questions: 1. Has she decided to donate for the campaign against torture all or part of the outrageous payment of more than half a million pounds that she received? 2. Was the motive of awarding her such a huge amount only legal or maybe there were other motives that were not transparent as Amnesty IL?

In 2009 Amnesty International accused Israel and the Palestinian Hamas movement of committing war crimes during Israel's January offensive in Gaza, called Operation Cast Lead, that resulted in the deaths of more than 1,400 Palestinians and 13 Israelis. The 117-page Amnesty report charged Israeli forces with killing hundreds of civilians and wanton destruction of thousands of homes. Amnesty found evidence of Israeli soldiers using Palestinian civilians as human shields. A subsequent United Nations Fact Finding Mission on the Gaza Conflict was carried out; Amnesty stated that its findings were consistent with those of Amnesty's own field investigation, and called on UN to act promptly to implement the mission's recommendations. Criticism of Amnesty International includes claims of excessive pay for management, underprotection of overseas staff, associating with organisations with a dubious record on human rights protection, selection bias, ideological/foreign policy bias against either non-Western countries or Western-supported countries, and criticism of Amnesty's policies relating to abortion. Governments and their supporters have criticised Amnesty's criticism of their policies, including those of Canada, China, Democratic Republic of the Congo, Iran, Israel, Saudi Arabia, Vietnam, Russia and the United States, for what they assert is one-sided reporting or a failure to treat threats to security as a mitigating factor. The actions of these governments—and of other governments critical of AI - have been the subject of human rights concerns voiced by Amnesty.

The Amnesty International Report of 2014/2015 stated that: Israeli forces committed war crimes and human rights violations during a 50-day military offensive in the Gaza Strip that killed over 1,500 civilians, including 539 children, wounded thousands more civilians, and caused massive civilian displacement and destruction of property and vital services. Israel maintained its air, sea and land blockade of Gaza, imposing collective punishment on its approximately 1.8 million inhabitants and stoking the humanitarian crisis. In the West Bank, Israeli forces carried out unlawful killings of Palestinian protesters, including children, and maintained an array of oppressive restrictions on Palestinians' freedom of movement while continuing to promote illegal settlements and allow Israeli settlers to attack Palestinians and destroy their property with near total impunity. Israeli forces detained thousands of Palestinians, some of whom reported being tortured, and held around 500 administrative detainees without trial. Within Israel, the authorities continued to demolish homes of Palestinian Bedouin in “unrecognized villages” in the Negev/Naqab region and commit forcible evictions. They also detained and summarily expelled thousands of foreign migrants, including asylum-seekers, and imprisoned Israeli conscientious objectors. A person reading such a report could receive a quite negative impression on Israel, as it sounds that by sheer aggression Israel has decided to attack Gaza, killing 1,500 civilians, maintaining a blockade on Gaza, imposing collective punishment on 1.8 million Palestinians. While Israel withdrew from all the Gaza strip, calling the population to cooperate with Israel or develop on their own the free Palestine, and instead they elected the terrorist group Hamas, that invested most of their funds in corruption, purchasing weapons for exterminating Israel, launching thousands of rockets from populated areas, killing Palestinians who disagreed with them, maintaining the population in a retrograde Medieval regime, based on hate instead of progress. If they were Singaporean, if they had a leader like Lee Kuan Yew, they could have become one of the most advanced countries of the world. When they attacked Israel, we had to respond, as no country in the world would agree to suffer from attacks of thousands of missiles, not the US, not the UK, not France, not Russia, not India, not even Bangladesh...

The New Israel Fund (NIF) is a U.S.-based non-profit organization established in 1979, and describes its objective as social justice and equality for all Israelis. NIF describes itself as "the leading organization committed to democratic change within Israel". Its stated objective is "to actualize the vision of Israel's Founders, that of a Jewish and democratic state that, in the words of the Declaration of Independence, 'ensures complete equality of social and political rights to all its inhabitants irrespective of religion, race or sex.'" It views Israel as "the sovereign expression of the right of self-determination of the Jewish people and as a democracy dedicated to the full equality of all its citizens and communities." It advocates for civil and human rights, religious tolerance and pluralism, and closing the social and economic gaps in Israeli society, especially those among Jews and Arabs. In addition, Daniel Sokatch, CEO, says that in line with their "core values of democracy and equality, we support two states for two peoples and we oppose the occupation and the settlement enterprise." In June 2012, NIF marched with a "progressive cluster" in the New York Celebrate Israel parade; including Ameinu, Americans for Peace Now, B'Tselem USA, Partners for Progressive Israel, and Rabbis for Human Rights-North America.

NIF is opposed to the global Boycott, Divestment and Sanctions (BDS) campaign. It has stated that it does not support global BDS and will not support organizations with BDS programs but that its policy allows NIF the discretion to "engage in dialogue with an important organization that signs one letter supporting divestment rather than summarily dismissing them". Naomi Paiss, Director of Communications, described the campaign as "a tactic that embodies the message that Israel cannot and will not change itself, and for that reason, we think it is inflammatory and counter-productive". In January 2010, Im Tirtzu placed newspaper advertisements depicting then-NIF President Naomi Chazan with a horn sprouting from her forehead (as a pun, since both the words "horn" and "fund" use the same Hebrew word "Keren") as part of a campaign which accused NIF of responsibility for the Goldstone Report. Im Tirtzu alleged that 92% of all Israel-based negative reporting in the Goldstone report came from NIF-supported groups. Im Tirtzu's campaign drew criticism, as well as praise. Gershon Baskin, writing in The Jerusalem Post, accused Im Tirtzu of using an "anti-Semitic motif" as part of a "witch-hunt" that "is reminiscent of the darkest days of McCarthyism".

Adalah – The Legal Center for Arab Minority Rights in Israel (Hebrew: עדאלה - המרכז, Arabic: (عدالة - المركز القانوني لحماية حقوق الأقلية العربية في إسرائيل, המשפטי לזכויות המיעוט הערבי בישראל) is a human rights organization and legal center. Its goals are "achieving individual and collective rights of the Arab-Palestinian minority in Israel" and protecting "the human rights of Palestinians living under occupation, based on international humanitarian law and international human rights law". "Adalah" means "Justice" in the Arabic language. Adalah conducts the following activities to achieve these goals: Brings impact litigation cases and legal interventions to Israeli courts and state authorities. Provides legal consultation to individuals, NGOs, and institutions. Appeals to international institutions and fora, including the UN, EU, and national governments. Organizes legal seminars and conferences. Publishes reports and analysis of critical legal issues. Conducts extensive media outreach in Israel and abroad. Trains legal apprentices and new lawyers in human rights advocacy and litigation. The organization was founded in November 1996; it is non-partisan/not-for-profit. Adalah's founder and General Director is lawyer Hassan Jabareen.

Adalah's work focuses on Gaza, occupied East Jerusalem and the rights of prisoners and detainees. Adalah closely monitors rights abuses in the OPT, both during and outside of military offensives, and submits impact litigation cases to expose and challenge these practices. Adalah has argued cases dealing with the denial of tort compensation to Palestinians harmed by Israeli military operations, demanding investigations into home demolitions; fighting against techniques of collective punishment imposed against the civilian population; and seeking an end to inhumane detention conditions at Israeli prisons. Petitioning the Supreme Court on behalf of Gaza residents and Palestinian and Israeli human rights organizations challenging the ban on Palestinian residents of Gaza from entering Israel to access the courts for tort damages cases filed against the Israeli security forces. The state's prevention of entry is resulting in the dismissal of compensation lawsuits, the state is exempting itself from all damages claims.

The Boycott, Divestment and Sanctions Movement (BDS Movement) is a global campaign targeting Israel, attempting to increase economic and political pressure on Israel to comply with the stated goals of the movement: the end of Israeli occupation of the West Bank and Gaza Strip, and colonization of Palestinian land, full equality for Arab-Palestinian citizens of Israel, and respect for the right of return of Palestinian refugees. The campaign was started on 9 July 2005 by 171 Palestinian non-governmental organizations in support of the Palestinian cause for boycott, divestment and international sanctions against Israel. Citing a body of UN resolutions and specifically echoing the anti-apartheid campaigns against white minority rule in apartheid era South Africa,^[6] the BDS campaign called for "various forms of boycott against Israel until it meets its obligations under international law". There is considerable debate about the scope, efficacy, and morality of the BDS movement. Critics argue that the BDS movement disincentivizes the Palestinian leadership from negotiating a compromise, is antisemitic and promotes the delegitimization of Israel. Critics have also accused the movement of using threats, bribes and coercion to ensure that unwilling participants are agreeable to BDS demands. BDS supporters argue that the movement (and criticism of the movement) are similar to the boycotts of South Africa during its apartheid era, comparing the situation in Israel to apartheid. Critics reject the comparison on the grounds of dissimilarity of the regimes. The effectiveness of the movement has been questioned. Many reports from both in and outside of Israel indicated that the movement had made very little impact on the Israeli economy, and suggested that it was unlikely to for the foreseeable future. Israeli Apartheid Week is an annual series of university lectures and rallies against the Israeli occupation of the West Bank and Gaza. The series is normally held in February or March. According to the organization, "the aim of IAW is to educate people about the nature of Israel as an apartheid system and to build BDS campaigns as part of a growing global BDS movement." Since IAW began in Toronto in 2005, it has since spread to at least 55 cities around the world including locations in Canada, France, Germany, India, Italy, Austria, Jordan, Japan, Korea, Brazil, Botswana, Malaysia, the United Kingdom, the United States, South Africa, Mexico, Norway, Australia, and Palestine.

In 2009, the Israel-based Alternative Information Center released a report which alleged the complicity of all Israeli universities in the Occupation of Palestinian territory. In 2013, a group of Palestinian, Israeli and other oral historians and academics from Europe, South Africa, Oceania, Asia, and the Americas issued an international call for the boycott of the "International Oral History Conference" organized by The Hebrew University of Jerusalem. In 2014, an international Jewish group, Jews for Palestinian Right of Return, issued a list of signatories endorsing the American Studies Association academic boycott of Israel. Peter Slezak, co-founder of Independent Australian Jewish Voices, Jewish human rights activist, and professor at the University of NSW stands in favour of the academic boycott through his vocal support of Sydney University's Professor Jake Lynch. Jewish American academic, Colin Dayan has also written in support of a boycott of Israeli academic institutions. Charles H. Manekin, an orthodox Jewish studies and philosophy professor who divides his time between Israel and the United States, stated in 2014 that he is "sympathetic" to the BDS movement. In 2011, the liberal Zionist organization Meretz USA called on American Jews to boycott West Bank settlement goods to "Buy Israel—Don't buy Settlements". Naomi Paiss, VP of New Israel Fund shows support for the same type of targeted approach, claiming that "boycotting settlements is not anti-Israel taking a stand in the eye of the public, Israeli politician, Zehava Gal-On, head of the Meretz opposition party, "said that while she opposes international boycott efforts against Israel as a whole, she refrains from consuming settler products because there must be a 'price to the occupation.'"

And, on the other side of the spectrum, I intend to bring an example on only one organization:

Im Tirtzu (Hebrew: אם תרצו, lit. 'If you will it') is a Zionist^[4] extra-parliamentary^[3] group based in Israel. Its name is based on a phrase coined by Theodor Herzl – "אם תרצו, אין זו אגדה" or "If you will it, it is no dream." The group has been described by some as belonging to the ultra-right, but describes itself as centrist. The group's stated goal is to strengthen and promote "Zionist values" throughout Israel, especially on college campuses. Im Tirtzu is mostly known for its campaign against the New Israel Fund and against alleged bias in university curriculum. It was founded in 2006 by Ronen Shoval, who also served as its chairman until his retirement in 2013, and Erez Tadmor, who was a group spokesperson until his retirement in 2011. In 2008, Im Tirtzu published a report about the syllabuses used in various academic departments in Israel. According to the report, authors who reject the notion of nationality, or support anti-Zionist views, get much more exposure in reading lists. In 2010, Im Tirtzu sent Rivka Karmi, the head of the Ben Gurion University of the Negev a letter, demanding that the university stop the anti-Zionist bias in its Department of Politics and Government. The letter alleged that 9 out of 11 professors in the department were involved in extreme left-wing activities (among others, attempting to persuade other countries to join the Academic boycotts of Israel). Im Tirtzu threatened to notify the donors of the university if the problem was not rectified.

In a joint statement about the above campaign, the heads of Israel's seven leading universities urged condemnation of what they called Im Tirtzu's "dangerous attempt to create a thought police." Im Tirtzu responded, "All Im Tirtzu asked from BGU is that a solution be found to the extreme bias found in the Political Science department, where only post-Zionist opinions are presented." Following Im Tirtzu's report, the Israeli Council for Higher Education appointed an international committee to investigate the allegations. The committee came to the conclusion that the curriculum in the Political Science department is imbalanced. The committee said it was "concerned that the study of politics as a scientific discipline may be impeded by such strong emphasis on political activism," and recommended closing the department unless changes were made. The report was widely criticized by academics, who said that it was politically motivated, noting that well-known scholars had been rejected from the committee because of their political views and that the original committee chair had resigned. Minister of Education, Gideon Saar, said "I believe the report is important since it encourages public discussion" but rejected any attempts to block or apply conditions for donations to Israeli universities.

There are many more organizations such as B'Tselem, Moked, Breaking the Silence, Peace Now – Israelis, Europeans, Americans, and others. It is amazing how there are at least ten Israeli organizations for the safeguard of the human rights in the West Bank and Gaza, in spite of the war and terrorism, funded in many cases by "Israel-lovers" foreigners. Yet, to the best of my knowledge there is not even one Arab organization calling for Peace Now with Israel, denouncing terror, advocating the right of Israel to exist as a Jewish state. Charity begins at home, but do they care for Israelis as they care for Palestinians? I have disclosed my views on Israeli neoliberal unethical conduct in Israel, in articles and books in Hebrew, I have never called other countries and organizations to boycott Israeli unethical companies, but have called Israelis to condemn their conduct and not buying their products. The essence of Ethical Funds is to buy only from ethical companies and I could suggest them to boycott Israel, which I never did. Emile Zola did not write his famous article J'accuse in the New York Times and the London Times, but in the French L'aurore. The conduct of Israeli organizations inciting against Israel and calling to boycott it remind me of an old joke about – let's call him a peaceloving, who took away all his teeth. When asked why he did it he answered that he wanted to punish them for his toothaches.

My dear compatriots, when you incite against the settlements the Jews-lovers will not stop in boycotting the settlements but will boycott all Israeli products, you think that the Palestinians love you for what you do for them but they despise you as according to their standards the worst crime is to squeal upon your own people. But they are not allowed to speak and write freely in Palestine, in the UN, in Europe or in the US. They are just murdered in Gaza, in the West Bank, and in most of the undemocratic Arab countries, and they really don't mind their motives, if they are disclosers, squealers, or whistleblowers. Furthermore, if we withdraw from all the territories, evacuate all the settlers, and even if we let all the five million refugees to come back to their homes, you'll suffer as all the other Israelis from the rockets that will be launched on your houses as they are launched now after we have withdrawn from all the territories of Gaza and Lebanon. The terrorists that will kill you will not spare you as they hate all the Jews anyway, as they did during the second intifada after we have withdrawn from most of the West Bank. We have evacuated all the settlers from Gaza, did it change by one ounce the target of the Hamas to annihilate Israel, the same Hamas that you don't want to call terrorists. They'll murder you with pleasure whether you call them freedom fighters or terrorists. If you want it or not you are in the same boat as the settlers, ultra-Orthodox Jews, hawks, orientals, poors, Russian immigrants...

I made once a parody about those "elites" complaining on the tragedy of what Israel has become. They despise the Oriental seculars who are about one million, and most of them are hawks as they have lived among the Arabs extremists and know them too well. They despise the ultra-Orthodox as they have "too many" children, don't go to the army, and don't work, and they are one million more. They despise the religious and traditionalist Jews who are hawks and most of the settlers – one million more. They despise the Russian new immigrants who are also mostly hawks and hate the left, after having suffered from communism all their lives – one million more. They so-called like Muslim Arabs, but want to be separated completely from them, they don't live in the same neighborhoods, they don't do business with them, they would oppose strongly that their daughters would marry a Muslim – one million more. There are also Druzes, Arab Christians, Russian Christians, Africans and Chinese Workers, Philippines and Ukrainians nursemaids for handicapped and old people – they never heard of them or met them - one million more. It leaves us with about one million people – nice Ashkenazis, bourgeois, blonde haired, originating from nice countries as Poland, Germany, or the US, most of them read a specific newspaper that share the same views as they do- painting Israel as Sodom and the Palestinians as Angels, their children learn at the same universities where you find very few Orientals, Russians, or Arabs (in the universities where I taught I had one third Arabs, one third Orientals and one third Russians – identifying fully with my views on neoliberalism, tycoons, too-free markets).

The peacelovings are for democracy, but democracy only to those elites, as all the others don't count anyhow, they are completely transparent, live in the periphery and not in Tel Aviv or more precisely in Shenkin. When the right/hawks are elected they say that they have "robbed" the elections, anyhow when the religious and the Arabs will be a majority of the population because they have so many children they'll leave Israel, as many of them did, as they don't want to live in such a fascist and racist country. As I don't like either the right/hawks government, being a humane capitalist (formerly left) and mild hawk, I have voted twice in the last elections for the Labour party, as I share their social and economic views, they are not doves nor hawks, putting Israeli interests and Zionism in forefront (the party is called now the Zionist Coalition), they are against racism towards Arabs as I do, for coexistence in peace, and against dismantling the majority of the settlements. They and the other centrist parties are pro-forma pro-peace but all the extreme concessions that they have made were rejected by the Palestinians when they governed the country in the governments of Barak and Olmert. They were rewarded for their peace pursue with the second Intifada, starting when the Left/Center ruled Israel, killing more than a thousand Israelis in terrorist attacks after we have withdrawn from most of the West Bank, and with the Second Lebanese War and thousands of rockets from Gaza after we have fully withdrawn from Lebanon and Gaza. But the peacelovings don't want to be confused with facts, and still believe that all the blame lies with Israel and all the merits with the Palestinians.

Israel is very democratic and it is good, but I recall what the grandmother of my wife said that "too much honey stinks". Democracy enables Arab parties to openly act against Israel, backing our enemies, inciting the Israeli Arabs against the Jews. Democracy enables Israeli organizations to incite against Israeli settlements, Israeli army, even calling for imposing by force a peace solution upon Israel. And I reiterate once and again that I am for a full democracy, and I am willing to pay the price. I know that if the peacelovings would be arrested, tomorrow those who speak against the tycoons would be arrested too, and then the opposition parties. So, please don't call me a fascist as the peacelovings call all their opponents, you are the pro-fascists as you back fascist, corrupt and theocratic regimes as Hamas and the PLO. And I have never received any contribution from Palestinian organizations, nor from Israel-haters movements, not even from tycoons. Follow the money, as we have learned once and again from history, tell me who backs you, who finances you, and I'll tell you who you are. And my criticism goes both ways to dovish and to hawkish organizations as well. There should be total transparency in disclosing the funding. I've never received any honors from anti-Israeli organizations, I was not awarded half a million pounds when I resigned from the university, I have lost 90% of my income because of my beliefs, what have you sacrificed because of your beliefs? I love my country in spite of all the problems, and especially when we are attacked by the Palestinians and their lovers, and I criticize my country in Israeli press and Internet, never travelling abroad to defame it.

I often wonder what is the basis of the hate of the peacelovings against settlements, against the settlers, how come that they love so much the Palestinians and they hate so much the Jews. That is the difference between peacelovings and peace movements/parties – peacelovings are those who in the name of peace act against most of the Jews and in favor of the Arabs (and I don't want to mention who is entitled to this definition), stating that Israel is to blame and the Arabs are right in all what they do. Peace movement/parties as the Zionist Coalition/Labour party and Yesh Atid/Yair Lapid keep the right proportions, trying to find a peaceful solution, although reality and Arabs extremism hits them in the face, they don't call of course to boycott Israel, they know that most of the blame is on Arab extremism but hope (innocently) that they will find in the Arab countries enough forces that favor peace. Actually, Begin and Rabin from both sides of the spectrum made peace with Egypt and Jordan, peace agreements that are still holding in spite of all the problems. So, there is hope that we shall achieve peace with other countries such as Saudi Arabia, Lebanon, Morocco, the Gulf States, Tunisia, and others, but as I wrote at length I am very skeptical that a peace solution will be found with the Palestinians whose leaders are against the existence of Israel, saying this bluntly or in a double talk of Caduc/Arafat stratagems..

Anyhow, Self-Hating Jews is not a new invention and it existed for thousands of years. Self-hating Jew or self-loathing Jew is a pejorative term used for a Jewish person that holds antisemitic views. The concept gained widespread currency after Theodor Lessing's 1930 book Der Jüdische Selbsthass ("Jewish Self-hatred"), which tries to explain the prevalence of Jewish intellectuals inciting antisemitism with their extremely hateful view toward Judaism. Jewish self-hate has been described as a neurotic reaction to the impact of antisemitism by Jews accepting, expressing, and even exaggerating the basic assumptions of the anti-Semite. The term became "something of a key term of opprobrium in and beyond Cold War-era debates about Zionism". Similar accusations of being uncomfortable with one's Jewishness were already being made by groups of Jews against each other before Zionism existed as a movement. According to academic author W. M. L. Finlay, the expression "self-hating Jew" "is often used rhetorically to discount Jews who differ in their lifestyles, interests or political positions from their accusers". Finlay, a member of the Psychology Department at University of Surrey, distinguishes between "Jewish antisemitism" and "Jewish self-hatred," arguing that while the literature is full of examples of Jews who espoused antisemitism with statements dangerous and damning to all Jews, "whether this amounts to self-hatred is not easy to assess." Usage of self-hatred can also designate dislike or hatred of a group to which one belongs. The term has a long history in debates over the role of Israel in Jewish identity, where it is used against Jewish critics of Israeli government policy.

History has its ironic facets, otherwise how could you explain that one of the countries with the harshest criticism against Israel – Sweden, suffering themselves from the radical Islam in Malmo, with a minister for foreign affairs criticizing night and day Israel's policies, has coined the psychologic term of the Swedish Syndrome. I do not want of course to draw any analogies between the two, I leave it to historians, but I would just say that Sweden has all the merits in the world, as I maintain in all my books, including this one, but their leaders just suffer from one small default – self-righteousness, and I know that Israelis and me will be blamed for the same default, although I deny it. Anyhow, how can one explain otherwise such an unbearable incomprehension of the Middle East conflict? They think that they know best who is the agressor, who are the oppressed, they maintain a bookkeeping of counting the victims on both sides and since there are more Arab victims – it proves that Israel is the agressor. If I am not mistaken there were much more German victims than British or Americans in World War II, does it mean that UK and US were the agressors and the Germans were the lambs? What about moral issues, what about remembering who started the war, who is the agressor? The Arabs started all the wars against Israel, they were the agressors in all the cases, even if the wars were initiated by Israel because of the Arab states' agressions as in the Sinai War in 1956 and the Lebanon War in 1962. If more Arabs are killed it does not prove anything because always those who lose the war have more casualties. If more Palestinians are killed in retaliation to the civilian neighborhoods from which thousands of rockets were launched – it just shows that the Hamas uses the civilian population as human shields and the Israelis have excellent anti-rockets devices. Remember always, my Swedish, Irish and European friends what I wrote about the Nazis who suffered more losses in World War II, the same applies to the Radical Muslims who are the reincarnation of the Nazis, being also their allies in World War II (the Mufti al-Husseini, the Iraqis and the Arabs who supported the dictatorial Nazis and were against the democratic UK).

Yet, in October 1973, during the Yom Kippur War, Sweden's Minister for Foreign Affairs Krister Wickman criticized Israel and said the problems in the Middle East could not be solved by military superiority. Not a word about the thousands Israeli casualties during the war. In June 1981, Sweden condemned Israel's attack on the Osirak nuclear reactor in Iraq as a "clear violation of international law". To let the Iraqis get and use a nuclear weapon is not a violation of international law? Did the Swedes condemn also the UK and US for the killings of hundreds of thousands civilians in Dresden, Berlin, Hiroshima, Nagasaki, as a violation of international law? In July 1982, after Israel's invasion of Lebanon, Prime Minister Olof Palme compared Israel's treatment of Palestinian children to Nazi Germany's treatment of Jewish children in the Nazi concentration camps and ghettos of World War II. Thank you very much Swedes for rescuing thousands of Jews from Denmark and Europe during World War II, but your leaders' limpness comparing the treatment of the Palestinian children by Israelis to the annihilation of millions of Jewish children by the Nazis is not only anti-Semitism, but sheer nonsense. In December 1988, Palestine Liberation Organization chairman Yasser Arafat visited Stockholm by invitation of the Swedish government. After two days of negotiations, the arch-terrorist Arafat announced that he would now accept Israel's right to exist (kalam fadi - lies fabrications and misinformation/empty words/propaganda in Arabic) and he denounced all forms of caduc/"deciduous" terrorism.

In January 2004, Israel's ambassador to Sweden Zvi Mazel vandalized a piece of artwork by Swedish-Israeli artist Dror Feiler on display at the Swedish Museum of National Antiquities in Stockholm, presenting a portrait of Palestinian suicide bomber Hanadi Jaradat as "Snow White." The installation consisted of a long pool of water coloured blood red, upon which floated a small white boat named "Snövit" ("Snow White") carrying a portrait of Hanadi Jaradat. She had blown herself up in October 2003 in an attack on Maxim's restaurant in the northern Israeli city of Haifa, killing 21 people and injuring 51. I happen to live in Haifa that is a symbol of coexistence between Jews and Arabs. If Snow White murders and wounds dozens of innocent Israeli civilians, I advise you to wait until ISIS with the snow black flag will murder even more Swedes, and it will happen although I pray that not. If the radical Muslims dared attack the strongest power in the world the US in 9/11, ISIS attacked another superpower France in 13/11, they will perpetuate their murders throughout all Europe, and Sweden that is much weaker than the US and France might have the same fate, and I am afraid that they will not spare you, as you are an unbeliever, unless you convert to Islam. Feiler is now the chairman of the Swedish organization Jews for Israeli–Palestinian Peace (JIPF) and the European organization European Jews for a Just Peace (EJJP). He is also a member of the editorial board of the New Colombia News Agency (ANNCOL). Mazel's actions sparked a diplomatic incident between the two countries. Probably the Swedes would have preferred an Israeli reaction less vandalistic, as the Muslim reaction on the caricatures on Muhammad, murdering people, rioting, because radical Muslims murderers are Snow White in comparison to the "Nazis" Israelis who vandalize (God forbids!) a so-called work of art by an Israeli self-hating Jew (?) who dares to compare a murderer to Snow White (Stockholm Syndrome?). But fate is even weirder, I happened to know Juliano Mer, who played Othello at the Haifa Theater, where I was an Independent Director in the Board of Directors. I even had a one hour talk with him in the train from Haifa to Tel Aviv.

Juliano Mer-Khamis was an Israeli Jewish/Palestinian Arab actor, director, filmmaker, and political activist of Jewish and native Palestinian Eastern Orthodox Christian parentage. On 4 April 2011, he was assassinated by a masked gunman in the Palestinian city of Jenin, where he established The Freedom Theatre. Mer enrolled in acting school, and discovered his abilities in that field. He made an appearance in The Little Drummer Girl dealing with Palestinian terrorism. In 1987 he spent a year in the Philippines, consuming hallucinogenic mushrooms and talking to monkeys. It was there that he felt, according to a later declaration, that he had shaken off all identities. On his return, he lived as a beachcomber in Tel Aviv, on olives, labneh and garlic, and protested against Israel's response to the first intifada by stripping himself and walking about covered in fake blood. Mishmish Or, an Israeli Jew of Turkish paternal and Egyptian maternal descent (exactly like me), picked him up off the sidewalks and gave him shelter. In the meantime his mother Arna set up a children's center to teach over 1500 children in the Jenin camp and asked her son to join her there to teach drama therapy. In this book I refer to drama therapy, which has a similar effect to bibliotherapy, and apparently both therapies are effective but for the opposite camps, and only one person belonged by birth to both camps – Juliano Mer - although he identified himself exclusively to the Palestinian camp and went to help them in Jenin. I used to say when I heard that that he was risking his life as he would be murdered, being too liberal.

When the Al-Aqsa intifada broke out, two of Mer's former students, Yusuf Sweitat and Nidal al-Jabali, became suicide bombers in October 2001 at Hadera. Juliano returned to Jenin a month after the Battle of Jenin had begun. His host was a former student, Ala'a Sabbagh, then aged 22, leader of Jenin's Al-Aqsa Martyrs Brigade, and he spent several months on patrol with men on Israel's hit list, and in hideouts, with Sabbagh. In 2006, Mer-Khamis established the Freedom Theatre along with Zakaria Zubeidi, a former military leader of the Jenin Al-Aqsa Martyrs' Brigades, Jonatan Stanczak, a Swedish-Israeli activist, and Dror Feiler, a Swedish-Israeli artist – the same Dror Feiler with the vandalized so-called work of art, snow white, terrorism incorporated. The Freedom Theatre is a community theatre that provides opportunities for the children and youth of the Jenin Refugee Camp by developing skills, self-knowledge and confidence and using the creative process as a model for social change. Mer-Khamis was shot by masked gunmen in leaving the theater he had founded in Jenin. He had just started to drive away in his Citroen, with his baby son Jay on his lap, when a masked gunman emerged from a nearby alley and asked him to stop. The babysitter with them advised him to drive on, but he stopped, and was shot five times. He was rushed to the Jenin Hospital, where he was pronounced dead after his arrival. In an interview in 2008, Juliano had foreseen the circumstances of his murder, predicting jokingly that he would be killed by a 'fucked-up Palestinian' for 'corrupting the youth of Islam'. Well, this was the only thing that was common between us, foreseeing how he would die. After being identified by the baby-sitter in three separate line-ups, Palestinian police charged Mujahed Qaniri, from Jenin's refugee camp, with having carried out the murder. There are varying accounts of Qaniri's affiliation, some describe him as a former member of the al-Aqsa Martyrs' Brigades who defected to Hammas, but a Hamas spokesman has denied any involvement, describing this as a purely criminal incident. Anyhow, when Juliano Mer-Khamis was lying in state at the al-Midan Theatre, Haifa. The Arabic script on the coffin read shaheed al-huriya, which means "Martyr for Freedom". This needs a lot of Hutzpah to murder one of the few Israelis who continued to believe in the "just" cause of the Palestinians and to call him Shahid, the only problem is would he be blessed with 72 virgins as the other Shahids, or because he was half Jewish he would have to settle with 36, or even none as he was too liberal for the radicals. So, as I wrote before Dror Feiler should watch his back as he is dealing with dangerous people who murder even their few Israeli supporters. He knew Mer well, and he as many other Israeli peacelovings advocating human rights but only for Palestinians and not for the Jewish victims, might find themselves very shortly in danger, exactly like all the other Jews, as a Jew is a Jew...

During the 2006 Lebanon War, Minister for Foreign Affairs Jan Eliasson condemned both the actions of Hezbollah and the Israeli response. It is like condemning the Nazis and the Allied Forces in the same footing. Dear Jan, I was in the shelters for more than a month and I can assure you that only the Hezbollah were the aggressors, and comparing us to the Hezbollah is like comparing the Nazis to the British. How can the most democratic country in the world, Sweden, favor such terroristic undemocratic retrograde organizations and countries as Hamas Gaza, Palestine West Bank, Hezbollah Lebanon and blame the only democracy in the Middle East Israel, the bastion of Western civilization and norms, tell me who are your friends and I'll tell you who you are (Stockholm Syndrome?). During the Gaza War in January 2009, Minister for Foreign Affairs Carl Bildt criticised Israel and called for an immediate ceasefire. In August 2009, a diplomatic row erupted after the publication of an article in the Swedish daily Aftonbladet that claimed the Israel Defense Forces had engaged in organ harvesting from dead Palestinians. Israel called on the Swedish government to condemn the article, which it described as a "manifestation of antisemitism" and a modern "blood libel". The Swedish government refused, citing freedom of the press and the country's constitution. This accusation is such a lie that it can compare only to the famous Protocol and to the lies of Goebells, freedom of the press! In October 2014, the newly elected Swedish Social Democratic Party-led government of Stefan Löfven announced it would recognize the state of Palestine saying that "the conflict between Israel and Palestine can only be solved with a two-state solution... A two-state solution requires mutual recognition and a will to peaceful co-existence. Sweden will therefore recognise the state of Palestine." The state of Palestine, of Hamas, of terror, of Nazi incitement against the Jews...

Stockholm syndrome, or capture-bonding, is a psychological phenomenon in which hostages express empathy and sympathy and have positive feelings toward their captors, sometimes to the point of defending and identifying with the captors. These feelings are generally considered irrational in light of the danger or risk endured by the victims, who essentially mistake a lack of abuse from their captors for an act of kindness. The FBI's Hostage Barricade Database System shows that roughly eight percent of victims show evidence of Stockholm syndrome. Stockholm syndrome can be seen as a form of traumatic bonding, which does not necessarily require a hostage scenario, but which describes "strong emotional ties that develop between two persons where one person intermittently harasses, beats, threatens, abuses, or intimidates the other." One commonly used hypothesis to explain the effect of Stockholm syndrome is based on Freudian theory. It suggests that the bonding is the individual's response to trauma in becoming a victim. Identifying with the aggressor is one way that the ego defends itself. When a victim believes the same values as the aggressor, they cease to be perceived as a threat. So, is Sweden suffering from Stockholm Syndrome because the victim (in Malmo and elsewhere) believes the same values as the aggressor, ceasing to be perceived as a threat? But who is the aggressor against Sweden, who is the threat? Israel that admires Sweden or the radical Muslims in Malmo, etc.

Stockholm syndrome is named after the Norrmalmstorg robbery of Kreditbanken at Norrmalmstorg in Stockholm, Sweden. During the crime, several bank employees were held hostage in a bank vault from August 23 to 28, 1973, while their captors negotiated with police. During this standoff, the victims became emotionally attached to their captors, rejected assistance from government officials at one point, and even defended their captors after they were freed from their six-day ordeal. The term was coined by the criminologist and psychiatrist Nils Bejerot, consultant psychiatrist to the police when it happened. He called it "Norrmalmstorgssyndromet" (Swedish), directly translated as The Norrmalmstorg Syndrome, but then later became known abroad as the Stockholm syndrome. It was originally defined by psychiatrist Frank Ochberg to aid the management of hostage situations. In the view of evolutionary psychology, "the mind is a set of information-processing machines that were designed by natural selection to solve adaptive problems faced by our hunter-gatherer ancestors." One of the "adaptive problems faced by our hunter-gatherer ancestors", particularly females, was being abducted by another band. Life in the "human environment of evolutionary adaptiveness" (EEA) is thought by researchers such as Israeli military historian Azar Gat to be similar to that of the few remaining hunter-gatherer societies. "Deadly violence is also regularly activated in competition over women. . . . Abduction of women, rape, ... are widespread direct causes of reproductive conflict ..." Being captured and having their dependent children killed might have been fairly common. Women who resisted capture in such situations risked being killed. Azar Gat argues that war and abductions (capture) were typical of human pre-history. When selection is intense and persistent, adaptive traits (such as capture-bonding) become universal to the population or species. Prehistory, evolutionary psychology, for the most advanced country?

Partial activation of the capture-bonding psychological trait may lie behind battered-wife syndrome, military basic training, fraternity hazing, and sex practices such as sadism/masochism or bondage/discipline. Being captured by neighbouring tribes was a relatively common event for women in human history, if anything like the recent history of the few remaining tribes. In some of those tribes (Yanomamo, for instance) practically everyone in the tribe is descended from a captive within the last three generations. Perhaps as high as one in ten of females were abducted and incorporated into the tribe that captured them. There is no widely agreed upon diagnostic criteria to identify Stockholm Syndrome and it does not appear in the DSM or the ICD. However, studies have found evidence of emotional bonding with captors in a variety of hostage or abusive situations, including abused children and women, POWs, cult members, incest victims, and concentration camp prisoners. In Nazi Germany in the 1930s some Jews were allegedly shouting "Down with Us" and supported Hitler's policies. The syndrome is encouraged in crime situations because it can increase the hostages' chances for survival, but those experiencing it are usually not very cooperative during rescue or prosecution. Several symptoms of Stockholm Syndrome have been identified in the following: positive feelings toward the controller, negative feelings toward the rescuers, supportive behavior by the victim helping the abuser, and lack of desire by the victim to be rescued. Does the Stockholm Syndrome applies also to the Jews who favor the Palestinians, the Israeli peacelovings organizations as well?

A converse of Stockholm syndrome called Lima syndrome has been proposed, in which abductors develop sympathy for their hostages. There are many reasons why Lima Syndrome can develop in abductors. Sometimes when there are multiple abductors, one or more of them will start to disagree with what they are doing and influence one another. An abductor may also have second thoughts or experience empathy towards their victims. Lima Syndrome was named after an abduction at the Japanese Embassy in Lima, Peru, in 1996, when members of a militant movement took hostage hundreds of people attending a party at the official residence of Japan's ambassador. Within a few hours, the abductors had set free most of the hostages, including the most valuable ones, owing to having sympathy towards them. Unfortunately, never but never the Arabs suffered from a Lima Syndrome, they never developed sympathy for their hostages, it did not occur in terrorist attacks, nor in Palestinian territories, nor in their schools or mosques, yet the Lima Syndrome occurs everywhere in Israel and among the Jews, developing sympathy for the "victims", for the Palestinians, for the so-called weaker side of the conflict. So, what does it show, who is more normal and less syndromatic – the Arabs, the Israelis, the Swedes? And a last question to the Swedes whom I admire with all my heart – If you are in favor of the Hamas, of the Hezbollah, of the Palestinians, of the radical Muslims, how come that you and the Norwegians have awarded only 12 Nobel Prizes in 112 years to Muslims, half of them to anti-radical and liberal Muslims, fighting against the organizations and countries that you back, while they are 23% of the world's population? If you are so critical against the Jews how come that you have awarded 22% of all the Nobel Prizes to Jews who are only 0.2% of the world's population and 12 Nobel Prizes to Israelis that you criticize so much, the same number as for all the Muslims? Maybe it means that we are not such morons, and that in spite of all your criticism, we know what we are doing in this conflict, at least as we know in chemistry, physics or economy?

I may have many defaults, but self-hatred was never one of them, not for me, not for my family, not for my congregation, and especially not for my religion or my country. I have a lot of criticism, but it has never caused me to hate Israel, ultra-orthodox Jews, Arabs, neoliberals, tycoons, Ireland, peace-lovers, corrupt leaders, Ashkenazis or Orientals. I am an advocate of the Aristotelian middle way, of Gandhi's philosophy, against violence unless you are attacked. As I am not a Christian I do not turn the other cheek, the Jews have learned in the hard way that they have to rely only upon themselves in order to survive. We have lived too much in anti-Semitic countries in Europe or in Arab countries, we have reached at last the promised land, and we'll never leave it. The cultural historian Sander Gilman has written, "One of the most recent forms of Jewish self-hatred is the virulent opposition to the existence of the State of Israel." He uses the term not against those who oppose Israel's policy, but against Jews who are opposed to Israel's existence. The concept of Jewish self-hatred has been described by Antony Lerman as "an entirely bogus concept", one that "serves no other purpose than to marginalise and demonise political opponents", who says that is used increasingly as a personal attack in discussions about the "new antisemitism". Ben Cohen criticizes Lerman saying no "actual evidence is introduced to support any of this." Lerman recognizes the controversy whether extreme vilification of Israel amounts to anti-Semitism and says that antisemitism can be disguised as anti-Zionism.

New antisemitism is the concept that a new form of antisemitism has developed in the late 20th and early 21st centuries, emanating simultaneously from the far-left, radical Islam, and the far-right, and tending to manifest itself as opposition to Zionism and the State of Israel. The concept generally posits that much of what purports to be criticism of Israel by various individuals and world bodies, is, in fact, tantamount to demonization, and that, together with an alleged international resurgence of attacks on Jews and Jewish symbols, and an increased acceptance of antisemitic beliefs in public discourse, such demonization represents an evolution in the appearance of antisemitic beliefs. Proponents of the concept argue that anti-Zionism, anti-Americanism, anti-globalization, third worldism, and demonization of Israel, or double standards applied to its conduct, may be linked to antisemitism, or constitute disguised antisemitism. Critics of the concept argue that it conflates anti-Zionism with antisemitism, defines legitimate criticism of Israel too narrowly and demonization too broadly, trivializes the meaning of antisemitism, and exploits antisemitism in order to silence political debate. Irwin Cotler, Professor of Law at McGill University and a leading scholar of human rights, has identified nine aspects of what he considers to constitute the "new anti-Semitism":

- Genocidal antisemitism: Calling for the destruction of Israel and the Jewish people.
- Political antisemitism: Denial of the Jewish people's right to self-determination, de-legitimization of Israel as a state, attributions to Israel of all the world's evils.
- Ideological antisemitism: "Nazifying" Israel by comparing Zionism and racism.
- Theological antisemitism: Convergence of Islamic antisemitism and Christian "replacement" theology, drawing on the classical hatred of Jews.
- Cultural antisemitism: The emergence of anti-Israel attitudes, sentiments, and discourse in "fashionable" salon intellectuals.
- Economic antisemitism: BDS movements and the extraterritorial application of restrictive covenants against countries trading with Israel.
- Holocaust denial

- Anti-Jewish racist terrorism
- International legal discrimination ("Denial to Israel of equality before the law in the international arena"): Differential and discriminatory treatment towards Israel in the international arena.

And finally, a personal note. In the past I used to watch more than fifty films during the ten days of the Haifa Film Festival. Nowadays, in troubled times, I watch only more than thirty, and watch much more on TV or on DVDs. Anyhow, I saw many Palestinian films trying to understand their motives, and many Israeli peaceloving films as well. Normally, I get annoyed from such extremist views, completely wrong in my opinion, but the period of the festival is especially appropriate for such "adventures". Recently, I watched a documentary film from an Israeli filmmaker who has left Israel as she could no more live in a country that oppresses so much the Arabs. I watched the movie which was quite good, but even more, I watched the people who came for the premiere. It was like a party of Russian veterans who remember with yearning the good old days of the war, communism, and mother Russia. I sat near a journalist who exasperates me so much with his false point of view that I cannot read them anymore, in spite of my patience. He seemed very happy to watch the movie, and so were the others.

It is very rare for me not to read articles or books that I don't agree with their content, as normally I am broad minded. As far as I recall there is only one book that I could not continue reading because of its huge fallacies – The Protocols of the Elders of Zion or The Protocols of the Meetings of the Learned Elders of Zion, which is an antisemitic fabricated text purporting to describe a Jewish plan for global domination. The forgery was first published in Russia in 1903, translated into multiple languages, and disseminated internationally in the early part of the 20th century. According to the claims made by some of its publishers, the Protocols are the minutes of a late 19th-century meeting where Jewish leaders discussed their goal of global Jewish hegemony by subverting the morals of Gentiles, and by controlling the press and the world's economies. Henry Ford funded printing of 500,000 copies that were distributed throughout the US in the 1920s. Adolf Hitler was a major proponent. It was studied, as if factual, in German classrooms after the Nazis came to power in 1933, despite having been exposed as fraudulent by The Times of London in 1921. It is still widely available today in numerous languages, in print and on the Internet, and continues to be presented by some proponents as a genuine document. Governments or political leaders in most parts of the world have not referred to the Protocols since World War II. The exception to this is the Middle East, where a large number of Arab and Muslim regimes and leaders have endorsed them as authentic, including endorsements from Presidents Gamal Abdel Nasser and Anwar Sadat of Egypt, one of the President Arifs of Iraq, King Faisal of Saudi Arabia, and Colonel Muammar al-Gaddafi of Libya. The 1988 charter of Hamas, a Palestinian Islamist group, states that The Protocols of the Elders of Zion embodies the plan of the Zionists. Recent endorsements in the 21st century have been made by the Grand Mufti of Jerusalem, Sheikh Ekrima Sa'id Sabri, the education ministry of Saudi Arabia, member of the Greek Parliament Ilias Kasidiaris, and young earth creationist and tax evader Kent Hovind. The people who attended the premiere seemed to like very much each other, like an exclusive club, that has less and less members. Many "leftist" (I would not call them leftist, as many of the peacelovings are neoliberals cooperating with tycoons, extremist doves or peacelovings would be more appropriate) Israeli intelligentsia, pampered by the anti-Semitic European elites, have left Israel, that treats so bad Arabs, while in Europe they are treated so well, and even better – Jews are treated so well by European Arabs, in France for example...

I don't know why all of a sudden I remembered the film "I'll Cry Tomorrow" produced 60 years ago, maybe because this was a film festival, maybe because of a Proustian stream of consciousness in Le temps retrouve made me think of the taste of a madeleine biscuit deeped in tea, but I don't drink tea. Yet, I remembered seeing the film at the age of 11 or 12, and even more remote memories of Arab shababs coming to burn my house while I was reading Alice in the Wonderland, leaving Cairo with a laissez-passer stamped Bedoun Rougo – no right of return, no right of return for Jews to Egypt, no right of return for Palestinian refugees to Israel, no self-imposed right of return of the maker of the film and many peacelovings who cannot live anymore in "Israeli-Apartheid", whether they have left phisically the country or still live in Israel, but feel completely estranged, not liking most of the population, the occupation, themselves? It is so sad to see the decline of the aristocracy, of the old-time intelligentsia, the Goetterdaemmerung, the Twilight of the Gods, refering to a prophesied war (Gog and Magog?). In the Islamic apocalyptic tradition the end of the world would be preceded by the release of Gog and Magog, whose destruction by God in a single night would usher in the Day of Resurrection. Reinterpretation did not generally continue after Classical times, but the needs of the modern world have produced a new body of apocalyptic literature in which Gog and Magog are identified as the Jews and Israel, or the Ten Lost Tribes. Wagner, Islam, Israel – Jews returning to Germany, Muslims demonstrating in Berlin on Unter den Linden against Israel. As the people watch, deeply moved, the interior of Valhalla is finally seen, with gods and heroes visible. Flames flare up in the Hall of the Gods, hiding it and them from sight completely. As the gods are consumed in the flames, the curtain falls, but who will be consumed in the flames – Europe, US, Russia, Israel, Arab/Muslim countries, ISIS, who is right – peacelovings, warmongers?

A SATIRE ON THE MIDDLE EAST CONFLICT BASED ON MOLIERE'S TARTUFFE

I have decided to humbly improvise on Moliere's Tartuffe or the Hypocrite in the following satire, as it fits exactly the situation of European's individuals, organizations, and even some countries, who favor the most backward Islamic terrorist organizations and countries, and the poor Hamas and Fatah Palestinians, no matter what they do, as long as they kill and delegitimize Israelis and Jews. Their hypocrisy matches fully the hypocrisy of the Palestinian leaders.

Orgon: For these past two days, how have things gone on? What has happened? And how is everyone?

Dorine: In Syria two thousands innocent civilians were killed, in Iraq ISIS has beheaded a whole Christian village, in Afghanistan a hundred young girls who wanted to study have been raped and stoned to death, Iran has become a nuclear country, in Yemen, Libya and Lebanon the civil wars have continued to kill women, children and men, suicide bombers have killed in the markets of Turkey, Egypt, Sudan, Algeria and Tunisia six hundred innocent civilians...

Orgon: Et Tartuffe? What happened in Palestine?

Dorine: 3,000 rockets have been launched by the Hamas to the Israelis cities of Tel Aviv, Ashdod, Bersheba, Ashkelon, and have killed 45 innocent civilians. 2,000 rockets have been launched by Hizballah to the Israeli cities of Haifa, Naharya, Tiberias, Nazareth, and have killed 10 innocent civilians. Israel has retaliated against the launching sites, killing 224 terrorists/freedom fighters, 13 family members who hided with them, and 4 children at the Gaza sea shore. The Israeli casualties were not much heavier because of the Iron Dome air defense systems, which proves the inhuman nature of the Israelis who do not want to give Iron Dome systems also for the terrorists in Gaza, the Palestinian Authority and Hizballah, as well as compensations. Abu Mazen has stated that the Holocaust is just a myth and has introduced in the books of 7 years old children chapters from Mein Kampf and the Protocols of the Elders of Zion.

Orgon: Poor Palestinian fellows! (in French: Le pauvre homme! in Haitian: Podyab!, in Romanian: Ei, bietu'om!, in Hebrew and Arabic: Misken!/Meskin!) Those Jews are children killers. They don't have mercy for the poor freedom fighters. I pray you, think you question with the Jew: You may as well go stand upon the beach/And bid the main flood bate his usual height; You may as well use question with the wolf/ Why he hath made the ewe bleat for the lamb;/You may as well forbid the mountain pines/To wag their high tops and to make no noise,/When they are fretten with the gusts of heaven;/You may as well do anything most hard,/As seek to soften that--than which what's harder?/His Jewish heart: therefore, I do beseech you,/Make no more offers, use no farther means,/But with all brief and plain conveniency/Let me have judgment and the Jew his will. (If you haven't guessed: Shakespeare, The Merchant of Venice, Antonio, Act 4)

Dorine: A small boy aged 13 having heard from his teacher and read in the school books that you have to kill as many Jews as possible in order to be a Shahid killed with his mother's kitchen knife in the streets of Tel Aviv a small Jewish boy aged 13 who was riding his bicycle, an old woman aged 80, and a Rabbi. He was slightly wounded by a policeman who tried to stop his killings and was asked harsh questions by the police at the hospital. Abu Mazen complained to the UN, Unesco, Unicef, the Hague International Court of Justice, that the bloody Jews killed once again an innocent child who was returning from school. When he saw the film of the questioning, he didn't apologize for his usual lies, and said that it is inhuman to question a small child and ask him harsh questions without getting the permission of his parents. The UN, its organizations, friendly countries in Europe, and the Oxford, Stockholm and Dublin academics condemned Israel for using excessive force against a minor, but what can you expect from a Jewish heart? Commiseration? Shylock has to pity Antonio but if it was the opposite Antonio should never pity a Jew, as anti-Semites have not pitied them in Venice, nor in Auschwitz.

Orgon: The poor boy! And what happens in Europe and America?

Dorine: In Paris 203 people were killed by ISIS at the premiere of the new version of Tartuffe at the Comedie Francaise. All the government members who attended the premiere were killed, and ISIS took over Paris. In Brussels the Hamas has put cyanide in the water reservoirs killing 2,345 civilians. Belgium, NATO, and the European Union's headquarters surrendered in order to save the lives of thousands of innocent civilians, admitting that it is better to be green than unseen. In Washington al-Qaeda has ruined the city with an atomic device, but the Americans have not given in and are continuing the fight. In Berlin Hizballah has used biological weapons to take over the city, that has surrendered without fight. In London, Iran has gathered all the 90,000 academics, peacelovings, pro-Arabs and Islam and anti Jews and Israel, at the Wembley Stadium and offered them to become Muslims and join their legions among the Muslim refugees.

Orgon: Et Tartuffe? And the Palestinians?

Dorine: The Palestinian Authority has accused the Jews and Israel that they are behind all the atrocities in Europe and the US, which are part of the Zionist conspiracy to conquer the world, after World War I, II and III, 9/11, 13/11, the myth of the Holocaust, Nakba and Naksa. The United Nations has approved the 999th condemnation of Israel with an overwhelming majority of 196 against 4 – Micronesia, Tonga, Israel and the US. Israel has opened its borders to all the European and American citizens who fled from the Muslim invasion, but has not allowed in even one Palestinian refugee, which shows their racism, devious heart of children killers, blood drinkers at Passover. However, the Palestinians have suffered a serious setback, as after the unending terrorist attacks in Israel, the Muslim Middle East, Europe and the US, the stock of virgins in heaven for the Shahids has dried out, and terrorism has ceased until stock is renewed.

Orgon: Poor fellows!

And from the 1st Act, Scene 4, of Tartuffe we move directly to the 5th Act, Scene 4:

Monsieur Loyal (loyal to whom?): This country now belongs, I have ample proof,
To the Islamic State ruled by the brother of your friend Tartuffe.
He is master and lord of all your wealth
By virtue of a deed he showed me himself.
I know that not even a million Dollars would make you cause a rebellion,
And that you will be an honest citizen
And let me fulfill the orders I'm given.
You opened your heart, you opened your country
For the poor refugees who fled from the massacres.
They offer you now as a token of gratitude
To become Muslim and remain in your country.
The Jews have not let the Arabs be free in Palestine,
The Europeans attacked Muslims in Syria and Iraq,
And therefore the Muslims have decided to conquer Europe
Aided by their supporters among the refugees.
This is social justice, as it is not just that Europe should be so rich and Muslims should be so poor.
So, in the name of Islam, equality and justice,
We declare Dublin, Stockholm and Oxford,
Paris, Berlin, and Brussels,
Islamic cities, and install once again
The guillotine at Place de la Concorde,
Where every Christian and Jew who will not want
To become Muslim will be beheaded,
And you'll have to pay for the executioner
Who will be very busy in the next few weeks.

Orgon: Poor fellow! Et Tartuffe? And the Palestinians?

The conduct of our friends in Europe and all over the world who accuse the Jews and the Israelis of all the problems in the world reminds me of a Turkish saying that I heard from my father "The Sultan has a constipation and you make an enema to the Wazir/Vizier". This is exactly what they want to achieve – instead of solving the problem of the Sultan - the Fundamentalist Islam, they think that persecuting the Jews, boycotting Israelis, enabling the murder of Jews who go to the synagogue or to buy Kosher food by the same Fundamentalist Muslims, will appease the "Gods", the terrorists and their backers, that they are so afraid of. They sacrifice the Jews like Iphigenia to enable the Greek fleet to sail to Troy, to buy another month or year without terrorism, exactly as their grandfathers were afraid to crush the Nazis when they were weak and they sacrificed the other Iphigenias – the European Jews, the German socialists, Austria, Czechoslovakia. The fundamentalist Muslims operate exactly like the Nazis, and the Europeans react exactly like their fathers reacted to Hitler, when will they ever learn? I have no doubt that those Nazis/Fundamentalists/Iran/Hamas/Hizabllah/PLO will use atomic bombs to crush Israel and Europe, to crush the Western civilization and bring us back to the Middle Ages.

How would you call a doctor who instead of amputating the right arm that has gangrene will amputate the left arm, a dentist who instead of extracting a sick tooth will extract a healthy one (actually, it happened to my young son, but we made a scandal), instead of crushing Muslim terrorism they blame the Jews who have never killed even one European? They are afraid to annoy the Moloch, to enter the Muslim quarters, to arrest suspects, to make caricatures of Muhammad, as they know that they will be executed like Charlie Hebdo's victims, so make Der Stuermer's caricature of Jews and Israelis, the Jews will never react, the Israelis are democrats advocating freedom of press. Don't blame Fundamental Islam in general as it is not politically correct, but blame the Jews as it is politically correct to be anti-Semitic nowadays like between the two world wars. Pity the "poor" Muslims, the "poor" Palestinian refugees, but don't pity the thousands of terrorist victims who were murdered by the Arab terrorists in "Nazi Israel, land of the children killers, the occupation, the wall, the blockade". Keep double standards – one for the Muslims and Arabs and one for the Jews and Israelis, in the UN, in the peaceloving Western regimes, at the universities, human rights organizations, and of course in the Muslim countries.

The Fundamentalist Iranians and Arabs have succeeded to be perceived as the "Nebekhdiker Shimshen" – the poor Samsons, they are the victims and the Jews are the butchers, while it is exactly the opposite. They say that "You cannot blame the oppressed if they kill the oppressors", but we live in a topsy-turvy world, as the aggressors are those who are perceived as the victims, the fundamentalist Muslims are those who kill and endanger the Europeans and the Americans, while Israel and the Jews endanger only the Muslim aggressors. The Europeans/Americans act in such ways for many reasons – some of them are bleeding hearts for Palestine but not for Syria or Africa, some of them have interests in the Middle East and receive donations from the rich Arabs, some of them are anti-Semitic as their fathers, all of them are wrong, as reality will prove that only Israel read the map on time, while all the others were living in a psychedelic dream.

Where have vanished the glorious days of the British Empire, the Napoleon Empire, the Vikings? Why are they afraid of a militant minority in their countries, exactly as they were afraid of another militant minority – the Nazis? Don't they know that if they will not react on time a catastrophe will occur, with millions of casualties, that if the democratic regimes will not react, the extreme-right parties will take power bringing an end to the democracy while trying to crush terrorism and fundamentalism? We are living today in an in-extremis period, when they are afraid of curing the constipation of the extremist Sultan before he will drown all the Western civilization in a diarrhea of blood. They prefer to make the enema to the Wazir who has nothing to do with the constipation, like their fathers did 80 years ago, hoping that the Jews who are accustomed to receive enemas during 2,000 years and be accused of all the world's troubles will not react. But they are wrong, as the Israelis are no more servile Wazirs and react to aggression.

So, our dear friends from the UN, peaceloving Europeans, politically-correct Americans, wise-guys academics, the chips are down, you know at last who is your enemy, you can no more accuse the Wazirs who are no more willing to comply, you have only one choice if you don't want to be exterminated - make to the extremist Sultan such an enema that he will forget once and for all of his fundamental and terrorist ideology, of the sanctification of Shaheeds and Jihads, like the enema that you have done to Hitler and the Nazis, but not after casualties of tens of millions like your fathers did, do it now when the alternative cost is quite low, don't be afraid if you want that the Western civilization will persist, if you want that you children will live!

PALESTINIAN RIGHT OF RETURN – MYTH AND REALITY

When the Palestinians ask for the right of return to Israel of five million refugees, who 99% of them never lived in Israel or Palestine (only 1%, about 50,000 refugees who left Palestine in 1948, are still living), do they want us to accept a similar situation to Syria, do they want us to have a democratic progressive country like Iraq, like Lebanon, like Yemen? Or a democratic government as in the Palestinian authority, Gaza, or be a rich country as Egypt and Algeria? Do they intend to return before or after the Germans will return to Eastern Prussia, the Greeks to Anatolia, the Turks to Europe, the Pakistanis to India, and the Indians to Pakistan? Why do they deserve a better fate, is it because they were asked by their leaders to leave temporarily their homes until the Arabs will exterminate the small country of 500,000 Jews with the armies of 100 million Arabs? Is it because they tried to integrate in their lands as the 900,000 Oriental Jews did and thrived within a few years and not remain in a wretched condition asking for the alms of the UN and the West? Is it because they sent their children to be Shahids killing thousands of Jews in suicide bombings, with knives, rifles, machine-guns, cars? Who is the naïve who will believe that they will behave peacefully or that Gaza and the Palestinian state will remain demilitarized? It is sheer nonsense, as their aim since a hundred years ago is to kill all the Jews and have one Islamic State from Bangladesh to Andalus (Iberia) and hopefully for them including the territories of their friends and supporters in Ireland & Scandinavia where they have sent already thousands of potential backers in Ghettos where the local police is afraid to enter.

It is interesting to notice that while the Palestinians demand the Right of Return to their "homeland", none of the Jews who left Arab countries are allowed to return, as we left "bedun rugho" - without a possibility to return, and of course without possibility to be indemnized for all the assets that we were forced to leave in the Arab countries. I mentioned how the Egyptian parliament refused to let the Egyptian Jews (as me) return to their "homeland", but I wonder – why there are not even a handful of Jews who would want to return to an Arab country, while apparently five million Palestinians want to return to the Jewish state of Israel. Has it anything to do with what has become to the states that the Jews were forced to leave as opposed to the state that the Palestinians have left? Why the Palestinians are not willing to integrate in the countries where they live – Lebanon, Syria, Egypt, although those are Arab countries? Maybe it has something to do with why the Arabs living in Israel do not want to leave Israel and go living in the new Palestinian state. They complain a lot about discrimination but none of them wants to live in the new Palestine without discrimination. They probably enjoy the Israeli democracy, high standard of living, excellent education and health services. So, maybe they should say at least a few positive remarks about Israel, which is not an Apartheid state and is not anti-Arab.

The same applies to the Oriental Jews who like me left the Arab nations where we were born and came to live in Israel, France, the US, the UK, etc. In spite of all the Oriental complaints about discrimination, cultural repression, even racism – all the Orientals living in Israel are better off by far as compared to their situation if they would have continued living in Iraq, Yemen or Syria. This does not excuse of course discrimination towards the Arabs and Orientals, if it exists in a limited scope, but we should be grateful to the Ashkenazis elites who built Israel in spite of all their defaults as they have built a modern democratic high tech country, with the cooperation of the Orientals, Arabs, which were progressively integrated and now are represented in the Knesset almost in the same proportions of the population, and have become leading doctors, academics, businessmen, high tech innovators, intellectuals, while diminishing the economic gaps. The Oriental Jews are the strongest opponent to the Right of Return, they know how it is to live in an Arab country as dhimmis, but I expect the Israeli Arabs to strongly oppose the Right of Return, if they don't want to live in an Arab country as Algeria, Syria, Iraq, Yemen, Lebanon, or even in a Palestinian Islamist totalitarian state as Gaza/Hamas, or a corrupt country as the West Bank.

FUNDAMENTAL MUSLIM ANTI-SEMITISM AND NAZISM, BURNING OF BOOKS

We know about Christian anti-Semitism in Europe until the end of World War II, we see it now once again in Europe and in Muslim countries with the hate of Jews and Israelis. Everyone knows what was the reason of Christians' hatred of Jews, at least in the past, and in many cases also in the present – the Jews killed Jesus and did not want to convert to Christianity, they are deceitful, they control the economy and the media, etc., etc... But what is the reason of Islam anti-Semitism? If we read Nonie Darwish's articles we can understand why Muslims hate Jews – "Recently, a Pakistani religious leader, Pirzada Muhammad Raza Saqib Mustafai, said: "When the Jews are wiped out ... the sun of peace [will] begin to rise on the entire world." The same preaching is routinely done not only by clerics, but by politicians -- in Iran, Saudi Arabia, Egypt, and elsewhere. This is not just Ahmedinijad; it is at the heart of Islamic theology that world peace will be established only when all the Jews are wiped from the earth. But few people in Western media are alarmed by this kind of rhetoric or care to expose this dreadful dark side of Islam's obsession with Jew-hatred." But if we read Wikipedia on this issue and even more when we read the Quran we might get confused, as much as we are confused if the Palestinians have or have not renounced their ideology of wiping out Israel (I have dealt extensively on this issue in my book a propos of Arafat's Caduc theory), if children called shahid or jihad are or are not called so because of their hatred to non-Muslims, double-talk, double standards...

I advocate in this case as in all other cases of anti-Semitism and anti-Israel of Christians, Muslims, or even Jews, that the proof of the pudding is in the eating. If fundamentalist Muslims kill Jews and want to exterminate Israel, if Christians are in favor of terrorism against Israel, and if Jews are in favor of boycotting Israel, this proves that they are anti-Semitic de facto if not de jure. Really, I don't care if the Quran is in favor of Jews or not, when those who read it and hear the Imams in the mosques, are incited to kill Jews and wipe out Israel. It proves that this is implied in the Quran, at least in some segments of the Quran. Arafat could say that he recognizes Israel but on the other hand he launched hundreds of terrorist attacks to Israel during the second Intifada, and that meant only one thing that he wanted to exterminate Israel and fooled the world and the Peace Nobel Prize, as he has fooled our leaders and peacelovings who signed with him the Oslo Agreements. Double-talk and double-standards don't confuse me at all, as I don't care what people say but what they do. You are allowed to make a mistake once, and I made many mistakes in my life but I have never repeated the same mistake twice. I was conned by crooks on the stock exchange, but I decided that I'll never buy anymore shares or debentures. I was conned by some companies selling me TVs, cruises, or insurances but I have never made the same mistake twice, and step by step I have arrived to a status where I work and buy, where I have friends and save only in trustful organizations and trustful persons. Yet, there are some peacelovings in Europe, the US and Israel, who are conned and cheated once and again, and make the same mistakes over and over. Crooks don't change, unethical companies don't become ethical, and corrupt and belligerent countries remain so even if they have a new "front".

The worst kind of course are the people who say one thing and do the opposite, as Mack the Knife who hides his knife, and that is why it is preferable to fight enemies like ISIS and Hamas, like Hizballah and Ahmedinajad, who are not afraid to say overtly what they want to do. They at least are not hypocrites, like the double-talk leaders as Abu Mazen and Arafat who are so nice but much more dangerous when they fool the UN, France, the US, and Sweden talking peace while inciting their children and youngsters to kill Israelis in Tel Aviv, Jerusalem, and the West Bank, as the Iranian front leaders who are so smiling and nice and succeed to lift the sanctions against Iran, while their fanatic fundamentalist bosses continue to preach that the Americans are the Great Satan and the Israelis are the Small Satan. I arrived to this conclusion when studying at the university the history of Europe between the two World Wars that I understood how the Nazi leaders, who were dangerous because of their double-talk, and the "moderate" Hitler succeeded in fooling France and the UK at Munich, and actually from 1933 to 1940. The new Nazis – the Iranian and Palestinian leaders who have adopted exactly the same methods, want to annihilate Israel as their Nazi teachers, deny the Holocaust as the Nazis and Eichmann, lie and fool the credulous peace-loving Europeans, Israeli, and Americans, who want to believe that peace can be achieved even with crooks, at least if they are "nice" crooks. A crook is a crook is a crook, in business and in politics, and you never sign pacts with the Devil, even if he looks nice. Just watch what they say in Arabic or in Persian, in the Mosques and at school, in their local newspapers and television, and you'll see what they really want, exactly like the allies had to read Mein Kampf in order to learn what Hitler wanted and intended, the writing is on the wall!

And this brings me to a question that I have often asked myself. As the Nazis were fanatics who tried to erase all the Jewish roots of European culture, one of them we saw above – in changing the name of Theatre Sarah-Bernhardt only because she had Jewish ancestry – have the Nazis banned and burned the Bible because of its Jewish roots? Well, as Western culture, and especially in France, Germany, UK and US, would be completely different without Jews, and I have dealt extensively on this issue in this book, has the madness and hate of the Nazis brought them to deny even the Bible, and Christianity that has adopted the Bible from the Jews? Apparently I was right and the Nazis did write a new Bible without Jews, like the Palestinians want to recognize Israel as an Arab state with five million refugees coming back to their homes while only 1% of them left those homes, but not recognize Israel as a Jewish state, and teach their children at schools to hate Jews and Israelis, to murder them, to worship shahids who murder the Jews. They even claim that Jerusalem is holy only to Muslims but not to Jews, who never lived in Jerusalem, not had there their temple, their country was never in Israel, while the Muslims have a holy country in Saudi Arabia, but nevertheless they deny the right to Jews to pray even at the Wailing Wall, which is according to the UN and our allies an occupied site.

Mail Online - Jewish references erased in newly found Nazi Bible

Last updated at 14:47 07 August 2006

An institute in Germany has unearthed a Nazi bible ordered by Adolf Hitler to replace the old and new testaments expunged of all references to Jews. Hitler's race theorists even rewrote the 10 commandments and added two more for good measure in the book called 'German with God' which was – alongside Hitler's autobiography – meant to be required reading in every home in his Third Reich. Thou shalt not kill, coveting one's neighbour's wife, thou shalt not steal and all other others were scrapped by a regime that stole, murdered and plundered its way across the world. Hitler admired the ceremony and majesty of the church – he admitted as much in Mein Kampf – but hated its teachings which had no place in his vision of Germanic supermen ruling lesser races devoid of 'outdated' concepts such as mercy and love. But he knew the power of the church in Germany and even he could not banish it overnight. He was even forced to abandon the systematic murder of the handicapped and insane before the war when outspoken bishops began to speak against it. Instead his plan was to gradually 'Nazify' the church beginning with a theological centre he set up in 1939 to rewrite the Holy Bible. He appointed lackey professors to work on a thoroughly Nazi version that would remove all references to Jews and all compassion. Their brief: 'The cleanse church texts of all non-Aryan influences.'

The first to go were the 10 Commandments. The Nazi 12 run:

"Honour God and believe in him wholeheartedly.

Seek out the peace of God.
 Avoid all hypocrisy.
 Holy is your health and life!
 Holy is your wellbeing and honour!
 Holy is your truth and fidelity!
 Honour your father and mother – your children are your aid and your example.
 Keep the blood pure and your honour holy!
 Maintain and multiply the heritage of your forefathers.
 Always be ready to help and to forgive.
 Honour your Fuehrer and master!
 Joyously serve the people with work and sacrifice.
 That is what God wants from us!"

More important for Hitler, however, was the eradication of Jewish words, including Hallelulja, Jehova and even Jerusalem – it was instead termed to: "the eternal city of God."

"The book will have to serve the fight against the immortal Jewish enemy!" said Hitler in a memorandum to the institute in Eisenach. Hansjoerg Buss of the Nordelbischen Church Office discovered the Bible in an archive search. It was printed in 1941 by a company in Weimar and was shipped out to thousands of churches across Nazi-occupied Europe. It is understood most have been destroyed. The name of the office Hitler created to shape the Bible in his image was the 'Institute for the research and removal of the Jewish influence on German church life.'

One of the major tasks was to ignore Jesus' Jewish roots and turn him into an Aryan. Other words specifically banned by Hitler's race-haters were Zion, Hosanna, Galilee and Moses. One order found in the archives for a special exhibition in Eisenach of the institute's bizarre work came from Walter Grundmann, the anti-Semitic director appointed by Hitler. He wrote in 1941: "The Bible must become Jew-free and the German people must see that the Jews are the mortal enemy who threaten their very existence." Hymn books were also trawled and 'Aryanised' with no references to make the party elite balk during the few times they were ever likely to find themselves in a Christian church. At its height, a team of 50 worked on re-writing hymn books and the Bible. But it was all a charade as far as Hitler and his S.S. chief Heinrich Himmler were concerned. Both dreamed of being overlords of an essentially pagan society where the only virtues to be praised were iron hardness and a capability to obey any order, no matter what. "Human kindness and the moral compass as set by the Bible were laughable to them," said Ulrich Messner, a Nazi expert. The King James Bible is a little under 800 pages in paperback form. The Nazi 'Bible' was 750 pages, after the references to Jews had been banished and Nazi "improvements" added.

The Nazis burned most of the best books of Western culture because they were written by Jews (more than half of the best German authors of the preceding century were Jews), because they were written by socialists, or democrats, or anti-Nazis, or by French humanists as Victor Hugo, Andre Gide, Romain Rolland, or American authors as Ernest Hemingway, Jack London, John Dos Passos, English authors as Lawrence, Wells, Huxley, Irish authors as James Joyce, Russian authors as Tolstoy, Dostoyevsky, Gorki, even Helen Keller was banned. In short most of Western culture of the past century was banned by those barbaric fanatics in a country which was one of the most cultivated countries in the world, and almost none of the whole population dared to object and oppose this barbarism.

Among the German-speaking authors whose books student leaders burned that night were Walter Benjamin, Ernst Bloch, Bertolt Brecht, Max Brod, Otto Dix, Alfred Döblin, Albert Einstein, Friedrich Engels, Lion Feuchtwanger, Marieluise Fleißer, Leonhard Frank, Sigmund Freud, Iwan Goll, George Grosz, Jaroslav Hašek, Heinrich Heine, Ödön von Horvath, Heinrich Eduard Jacob, Franz Kafka, Georg Kaiser, Erich Kästner, Alfred Kerr, Egon Kisch, Siegfried Kracauer, Karl Kraus, Theodor Lessing, Alexander Lernet-Holenia, Karl Liebknecht, Georg Lukács, Rosa Luxemburg, Heinrich Mann, Klaus Mann, Ludwig Marcuse, Karl Marx, Robert Musil, Carl von Ossietzky, Erwin Piscator, Alfred Polgar, Erich Maria Remarque, Ludwig Renn, Joachim Ringelnatz, Joseph Roth, Nelly Sachs, Felix Salten, Anna Seghers, Arthur Schnitzler, Carl Sternheim, Bertha von Suttner, Ernst Toller, Kurt Tucholsky, Jakob Wassermann, Frank Wedekind, Franz Werfel, Grete Weiskopf, Arnold Zweig and Stefan Zweig.

Not only German-speaking authors were burned but also French authors like Victor Hugo, André Gide, Romain Rolland, Henri Barbusse, American writers such as Ernest Hemingway, Upton Sinclair, Theodore Dreiser, Jack London, John Dos Passos, and Helen Keller as well as English authors Joseph Conrad, D.H. Lawrence, H.G. Wells and Aldous Huxley, Irish writer James Joyce and Russian authors as Fyodor Dostoyevsky, Maxim Gorki, Isaac Babel, Vladimir Lenin, Vladimir Nabokov, Leo Tolstoy, Leon Trotsky, Vladimir Mayakovsky, and Ilya Ehrenburg.

The burning of the books represents a culmination of the persecution of those authors whose verbal or written opinions were opposed to Nazi ideology. Many artists, writers and scientists were banned from working and publication. Their works could no longer be found in libraries or in the curricula of schools or universities. Some of them were driven to exile (like Walter Mehring and Arnold Zweig); others were deprived of their citizenship (for example Ernst Toller and Kurt Tucholsky) or forced into a self-imposed exile from society (e.g. Erich Kästner). For other writers the Nazi persecutions ended in death. Some of them died in concentration camps, due to the consequences of the conditions of imprisonment, or were executed (like Carl von Ossietzky, Erich Mühsam, Gertrud Kolmar, Jakob van Hoddis, Paul Kornfeld, Arno Nadel and Georg Hermann, Theodor Wolff, Adam Kuckhoff, and Rudolf Hilferding). Exiled authors despaired and committed suicide, for example: Walter Hasenclever, Ernst Weiss, Carl Einstein, Walter Benjamin, Ernst Toller, and Stefan Zweig. Heinrich Heine, whose work was also burned, wrote in his 1820-1821 play Almansor the famous admonition, "Dort, wo man Bücher verbrennt, verbrennt man am Ende auch Menschen": "Where they burn books, they will in the end also burn people." And it didn't help Heine that he converted to Christianity as a Jew is a Jew for the Christian, Nazi, or Muslim anti-Semites, and especially if he is a humanist and intellectual.

You need a lot of "Chutzpah", impertinence, impudence, insolence, cheek, and arrogance, to call the Jews and Israelis Nazis. Nothing can be compared between the most humane people in the world who have contributed so much to the Western culture and the most barbaric regime that ever existed, causing the death of tens of millions people, and the Holocaust with six million Jewish victims, millions of children, women, old people and men who have never done anything against the Germans. Israel occupies the West Bank since 1967 but that is because the joint Arab armies of Egypt, Syria and Jordan wanted to exterminate Israel and Israel in self defense conquered the territories of Gaza from the Egyptians and the West Bank from the Jordanians.

Those territories were never recognized by the world as Jordanian and Egyptian territories, nobody demanded to establish in them a Palestinian state, but nobody blamed them for that, while the Israelis who have conquered those lands that were part of the Jewish state in the past and part of the Jewish mandate, are blamed every day to be an occupying power, although in the period of 1944 to 1967 many countries were occupied and remained so until today, while the populations moved from one country to the other, without any refugee problems that were solved in a few years, like the Jews who were refugees from the Arab states – 900,000 including my family, much more than all the Palestinian refugees who left Israel in 1948, settled in Israel and elsewhere without the assistance of the UN and the world, were integrated within a few years in their new countries, unlike the Palestinian refugees who are still refugees because the Arab states and PLO and Hamas prefer to invest the billions of dollars that they have received from the UN, the world, and their oil, in weapon, terror, and not in solving the refugees problem.

So, what is exactly Nazi in the conduct of the Israelis in the "occupied" or liberated territories? Is it because as a occupying power they behave much more humanely than the French in Algeria, the Americans in Vietnam and Afghanistan, the British in India and Iraq, the Russians in Eastern Europe, the Italians in Ethiopia and Libya? Is it because not only they have not murdered six million Palestinians as the Nazis have murdered Jews, but the thousands of Palestinians who were killed in the wars were killed because the thousands missiles sent to Israeli cities were launched from populated areas? I have dealt extensively in this book on those issues and refuted completely this false allegation, while the opposite is true. The fundamental Islam, Iran, Syria, Iraq, Afghanistan, Algeria, and the Palestinian leaders of the PLO and Hamas conduct like Nazis, killing millions of innocent people, subjugating their populations without human rights to citizens and especially to women, burning books, inciting to kill Jews and Christians, educating their children to hate Jews exactly like the Nazis did and with the same methods, caricatures and allegations as Der Stuermer. It is not a coincidence that Iran and Abu Mazen deny that the Holocaust took place, and want to exterminate the Jews and Israel as a Jewish state. I have referred to those issues extensively in my book, I'll refer here to the burning of books, that is part of the burning and jihad mentality of the destruction of all cultures that are not fundamental Muslim, burning holy sites, burning villages and cities, burning people in suicide bombing.

The 1988 publication of the novel The Satanic Verses, by Salman Rushdie, provoked angry demonstrations and riots around the world by followers of political Islam, some of whom considered it blasphemous. In the United Kingdom, book burnings were staged in the cities of Bolton and Bradford. In addition, five UK bookstores selling the novel were the target of bombings, and two bookstores in Berkeley, California were firebombed. And what was the crime of Rushdie that justified such riots? The Satanic Verses is Salman Rushdie's fourth novel, first published in 1988 and inspired in part by the life of Muhammad. As with his previous books, Rushdie used magical realism and relied on contemporary events and people to create his characters. The title refers to the satanic verses, a group of Quranic verses that allow intercessory prayers to be made to three Pagan Meccan goddesses: Allāt, Uzza, and Manāt. The part of the story that deals with the "satanic verses" was based on accounts from the historians al-Waqidi and al-Tabari. In the United Kingdom, The Satanic Verses received positive reviews, was a 1988 Booker Prize finalist (losing to Peter Carey's Oscar and Lucinda) and won the 1988 Whitbread Award for novel of the year. However, major controversy ensued as some Muslims accused it of blasphemy and mocking their faith. The outrage among some Muslims resulted in a fatwā calling for Rushdie's death issued by Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini, then Supreme Leader of Iran, on 14 February 1989. The result was several failed assassination attempts on Rushdie, who was placed under police protection, and attacks on several connected individuals such as translator Hitoshi Igarashi (leading, in Igarashi's case, to death). What has Heine said about burning books and burning people consequently? This happened also in this case, as Muslim terrorists and suicide bombers have killed tens of thousands people who don't think like them, who are not good Muslims like them, who are Shiites or are Sunnis, who are Jews or Christians, Israelis, Americans, Parisians... On December 19, 2011, protesters against the military government in Egypt, burnt the library in the Institute d'Egypt in Cairo. Images of men on TV were shown dancing around the fire. They burnt thousands of rare books, journals and writings. The cost of the material is estimated at $ tens of millions – much that was lost was considered priceless.

Nazis and Muslims Commit Book Burning by Jahanshah Rashidian

Book burning has a long and fanatical history, the recent examples belonging to the Nazi regime in 1933 and the Islamic regime of Iran short after the 1979 revolution. “Bücherverbrennung”, book burning, of Nazis on 10 May 1933 remains a shame in the history of Germany. So-called “degenerate” books were burnt in Nazi-Germany. The “Säuberung”, cleansing, started from the capital of the third Reich, Berlin, with 20,000 books and went on in other German cities. The Nazis burnt books with “non-German” ideas. The works of leading German writer such as Berthold Brecht, Lion Feuchtwanger, Erich Koestler, and Alfred Kerr, Karl Marx, Kurt Tucholsky were consigned to flames. Worthy books written by Freud, Einstein, Thomas Mann, Jack London, H.G. Wells and many others went up in flames, whilst Germans gave the Nazi salute. The target of such a book burning is the suppression of free thoughts and ideas. The action in Germany was a tactic of Joseph Goebbels’ Ministry of Propaganda with the target of brainwashing a whole nation. The promotion of “Aryan” culture and the suppression of other forms of artistic production was yet another Nazi effort to “purify” Germany.

The same action was undertaken in Iran for the twin aims of the promotion of Islam and the suppression of Iranian identity (in favour of an “Arab” identity). Like the Nazis, the Islamic regime of Iran’s book burning and censorship are aimed at stamping out ideas of freedom and also a more nefarious purpose in a line with the early Muslim invaders: suppressing the non-Islamic culture and values of that civilisation, all of which Islam considers to be but “jahiliyah” – ignorance. The Nazis in Germany and Mullahs in Iran were neither the first nor the last book-burners in history. Christianity has a longer history of defending an all-powerful deity by shielding the mind from strange ideas.

The “Dark Ages” of the Middle Ages in Europe is full of religious atrocity, many scientists were burnt with their ideas and books: Jean Calvin was probably the most efficient: in 1600, when he burned Michael Servetus at the stake for heresy, and around his waist were tied a large bundle of manuscript and a thick octavo printed book. Another notorious illustration of this was in July of 1562, when Bishop Diego de Landa burned five thousand idols and many thousands of their written works. Scientific inquiry had virtually no support in Western society from the 7th to 15th centuries. Bigoted Ecclesiasticism dammed the flow of free thought, blocking the seepage of knowledge within Western societies. Books were branded as magic and treasonous, and the writer or reader was punishable by torture or death. Bruno was burned at the stake for the crime of claiming that the earth rotates about its axis. Many similar events now happen under the plague of the Islamic regime.

Several decades after the advent of Islam in Arabia, Muslim invaders galloped through foreign territories. They destroyed great civilisations including many libraries because books are regarded by fanatics as the symbols of knowledge and wisdom of those cultures. This early book-burning of primitive Muslim invaders paved the way for 1400 years of darkness and backwardness in the Islamic world. The pre-Islamic Iranian great library of Ctesiphon was destroyed during the 637 Muslims’ conquest of Iran. It was the first huge book burning by Muslims in Iran under the caliphate of Umar — “If the books contradict the Qur’an, they are blasphemous. On the other hand, if they are in agreement, they are not needed, as for us Qur’an is sufficient.” That was the caliph Umar’s command to Saad ibn, the commander of Muslim invaders. So, the huge library of Ctesiphon was destroyed and the books, the product of the generations of Persian scientists and scholars, were thrown into fire or the river of Euphrates.

Muslim invaders occupied Iran with sword in one hand and the Koran in the other. The Koran was not sufficient; the sword said the last word. The expansion of Islam was not the result of the Koran but the result of the sword of the conquerors coupled with the effects of “Stockholm syndrome” on the conquered Iranians. The extreme brutality of the Muslims which caused these effects was related to an illusionary protection by divine providence. The soldiers of Islam conquering territories were in fact illiterate Bedouins; but ones firmly motivated by the spoils of war, slaves, paradise with 72 Huries and boys as their promised reward. Recalling not only the book burning of 1933 by the Nazis, but also the 7th century invasion of Islam in Iran, the regime launched in 1980 a “cultural revolution” to further alienate Iranians from their pre-Islamic values. Following this so-called cultural Revolution, bands of Hezbollah attacked, destroyed and burnt libraries in Iran. Millions of “un-Islamic” books were burnt or confiscated. Writers, publishers, and thousands of readers were arrested and even executed.

Like the Nazis in 1933, the Islamic regime of Iran had its version of both book burning and censorship. Thousands of titles have been banned and hundreds of thousands of books are destroyed by unfortunate publishers who have not been authorised to distribute their books, even once published. Not only does the Islamic Republic of Iran’s Ministry of Islamic Guidance and Culture now censor some of Iran’s best contemporary writers and researchers, such as Sadegh Hedayat, Sadegh Choobak, Ebrahim Golestan, Gholamhossein Sa’aei, Ahmad Kasravi, Ali Dashti, Ebrahim Poordavoud, Zabih Behrouz and others; but in recent years they suppressed parts of, and even complete, pieces of works by well-known poets such as Souzani Samarghandi, Omar Khayam, Molana Jalaledin Rumi, Nezami Ganjavi, Abid Zakani, Iraj Mirza, and even some lexicons from Ali Akbar Dehkhoda and Farhang Mo’in as “non-Islamic”. The ruling Mullahs are not solely aimed at stamping out ideas of freedom but for a more nefarious purpose and in a line with the early Muslim invaders, attempt to suppress the historical identity of Iranian citizens and this is their main difference with the Nazis. While the Nazis burnt written works with “non-German ideas”, Mullahs destroy every value of pre-Islamic Iranians. In many ways the parallels between the Nazis and the Iranian Mullahs are close, but there is this difference: While the Nazis burnt written works they deemed to be without “German ideas”, the Iranian Mullahs destroy Iranian works with Iranian ideas. Whilst the Germans burned books with the aim of promoting ‘Germanic/Aryan supremacy’ the Iranian Mullahs promote “Iranian inferiority” to a foreign culture - that of Arab Islamism. In my opinion, this latter is the worse crime.

“Iraqi libraries ransacked by Islamic State group in Mosul,” by Sinan Salaheddin and Sameer N. Yacoub, Associated Press,

When Islamic State group militants invaded the Central Library of Mosul earlier this month, they were on a mission to destroy a familiar enemy: other people’s ideas. Residents say the extremists smashed the locks that had protected the biggest repository of learning in the northern Iraq town, and loaded around 2,000 books — including children’s stories, poetry, philosophy and tomes on sports, health, culture and science — into six pickup trucks. They left only Islamic texts. The rest? “These books promote infidelity and call for disobeying Allah. So they will be burned,” a bearded militant in traditional Afghani two-piece clothing told residents, according to one man living nearby who spoke to The Associated Press. The man, who spoke on condition of anonymity because he feared retaliation, said the Islamic State group official made his impromptu address as others stuffed books into empty flour bags. Since the Islamic State group seized a third of Iraq and neighboring Syria, they have sought to purge society of everything that doesn’t conform to their violent interpretation of Islam. They already have destroyed many archaeological relics, deeming them pagan, and even Islamic sites considered idolatrous. Increasingly books are in the firing line.

Mosul, the biggest city in the Islamic State group's self-declared caliphate, boasts a relatively educated, diverse population that seeks to preserve its heritage sites and libraries. In the chaos that followed the U.S.-led invasion of 2003 that toppled Saddam Hussein, residents near the Central Library hid some of its centuries-old manuscripts in their own homes to prevent their theft or destruction by looters. But this time, the Islamic State group has made the penalty for such actions death. Presumed destroyed are the Central Library's collection of Iraqi newspapers dating to the early 20th century, maps and books from the Ottoman Empire and book collections contributed by around 100 of Mosul's establishment families. Days after the Central Library's ransacking, militants broke into University of Mosul's library. They made a bonfire out of hundreds of books on science and culture, destroying them in front of students. A University of Mosul history professor, who spoke on condition he not be named because of his fear of the Islamic State group, said the extremists started wrecking the collections of other public libraries last month. He reported particularly heavy damage to the archives of a Sunni Muslim library, the library of the 265-year-old Latin Church and Monastery of the Dominican Fathers and the Mosul Museum Library with works dating back to 5000 BC.

Citing reports by the locals who live near these libraries, the professor added that the militants used to come during the night and carry the materials in refrigerated trucks with Syria-registered license plates. The fate of these old materials is still unknown, though the professor suggested some could be sold on the black market. In September, Iraqi and Syrian officials told the AP that the militants profited from the sale of ancient artifacts. The professor said Islamic State group militants appeared determined to "change the face of this city ... by erasing its iconic buildings and history." Since routing government forces and seizing Mosul last summer, the Islamic State group has destroyed dozens of historic sites, including the centuries-old Islamic mosque shrines of the prophets Seth, Jirjis and Jonah. An Iraqi lawmaker, Hakim al-Zamili, said the Islamic State group "considers culture, civilization and science as their fierce enemies." Al-Zamili, who leads the parliament's Security and Defense Committee, compared the Islamic State group to raiding medieval Mongols, who in 1258 ransacked Baghdad. Libraries' ancient collections of works on history, medicine and astronomy were dumped into the Tigris River, purportedly turning the waters black from running ink. "The only difference is that the Mongols threw the books in the Tigris River, while now Daesh is burning them," he said, using an Arabic acronym for the Islamic State group. "Different method, but same mentality."

From MarkHumphrys.com site, Mark Humphry is Irish, apparently not all Irish people are in favor exclusively of the fundamntl Muslims and condemn every morning Israel. He calls himself: Irish. Atheist. Liberal-right. Anti-jihad. Pro-West. Pro-Israel. At last an Irishman to whom I can say as I write extensively in this book how I respect and admire the Irish people, their culture, their literature, their playwrights, their fight for freedom, so few Irishmen and such a great culture, like the Jews who were also persecuted over the centuries and overcame!

Mark writes: These pages have grown slowly over the years, from a simple set of political links to some analysis explaining what I think. Is it a bad idea to put my political/religious ideas online for the world to see? Maybe. Maybe not. You only live once. I am tired of listening to ignorant people talk on my radio and television. I am tired of having to stay silent. I want to speak. I don't want to die without explaining why I think these people are wrong. Previous generations of my family weren't exactly prudent. My family has a long history of putting their political and religious ideas in the public domain. My great-great-grandfather was a Home Rule MP and Free State Senator. My great-grandfather was a Home Rule MP and Free State TD. My grandfather took part in an armed insurrection against the state in 1916. RIC Special Branch had a long file on him. My other grandfather took part in the allied capture of Iraq in 1917, and was then a colonial administrator in Iraq, probably in Hilla province. My granduncle was the first Prime Minister of Ireland in 1922. His son became Prime Minister of Ireland in 1973. My father put his political and religious ideas in the public domain, as do my brothers. Many other relatives have spoken and published on political and religious topics. If they weren't and aren't silent, why should I be? And my workplace is covered with offensive political posters, including ones glorifying violence and terror. If they can speak, why can't I?

Islam continues to destroy non-Muslim (and Muslim) heritage in the modern era.

- Somali Islamists destroy old graves, shrines and churches.
- Muslim Azerbaijan destroys ancient Christian sites.
- 9/11:
 - The heroes of Flight 93 - Ordinary people called upon to defend civilization from vile, fascist barbarians. They may have saved one of the world's great libraries, the Library of Congress (which was right behind the Islamists' target, the U.S. Capitol).
 - Also right nearby are the National Museum of Natural History, the National Gallery, the National Air and Space Museum, the United States Holocaust Memorial Museum, the Voice of America and the National Archives.
- Afghanistan:
 - The Taliban systematically destroyed every book and artwork in Afghanistan that they deemed "un-Islamic", including all books with pictures, and all statues in the country. The Northern Alliance also burned thousands of books in the Kabul Public Library.
 - In early 2001, in the last months of their evil, barbaric regime, the Taliban destroyed the ancient Bamiyan Buddhas. This is all these fascists will be remembered for in a thousand years time, when everything else about their ignorant movement is forgotten.
 - Japan offered to remove or cover the Bamiyan Buddhas but the Taliban savage Abdul Salam Zaeef rebuffed them, criticising them for not converting to Islam. Comment above: "think what the Taliban and their ilk ... would do to the religious art of Europe if ever these barbarians got a chance." Zaeef spent time in Guantanamo but is now free and back in Afghanistan.
 - Museums in Afghanistan
 - Libraries in Afghanistan
 - Taliban in Pakistan start destroying Pakistan's heritage. And here.
- Libya
 - 18th and 19th century paintings burnt when a pro-Gaddafi mob burns the empty British Embassy in Libya, 1 May 2011. And more. Although it is possible they were stolen before the building was burnt.
 - Libyan Islamists desecrate Christian graves, Feb 2012.
 - Deliberate destruction by developers in Aug 2013 of part of the ruins of Cyrene.
- Lebanon
 - Christian Crusaders burnt the ancient library of Tripoli in 1109.
 - Islamist fanatics burnt the Al-Saeh library in Tripoli in Jan 2014.
- Palestine
 - Hamas in Mar 2013 destroyed part of the ancient harbour of Anthedon in Gaza in order to build a terrorist training camp.
- Saudi Arabia

- Saudi Arabia has a vicious hatred for its own Islamic heritage. It has destroyed most of old Mecca and has destroyed many other sites in the country.
- India
 - Indian Muslim jihadists bombed the UNESCO World Heritage Site, the Buddhist Mahabodhi Temple, on 7 July 2013.
- Japan
 - Saudi Muslim graduate student, June 2014, destroys four Buddhist statues at Sensoji Temple (one of them 300 years old) because they offended his own moron beliefs.
- Iraq
 - Iraqis burnt their own National Library and looted their own National Museum on liberation in 2003.
 - The anti-war side attacked America for this, delighted that it distracted attention from America's victory in the invasion. They furiously blamed America for a crime against humanity.
 - An Iraqi Tragedy by Daniel Pipes, April 22, 2003, is an early voice pointing out that the Iraqis did it, not the Americans.
 - The National Museum - which suffered from theft not arson - lost about 5 percent of its holdings.
 - The National Library - which suffered from arson - lost about 95 percent of its rare books, 60 percent of the archival collections, and 25 percent of the book collection.
 - Iraqi resistance bombs Shia mosques, including the Golden Mosque of Samarra.
 - ISIS destroys 7th century Christian church, Tikrit, Sept 2014.
- ISIS destroys the ancient city of Mosul, June 2014 on.
 - ISIS destroys the ancient Shia Muslim mosques and shrines of Mosul, June 2014 on.
 - ISIS destroys the ancient Christian churches and monasteries of Mosul, June 2014 on.
 - ISIS burns 1,500 ancient manuscripts, report, 7 Aug 2014.
 - In 2014, ISIS destroyed the 6th century Saint Elijah's Monastery near Mosul.
- Syria
 - List of heritage sites damaged during Syrian civil war
 - Destruction of Syria's heritage in the civil war, Robert Fisk, 5 Aug 2012. Yes it's Robert Fisk. But there's no sinister agenda in this article at least.
 - The Old City of Aleppo (a UNESCO World Heritage Site) was badly damaged in the Battle of Aleppo in 2012. Many ancient buildings were destroyed.
 - St. Mary Church of the Holy Belt in Homs, one of the oldest Christian churches in the world, was badly damaged in fighting in 2012.
 - The ancient Jobar Synagogue, Damascus, was destroyed in the war in 2013-2014. See photos. The timeline of its destruction is unclear. It was reported that looted ancient Torah scrolls from the Synagogue were being held by jihadists.
 - The 7th century tomb of Ammar ibn Yasir in Ar-Raqqah was reported destroyed in Apr 2013.
 - The 11th century minaret of the Great Mosque of Aleppo was destroyed in Apr 2013.

- Al-Aziz Uthman, Sultan of Egypt, and son of the Muslim leader Saladin, tried to destroy the Pyramids in 1196. This Muslim religious fanatic started by attacking the Pyramid of Menkaure which he mutilated but did not manage to demolish. He eventually gave up because the task was too big.
- The Sphinx of Egypt has a missing nose. It was written in the 1400s that the Sphinx was mutilated in 1378 by a local Muslim fanatic.
- Incredibly, a new destruction of Egyptian history has begun during the deeply unpleasant Egyptian revolution of 2011 that makes one despair for the future of Egypt.
- Muslim lawyer and his sons attack and try to demolish the old Christian church of Rosetta (Rashid), Oct 2012.
- Muslim Brotherhood scum burn Egypt's heritage, summer 2013:
 - Muslim Brotherhood supporters burn the ancient Virgin Mary monastery, Aug 2013, probably burning its library of ancient manuscripts.
 - Ancient Christian site of Ansana destroyed, Sept 2013.
- Museum of Islamic Art, Cairo, was badly damaged by an Islamist bomb attack on nearby police HQ, Jan 2014. Windows blown out. Ceiling comes down. Summary of damage: "74 precious artifacts [were] destroyed and .. 90 were damaged but repairable. The museum had nearly 1,471 artifacts on display .. and 96,000 objects in storage."

WHAT WOULD HAPPEN IF FUNDAMENTALIST ISLAM WOULD WIN

One more comment about the Islamic State/ISIS, the Iranian Islamic Republic, and all the orthodox religious states in general. History proves that the most striving states are secular or moderately religious, the most ethical states, the countries with the highest scores in all the quality of life and standard of living parameters: Denmark, New Zealand, Finland, Sweden, Norway, Switzerland, Singapore, Netherlands, Luxembourg, Canada, Australia. Those are the most ethical states with scores of more than 80 in 2014 and none of them is an orthodox religious state. France strived after it separated between church and politics, the United States is not an orthodox country and so are Germany, the UK... It is not just a problem of Islamic orthodoxism, the same applied to other orthodox countries as well in the past. However, the only countries ruled by orthodox religions nowadays are Islamic countries, as no other countries are orthodox anymore. Gaza and Iran, Pakistan and other Muslim orthodox countries do not progress as much as they would do if they were secular or moderately religious like Turkey in the times of Ataturk, unless they are orthodox oil-rich countries but even then most of the riches of the countries go to a few families and are not distributed to the population. So, if orthodox Islam will win and this is what is happening now in the world, the populations will remain poor, without general education, without scientific education, without openness to the progressive states, without equal rights to women, without reasonable equality like in the first world countries. Religion may be opium for the masses, at least when it is given excessively to the believers. Then you live in an illusion, in virtual reality, you think that you win when you lose, you think that you are the best when you are the poorest, you are proud of what you are even if you live in misery because you will be rewarded in the heaven of the orthodox, while you remain a devout believer who does not complain from social injustice, and even if you have sinned you can repent or become a Shahid before you die and all your sins will be forgiven. If this is the case why be virtuous? If you die a Shahid after you have sinned all your life, you'll be rewarded in Heaven by 72 virgins for having murdered tens, hundreds, hundreds of thousands innocent victims who were non-believers!

The methods of the New Nazis, the NN (like the SS), the fundamentalist Muslims – Iran, Hizballah, Hamas, PLO, Muslim Brotherhood, ISIS, Taliban, Al-Qaeda, und so weiter, are the same, to murder fiercely their opponents, to incite children and youngsters to murder Jews, Christians, Sunnis, Shiites, Seculars, from early childhood, to kill children, women, just because they don't think like them, just because they are not from the same religion or sect, the new Hitler-Jugend at the fundamentalist Madrasas are brainwashed on TV, on the Internet, at school. The moderate Muslims say that they blaspheme in the name of Allah when they murder their victims (Allahu Akbar) in terrorist attacks, while Allah and the Quran preached for peace and social progress, as according to Islam there are five basic values for humanity, which are advised to be protected every time. Depending on circumstances to build up harmony and universal peace, advises to preserve the five basic values at the lowest level or the barest minimum for an acceptable level of living. These basic values therefore includes the ability to perform moral responsibilities; protection of life, securing food, clothing and shelter, education, the right to earn a living, to set up a family, etc. It is to be understood that at this level, one has enough to live but not necessarily to be in some comfort. Islam preaches to that a human being cannot live without these basic values. Individuals and states are advised to protect or at least to respect these values.

The literal and correct translation of Allāhu Akbar (الله أكبر) in Arabic is “God is greater” rather than “God is great” Allāhu kabeer (الله كبير) or “God is [the] greatest” Allāhu alakbar (الله الأكبر). This is the true meaning in the usage of this phrase too as to downgrade any entity or concept that seems to be great by recalling that “God is greater [yet]”. It is used to emphasize that God is greater than any real entity or imaginary concept one may appreciate. In the call for prayer, it means God is greater than worldly affairs. In battlefields, God is greater than the enemy or distress. In religious conviction, God is still greater than any theology. The phrase is well known in the West for its common use as a battle cry in Islamist protests, Islamic extremism, and Islamic terrorism. The expression Allāhu Akbar is never mentioned in the Quran. And Akbar is not listed among the over a hundred asma ul husna (most beautiful names) of God that are repeated throughout the Qur'an. But the Quran lists Al-Kabeer among the asma ul husna (13:9..).

Is the situation of the world improving? Are we at the end of history or close to the end of mankind? During the cold war the world subsisted because the capitalist and communist leaders had at least one thing in common – they were rational, in the US, France, UK, Soviet Union and China. So, they resolved all their conflicts without resorting to nuclear weapons. But now, orthodox Islamic countries might have nuclear weapons – Iran, Talibani Pakistan in a foreseeable future, terrorist organizations that may purchase or steal them. I have no doubts that when they will have those weapons they will use it, as they are not afraid by millions of deaths, as for them killing non-believers is a commandment, preferably Jews but Christians just after that, and not orthodox enough Muslims as well. So, I am quite pessimistic and that is why I have decided to speak out now before it is too late, as I am afraid of the fate of my children and grandchildren, of Israel, but not less of Europe, the US and other countries in the civilized world, wanting peace and prosperity – Japan, Latin America, Canada, Australia, China, Botswana, countries in Europe, Asia and Africa, Egypt, Morocco, Jordan, as well as the peace loving majority of the Palestinians, Arabs and Muslims. I don't want to repent as Pastor Martin Niemöller did when he did not speak out when the Nazis persecuted the "others/jenem". After all, we are the world, at least the rational world, the world wanting to survive, to prosper, to live in peace, a secular or a moderately religious world, a civilized world, a world of culture, literature, arts, drama, films, academics, ethics, a world that mainly wants one thing – to live!

7. PHILOSOPHY, ESSAY: ARISTOTLE'S ETHICS, REFLECTIONS FROM CORY'S DIARY, ON FREEDOM, EQUALITY, BROTHERHOOD, RACISM AND CONFORMISM, MY WAY OF THE WORLD, FOCUSING ON MOST IMPORTANT ISSUES, DIVIDE ET IMPERA, 72 VIRGINS IN HEAVEN OR 72 BOOKS, 72 PLAYS, 72 FILMS... ON EARTH

The reader can find details on the books and philosophers on Wikipedia & Encyclopaedias, on Amazon/websites, on Cory's/books/philosophers websites

Reading BOOKS - Le systeme totalitaire by Hannah Arendt, Forbidden Reminiscences – A Collection of Essays by Ella Shohat, 10 Moral Paradoxes by Saul Smilanski, The Philosophers: their lives and the nature of their thought by Ben-Ami Scharfstein: Pascal, Kant, Hegel, Descartes, Montaigne, Rousseau, Spinoza, Hobbes, Locke, Leibniz, Voltaire, Hume, Schopenhauer, Kierkegaard, Nietzsche..., Yeshayahu Leibowitz – On just about everything – Talks with Michael Shashar, Farewell to Education by S. Yizhar, The Worldly Philosophers: The Lives, Times, and Ideas of the Great Economic Thinkers, by Robert L. Heilbroner, Predictably Irrational by Dan Ariely, The Upside of Irrationality by Dan Ariely, Res Publica: Lectures on Political Thought by Shlomo Avineri. (see also biographies of philosophers, psychologists, etc.)

I have read dozens of philosophy books. About 50 books on the philosophy and theory of business, economics, ethics, etc., and especially on the Philosophy of Capitalism, can be seen in the lists of professional books in the document Cultural Activities of Cory in 2011-2013 on Cory's website, as well as in the bibliography of Cory's Courses. Some of the books deal also on sociological and anthropological issues related to economics and political sciences.

7.1 ESSAY ON ARISTOTLE'S BOOK "ETHICS"

I have dealt at length in my books on philosophical issues, and we chose to bring here an essay that I wrote on Aristotle's philosophy and its relevance to business ethics throughout history:

After the Bible, Aristotle is the founder of the philosophy of ethics in his book 'Ethics' or 'The Nicomachean Ethics'. According to Aristotle man aspires to be happy, in the sense of eudaimonia, happiness, as the summum bonum of his existence. Happiness is not identical to pleasure, and the ethical man will aspire to live a happy life but not necessarily a pleasurable life. Happiness is not the end of each action, but it is nevertheless the supreme goal of life. "For even if the good of the community coincides with that of the individual, it is clearly a greater and more perfect thing to achieve and preserve that of a community; for while it is desirable to secure what is good in the case of an individual, to do so in the case of a people or a state is something finer and more sublime." (Aristotle, Ethics, p.64) Aristotle maintains that wealth is certainly not the happiness that we are looking for, as it is only a means to obtain other goods. Money does not bring happiness, but it helps to obtain it. Man is by nature a social creature and his good should include his parents, his wife, his children, his friends, and his compatriots. "The conclusion is that the good for man is an activity of soul in accordance with virtue, or if there are more kinds of virtue than one, in accordance with the best and most perfect kind." (Aristotle, Ethics, p.76) "And if, as we said, the quality of a life is determined by its activities, no man who is truly happy can become miserable; because he will never do things that are hateful and mean. For we believe that the truly good and wise man bears all his fortunes with dignity, and always takes the most honourable course that circumstances permit." (Aristotle, Ethics, p.84)

Virtue has two faces – intellectual and moral. The intellectual virtue is acquired by education and experience. But the moral virtue is acquired by habit and ethos. "The moral virtues, then, are engendered in us either by nor contrary to nature; we are constituted by nature to receive them, but their full development in us is due to habit. Again, of all those faculties with which nature endows us we first acquire the potentialities, and only later effect their actualization.” (Aristotle, Ethics, p.91) A man is not ethical or unethical by nature, he can become so by habit, and the social role of humanity is to develop the ethical aptitudes of all humankind. One cannot be wholly happy without being wholly ethical and moral, and if we could inculcate these notions to the business world, and prove that it is not only a philosophical theory, but also a reality, which is proved in many cases, we could change the aptitudes of a large number of businessmen. As the businessmen at the start of their career are not good or bad, it is circumstances, milieu, ambiance of their companies, example of their superiors, influence of their families, which make them more or less ethical. The businessmen who remain ethical in spite of an unethical environment are very rare. A very strong character is needed, serious convictions and a vast intellectuality.

The good conduct is incompatible with excess, one has to be moderate in order to preserve his moral qualities. An excessive or insufficient sportive activity is harmful, and it is the same with food, drink, courage, pleasure, and all other human activities. Moderation is not equal to everybody and everybody has to aspire to find his equilibrium in the moderation that suits him. Aristotle treats ethical ignorance with indulgence “When a man repents of an act done through ignorance, he is considered to have acted involuntarily.” (Aristotle, Ethics, p.113)

According to Aristotle, the unjust men have chosen deliberately to be so, and now that they are so, they cannot change. This theory is in contradiction to Christian theory, which enables followers to repent even at their dying breath. It would be interesting to analyze how the modern unethical businessmen tend to repent or not. We only know that the robber barons have founded philanthropic institutions, the bankers who were condemned recently for insider trading have engaged in community activities, etc. But what is the conduct of those who were not apprehended, or those who do not think that they are rich enough to contribute money to society? Here again, if we would disclose their ethical wrongdoing, it would increase the probability of their penance, and activist business ethics would prevail!

We can reach truth according to Aristotle in five ways: through science – episteme, art – techne, prudence – phronesis, intelligence – nous, and wisdom – sophia. How many business administration faculties give courses or try to develop those qualities? They teach mathematical models, which are almost never applied in practice and are completely irrelevant, but who gives courses or case studies, which could develop those qualities that are so necessary to businessmen? One of the most striking features of modern businessmen is the intellectual superficiality of many of them. How many businessmen read classic literature, philosophical dissertations and poetry? How many go to the theater, to concerts, to museums? A business dinner consists almost always of talking about business matters, or often about the best restaurants in New York, Dallas, London or Singapore. With such a limited scope of interests, how can we wonder that some businessmen are not ethical, do not seek truth, moderation or wisdom? Are those qualities incompetent to businessmen? But the fact that this situation prevails in some cases does not mean that it should be so. Furthermore, we cannot allow ourselves to leave any domain of business without ethics even if it is difficult today to converge ethics and business. We are dealing with the salvation of the modern world, and all the world economy depends on it. This is the reason why it is necessary to inculcate ethics actively by all means at all levels.

In the same way that many people state that ethics in business is an oxymoron, we could state another one - that friendship in business is an oxymoron. Aristotle describes three kinds of friendship – friendship based on interests, friendship based on pleasure, and friendship based on goodness. The first two friendships are quite common in the business world, but the third is very rare, in spite of the maxims ‘love thy neighbor as yourself’. Friendship based on goodness is like love, as it accepts the others as they are, they want their good in all cases, even if they do not derive utility or pleasure from the friendship. It is 'for better and for worse', even if the businessman loses his job, his high level and his influence, or he gets sick or becomes poor. This friendship is permanent; they like to remain with each other, and they have complete trust in the friend. How is it possible that the Germans can be friends with the French, after centuries of animosity, and that unethical businessmen cannot establish true friendships and behave ethically towards their stakeholders and colleagues?

According to Aristotle, fortune is desirable but not if it is obtained at the price of treason. If we analyze the conditions of happiness in Aristotle's Ethics, we have to conclude that most businessmen cannot be happy, as "it is evident that self-sufficiency and leisuredness and such freedom from fatigue as is humanly possible, together with all the other attributes assigned to the supremely happy man, are those that accord with this activity; then this activity will be the perfect happiness for man." (Aristotle, Ethics, p.330) It is very difficult in the modern and competitive business world to possess the virtues required by Aristotle in order to achieve happiness, live a moderate life, without excessive fatigue and 15-hour work days, be content with what you possess, and have enough time to enjoy life and develop your intellect and culture.

Aristotle like Marcus Aurelius understood the value of detachment from day to day life and proposed examining periodically the chosen path and the price that we have to pay in order to pursue it. We need to obtain a psychological, emotional and spiritual equilibrium in order to be happy. There are very few businessmen who can find such equilibrium and find the time to examine the cost of doing it 'my way'. In the excessive way of life that most of us live it is impossible to think and examine the ethical values. At the high speed that we travel in the modern business world we cannot stop and try to obtain the peace of mind necessary to be happy. And if businessmen will not be happy they could never conduct themselves equitably toward others, as it is very difficult to be good to others if your own life is miserable. According to Solon only those who possess moderate goods could be happy, and they will accomplish the best actions in living a moderate life, as it is possible for those who have an average wealth to be just.

How do we follow the precepts of Solon and Aristotle nowadays? According to American statistics stated in the "The Hungry Spirit" of Handy, 69% of Americans would like to conduct a more relaxed life, the per capita consumption has increased by 45% in the last 20 years, but the quality of life, as measured by the Index of Social Health, has deteriorated by 51%. Only 21% of the youth think that they have a good life, compared to 41% 20 years ago. In Great Britain, in a poll conducted in 1993 – 77% have considered their working hours as stressful, 77% were preoccupied with the effect that their working conditions had on their families. The stress costs in 1996 - 40 million working days and $10 billion in social security costs. The costs of nervous breakdowns in the U.S. are according to a study of MIT $47 billion, identical to the costs of cardiac diseases. We have therefore completely departed from the model of a happy life developed by Aristotle!

Furthermore, the richest one percent in the U.S. earned in 1989 - $600,000 per person, and as a group they earn more than the income of the poorest 40 percent of the population. The 1,000 best paid CEOs in 1992 earn on the average 157 times more than the average salary. The 400 richest men in the world have according to Forbes in 1993 a capital that is equal to the combined GNP of India, Bangladesh, Nepal and Sri Lanka. Seventy percent of international trade is conducted by 500 companies. Can we imagine that such an inequality and such a stressed population could subsist in the long term? Le Monde Diplomatique comments on the pessimism that prevails in France, where 80 percent of the French do not think that the economy can improve. Unemployment augments, especially among the youth, the nation does not have any more trust in the elites, who are often guilty of corruption, and there is much hostility toward the technostucture. Ironically, the French economy has improved, but nobody feels better about it; they do not even believe the statistics. There is therefore a large gap between the theories of Aristotle on ethics, happiness and welfare, and the actual condition of the world, which is much richer and more developed than Aristotle's world.

7.2 PROFESSOR SHLOMO AVINERI AND MY EPICUREAN THOUGHT

I remember very well every lecture of Professor Shlomo Avineri in his excellent course on Greek Philosophy (1961/1962, in my 18th year) at the Political Sciences department of the Hebrew University of Jerusalem. He taught us Aristotle, Plato, Socrates, Heraclitus, Epicurus, and he opened for me a world that guided me throughout all my life. Rarely did I have the privilege to have such an excellent professor – as a matter of fact he was the only remarkable one who taught me at the University, at Insead – Professor Henri-Claude de Bettignies, and at CNAM – Yvon Pesqueux. 3 professors throughout all my academic studies – BA, MBA, PhD is not much, although I had some good ones, average ones, and some bad ones, especially in Economics. An excellent professor is one who influences your life, whom you remember forever as well as what he taught. That is why the best compliments that I have ever received were when my students whom I taught Business Ethics and many more subjects gave me time and again the highest grades and I was even nominated the best lecturer of all the University of Haifa, Israel. What is satisfaction in life – excessive wealth, nomination as a CEO of a large company, the most beautiful wife? For many people the answer would be – Yes, but not for me, and the reason for that is partly because of what Avineri has taught me when I was less than 18, and partly because what I thought about the meaning of life before that as I learned from my diary. I have an Aristotelian philosophy of life which influenced my ethical beliefs, and an Epicurean thought, not hedonism, as many would think, but the true Epicurean "lathe biōsas (λάθε βιώσας)", meaning "live in obscurity", "get through life without drawing attention to yourself", i.e., live without pursuing glory or wealth or power, but anonymously, which I have applied in my life.

The Epicureans did have an innovative theory of justice as a social contract. Justice, Epicurus said, is an agreement neither to harm nor be harmed (which is exactly the basis of ethics which guided me all my life and which I taught my students), and we need to have such a contract in order to enjoy fully the benefits of living together in a well-ordered society. Laws and punishments are needed to keep misguided fools in line who would otherwise break the contract. But the wise person sees the usefulness of justice, and because of his limited desires, he has no need to engage in the conduct prohibited by the laws in any case. Laws that are useful for promoting happiness are just, but those that are not useful are not just. (Principal Doctrines 31-40). As a matter of fact, I have met in my life many very rich people and many CEOs of large companies, and most of them were miserable and/or despicable, they were not happy, they were envious, ruthless, without scruples, with a lamentable family life, without love, with unworthy or ungrateful children, sometimes even they committed criminal acts which were not divulged. Marrying extremely beautiful women, models, or rich women because of their money did not bring them either happiness in most of the cases that I know. Being in the spotlight does not bring happiness, people get envious, they disclose or invent wrongs that you have done in the kindergarten, every thing that you do is scrutinized with a magnifying glass. I know how they feel as when I blew the whistle on some important issues the "crooks" tried to find some skeletons in my closet to no avail, and they had to resort to intimidation, threats and sabotage.

Epicurus (Greek: Ἐπίκουρος, Epikouros, "ally, comrade"; 341–270 BC) was an ancient Greek philosopher as well as the founder of the school of philosophy called Epicureanism. Only a few fragments and letters of Epicurus's 300 written works remain. Much of what is known about Epicurean philosophy derives from later followers and commentators. For Epicurus, the purpose of philosophy was to attain the happy, tranquil life, characterized by ataraxia—peace and freedom from fear—and aponia—the absence of pain—and by living a self-sufficient life surrounded by friends. He taught that pleasure and pain are measures of what is good and evil; death is the end of both body and soul and should therefore not be feared; the gods neither reward nor punish humans; the universe is infinite and eternal; and events in the world are ultimately based on the motions and interactions of atoms moving in empty space. At the age of seventy-two, and despite the prolonged pains from which he suffered, he wrote to Idomeneus: "I have written this letter to you on a happy day to me, which is also the last day of my life. For I have been attacked by a painful inability to ..., and also ..., so violent that nothing can be added to the violence of my sufferings. But the cheerfulness of my mind, which comes from the recollection of all my philosophical contemplation, counterbalances all these afflictions." This is probably the ultimate case of bibliotherapy, commented throughout my book - as the soothing of his illness was his intellectual satisfaction, his philosophy, his optimism and happiness.

Epicurus is a key figure in the development of science and scientific methodology because of his insistence that nothing should be believed, except that which was tested through direct observation and logical deduction. His statement of the Ethic of Reciprocity as the foundation of ethics is the earliest in Ancient Greece, and he differs from the formulation of utilitarianism by Jeremy Bentham and John Stuart Mill by emphasizing the minimization of harm to oneself and others as the way to maximize happiness, which is exactly what I think also as I oppose strongly the utilitarianism in my books and courses. Epicurus believed that the pleasure of the soul is greater than the pleasure of the body: the body is effective at present while the soul are more durable; also the pleasures of the soul can eliminate or reduce body aches. Epicurus regularly admitted women and slaves into his school and was one of the first Greeks to break from the god-fearing and god-worshiping tradition common at the time, by maintaining that the gods do not punish the bad and reward the good as the common man believes. Gods in reality, do not concern themselves at all with human beings. What a modern way of thinking more than 2,000 years ago, when even today billions of people believe that God has a balance for weighing the good and bad deeds of humans – sending the good ones to paradise and the bad ones to hell, rewarding the shahids with 72 virgins, deciding on Yom Kippur who will live and who will die.

Epicurus' philosophy is based on the theory that all good and bad derive from the sensations of what he defined as pleasure and pain: What is good is what is pleasurable, and what is bad is what is painful. His ideas of pleasure and pain were ultimately, for Epicurus, the basis for the moral distinction between good and evil. If pain is chosen over pleasure in some cases it is only because it leads to a greater pleasure. (If you study or work very hard in order to succeed in life and you suffer from privation and stress – it brings you ultimately a greater pleasure). Although Epicurus has been commonly misunderstood to advocate the rampant pursuit of pleasure, his teachings were more about striving for an absence of pain and suffering, both physical and mental, and a state of satiation and tranquility that was free of the fear of death and the retribution of the gods. Epicurus argued that when we do not suffer pain, we are no longer in need of pleasure, and we enter a state of ataraxia, "tranquility of soul" or "imperturbability". You obtain this tranquility of soul with intellectual pleasure mainly. This state of ataraxia can be achieved through philosophical contemplation rather than through pursuit of crass physical pleasures. He also believed, contrary to Aristotle, that death was not to be feared. When a man dies, he does not feel the pain of death because he no longer is and therefore feels nothing.

Therefore, as Epicurus famously said, "death is nothing to us." When we exist, death is not; and when death exists, we are not. All sensation and consciousness ends with death and therefore in death there is neither pleasure nor pain. The fear of death arises from the belief that in death, there is awareness. From this doctrine arose the Epicurean epitaph: Non fui, fui, non sum, non curo ("I was not; I was; I am not; I do not care"), which is inscribed on the gravestones of his followers and seen on many ancient gravestones of the Roman Empire. This quotation is often used today at humanist funerals. As an ethical guideline, Epicurus emphasized minimizing harm and maximizing happiness of oneself and others: It is impossible to live a pleasant life without living wisely and well and justly, and it is impossible to live wisely and well and justly without living pleasantly. So modern and right! What a pity that most of the politicians and businessmen did not have a course on Greek philosophy with great professors as Shlomo Avineri, were not influenced by philosophers as Epicurus and Aristotle, and have not adopted their precepts...

Epicurus maintains that vain desires include desires for power, wealth, fame, and the like. They are difficult to satisfy, in part because they have no natural limit. If one desires wealth or power, no matter how much one gets, it is always possible to get more, and the more one gets, the more one wants. These desires are not natural to human beings, but inculcated by society and by false beliefs about what we need; e.g., believing that having power will bring us security from others. Epicurus thinks that these desires should be eliminated. Epicurus insists that courage, moderation, and the other virtues are needed in order to attain happiness. However, the virtues for Epicurus are all purely instrumental goods--that is, they are valuable solely for the sake of the happiness that they can bring oneself, not for their own sake. Epicurus says that all of the virtues are ultimately forms of prudence, of calculating what is in one's own best interest. In this, Epicurus goes against the majority of Greek ethical theorists, such as the Stoics, who identify happiness with virtue, and Aristotle, who identifies happiness with a life of virtuous activity. Epicurus thinks that natural science and philosophy itself also are instrumental goods. Natural science is needed in order to give mechanistic explanations of natural phenomena and thus dispel the fear of the gods, while philosophy helps to show us the natural limits of our desires and to dispel the fear of death. And I say that it really does not matter what is the reason for living a virtuous life as long as you live a virtuous life, I don't even see a difference if you should seek virtue per se or that philosophy and virtue are showing us the natural limits of our desires. Like the virtues, justice is valued entirely on instrumental grounds, because of its utility for each of the members of society. Epicurus says that the main reason not to be unjust is that one will be punished if one gets caught, and that even if one does not get caught, the fear of being caught will still cause pain. However, he adds that the fear of punishment is needed mainly to keep fools in line, who otherwise would kill, steal, etc. The Epicurean wise man recognizes the usefulness of the laws, and since he does not desire great wealth, luxury goods, political power, or the like, he sees that he has no reason to engage in the conduct prohibited by the laws in any case.

Epicurus consistently maintains that friendship is valuable because it is one of the greatest means of attaining pleasure. Friends, he says, are able to provide one another the greatest security, whereas a life without friends is solitary and beset with perils. In order for there to be friendship, Epicurus says, there must be trust between friends, and friends have to treat each other as well as they treat themselves. The communities of Epicureans can be seen as embodying these ideals, and these are ideals that ultimately promote ataraxia. Epicurus' emphasis on minimizing harm and maximizing happiness in his formulation of the Ethic of Reciprocity was later picked up by the democratic thinkers of the French Revolution, and others, like John Locke, who wrote that people had a right to "life, liberty, and property." To Locke, one's own body was part of their property, and thus one's right to property would theoretically guarantee safety for their persons, as well as their possessions. This triad, as well as the egalitarianism of Epicurus, was carried forward into the American freedom movement and Declaration of Independence, by the American founding father, Thomas Jefferson, as "all men are created equal" and endowed with certain "unalienable rights," such as "life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness." Jefferson considered himself an Epicurean. Karl Marx's doctoral thesis was on The Difference Between the Democritean and Epicurean Philosophy of Nature. And you cannot mention Epicureanism without mentioning Stoicism, which was also taught by Avineri and which guided my philosophy of life as the former two philosophies of Epicurus and Aristotle. To those I would add the ethical principles of Kant, the old and new testament of the Bible, and the Quran.

7.3 ON STOICISM

Stoicism is a school of Hellenistic philosophy founded in Athens by Zeno of Citium in the early 3rd century BC. The Stoics taught that destructive emotions resulted from errors in judgment, and the active relationship between cosmic determinism and human freedom, and the belief that it is virtuous to maintain a will (called prohairesis) that is in accord with nature. Because of this, the Stoics presented their philosophy as a way of life, and they thought that the best indication of an individual's philosophy was not what a person said but how that person behaved. To live a good life, one had to understand the rules of the natural order since they taught that everything was rooted in nature. Later Stoics—such as Seneca and Epictetus—emphasized that, because "virtue is sufficient for happiness", a sage was immune to misfortune. This belief is similar to the meaning of the phrase "stoic calm", though the phrase does not include the "radical ethical" Stoic views that only a sage can be considered truly free, and that all moral corruptions are equally vicious. So true, as I think that I am truly free because I did not succumb to any moral and pecuniary corruption, to any vice, to greed, to betrayal, to causing harm, to excessive conduct. The Stoics provided a unified account of the world, consisting of formal logic, monistic physics and naturalistic ethics. Of these, they emphasized ethics as the main focus of human knowledge, though their logical theories were of more interest for later philosophers.

Stoicism teaches the development of self-control and fortitude as a means of overcoming destructive emotions; the philosophy holds that becoming a clear and unbiased thinker allows one to understand the universal reason (logos). A primary aspect of Stoicism involves improving the individual's ethical and moral well-being: "Virtue consists in a will that is in agreement with Nature." This principle also applies to the realm of interpersonal relationships; "to be free from anger, envy, and jealousy," and to accept even slaves as "equals of other men, because all men alike are products of nature." And indeed, I was never envious or jealous and very seldom angry, I believe that all humans are equal, regardless of race, religion, sex, wealth, as stipulated in the UN Universal Declaration of Human Rights which guide me through all my life, which I read in more than 60 languages, and which I initiated, partly translated, and edited the translation into my mother tongue – Ladino. The Stoic ethic espouses a deterministic perspective; in regard to those who lack Stoic virtue, Cleanthes once opined that the wicked man is "like a dog tied to a cart, and compelled to go wherever it goes." A Stoic of virtue, by contrast, would amend his will to suit the world and remain, in the words of Epictetus, "sick and yet happy, in peril and yet happy, dying and yet happy, in exile and happy, in disgrace and happy," thus positing a "completely autonomous" individual will, and at the same time a universe that is "a rigidly deterministic single whole". This viewpoint was later described as "Classical Pantheism" (and was adopted by Dutch philosopher Baruch Spinoza). Spinoza as we know was a Jew who was banned by the Jewish religious authorities, that issued a cherem (Hebrew: חרם, a kind of ban, shunning, ostracism, expulsion, or excommunication) against him, effectively excluding him from Jewish society at age 23. His books were also later put on the Catholic Church's Index of Forbidden Books. Spinoza lived an outwardly simple life as a lens grinder, turning down rewards and honours throughout his life, including prestigious teaching positions. Scholars find many differences between Stoicism, Pantheism, Aristotelianism, and Epicureanism, but in this chapter I refer to their common principles, to which I adhere, that are much more than the differences.

You can achieve your peace of mind, your stoicism, by being virtuous, with a clean conscience, and it soothes all your sickness, perils, ostracizing and disgrace, loss of money, betrayal of friends, and fear of death as well. How true this is and how it helped me to overcome all the hurdles and mishaps in my life. Stoicism became the foremost popular philosophy among the educated elite in the Hellenistic world and the Roman Empire. The Stoics propounded that knowledge can be attained through the use of reason. Truth can be distinguished from fallacy—even if, in practice, only an approximation can be made. According to the Stoics, the senses constantly receive sensations: pulsations that pass from objects through the senses to the mind, where they leave an impression in the imagination (phantasia) (an impression arising from the mind was called a phantasma). The mind has the ability to judge (συγκατάθεσις, synkatathesis)—approve or reject—an impression, enabling it to distinguish a true representation of reality from one that is false. Some impressions can be assented to immediately, but others can only achieve varying degrees of hesitant approval, which can be labeled belief or opinion (doxa). It is only through reason that we achieve clear comprehension and conviction (katalepsis). Certain and true knowledge (episteme), achievable by the Stoic sage, can be attained only by verifying the conviction with the expertise of one's peers and the collective judgment of humankind. A parting thought that summarizes it all: “Let no one be slow to seek wisdom when he is young nor weary in the search of it when he has grown old. For no age is too early or too late for the health of the soul. And to say that the season for studying philosophy has not yet come, or that it is past and gone, is like saying that the season for happiness is not yet or that it is now no more. Therefore, both old and young alike ought to seek wisdom, the former in order that, as age comes over him, he may be young in good things because of the grace of what has been, and the latter in order that, while he is young, he may at the same time be old, because he has no fear of the things which are to come. So we must exercise ourselves in the things which bring happiness, since, if that be present, we have everything, and, if that be absent, all our actions are directed towards attaining it.” — Epicurus, Letter to Menoeceus.

7.4 CORY'S PHILOSOPHICAL THOUGHT AT THE AGE OF 17

In my Diary, at the age of 17, I wrote a lot about philosophical, cultural and religious issues. "Belief in God is something simple, but showing cowardice. A coward is someone who does not believe in himself but in others. A coward is someone who does not believe in himself, that without Divine Providence and the fear of punishment from God he cannot live a virtuous life. The greatness of man is in doing good and pursuing the truth, even without the fear of punishment, just because a self conviction that it is the right way to act. The problem is that most of the world will return to its primitive stage if they would know that there is no God. That is why religion is good, it is good to believe in God, because without that humanity would not survive. The best achievement of humanity would be when without fearing punishment of the state or God all mankind will live peacefully and in serenity, and will do only good while seeking the truth.

This is my prophecy for the messianic age, as I am 17. Is it normal for someone of my age? I think so. When I'll grow old I shall probably believe in God, because then I'll fear from death and the void that insues death. But there is plenty of time yet. In times of misfortune I believe in God and pray, and that gives me encouragement. God is a psychological mean and no more. Always in time of misfortune, the son addresses his parents, the people – his leaders, the man – his God.

I shall not be remembered in future generations. I'll not contribute to the world any outstanding thing. That is why I'll not be remembered a lot of time after my death. If I will not surpass myself extraordinarily or I'll not humiliate myself too much and will always keep a proper level, I will say that I've lived my life successfully and I'll be glad to die, even if my name will not be remembered forever. Posterity is sheer nonsense that does not bring to a man any satisfaction. I don't want that people will praise me after my death, nor denigrate me. If people will praise me during my life time – all the better, but it is not plausible.

I have read The Death of Ivan Ilyich by Tolstoy in French and I arrive to the conclusion that the most important thing in life is health. Now, when I am more or less healthy I am not talking about this issue, but I shouldn't forget my sufferings during my sicknesses and pains. The intellectual torments are important, but the physical pains have no value. That is why I pray and hope that I'll be healthy all my life, even if I'll not succeed in my career, as the most important thing in life is health. Tolstoy starts to torment me, he is too much right. Those types of men are dangerous to society, it is dangerous to hear or read them. It is therefore good that society caused him troubles when he was alive. The greatest tragedy with him is that he is right and tells the truth. Truth tellers are dangerous to society, which is why they should be denounced. That is what Johnson states in his essay On Toleration. Society will condemn those types without my intervention. In the film "Me against Myself", I, at the age of 17, condemn/denounce Tolstoy and all those who stand for social justice and say that society is right when it persecutes him. So why should the 69-year old man be surprised that society (and he himself as a youngster) denounce him as a whistleblower?

Would I want to reform the ethics of modern society, like Tolstoy does, but why should I do it? Why should I tell society what not to do? Should I believe in Tolstoy? Epicurus said long before him that a man should enjoy life and why should I believe Tolstoy and not Epicurus? It is true that my inner voice tells me that this life is negative, but I shouldn't forget that this inner voice stems from the education that I have received but who says that my parents are right? Nobody can state who is right. Ehad Haam brings two assumptions in "Flesh and Spirit", but he doesn't state which one is right. I will do something only when I will be sure that I should do it, or as Johnson states: If I have a particular delegation from heaven. This will be only if I'll be rich or I'll have an important position, or I'll be very erudite, or anything similar. As a simple clerk I'll do nothing. Should I be a prophet but I have nothing to prophesize. I lack for prophesy the Celestial Mission and until then I should try to make a career. It will occupy my thoughts most of the time and I'll not have the time for soul searching, and even if I'll have the time – as long as I don't have a specific mission for improving the spirit, I'll do anything to improve the flesh!!! I'll do anything to improve my material conditions. I'll live complacent material life in order to be ultimately a philosopher and instruct humanity what should be its path. Only through the elevation of the flesh I would be able to achieve elevation of the soul. Strange, not?! But logical.

That is why I'll not continue to read Tolstoy and the other philosophers. If I'll achieve satisfactorily my education – plays, poetry, music, art, classic literature, etc. – then, I'll find time once again for Tolstoy and his friends and will decide if I'll follow their path. Besides, it is the only thing that I can do today, because even if I agree with Tolstoy's way, what can I do when I'm only 17? I have to be much more adult in order to influence even moderately society. And besides, it is well known that you have to taste sin in order to know what virtue is! And I've never tasted sin and I already know or presume to know what virtue is?! All that, of course, if I'll agree with Tolstoy that you should live in abstinence (after he had already 11 children and he arrived to this conclusion only at the age of 59).

I will not enter now to the world of philosophy, it is too early!! And it is harmful to think now serious thoughts. But perhaps those thoughts would save my life from being hollow. Even if I'll think serious thoughts I can nevertheless achieve nothing. I'll torture myself, as I'll know that my thoughts are just and I can do nothing to implement them, and why I should I suffer? It is better to live in blurring until I grow up and I'll be ready to act, at the age of 55-60. It is logical also that half of my life I'll live for the flesh and half of my life, the more adult, I'll live for my spirit. There is a merit for those pages in the future. That is why this diary is very important. I don't think that many boys think like me, but I shouldn't receive superiority complexes.

I haven't read for more than 50 years my diary and it is chilling to see how the 17-year old boy has set the conduct of the 57-year old man, without being aware of that at all, while first of all he has achieved his material success and afterwards in his old age he has turned to achieve social justice.

My dear diary, it was nice to talk to you after more than fifty years that I haven't read you. In some areas I haven't changed much and in others there was a complete turnabout, especially in the emotional facets after I met my wife and my children were born, after I received an ethical consciousness, after I was burned up from the wrongdoings. This diary, which I have brought up here only a small segment of it, is my 12th book, but as a matter of fact it is my first book and from it, I should start to count my works, this is therefore my Opus 1 - A portrait of the idealist as a young man."

7.5 ON CORY'S PREFERENCE OF FREEDOM & TRUTH AS MOST IMPORTANT TRAITS

I am one of the few individuals who are completely free, as freedom is the trait that I appreciate most. If I have to chose between Liberte, Egalite, Fraternite, and I don't want to chose as I want all of them, together with love, a sound family life, self-fulfillment, adequate wealth, and of course health and peace..., but if I have to chose I prefer Liberte over Egalite, and Egalite over Fraternite. I would not be able to live even a day in a totalitarian or theocratic country, even visit them. I was flabbergasted when I visited East Berlin in 1967 and renounced all my socialist convictions, I suffered a lot when I visited some African countries in 1972 that were totalitarian, and of course it was a nightmare for me to live in the totalitarian Egypt until 1953. If, God forbids, Israel would become totalitarian I would not be able to live in my homeland even one day, although I chose to live there in spite of the fact that in the last twenty years it has become much less egalitarian, and even less fraternal with many segments of the population hating or at least not appreciating the other segments: hawks and doves, ultra orthodox and secular, Jews and Arabs, Israelis and Palestinians, rich and poor, Right and Left, neoliberals/tycoons and humane capitalists, Israelis and peaceloving anti-Semite Europeans, Orientals and Ashekenazis, but at least in this category the fraternity has improved in the last twenty years with much more intra marriages, Arab states and Israel, here also the situation has improved over what it was until 1977, with cold peace agreements with Egypt, Jordan, and unofficial contacts with most of the other Arab states, but "new" enemies have emerged – Iran, ISIS, al-Qaeda, etc.

And why am I free? I do not abide to the norms of society, although I abide of course the law. Most of the Israeli and the neoliberal societies are complacent towards their neoliberal governments – in the US and the UK since 1980, in Israel with the Likud and Labor governments since 1996. I am one of the fews coming from the business world, at least in Israel, who dared opposing the neoliberals and was ostracised, losing 90% of my income. But I thought that it was worth the price as I do appreciate all the three cornerstones of France and all the free world – Liberte/Liberty, Egalite/Equality, Fraternite/Brotherhood. Liberty without Equality and Fraternity is like using a third of your potential. I worked in a high tech company since the age of 30 where I felt completely free and where egalite and fraternite were part of their cornerstones.

When I noticed that it is no more prevailing I left my company and became a free lancer with a total freedom to chose my clients and projects, working with companies with whom I felt at ease. When I did not want to compromise I started an academic career, publishing ethical books since 2001 and teaching business ethics since 2004. I worked at universities that gave me full academic freedom to teach whatever I liked and denouncing the unethical conduct of tycoons and corporations. When some of the universities did not approve my credo I left them without wanting to compromise although they paid the best salaries, being funded by tycoons. I wrote in my books all what I wanted and when publishers refused to publish my book on social and economic justice I published it on the Internet free of charge as well as in the libraries of universities and organizations that were not afraid of publishing my "subversive" contents.

But also within society – I ceased my relations with all the colleagues whom I discovered cooperated with the tycoons and neoliberal regimes and denounced my "socialist" ideas. Too many citizens are "slaves" to social norms, unethical corporations, and corrupt regimes. I act, write and speak whatever I like, refused to be a Director in unethical corporations or organizations, and resigned from Boards of Directors when I noticed that they do not behave ethically. Even in chosing a car we bought one Prius eco friendly car instead of two much less eco friendly cars, although "noblesse oblige" most of my colleagues would not dare to drive such a "low-cost car" and continue to drive Mercedes, Audi and expensive American cars. As my income was reduced by 90% I tried to match my new income to my standard of living, cutting most of the excessive expenses – in cars, travel, costly cultural shows... So, as stated before, we own one eco friendly car (most of my colleagues have two expensive cars), but we also travel only once a year abroad (while my colleagues travel at least 4-6 times a year), go to the theater at reduced prices tickets (my colleagues go to the opera and concerts costing hundreds of dollars), and what is for me much more painful ceasing almost completely to see plays abroad at exorbitant prices especially on Broadway. It goes without saying that we don't own additional houses in Israel, Europe, the US..., we do not stay at boutique hotels abroad costing hundreds of dollars a night. If we really wanted we could maybe afford adhering to the social norms of my colleagues, but as we are completely free from "show-off" constraints (and I don't want to judge my colleagues, as everyone is entitled to his opinions, even the conformists) we do whatever we like, live according to our income, and are respected by friends who condone our conduct. But we still live in a beautiful house (although it was built 30 years ago, we have not renovated it or bought new furniture but we keep them in working condition), we have a very rewarding cultural life, I purchased hundreds of books (although I couldn't afford to purchase my own books at the exorbitant prices of $150...), and we help as much as we can our children, even more than some of our richer colleagues in Israel and abroad. I am not afraid to express my opinions although they may vary too much from what is conventional in society. If I see a play or read a book that I don't like I say so overtly, although they were praised by all the critics – many colleagues wouldn't dare to express an opinion that is not a common opinion as they are much more conformists. I am not at all a conformist, this is for sure, as one can learn by reading my book and my ethical idelogy. The same applies to art, films, politics, and opinions in general.

7.6 ON CORY'S ANTIRACIST PRACTICE

I hesitate to write the following sentences, as my critics would slander, after reading my views on the Israeli-Palestinian conflict that I am a racist which is completely false, or would use my criticism on Israel, Jews, and my colleagues as a proof that we are racists. Israel is no more racist than France, the US, the UK, and is much less racist than the Palestinian Authority, Gaza, Hizballah, many Arab and Muslim countries that publish slander and defamate Israel and the Jews. Actually, bearing in mind that Israel is in war for the last hundred years with the Muslims, the Arabs and the Palestinians, I am surprised how racism against the Arabs is contained, even in comparison to the West when they were at war in the first half of the Twentieth Century and before. In all my book we cannot find even one racist remark, and if I have criticism it is against fundamental Muslims, the Palestinian leaders, and anti-Semitism in general, but not against Islam which I respect as proved in many chapters, the Palestinian people whom I appreciate as well as their culture, and the Europeans who condemn anti-Semitism in their countries. I do not try to "prove" my anti-racist attitude, but I'll just bring here some examples on my conduct, which do not prove either that my country or my people are racists, but some racist conduct is exposed here, much less than Arab racism, and no more than European racism.

If some colleagues are shocked by the fact that an Arab has bought or rented a house in our neighborhood I call it a racist conduct, as it is exactly what anti-Semites did a hundred years ago towards Jews in Europe and the US. If a bank charges interests to my Arab client which are twice more expensive than interests to Jews (they have of course "financial" reasons for that) I call it a racist conduct and complain about it to the management of the bank who lowers them by half because they are afraid from the negative publicity. Many colleagues, and also Doves, would not dare to establish a start-up with Arabs (they like Arabs very much but far away from them...) in Nazareth, as I did with the Christian Heritage, which however did not take off because of the Intifada. But on the other hand I am not afraid to express my moderate Hawkish opinions, together with my anti neoliberal opinions, and my anti-racist opinions, which makes me a member of a club of five or ten people in Israel who are both Hawks and humane capitalists, when all the others are either Doves and Leftist humane capitalists or even socialists, or Hawks and Rightist neoliberals. So, here again I am not a conformist, but rather a free thinker individualist, one of the few really free men, as almost all of the others are "slaves" to the norms, to their organizations, to their parties, part of a hierarchy. Maybe ten tycoons are as free as me, do not envy anybody and can do whatever they want, as well as ten homeless people who do whatever they want, but live in misery. While I am free, but still lives a decent and well-off life with family and friends, and in this aspect I am not moderate as with the others.

7.7 CORY'S MAIN PHILOSOPHY – SECULAR HUMANISM, ETHICS, UNIVERSALITY, COSMOPOLITANISM, INTELLECTUALISM

So, what is my life philosophy? Epicurean, Aristotlean, secular, humanist? I think that the most adequate term is that I am a cosmopolitan intellectual secular humanist. The philosophy or life stance of secular humanism (alternatively known by some adherents as Humanism, specifically with a capital H to distinguish it from other forms of humanism) embraces human reason, ethics, and philosophical naturalism while specifically rejecting religious dogma, supernaturalism, pseudoscience, and superstition as the bases of morality and decision making. Secular humanism posits that human beings are capable of being ethical and moral without religion or a god. It does not, however, assume that humans are either inherently evil or innately good, nor does it present humans as being superior to nature. Rather, the humanist life stance emphasizes the unique responsibility facing humanity and the ethical consequences of human decisions. Fundamental to the concept of secular humanism is the strongly held viewpoint that ideology—be it religious or political—must be thoroughly examined by each individual and not simply accepted or rejected on faith. Along with this, an essential part of secular humanism is a continually adapting search for truth, primarily through science and philosophy. Many Humanists derive their moral codes from a philosophy of utilitarianism, ethical naturalism, or evolutionary ethics, and some, such as Sam Harris, advocate a science of morality. The International Humanist and Ethical Union (IHEU) is the world union of more than one hundred Humanist, rationalist, irreligious, atheistic, Bright, secular, Ethical Culture, and freethought organizations in more than 40 countries. The "Happy Human" is the official symbol of the IHEU as well as being regarded as a universally recognised symbol for those who call themselves Humanists. Secular humanist organizations are found in all parts of the world. Those who call themselves humanists are estimated to number between four and five million people worldwide.

It was from the Renaissance that modern Secular Humanism grew, with the development of an important split between reason and religion. This occurred as the church's complacent authority was exposed in two vital areas. In science, Galileo's support of the Copernican revolution upset the church's adherence to the theories of Aristotle, exposing them as false. In theology, the Dutch scholar Erasmus with his new Greek text showed that the Roman Catholic adherence to Jerome's Vulgate was frequently in error. A tiny wedge was thus forced between reason and authority, as both of them were then understood. Secular humanist organizations are found nowadays in all parts of the world. Those who call themselves humanists are estimated to number between four and five million people worldwide in 31 countries, but there is uncertainty because of the lack of universal definition throughout censuses. Humanism is a non-theistic belief system and, as such, it could be a sub-category of "Religion" only if that term is defined to mean "Religion and (any) belief system". This is the case in the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights on freedom of religion and beliefs. Many national censuses contentiously define Humanism as a further sub-category of the sub-category "No Religion", which typically includes atheist, rationalist and agnostic thought. In England, Wales 25% of people specify that they have 'No religion' up from 15% in 2001 and in Australia, around 15% of the population specifies "No Religion" in the national census. However, in its 2006 and 2011 census Australia used Humanism as an example of "other religions". In the USA, the decennial census does not inquire about religious affiliation or its lack; surveys report the figure at roughly 13%. In the 2001 Canadian census, 16.5% of the populace reported having no religious affiliation. In Scotland, the figure is 28%. One of the largest Humanist organizations in the world (relative to population) is Norway's Human-Etisk Forbund, which had over 86,000 members out of a population of around 4.6 million in 2013 - approximately 1.9% of the population. The International Humanist and Ethical Union (IHEU) is the worldwide umbrella organization for those adhering to the Humanist life stance. It represents the views of over three million Humanists organized in over 100 national organizations in 30 countries. Originally based in the Netherlands, the IHEU now operates from London. Some regional groups that adhere to variants of the Humanist life stance, such as the humanist subgroup of the Unitarian Universalist Association, do not belong to the IHEU. Although the European Humanist Federation is also separate from IHEU, the two organizations work together and share an agreed protocol.

Humanism is a philosophical and ethical stance that emphasizes the value and agency of human beings, individually and collectively, and generally prefers critical thinking and evidence (rationalism, empiricism) over acceptance of dogma or superstition. The meaning of the term humanism has fluctuated according to the successive intellectual movements which have identified with it. Generally, however, humanism refers to a perspective that affirms some notion of human freedom and progress. In modern times, humanist movements are typically aligned with secularism, and as of 2015 "Humanism" typically refers to a non-theistic life stance centred on human agency and looking to science rather than revelation from a supernatural source to understand the world. Renaissance humanism was an activity of cultural and educational reform engaged in by civic and ecclesiastical chancellors, book collectors, educators, and writers, who by the late fifteenth century began to be referred to as umanisti – "humanists". It developed during the fourteenth and the beginning of the fifteenth centuries, and was a response to the challenge of scholastic university education, which was then dominated by Aristotelian philosophy and logic. Scholasticism focused on preparing men to be doctors, lawyers or professional theologians, and was taught from approved textbooks in logic, natural philosophy, medicine, law and theology. There were important centres of humanism at Florence, Naples, Rome, Venice, Mantua, Ferrara, and Urbino. Humanists reacted against this utilitarian approach and the narrow pedantry associated with it. They sought to create a citizenry (frequently including women) able to speak and write with eloquence and clarity and thus capable of engaging the civic life of their communities and persuading others to virtuous and prudent actions. This was to be accomplished through the study of the studia humanitatis, today known as the humanities: grammar, rhetoric, history, poetry and moral philosophy. As a program to revive the cultural – and particularly the literary – legacy and moral philosophy of classical antiquity, Humanism was a pervasive cultural mode and not the program of a few isolated geniuses like Rabelais or Erasmus as is still sometimes popularly believed. Humanistic psychology is a psychological perspective which rose to prominence in the mid-20th century in response to Sigmund Freud's psychoanalytic theory and B. F. Skinner's Behaviorism. The approach emphasizes an individual's inherent drive towards self-actualization and creativity. Psychologists Carl Rogers and Abraham Maslow introduced a positive, humanistic psychology in response to what they viewed as the overly pessimistic view of psychoanalysis in the early 1960s. Other sources include the philosophies of existentialism and phenomenology.

The Atheists' New Ten Commandments

The ten winning beliefs of the Rethink Prize: a crowdsourcing competition to rethink the Ten Commandments. The contest drew more than 2,800 submissions from 18 countries and 27 U.S. states. Winners were selected by a panel of judges.

1. Be open-minded and be willing to alter your beliefs with new evidence.
2. Strive to understand what is most likely to be true, not to believe what you wish to be true.
3. The scientific method is the most reliable way of understanding the natural world.
4. Every person has the right to control of their body.
5. God is not necessary to be a good person or to live a full and meaningful life.
6. Be mindful of the consequences of all your actions and recognize that you must take responsibility for them.
7. Treat others as you would want them to treat you, and can reasonably expect them to want to be treated. Think about their perspective.
8. We have the responsibility to consider others, including future generations.
9. There is no one right way to live.
10. Leave the world a better place than you found it.

The list of the most important secular humanists include great personalities. I prefer to be "A Tail to Lions rather than a head to Foxes", and instead to be as all the masses a conformist adhering without hesitation to all the prevalent social norms, I prefer to judge and decide what should be my norms, even if I am in a small minority including however such illustrious people: Issac Asimov, Margaret Atwood, Leonard Bernstein, Niels Bohr, Johannes Brahms, Noam Chomsky (although I disagree to his views on the Middle East conflict), Aaron Copland, Umberto Eco, Albert Einstein, Friedrich Engels, Joseph Fourier, Sigmund Freud, John Kenneth Galbraight, Katharine Hepburn, Aldous Huxley, John Lennon, Abraham Maslow, Karl Popper, Bertrand Russell, Andrei Sakharov, Jean-Paul Sartre, Benjamin Spock, Andrei Tarkovsky, Mark Twain, Nikola Tesla, Peter Ustinov, James D. Watson, Walth Whitman, Howard Zinn.

And if we expanded (with the assistance of Wikipedia) on humanism, we have to add a few lines on secularism. Secularism is the principle of the separation of government institutions and persons mandated to represent the state from religious institutions and religious dignitaries. One manifestation of secularism is asserting the right to be free from religious rule and teachings, or, in a state declared to be neutral on matters of belief, from the imposition by government of religion or religious practices upon its people. Another manifestation of secularism is the view that public activities and decisions, especially political ones, should be uninfluenced by religious beliefs and/or practices. Secularism draws its intellectual roots from Greek and Roman philosophers such as Epicurus and Marcus Aurelius; from Enlightenment thinkers such as John Locke, Denis Diderot, Voltaire, Baruch Spinoza, James Madison, Thomas Jefferson, and Thomas Paine; and from more recent freethinkers and atheists such as Robert Ingersoll and Bertrand Russell. The purposes and arguments in support of secularism vary widely. In European laicism, it has been argued that secularism is a movement toward modernization, and away from traditional religious values (also known as secularization). This type of secularism, on a social or philosophical level, has often occurred while maintaining an official state church or other state support of religion. In the United States, some argue that state secularism has served to a greater extent to protect religion and the religious from governmental interference, while secularism on a social level is less prevalent. Within countries as well, differing political movements support secularism for varying reasons. In political terms, secularism is a movement towards the separation of religion and government (often termed the separation of church and state). This can refer to reducing ties between a government and a state religion, replacing laws based on scripture (such as Halakha and Sharia law) with civil laws, and eliminating discrimination on the basis of religion. This is said to add to democracy by protecting the rights of religious minorities.

How can I be a supporter of Israel as a Jewish state and reduce the ties between the Israeli government and the Jewish religion? First of all, Israel is a Jewish and democratic state, a Jewish state means according to me the country of the Jewish people not the Jewish religion, and religion should be separated from state, no religious parties should be allowed to operate, no activities to encourage "reborn" or missionary efforts should be allowed, all religious men and women should go to the army exactly on the same terms as the secular youngsters, the government will not finance any religious education whatsoever and all the education from age 0 to the doctorate should be secular and for free, and finally Israel should be called the state of the Jewish people and all its citizens, including Arabs, Muslims, Christians, atheists, and others.

I refer to cosmopolitanism several times in this book. In this philosophy chapter, I would add the definition from Wikipedia - Cosmopolitanism is the ideology that all human beings belong to a single community, based on a shared morality. A person who adheres to the idea of cosmopolitanism in any of its forms is called a cosmopolitan or cosmopolite. A cosmopolitan community might be based on an inclusive morality, a shared economic relationship, or a political structure that encompasses different nations. In a cosmopolitan community individuals from different places (e.g. nation-states) form relationships of mutual respect. A further state of cosmopolitanism occurred after the Second World War. As a reaction to the Holocaust and the other massacres, the concept of crimes against humanity became a generally accepted category in international law. This clearly shows the appearance and acceptance of a notion of individual responsibility that is considered to exist toward all of humankind. Philosophical cosmopolitans are moral universalists: they believe that all humans, and not merely compatriots or fellow-citizens, come under the same moral standards. The boundaries between nations, states, cultures or societies are therefore morally irrelevant. This is what I wrote also in my books and taught my students, that morality does not vary from country to country but is universal.

Another term which I use extensively in my book is intellectualism. What does it mean? Intellectualism denotes the use, development, and exercise of the intellect; the practice of being an intellectual; and the Life of the Mind. In the field of philosophy, "intellectualism" occasionally is synonymous with “rationalism”, that is, knowledge mostly derived from reason and ratiocination. In the view of Socrates (469–399 BC), intellectualism allows that “one will do what is right or best just as soon as one truly understands what is right or best”; that virtue is a purely intellectual matter, since virtue and knowledge are familial relatives, which a person accrues and improves with dedication to reason. So defined, Socratic intellectualism became a key philosophic doctrine of Stoicism. The apparent, problematic consequences of this view are “Socratic paradoxes”, such as the view that there is no weakness of will — that no one knowingly does, or seeks to do, evil (moral wrong); that anyone who does, or seeks to do, moral wrong does so involuntarily; and that virtue is knowledge, that there are not many virtues, but that all virtues are one. Contemporary philosophers dispute that Socrates’s conceptions of knowing truth, and of ethical conduct, can be equated with modern, post-Cartesian conceptions of knowledge and of rational intellectualism. As such, Michel Foucault demonstrated, with detailed historical study, that in Classical Antiquity (800 BC – AD 1000), “knowing the truth” is akin to “spiritual knowledge”, in the contemporarily understanding of the concept. Hence, without exclusively concerning the rational intellect, spiritual knowledge is integral to the broader principle of “caring for the self”. Typically, such care of the self-involved specific ascetic exercises meant to ensure that not only was knowledge of truth memorized, but learned, and then integrated to the self, in the course of transforming oneself into a good person. Therefore, to understand truth meant “intellectual knowledge” requiring one’s integration to the (universal) truth, and authentically living it in one’s speech, heart, and conduct. Achieving that difficult task required continual care of the self, but also meant being someone who embodies truth, and so can readily practice the Classical-era rhetorical device of parrhesia: “to speak candidly, and to ask forgiveness for so speaking”; and, by extension, practice the moral obligation to speak the truth for the common good, even at personal risk. This ancient, Socratic moral philosophic perspective contradicts the contemporary understanding of truth and knowledge as rational undertakings. And from intellectualism we’ll try to define an intellectual.

An intellectual, according to Wikipedia, is a person who engages in critical study, thought, and reflection about the reality of society, and proposes solutions for the normative problems of that society, and, by such discourse in the public sphere, he or she gains authority within the public opinion. Coming from the world of culture, either as a creator or as a mediator, the intellectual participates in politics, either to defend a concrete proposition or to denounce an injustice, usually by producing or by extending an ideology, and by defending a system of values. Socially, intellectuals constitute the intelligentsia, a status class organised either by ideology (conservative, fascist, socialist, liberal, reactionary, revolutionary, democratic, communist intellectuals, et al.) or nationality (American intellectuals, French intellectuals, Ibero-American intellectuals, et al.). The contemporary intellectual class originated from the intelligentsiya of Tsarist Russia (ca. 1860s–70s), the social stratum of those possessing intellectual formation (schooling, education, Enlightenment), and who were Russian society’s counterpart to the German Bildungsbürgertum and to the French bourgeoisie éclairée, the enlightened middle classes of those realms. During the late 19th century, amidst the Dreyfus Affair (1894–1906), an identity crisis of Anti-semitic nationalism for the French Third Republic (1870–1940), the reactionary anti-Dreyfusards (Maurice Barrès, Ferdinand Brunetière, et al.) used the terms intellectual and the intellectuals to deride the liberal Dreyfusards (Émile Zola, Octave Mirbeau, Anatole France, et al.) as political dilettantes from the realms of French culture, art, and science, who had become involved in politics, by publicly advocating for the exoneration and liberation of Alfred Dreyfus, the Jewish captain of artillery falsely condemned of betraying France to Germany. It is no wonder that all the reactionaries, as the anti-Dreyfusards or neoliberals abhor intellectuals, abhor actually everybody who does not think like them, they advocate freedom but only for them and when they govern a state, a university, or a company, they do not allow anyone else freedom of speech, to teach, to work, or to rule in their organizations.

In the 20th century, the term Intellectual acquired positive connotations of social prestige, derived from possessing intellect and intelligence, especially when the intellectual's activities exerted positive consequences in the public sphere, in order to increase the intellectual understanding of the public, by means of moral responsibility, altruism, and solidarity, without resorting to the manipulations of populism, paternalism, and condescension. Hence, for the educated person of a society, participating in the public sphere — the political affairs of the city-state — is a civic responsibility dating from the Græco-Latin Classical era: I am a man; I reckon nothing human to be foreign to me. (Homo sum: humani nihil a me alienum puto.) - The Self-Tormentor (163 BC), Terence. The determining factor for a thinker (historian, philosopher, scientist, writer, artist, et al.) to be considered a public intellectual is the degree to which he or she is implicated and engaged with the vital reality of the contemporary world; that is to say, participation in the public affairs of society. Consequently, being designated as a public intellectual is determined by the degree of influence of the designator's motivations, opinions, and options of action (social, political, ideological), and by affinity with the given thinker; therefore: The Intellectual is someone who meddles in what does not concern him. (L'intellectuel est quelqu'un qui se mêle de ce qui ne le regarde pas.) - Jean-Paul Sartre. Well, my dear Sartre this is brilliant, it is exactly what we the intellectuals do nowadays and in the past.

The intellectual is a specific variety of the intelligent, which unlike the general property, is strictly associated with reason and thinking. Many everyday roles require the application of intelligence to skills that may have a psychomotor component, for example, in the fields of medicine or the arts, but these do not necessarily involve the practitioner in the "world of ideas". The distinctive quality of the intellectual person is that the mental skills, which one demonstrates, are not simply intelligent, but even more, they focus on thinking about the abstract, philosophical and esoteric aspects of human inquiry and the value of their thinking. The intellectual and the scholarly classes are related; the intellectual usually is not a teacher involved in the production of scholarship, but has an academic background, and works in a profession, practices an art, or a science. The intellectual person is one who applies critical thinking and reason in either a professional or a personal capacity, and so has authority in the public sphere of their society; the term intellectual identifies three types of person, one who:

1. is erudite, and develops abstract ideas and theories
2. a professional who produces cultural capital, as in philosophy, literary criticism, sociology, law, medicine, science or
3. an artist who writes, composes, paints, etc.

The English term "Man of Letters" derives from the French term belletrist, but is not synonymous with "An academic". The term Man of Letters distinguished the literate man ("able to read and write") from the illiterate man ("unable to read and write"), in a time when literacy was a rare form of cultural capital. In the 17th and 18th centuries the term Belletrist identified the literati, the French "citizens of the Republic of Letters", which evolved into the salon, a social institution, usually run by a hostess, meant for the edification, education, and cultural refinement of the participants. In English the term intellectual identifies a "literate thinker"; its earlier usage, as in the book title The Evolution of an Intellectual (1920), by John Middleton Murry, denotes literary activity, rather than the activities of the public intellectual. Addressing their role as a social class, Jean-Paul Sartre said that intellectuals are the moral conscience of their age; that their moral and ethical responsibilities are to observe the socio-political moment, and to freely speak to their society, in accordance with their consciences. Like Sartre and Noam Chomsky, public intellectuals usually are polymaths, knowledgeable of the international order of the world, the political and economic organization of contemporary society, the institutions and laws that regulate the lives of the layman citizen, the educational systems, and the private networks of mass communication media that control the broadcasting of information to the public. Whereas, intellectuals (political scientists and sociologists), liberals, and democratic socialists usually hold, advocate, and support the principles of democracy (liberty, equality, fraternity, human rights, social justice, social welfare, environmental conservation), and the improvement of socio-political relations in domestic and international politics, the conservative public-intellectuals usually defend the social, economic, and political status quo as the realisation of the "perfect ideals" of Platonism, and present a static dominant ideology, in which utopias are unattainable and politically destabilizing of society.

In Marxist philosophy, the social-class function of the intellectuals (the intelligentsia) is to be the source of progressive ideas for the transformation of society; to provide advice and counsel to the political leaders; to interpret the country's politics to the mass of the population (urban workers and peasants); and, as required, to provide leaders. As I stated before, it is no wonder that the neoliberal dictatorship/plutocracy is the enemy of intellectuals and of all those who think an independent thinking and are not willing to be the puppets of the tycoons and their lackeys, as the economics and business professors, the corporations executives and the politicians and civil servants. In "An Interview with Milton Friedman" (1974), the neoliberal American economist Milton Friedman said that businessmen and the intellectuals are enemies of capitalism; the intellectuals, because most believed in socialism, while the businessman expected economic privileges: "The two, chief enemies of the free society or free enterprise are intellectuals, on the one hand, and businessmen, on the other, for opposite reasons. Every intellectual believes in freedom for himself, but he's opposed to freedom for others. . . . He thinks . . . [that] there ought to be a central planning board that will establish social priorities. . . . The businessmen are just the opposite — every businessman is in favor of freedom for everybody else, but, when it comes to himself that's a different question. He's always "the special case". He ought to get special privileges from the government, a tariff, this, that, and the other thing. . . . Well, Friedman accuses the intellectuals of what he and the neoliberals do (read also the brilliant book by Naomi Klein: The Shock Doctrine, the Rise of Disaster Capitalism to understand how it is done).

The British historian Norman Stone said that the intellectual social class misunderstand the reality of society, and so are doomed to the errors of logical fallacy and [Ideological] stupidity; poor planning hampered by ideology. Another "brilliant" follower of Milton Friedman's neoliberal ideology, Margaret Thatcher writes in her memoirs, that the anti-monarchical French Revolution (1789–99) was "a utopian attempt to overthrow a traditional order . . . in the name of abstract ideas, formulated by vain intellectuals". Yet, as Prime Minister, Thatcher asked Britain's academics to help her government resolve the social problems of British society — whilst she retained the populist opinion of "The Intellectual" as being a man of un-British character, a thinker, not a doer; Thatcher's anti-intellectual perspective was shared by the mass media, especially The Spectator and The Sunday Telegraph newspapers, whose reportage documented a "lack of intellectuals" in Britain. So, the enemy of the people is this time the intellectual, she cannot say as usually in such cases the Jew, as Milton Friedman was Jewish..., but he has also many Jewish counterparts with an opposite ideology such as Joseph Stiglitz and Naomi Klein. Thatcher hates so much the intellectuals that she blames them of abstract ideas (they should be at least beheaded), of causing the French Revolution against the monarchy, the traditional order, they are vain, un-British, thinkers, not doers... She forgets of course that because of the fear from the French revolution the UK was forced to become democratic and adopt social reforms, and because of the fear from Russian communism (yes, Ronald Reagan, another notorious neoliberal) the US were forced to adopt the New Deal and become a welfare state. In the absolute monarchy that Thatcher likes so much, she would probably remain illiterate as most of the class where she was born, Reagan would have remained a second-rate actor, and Milton Friedman would have never received civil rights as a Jew, that were awarded to Jews only by the French revolution. We would all remain in the 99% oppressed masses if it were not because of the intellectuals – Voltaire, Rousseau, et al, and if we let the neoliberals pursue their crusades against the intellectuals and the 99% oppressed, we'll return very soon to the conditions of 1788.

We'll not refer in this chapter to all the terms employed in my book, we'll add only two more. The first one is universality and moral universalism, that were discussed extensively in my books and we bring here the Wikipedia definitions of the terms. It goes without saying that I favor universality and especially moral universalism, as ethics and morality are not relative but absolute, and the UN Universal Declaration of Human Rights is the best example of it. In philosophy, universality is the notion that universal facts can be discovered and is therefore understood as being in opposition to relativism. In certain religions, universalism is the quality ascribed to an entity whose existence is consistent throughout the universe. When used in the context of ethics, the meaning of universal refers to that which is true for "all similarly situated individuals." Rights, for example in natural rights, or in the 1791 United States Bill of Rights, for those heavily influenced by the philosophy of the Enlightenment and its conception of a human nature, could be considered universal. The 1948 Universal Declaration of Human Rights is inspired by such principles. In logic, or the consideration of valid arguments, a proposition is said to have universality if it can be conceived as being true in all possible contexts without creating a contradiction. Some philosophers have referred to such propositions as universalizable. Truth is considered to be universal if it is valid in all times and places. In this case, it is seen as eternal or as absolute. The relativist conception denies the existence of some or all universal truths, particularly ethical ones (through moral relativism). Mathematics is a field in which those truths discovered, in relation to the field of mathematics, are typically considered of universal scope. Though usage of the word truth has various domains of application, relativism does not necessarily apply to all of them. This is not to say that universality is limited to mathematics, for there exists a large number of people who apply the standard to philosophy, theology and beyond. In metaphysics, a universal is a type, a property, or a relation. The noun universal contrasts with individual, while the adjective universal contrasts with particular or sometimes with concrete. The latter meaning, however, may be confusing since Hegelian and neo-Hegelian (e.g. British idealist) philosophies speak of concrete universals.

Platonic realism holds universals to be the referents of general terms, i.e. the abstract, nonphysical entities to which words like "doghood", "redness", and "betweenness" refer. By contrast, particulars are the referents of proper names, like "Fido", or of definite descriptions that identify single objects, like the phrase, "that apple on the table". By contrast, other metaphysical theories merely use the terminology of universals to describe physical entities. The problem of universals is an ancient problem in metaphysics concerning the nature of universals, or whether they exist. Part of the problem involves the implications of language use and the complexity of relating language to ontological theory. Most ontological frameworks do not consider classes to be universals, although some prominent philosophers, such as John Bigelow, do. "What is absolutely true is always correct, everywhere, all the time, under any condition. An entity's ability to discern these things is irrelevant to that state of truth." —Steven Robiner.

Moral universalism (also called moral objectivism or universal morality) is the meta-ethical position that some system of ethics, or a universal ethic, applies universally, that is, for "all similarly situated individuals", regardless of culture, race, sex, religion, nationality, sexual orientation, or any other distinguishing feature.¹ Moral universalism is opposed to moral nihilism and moral relativism. However, not all forms of moral universalism are absolutist, nor are they necessarily value monist; many forms of universalism, such as utilitarianism, are non-absolutist, and some forms, such as that of Isaiah Berlin, may be value pluralist. In addition to the theories of moral realism, moral universalism includes other cognitivist moral theories, such as the subjectivist ideal observer theory and the divine command theory, and also the non-cognitivist moral theory of universal prescriptivism. Linguist and political theorist Noam Chomsky states: "if we adopt the principle of universality: if an action is right (or wrong) for others, it is right (or wrong) for us. Those who do not rise to the minimal moral level of applying to themselves the standards they apply to others—more stringent ones, in fact—plainly cannot be taken seriously when they speak of appropriateness of response; or of right and wrong, good and evil." The United Nations' Universal Declaration of Human Rights can be read as assuming a kind of moral universalism. The drafting committee of the Universal Declaration did assume, or at least aspired to, a "universal" approach to articulating international human rights. Although the Declaration has undeniably come to be accepted throughout the world as a cornerstone of the international system for the protection of human rights, a belief among some that the Universal Declaration does not adequately reflect certain important worldviews has given rise to more than one supplementary declaration, such as the Cairo Declaration on Human Rights in Islam and the Bangkok Declaration. According to R. W. Hepburn, "To move towards the objectivist pole is to argue that moral judgements can be rationally defensible, true or false, that there are rational procedural tests for identifying morally impermissible actions, or that moral values exist independently of the feeling-states of individuals at particular times."

The last term is quite ambiguous: Multiculturalism describes the existence, acceptance, or promotion of multiple cultural traditions within a single jurisdiction, usually considered in terms of the culture associated with an ethnic group. This can happen when a jurisdiction is created or expanded by amalgamating areas with two or more different cultures (e.g. French Canada and English Canada) or through immigration from different jurisdictions around the world (e.g. Australia, United States, United Kingdom, and many other countries). So, what is better - Egypt until the revolution when hundreds of thousands of Italians, Greeks, Armenians, Jews, English and French co-existed with millions of Muslim ethnic Egyptians, while the Copts were caught in the middle? Now Egypt is 99% Egyptian, with 90% Muslims and 9% Coptic Christians, and almost all of the population speaks Arabic. So, what is better for Egypt and the majority of Egyptians, or maybe multiculturalism was irrelevant to the progress of the country? I have dealt extensively on those issues in this book, with the examples of Switzerland, Canada, Belgium, and other states. Turkey is now 99% Muslim – but a century ago they had large minorities of Greeks, Armenians and Jews, Algeria is 99% Muslim but half a century ago they had large minorities of Frenchmen, Italians and Jews, are they better off now? They have to decide about that because it was their decision to get rid of all the Europeans that apparently were obstructing the progress of the local populations. Singapore is an ideal multicultural state, the government has great respect to the Chinese, Malayan and Tamil cultures, but all three segments of the population learn at school English and receive mostly the same education. There never was such a minority that was assimilated so fully with the local culture as the German/Austrian Jews – Heine, Mendelssohn, Mahler, Freud, Einstein, Feuchtwanger, Werfel, Schnitzler, Zweig, etc.

The Nazis have exterminated all the German and Austrian Jews, as well as most of the European Jews who were also assimilated in the cultures of Poland, Russia, France, Belgium, Netherlands, Italy, Norway, Ukraine, Czechoslovakia, Hungary, Yugoslavia, and Greece. Now Europe tries to integrate other minorities, that some of them do not want to assimilate, they want to keep their culture, their language, their norms, their women rights or no rights, not only their religion as the Jews did, and even many of them converted to Christianity – Heine, Mendelssohn, Marx, Mahler... Because of the choices of those minorities it is more difficult for them to integrate, they don't know the language too well, they dress differently, women do not integrate in many cases, so is it positive or not to enable multiculturalism? I personally, believe that minorities should be able to maintain their culture only if it does not disrupt the economy (by not allowing women to work for example), if it does not put in question their loyalty to their new countries (by inciting them to terrorism by their religious leaders), if it does not force them to a life of poverty (if they don't want to learn at secular schools and receive only a religious education). Multiculturalism should be – to keep their language as a second language while the first language should be the state's language, to keep their folklore with dances, stories and songs, to keep their norms only if they don't contradict the norms of the state where they live.

Multicultural ideologies and policies vary widely, ranging from the advocacy of equal respect to the various cultures in a society, to a policy of promoting the maintenance of cultural diversity, to policies in which people of various ethnic and religious groups are addressed by the authorities as defined by the group to which they belong. Multiculturalism that promotes maintaining the distinctiveness of multiple cultures is often contrasted to other settlement policies such as social integration, cultural assimilation and racial segregation. Multiculturalism has been described as a "salad bowl" and "cultural mosaic". Is it better than the melting pot? Do we need in a country only one culture, or maybe we can preserve many cultures but maintain only one set of norms, like Western democracy, ethics, innovation, tolerance? Do we allow in France to have schools financed by the state that teach in Arabic, that teach Islam, or allow only secular education for free? Two different and seemingly inconsistent strategies have developed through different government policies and strategies. The first focuses on interaction and communication between different cultures; this approach is also often known as interculturalism. The second centers on diversity and cultural uniqueness which can sometimes result in intercultural competition. Cultural isolation can protect the uniqueness of the local culture of a nation or area and also contribute to global cultural diversity. A common aspect of many policies following the second approach is that they avoid presenting any specific ethnic, religious, or cultural community values as central.

Multiculturalism centers on the thought in political philosophy about the way to respond to cultural and religious differences. It is closely associated with "identity politics," "the politics of difference," and "the politics of recognition." It is also a matter of economic interests and political power. (Stanford Encyclopedia of Philosophy). Despite the fact that multiculturalism has mainly been used as a term to define disadvantaged groups, including African Americans, gays and lesbians, and the disabled, many theorists tend to focus their arguments on immigrants who are ethnic and religious minorities, minority nations, and indigenous peoples. Multiculturalism can refer to a demographic fact, a particular set of philosophical ideas, or a specific orientation by government or institutions toward a diverse population. Most of the debate over multiculturalism centers around whether or not public multiculturalism is the appropriate way to deal with diversity and immigrant integration. Recognition in the context of multicultural education is a demand not just for recognition of aspects of a group's actual culture but also for the history of group subordination and its entire experience. The term multiculturalism is most often used in reference to Western nation-states, which had seemingly achieved a de facto single national identity during the 18th and/or 19th centuries. Multiculturalism has been official policy in several Western nations since the 1970s, for reasons that varied from country to country, including the fact that many of the great cities of the Western world are increasingly made of a mosaic of cultures.

The Canadian government has often been described as the instigator of multicultural ideology because of its public emphasis on the social importance of immigration. The Canadian Royal Commission on Bilingualism and Biculturalism is often referred to as the origins of modern political awareness of multiculturalism. In the Western English-speaking countries, multiculturalism as an official national policy started in Canada in 1971, followed by Australia in 1973 where it is maintained today. It was quickly adopted as official policy by most member-states of the European Union. Recently, right-of-center governments in several European states—notably the Netherlands and Denmark— have reversed the national policy and returned to an official monoculturalism. A similar reversal is the subject of debate in the United Kingdom, among others, due to evidence of incipient segregation and anxieties over "home-grown" terrorism. Several heads-of-state have expressed doubts about the success of multicultural policies: The United Kingdom's Prime Minister David Cameron, German Chancellor Angela Merkel, Australia's ex-prime minister John Howard, Spanish ex-prime minister Jose Maria Aznar and French ex-president Nicolas Sarkozy have voiced concerns about the effectiveness of their multicultural policies for integrating immigrants. Many nation-states in Africa, Asia, and the Americas are culturally diverse, and are 'multicultural' in a descriptive sense. In some, communalism is a major political issue. The policies adopted by these states often have parallels with multicultural policies in the Western world, but the historical background is different, and the goal may be a mono-cultural or mono-ethnic nation-building - for instance in the Malaysian government's attempt to create a 'Malaysian race' by 2020.

The European Union is facing unprecedented demographic changes (an ageing population, low birth rates, changing family structures and migration). According to the European Commission, it is important, both at EU and national level, to review and adapt existing policies. Following a public debate, a 2006 EU policy paper identified five key policy responses to manage demographic change, among them receiving and integrating migrants into Europe. Historically, Europe has always been a mixture of Latin, Slavic, Germanic, Uralic, Celtic, Hellenic, Illyrian, Thracian and other cultures influenced by the importation of Hebraic, Christian, Muslim and other belief systems; although the continent was supposedly unified by the super-position of Imperial Roman Christianity, it is accepted that geographic and cultural differences continued from antiquity into the modern age. In the 19th century, the ideology of nationalism transformed the way Europeans thought about the state. Existing states were broken up and new ones created; the new nation-states were founded on the principle that each nation is entitled to its own sovereignty and to engender, protect, and preserve its own unique culture and history. Unity, under this ideology, is seen as an essential feature of the nation and the nation-state—unity of descent, unity of culture, unity of language, and often unity of religion. The nation-state constitutes a culturally homogeneous society, although some national movements recognized regional differences.

Where cultural unity was insufficient, it was encouraged and enforced by the state. The 19th-century nation-states developed an array of policies—the most important was compulsory primary education in the national language. The language itself was often standardized by a linguistic academy, and regional languages were ignored or suppressed. Some nation-states pursued violent policies of cultural assimilation and even ethnic cleansing. Some European Union countries have introduced policies for "social cohesion", "integration", and (sometimes) "assimilation". The policies include:

- compulsory courses and/or tests on national history, on the constitution and the legal system (e.g., the computer-based test for individuals seeking naturalization in the UK named Life in the United Kingdom test)

- introduction of an official national history, such as the national canon defined for the Netherlands by the van Oostrom Commission, and promotion of that history (e.g., by exhibitions about national heroes)
- tests designed to elicit "unacceptable" values. In Baden-Württemberg immigrants are asked what they would do if their son says he is a homosexual (the desired answer is that they would accept it).

Other countries have instituted policies which encourage cultural separation. The concept of "Cultural exception" proposed by France in the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT) negotiations in 1993 was an example of a measure aimed at protecting local cultures. Multiculturalism is seen by its supporters as a fairer system that allows people to truly express who they are within a society, that is more tolerant and that adapts better to social issues. They argue that culture is not one definable thing based on one race or religion, but rather the result of multiple factors that change as the world changes. Historically, support for modern multiculturalism stems from the changes in Western societies after World War II, in what Susanne Wessendorf calls the "human rights revolution", in which the horrors of institutionalized racism and ethnic cleansing became almost impossible to ignore in the wake of the Holocaust; with the collapse of the European colonial system, as colonized nations in Africa and Asia successfully fought for their independence and pointed out the discriminatory underpinnings of the colonial system; and, in the United States in particular, with the rise of the Civil Rights Movement, which criticized ideals of assimilation that often led to prejudices against those who did not act according to Anglo-American standards and which led to the development of academic ethnic studies programs as a way to counteract the neglect of contributions by racial minorities in classrooms. As this history shows, multiculturalism in Western countries was seen as a useful set of strategies to combat racism, to protect minority communities of all types, and to undo policies that had prevented minorities from having full access to the opportunities for freedom and equality promised by the liberalism that has been the hallmark of Western societies since the Age of Enlightenment. The contact hypothesis in sociology is a well documented phenomenon in which cooperative interactions with those from a different group than one's own reduce prejudice and inter-group hostility.

C. James Trotman argues that multiculturalism is valuable because it "uses several disciplines to highlight neglected aspects of our social history, particularly the histories of women and minorities [...and] promotes respect for the dignity of the lives and voices of the forgotten. By closing gaps, by raising consciousness about the past, multiculturalism tries to restore a sense of wholeness in a postmodern era that fragments human life and thought." Critics of multiculturalism often debate whether the multicultural ideal of benignly co-existing cultures that interrelate and influence one another, and yet remain distinct, is sustainable, paradoxical, or even desirable. It is argued that nation states, who would previously have been synonymous with a distinctive cultural identity of their own, lose out to enforced multiculturalism and that this ultimately erodes the host nations' distinct culture. Trying to protect a certain culture may privilege some version of it, which hinders adjustment to changing environment. Philosopher Jeremy Waldron also rejects that the options of an individual should depend on the individual's culture. Protecting a group may allow its powerful members undermine the liberties of its weaker members, such as dissenters, women, children and sexual minorities. Many feminists have argued that special protection of patriarchal cultural communities may violate women's rights. Harvard professor of political science Robert D. Putnam conducted a nearly decade-long study on how multiculturalism affects social trust. He surveyed 26,200 people in 40 American communities, finding that when the data were adjusted for class, income and other factors, the more racially diverse a community is, the greater the loss of trust. People in diverse communities

"don't trust the local mayor, they don't trust the local paper, they don't trust other people and they don't trust institutions," writes Putnam. In the presence of such ethnic diversity, Putnam maintains that "[W]e hunker down. We act like turtles. The effect of diversity is worse than had been imagined. And it's not just that we don't trust people who are not like us. In diverse communities, we don't trust people who do look like us.

7.8 CORY'S PHILOSOPHICAL INSIGHT ON THE WAY OF THE WORLD

I would like to present here a philosophical insight on The Way of the World, which makes me wonder if there is not a huge conspiracy to keep us away from the most important issues, threats, and dangers, while focusing on the minor issues. When I read the newspapers or I listen to radio and watch TV, one can get the impression that the most important issue is whether the wife of a prime minister has ordered bonzo for her dog at the expense of the taxpayer, whether a president cheats his mistress with a younger actress, whether another president was born in Hawaii or in Kenya, and if a peaceloving called the prime minister Nazi. Let me say clearly that I am against slander but in favor of freedom of speech, that the civil servants have to pay for all their personal expenses, and that nobody should be forgiven on cheating his/her spouse. But those issues should be published in page 13 of the newspaper or after 28 minutes of the TV news. The front page should deal with such issues as the privatization of the countries' minerals and banks at ridiculous valuations to rich tycoons who are friends and contributors to the ministers and prime ministers, that a country has become the most unequal or the most corrupt of the OECD, that our city has the highest pollution and the highest cancer ratios in all the Middle East or in all the country. When you deal with lesser issues and not on the most important issues it makes you penny wise and pound foolish, and it is similar to caring of a toothache on the Judgement Day. But the media – the newspapers, TV channels and even on the Internet – belongs to the tycoons who want to divert our attention from the most burning problems. The media decides to ignore activists demonstrations, civil unrest, but if one of the demonstrators has broken the window of a shop or hit a policeman – it shows it as the beginning of a revolution and paints all the protesters as anarchists and communists. However, the blame can be attributed also to the weaker parties who paint all the hawks as murderers if one of them has murdered a prime minister, and all the army as war criminals if a soldier has hit a prisoner. Instead of trying to convince the hawks or the Republicans or the Nationalists that they are wrong and show them why, they prefer to paint them as criminals or morrons or primitives and lose by that the chance to win the elections. Each side is motivated by emotions or cool calculation and thus diverts us from the important issues.

I often wonder why (and I can't blame the tycoons for it) the environmentalists cry havoc when a building project for poor workers is detrimental to the birds' migration and don't take into consideration also the welfare of the underprivileged. But their mission is the environment and not social issues, so let the social workers deal on those issues. I started my involvement with ethics by writing for the first time in the world a PhD dissertation and academic books on ethics to the minority shareholders. But soon enough I learned that this issue is linked with corporate governance, so I wrote books and rules on corporate governance, then on other business ethics issues, then on corporate social responsibility, globalization, social, economic, ecologic, and governmental justice issues, environment and sustainability, capitalism and neoliberalism, and I saw that all those issues are interrelated and you cannot deal on one of them without referring to the others. In Israel I arrived to the conclusion that a new regime, a second republic, should be established in order to deal with all those issues. All over the world I believe that a new form of capitalism should be adopted, closer to the Scandinavian model. Let us continue with the example of the birds migration, but it can also be the safeguard of a frog species, and keeping a wood intact. Because of those problems, important but not as wider problems, you don't build a highway that would link the peripheral towns to the large city and the citizens cannot find work in the city, cannot attend the university, they die often because there is no hospital there, as it takes two hours for an ambulance to reach the city. So, what is more important – the birds, or a father who dies because he couldn't get to the hospital leaving a widow and five children with no breadwinner? And a question to the environmentalists – why do you care so much for the birds, the foxes and the snails, and you don't put all your efforts to demonstrate against the pollution of the petrochemical factories that causes every year thousands of deaths, not birds – human beings!

Well, I have against me the tycoons, the corrupted governments, the Muslim fundamentalists, now the environmentalists are going to write against me a fatwa as well. I do care for the birds and frogs and I know what damages can bring fewer species, but my point is that you have to weigh all the issues at stake, not just the environment. This is the job of the government but they don't deal with the important issues anyway, they are motivated by interests, political considerations, and the short run, and first and foremost - they have to take care of the welfare of the tycoons who finance them. So, I come back to the environmentalists, my friends, - we are in the same boat, and if the government does not do what they should do, you should be mature and responsible enough to take into consideration all the parameters – economic, social, environmental, housing, employment, peripheries, transportation, and cultural. Is it too much to ask for that? I don't think so, I have done it myself and found the harmony that takes into consideration the interest of all the stakeholders, because all of us are an interrelated structure. Are progress and humans more important than wilderness and beasts? Which ones should be taken into consideration and what are the right proportions? Do you have to choose between the welfare of the birds and the impact that a damage on the welfare of the birds could cause to humanity? I appreciate much more a mother (and a father) who takes care of her children, educate them, provide for them everything that they need (and Ruthy is my model) than a mother who devotes most of her free time to help sick people in hospitals or young girls who are abused, neglecting her children, their education, and their health. Charity begins at home – it is my motto, it is not selfishness, as I believe that there should be governmental organizations that take care of sick people and abused girls, and that is why I pay so much taxes, but if the neoliberal government has murdered the welfare state it is not my responsibility to remedy it and establish thousands of NGOs replacing the governments. I devote my time to change the system and not fight a specific case of corruption, starvation, abuse or sickness, because we should deal on the most important issues, otherwise we fall into the pit that the corrupt governments want us to fall into, we deal in micro instead of dealing in macro. Lenin was right when he said that the worse it gets the sooner we'll find a solution. If we establish thousands of NGOs we find an interim and unsatisfactory solution but we postpone the Judgement Day of the system. This is true with charity to the needies and is also true with macro economy, as is the case of lowering the interest rate to zero in order to make artificial respiration to the economy and thus postponing a drastic solution to a crisis that will occur once again within a few years and this time will be fatal to all.

7.9 – JEWS AND ISRAEL ARE TODAY AS IN THE PAST THE USUAL SCAPEGOATS

And let us not forget the policies of finding scapegoats and divide et impera. It is amazing how those policies worked thousands of years ago and are still effective nowadays. The Jews (and today – Israel) are the most common scapegoats in the Black Death plague, the Dreyfus affair, the Nazi propaganda, the United Nations, the Palestinian leaders, the Muslim fundamentalists. When young Palestinian boys and girls are taught that on their way to school they should stab women, old people, children - why? Because they are Jewish. When millions of Germans were brainwashed that Jews were the cause of all their troubles and therefore should be exterminated. When leaders of friendly nations maintain that all the problems of the Middle East are caused by Israel and the frustration of the Palestinians – 9/11 in the US, 13/11 in Paris, aggregate millions of deaths in Algeria, Syria, Libya, Yemen, Iraq, Lebanon, Afghanistan, because of the killing of one or four children in Gaza, because of the "blockade" of Gaza, the "Wall" in the West Bank, the checkpoints, the Jewish terrorists who have killed since Israel was established less than a hundred victims, because of the use of "excessive" force by Israel – meaning that you should politely ask a Palestinian trying to stab you if he could stop it por favor and not kill him right away (and those who give us such friendly suggestions kill much more innocent civilians in their wars), murders of Jews because they are Jews in Argentina, Toulouse, Paris, Turkey, Germany. The Jews and Israel are the "usual suspects" and not the criminal fundamentalists, terrorist leaders who incite murders and deny the Holocaust, who are nice people according to some foreign ministers in a country that is afraid to deal with the fundamentalist Islam in its cities.

There are some Israelis who are on the side of these foreign ministers, prime ministers, presidents, leaders, professors, intellectuals, priests, and other persons who blame Israel and favor the Hamas, Abu Mazen "the nice guy", the terrorist and Holocaust denier, and part of the Palestinians who want to annihilate Israel with terror, incitement, boycott, or with the Right of Return. All of them should be reminded of the saying "Tell me who your friends are and I'll tell you who you are", do you want to be associated by history with those terrorists, you, the leaders of the most advanced countries in the world, of the most peaceful countries in the world, of the most cultural countries of the world, you want to associate with them instead of being associated with Israel, Jews and Israelis who contributed so much to the world, think what was the contribution of each side to the world and make the right decision! This antagonism between Jews, Christians and Muslims is a tragedy as there should be cooperation between the believers in those three glorious religions, preconized by the Pope, Israeli Chief Rabbis, and a few brave Muslim Imams. We should not put this dilemma as an either or equation, but as a this and this and this equation. It was so in the past, when the Muslims contributed extensively to the World culture in Spain, in the Ottoman Empire, in the Islamic world, in pre-1952 Egypt, in Lebanon, and of course the Persian/Iranian culture – one of the oldest and most glorious cultures in the world – in astronomy, medicine, science, mathematics, art, literature, especially in poetry, architecture, films... - in cooperation with Jews and Christians, as there is no difference in the potential of the believers in those three religions, only in their state of mind. The Christians knew also dark ages in the Middle Ages, in periods of fanaticism, of Inquisition, in World War II, colonialism, but they overcame those dark ages and have become the most advanced people in the world. The Jews started their Golden Age since the end of the 18th century, although in the Middle Ages in Spain and Germany they had also periods of positive effervescence, not forgetting of course the glorious periods of the Bible. Fundamentalism is the enemy of progress in all three religions as we have learned in the past, and it is a pity that in a period when Christians and Jews have liberated themselves from the vestiges of fundamentalism, many Muslims are becoming more and more fundamentalists and invest all their energies in terrorism, religion wars, hatred to Chritians, Jews, and Muslims who are not fundamentalists as they are, Sunnis as they are, Shiites as they are. Instead of contributing to the world culture, economy and progress, many Muslims contribute to fanaticism, war and terror, or build golden palaces instead of solving once and for all the problems of the refugees. The change of attitude has to come from the Muslims, giving equal rights to all and especially to women, sending their children to universities and not to become Shahids, hoping that in Heaven they would devote their time to purification and not to rape 72 virgins like they rape thousands of Christian/Yazidi women in the Islamic State. A new era has to begin to enlarge the existing cooperation between Christians Catholic/Protestant/Orthodox, Jews, with Muslims too, liberal minded and not fanatics, progressive and not retrograde, wanting to live well and not to die!

I learned in my BA studies Political Sciences and especially Europe between the two world wars, I read also dozens of books on those issues, and I see a direct analogy between the permissive and forgiving attitude towards fundamentalist Islam and terrorist Palestinian leaders and the attitude towards Herr Hitler who was also very nice, you have to understand his problems, put yourself in his situation, maybe the Jews are really guilty as there is no smoke without fire, look how he strokes young girls who give him flowers, look what a nice smile he has, he is really a very nice man, and Abu Mazen is also a very nice man, they are all honorable men, and let them kill Jews who are natural scapegoats while they leave us in peace, let Hitler have Austria, Czechoslovakia, Poland, USSR, Norway, Denmark, Netherlands, Belgium, France, Greece, Yugoslavia... as long as he leaves us in peace, as he is really a very nice man, we saw the films on the concentration camps that prove that they are convalescence camps, we don't believe the exaggerate news on the Jewish casualties, we even ban the libellous film of Charlie Chaplin "The Great Dictator" because he criticizes the leader of a friendly nation. Don't make waves, maybe the storm will evaporate and not hit us, maybe if we don't interfere in the content of the Madrasahs at the Mosques, if we don't arrest potential terrorists, if we don't send policemen to Muslim neighborhoods, they'll not kill us, they'll just continue to kill Jews, don't make waves Herr Hitler, don't make waves fundamentalist Muslims, we'll find a peaceful solution, we'll continue to blame Israel for using excessive force when thousands Israeli civilians are being murdered by Islamic terrorists since 2000, why can't those Jews behave like their grandfathers in the Holocaust who went peacefully to the gas chambers, they are causing all the problems in the world, who needs Israel anyhow, let us boycott it, boycott their products until they let five million Palestinian so-called refugees return to their homeland, where they never lived, but not Heaven forbids let the German, Greek or Hindu refugees return to their homeland, the poor Palestinian refugees living for 70 years in camps, while all the other refugees including much more Jewish refugees from Arab countries (as me and my family) have been integrated in their new countries within a few years. All these are based only on one ground – anti-Semitism...

7.10 DIVIDE ET IMPERA, PERSECUTION OF CHRISTIANS BY MUSLIMS, WHO MAKES ETHNIC CLEANSING – MUSLIMS OR JEWS?

And there is Divide et Impera – it happened in India between the Hindus and the Muslims, it happened in Palestine between the Jews and the Arabs. It happened in Lebanon between the Shiites and the Sunnis, the Christians and the Druzes. It happened in Iraq between the Kurds, the Christians, the Shiites and the Sunnis. It happens in all Africa – in Rwanda between the Tutsi and the Hutu, in Congo, in Nigeria, in so many African countries between Christians and Muslims, and between the different tribes. It is amazing how most of the 50 countries that persecute Christians are Muslims, according to "Open Doors – serving persecuted Christians worldwide", while the world, the UN, the peacelovings, the Human Rights organizations, Abu Mazen/Mahmoud Abbas who does not miss any opportunity to incite against Israel with notorious lies, even Israeli and Jews self-haters, accuse Israel and the Jews of persecuting Christians, never mind that Israel is not at all in this list, and preserves the rights of Christians much more than most of the non-Christian countries. Persecution of Christians by Muslims throughout the Middle East is severe and has been progressively increasing in intensity. In the early 20th century, Christians accounted for about 20% of the Middle East population. At present, this figure is estimated at around 4%. A few among many more examples of persecution and discrimination of Christians in the Palestinian territories illustrate their varied nature: In 4/2013, the Christian Holy Family School in Gaza was set on fire. Several months later, in June, five Christian schools in Gaza were closed after a Hamas government order that prohibited mixed-gender schooling. Nominally, the regulation concerned all schools in Gaza, yet the five Christian schools were the only such co-ed schools there. The Christian minority in Gaza is tiny and consists of between one and two thousand individuals. According to the Greek Orthodox Church in Gaza, 5 Christians were kidnapped in 7/2012 and forced to convert to Islam. In a press release, the Church stated that the police refused to intervene as Salam Salameh, a Hamas member of the Palestinian Parliament, headed the organization that was responsible for the conversion.

Palestinian Authority President Mahmoud Abbas issued a Christmas 2015 message in which he suggested Israel persecutes Christians and claimed Jesus was a “Palestinian messenger.” Despite the confrontational tone of his message, he maintains he is committed to negotiations with Israel. This is the summum of hypocrisy – Abbas who denies the Holocaust, who incites his youngsters to kill Jews, maintains that he wants peace, without mentioning to the innocent Europeans and Israelis who still believe him that “his peace” entails the right of return of five million refugees to Israel, thus making Israel another Palestinian state with an Arab majority, a land connection to Gaza that will cut Israel in two, division of Jerusalem in two cities like in Nicosia and formerly in Berlin, and he denies recognition of Israel as a Jewish state. Abbas was critical of Israel, saying: “this Christmas Eve, our hearts and prayers will be with the millions who are being denied their right to worship in their homeland”, another lie - as Muslims and Christians can worship in their mosques and churches without any impediment. Only the Jews cannot worship in their holiest place as the Israeli authorities deny them this right in order to prevent friction with the Muslims. And Abbas continues with his lies: “We are thinking of our people in Gaza, trapped under siege, and of those who are prevented from worshipping in Bethlehem”. He probably forgets that the Hamas/Gaza is a terrorist organization that persecutes and kills Christians, as well as Fatah members, and that the only reason that Abbas cooperates with Israelis is that otherwise Hamas would have conquered the West Bank as it did in Gaza. The only reason for the so-called siege of Gaza is to prevent them to receive thousands of rockets in addition to the thousands that they have launched against Israel after Israel has withdrawn from Gaza. And Abbas continues with his mantra about the refugees, because he knows that it appeals to peacelovings in Europe and Israel, although the Palestinian refugees are the only ones in the world who did not settle in their new countries, like the Germans, the Turks, the Indians, and the Oriental Jews: “Our hearts and prayers are with the people of Al Dbayeh Refugee Camp in Beirut, along with all of our Palestinian refugees — Christians and Muslims uprooted from their hometowns in 1948 and who, since that time, have suffered the vicissitudes of a forced exile.”

Abbas went on to express solidarity with his Christian constituents, claiming, “Christians are not a minority here, they are an integral part of the Palestinian people. Orthodox, Catholics, Armenians, Assyrians, Lutherans, Anglicans, Copts, Melkites, Protestants and others are all part of the rich mosaic of this free, sovereign, democratic and pluralistic Palestine we aspire to have and as established in our declaration of independence and draft constitution.” As heart-warming as such a description may be, it flies in the face of reality, as Christian populations throughout Muslim-controlled areas across the Middle East dwindle. Israel is the only country in the region whose Christian population is growing. In Bethlehem, birthplace of Jesus, where Christians used to make up the majority, they are now in the minority. Israeli officials scoffed at Abbas’ comments. Foreign Ministry spokesman Yigal Palmor told The Times of Israel, “He should have read the Gospel before uttering such offensive nonsense, but we will forgive him because he doesn’t know what he’s doing.” He referred to Abbas’ statement as an “outrageous rewriting of Christian history.” He called Abbas’ harsh words, “not exactly in the spirit of Christmas,” and joked, “Maybe he needs a hug from Santa?” Another Israeli official took offense to Abbas’ implication that Israeli policy is responsible for the mass Christian departure from the Holy Land. “The exodus of Christians from Bethlehem turned into a flood the moment the PA took control,” the official said. Abbas claims also that Israel practitions ethnic cleansing. After having visited several times the Balkans, and seen there the atrocities of ethnic cleansing, it is sheer nonsense to maintain that Israel practitions ethnic cleansing. Yet the innocent Europeans and Israelis who believe the lies of Abbas and accuse Israel of everything, swallow this lie as the other lies. Abbas claims that the Israelis are responsible of massive destruction of Arab houses in Jerusalem, uprooting their original inhabitants. While it is true that the Jerusalem Municipality occasionally demolishes a few Arab homes, it does so because those structure were built without proper permits. The reality is that Jerusalem only demolishes a small fraction of the illegally-built houses for fear of international backlash, and that many local Arabs are getting away with breaking the law simply because of their ethnicity. Abbas continued by regurgitating the conspiracy theory that Israel is targeting the Al-Aqsa Mosque that sits atop the Temple Mount and that it is "trying to make Muslims and Christians flee the city by imposing heavy taxes, a policy which can only be called ethnic cleansing." The tax rates on Muslims, Christians and Jews in Israel are the same, in spite of the allegations of apartheid, so here again is another lie.

The truth is that since Israel took control of the eastern half of Jerusalem in 1967, the local Arab population has grown by an amazing 257 percent, far faster than the growth rate of the city's Jewish population at 140 percent. Even in recent years, which is presumably what Abbas was focusing on, the Arab population's growth rate has far outstripped the Jewish growth rate. For instance, in 2009 there were approximately 285,000 Arabs living in Jerusalem. A year later, that number had grown to over 293,000. Officials speculated that by 2035, Arabs would constitute 50 percent of the city's population. (Numbers provided by the Central Bureau of Statistics). Again, if Israel is what Abbas says it is, then it is the most incompetent ethnic-cleanser in history, and Jerusalem's Arabs have little to fear. But that won't stop Abbas, who knows well by this point that the international media laps up negative accusations made by himself and others of Israel's antagonists with little or no reservation. Back to the World Watch List: Somalia is no. 2 in the list with a score of 90% extreme persecution of Christians, Iraq is no. 3 with 86%, 4. Syria – 83%, 5. Afghanistan – 81%, 6. Sudan – 80%, 7. Iran – 80%, 8. Pakistan – 79%, 10. Nigeria – 78%, 12. Saudi Arabia – 77%, 13. Libya – 76%, 14. Yemen – 76%, 18. Qatar – 64%, 23. Egypt – 61%, 26. Palestinian Territories – 58%, 30. Jordan – 56%, 33. Tanzania – 56%, 34. Algeria – 55%, 36. Tunisia – 55%, 37. Malaysia – 55%, 39. Oman – 55%, 40. Mali – 52%, 41. Turkey – 52%, 43. Bangladesh – 51%, 47. Indonesia – 50%, 48. Mauritania – 50%. 49. UAE – 49%, 50. Kuwait – 49%. Israel does not appear in this notorious list, but Palestine both Hamas Gaza and PLO Mahmud Abbas West Bank appears there with a very high rate of persecution – 58%. In the list we can find many more Muslim states, but also North Korea, no. 1 with 92%, Vietnam no. 16 with 68%, 21. India – 62%, 25. Myanmar – 60%, 29. China – 57%, and other African and Asian countries, most of them are not democratic, but the absolute majority are Muslim countries.

7. 11 A FEW QUESTIONS TO THE CHRISTIANS WHO BLAME ISRAEL

And a few questions to the Christian countries – especially Ireland, Scandinavia, Spain, UK, and France, to the Christian presidents in the US and Europe, prime ministers in France et al, foreign ministers in Sweden et al, human rights organizations, peacelovings, the United Nations and its organizations, Christian priests and bishops, Christian media, and all the Christian citizens who resent from the persecution of other Christians: If almost all the countries and people who persecute Christians are Muslims – not only fundamentalists, millions of Muslims, why don't you denounce it overtly, why do you denounce terrorism but are afraid to say Islamic Fundamentalist Terrorism, how will you be able to counter the terrorism and persecution if you don't denounce specifically those who commit it? Do you think that by doing that they will spare you, they will not kill your citizens, they will not persecute your brothers? You can of course restrict your blame to the extremists/fundamentalists Muslims, but if you don't recognize the fact that almost all the terrorists are Muslims, and most of the Christian persecutors are Muslims, you are perpetuating the terrorism and persecution, and you will be blamed by history that you did not cope effectively with the worst threat ever to humankind, you will be remembered like Chamberlain and all those who treated mildly Nazism's threat - that caused tens of millions of casualties. Islamic fundamentalist terror could cause hundreds of million of casualties, do you want to be responsible for that? Or is it simply because you have millions of Muslim citizens in your countries and you don't want to lose their votes? Are you willing to put in jeopardy the security of your nations uniquely because you want to be elected once more?

And finally, why are many of you accusing Jews and Israel for all the problems on earth – while they don't persecute Christians, they are not terrorists, they are the only ones who fight bravely against Islamic terror, this is more than anti-Semitism, it is pure nonsense. You give by denouncing wrongly Israel and the Jews a license to kill to all the Islamic Fundamentalist murderers, to kill with immunity, as the blame is put on the wrong people, on the wrong country, while the criminals act overtly. ISIS admits openly that they want to conquer Europe, and so are many Imams, countries and organizations, not 0.1% of Muslims as a friendly president said, but hundreds of thousands who are terrorists, and millions or more who support them, finance them, and give them asylum. Are you making a cinic calculation that counts the large number of Muslims in your countries, the violence of their reactions against any opposition and caricatures, in comparison to the small number of Jews and their mild reactions against anti-Semitic articles, speeches, incitements at Universities, in newspapers, TV and films? Jews will not murder you if you blame them wrongly of crimes that they have never committed but if you publish a caricature of Muhammad you are slaughtered in Paris, so it is safer to blame the Jews and Israelis on all the crimes on earth instead of blaming those who really commit the crimes. It reminds me of the famous fable by La Fontaine – The Animals Sick of the Plague, who find the ass responsible of the plague not because he was guilty but because he was the weakest: "Thus human courts acquit the strong, And doom the weak, as therefore wrong." It is safer not to blame the Muslim terrorism that are responsible of 9/11, 13/11, and thousands of atrocious murders, but instead to blame Israel's aggression, that never killed even one American or European, and if they killed Arabs it was only as a reaction to their terrorism and wars. Hugo has pointed the finger at the criminals but had to leave France, as also did Zola after writing his famous article "J'accuse". Churchill was not afraid to denounce Nazism long before World War II. Brave Muslim leaders dare oppose extremism and are put to jail or murdered, and even if they do so in France they have to receive protection of the police to protect them from their extremist murderous fellow Muslims. Are the politicians and journalists condemning Israel and the Jews, who have contributed so much to humanity, instead of Muslim fundamentalism (what was their contribution – terror, wars?) because they are afraid, because they receive generous contributions from Muslims, because there are more Muslim inhabitants in their country and more Muslim countries, some of them very rich and with huge reserves of oil, and markets in the world? If you want to be remembered by history as the leaders who saved the world, as Churchill, or FDR, now is the time to act against those terrorists and call them by their names, now is the time to back Israel and the Jews who are your allies, who almost never persecuted Christians or were terrorists, who are being slaughtered day and night by those fundamentalists while you don't condemn them overtly, who attack today the Jews, like Hitler and Nazis started with Jews in the thirties, but tomorrow will attack even more fiercely the Christians, the Japanese, the Hindus, and all humanity who is striving for progress, culture, peace and life.

7.12 DIVIDE ET IMPERA IN ISRAEL, RIGHT OF RETURN OF JEWS OUT OF ISRAEL, ALL SEGMENTS OF ISRAEL SHOULD JOIN FORCES

Divide et Impera? I would not call the cultural/linguistic conflicts in Belgium, Switzerland, Canada described at length in this book as divide et impera, but this maxim applies more to Israel. It happens in the economic, social and political conflicts of Israel between ultra-orthodox and seculars, Jews and Arabs, Orientals and Ashkenazis, right and left, hawks and doves. Who benefits from those conflicts? Are they really so important? My view is that there should be if any only one conflict of interests between the 1% who have it "all" and the 99% who have it less and less and have reached the level of the roaring twenties, heading down to the Victorian inequality and Dickens poverty. All the others are exploited by those 1% who mostly don't create anything, just owning assets, that is why I preconize in my books and Second Republic movement an alliance between all the factions of the 99%. I don't see any problem between the hawks and the doves – the Palestinians will kill any peace proposals as they have proved since 1947 and as they refused the Clinton, Barak and Olmert proposals. If we withdraw from all the West Bank they'll demand a connection to Gaza dividing Israel in two. If we'll agree to that they'll demand the right of return to 5 million "refugees", making Israel a de facto Palestine.

If we agree to that they'll demand that all those who were not in Palestine in 1948 will be repatriated with their children and grandchildren to their homelands: In Poland, where Poles will be delighted to receive so many of us as they were delighted to receive the few Holocaust survivors (the Kielce Pogrom) and retribute to them all their properties. In Egypt – the Egyptian parliament as I've stated in this book declined such an eventuality (we say in Yiddish – Moyhel Toyves – I don't need your help). In Iraq, Syria, Lebanon, Libya, and Yemen – we'll be delighted to participate in all the civil wars there, we'll have to decide whom to rally – the Sunnis, Shiites, Kurds, Druzes or Christians. In Russia and Ukraine, the Jews fought so hard to escape from there that they would not return there at any cost. In Romania – first of all they'll have to find the birth certificate of my wife that they are searching for a few years. In France – the Muslim French who some of them persecute so many Jews, occasionally murdering them, and often harrassing the religious Jews, will be delighted. The same applies to Belgium. I wonder what will be the attitude of the Scandinavian countries if they will have to receive so many Jews. I saw a few days ago a debate in the Swedish parliament, where a Jewish MP (probably the only Jewish MP) answered the allegations of the Swedish Foreign Minister calling her a liar or an ignorant in front of an empty hall. I sent it to all my Scandinavian friends and have not received any answer. So, who'll receive us? Maybe Germany who is very hospitable to more than a hundred thousands Jewish refugees most of them from Russia, but how will the German Muslims who outnumber by millions the number of Jews will receive us? Last time that I was in Berlin I saw a demonstration of thousands Muslims calling to kill Israelis. What about Spain and Portugal? Since 1932 Spain has laws that enable Sephardic Jews to return to Spain after the expulsion of 1492. But the conditions are so difficult to comply that only a few have succeeded in receiving the Spanish nationality. It goes without saying that Switzerland will say "the boat is full", like they said during World War II, and if somebody will raise an objection they'll answer: "have you Israelis agreed to take tens of thousands of African refugees? So don't patronize us". Ultimately, we'll have to resort to our Anglo-Saxon friends who integrated with great success millions of Jews, mainly the US, but also Australia and Canada. There, we'll be relatively safe as all the terrorist attacks until now by fundamentalist Muslims were aimed against Americans without any discrimination of race and color, they kill by the thousands with airplanes and riffles and are not racists, as everything goes in their murders – WASP, Catholics, Afro-Americans, Jews, Mexicans, other Latin Americans, Asians, even Muslims, as the American Muslims are not religious enough anyhow. The Doves dream of a peace agreement, but it is fata morgana, as the Palestinian leaders will never agree to any peace with Israel, they never recognized us as a Jewish State (remember the farce of "caduc" by Arafat and the tragic fate of the Oslo agreements ending in a blodd bath of more than a thousand Israelis), so really the conflict between doves and hawks benefit only one group: the neoliberal Likud party obliging the tycoons with all our assets.

There should be no conflict either between seculars and ultra-orthodox Jews. If we solve the conflict on the assets of our country and get back the privatized assets, we'll have hundreds of billions dollars distributed generously to the tycoons (only the Gas Roadmap can add to Israeli GDP tens of billions dollars), so there will be no need to a conscription army and we'll have an army like in the US where the soldiers will receive high salaries. The orthodox will not have to go to the army, they will be able to join the workforce or will continue to study as we'll have so much money that they could do whatever they like. Most of the seculars will go sooner to the university or join the workforce as they'll not serve for three years in the army, and this also will add billions to our GDP. We'll not have problems with the Israeli Arabs who complain that they don't receive enough budgets, as there will be so much money that we'll be able to oblige the Arabs and the Jews equally and we'll not have to decide on larger or smaller amounts for education and infrastructure to Arabs and Jews. If there is a problem of inequality it is only in those issues, as in health, welfare, and many other issues there is no inequality. The same applies to the problems between the Orientals and the Ashkenazis, as the gaps are narrowing anyhow, and with all those billions will disappear. There will not be any problem with the settlements either, as if the peace agreement that I stipulate will be achieved they'll be an integral part of Israel (and the Palestinians will be citizens of the Jordan-Palestine kingdom), and will receive equal allocations to all the other citizens. The gaps between the different segments of the population will narrow to Scandinavian levels (like in Norway where they know what to do with the Gas and how to distribute it for the benefit of the population and not of the tycoons), and there will be no more excessive poverty in Israel. All what I have written about the neoliberal economy of Israel applies also to the US and to all the other countries where the divide et impera is beneficiary only to the tycoons. The 99% in the US comprise Afro-Americans, Hispanics, Whites, Jews, Protestants and Catholics, gays and straights, men and women, all of them are exploited by the 1% who have it all, and if the US will have an economic regime as the Scandinavians they'll have the same excellent achievements in all the parameters of quality of life, health, education, safety, infrastructure, culture, poverty, social progress, equality, ethics...

7.13 FOCUS ON THE MOST IMPORTANT ISSUES IN PRIVATE/PUBLIC LIFE

In a word, we have to focus on the most important issues in all fields. I am doing it since I was a kid, being efficient and focusing, and achieving excellent results at work, at school, and even in my readings and writing of books. Otherwise I would not have achieved so much, read so much, and wrote so much. If I would have squander my efforts, if I was not focused, if I would have employed my time to see idiotic programs on TV, or write SMS and Facebook posts, or reading them from so many "friends", I would not have achieved anything worthy, nor received my PhD, nor taught so many students, written so many books, nor succeeded to be an excellent manager with a clean table, not even seeing so many plays and visiting so many museums in my trips abroad or in Israel. One should be able to focus on the most important issues in private life and in public life, and the same applies for the populations and countries. That is how the US and UK won the Second World War, that is how the most successful companies excel, and the best countries prosper. Stick to the knitting, specialize in what you know, do your utmost for the most important issues. You can devote part of your time to trifles, but only in your excess time, while 90% of your time should be devoted to the most important issues efficiently. This is also how I manage to write this book while everyday I have another idea how to improve it and I don't know when I'll be able to finish it. But I know that sooner or later I'll decide that this is it, and will stop improving my book, as the enemy of the very good is the excellent, which is never achieved in a lifetime, so I'd rather be approximately right than precisely wrong, or write a very good book instead of not finishing an excellent book. So, this is how I perceive harmony in all fields of life, with all individuals, companies, organizations and countries. This is my life philosophy which helped me overcome all my problems, and prosper and succeed in life.

Actually, I am torn between pessimism and optimism. In the world there is the fundamentalist Islam's threat that if the European and American governments and the moderate Muslim leaders in those countries will not take preemptive measures against them could sweep the youngsters, millions of them, as we see from surveys and more and more terrorist events. Police is afraid to enter the Muslim neighborhoods and the governments would have to request allegiance of all the refugees to their new countries and norms – not only social benefits and jobs – but also preventing the population from backing subversive organizations, boycotting the countries and organizations who back terror providing them weapons and funds, including Iran and extremist Arab states, and imprisoning all the Imams who favor terror and civil unrest. But I am also very pessimist about the economic regimes of neoliberal countries and the huge gaps that are not narrowing but expanding, the 1% who have it all, and the 99% who have less and less. As the governments don't do anything to prevent the next recessions, being afraid to annoy the tycoons who finance their parties and parliament members, and as the derivatives which are not controlled amount now to hundreds of trillions dollars, the next crisis which may happen soon even before 2020 will be a "doomsday depression" ruining all the Western economies because at such orders of magnitude, far beyond the GDP of the rich nations, no measures will be effective, especially not the ridiculous and harmful reduction of interest rates to 0%. Because of those two threats the extreme right parties become more and more predominant, which is another threat that might destroy democracy, cause civil unrest with the huge Muslim populations of the West, even the moderate ones, destroy the European Union, bringing us back to isolation and anti-globalization. So, what will happen first – probably the three threats might occur together soon.

In Israel I am very pessimistic too. With innocent civilians being killed every day from terrorists, we see that the policies of the hawks have failed. The hawks blame the Israeli Arabs when only a few of them have resorted to terrorism, while the doves blame the hawks of the Jewish terrorism and the murder of Rabin while only a few of them have resorted to terrorism. Almost all terrorism comes from the Palestinian territories – the murderous regimes of Hamas and the PLO. But it is convenient to blame the hawks, the doves, the Israeli Arabs, the peacelovings, the warmongers, divide et impera. Israel is ruled by the Likud and its offsprings since 1977 with only a few years of the Labour party rule, so they should be blamed for all what is happening now. All of a sudden they remember that there are too much illegal weapons in the Israeli Arab population, but that is exactly the complaint of the Arab leaders who ask the government to take drastic measures against this situation, which causes crime and vendettas between families, towards "sinful" women, and only very rarely terror. So, if this is the situation the Israeli government can blame only itself. They accuse the Europeans to be too soft towards terror and being afraid to enter Muslim neighborhoods, while the Israeli police and justice are also too lenient towards crime and civil offences in the Arab sectors but in the Jewish sectors as well. The terror will not disappear if we withdraw from all the territories as the withdrawal from Gaza, Lebanon, and most of the West Bank, the Oslo agreements (it only aggravated after them), and strong sanctions against the Palestinian, dovish and hawkish policies, have proven too well.

7.14 ISRAEL SHOULD ASSUME TOTAL RESPONSIBILITY FOR THE SITUATION

But what is even worse is that we are blamed for the situation, while we are not the aggressors. It reminds me of the story about the king who sent his servant to buy a fish. The servant returned with a fish that stank. In fury the king gave the servant a choice of three punishments: "Eat the fish, get whipped for the fish, or pay for the fish." In common with most people, the servant chose not to reach into his pocket and he decided to eat the stinking fish but after two bites the stench made him give up and he decided to get whipped for it. The pain of the lashes, however, made him stop that, too, and he cried out, "I will pay for the fish!" And so the fool ate the fish, got whipped for the fish and, in the end, had to pay for it, anyhow. Finally the servant was expelled from the city as well. This is exactly what happens now with Israel. We are accused of all the crimes in the world that we do not commit because of our policy in the occupied territories, we are the first ones to suffer from it – we are accused of Apartheid, ethnic cleansing, murdering children, we are boycotted, blamed by the universities, the media, friendly governments, unfriendly governments, the Palestinian leaders, and we do not succeed to counter all those allegations, we are blamed by definition, and ultimately we eat the stinking fish, get whipped, pay for the fish, and are expelled from everywhere. As I believe in absolute responsibility the main responsibility is with the Israeli government, as we cannot accuse indefinitely everyone of anti-Semitism, even if most of our opponents are indeed so.

In my career when I assumed total responsibility I managed to find solutions for the most intricate problems, and that is what I expect from my leaders as well. Not throw the blame on the Arabs, the European and American leaders, the Palestinians, et al, maybe "blind" followers of the Likud buy this, but I am too sober for that. I am responsible if my clients don't pay me, I am responsible if my boss blames me unjustly, I am responsible if my children are not obedient (not mine of course – others), I am even responsible if the operations that I had did not succeed – as it is irrelevant who is to blame, as the problems affect me, and I have to find a positive solution instead of spending my time to find culprits. It applies to me, it applied to my employees, and it applies most to my government. We are responsible that the Iranians might get nuclear weapons, we are responsible of the terrorist attacks, we are responsible that too many friendly nations and individuals are disgusted with us, we are responsible that Abu Mazen fools the whole world, incites his population to kill us, that he is the aggressor and is perceived as Mother Theresa, while we are the victims but are perceived as Blue Beard. And of course we are responsible of all the antagonism between the Jews and the Arabs, the seculars and the ultra-orthodox, the hawks and the doves, right and left, rich and poor, the extreme gaps, poverty, corruption and crimes. I want to clarify – we are responsible although it is not our fault, if we assume responsibility it does not mean that we assume guilt. It is like a minister assuming responsibility although he was not guilty of the mishap. Only when our leaders, and it applies also to the leaders of the world, will assume total responsibility of what happens in their countries, they will be able to find the right solutions for the most intricate problems. Charity begins at home, don't blame others, if you are poor, unsuccessful, misfit, unfaithful, unloved, despised, sick, if you have lost your money, you can only blame yourself for that, even if it is not your fault, as you must find a solution how to get out from the impass, how to climb from the pit, don't rely on God, aide toi et le ciel t'aidera - rely only on yourself, and you'll find tremendous energies how to cope with the most difficult crises once you assume full responsibility, once you stand up to fight the adverse winds.

7.15 – THE CAUSES AND SOLUTIONS TO ISRAEL'S AND THE WORLD'S MOST ACCUTE ECONOMIC PROBLEMS

I don't understand why we invest tens of billions in weapons and sophisticated aircrafts, and we do not invest billions in information/propaganda, why we divest from our minerals, from our banks and our gas, why we lower extremely the taxes for the tycoons, the rich, and the corporations, losing by that tens of billions that could have solved all the problems of poverty, gap increase, education, health, infrastructure, welfare, and equalling the proportionate budgets for the Arab and Jewish populations, we could have even solved the "refugees" problem in the West Bank as well. Why are the tycoons more important than 99% of the Israeli citizens, Jews and Arabs, is it because of bribes that they pay to ministers and prime ministers directly and indirectly, in cash envelopes, in money to the secretary, the brother, the lawyer of the politicians (everybody knows that this is bribe, except our Supreme Court judges), to the party, to the welfare organizations that they support, money in Israel, in Switzerland, in tax heavens, positions in the tycoons' companies rewarded by the millions, a moment after the politician and the civil servant who have accommodated the tycoons have retired? In France people are killed by terrorists, not thousands like in Israel since 2000 but a few hundreds, but they have a welfare state, they are not blamed and ostracized as Israel, they have tens of millions of tourists. Similar considerations and even better ones apply also to Germany, UK, US, Canada and Australia, so how can we stop the hundreds of thousands of Israelis who have relocated to America or Europe? You have to give your youth hope – what hope have given the left and right governments of Israel in the last decades? It is not only the occupation of Palestine with millions of Arabs, which is detrimental both to the Palestinians and the Israelis, it is the economic and social injustice, the corruption which has lowered the ranking of Israel in the TI surveys from the 14th rank to the 37th, sexual harrasment at the highest levels in the police and government, billions going to finance the settlements and ultra-orthodox yeshivas, while there is not enough money for most of us. We have now/yesterday/tomorrow in prison a president, a prime minister, ministers, Rabbis, CEO of the largest bank, mayors, but almost no tycoons (they are too clever). That is why I preconize that only a drastic solution should be adopted, a second republic, otherwise the only ethnic cleansing that will occur is the hundreds of thousands of Israelis who will leave their homeland, the only Apartheid that will exist is between the 1% who have it all, who live in penthouses worth tens of millions, drive cars that costs hundreds of thousands, eat every night in the best restaurants, travel every month to exclusive resorts, staying in boutique hotels costing $600 to $1,000 per night, with annual salaries of millions, no inheritance tax, much lower effective tax rates, in a word the elites who live completely separated apartheided from the masses, who struggle to subsist with minimal salaries, who are fed up of the situation!

If I have to chose one factor that has brought us in the world in general, and more specifically in the neoliberal countries such as the US and Israel, to such a precarious situation that seems hopeless, what is the root of our acute problems – pollution, hunger, extreme income inequality, high unemployment, poverty, corruption, lack of ethics... - there is only one answer: the raison d'etre of a company is maximization of profits to the shareholders or even maximization of valuation of a company for the controlling shareholders. This is the main cause of most of our problems, and the ethical criminals who preconize this mantra should be judged by world history. You cannot see the knife of Mack the Knife as you can see the teeth of the sharks or the bombs of the terrorists, but be not mistaken – the knife of Mack the Knife is much more dangerous than the teeth of the sharks. The prevalent neoliberal ideology in most of business schools educates our businessmen to mazimize profits – and this abomination causes maximization of risks with the more and more frequent economic crises bringing us to the brink of the world bankruptcy, after the worse recession of 2008 did not bring any change and the criminals who caused it remained unpunished. I believe that companies shoud see profitability as a viability precondition and not as their only reason for existence, as corporations also employ people, sell products, and contribute to society. You cannot maximize profits without wrongdoing of the other stakeholders of the companies – employees, customers, ecology, community, government, creditors, suppliers, and ultimately all the 99% population of a country, quite all humankind, and planet earth. Maximization of profits brings to extreme lack of financial moderation, with an acute inbalanced leverage, insufficient owners' equity, high indebtedness, negative cash flow, lack of integrity of the financial management, and unregulated derivatives.

The CEOs of the companies are rewarded by the controlling shareholders (holding often only a few percentages of the equity) for laying off thousands of employees, lowering their salaries to the strict minimum, as they are no more "manpower", they have no more power, they have become "human resources" or even worse "human capital", just a resource as oil and iron, a capital as money and machines. by immoral salaries of tens of millions dollars, while income inequality raises to unprecedented levels, like in the times of the Roaring Twenties that preceded the Great Depression. The employees are no more loyal to the companies as there are no more sentiments between the management and the workforce or rather workweakness. They have become expendable and if the company can earn one percent more by laying off thousands it does it with pleasure. The CEOs who preconize such strategies are ethical criminals because they ruin the families of the employees not because the financial situation of the companies need that but just because of their greed and the greed of their omnipotent masters – the controlling shareholders. This conduct causes high rates of unemployment, jobs become precarious, employees work only part time, for much lower salaries, they have to sell their houses, or take second mortgages, they cannot pay anymore for health insurance, for pensions, they cannot save anymore, while very few people – 1% or even one thousandth of the population own most of the country's assets, receive huge salaries and bonuses, and we have plutocrats who are richer than the aristocrats in the worst moments of capitalism in Victorian England or during the reign of Louis XVI and Marie Antoinette in France. This crime of maximization of profits brings about much more misery and ruin than terrorism, earthquakes, tsunamis, and even contemporary wars.

You cannot maximize profits without doing haircuts to the creditors or the owners of the companies' debentures, and those who make the haircuts are never punished although their ethical crimes are worse than those of thieves – they do it lawfully and unethically and instead of making harakiri because they are bankrupt, they are not ashamed and they even boast on how they fooled everybody and were finally bailed out by their governments. The ruin that they cause with their unscrupulous and reckless conduct towards banks, holders of debentures, with their speculative derivatives – weapons of mass destruction according to Warren Buffett, amounts to trillions of dollars and in the Doomsday Depression that will inevitably occur in the recent future no bailouts will be effective anymore, no voodoo cures of zero interest rate, not even bribing politicians and civil servants will assist us as the scope of the ruin will be so large that it will cause the bankrupt of the whole world economy. If you want to maximize your profits – you don't pay taxes to your country, or to any other country as well, and hide your profits in tax heavens. Companies who don't pay taxes are ethical criminals, as they receive all the services from their country and give nothing in return. This is theft as you don't pay for what you take.

They pollute the environment as much as possible in order to maximize their profits and force the countries to clean after them without paying them any taxes of course. Those who pollute are ecological criminals as they are endangering the environment, causing deaths in global terms of millions inhabitants, endangering even the existence of humanity and our earth. Maximizing their profits force them to deliver defective products, make cartels, become monopolies, to bribe government officials legally and illegally by offering them salaries of millions after they leave their offices where they gave them benefits worth tens of millions, they privatized to them at low prices government assets. Even if this is legal – those who do it on both sides are nevertheless criminals against society which is wronged, against their communities where they live, against their countries, against humanity. There is a tribunal that judges countries and individuals who committed crimes against humanity killing thousands civilians, torturing prisoners, but who is going to judge the ethical criminals that ruined the world economy, caused the death of millions due to pollution and poverty that could be averted if the companies and the economies would have been managed ethically, without corruption, without maximizing profits regardless of the consequences. Neoliberal systems are by definition ethical criminal systems as they ruin their countries, and instead of promoting so-called "free markets" they make their utmost to create biased corrupt markets, that are far from being free. Companies and tycoons corrupt the politicians by giving them generous contributions that have a return on investment of thousands percents, by lobbying on behalf of their companies to the crooked politicians who were bribed.

I have written extensively in this book and in my other books what should be done to prevent such perverse situations – prohibiting government officials to work in the private sector, banning contributions to politicians, forcing companies to pay taxes of at least 40% on their profits regardless of tax heavens, allowing free unions, prohibiting massive layoffs of employees if the company is profitable, allowing a maximum annual salary, including bonuses and options, of one million dollars for the highest paid employee in the company, banning the bailout of companies and banks by the governments and their agencies, forcing the central banks to give a real price to money and banning a too low interest rate, and finding a way to send ethically corrupt businessmen to twenty years in prison, as they don't differ much from Bernie Madoff. We have to tax wealthy people up to 70% of their salaries and profits on their assets as well as a similar inheritance tax of more than 5 million dollars. This is not a communist agenda, as I want to safeguard the capitalist system and I do believe that communist regimes were even more corrupt than the most corrupt and neoliberal capitalist regimes. I want to bring back the capitalist economic regimes to their ethical roots, and achieve at least the social justice, ethical conduct and economic progress of the Scandinavian regimes, and to a lesser extent German, Dutch, Swiss and French economic regimes. If the world economy will adopt the measures that I preconize in this and other books it will eradicate poverty, save earth and ecology, and originate huge funds for welfare state, education, health, infrastructure, defense and all the other expenses of countries. We can solve the problem of all the refugees on earth, have full employment, obtain a reasonable inequality level similar to the Scandinavian standards, maintain the most rigorous ethical standards, eliminate corruption and bribing, achieve the highest levels of education, welfare and health, reducing pollution to minimum, and achieve the highest rates of progress if only we could eradicate once and for all the fallacious mantra of maximizing profits.

7.16 THE MUSLIM SHAHIDS' SEXUAL PHANTASY ON THE 72 VIRGINS IN PARADISE

But if I am pessimistic of the situation in the world and in Israel, I am much more optimistic with the cultural and innovative achievements of the world, this is my consolation, my therapy, this is what differentiates me and the intellectuals from all those who are threatening the world's peace and economy, this makes me think about the purpose of life beyond economy and security. So, what is the purpose of life? Should we be able to achieve it in our life time or in "heaven"? Is the purpose of life – to die, as absurd as it seems, but that is what is expected from Muslim shahids? This could happen if the shahids are offered 72 virgins in paradise. So, you get your rewards in paradise, not on earth, where you have to kill Jews, Europeans, non-believers, and mostly Muslims, as we see now everyday occurring in Iraq, Afghanistan, Syria, Israel, and more and more in the West, in the US, France, Belgium, and in the future in most European countries. The Houri - in Islamic mythology, the houris or ḥūr (plural of ḥaurā', "gazelle-eyed (woman)") or ḥūrīyah (Arabic: حورية) are commonly translated as "(splendid) companions of equal age (well-matched)", "lovely eyed", of "modest gaze", "pure beings" or "companions pure" of paradise, denoting humans and jinn who enter Jannah (paradise) after being recreated anew in the hereafter. The idea of 72 virgins in Islam refers to an aspect of paradise. In a collection by Abu 'Isa Muhammad ibn 'Isa at-Tirmidhi in his Jami' at-Tirmidhi and also quoted by Ibn Kathir in his Tafsir ibn Kathir of sura 55 it is stated: It was mentioned by Daraj Ibn Abi Hatim, that Abu al-Haytham 'Adullah Ibn Wahb narrated from Abu Sa'id al-Khudhri, who heard Muhammad saying, "The smallest reward for the people of Heaven is an abode where there are eighty thousand servants and seventy-two houri, over which stands a dome decorated with pearls, aquamarine, and ruby, as wide as the distance from al-Jabiyyah to San'a. In the same collection of hadiths, the following is judged strong (hasan sahih): That the Messenger of Allah said: "There are six things with Allah for the martyr. He is forgiven with the first flow of blood (he suffers), he is shown his place in Paradise, he is protected from punishment in the grave, secured from the greatest terror, the crown of dignity is placed upon his head—and its gems are better than the world and what is in it—he is married to seventy two wives among Al-Huril-'Ayn of Paradise, and he may intercede for seventy of his close relatives." We have noticed several times in this book the ambiguity and double meaning of many terms: jihad is not necessarily a holy war, shahid is not necessarily a martyr warrior/terrorist, Arafat exceled in double meanings but so are many Palestinian leaders claiming that the obligation to anihilate Israel is caduc in English but valid in Arabic. So, here again the concept of the 72 virgins is a Zionist conspiracy, does not appear in the Quran, which strongly opposes suicide, etc. But it really does not matter, as there is strong evidence that many of the terrorists really belived that they will be awarded 72 virgins – Houris/gazelle-eyed women, pure and modest, and it was a strong motivation for their actions.

7.17 THE CORY THEORY ON PARADISE ON EARTH FOR THE JUSTS – READING THE BOOKS OF THE 720 BEST AUTHORS, 72 BIOGRAPHIES OF THE MOST PROMINENT PERSONS, WATCHING 72 BEST PLAYS/OPERAS/MUSICALS/CLASSICAL CONCERTS, 360 BEST FILMS, 72 BEST SINGERS' PERFORMANCES, 72 BEST PAINTERS, KNOWLEDGE OF 72 LANGUAGES, 72 FIELDS OF INTERESTS, ETC.

In contrast to "The Houri" theory I propose "The Cory" theory, which maintains that the justs will be awarded on earth, and if there is a paradise also in paradise, with 72 complete works by the favorite authors of the justs or the works of the 720 best authors in the modern literature, 72 best plays on earth, 72 best operas, 360 best films ever, 72 best performances of the best singers, 72 best musicals, 72 best classical music works, 72 best painters and sculptors' works, 72 best academic books, 72 best humoristic TV series and performances, knowledge of 72 languages, biographies, lectures and conversations with the 72 most prominent persons in history, visit of 72 countries, 72 best poets works, etc. – in a nutshell in all the 72 fields of interests of the justs they will be exposed to the 72 best works in every field. No need to wait for heaven, you can reach such "paradise" of knowledge, fun and harmony in your life, as I was exposed to as explained at length in this book. Why 72? 72 is a lucky number. The word Chai in Hebrew means life. This word If you take the two letters that compose the word chai in Hebrew you are left with the number 18. Therefore this number 18 is a very lucky number among the Jewish as it relates to the word life. From a traditional standpoint the number 18 and multiples of it are common in gift giving in the Jewish community, e.g. 36, 72, 720, etc. So, you do not need to die and commit suicide in order to get your reward in paradise as for the shahids in the Islam, you can be rewarded in your lifetime as the Jewish religion sanctifies life, education and being an intelectual. If life is sacrosanct you do your utmost to succeed in life as you do not rely on the rewards in heaven, as written in Psalm 92: "The righteous will flourish like a palm tree, they will grow like a cedar of Lebanon; planted in the house of the LORD, they will flourish in the courts of our God. They will still bear fruit in old age, they will stay fresh and green." The house of the world is on earth where the righteous will flourish in old age, fresh and green like a palm tree, like a cedar, and no need of virgins, as it is very difficult to imagine paradise with licentious sex.

Another reason for the 72 best of the 72 best is that I am now in my 72th year. I would not mind to maintain the wisdom and experience of my 72 years together with the health and stamina of my age of 27, but in order to achieve that - no virgins are needed, a monogamy is more than enough. I also strongly oppose the sanctification of virginity, as the most admirable women are the loving mothers, loving wives, who fulfill their ambitions in life. The only admirable virgin woman whom I can think of is Jeanne d'Arc, while most of all outstanding women in history were mothers/wives – from Dona Gracia to Queen Victoria, from Marie Curie to Angela Merkel.

I do not intend to encumber on this book another 72 lists of 72 persons in every list. The book is full with lists and those who are not interested are invited to skip them, but I have introduced all those lists for those who intend to use my book as a "guide for the perplexed", if they would want to read authors, hear music, watch plays and films, study business ethics, or visit the world. We can also link every entry of authors, composers, plays, novels, operas, personalities... to Wikipedia, YouTube, etc. So, I'll refer in every item of the following topics to the relevant list and will cite only some of the details. We start with 72 languages, and will take from the chapter "Languages learned by Jacques Cory" the first 50 languages learned or the first 60 languages that I can read at least with a translation, mainly Latin, German, and Slavic languages, Greek, Arabic, Hebrew, and add to them 12 important languages that I would like to learn if I was younger or in paradise if there is paradise. My reader may know already that I am an atheist who does not believe in God or paradise, but as I really don't know (being a potential agnostic), if there is a paradise (so many people say there is, so maybe I am wrong...), I would like to do all those things that I did not have the time to do in this life, and in paradise it will be much easier. So, and forgive me if the celebrities spoke a more ancient language, I would learn Chinese/Mandarin in two seconds of infinity as Confucius, whom I admire so much, would teach me. My teacher in Hindi or Sanscrit would be Buddha, whom I also admire. I would learn Japanese from Tajima Mori, Persian from the Queen Esther, Amhari from the Queen of Sheba, Swahili from Ali Mazrui who would explain to me in Swahili why Israel is an apartheid country and the sharia law is democratic as he maintains in his writings, Indonesian from Suharto, Malay from Tunku Abdul Rahman, Tagalog from Ferdinand Marcos, Quechua from Pachacuti, Hungarian from Bela Bartok, and Turkish from Mustafa Kemal Ataturk. But the paradise citizens would also assist me in mastering the other 60 languages as in heaven it takes only a few seconds for each. If Confucius or Buddha will not be available in heaven because of their tight schedule, I would be satisfied with the 72 languages that I can understand (although I have learned only 50+ languages) in the UN Universal Declaration of Human Rights, as specified in the chapter on this topic. This book analyses also most of those languages, and bring extracts of the languages' texts.

For the 72 best authors that I would read their complete works, I would not repeat here the name of my beloved authors of modern literature in my Survey on Modern World Literature. I'll just mention the names of some best of the best: Emile Zola, Victor Hugo, Alexandre Dumas, Jean-Paul Sartre, Franz Kafka, Thomas Mann, Erich Maria Remarque, Jose Saramago, Albert Cohen, Vicente Blasco Ibanez, Mario Vargas Llosa, Jorge Amado, Shai Agnon, Haim Nahman Bialik, Sholom Aleichem, Amos Oz, Charles Dickens, D. H. Lawrence, James Joyce, Virginia Woolf, Sinclair Lewis, Alberto Moravia, Tolstoy, Dostoievski, as well as authors from earlier periods, such as Honore de Balzac, Goethe, Cervantes, Homer, Stendhal, Thackeray, the sisters Bronte, Dante, One Thousand and One Nights, The Bible, New Testament, Quran, The Bhagavad Gita. For the 72 best plays I would rather refer to the complete works of the 72 best playwrights: Jean Racine, Arthur Miller, Joshua Sobol, Tennessee Williams, Sean O'Casey, Marcel Pagnol, Henrik Ibsen, Eschyle, Clifford Odets, Sophocles, Euripides, Corneille, Moliere, Eugene O'Neil, Anton Tchekhov, August Strindberg, William Shakespeare, Federico Garcia Lorca, Jean Anouilh, Jean Giraudoux, Bertolt Brecht, Luigi Pirandello, George Bernard Shaw, Oscar Wilde, Aristophanes, Jean-Paul Sartre and so many others in many languages. All of them are in the chapter Plays and list of the best plays, in the lists Films of Cory's Lectures, and in the chapter Theater – lists of the best plays seen in Israel, New York, Paris, London, Berlin, best videos of plays in English, French, and Hebrew. All those exceed by far 72 and amount to much more than a hundred plays. This book includes also an analysis of some of the novels and plays of those authors. The 72 best poets are part of the lists of best authors in modern literature, I would just mention a few of the best of the best: Heine, Prevert, Garcia Lorca, Jimenez, Pessoa, Neruda, Gerald, Zvi Aviel, Bialik, Amihai, Rachel, Schiller, Goethe, Holderlin, Novalis, Brentano, Wordsworth, Shelley, Lord Byron, Ronsard, Baudelaire, Lope de Vega, Becquer, Castro, Rimbaud, Musset, Vigny, Hugo, Lamartine, Haitian poets, Gautier, La Fontaine, Cendrars, Mallarme, Verlaine.

The 72 best authors in business ethics, capitalism, social justice, sustainability, and corporate social responsibility are mentioned at length in my lists and bibliographies in this book in the chapter of academic ebook in English in progress – The Future of Capitalism in a Sustainable Society: Joseph Stiglitz, Naomi Klein, Charles Ferguson, Thomas Friedman, Michael Mandelbaum, Milton Friedman, John Maynard Keynes, Paul Krugman, Andrew Ross Sorkin, Erin Arvedlund, Barbara Ehrenreich, John Kenneth Galbraith, Charles Gasparino, Paul Hawken, Daniel Kahneman, Nassim Taleb, Dave Kansas, Michael Lewis, Roger Lowenstein, James Stewart, George Soros, Muhammad Yunus, Gregory Zuckerman, Akio Morita, Henry Paulson, Bryan Burrough, Alice Schroeder, Joel Bakan, Jagdish Bhagwati, John Cassidy, William Cohan, Harry Dent, Kenneth Goodpaster, Laura Nash, Henri-Claude de Bettignies, Al Gore, Justin Fox, Hyman Minsky, Charles Ellis, David Wessel, Richard Posner, Gary Stern, David Cay Johnston, Jonathan Harr, Lee Kuan Yew, Robert Hagstrom, Robert Monks, Joseph Badaracco, Richard De George, Charles Derber, Thomas Donaldson, Amitai Etzioni, Francis Fukuyama, Ron Grover, Harvey Hornstein, Robert Jackall, Peters and Waterman, Meir Tamari, Manuel Velasquez, Ben Cohen, Ernest Wallwork, Barry Eichengreen, Jeremy Rifkin, David Coates, Jonas Pontusson, T.R. Ried, Eric Einhorn, Nouriel Roubini, Stephen Mihm, Matthew Bishop, Suzanne McGee, Duff McDonald, Matthew Lynn, Sanjay Anand, Robert Pozen, Raghuram G. Rajan, Larry Bartels, Wilhelm Hankel, Robert Isaak, Carmen Reinhart, Kenneth Rogoff, Michael Roberts, Robert Shiller, George Akerlof, George F. DeMartino, Fareed Zakaria, Gordon Brown, Todd Gitlin, Matt Taibbi, Noam Chomsky, Sheila Bair, Gretchen Morgenson, Joshua Rosner, Costas Lapavistas, Chrystia Freeland, Robert Reich, Dan Ariely, Robert L. Heilbroner, Abhijit Banerjee, Bastasin Carlo, Esther Duflo, Jeffrey Sachs, Les Leopold, Olivier Blanchard, Tyler Cowen, John Mackey, Anat Admati, Martin Hellwig, Thomas Piketty, as well as the books by Nick Leeson, Brian Cruver, Bill Bamber, Lawrence McDonald, Jacques Cory, and the best videos on those subjects, such as The Ascent of Money with Niall Ferguson, Capitalism: a Love Story by Michael Moore, The Corporation by Jennifer Abbott/Mark Achbar, The Flaw by David Sington, Collapse based on a book by Michael Ruppert, and Inside Job by Charles Ferguson. This book includes also an analysis of some of the books of those authors and some of the films.

The best 72/360/830/1000+ films are in my lists in the chapter of Cinema & Films, as well as an analysis of some of those films. Those lists include mainly films on business ethics and social responsibility, lists of film festivals best films, and lists of some of the best films in the history of cinema. Some of the films are based on plays, some on novels, and some on original screenplays: "All My Sons", "Death of a Salesman", "An Enemy of the People", "Glengarry Glen Ross", "Executive Suite", "F.I.S.T." Wall Street on the scandals of the eighties, Rogue Trader on the collapse of Barings Bank, Barbarians at the Gate on leverage buyouts and RJR Nabisco, hostile takeovers, wrongdoing to minority shareholders, etc. Films on the victims of corruption - Jean de Florette, corruption in Medicare - Damaged Care, corruption in State administration - Marie: a True Story, wrongdoing of stakeholders in mega corporations - Class Action and the Ford Pinto case, corruption and bribery in government – Revizor, and The Threepenny Opera on business, government & crime. Films on Enron, transparency in the media - The Insider - about Dr. Jeffrey Wigand and the tobacco industry, law, fairness and ethics - The Merchant of Venice, The Great Gatsby on wealth, fairness and ethics, Emile Zola \(L'Argent\) the ultimate ethicist, films on ethical activism - Erin Brockovich, conformism in society - Rhinoceros, CSR in community - It's a Wonderful Life, Ecology - A Civil Action, education and society - Topaze, sustainability documentaries such as Al Gore's An Inconvenient Truth, Who Killed the Electric Car?, Paul Hawken, and social responsibility of modern tycoons - Warren Buffett. The Visit in its European and African versions, labor rights in the global context - The Take, ethical dilemmas of multinationals and stakeholders – McDonald's and McLibel, globalization models of Nike and other multinationals and Michael Moore's film The Big One, and some of his other films.

The 72 best classical works and concerts, best musicals, best operas, and best performances that I have ever seen can be found in the chapter of Music in this book, as well as a description on how I started to hear and love classical music when I was a teenager from my diary. I read books on the 100 best operas, 100 best composers, 100 best classical works, and so on. The best operas are (with a V for the operas that I have seen on stage): The abduction from the Seraglio – Mozart - V, Aida – Verdi - V, Un ballo in maschera & Nabucco – Verdi, Il barbiere di Siviglia – Rossini - V, Die Fledermaus – Strauss - V, La Boheme – Puccini - V, Carmen – Bizet - V (my most preferred), Cavalleria Rusticana – Mascagni - V, Les contes d'Hoffmann – Offenbach - V, Così fan tutte – Mozart – V, Don Giovanni – Mozart – V, Eugene Onegin – Tchaikovsky, Falstaff – Verdi, Faust – Gounod – V, Fidelio – Beethoven, La forza del destino – Verdi, Guillaume Tell – Rossini, Hansel und Gretel – Humperdinck, Lakme – Delibes, Madama Butterfly – Puccini, The Magic flute/Die Zauberflöte – Mozart – V, The Marriage of Figaro/Le nozze di Figaro – Mozart – V, Otello – Verdi – V, Macbeth – Verdi – V, Pagliacci – Leoncavallo – V, Porgy and Bess – Gershwin – V, Rigoletto – Verdi – V (my most preferred), Romeo and Juliette – Gounod, Der Rosenkavalier – Strauss, Samson et Dalila – Saint Saens, Tosca – Puccini – V, La Traviata – Verdi – V, Tristan und Isolde – Wagner, Il Trovatore – Verdi – V, Turandot – Puccini – V. More detailed lists of the best operas can be found in the Music chapter. Lists of the best musicals, TV comical series, plays and film comedies can be found in the chapter on Humor.

The best composers and their best works, which I like most, based on the monumental books The Milton Cross Encyclopedia of the Great Composers and their Music, are: Wolfgang Amadeus Mozart – Symphony no. 41 Jupiter, Don Giovanni, Symphonies no. 25, 29, 38, 39, 40. Piano Concerti no. 19, 20, 27. Sinfonia Concertante for violin and viola, String Quartets, Le nozze di Figaro, Così fan tutte, The Magic Flute, Requiem. Franz Schubert – Symphony no. 9, Die Winterreise, Symphonies no. 5 and 8, Trout quintet Die Forelle, String quartet death and the maiden, String quintet in do major, Impromptus, Piano Sonates in la major and si bemol major, The beautiful miller daughter, Songs. Ludwig Van Beethoven – Symphony no. 9 in re minor, Apasionata sonate, Piano Concerto no. 5 The Emperor, Symphonies no. 3 Eroica, no. 5, no. 6 Pastoral, no. 7. Piano Concerti no. 1, 2, 3 and 4. Violin Concerto. Violin Sonata no. 9 Kreutzer. String quartets no. 7 and 14. Piano trio The Archduke, Piano Sonate no. 14 Au clair de lune, and no. 32. Missa Solemnis. Niccolò Paganini – 24 Capricci opus 1, Violin Concerti no. 1 and 2, Danse des sorcieres. Gioacchino Rossini – Il Barbiere di Siviglia, Overtures Tancredi, La scala di seta, Il signor Bruschino. Operas Guillaume Tell, L'italiana in Algeri, La cenerentola, Mose in Egitto, Semiramide. Felix Mendelssohn – Symphonies no. 4 Italian, no. 3 Scottish, no. 5 The Reformation, Elijah, The Hebrides, Violin Concerto in E minor, A midsummer night's dream, String Octet, Lieder ohne Worte, String Quartet no. 6, Piano Trio no. 1, Auf Flügeln des Gesanges/On wings of song. Hector Berlioz: Symphonie Fantastique, Harold in Italy, Benvenuto Cellini, Les Troyens, Grande Messe des Morts, La damnation de Faust, Romeo et Juliette.

Charles Gounod – Faust, Mireille, Petite Symphonie, Romeo et Juliette, Ave Maria. Frederic Chopin – Piano Sonata no. 3, Piano Concerti in mi minor and fa minor, Preludes, Etudes, Balades, Valses, Mazurkas, Polonaises. Robert Schumann – Piano Concerto in la minor, Symphonies no. 1 and 4, Manfred, Cello Concerto, Violin Concerto, Piano Quartet, Piano Quintet, Carnaval, Kreisleriana, Fantasia. Franz Liszt – Piano Sonata in si minor, Mazeppa, Rhapsodies hongroises, Rhapsodie espagnole, Valse-impromptu, Mephisto-valse, Liebestraume, Preludes, Lieder, Piano Concerti no. 1 & 2, Poemes Symphoniques, Dante & Faust Symphonies. Johann Strauss - Waltzes, Polkas, Marches, Die Fledermaus, Der Zigeunerbaron. Georges Bizet – Carmen, Symphony in do major, L'arlesienne suites no. 1 and 2, Jeux d'enfants, Les pecheurs de perles, La jolie fille de Perth. Johannes Brahms – Symphony no. 4, German Requiem, Symphonies no 1 and 3, Piano Concerti no. 1 and 2, Violin Concerto, Double Concerto for Violin and Cello, String Sextets no. 1 and 2, String Quartets no. 1, 2, and 3. Piano Quintet, Clarinet Quintet, Violin Sonatas no. 1-3, Lieder, Song of Destiny.

Pyotr Ilyich Tchaikovsky – Symphony no. 6 Pathétique, Sleeping Beauty, Symphonies no. 4 and 5, Piano Concerto no. 1, Violin Concerto, Nutcracker, Swans Lake, Romeo and Juliet, String Serenade, Eugene Onegin, Francesca da Rimini, Marche Slave op. 31, 1812 Overture. Giuseppe Verdi – Rigoletto, Otello, La Traviata, Un ballo in maschera, La forza del destino, Don Carlos, Falstaff, Requiem, Nabucco, Aida, Macbeth. Jacques Offenbach – La belle Helene, La vie parisienne, La Grande-Duchesse de Gerolstein, La Perichole, Les contes d'Hoffmann, Ba-ta-clan. The Bataclan is a theatre located at 50 Boulevard Voltaire in the 11th arrondissement of Paris, France. Designed in 1864 by the architect Charles Duval, its name refers to Ba-ta-clan, an operetta by Jacques Offenbach. Since the early 1970s, it has been a "legendary" venue for rock music. On 13 November 2015, 89 people were killed in a coordinated terrorist attack of ISIS in the theatre. Once again Islamic fundamentalists murdered innocent people and Western culture. Offenbach, a Jew, one of the pillars of French and European culture was banned by the Nazis, and the theater formerly owned by Jews and named after Offenbach's operetta was chosen as the murder site of Nazis' followers – ISIS, foes of culture, France, Jews and Christians.

Camille Saint-Saens – Symphony no. 3, Piano Concerti no. 2 and no. 4, Cello Concerto no. 1, The Carnival of the Animals, Samson and Delilah. Edvard Grieg – Piano Concerto in la minor, Peer Gynt Suites no. 1 and 2, Holberg Suite, Lyric Suite, Norwegian Melodies. Antonin Dvorak – Symphony no. 9 From the New World, Symphonies no. 7 and 8, Cello Concerto, Violin Concerto, Slavonic Dances, String Serenade, String Quartet no. 12, Rusalka. Giacomo Puccini – Tosca, Manon Lescaut, La Boheme, Madama Butterfly, La fanciulla del West, Turandot. Gustav Mahler – Symphony no. 9, Symphonies no. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8. Das klagende Lied, Des Knaben Wunderhorn, Lieder eines fahrenden Gesellen, Das Lied von der Erde, Lieder und Gesänge. Claude Debussy – La mer, Prelude a l'apres-midi d'un faune, Images, Jeux, String Quartet, Preludes, Suite Bergamasque, Le coin des enfants, Pelleas et Melisande, Nocturnes, L'enfant prodigue, Children's Corner. Jean Sibelius – Symphony no. 5, Symphonies no. 2 and 7, Finlandia, Tapiola, Violin Concerto, String Quartet in re minor. Manuel de Falla – El amor brujo, El sombrero de tres picos, Noches en los jardines de Espana, Concerto for hapsichord, Siete canciones populares de Espana, El retablo de maese Pedro. Maurice Ravel – Daphnis et Chloe, Piano Concerto in sol major, Piano Concerto for left hand, Rhapsodie espagnole, Bolero. Max Bruch – Violin Concerto no. 1, Violin Concerti no. 2 and 3, Scottish Fantasy, Kol Nidre, Viola and Clarinet Concerto. Sergei Prokofiev – Peter and the Wolf, Symphony no. 1 Classical, Symphony no. 5, Piano Concerto no. 3, Violin Concerto no. 1, Alexander Nevsky. Sergei Rachmaninov – Piano Concerto no. 2, Symphonies no. 2 and 3, Piano Concerto no. 3, Symphonic Dances, 24 Preludes, The Bells, Night Vigil. Bela Bartok – Concerto for Orchestra, Violin Concerto no. 2, Piano Concerto no. 3, Dance Suite, Bluebeard's Castle. George Gershwin – Porgy and Bess, An American in Paris, Rhapsody in Blue, Piano Concerto in fa major, Girl Crazy, Songs. Igor Stravinsky – Petrushka, Le sacre du printemps, L'oiseau de feu, Pulcinella Suite, Symphony in 3 movements. Kurt Weill – Die Dreigroschenoper, Symphony no. 2, Rise & Fall of the City of Mahagonni, The Eternal Road. Dmitri Shostakovic – symphonies, concerti...

This book has hundreds of links to the best songs, the best artists, the best operas, the best concerts, the best books, the best poetry, the best plays and shows, the best musicals, in the chapters on the proposal of learning languages at school, music, literature, linguistics, plays, theater, films, humor and humorous scenes from films, plays and musicals, and so on. Oklahoma, Hello Dolly!, The Wizard of Oz, Mary Popins, Oliver, Little Shop of Horrors, Meet Me in St Louis, How to Succeed in Business Without Really Trying, Porgy and Bess, Fame, Gigi, Kiss Me Kate, Hair, Grease, On the Town, Show Boat, The Band Wagon, Easter Parade, Gentlemen Prefer Blondes, Mamma Mia, Yentl, Seven Brides for Seven Brothers, White Christmas, and the films Gilda, Top Hat, Blue Skies. Singing in the rain, the Marx's Brothers - A Night At The Opera: Crowded Cabin Scene, Danny Kaye in The Inspector General (Revizor by Gogol) - The Gypsy drinking song. From South Pacific - I'm Gonna Wash That Man Right Out Of My Hair, There Is Nothing Like a Dame. From Annie Get Your Gun - Doin' What Comes Natur'lly, with Betty Hutton, Make 'em laugh, I'm an Indian Too, with Judy Garland, You Can't Get a Man with a Gun, with Megan Mullally, from West Side Story - Gee Officer Krupke!, from My Fair Lady – With a Little Bit of Luck. And finally the song Anything Goes with Patty LuPone on Broadway, the performance that I saw. Some of the most hilarious comic operas were made by Gilbert and Sullivan - here The Pirates of Penzance with the scene of Hold Monsters Major General, and in The Mikado – Behold the Lord High Executioner in the hilarious Act I. Offenbach's operas, which are the most famous and hilarious comic operas – here La Belle Helene, Orphee aux enfers, La vie parisienne. I'll just mention also Mozart's Le Nozze di Figaro, and Verdi's Falstaff. Charlie Chaplin, in Modern Times, especially in Factory Scene, The Gold Rush, especially the scene of eating his shoe, Monsieur Verdoux, especially the trial scene, The Great Dictator, with the very funny barber scene and the globe scene, The Kid, The Immigrant, The Idle Class, The Tramp, Police, A Dog's Life, Limelight. The General by Buster Keaton. The best comic plays – Moliere's plays at the Comedie Francaise: L'Avare, part I and part II, Le Bourgeois Gentilhomme, L'Ecole des Femmes, Les Precieuses Ridicules, Georges Dandin. Le Misanthrope, Tartuffe, part I, part II, Les Femmes Savantes, Les Fourberies de Scapin, Le Malade Imaginaire.

I was moved to tears at the performance of the two best Israeli Folk singers – Shuli Natan and Nehama Hendel. I like most folk music – country, fado, tango, sambas, mariachis, Russian folklore, Napolitan songs, rembetiko, flamenco, and of course Israeli folklore which was influenced by tens of countries, including its Arab neighbors. I have seen the heroine of my youth Joan Baez, by far the best singer, at Carnegie Hall in New York, with the best English and Spanish folk songs of the century. A special place in my heart belongs to Sephardic music which has become very trendy, with the romances sung by the best folk singers. The best show was the Sephardic Romancero by Itzhak Navon, later to become the 5th Israeli president. <http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=nkUbaHbS9YA>. And beyond the Sephardic folklore, with songs like Adio, Arvoles, La ija de la vizina, Avram Avinu, etc., comes of course the Spanish folklore, the flamenco, the Greek folklore from the rembetiko to Yorgos Dalaras and Nana Mouskouri. A performance of the Preservation Hall Jazz Band from New Orleans in New York. Everybody danced in the aisles, the most sweeping performance of old people performing like teen agers. Other remarkable performances that I saw where Marlene Dietrich in Israel in 1960 at the Tamar Cinema in Haifa, Gilbert Becaud and Charles Aznavour, the two best French performers, that I had the privilege to hear in the first rows, two legends, Becaud was Monsieur 100,000 volts and Aznavour was France's troubadour, still yong, touching my innermost soul. And there were many others – Haris Alexiou, Yehoram Gaon, Harry Belafonte, Georges Moustaki, Guy Beart, Yehuda Poliker, Arik Lavie, Yossi Banai, Moti Giladi, Hagashash Hahiver (the funniest trio I has ever seen), and the best of American Country music at Page in 1996, the folk music I like most, the Latin American – Mexican, Peruvian, Argentinian, Brazilian, Paraguayan, and especially – Los Paraguayos with their moving performance of songs like Malaguenia, Pepita, Paloma, el Condor, etc., and last but not least – the best of all – Mercedes Sosa, with Violeta Parra's unforgettable song Gracias a la vida, my most favorite song.

Detailed lists of the 100 best painters, 220 best paintings, even 1000 best paintings are given in the Arts chapter of this book with links to the Wikipedia entries of the painters, to beautiful photos of the paintings, and so on. If 72 paintings, 100 or 220 are not enough we have here a list of the 1000 best Western paintings of all times. They are indeed beautiful and strongly recommend to see them all. The list of the 87 main painters with links to their main works, biography, bibliography is also very interesting. List of best museums gives another angle. The 100 best paintings in New York, the 100 best paintings in London, Most famous paintings of all times, greatest paintings of all times, etc. The 72 best artists that I have chosen are given here: Jan Van Eyck, Paolo Uccello, Rogier Van der Weyden, Filippo Lippi, Piero della Francesca, Andrea Mantegna, Giovanni Bellini, Hans Memling, Sandro Boticelli, Pietro Perugino, Domenico Ghirlandaio, Hieronymus Bosch, Leonardo da Vinci, Filippino Lippi, Vittore Carpaccio, Albrecht Durer, Lucas Cranach, Michelangelo Buonarroti, Raffaello Sanzio, Hans Holbein, Paolo Veronese, El Greco, Michelangelo Caravaggio, Pieter Paul Rubens, Frans Hals, Francisco Zurbaran, Antonie Van Dyck, Diego Velasquez, Rembrandt Van Rijn, Bartolome Murillo, Jan Steen, Jan Vermeer, Jean Watteau, Gianbattista Tiepolo, William Hogarth, Francisco Goya, Theodore Gericault, Eugene Delacroix, Jean Millet, Camille Pissarro, Edouard Manet, Edgar Degas, Paul Cezanne, Claude Monet, Auguste Renoir, Henri Rousseau, Paul Gauguin, Vincent Van Gogh, Georges Seurat, James Ensor, Gustav Klimt, Edvard Munch, Henri Toulouse-Lautrec, Wassily Kandinsky, Henri Matisse, Paul Klee, Fernand Leger, Pablo Picasso, Umberto Boccioni, Georges Braque, Amadeo Modigliani, Robert Delaunay, Oskar Kokoschka, Marc Chagall, Juan Gris, Marcel Duchamp, Giorgio de Chirico, Egon Schiele, Max Ernst, Juan Miro, Rene Magritte, Salvador Dali. More artists can be found in Arts chapter of this book.

We can find the lists of the 100 best sculptors and greatest sculptures ever, another list of the 250 best paintings greatest paintings by old Masters between 800 to 1800, list of the 200 greatest modern paintings 1800-1900, greatest 300 20th century paintings, greatest renaissance paintings, greatest portrait paintings, greatest genre paintings, the 100 world famous architects in history. In the Geography and Travel chapter of this book we can find the list of the 60 countries visited by me and lists of many other countries that I intend to visit, but I also intend to visit more thoroughly countries that I have visited, such as the US, Argentina (I've visited only 2 days), Brazil (only a few days), Peru, Canada, South Africa (only 2 days), China (I've visited only Hong Kong), Japan (only 2 days), Greece, Russia (only 2 days). I will add here only 12 more countries to the 60 I have visited: Mexico, Chile, Bolivia, Costa Rica, Ecuador, Poland, Ukraine, India, Vietnam, Indonesia, Fiji, Mianmar. Assuming that there is no paradise as stated earlier I intend to study thoroughly the biographies of the 72 personalities that I admire most. The list of the biographies that I have started reading appear in the Biographies Chapter. I'll not refer to the biographies of musicians, authors, film directors, playwrights, poets, painters, sculptors, composers, film actors, etc. that I read, start reading or intend to read. I have dealt about them at length in this book. I'll refer here only to historical personages. So, I would like to read and learn about them more, and if there is after all a paradise I'd like in due course to have serious conversations with them or to hear them – if they give lectures over there as too many people are interested to talk to them (I hope that the reader will notice that I am just kidding, as he shouldn't take this digression about paradise seriously, I don't go to mediums and I am an atheist...).

One more remark I read biographies of negative persons such as Hitler, Stalin, Franco or Mussolini, as I am interested to understand how they behaved in history, but of course not taking them as a model. In this chapter I'll refer only to positive persons that I'd like to take them as a model, and if I could (if there is heaven) I would like very much to meet them as I admire what they have done. This does not mean of course that I agree to all that they have done. People could say how can you admire Napoleon who caused the deaths of millions in the battlefield and was a dictator, but this Napoleon also liberated people from the yoke of corrupted aristocracy, including the Jews who received for the first time in Europe equal rights, established in 1804 the Napoleonic Code, that forbade privileges based on birth, allowed freedom of religion, and specified that government jobs should go to the most qualified. Queen Victoria was an imperialist ruler but an admirable queen and person, Le Baron Haussmann destroyed half of Paris but built the most beautiful city in the world, David killed Uria but was one of the best kings in the world, Salomon had a thousand wives but was the wisest man on earth, Gregory Pincus invented the pill which is anathema for many religious people, but liberated women and enabled them to control their body and career. Finally, Charles de Gaulle was the only French leader who dared oppose the German rulers, ended the Algerian war, established modern France, but I together with thousands of fellow students demonstrated against his conservatism. So, I admire their positive achievements, taking into consideration that (except us) nobody is perfect.

Winston Churchill, Charles de Gaulle, Sigmund Freud, Albert Einstein, Isaac Newton, Napoleon Bonaparte, Queen Victoria, Franklin Delano Roosevelt, Baron Edmond de Rothschild of the 19th century, Don Isaac Abravanel, Dona Gracia, Don Joseph Nasi, David Ben Gurion, Brutus, Coco Chanel, Marcel Dassault, Le Baron Haussmann, Theodor Herzl, Lee Kuan Yew, Karl Marx, Mahatma Gandhi, Henri IV, from the Bible – Moses, Jacob, Joseph, David, Salomon, Jeremiah, Isaiah, Amos, Ezekiel, Daniel, Ruth, Esther. Also Jesus, Muhammad, Cicero, Plato, Aristotle, Socrates, Disraeli, Montefiore, Marie Curie, Abraham Lincoln, Martin Luther King, Buddha, Confucius, Johannes Gutenberg, Christopher Columbus, Louis Pasteur, Galileo Galilei, Charles Darwin, George Washington, Alexander the Great, Thomas Edison, Guglielmo Marconi, Alexander Graham Bell, Simon Bolivar, Rene Descartes, Ernest Rutherford, Thomas Jefferson, Jean-Jacques Rousseau, Voltaire, Charlemagne, Alexander Fleming, Antoine Laurent Lavoisier, James Watt, Michael Faraday, Louis Daguerre, Wilhelm Conrad Roentgen, Benjamin Franklin, Gregory Pincus. This list is not a list of the 72 most influential people, but a list of the 72 most admired persons for their contribution to humankind as statesmen, scientists, founders of religions, philosophers, industrialists, inventors of vaccines, printing, electricity, the pill, atom... In the Biographies chapter we can find a list of the 36 best biographies of the best personalities that I have ever read, and a list of the biographies of another 36 best personalities that I have started reading, altogether 72 best biographies of the best 72 personalities that I read/reading.

I have 72 fields of interest and activities, this is of course a metaphor, as I have many fields of interest/activities, 50 to 100, and 72 is just a "lucky" number in between. I probably could have achieved much more if I had only one or two fields of interest. But I admire the renaissance geniuses, as Leonardo da Vinci, who had dozens of fields of interest but not like me excelled in all of them, Emile Zola who was the best author ever, but also wrote J'accuse and fought for the under privileged and against anti-Jewish racism (how tragic it is that today there is not even one of his caliber to fight modern anti-Semitism and Islamic fundamentalism). Benjamin Franklin was one of the Founding Fathers of the United States. A renowned polymath, Franklin was a leading author, printer, political theorist, politician, freemason, postmaster, scientist, inventor, civic activist, statesman, and diplomat. As a scientist, he was a major figure in the American Enlightenment and the history of physics for his discoveries and theories regarding electricity. As an inventor, he is known for the lightning rod, bifocals, and the Franklin stove, among other inventions. He facilitated many civic organizations, including Philadelphia's fire department and a university. So, what kind of Polymath am I, what kind of Renaissance Man, if at all am I?

My 72 fields of interest/activities in the present and past, as a professional or dilettante/amateur are (details on most of the items of this section might be found in this book and in my CV):

1. Linguistics – learning and knowing Latin, Germanic, Slavic, etc. languages. Fluent in English, French (mother tongue), Spanish, Ladino, Hebrew. Fair knowledge of Italian, German, Portuguese, Romanian, Interlingua. Reading capabilities in more than 40 other languages.
2. Ladino research– initiating, co-translating & editing Ladino UN Declaration of Human Rights.
3. Literature – reading and researching novels, mostly modern since 1860, in many languages.

4. Drama – reading and researching plays, since the ancient Greeks to the modern French.
5. Theater – watching hundreds or more plays in Paris, London, New York, Israel, other cities.
6. Biographies – reading and researching lives of the most influential personalities in the world.
7. Author– writing plays, stories, novel, articles, essays, correspondence, diary, on general topics. Novel in Hebrew "Beware of Greeks' Presents", Bimat Kedem, Israel, 2001, a modern Odyssey on Business Ethics, with the essay "Business Ethics in Israel – the Dream and the Calamity", one of the first essays on this topic. Used as textbook. A Play in Hebrew - "Nelly's Choice", Jacques Cory with Amalia Eyal, in 2005 (at the library of the University of Haifa). Used as textbook. Reading of the play was performed at the Hebrew University of Jerusalem on July 30, 2008. Translated into French in 2008 by Saskia Cohen - "Le choix de Nelly", published in 2012 in France by Edilivre. A Play in Hebrew "Nelly Doron" by Jacques Cory, written in 1997, articles, stories, and essays on general topics, published on Cory's website, University of Haifa, Transparency International Israel, Ometz, Carmel Academic Center websites, etc. in 2012. Diary and correspondence with Ruthy Cory, managers, academics, published on Cory's website.
8. Films – watching in cinemas, cinematheques, festivals, thousands of classic and other films.
9. Geography – learning geography, countries, cities, physical, atlases, parameters' statistics.
10. Writing a book on Geography "Ethics Pays", focusing on data and parameters of all states. 2015 – "Ethics Pays: A Comprehensive Atlas of Salient Parameters in the 300 Countries of the World Proving that Ethics Pays" in English, book in progress, in the final stages of writing. The eBook proves that the most ethical countries obtain the best results in all the parameters - GDP per capita, democracy, peace, equality, freedom, happiness, social progress, efficiency, globalization, competitiveness, etc., and the most corrupt countries obtain the worst results. The book is also a geography book describing the 18 - 55 most salient parameters of the world's countries, and comparing the achievements of all the 300 countries of the world.
11. Arts– watching thousands of paintings, sculptures, reading about the painters & the paintings.
12. Museums – visiting hundreds of times the best museums in the world, mainly Arts museums.
13. History – learning and researching history, focusing on European modern history since 1789.
14. Middle East Conflict – writing substantial part of book on topic of the Middle East conflict.
15. Music – hearing classical music, opera, country, folk, pop music, reading about composers.
16. Concerts – watching hundreds of classical concerts, opera, folk, pop concerts in the world.
17. Philosophy – reading and researching philosophy, focusing on philosophy in ancient times.
18. Philosophic Essays – writing philosophic essays in many books, mainly cosmopolitan essays.
19. Religion – reading & researching religions, focusing on Judaism, the Bible, modern research. Quotes about Jews by Churchill, Mark Twain, Goethe, John Adams, Kennedy, Tolstoy, Hoffer. In a 2015 speech explaining the Australian government's measures against ISIS, Julie Bishop compared the psychological underpinnings of ISIS with that of Nazism. Citing Eric Hoffer's seminal work The True Believer, she argued that the declared Caliphate drew from the same source that drove the masses to support Hitler: "Invincibility was – until the US-led airstrikes – all part of its attraction." In May 1968, about a year after the Six Day War, Eric Hoffer wrote an article for the Los Angeles Times titled "Israel's Peculiar Position: "The Jews are a peculiar people: things permitted to other nations are forbidden to the Jews. Other nations drive out thousands, even millions of people and there is no refugee problem. Russia did it, Poland and Czechoslovakia did it. Turkey threw out a million Greeks and Algeria a million Frenchman. Indonesia threw out heaven knows how many Chinese and no one says a word about refugees. But in the case of Israel, the displaced Arabs have become eternal refugees. Everyone insists that Israel must take back every single one." Hoffer asks why "everyone expects the Jews to be the only real Christians in this world" and why Israel should sue for peace after its victory.

20. Innovation – reading about innovation and inventors, focusing on high tech inventions.

21. Ethics – reading hundreds of books/articles on business ethics, CSR, corporate governance...

22. Capitalism– reading hundreds of books and articles, watching videos, writing on capitalism. 2010 - "The Future of Capitalism in a Sustainable Society" in English, based on The Great Recession of 2007-2010: book in progress, along an outline on Cory's website. Bibliography of 120 books, a similar number of videos, and hundreds of articles, was read and hundreds of notes were prepared as basis for writing the book upon receipt of adequate financing. The book calls into question the conduct of corporations, leaders, executives and regulators before, during and after the Recession and shows how the invisible hand, minimal regulation and maximization of profits have a perverse impact on the world economy, society, stakeholders, business and profitability. Finally, the book suggests a new political economy of the state, new strategy for the private and public sectors, new economy of income and wealth distribution, in the context of a proper humane policy bringing sustainable development. Possibly - Hebrew version of the book.

23. Lecturing – lectures on business ethics, CSR, corporate governance, business administration. 2011 -Organization of Symposium on Social & Economic Justice with the University of Haifa & Ometz in Haifa, Israel. Lecture by Cory, Participation of Leading Professors, Businessmen, Social Activists, NGO Leaders & Daphni Leef. Symposium filmed by the Academic Channel.

Participation in the Forums of the Israeli Social Protest Movement and Others for Enhancing Social Justice in Israel, Transparency, Ethics, & Reducing Business & Government Relations.

2001 - Lectures at Conferences, Universities, Organizations, Companies, Governmental Forums, in the U.S., Europe and Israel. Transcripts, Films & Articles on Lectures – on Cory's website. Transparency International, Berlin – Drawing Lessons from the Great 2008 Recession - 2010 Insead, Fontainebleau, France - Lectures and Workshops at Ethics Days – 2001/2003

European Union - Stresa, Italy, Lecture on Trends in M&A - 2001

Ethics & Management - Symposium of Paris' high ranking executives - 2003

In Europe – meetings for promoting Cory's books in Paris, London, Frankfurt, Amsterdam and Copenhagen, with collaboration of Kluwer – 2001

In the USA – meetings for promoting Cory's books in Washington, Boston and New York, participating at the annual meeting of Society for Business Ethics in Washington – 2001

Israel: Keynote Speaker - Top Management of Israeli Bank Leumi, Transparency International, Israeli SEC, the Israeli Electric Company, Elbit, IAI, Apax & Insead Anciens Association, Ernst & Young. Magnes Launching of Book – ZOA hall, Tel Aviv, Bimat Kedem Launching of Book – Suzan Dalal hall, Tel Aviv. Speaker at the Hi-Tech Summit (Technology & People), Directors' Convention, Ethics Center at the Israeli Stock Exchange, Internal Auditors Convention, Mishkenot Shaananim Ethics Center, Ethics & Engineering, BDO, Migdal Insurance Group, Izraeli Ethics Center, Ometz, forums of the Technion and the University of Haifa, Reali High School, and on Israeli radio & TV.

24. Sustainability– reading and writing (see academic books/articles) on sustainability, ecology...

25. Globalization, multinational companies - Reading and writing (see academic books/articles).

26. Dissertation and PhD – writing the first PhD dissertation on business ethics to minority shareholders. Ph.D Business Administration (with distinction), CNAM - Conservatoire National des Arts et Metiers, Paris, France, 2004. Doctoral Dissertation in French - 'Business Ethics and the Minority Shareholders'. Book "L'ethique des affaires et les actionnaires minoritaires", published by Editions Universitaires Europeennes in France in 2012. Used as textbook.

27. Academic Books – writing academic books in English, Hebrew, French, on business ethics. "Business Ethics for a Sustainable Society: Conquering the Corporate Frankenstein", The Edwin Mellen Press, US, 2009. An academic book in English, focusing on the Economic Whirl, starting in the eighties with damages of billions and culminating in the Great Economic Crisis of 2008 with damages of trillions, its origins, analysis and potential solutions. The book comprises of theoretical issues, cases based on business experience, and works: on business ethics, sustainability, globalization, corporate governance, & social responsibility. Hard cover - 2009, soft cover - 2010, used as textbook. "Selected Issues in Business Ethics and Social Responsibility", published in Hebrew by Magnes Publishers, the Hebrew University of Jerusalem, Israel, in July 2008: Analysis of theoretical issues and ethical dilemmas in original cases, films, plays & novels, forecasting the world economic crisis & presenting practical vehicles to overcome the crisis. Received an outstanding acclaim and used as textbook.

Two books - "Business Ethics: The Ethical Revolution of Minority Shareholders" and "Activist Business Ethics", published by Kluwer Academic Publishers Boston, US, in 2001 (now Springer). Paperback Editions by Springer, US, 2004. Pioneer research, based on case studies of U.S., French & Israeli companies and extensive business experience, with a modern approach on activism in business ethics. The books found the rules that govern unethical conduct towards minority shareholders, which were validated by the Enron scandal. Activist Business Ethics is quoted on Wikipedia & other websites, is quoted several times in the entry "Business Ethics" of Wikipedia, is recommended in Wikipedia and Answers.com for "Further Reading", and is treated as a standard text/source book in Talk: Business Ethics in Wikipedia. The book is in about one thousand university libraries all over the world (USA – 750, Germany – 41, Canada – 36, France, UK, Netherlands, Belgium, Norway, Denmark, Poland, Italy, Switzerland, Romania, Slovenia, Spain, Mexico, Colombia, Lebanon, Israel, Saudi Arabia, United Arab Emirates, Turkey, Qatar, South Korea, South Africa, Malaysia, Singapore, China, etc.), and sells also in Russia, India, Japan, Greece, Thailand, Brazil, & many other countries all over the world.

Chapters in Edited Books – "Une maniere originale d'enseigner la RSE" (An original method to teach CSR), in the book "La RSE – La responsabilite sociale des entreprises – Theories et pratiques", by Francois Lepineux, Jean-Jacques Rose, Carole Bonanni, Sarah Hudson, published by Dunod in France in 2010. "In the Name of Citizens, Business or Officials? Insights on the Public Responsibility of the Government and Public Administration" by Eran Vigoda Gadot and Jacques Cory, in the book "Public Responsibility in Israel" by Raphael Cohen-Almagor, Ori Arbel-Ganz, Asa Kasher, published by Hakibbutz Hameuchad Publishing House & The Jerusalem Center for Ethics, in Hebrew, in Israel, 2012. One of the first essays on Business & Government & Social Justice in Israel. The book received an outstanding acclaim in Israel.

28. Academic Articles – writing articles and essays on academic topics, mainly business ethics. 2013 – Articles in Walla Business and Ethics Center Mishkenot Shaananim Bulletin

2010 - Publicist, News First Class, NFC, News 1, a leading Israeli News Website

2009-2011 – Columnist, "Ethics and You" – The Israeli CPA Review

2008- Articles in Transparency International Israel and Ometz

2006 - Member of the Editorial Advisory Board, Society and Business Review, Emerald.

2001 - Israel: Essays and Articles on Social & Economic Justice, Business Ethics, Business & Government.

29. Writing of an ebook and articles, on social, economic, and governmental justice in Israel.

2012 - "Social, Economic & Governmental Justice: Essays, Articles & the Play 'Nelly Doron'" free ebook in Hebrew, published on the Internet at Jacques Cory's website in HOME, BOOKS and HEBREW, at the University of Haifa's Library website - <http://lib.haifa.ac.il> (search by name of author or book), Transparency International Israel, Ometz, Carmel Academic Center websites, etc. Includes also short stories: "Baruch Ashem", "Rain Fairy", correspondence, appreciation letters, social justice projects, satires, Ladino activities, case studies... Based on "Essays & Articles on Social & Economic Justice, Business & Government in Israel", published since 2010 on journals & websites. Additional essays, articles, case studies and a code of ethics appear on Cory's websites and might be part of 2 new eBooks. The updated eBook is split in two eBooks: a professional book – 2016 – "Ethical Codes and Case Studies, Essays and Articles on Social, Economic and Governmental Justice", and a book on general and personal topics – 2016 – "Essays, Memoirs and Articles on General and Personal Topics".

30. Travel – planning travels, travelling, studying 60+ countries, mainly in Europe and the US.

31. Science – studying at high school physics, chemistry, biology, reading about those topics.

32. Photographer – of thousands photos, hundreds of hours films, mainly on travel and family.

33. Pro Bono Activities – Director in Boards of Directors of Haifa Theater, Film Festival, etc.

34. Ethical Organizations – active management in Transparency International Israel, Ometz... Received the highest award of Ethics in Israel in 2015. 2012 - Initiating a proposal for the Award of Sustainable Justice Prizes in Israel and in other countries (which has not materialized yet), member of the Prize Committee with well-known ethical experts in the award fields of: Social Justice, Economic Justice, Governmental Justice, Environmental Justice, Media Justice, Educational Justice and Cultural Justice, including Nobel Prize laureate Professor Dan Shechtman, famous playwright Joshua Sobol, and leading professors, journalists and activists.

35. Poetry – reading hundreds books on poetry in many languages, writing occasionally poetry.

36. Satire and Humor – reading and watching satire and humor, occasionally writing as well.

37. Zionism – reading Zionist authors and writing on Zionism topics, focusing on ethical issues.

38. Non-Fiction Reading: Reading of books and essays on theater, cinema, medicine, law, etc.

39. Architecture – reading, watching and visiting state-of-the-art and historic buildings and architecture, churches, mosques, synagogues, parliaments, public buildings, palaces, theaters...

40. Sociology – reading and studying books and articles on sociological issues.

41. Anthropology – reading and studying books and articles on anthropological issues.

42. Economics – reading and studying books and articles on economics issues - BA Economics, Hebrew University of Jerusalem, Israel, 1966 (attended courses in 1961-1964).

43. Political Sciences – reading and studying books and articles on political sciences issues – BA Political Sciences, Hebrew University of Jerusalem, Israel, 1966 (attended courses in 1961-1964).

44. Business Administration– reading and studying books and articles on business issues – MBA, INSEAD, Fontainebleau, France, 1968 (attended courses in 1967-1968). An International MBA in a trilingual program: English, French and German (1967 – Goethe Institute, Berlin).
45. Children Books – reading hundreds of classic children books and writing two children books.
46. Sephardic Heritage – reading, writing and researching Sephardic Heritage, Coria, Spain, etc.
47. Sayings and Proverbs – reading & studying sayings in Ladino, Yidish, Chinese, Turkish, etc.
48. Cosmopolitan Credo – reading, studying, writing on cosmopolitan credo on all topics.
49. Encyclopaedias– reading, studying encyclopaedias in English, French, Hebrew, Wikipedia...
50. Anti-Semitism and Holocaust – reading, studying, writing on Anti-Semitic, Holocaust issues.
51. Ebook Links – choosing thousands of links in autobiography/geographic/ethics ebooks to books, authors, plays, poetry, languages, painters, paintings, classical music works and composers, folk music and writers, pop music, songs, operas, musicals, personalities, cities, countries, buildings, history, philosophy, religions, business ethics, films, performances, shows...
52. Politics – writing platform of the Second Republic of Israel, articles and essays on politics.
53. Establishment of Christian Heritage startup (not materialized), reading, writing on startups.
54. Turnaround Plans and successful implementation of Elbit (1981-1982), Elscint's subsidiaries (1987-1988), NBase (1995-1996), and other companies, in hi-tech and low-tech, in France, the US and Israel, increasing in several cases valuation by more than 1,000%.
55. Mergers and Acquisitions, Joint Ventures - Negotiations with Israeli, U.S., Canadian, French, German, and Spanish companies in the computer, Internet, data communication, telecom, imaging, semi-conductor, and aerospace industries. Due diligence on the companies.
56. Writing of 100 business plans and strategic plannings, implementation on a large number.
57. Technology Transfer: negotiations and agreements, manufacturing/marketing rights, between large European, American and Israeli companies, such as Nixdorf, Alcatel, Hon and Global.
58. Management of a Satellite Communications Consortium (1991-1993) comprised of some of the largest Israeli companies: IAI, Rafael/Galram, Elisra, Gilat, Technion.
59. Management: (1981-1987) Vice President in charge of business activities, sales and finance of Elbit, one of the largest Israeli hi-tech companies. Was directly responsible for the transition from heavy losses to peak profits, M&A, and international business breakthrough. Managed U.S. and Israeli public offerings. Member of U.S. and Israeli Boards of Directors.
60. 1973-1980: Sales Manager and Head of the Defense Sales Department at Elbit, Israel.
61. 1970-1973: Export Manager and Assistant to the Executive CEO at Electra, Israel.
62. 1968-1970: Assistant to the Strategic Planning VP of Israel Aircraft Industries, Israel.

63. International Consulting – free-lance consulting on ethical codes, business ethics, advisory boards, business administration, international business, management, finance and marketing.
64. Management/Board of Directors of Subsidiaries in France, UK, Germany, and the US.
65. 2004-2013 - Teaching at the MBA, International MBA, MA, BA programs, and 17 classes of the Naval Academy, at The University of Haifa, Israel, on: Corporate Governance, Business Administration, Social & Economic Justice, Business Ethics, CSR - Corporate Social Responsibility, Sustainability, Globalization, M&A - Mergers & Acquisitions, Business and Government, Leadership and Stakeholders, NGOs and the Public Sector. Elected in 2005 as the Best Lecturer of the University of Haifa, received appreciation letters from deans and students.
66. 2010-2011 - Lecturer at the International MBA program in English, at The Tel Aviv University, Israel, on: The Future of Capitalism in a Sustainable Society, a Contemporary Course in the Context of the Great Recession of 2007-2010; and a Course on Business Ethics.
67. 2009-2010 - Lecturer at the Executive MBA, The Technion Israel Institute of Technology, Tel Aviv, Israel, on: Business Ethics & the Future of Capitalism in a Sustainable Society.
68. 2006 - Visiting Professor, INSEAD, Singapore, on: Semestrial Course of Business Ethics - 'Individual, Business & Society: The Ethical Dilemma'. Lectures and Workshops on Ethics Days at Insead, Fontainebleau, France, in 2001, 2003 & Symposium of Paris' high ranking executives.
69. 2010-2014 - Lecturer at the Carmel Academic Center in English/Hebrew on Business Ethics & the Future of Capitalism. 2005 - Lecturer at the Ruppin Academic Center on Business Ethics,
70. Friendship – Maintaining friendship relations with at least 72 friends in Israel and abroad.
71. Family – Maintaing excellent family relations with children, grandchildren and relatives.
72. Couplehood – Maintaining excellent couplehood relations with my wife Ruthy since 1969.

Finally, I think that I've found paradise on earth and I have achieved most of my 72 goals during my 72 years. The intellectual exercise of comparing the paradise with 72 virgins to the paradise with 72 authors, composers, most admired personalities, plays, films, operas, etc. was meant uniquely to make my point on what is truly important in life – in this world and in heaven according to what many religious people believe, and I reiterate that I don't believe in heaven. Actually, the most important people for me are the 72 members of my family and 72 friends – my wife, children, grandchildren, close family at present or in the past, my close friends, and so on. When I received the Ometz highest prize for ethics in 2015 – 36 friends came to the ceremony which was held in Tel Aviv coming especially from everywhere to congratulate me. 36 more friends could not come for various reasons, most of them are not living in Israel but in Europe or the US. So, I am very pleased to have such excellent 72 friends in Israel and abroad. I have mentioned most of this close family and close friends in the present and in the past in the acknowledgements of this book. Of all the 72 categories of the 72 – including those that I have not mentioned but can be found in this book or in my scopes of interests the dearest ones and the most beloved are first of all my family and then my friends. But I extend my love also to all my students and readers who were influenced by me, all my workers, colleagues and managers who collaborated ethically during my business and academic careers, to the people of my city Haifa, my country Israel, and humanity in general – the ethical peace loving people on earth who desire to live peacefully, a meaningful life, an intellectual life, a just, free, equal, and fraternal life.

8. LINGUISTICS – APTITUDE – ROMANCE, BULGARIAN, POLISH, MOZARABIC

The reader can find details on the books and the languages on Wikipedia & Encyclopaedias, on Amazon/Local Books websites, on Cory/books/language websites

Reading BOOKS - The languages of the world by Kenneth Katzner, The Cambridge Encyclopedia of Language by David Crystal, I dialetti delle regioni d'Italia by Devoto and Giacomelli, Language and Culture by Shaul and Furbee, International Languages, a matter for interlingua by F.P. Gopsill, The Power of Babel: A natural history of language by John McWhorter.

I have read many books on linguistics, and have learned more than 50 languages, with reading capabilities of 200+ more (see above in Linguistic Activities). In linguistics, I specialize in research on the Ladino language, I read fluently Ladino books with Rashi writing, I initiated, partially translated, and edited the UN Declaration of Human Rights in Ladino. I am a member of several forums on research of Ladino and attend occasionally symposiums on those subjects, Sephardic history and folklore. I wrote in 5 languages an article on the discovery of Coria's synagogue – Spanish, Ladino, French, English and Hebrew, published in more than 20 journals and websites all over the world. I have translated from German a story on Zvi Aviel.

LEARNING OF NEW LANGUAGES

In 2012 – Learning Polish, Ukrainian, thus bringing the number of Languages learned with books, dictionaries, CDs, etc. to 50+, and reading books with limited reading capabilities.

Testing reading capabilities also in Czech, Bulgarian & Croatian. Reading the UN Universal Declaration of Human Rights (UDHR) in 60+ languages. Reading extracts of The Little Prince in 130+ languages and extracts of the Old & New Testament in 250+ languages.

Previously learned the following languages and started reading books in those languages: Russian, Greek, Arabic (also spoken), Swedish, Norwegian, Danish, Dutch, Afrikaans, etc.

See Details on Studies in those Languages on Cory's Website in About Jacques Cory.
See Details on Translation of the UN UDHR into Ladino on Cory's Website in Articles.

8.1 HOW TO BECOME A POLYGLOT?

How can someone become a polyglot? I think that first of all you have to possess an aptitude for languages, which is similar to an aptitude for music, painting or soccer. Otherwise, how can you explain that in the same family one brother speaks perfectly a language spoken occasionally by his parents between themselves while another brother doesn't learn the language? Another condition is of course – the number of languages spoken at home or learned at school. But, here again – two friends whose parents spoke Polish at home until the age of ten – one remembers the language while the other forgets it. Even, when you live in France until the age of 8 and study two years at primary school, and then immigrate to another country – one girl remembers the language while her friend forgets it completely. Or if you study five years Arabic at school, one boy remembers the language or at least some sentences and the alphabet while his friends forgets completely the language, even if they had the same grades at school. But also psychological factors are important – if you love the language or the people who speak it you'll remember it, but if you want to forget the language or had a traumatic experience connected with the language or the people who speak it you'll forget it for sure. If you want to assimilate among the Sabras (native Israelis) you'll forget the Hungarian or the Arabic that you spoke until the age of ten and speak only Hebrew, even if your parents still speak the language among themselves but you forbid them to speak it with you, as you don't want that your friends will categorize you as having a ghetto mentality. Or if you have a southern Provencal French accent and you come as a youngster to Paris, you may do your utmost in order to acquire a Parisian accent, and not be perceived as a "meridional", or a "pied noir" if you happen to come from Algeria, or a "Pole" if you emigrate to New York. Everybody knows the joke about the Pole who came to an English school in order to polish his English and the teacher tells him that he doesn't need to do so, as his English is Polish enough... I never had complexes about my mother tongues and although I immigrated to Israel at the age of nine I continued to speak French with my parents and family, even when my friends visited me, but many friends "dumped" their Yiddish or Arabic...

So, residing in a foreign country, learning languages at school, hearing your parents or grandparents speak a foreign language, all are excellent reasons to know many languages, but the most important reason is aptitude! That is how I know perfectly well Ladino, although my parents spoke the language only occasionally between themselves and I've never learned the language at school or with books. Friends who studied more years than me at a French school in Egypt or elsewhere have forgotten most of the language, although I never continued to learn French when I came to Israel, but on my own I kept reading my grammar books and reading classic literature in French – Racine, Corneille, Moliere, Hugo, Zola, and of course more popular novels by Dumas and Verne. Aptitude means that you can find the syllogism between words and expressions from language to language, if French stands at the base of Romance languages, it is much easier for me to learn Spanish (also because of my Ladino), Italian or Romanian.

Aptitude is when you come to a country where you never visited you can find the characteristics of the language very quickly. This is what happened to me when I visited Portugal for the first time and I understood quite well Portuguese before I ever learned it, because the guide used to tell every comment in the languages I knew – English, French, Spanish and Italian – before ending with Portuguese in favor of the Brazilians that were in our group. That is how I understood quite well Catalan immediately after visiting Barcelona for the first time in the nineties. When I visit mosques, I read the verses from the Quran on the wall, when I visit churches I read the quotes in Latin, I learned Ladino in Rashi letters almost instantly in 1962, when I read a translation of Romeo and Juliet, because I had to link my knowledge of Rashi letters with my knowledge of Ladino. I cannot understand how children of Russian immigrants in Israel who speak from childhood Russian with their parents, cannot read Russian because it is too complicate for them to decipher the Cyrillic script. I, who never knew Russian learned without problems the Cyrill script and the Greek and Arabic, but to tell the truth, it takes me more time to decipher the content than it takes me to read the same text in Latin script. I noticed the difference when I visited the Balkans, it was much easier for me to read the same texts in Croatian, Bosnian and Slovenian written in Latin alphabet than texts in Serbian, Montenegrin and Macedonian written in Cyrill script. But, the languages of the Balkans are so similar that our Israeli guide who was born in Bulgaria spoke to our driver in Bulgarian and the driver answered in Montenegrin. They understood each other perfectly well during the two weeks of the trip, but I noticed that our guide uses frequently words such as Siga (now) and Tuka (here), which I knew were different in the Russian that I learned. Because they were used so much I noticed the discrepancy and the guide told me that effectively those are specific Bulgarian words that don't appear in Russian. This is what I mean by aptitude. I didn't understand most of what they said, but I noticed that those two words are different in the two languages, and indeed I was right.

8.2 ON BULGARIA, BULGARIAN, AND BULGARIAN AUTHORS

Bulgarian was the first "Slavic" language attested in writing. As Slavic linguistic unity lasted into late antiquity, in the oldest manuscripts this language was initially referred to as языкъ словянскъ, "the Slavic language". In the Middle Bulgarian period this name was gradually replaced by the name языкъ блъгарскъ, the "Bulgarian language". In some cases, the name языкъ блъгарскъ was used not only with regard to the contemporary Middle Bulgarian language of the copyist but also to the period of Old Bulgarian. A most notable example of anachronism is the Service of St. Cyril from Skopje (Скопски миней), a 13th-century Middle Bulgarian manuscript from northern Macedonia according to which St. Cyril preached with "Bulgarian" books among the Moravian Slavs. The first mention of the language as the "Bulgarian language" instead of the "Slavonic language" comes in the work of the Greek clergy of the Bulgarian Archbishopric of Ohrid in the 11th century, for example in the Greek hagiography of Saint Clement of Ohrid by Theophylact of Ohrid (late 11th century).

Hristo Botev (1848-1976) was a Bulgarian poet and national revolutionary. Botev is widely considered by Bulgarians to be a symbolic historical figure and national hero. The whole Bulgarian revolutionary movement was put in danger with the capture of Vasil Levski by Ottoman authorities at the end of 1872. At the time Levski was the indisputable leader of the Bulgarian insurgency. He had established an enormous net of revolutionary committees, supervised by the Bulgarian Central Revolutionary Committee located in Romania, which had the task of preparing the Bulgarian revolutionaries for the future general uprising against the Ottoman rule. Levski was brought to trial, sentenced to death by hanging and executed on 19 February 1873. His death was a serious blow to the morale of the revolutionary movement.

We bring a poem of Christo Botev with its English translation, on the hanging of Vasil Levski.

ОБЕСВАНЕТО НА ВАСИЛ ЛЕВСКИ

О, майко моя, родино мила, защо тъй жално, тъй милно плачеш?
Гарване и ти, птицо проклета, на чий гроб там тъй грозно грачеш ?
Ох, зная, зная, ти плачеш, майко, затуй, че ти си черна робиня, затуй, че твоят свещен глас, майко,
е глас без помощ, глас във пустиня.
Плачи! Там близо край град София стърчи, аз видях, черно бесило, и твой един син, Българийо, виси на него със страшна сила.
Гарванът грачи грозно, зловещо, псета и вълци вият в полята, старци се молят богу горещо, жените плачат, пицят децата.
Зимата пее своята зла песен, вихрове гонят тръни в полето, и студ, и мраз, и плач без надежда навяват на теб скръб на сърцето.

The Hanging of Vassil Levski

O you, my Mother, my Native Land,
Why is your cry so sad and heart-rending!
And you, O Raven, accursed bird,
On whose grave croak you of ill impending?

I know, ah I know, you weep, my Mother,
Because you're a slave in bondage lying,
You weep because your sacred voice
Is a helpless voice in a desert crying.

Weep on, weep on! Near Sofia town
A ghastly gallows I have seen standing,
And your own son, Bulgaria,
There with dreadful force is hanging.

The raven gives its grim hoarse croak,
Dogs yelp, wolves howl, the sky is bleak,
Old men in prayers their God invoke,
Women shed tears, the children shriek.

The winter sings its evil song,
Squalls chase the thistles in the plain,
And cold and frost and hopeless tears
Wring and twist your heart with pain.

Bulgaria was the only European country (with Denmark) which saved all its Jewish citizens from the Holocaust. Bulgaria's 48,000 Jews were saved from deportation to Nazi concentration camps with the help of Dimitar Peshev, leaders of the Bulgarian Church, led by Metropolitan Stefan of Sofia, Tsar Boris, and ordinary citizens. Denmark also saved its Jews - the community's population peaked prior to the Holocaust at which time the Danish resistance movement (with the assistance of many ordinary Danish citizens) took part in a collective effort to evacuate about 8,000 Jews and their families from Denmark by sea to nearby neutral Sweden, an act which ensured the safety of almost all the Danish Jews. I have a great admiration for the Bulgarian nation and people, and especially for the Bulgarian Israelis who were integrated so well in Israeli society. When we arrived to Israel in 1953 we managed to buy a small two-family house in Shikun Habulgarim – the Bulgarian neighborhood which was founded by Bulgarian Jews who have emigrated to Israel a few years ago. The Bulgarian Jews were integrated very well in Israel and contribute, in spite of their small number of about 44,000, a substantial added value to medicine, theater, army, academics, politics, industry, music, economy, culture, and government. Our neighbors were Bulgarians and so were most of the residents in our neighborhood, we communicated with them in Ladino as they are Sephardic. I spoke basic Bulgarian during the six years when we resided there but we left in 1959 for Haifa. Nevertheless, when we visited Sofia, Veliko Turnovo and other towns in 2015, I understood some of the conversations, not as in Romania, as I've never learned Bulgarian per se, but Russian, which is close but quite different. We enjoyed very much our visit, meeting the people, our guide was born in Bulgaria and spoke fluently the language, the folklore show, and most of all the beautiful city of Sofia. We even prayed on Shabat/Saturday at the Sofia synagogue. The Bulgarians are open-hearted, very industrious, very cultural, with an excellent health (our guide was 70 but he looked and operated like a youngster of 40), with an excellent sense of humor, always optimistic, with no racist complexes– in Bulgaria or in Israel, which explains how the people of Bulgaria saved their Jews.

8.3 TRIFLES ABOUT NEW LANGUAGES

Anyhow, our Montenegrin driver understood our Bulgarian/Israeli guide, but in other cases – in restaurants or parks – the locals could not understand his language, as they did not have the aptitude to overcome the ten, twenty or thirty percents differences in the languages and complement the analogy or syllogism of the languages. The same rule applies also with Scandinavian languages that are very similar, some people can feel at home in Denmark, Norway and Sweden, even if they speak only one of the similar languages, but some other people can understand only their native language and cannot make the effort to try and understand the other similar languages. That is how, for me, when I read languages the walls come tumbling down, once I speak fluently two or three Romance languages – French, Spanish and Ladino, it wouldn't be difficult to overcome the language barriers when I study Portuguese, Catalan or Italian. Romanian is more difficult as it comprises many Slavic words which I don't understand, but on the other side it comprises Turkish words as Tavan – Ceiling, Zarzavat – Vegetables, or Capac – Lid, which are exactly the same words as in Ladino... So, if you figure the world's languages as a puzzle, the more languages you know – the more you'll be able to understand, at least in the same family of languages. The breakthrough in Romance languages came naturally because of my mother tongues, in the Germanic Languages it was difficult to learn German (although many words are similar to English and French), but afterwards it was much easier to learn Dutch or Swedish. The most difficult was to learn Russian, but when you learned it, it was much easier to understand Ukrainian, Bulgarian or Croatian. As I am allergic to Lactose, I had to say in every restaurant the same ritual – that I cannot eat butter, cheese or dairy products. As I can't say it in Serbian, I needed the assistance of the guide, and indeed when he was not there, I suffered from that because they can't understand English in most of the restaurants, but when I arrived to Bucharest, what a relief it was to say the same sentence with the same words that I learned from my mother in law – eating her excellent meals for more than forty years (m-am saturat – I am full after meal). Well, I could practice the differences in saying that sentence in 30 languages exactly like I read the comparison of an extract of The Little Prince on the Internet.

But you don't need only an aptitude in order to learn languages. You need also a very good memory. Dozens of years ago, a relative of Ruthy my wife, Miron, had his Bar Mitzva, and he said in his speech in Romanian (they were new immigrants) – Eu sint Mironica fara frica, sint Mironel frumosel. I am Mironica without fear, Mironel the beautiful (In Romanian it rhimes). Recently, we met Miron and Ruthy asked me if I remember him, so I answered: "How can I forget you, as you said in your Bar Mitzva's speech – Eu sint Mironica fara frica, sint Mironel frumosel". I remember the words of poems that I learned in my German courses before I was 20 (as Heine's Das Fraulein stand am Meere). Songs that I learned in my Russian teach yourself books and records (Kipuchaia maguchaia nikiem nie pamiedimaia, strana maia Maskva maia ti samaia lubimaia). Songs that I learned in my youth in Spanish (Malaguena, especially the second verse – si por pobre me desprecias yo the concedo razon, no te ofresco riqueza te ofresco mi coracon a cambio de mi pobreza – if you deprecate me because I am poor I give you reason, I don't offer you riches, I offer you my heart in return of my poverty, which was very actual for me in those times), in Ladino (la ija de la vizina oy sasa oy sasa, ke se yama karolina, en koriendo se kayo la tripa se le unflo – the neighbor's daughter Karolina fell when running and since then her belly is inflated – as in Ladino you can't even figure pregnancy out of wedlock). Proverbs about the fickleness of the world are so similar throughout the ages and cultures: in Latin "Sic transit gloria mundi" - "Thus passes the glory of the world." It has been interpreted as "Worldly things are fleeting." But in Latin we can hear/read also requiems and the immortal Carmina Burana, in this version conducted by Andre Rieu. In Ladino: "El mundo es un shuflete, ken lo tanya i ken lo siente" – The world is a whistle, some people blow it, some people just hear it. We continue with a proverb in Arabic that I learned from friends - Dunya zil hiyar, yaoum fi idak... - the world is like a cucumber, one day it is in your hand, and I prefer not to continue. And a Turkish proverb that I learned from my father, now almost forgotten in Turkey: "Dünya felek, çarkifelek, kiimisi ağlar, kimisi güler." - World of fortune, wheel of fortune, some cry, some laugh.

When I was two years old, I sang perfectly well the sad French love song "Mon amant de Saint Jean": "Car l'on croit toujours aux doux mots d'amour quand ils sont dits avec les yeux. Moi qui l'aimais tant, mon bel amour, mon amant de Saint-Jean, il ne m'aime plus, c'est du passé, n'en parlons plus" – As you always believe in the sweet love words when they are said with the eyes. I, who loved him so, my beautiful love, my lover of Saint-Jean, he doesn't love me anymore, it is the past, don't speak of it anymore. My aunts told me, when I was much older, that I looked so pathetically serious when, at the age of two, I sang this song about the betrayal of men, and about the past of love, that my listeners thought that I have experienced all the sorrows of love in a previous reincarnation. And who knows, if more than a billion Indians believe in reincarnation maybe they are right? I have a friend who even believes in reincarnation from trees...

8.4 ON POLISH, CHILDREN SONGS, PAN TADEUSZ

Well, when I was singing such tragic love songs at the age of two, other babies were singing children songs in Polish, which I learned 20 years afterwards from a friend, long before I learned Polish by myself:

Miała baba koguta, koguta, koguta,

wsadziła go do buta, do buta, hej!

O mój miły kogucie, kogucie, kogucie kogucie, kogucie, kogucie.

Czy ci dobrze w tym bucie, w tym bucie,

w tym bucie, w tym bucie jest?

Grandma had a rooster cute, rooster cute, rooster cute.

Put it in an old brown boot, old brown boot, hey!

Oh my lovely rooster-roo, my lovely rooster-roo, my lovely rooster-roo, I love you.

Are you happy in that boot my dearest, in that boot my dearest dear!

The first book that I started reading in Polish is Pan Tadeusz and this maybe explains how I got stucked in the first pages of this beautiful epic poem, as it is very difficult to read even for a Pole. I had a far better success with Miała baba, but what is the point of learning a language if not to be able to read its classics, even with a translation? For learning a children song it is not worthwhile all the trouble of learning such a difficult language. Or maybe the hidden reason for learning Polish is to transcend the anti-Semitic conduct of the Poles in the last century and the anti-oriental conduct of many Israeli Poles, from which I suffered also? If I can read Pan Tadeusz it means that I am as good as you, I beat you in your own home field. Pan Tadeusz is an epic poem by the Polish poet, writer and philosopher Adam Mickiewicz. The book was first published in June 1834 in Paris, and is considered to be the last great epic poem in European literature. It is recognized as the national epic of Poland, it is a compulsory reading in Polish schools, and a film based on the poem was made in 1999 by Andrzej Wajda. Pan Tadeusz recounts the story of two feuding noble families, and the love between Tadeusz Soplica (the title character) of one family, and Zosia of the other. Another sub-plot involves a spontaneous revolt of the local inhabitants against the occupying Russian garrison. Since Mickiewicz published his poem as an exile in Paris, he was free of the Russian censors to talk openly about the occupation.

We bring below the first page of the poem in rhymes in Polish, with an English translation.

Litwo! Ojczyzno moja! ty jesteś jak zdrowie;
Ile cię trzeba cenić, ten tylko się dowie
Kto cię stracił. Dziś piękność twą w całej ozdobie Widzę i opisuję, bo tęsknię po tobie.

Panno święta, co jasnej bronisz Częstochowy
I w Ostrej świecisz Bramie! Ty, co gród zamkowy
[8] Nowogródzki ochraniasz z jego wiernym ludem!
Jak mnie dziecko do zdrowia powróciłaś cudem, (Gdy od płaczącej matki, pod Twoją opiekę
Ofiarowany, martwą podniosłem powiekę;
I zaraz mogłem pieszo, do Twych świątyń progu
Iść za wrócone życie podziękować Bogu;)
Tak nas powrócisz cudem na Ojczyzny łono.
Tymczasem przenoś moją duszę utęsknioną
Do tych pagórków leśnych, do tych łąk zielonych,
Szeroko nad błękitnym Niemnem rościagnionych;
Do tych pól malowanych zbożem rozmaitem,
Wyzłacanych pszenicą, posrebrzanych żytem;
Gdzie bursztynowy świerzop, gryka jak śnieg biała,
Gdzie panińskim rumieńcem dziecielina pała,
A wszystko przepasane jakby wstęgą, miedzą
Zieloną, na niej zrzadka ciche grusze siedzą.

LITHUANIA, my country, thou art like health; how much thou shouldst be prized only he can learn who has lost thee. To-day thy beauty in all its splendour I see and describe, for I yearn for thee.

Holy Virgin, who protectest bright Czenstochowa and shinest above the Ostra Gate in Wilno!² Thou who dost shelter the castle of Nowogrodek with its faithful folk! As by miracle thou didst restore me to health in my childhood—when, offered by my weeping mother to thy protection, I raised my dead eyelids, and could straightway walk to the threshold of thy shrine to thank God for the life returned me—so by miracle thou wilt return us to the bosom of our country. Meanwhile bear my grief-stricken soul to those wooded hills, to those green meadows stretched far and wide along the blue Niemen; to those fields painted with various grain, gilded with wheat, silvered with rye; where grows the amber mustard, the buckwheat white as snow, where the clover glows with a maiden's blush, where all is girdled as with a ribbon by a strip of green turf on which here and there rest quiet pear-trees.

8.5 COSMOPOLITAN SONGS FROM ALL OVER THE WORLD THAT I'VE LEARNED

Spirituals in Aramaic and English, songs in Hebrew, Hindi and Greek – linguistics through songs! We sing every Seder in Passover in Aramaic Had Gadia, here in a beautiful performance of the children of Kibbutz Ein Harod, and for those who don't understand Aramaic (they don't know what they are losing...) we bring a translation from the Wikipedia. Nowadays, when you sing in community singing you can read the words projected on the screen, but when I was young there were no screens and we knew by heart all the folk songs in Hebrew (Shir hareut, Shirat hanoded, Etz harimon – etz harimon natan reiho bein yam hamelah li Yeriho), and in English (If I had a hammer, We shall overcome, Give me that old time religion – Give me that old time religion, give me that old time religion, Give me that old time religion, It's good enough for me. It was good for Paul and Silas...). We saw in the movies Aliki singing her famous cat song: "Niaou niaou, vre gatoula, me ti roz mitoola, gatoola moo mikri. Niaou, se echoone mi staxi, ki ine apo metaxi, I gouna soo i gri". Νιάου νιάου, βρε γατούλα με τη ροζ μυτούλα γατούλα μου μικρή Νιάου, σε έχουνε μη στάξει κι είναι από μετάξι η γούνα σου η γκρι. But of course, nothing compares to the unforgettable Melina Mercouri singing Ta Pedia Tou Pirea in the famous film Never on Sunday "Πώς ήθελα να είχα ένα και δύο και τρία και τέσσερα παιδιά - Pos ithela na icha ena ke dyo ke tria ke tessera pedia - How would I want to have one and two And three and four children". And Raj Kapoor singing in Hindi his famous song: "Ichak Dana Bichak Dana Dane Upar Dana Ichak Dana" in Shree 420. Actually, most of the song is sung by Lata Mangeshkar and his part of the song was sung by Mukesh, but everybody knew that Raj Kapoor was the singer and Nargis was his female counterpart, and don't confuse us with facts. Singing Indian and Greek songs make us much closer to them.

The song in Yiddish that my wife loves most, actually as it describes her perfectly, as also many Jewish mothers from all over the world, is A Yiddishe Mame – about the Jewish mother who sacrifices herself for her children - A Yiddishe Mame, Es gibt nisht besser oif der velt, A Yiddishe Mame, Oy vey vi bitter ven zi felt. Vi shayn in likhtig iz in hoiz ven di mame iz do. Vi troyerig finster vert ven Got nemt ir oif Olam Haboh. In vasser in fayer volt zi gelofn far ihr kind, nisht halten ihr tayer, dos iz gevis di gresten zind. Oy, vi gliklekh un raykh iz der mentsh vos hot, Aza shayne matuneh geschenkt foon Got, Nor ayn altichke Yiddishe Mame, Oy, Mame Mayn! - A Yiddishe Mame, It doesn't get better on this earth, A Yiddishe Mame, How bitter when she is missing. How nice and bright it is at home, when the Mame is here. How sad and dark it becomes, when God takes her to Olam Haba (The World to Come). In water, through fire, she would have run for her child, Not to hold her dear, is surely the greatest sin. How lucky and rich is the one who has, Such a beautiful gift presented from God, Like an old Yiddishe Mame, My Yiddishe Mame! Here the well-known Regine \(on Wikipedia in English\) sings the song, I have met her at her famous discotheque in Paris in the early eighties (the only time that I went to a discotheque in my dozens of visits to Paris, the other nights I used to go to the theater).

I felt very close to the Portuguese long before I learned that probably our family comes from the Portuguese Marranos. And we sang the happy and sad songs of the carnival in Portuguese: "Manhã, tão bonita manhã, Na vida, uma nova canção, Cantando só teus olhos, Teu riso, tuas mãos, Pois há de haver um dia, Em que virás. Das cordas do meu violão, Que só teu amor procurou, Vem uma voz, Falar dos beijos perdidos, Nos lábios teus. Canta o meu coração, Alegria voltou, Tão feliz a manhã Deste amor." Morning, such a beautiful morning of carnival, In life, a new song, Only your eyes sing, your laugh, your hands, as there must be a day, when you'll come. From the cords of my guitar, that only your love has searched, comes out a voice, speaking about the lost kisses, on your lips. My heart sings, joy has returned, so happy is the morning, of this love. Actually, I learned by heart the words of dozens of more songs in more languages, or proverbs and sayings in about 12 languages, not counting the songs in the languages I knew most: French, Hebrew, English, Spanish, Italian and Ladino. I tried to give a gist of some of those songs, proverbs and poems, throughout this book in hundreds of examples.

And last but not least, a song that I learned when I was a small boy, a song that my mother Pauline taught me in Italian, used to correct me until I sang it perfectly in the right accent, also a love song – so fitting small boys, instead of learning lullabies, that I remember word by word, and that I sing now and then with all my international "repertoire". But I was not the only one in Israel who knew most of those songs and many more by heart, we were a cosmopolitan society, a society of immigrants where everybody brought his contribution, his culture, his songs – in French, Hebrew, Spanish, Portuguese, German, Polish, Russian, Arabic, Amhari, English, Italian, Hindi, Hungarian, Romanian, Bulgarian, Turkish, and 100 more languages. On the radio we heard most of the songs mentioned in this book and we saw films from most of those countries. Unfortunately, this doesn't happen anymore. Israel has become a one culture country – Hebrew, maybe also English, a language that most of the population speaks. That is what our forefathers intended by the melting pot, like in the US or Australia, but we lost also a lot, as nothing can compare to being cosmopolitan, without losing of course your Israeli, American or Australian roots. Before presenting the Italian song with Gigliola Cinquetti, I enjoy to present another immortal song Mamma with Beniamino Gigli (I link it also to the lyrics in Italian and English and another performance by Luciano Pavarotti) that my father Albert loved so much, as it reminded him of his mamma, as it reminds me of my mamma and papa, and so does Ruthy, and I hope that all our children and grandchildren will remember us with songs, stories and how we loved them so much. Here I feel Italian when I sing it, as a matter of fact I feel also Afro-American when I sing spirituals, Portuguese, Greek, Polish, Ashkenazi when I sing in Yiddish, Sephardic when I sing in Ladino, and of course Israeli when I sing in Hebrew, a polyglot!

Il tango delle capinere

The Lark's Tango

Laggiù nell'Arizona, terra di sogni e di chimere, se una chitarra suona
cantano mille capinere.

Down there in Arizona, land of dreams and chimeras, if a guitar sounds thousands of lark sing.

Hanno la chioma bruna, hanno la febbre in cuor, chi va cercar fortuna incontrerà l'amor.

They have brown hair,
they have the fever in their heart, who goes looking for fortune will find love.

A mezzanotte va
la ronda del piacere
e nell'oscurità ognuno vuol godere.

At midnight is the turn of pleasure and in the darkness everyone wants to enjoy.

Son baci di passion, l'amor non sa tacere
e questa è la canzon di mille capinere.

They're kisses of passion love doesn't know how to keep silent and this is the song of a thousand larks.

8.6 DECIPHERING IKEA'S INSTRUCTIONS IN 30 LANGUAGES

Everyone who receives instructions in many languages read them in his language and doesn't even look at the other languages. But only "crazy" polyglots like me when they receive instructions of Ikea in 30 languages, make the comparison between Deutsch (not so difficult to begin with), Dansk (how it differs from German), Suomi (no way, but I can understand by way of analogy at least 20%), Espanol (no problems), Polski (how it differs from Russian), Francais (this is my anchor), Islenska (the most difficult of all the Scandinavian languages), Svenska (and see the difference between voksen in Dansk, vuxna in Svenska and voxne in Norsk), Italiano (so simple). Lietuviu (no way, but a priori I give away), English (another anchor), Nederlands (volwassene compared to Deutsch – Erwachsenen), Norsk (I can't understand how it is so difficult to find the analogies between voxne and vuxna), Cesky (quite different from Polski), Magyar (sorry, I like your music, but no way that I would ever learn your difficult language). Portugues (if my ancestors and my Brazilian uncles learned the language so fast, why shouldn't I?), Bulgarski (quite far away from Russki), Russki (it is difficult to understand even when compared to the French text), Turkce (I don't understand a word, probably they don't include the proverbs and expressions that I learned from my Turkish father). Chinese, Japanese, Korean – Well, I have a problem here, I don't understand of course a word – but at least I can locate what are Chinese and Japanese, as they have similar signs, Korean have distinctive signs and to be on the safe side I verify on Wikipedia how you write Korean in Korean – and bingo! I was right.

But, still I haven't resolved a problem – I found Japanese and checked how it is written, but there are two kinds of Chinese writings that are written very similar and I couldn't discern if it was Mandarin, Cantonese or another language, anyhow Hindi it is not, but none of the headings means Chinese or Cantonese, although they are very similar. Now, next to it, I can see Thai, as it helps to visit Thailand several times. We continue – I heard that Bahasa Malaysia and Bahasa Indonesia are quite identical, and indeed they are very similar. Still further – Romana (mother tongue of my wife – piece of cake...), Hrvatski (the first time that I was in Croatia it took me a whole day until I figured that Hrvatski means Croatian, and for a Latin like me it means breaking my teeth. In Spanish actually you cannot even say statistics starting with two consonants and you have to say estadística, but our Croatian friends have three consonants Hrv and pronounce it without problems). Srpski (Serbian, almost identical to Croatian, so why do you need to make a civil war and separate the Croatians from the Serbs? But anything the Croatians can do – 3 starting consonants, their brothers Serbs can do better – with 5 consonants – Srpski...). Arabic (not too difficult, if you read it with the translation), Slovensky (you think that it is Slovenian, but you are wrong – it means Slovak language), Slovenscina (this is Slovene, why make life so complicate, couldn't everybody speak English or Interlingua...). Ellinika (my mother's father tongue, I tried to learn it several times, but I still can barely decipher the alphabet, and hardly can follow with a translation). How many languages altogether? 33, it took me a couple of hours to decipher all those languages and try to make sense. In this time I could have learned better a language or read 50 pages in French, 10 in Portuguese or 2 in Russian, and instead I continue to be a dilettante, knowing badly 50 languages instead of knowing well 10, and having to look in the dictionary if dilettante is written with two l or two t, or two l and two 2, or one l and two t...

8.7 ON ROMANCE LANGUAGES – MAINLY FRENCH, SPANISH AND DIALECTS

How to illustrate this chapter on linguistics? By giving for example the UN Universal Declaration of Human Rights in 72 languages or so in which I have some reading capabilities – a few lines for every language starting from French, my mother tongue, and continuing on the basis of similarity from language to language (with the English original first on all those segments) in the Romance Languages, then in the Germanic Languages, Slavic Languages, Hebrew, Arabic, Greek, Constructed Languages, until we come back to French, thus showing the universality of the languages, and that the Declaration means the same in all the languages? But, we have given a similar example with The Little Prince in 120 languages in which I have some reading capabilities. So, we have chosen ultimately to give a partial survey on the Romance Languages from the Encyclopaedia Britannica, which is the best website on the fascinating story of Linguistics. One can of course find all the detailed survey on those languages, as well as on the other languages and family of languages that I have learned or other languages as well.

Romance languages, group of related languages all derived from Vulgar Latin within historical times and forming a subgroup of the Italic branch of the Indo-European language family. The major languages of the family include French, Italian, Spanish, Portuguese, and Romanian, all national languages. Catalan also has taken on a political and cultural significance; among the Romance languages that now have less political or literary significance or both are the Occitan and Rhaetian dialects, Sardinian, and Dalmatian (extinct), among others. Of all the so-called families of languages, the Romance group is perhaps the simplest to identify and the easiest to account for historically. Not only do Romance languages share a good proportion of basic vocabulary—still recognizably the same in spite of some phonological changes—and a number of similar grammatical forms, but they can be traced back, with but few breaks in continuity, to the language of the Roman Empire. So close is the similarity of each of the Romance languages to Latin as currently known from a rich literature and continuous religious and scholarly tradition that no one doubts the relationship. For the nonspecialist, the testimony of history is even more convincing than the linguistic evidence: Roman occupation of Italy, the Iberian Peninsula, Gaul, and the Balkans accounts for the “Roman” character of the major Romance languages. Later European colonial and commercial contacts with parts of the Americas, of Africa, and of Asia readily explain the French, Spanish, and Portuguese spoken in those regions.

Origins and distribution

The name Romance indeed suggests the ultimate connection of these languages with Rome: the English word is derived from an Old French form of Latin Romanicus, used in the Middle Ages to designate a vernacular type of Latin speech (as distinct from the more learned form used by clerics) as well as literature written in the vernacular. The fact that the Romance languages share features not found in contemporary Latin textbooks suggests, however, that the version of Latin they continue is not identical with that of Classical Latin as known from literature. Nonetheless, although it is sometimes claimed that the other Italic languages (the Indo-European language group to which Latin belonged, spoken in Italy) did contribute features to Romance, it is fairly certain that it is specifically Latin itself, perhaps in a popular form, that is the precursor of the Romance languages.

By the beginning of the 21st century some 920 million people claimed a Romance language as their mother tongue, 300 million people as a second language. To this number may be added the not-inconsiderable number of Romance creole speakers (a creole is a simplified or pidgin form of a language that has become the native language of a community) scattered around the world. French creoles are spoken by more than 9.2 million people in the West Indies, North America, and islands of the Indian Ocean (e.g., Mauritius, Réunion, Rodrigues Island, the Seychelles); Portuguese creoles are spoken in Cape Verde, Guinea-Bissau, Sao Tome and Principe, India, and Malaysia (probably some 690,000 speakers); and Spanish creoles (including Palenquero and Chavacano, as well as Papiamentu [based on Portuguese but heavily influenced by Spanish]) are spoken by some 500,000 people in the West Indies and the Philippines. Many speakers use creole for informal purposes and the standard language for formal occasions. Romance languages are also used formally in some countries where one or more non-Romance languages are used by most speakers for everyday purposes. French, for example, is used alongside Arabic in Tunisia, Morocco, and Algeria, and it is an (or the) official language of 18 countries—Benin, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Cameroon, the Central African Republic, Chad, the Republic of the Congo, Côte d’Ivoire, the Democratic Republic of the Congo, Djibouti, Equatorial Guinea, Gabon, Guinea, Mali, Niger, Rwanda, Senegal, and Togo—on the continent of Africa and of Madagascar and several other islands off the coast of Africa. Portuguese is the official language of Angola, Cape Verde, Guinea-Bissau, Mozambique, and Sao Tome and Principe.

Although its influence has waned before the growing popularity of English as an international language, French is still widely used today as a second language in many parts of the world. The wealth of French literary tradition, its precisely formulated grammar bequeathed by 17th- and 18th-century grammarians, and the pride of the French in their language may ensure it a lasting importance among languages of the world. By virtue of the vast territories in which Spanish and Portuguese hold sway, those languages will continue to be of prime importance. Even though territorially it has comparatively little extension, the Italian language, associated with Italy's great cultural heritage, is still popular with students.

Classification methods and problems

Though it is quite clear which languages can be classified as Romance, on the basis primarily of lexical (vocabulary) and morphological (structural) similarities, the subgrouping of the languages within the family is less straightforward. Most classifications are, overtly or covertly, historico-geographic—so that Spanish and Portuguese are Ibero-Romance, French and Franco-Provençal are Gallo-Romance, and so on. Shared features in each subgroup that are not seen in other such groups are assumed to be ultimately traceable to languages spoken before Romanization. The first subdivision of the Romance area is usually into West and East Romance, with a dividing line drawn across Italy between La Spezia and Rimini. On the basis of a few heterogeneous phonetic features, one theory maintains that separation into dialects began early, with the Eastern dialect areas (including central and south Italy) developing popular features and the school-influenced Western speech areas maintaining more literary standards. Beyond this, the substrata (indigenous languages eventually displaced by Latin) and superstrata (languages later superimposed on Latin by conquerors) are held to have occasioned further subdivisions. Within such a schema there remain problem cases. Is Catalan, for instance, Ibero-Romance or Gallo-Romance, given that its medieval literary language was close to Provençal? Do the Rhaetian dialects group together, even though the dialects found in Italy are closer to Italian and the Swiss ones closer to French? Sardinian is generally regarded as linguistically separate, its isolation from the rest of the Roman Empire by incorporation into the Vandal kingdom in the mid-5th century providing historical support for the thesis. The exact position of Dalmatian in any classification is open to dispute.

A family tree classification is commonly used for the Romance languages. If, however, historical treatment of one phonetic feature is taken as a classificatory criterion for construction of a tree, results differ. Classified according to the historical development of stressed vowels, French would be grouped with North Italian and Dalmatian but not with Occitan, while Central Italian would be isolated. Classifications that are not based on family trees usually involve ranking languages according to degree of differentiation rather than grouping them; thus, if the Romance languages are compared with Latin, it is seen that by most measures Sardinian and Italian are least differentiated and French most (though in vocabulary Romanian has changed most). By most nonhistorical measures, standard Italian is a “central” language (i.e., it is quite close and often readily intelligible to all other Romance languages), whereas French and Romanian are peripheral (they lack similarity to other Romance languages and require more effort for other Romance speakers to understand them).

Languages of the family

What constitutes a language, as distinct from a dialect, is a vexing question, and opinion varies on just how many Romance languages are spoken today. The political definition of a language—one that is accepted as standard by a nation or people—is the least ambiguous one; according to this definition, French, Spanish, Portuguese, Italian, and Romanian are certainly languages and possibly also Romansh (since 1996 a semiofficial language of Switzerland, probably related to other Rhaetian dialects spoken in Italy) and Catalan (the official language of Andorra and the joint official language [together with Spanish] of the Spanish autonomous communities of Catalonia, Valencia, and the Balearic Islands). On linguistic grounds Sardinian (not the language of an independent nation since the 14th century) and Occitan (the medieval Provençal) are usually regarded as languages rather than dialects. The Rhaetian dialects of Italy (Ladin in the Dolomites and Friulian around Udine) are sometimes regarded as non-Italian, sometimes as dialects of the Italian language. Sicilian is different enough from northern and central Italian dialects to be given separate status often, but in Italy all neighbouring dialects are mutually intelligible, with differences becoming more marked with geographic distance. Franco-Provençal (the name given to a group of dialects spoken around the Alpine region of France and Italy) is often considered to be different from both French and Occitan, though some linguists hold that it is merely a transitional dialect. Only a few persons know it in France today, though it still survives in Italy's Valle d'Aosta region (where French, rather than Italian, remains the language of culture). Asturian and Galician (both spoken in Spain and Portugal), Corsican (France and Italy), and Piemontese, or Piedmontese (Italy), were once considered dialects of national languages, but by the 21st century they were considered distinct enough from the languages of their respective countries to be granted the status of languages. Other “dialects” also are fighting for “language” status on the basis of their written traditions or the active promotion of their use in writing.

Judeo-Spanish, or Ladino (not to be confused with Ladin), was once regarded not as an independent language but as an archaic form of Castilian Spanish preserving many features of the 15th-century language that was current when the Jews were expelled from Spain. There are some 100,000 to 200,000 speakers, mostly originating in the Balkans and Asia Minor but, after World War II, concentrated in Israel; most now reside in Israel, and others live in Turkey.

Some linguists believe that creoles are often different languages from their metropolitan counterparts; Haitian Creole, for instance, is said to be mutually unintelligible with French. Intelligibility varies so much with the speaker and the hearer, however, that it is difficult to formulate firm criteria on this basis.

Many Romance dialects literally or virtually ceased to be spoken in the 20th century. Of these, Dalmatian is the most striking, its last known speaker, one Tuone Udina (Italian Antonio Udina), having been blown up by a land mine in 1898. He was the main source of knowledge for his parents' dialect (that of the island of Veglia [modern Krk], though he was hardly an ideal informant. Vegliot Dalmatian was not his native language, and he had learned it only from listening to his parents' private conversations. Moreover, he had not spoken the language for 20 years at the time he acted as an informant, and he was deaf and toothless as well. Most of the other evidence for Dalmatian derives from documents from Zara (modern Zadar) and Ragusa (modern Dubrovnik) dating to the 13th–16th centuries. It is possible that, apart from isolated pockets, the language was then replaced by Croatian and, to a lesser extent, by Venetian (a dialect of Italian). It is certain, even from scanty evidence, that Dalmatian was a language in its own right, noticeably different from other Romance languages.

On the Istrian Peninsula of Croatia close to the island of Krk, another Romance variety precariously survives with probably fewer than one thousand speakers; known as Istriot, it may be related to Vegliot. Though some scholars connect it with Rhaetian Friulian dialects or with Venetian dialects of Italian, others maintain that it is an independent language. There are no texts except those collected by linguists. A little farther north in the same peninsula, another Romance dialect, Istro-Romanian (with about 500 speakers at the turn of the 21st century), is threatened with extinction. Usually classified as a Romanian dialect, it may have been carried to the Istrian Peninsula by Romanians from the northwestern part of the Balkan Peninsula who took refuge from the Turks in the 16th and 17th centuries; it has undergone strong Croatian influence. The first evidence of its existence is a short list of words in a historical work of 1698; there are also collections of folklore texts from the 19th century, but it is otherwise unwritten. Another isolated Romanian dialect that may be nearing extinction is Megleno-Romanian, spoken mainly in Kilkís prefecture, Greece, just west of the Vardar River, on the border between the Republic of Macedonia and Greece. In 1914 there were 13,000 speakers, but many emigrated to Asia Minor, other parts of what was once Yugoslavia, and Romania, where small pockets survive (they numbered about 5,000 speakers in the early 21st century). The only texts are those transcribed from oral traditions.

Other Romance tongues earlier ceased to be spoken. There is evidence, for instance, of an Ibero-Romance dialect spoken in Arab-occupied Spain until shortly after its reconquest by the Spanish, accomplished at the end of the 15th century. Usually known as Mozarabic, from the Arabic word meaning “Arabized person,” or as ‘ajamī (“barbarian language”), it was originally the spoken language of the urban bourgeoisie, who remained Christian while the peasantry generally converted to Islam, but it appears that many Arabs also came to speak Mozarabic. Because most of the evidence, apart from a 15th-century glossary from Granada, is written in Arabic script (which uses no vowel signs), it is difficult to reconstruct the phonology of the language, but it appears to be a very conservative Ibero-Romance dialect. Much of modern information about Mozarabic comes from medical and botanical works that give Mozarabic terms alongside the Arabic. To this was added the discovery of Mozarabic refrains (kharjahs) attached to Arabic love ballads (muwashshahs) of the 11th and 12th centuries; study of these began only in 1948. For much of the Muslim period (beginning in 711), Christians were treated tolerantly and became culturally Arabized. Even after persecution by zealous Moslem newcomers in the 12th century, the Mozarabs were often in conflict with Westernized “liberators” from the north. Their language died out soon after the Arabs were driven out of Spain at the end of the 15th century, though it is sometimes claimed that Mozarabic has left its mark on the dialects of southern Spain and Portugal.

Other Romance varieties may have developed in peripheral regions of the Roman Empire only to die out under pressure from neighbouring non-Italic languages; these regions are called Romania submersa by specialists. Often these extinct Romance varieties are known from words borrowed into surviving languages; the Afro-Asiatic Amazigh \(Berber\) languages, for instance, bear witness to the long and brilliant Roman period in North Africa that ended in the 7th century CE with Arab invasions, and the Brythonic, or British Celtic, languages (especially Welsh) retain many traces of what appears to have been a conservative Romance dialect, otherwise eliminated by Anglo-Saxon in the 5th century. Albanian contains so many Romance words that some style it “semi-Romance,” and farther north, in what was formerly the Roman province of Pannonia (corresponding to modern western Hungary and parts of eastern Austria, Slovenia, and northern Serbia), Romance speech was probably not dead at the time of the Magyar invasion at the end of the 10th century. Thus, there is reason to believe that Romance dialects may have been spoken at one time over much of southeastern Europe. It is also evident that Romance languages have been retreating south before German for some time, and it is probable that Romance tongues were used in the whole of Switzerland and parts of Bavaria and Austria until roughly the 9th to 10th century.

French

At the beginning of the 21st century, French—probably the most internationally significant of the Romance languages—was an official language of more than 25 countries. In France and Corsica about 56 million individuals use it as their first language; in Canada, more than 7.3 million; in Belgium, more than 3.3 million; in Switzerland (cantons of Neuchâtel, Vaud, Genève, Valais, Fribourg), more than 1.4 million; in Monaco, some 13,000; in Italy, some 302,000; and in the United States (especially Maine and Louisiana), some 2.1 million. Furthermore, more than 27 million Africans—in such countries as Benin, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Cameroon, the Central African Republic, Chad, Congo (Brazzaville), Congo (Kinshasa), Côte d'Ivoire, Djibouti, Equatorial Guinea, Gabon, Guinea, Madagascar, Mali, Niger, Rwanda, Senegal, and Togo—and millions of inhabitants of Vietnam, Laos, and Cambodia use it as their principal international language; many creole French speakers too use standard French in formal situations.

Standard French is based on the dialect of Paris—in the so-called Île-de-France, with its Francien dialect—which assumed importance in the second half of the 12th century; it was basically a north-central dialect with some northern features. Before that, other dialects, especially Norman (which developed in Britain as Anglo-Norman, widely used until the 14th century) and northern dialects (such as Picard), had more prestige, especially in the literary sphere. The legal reform known as the Edict of Villers-Cotterêts (1539), however, established Francien as the only official language (as against both Latin and other dialects) after it had proved to be the most popular written form. From then on, standard French began to replace local dialects, which were officially discouraged, though the standard language did not spread to popular usage in all regions until well into the 19th century. Dialectal features, which were still admired and cherished by 16th-century writers, were ridiculed in the 17th and 18th centuries, when the grammar and vocabulary of the modern language were standardized and polished to an unprecedented degree.

Linguistic change was more rapid and more drastic in northern France than it was in other European Romance regions, and influence from Latin was comparatively slight (though borrowing of Latin vocabulary has been great since the 14th century). The influence of the Germanic Frankish invaders is often held to account for exotic features in Old French, such as strong stress accent and abundant use of diphthongs and nasal vowels; but by the 15th century the language had begun to change, and a sober (even monotonous) intonation and loss of a stress accent became characteristic. The popularity of French as a first foreign language, in spite of numerous pronunciation difficulties for nearly all foreign speakers, is perhaps as much the result of the precise codification of its grammar, effectuated especially during the 18th century, as of the brilliance of its literature at all periods. The first document apparently written in French probably dates from 842; known as the Strasbourg Oaths, it is a Romance version of oaths sworn by two of Charlemagne's grandsons. Some claim that the text of this document is thinly disguised Latin constructed after the event to look authentic for political propaganda purposes; others suppose that its Latinizing tendencies reveal the struggle of the scribe with the problems of spelling French as it was spoken at the time. If the language of the Strasbourg Oaths is northern French, it is difficult to ascertain what dialect it represents—some say that of Picard, others Franco-Provençal, and so on.

The second existing text in Old French (with Picard and Walloon features) is a rendering of a short sequence by Prudentius on the life of St. Eulalia, precisely dated 880–882 CE. Two 10th-century texts (the Passion du Christ and the Vie de St. Léger) seem to mingle northern and southern dialect features, while another (the “Jonas fragment”) is obviously from the far north. In the 12th century the “gem” of the epic poems known as chansons de geste, La Chanson de Roland, was written. One of the most beautiful poems of its type in world literature, it evinces certain dialectal characteristics the origins of which are difficult to establish. In the 12th–13th century the Francien dialect became dominant, and it gained the status of literary language because of both the central position of the Île-de-France region and the political and cultural prestige of Paris. Modern dialects are classified mainly on a geographic basis, and most survive only in rural areas. Walloon, a dialect spoken mainly in Belgium, is something of an exception in that it has had a flourishing dialect literature since approximately 1600. Other dialects are grouped as follows:

- Central: Francien, Orléanais, Bourbonnais, Champenois
- Northern: Picard, Northern Norman
- Eastern: Lorrain, Bourguignon (Burgundian), Franc-Comtois
- Western: Norman, Gallo (around the Celtic Breton area), Angevin, Manceau
- Southwestern: Poitevin, Saintongeais, Angoumois

Outside France, the French of Canada, originally probably of northwestern dialect type, has developed the most individual features. Although 18th-century Canadian French was regarded as exceptionally “pure” by metropolitan commentators, it began to diverge from Parisian French after 1760 as a consequence of its isolation from the metropolis and of the ever-stronger influence of English. Canadian French is less clearly articulated, with less lip movement and with a more monotonous intonation, than standard French; some change in consonantal sounds occurs (/t/ and /d/ shift to /ts/ and /dz/, respectively, and both k and g followed by the letters i or e become palatalized [pronounced with the tongue touching the hard palate, or roof of the mouth]); nasal vowels tend to lose the nasal element; vocabulary and syntax are heavily Anglicized. Although intellectuals turn toward France for cultural inspiration, the pronunciation and usage of standard French is sometimes derided by French Canadians; this may be because their English compatriots are taught Parisian French at school. The French-speaking population of Canada is growing relatively fast, and more than four-fifths of the population of Quebec province use French as their everyday language. The continuing activities of the separatist movement provide evidence of the persistence of resentment among many French Canadians

Spanish

Spanish, the Romance language spoken as a first language by the most people in the world, was at the turn of the 21st century the (or an) official language of 18 American countries as well as of Spain and Equatorial Guinea. Although many South and Central Americans use native Indian languages as their first language, Spanish is continuing to spread. Estimated numbers of speakers are as follows (in order of numerical importance): Mexico, 85.8 million; Colombia, 40.9 million; Argentina, 35.6 million; Spain, 30.3 million; Venezuela, 24.7 million; Peru, 21.6 million; Chile, 13.7 million; Ecuador, 12 million; Cuba, 11.2 million; the Dominican Republic, 8.5 million; Honduras, 6.6 million; El Salvador, 6.5 million; Guatemala, 6.3 million; Nicaragua, 5.3 million; Costa Rica, 4 million; Bolivia 3.5 million; Puerto Rico, 3.2 million; Uruguay, 3.2 million; Panama, 2.4 million; Paraguay, 369,000. (The number of Spanish speakers in Equatorial Guinea is not available.) There are also 100,000 to 200,000 speakers of Judeo-Spanish (Ladino).

The dialect spoken by most Spanish speakers is basically Castilian, and indeed Castellano is still the name used for the language in several American countries. The other languages spoken in Spain include Aragonese, Asturian, Basque, Caló, Catalan-Valencian-Balear, Extremaduran, Fala, and Galician. The ascendancy of Castilian among Spanish dialects is the result of the particular circumstances of the Reconquista (the conquest of Moorish Spain by the Christian states of Spain, completed in 1492), with which the language spread to the south. Having established itself in Spain, the Castilian dialect, possibly in its southern, or Andalusian, form, was then exported to the New World during the Age of Discovery from the mid-15th to the mid-16th century. Standard Castilian is no longer the language of Old Castile, which was regarded as rustic and archaic already in the 15th century, but a modified form developed in Toledo in the 16th and 17th centuries and, more recently, in Madrid. Spanish-language American countries have developed their own standards, differing mainly in phonology (in which they often agree with the southern Spanish dialects) and in vocabulary (in which loanwords from English are more frequent), but differentiation is comparatively slight, and some Americans still regard true Castilian as their model. On the whole, American forms of Spanish are more musical and suave than the Castilian of Madrid, but it is remarkable how little deformation, or creolization, of the language has occurred. The first texts in Spanish consist of scattered words glossing two Latin texts of the 10th century, one from Rioja and the other from Castile; the language in the two documents shows few dialect differences. Another document, written about 980, seems to be Leonese in character. The Mozarabic verse forms known as kharjahs are the next oldest surviving texts, but by the middle of the 12th century the famous epic poem Cantar de mío Cid ("Song of My Cid") appeared in a language that is basically Castilian. Literary works in Leonese appear until the 14th century and in a conventionalized Aragonese until the 15th century, but Castilian was destined from the first to gain the upper hand, even making an impact on Portuguese, especially during the 15th and early 16th centuries.

8.8 ON THE MOZARABIC LANGUAGE

Mozarabic, more accurately Andalusi Romance, was a continuum of closely related Romance dialects spoken in Muslim-dominated areas of the Iberian Peninsula. Mozarabic descends from Late Latin and early Romance dialects spoken in the Hispania from the 5th to the 8th centuries and was spoken until the 14th century. This set of dialects came to be called the Mozarabic language by 19th century Spanish scholars, in their attempt to "hispanize" "al-Andalus", though there never was a common standard. The term is inaccurate, because it refers to Christians, and Andalusi Romance, as a part of the al-Andalus linguistic continuum, was spoken by Christians, Jews and Muslims alike. The word Mozarab is a loanword from Andalusi Arabic musta'rab, مُسْتَعَرَب, Classical Arabic musta'rib, meaning "who adopts the ways of the Arabs".

An example of a Romance Kharja (and translation) by the Jewish poet Yehuda Halevi:

Vayse meu corachón de mib:	My heart has left me,
ya Rab, si me tornarád?	Oh sir, will it return to me?
Tan mal meu doler li-l-habib!	So great is my pain for my beloved!
Enfermo yed, cuánd sanará?	It is sick, when will it be cured?,

These verses express the theme of the pain of longing for the absent lover (habib).

Jarcha en mozarabe

Traduccion al castellano:

¡Tant' amáre, tant' amáre,	¡Tanto amar, tanto amar,
habib, tant' amáre	amigo, tanto amar!
Enfermaron uelios gaios,	Enfermaron unos ojos antes alegres
e dolén tan male.	y ahora duelen tanto.

Jarcha en mozárabe:

Traducción al castellano:

Garīdboš, ay yermanēllaš	Decidme, ay hermanitas,
kóm kontenērhé mew mālē,	¿cómo contener mi mal?
sīn al-ḥabībnon bibrē'yo:	Sin el amado no viviré:
¿ad ob l'iréy demandāre?	¿adónde iré a buscarlo?
bay-še mio qorason de mib	Mi corazón se me va de mí.
Yā rabbī šī še tornarad	Oh Dios, ¿acaso se me tornará?
ṭanmal mio doler al-ḥabīb	¡Tan fuerte mi dolor por el amado!
Enfermo Ÿed quan šanarad	Enfermo está, ¿cuándo sanará?
¿Qué fará mamma?	¿Qué haré, madre?

Mio al-habib eštađ yana. Mi amado está a la puerta

The following text was written in the 11th century, a thousand years ago, in Mozarabic spoken by Christians, Moslems and Jews in the Moslem parts of Spain. Federico Corriente, placed this xarajat (a term which should be preferred to kharjas) in the framework of Arabic Literature, and the linguistic diglossic situation of al-Andalus. Most xarajat, actually, were written in Andalusí Arabic. Those with Andalusí Romance elements usually combine them with Andalusí Arabic forms. After reading the text, can you imagine what would happen to an author of such a text in some Moslem countries today, a thousand years after this kharja was written?

Mozarabic:	Spanish:	Valencian:	Portuguese:	Latin:	Standard Arabic	Arabic transliteration	English
Mio sidi Ibrahim ya tú, uemme dolge! Fente mib de nohte. In non, si non queris, irei-me tib, gari-me an ob legar-te.	Mi señor Ibrahim, ¡Oh tú, hombre dulce! Ven a mí de noche. Si no, si no quieres, yo me iré contigo, dime dónde encontrarte.	El meu senyor Ibrahim, oh tu, home dolç! Vine't a mi de nit. Si no, si no vols, aniré'm a tu, digues-me an on trobar-te.	Meu senhor Ibrahim, ó tu, homem doce! Vem a mim de noite. Senão, se não quiseres, ir-me-ei a ti, diz-me onde encontrar-te.	O domine mi Ibrahim, o tu, homo dulcis! Veni mihi nocte. Si non, si non vis, ibo tibi, dic mihi ubi te inveniam.	سيدي إبراهيم، يا رجلاً حلواً. تعال إليّ بالليل. وإن كنت لا تريد، سأذهب أنا إليك. قل لي أين أجدك.	Sīdi 'ibrāhīm yā rajulan hulwan! ta'āla 'ilay-ya bi-l-layli wa-'in kunta lā turīdu sa-'aḏhabu 'anā ilay-ka qul l-ī 'ayna 'ajidu-ka	My lord Ibrahim, O you, sweet man! Come to me at night. If not, if you do not want to come, I shall go to you, tell me where to find you.

8.9 OTHER ROMANCE LANGUAGES – MAINLY LADINO, PORTUGUESE, ITALIAN, ROMANIAN, OCCITAN

Judeo-Spanish/Ladino/Judezmo/Dzhudezmo/Spaniolit is the continuation of an archaic form of Castilian, reflecting the state of the language before 16th-century standardization. The expulsion of the Jews from the Iberian Peninsula in 1492 affected mainly the humbler classes, with the rich preferring “conversion,” but the latter often later chose voluntary exile to settle in England and the Netherlands, where their Sephardic tongue precariously survives as a religious language in a few communities. Earlier refugees fled to the Middle East and, once settled, continued to produce learned works in a literary archaic form of Castilian written in an adapted Hebrew script. Ladino, otherwise known as Judeo-Spanish, is the spoken and written Hispanic language of Jews of Spanish origin. Ladino did not become a specifically Jewish language until after the expulsion from Spain in 1492 - it was merely the language of their province.

When the Jews were expelled from Spain and Portugal they were cut off from the further development of the language, but they continued to speak it in the communities and countries to which they emigrated. Ladino therefore reflects the grammar and vocabulary of 14th and 15th century Spanish. The further away from Spain the emigrants went, the more cut off they were from developments in the language, and the more Ladino began to diverge from mainstream Castilian Spanish. In Amsterdam, England and Italy, those Jews who continued to speak 'Ladino' were in constant contact with Spain and therefore they basically continued to speak the Castilian Spanish of the time. However, in the Sephardi communities of the Ottoman Empire, the language not only retained the older forms of Spanish, but borrowed so many words from Hebrew, Arabic, Greek, Turkish, and even French, that it became more and more distorted. Ladino was nowhere near as diverse as the various forms of Yiddish, but there were still two different dialects, which corresponded to the different origins of the speakers. 'Oriental' Ladino was spoken in Turkey and Rhodes and reflected Castilian Spanish, whereas 'Western' Ladino was spoken in Greece, Macedonia, Bosnia, Serbia and Romania, and preserved the characteristics of northern Spanish and Portuguese. The vocabulary of Ladino includes hundreds of archaic Spanish words which have disappeared from modern day Spanish, and also includes many words from different languages that have been substituted for the original Spanish word, from the various places Ladino speaking Jews settled. So, you can say in Ladino shans, mazal, ventura, meaning luck.

Some terms were actually transferred from one community to another through commercial or cultural relations, whereas others remained peculiar to particular communities. These foreign words derive mainly from Hebrew, Arabic, Turkish, Greek, French, and to a lesser extent from Portuguese and Italian. In the Ladino spoken in Israel, several words have been borrowed from Yiddish. For most of its lifetime, Ladino was written in the Hebrew alphabet, in Rashi script, or in Solitro, a cursive method of writing letters. It was only in the 20th century that Ladino was ever written using the Latin alphabet. In fact, what is known as 'rashi script' was originally a Ladino script which became used centuries after Rashi's death in printed books to differentiate Rashi's commentary from the text of the Torah. At various times Ladino has been spoken in North Africa, Egypt, Greece, Turkey, Yugoslavia, Bulgaria, Romania, France, Israel, and, to a lesser extent, in the United States (the highest populations being in Seattle, Los Angeles, New York, and south Florida) and Latin America. By the beginning of this century, with the spread of compulsory education in the language of the land, Ladino began to disintegrate. Emigration to Israel from the Balkans hastened the decline of Ladino in Eastern Europe and Turkey. The Nazis destroyed most of the communities in Europe where Ladino had been the first language among Jews. Ladino speakers who survived the Holocaust and emigrated to Latin America tended to pick up regular Spanish very quickly, whilst others adopted the language of whichever country they ended up in. Israel is now the country with the greatest number of Ladino speakers, with about 200,000 people who still speak or understand the language, but even they only know a very limited and basic Ladino. It is important to note that Ladino is not modern Spanish.

Portuguese

Portuguese owes its importance—as the second Romance language (after Spanish) in terms of numbers of speakers—largely to its position as the language of Brazil, where in the early 21st century some 175 million people spoke it. In Portugal, the language's country of origin, there are about 10 million speakers. The Galician (Gallego, Galego) language of northwestern Spain is historically a Portuguese dialect, though now much influenced by the standard Castilian Spanish; more than 2.6 million speakers use Galician as their home language. It is estimated that there are also some 5 million Portuguese speakers in Africa (some of whom also use creole) and about 560,000 in the United States.

There are five main Portuguese dialect groups, all mutually intelligible: (1) Northern, or Galician, (2) Central, or Beira, (3) Southern (Estremenho), including Lisbon, Alentejo, and Algarve, (4) Insular, including the dialects of Madeira and the Azores, and (5) Brazilian. Standard Portuguese was developed in the 16th century, basically from the dialects spoken from Lisbon to Coimbra. Brazilian (Brasileiro) differs from the Portuguese spoken in Portugal in several respects, in syntax as well as phonology and vocabulary, but many writers still use an academic metropolitan standard. A creolized form, once widespread in Brazil, seems now to be dying out. A Judeo-Portuguese is attested in 18th-century Amsterdam and Livorno (Leghorn, Italy), but virtually no trace of that dialect remains today.

In the region of northwestern Spain that adjoins Portugal, the Galician dialects lack uniformity and are closer to Spanish. Even in Castile, where standard Spanish (Castilian) originated, Galician was the conventional language of the courtly lyric until roughly 1400, but it lost ground in the 15th century, and Castilian replaced Galician as the official language of Galicia in 1500. Dialect poetry in Galician has flourished from the 18th century, with an upsurge in the 19th century.

Until the 15th century, Portuguese and Galician formed one single linguistic unit, Gallego-Portuguese. The first evidence for the language consists of scattered words in 9th–12th-century Latin texts; continuous documents date from approximately 1192, the date assigned to an extant property agreement between the children of a well-to-do family from the Minho River valley. Literature began to flourish especially during the 13th and 14th centuries, when the soft Gallego-Portuguese tongue was preferred by courtly lyric poets throughout the Iberian Peninsula except in the Catalan area. In the 16th century, Portugal's golden age, Galician and Portuguese grew further apart, with the consolidation of the standard Portuguese language. From the 16th to the 18th century, Galician was used only as a home language (i.e., as a means of communication within the family). Toward the end of the 18th century, it was revived as a language of culture. In the 21st century, with Spanish, it is an official language of the comunidad autónoma ("autonomous community") of Galicia.

Italian

In the early 21st century Italian was spoken by more than 61 million people, of whom the vast majority lived in peninsular Italy. It is the official language of Italy, San Marino, and (together with Latin) Vatican City. Italian is also (with German and French) an official language of Switzerland's Ticino canton, where it is spoken by some 335,000. Italian is also used as a common language in France (the Alps and Côte d'Azur) and in small communities in Croatia and Slovenia. On the island of Corsica a Tuscan variety of Italian is spoken, though Italian is not the language of culture. Overseas (e.g., in the United States, where it is estimated that there are some 1,100,000 Italian speakers; in Brazil, with about 750,000, and in Argentina, with about 640,000) speakers sometimes do not know the standard language and use only dialect forms. Increasingly, they only rarely know the language of their parents or grandparents. Standard Italian was once widely used in Somalia and Malta, but no longer. In Libya too its use is dying out.

In modern Italy, although dialects are still the primary spoken form, standard Italian is virtually the only written language. Speakers of an Italian dialect, even one as superficially different as Sicilian, can with effort understand standard Italian and can even learn it by such means as listening to radio and television programs. For most Italians, first contact with the standard language comes in primary school, in which until recently it was the only dialect used. Standard Italian is virtually the only dialect of culture in modern Italy, and with immigration from the south to the industrial north it became the language of intercommunication.

Standard Italian began to be developed in the 13th and 14th centuries as a literary dialect. At first basically a Florentine dialect stripped of local peculiarities, it has since acquired some characteristics of the dialect of Rome in particular and has always been heavily influenced by Latin. It overlies a wide variety of dialects, which are sometimes considered to represent a fundamental differentiation between northern and southern Italy that dates from Roman times. Today, however, these variant dialects form a continuum of intelligibility, although geographically distant dialects may be radically different. The northern dialects include what are often called the Gallo-Italian dialects (Piemontese, Lombard, Ligurian, Emilian-Romagnol, Venetian), in which some linguists discern the influence of a Celtic (Gaulish) substratum (i.e., the traces of a language previously spoken in the region).

Outside Italy, Italian dialects are heavily influenced by contact with other languages (English in New York; Spanish in Buenos Aires). Judeo-Italian (Italkian) is nearly extinct; an entire colony of 6,000 Corfu Jews, who used a Venetan dialect as a home language, was exterminated during World War II.

Early texts from Italy are written in dialects of the language that only later became standard Italian. Possibly the very first text is a riddle from Verona, dating from perhaps the 8th century, but its language is Latinized. More surely Italian are some 10th-century documents from Montecassino (testimonies in court—e.g., Placiti [decrees] of Capua, of Sessa, and so on), after which there are three central Italian texts of the 11th century. The first literary work of any length is the Tuscan Ritmo Laurenziano (“Laurentian Rhythm”) from the end of the 12th century, followed soon by other compositions from the Marches and Montecassino. In the 13th century lyric poetry was first written in a conventionalized Sicilian dialect that influenced later developments in Tuscany.

Romanian

In the early 21st century there were about 23,660,000 speakers of Romanian, of whom about 19,700,000 live in Romania, some 3,000,000 in Moldova, some 318,000 in Ukraine, about 40,000 in Serbia and 10,000 in Hungary. There are about 85,000 Romanian speakers in the United States. An additional 500,000 speak Aromanian (also called Macedo-Romanian, or Vlach), a group of dialects scattered across Greece, Macedonia, Bulgaria, Albania, Serbia, and Romania. The standard language of Romania is based on a Walachian variety of so-called Daco-Romanian, the majority group of dialects; it was developed in the 17th century mainly by religious writers of the Orthodox church and includes features from a number of dialects, though Bucharest usage provides the current model. Daco-Romanian is fairly homogeneous but shows greater dialectal diversity in the Transylvanian Alps, from which region the language may have spread to the plains. During the Soviet era the language of Moldova was written in the Cyrillic alphabet, called Moldavian, and held by Soviet scholars to be an independent Romance language. Currently called either Romanian or Moldovan, since 1989 the language has been written in the Roman alphabet. The dialects of Romanian are barely mutually intelligible with the standard, and some can be counted as separate languages; these include Megleno-Romanian (Meglenitic) and Istro-Romanian, both of which are nearly extinct, and the more vigorous Aromanian. Numbers have probably decreased considerably, but certainly before 1940 Aromanians were often prominent businessmen in their localities. The first known inscription in Aromanian, dated 1731, was found in 1952 at Ardenita, in Albania; texts date to the end of the 18th century, and literary texts were published in the 19th and 20th centuries (mostly in Bucharest). The first known Daco-Romanian text is a private letter of Walachian origin dated 1521, though some manuscript translations of religious texts show Transylvanian dialect features and may be earlier. The oldest printed texts are Evangeliiarul slavo-român (1551–52; “The Slavo-Romanian Gospels”) of Sibiu and the works of Deacon Coresi, beginning in 1559. The vast majority of early texts are written in Cyrillic script, the Roman (Latin) alphabet having been officially adopted in 1859 at the time of the union of Walachia and Moldavia. Literature in Romanian began to flourish in the 19th century, when the emerging nation turned toward other Romance countries, especially France, for cultural inspiration. This circumstance had important consequences for the language, triggering the so-called re-Romanization of Romanian.

Minor languages - Occitan

Occitan (also called Languedoc, or Provençal) is the modern name given by linguists to the group of dialects that in the early 21st century were spoken by some 1.9 million people in the south of France. All Occitan speakers now use French as their official language, but their local dialects remain lively and, across most of the area, remarkably homogeneous. The name Occitan derives from the old name Occitanie (formed on the model of Aquitaine) of the area now known as Languedoc. The medieval language is often called langue d’oc, which denoted a language using oc (from Latin hoc) for “yes” in contrast to langue d’oil, denoting French, and the si languages, Spanish and Italian. In the area itself, the names Lemosí (Limousin) and Proensal (Provençal) were formerly used, but today these names are usually considered too localized to designate the whole range of dialects. Members of a vigorous literary movement in the Provence region, however, still prefer to call their language Provençal. Occitan was rich in poetic literature in the Middle Ages until the north crushed political power in the south (1208–29). The standard language was well established, however, and it did not really succumb before French until the 16th century, while only after the Revolution of 1789 did the French language penetrate into popular use in place of Occitan. In the mid-19th century a literary Renaissance, led by the Félibrige and based on the dialect of the Arles-Avignon region, lent new lustre to Occitan, and a modern standard dialect was established. The most famous figure of this movement was Frédéric Mistral, a Nobel Prize-winning poet. Almost contemporaneously, a similar movement based in Toulouse arose and concentrated on problems of linguistic and orthographic standardization to provide a wider base for literary endeavour. The Occitan dialects have changed comparatively little since the Middle Ages, though now French influence is increasingly evident. Perhaps this influence has helped them to remain more or less mutually intelligible. The main dialect areas are Limousin, in the northwest corner of the Occitan area; Auvergnat, in the north-central region of this area; northeastern Alpine-Provençal; and Languedoc and Provençal, on the west and east of the Mediterranean seacoast, respectively. Gascon, in the southwest of France, is usually classified as an Occitan dialect, though to most other southerners it is today less readily comprehensible than Catalan. Some scholars claim that it has always been distinct from Occitan, because of the influence of a non-Celtic Aquitanian pre-Roman population. The Roman name of the region, Vasconia (from which the name Gascony derives), suggests the relationship of its original population with the non-Indo-European Basques.

9. INNOVATION, SCIENCE AND FUTUROLOGY, ISRAEL – START-UP NATION

The reader can find details on the books and innovation/scientific/futurology topics on Wikipedia & Encyclopaedias, on Amazon websites, on Israel Innovation websites, and on Cory's books/science/futurology websites

Reading BOOKS - The World in 2050 by Laurence C. Smith, The Selfish Gene by Richard Dawkins, A Brief History of Mankind by Yuval Noah Harari, Atlas of the Human Body, Comment ça marche – How Does It Work, Encyclopedia of the family's health. (see also biographies of scientists, inventors). Read recently: Senor Dan & Singer Saul, Start-Up Nation: The Story of Israel's Economic Miracle, Twelve Hachette Book Group, 2011

My high school education was mainly in science, biology, physics, chemistry and mathematics. However, I decided to pursue my academic studies in social sciences, with avocations in humanities and linguistics. During the years, I continued to read books on innovation, science and futurology, and most of my career was in the high-tech industry, first at Israel Aircraft Industries, and after that at Elbit, the leading non-governmental high tech company in Israel and one of the world's leading companies in some of the defense high tech systems and products. I was VP Sales and Finance at Elbit, where I worked from 1973 to 1987, and I focused my activities in innovation in the critical period of global breakthrough to the United States (joint ventures with leading defense industries, M&A and IPO), Asia and Latin America. I was also responsible (at least partly) of Marketing, Strategic Planning, Data Processing, R&D grants from the Israeli Chief Scientist programs, commercial applications to the defense technology, and was instrumental in Elbit's innovation breakthrough in the eighties, including by raising large funds through R&D debentures, IPO based primarily on Elbit's innovation activities, and very large grants from the Chief Scientist. When working at Elbit, but especially when I worked as a project manager from 1987 to 2000, I specialized in Technology Transfer - conducting of negotiations and agreements, including development, manufacturing and marketing rights, between large European, American and Israeli companies, such as Nixdorf, Alcatel, Hon and Global. One of my most important achievements in innovation was as the manager of a Satellite Communications Consortium (1991-1993), comprising of some of the largest Israeli companies: Israel Aircraft Industries, Rafael/Galram, Elisra, Gilat, Technion, obtaining for them very large R&D grants from the Israeli Chief Scientist.

9.1 ON THE HIGH TECH COMPANY ELBIT SYSTEMS WHERE CORY WORKED

We hereby give some details on Elbit Systems, when I worked there until 1987 and today. Elbit's competence is mainly in defense electronics, first for the Israeli Defense Forces, but during the period that I was VP Sales and Finance, the company achieved a major breakthrough in its international activities, Elbit became a multi-national company, a leader in innovation, with exports of more than 50% of its sales – mainly to the United States, and was the most profitable high tech company in Israel, in spite of an annual inflation rate of up to 500%. Today (from Wikipedia): Elbit Systems Ltd. is an Israel-based international defense electronics company engaged in a wide range of programs throughout the world. The Company, which includes Elbit Systems and its subsidiaries, operates in the areas of aerospace, land and naval systems, command, control, communications, computers, intelligence surveillance and reconnaissance ("C4ISR"), unmanned aircraft systems ("UAS"), advanced electro-optics, electro-optic space systems, EW suites, signal intelligence ("SIGINT") systems, data links and communications systems and radios. The Company also focuses on the upgrading of existing military platforms, developing new technologies for defense, homeland security and commercial aviation applications and providing a range of support services, including training and simulation systems. Elbit's Revenues in 2014 were about $3 billion, with a Net Income of about 6%.

Elbit Systems has approximately 12,000 employees, the majority of whom are engaged in engineering, research and development, and other technical areas. Elbit Systems' shares are traded on the Tel Aviv Stock Exchange and OTC in the United States (NASDAQ:ESLT). Elbit's business ethics: Conducting our business ethically is one of Elbit Systems' core values. Our policy is to follow best practice compliance standards applicable to the broad range of our global activities. Because of the significance we place on ethical business conduct, our Code of Conduct and Business Ethics, our Anti-Bribery Compliance Policy and our Supplier Code of Conduct are all publicly available as provided below. Code of Conduct and Business Ethics - As part of our ongoing Ethics compliance program, and consistent with legal requirements applicable to publicly traded companies, we are pleased to attach our updated Code of Conduct and Business Ethics as approved by Elbit Systems Board of Directors. (English version) (Hebrew version). Because of the importance we place on conducting our activities in an ethical manner, our employees, officers and directors are committed to following the Code as well as our other ethics and compliance related procedures and policies. The Code contains a "whistleblower" process to facilitate reporting of Code violations. Anti-Bribery Compliance Policy - The international nature of our business and our work with governmental customers and end users around the world require us to be compliant with anti-bribery laws, regulations and standards. Our employees, officers and directors are committed to anti-bribery compliance as set forth in our Anti-Bribery Compliance Policy, which also describes our policy on business entertainment and gifts. (English version) (Hebrew version).

9.2 ACTIVITIES IN INNOVATION OF CORY'S CHILDREN JOSEPH, AMIR & SHIRLY, CORY'S IN-LAW DAN SCHECHTMAN, 2011 NOBEL PRIZE IN CHEMISTRY - ARTICLE

My children are very active in innovation: Joseph is one of the most innovative in the pioneering field of sustainable architecture, building the Porter School of Environmental Studies Building at the Tel Aviv University, ranking among the 17 most sustainable buildings in the world! See also his lecture at TEDx on green architecture. Amir is one of the most innovative marketing directors in the field of Internet advertising in the US, working in Yahoo, AdapTV, AOL and Verizon, thinking outside the box, finding innovative ways to reach new market segments that nobody before has found. Amir registered many innovative patents with Yahoo!, AdapTV/AOL. Shirly \(Cory\) Garfunkel works as a business development manager of a high tech innovative company Plarium in the field of strategic games & tries to find investors for innovative startups.

JOSEPH CORY - Geotectura studio is an award winning design practice that offers comprehensive services including architecture, interiors and environmental simulations. Established by Architect Dr. Joseph Cory, Geotectura is known for being creative and innovative while integrating sustainable design principles within each project. Geotectura's projects are based on multi-disciplinary research using an open source design approach and BIM in order to optimize the best results for each challenge. The office design buildings that are aiming to reduce the impact of natural resource consumption and green house emission, reduce operating costs, optimize life-cycle economic performance and enhance occupant comfort and health. The research and experiment approach are well integrated within each design challenge taking into consideration how the design will improve comfort, usability and productivity. The projects Geotectura designed for the academic world has delivered a sophisticated and economical result that established a new benchmark for academic buildings in Israel.

Scope of service:

- Sustainable evaluation and analysis in the preliminary design phase
- BIM (Building Information Modeling) integration
- Detailed Design: Conceptual design, Design Development, Tender documentation, Construction Drawing, Design Coordination
- Interior Design

The Porter School of Environmental Studies - Completed (2014)

Solar Decathlon - Completed (2013)

Shenkar College - Under Construction (2015-2017)

Media and Computer Games Labs in Shenkar - Completed (2015)

AMIR CORY - • Product management and marketing professional specializing in video advertising, targeting, brand centric optimization, data partnerships and closed-loop solutions

- Extensive experience conceptualizing, developing, launching and scaling innovative advertising products
- Revenue motivated leader with proven track record of growing and mentoring product teams and managing diverse cross-functional and complex initiatives
- Strong communicator, with experience working with senior management, sales, agencies, advertisers and partners
- Inventor of several non-provisional patent applications regarding mechanisms for anonymous targeting, ad effectiveness and data attribution

Specialties: Product marketing, product management, online advertising, behavioral targeting, closed-loop marketing, market research, search, ad effectiveness, marketing ROI, analytics, search syndication, financial modeling & analysis, deal negotiation, data partnerships, business development

Patents

Method and system for anonymous measurement of online advertisement using offline sales

United States 8935177
Issued January 15, 2015

Evaluating Third Party Targeting Data

United States 20130024269
Filed July 19, 2011

Systems and Methods for Dynamic Optimization of Data Element Utilization According to Objectives

United States 14/754,102
Filed June 29, 2015

Optimization of Data Element Utilization According to Multi-Touch Attribution

United States 14/861,800
Filed September 22, 2015

Optimization of Data Element Utilization Using Demographic Data

United States 14/861,939
Filed September 22, 2015

Priority-Based Optimization of Data Element Utilization

United States 14/861,888
Filed September 22, 2015

Systems and Methods of Dynamic Optimization of Viewability Rate Utilizing Pre-Bid Client-Side Detection

United States 14/843,456
Filed September 2, 2015

SHIRLY (CORY) GARFUNKEL

Experience

HRIS Project Manager of SuccessFactors system

Plarium

June 2015 – Present (9 months)

BI Business Analyst and Developer

Amdocs

June 2014 – June 2015 (1 year 1 month)

- BI analytic consultant.
- Implementation in Success Factors system.
- BO developer.
- Data Architecture.
- Writing Business Design of all the user needs: Technical and business ones Source To Target.
- Implementation and QA.
- Expertise in HR module.
- Meeting schedule of Gants.
- Participation in design review of the business needs.
- Knowledge in SQL.

Senior SAP BI BW Consultant

Matrix

August 2013 – January 2014 (6 months)

Senior SAP BW Consultant

Advanced Solutions, An HP Company

January 2009 – February 2013 (4 years 2 months)

SAP BW Consultant

Advantech

February 2006 – January 2009 (3 years)

SAP BW Consultant

israel aircraft industries

December 2004 – February 2006 (1 year 3 months)

SAP BW Consultant

DAN SHECHTMAN

Last but not least, Dan Shechtman, my in-law, father of Ella, my son Amir's wife, was awarded the 2011 Nobel Prize in Chemistry for the discovery of quasicrystals. Shechtman is a professor of Material Science at the Technion – Israel Institute of Technology, an Associate of the US Department of Energy's Ames Laboratory, and Professor at Iowa State University and other universities. We hereby present a summary of Shechtman's innovation activities with a link to his lecture on this topic (I also gave a lecture at Shechtman's course on innovation).

DAN SHECHTMAN (Hebrew: דן שכטמן; born January 24, 1941) is the Philip Tobias Professor of Materials Science at the Technion – Israel Institute of Technology, an Associate of the US Department of Energy's Ames Laboratory, and Professor of Materials Science at Iowa State University. On April 8, 1982, while on sabbatical at the U.S. National Bureau of Standards in Washington, D.C., Shechtman discovered the icosahedral phase, which opened the new field of quasiperiodic crystals. Shechtman was awarded the 2011 Nobel Prize in Chemistry for the discovery of quasicrystals, making him one of six Israelis who have won the Nobel Prize in Chemistry. Dan Shechtman was born in 1941 in Tel Aviv, in what was then Mandatory Palestine; the city became part of the new state of Israel in 1948. He is married to Prof. Tzipora Shechtman, Head of the Department of Counseling and Human Development at Haifa University, and author of two books on psychotherapy. They have a son Yoav Shechtman (a postdoctoral researcher in the lab of W. E. Moerner) and three daughters: Tamar Finkelstein (an organizational psychologist at the Israeli police leadership center), Ella Shechtman-Cory (a PhD in clinical psychology), and Ruth Dougoud-Nevo (also a PhD in clinical psychology).

After receiving his Ph.D. in Materials Engineering from the Technion in 1972, where he also obtained his B.Sc. in Mechanical Engineering in 1966 and M.Sc. in Materials Engineering in 1968, Prof. Shechtman was an NRC fellow at the Aerospace Research Laboratories at Wright Patterson AFB, Ohio, where he studied for three years the microstructure and physical metallurgy of titanium aluminides. In 1975 he joined the department of materials engineering at Technion. In 1981–1983 he was on Sabbatical at Johns Hopkins University, where he studied rapidly solidified aluminum transition metal alloys, in a joint program with NBS. During this study he discovered the Icosahedral Phase which opened the new field of quasiperiodic crystals.

In 1992–1994 he was on sabbatical at National Institute of Standards and Technology (NIST), where he studied the effect of the defect structure of CVD diamond on its growth and properties.

Shechtman's Technion research is conducted in the Louis Edelstein Center, and in the Wolfson Centre which is headed by him. He served on several Technion Senate Committees and headed one of them. Shechtman joined the Iowa State faculty in 2004. He currently spends about five months a year in Ames on a part-time appointment. Since 2014 he has been the head of the International Scientific Council of Tomsk Polytechnic University.

From the day Shechtman published his findings on quasicrystals in 1984 to the day Linus Pauling died (1994), Shechtman experienced hostility from him toward the non-periodic interpretation. "For a long time it was me against the world," he said. "I was a subject of ridicule and lectures about the basics of crystallography. The leader of the opposition to my findings was the two-time Nobel Laureate Linus Pauling, the idol of the American Chemical Society and one of the most famous scientists in the world. For years, 'til his last day, he fought against quasi-periodicity in crystals. He was wrong, and after a while, I enjoyed every moment of this scientific battle, knowing that he was wrong." Linus Pauling is noted saying "There is no such thing as quasicrystals, only quasi-scientists."¹ Pauling was apparently unaware of a paper in 1981 by H. Kleinert and K. Maki which had pointed out the possibility of a non-periodic Icosahedral Phase in quasicrystals (see the historical notes). The head of Shechtman's research group told him to "go back and read the textbook" and a couple of days later "asked him to leave for 'bringing disgrace' on the team." Shechtman felt dejected. On publication of his paper, other scientists began to confirm and accept empirical findings of the existence of quasicrystals.

The Nobel Committee at the Royal Swedish Academy of Sciences said that "his discovery was extremely controversial," but that his work "eventually forced scientists to reconsider their conception of the very nature of matter." Through Shechtman's discovery, several other groups were able to form similar quasicrystals,¹ finding these materials to have low thermal and electrical conductivity, while possessing high structural stability.¹ Quasicrystals have also been found naturally. A quasiperiodic crystal, or, in short, quasicrystal, is a structure that is ordered but not periodic. A quasicrystalline pattern can continuously fill all available space, but it lacks translational symmetry. "Aperiodic mosaics, such as those found in the medieval Islamic mosaics of the Alhambra palace in Spain and the Darb-i Imam shrine in Iran, have helped scientists understand what quasicrystals look like at the atomic level. In those mosaics, as in quasicrystals, the patterns are regular -- they follow mathematical rules -- but they never repeat themselves." "An intriguing feature of such patterns, [which are] also found in Arab mosaics, is that the mathematical constant known as the Greek letter tau, or the "golden ratio", occurs over and over again. Underlying it is a sequence worked out by Fibonacci in the 13th century, where each number is the sum of the preceding two." Quasicrystalline materials could be used in a large number of applications, including the formation of durable steel used for fine instrumentation, and non-stick insulation for electrical wires and cooking equipment., but presently have no technological applications. The Nobel prize was 10 million Swedish krona (approximately US$1.5 million).

Awards

- 2011 Nobel Prize in Chemistry for the discovery of quasicrystals
- 2008 European Materials Research Society (E-MRS) 25th Anniversary Award
- 2002 EMET Prize in Chemistry
- 2000 Muriel & David Jacknow Technion Award for Excellence in Teaching
- 2000 Gregori Aminoff Prize of the Royal Swedish Academy of Sciences
- 1999 Wolf Prize in Physics.
- 1998 Israel Prize, for Physics.

- 1993 Weizmann Science Award
- 1990 Rothschild Prize in Engineering
- 1988 New England Academic Award of the Technion
- 1988 International Award for New Materials of the American Physical Society
- 1986 Physics Award of the Friedenberg Fund for the Advancement of Science and Education

BREAKING THE WALL TO A START-UP NATION. How Technological Entrepreneurship Saves Economies With Limited Natural Resources

When Dan Shechtman became a full professor at Technion in 1986 and initiated a new class on technological entrepreneurship, the word “start up” – which became a mantra after the dot-com boom – was not that fashionable yet. Even today, entrepreneurship education is not fully explored in business schools, where students rather learn about maintaining a company than about bringing a good idea to a profitable realisation. From today’s perspective, it is not surprising that Shechtman’s unique programme became one of the most attended courses at Technion and that by now, the class was visited by more than 10,000 engineers and scientists. Shechtman’s research as a chemist, which was led mostly during his sabbatical years, opened the new science of quasiperiodic crystals and explored several other subjects, earning him recognitions such as the Wolf Prize in Physics, the Gregori Aminoff Prize of the Royal Swedish Academy of Sciences, the EMRS Award and the Nobel Prize in Chemistry in 2011. To Dan Shechtman, technological entrepreneurship is more relevant than ever, having turned Israel from a country with scarce natural resources to a powerhouse of innovation. At Falling Walls, Shechtman, a pioneer of an entrepreneurial revolution that changed the face of a country, explains how the fostering of strong national start up cultures, science education and supportive policies can help developing countries to economic growth and prosperity.

9.3 ISRAEL – START-UPS, INVENTIONS, SILICON WADI

Israel is called Start-Up Nation as it is a country with advanced scientific accomplishments – see the website on the book by that name by Dan Senor and Saul Singer, list of Israeli inventions and discoveries, science and technology in Israel, list of Israeli companies quoted on the NASDAQ, mostly technology companies, Israeli Chief Scientist, Israeli Ingenuity, Invest in Israel, the Intellectual Capital of Israel, and other sources as well. We hereby quote from Wikipedia an article on the start-up industry of Israel, called also Silicon Wadi (or valley in Hebrew/Arabic).

Silicon Wadi (Hebrew: סיליקון ואדי, lit: "Silicon Valley") is an area with a high concentration of high-tech industries in the coastal plain in Israel, similar to Silicon Valley in California, in the United States. Silicon Wadi is considered second in importance only to its Californian counterpart. The area covers much of the country, although especially high concentrations of hi-tech industry can be found in the area around Tel Aviv including small clusters around the cities of Ra'anana, Petah Tikva, Herzliya, Netanya, the academic city of Rehovot and its neighbour Rishon Le Zion. In addition, hi-tech clusters can be found in Haifa and Caesarea. More recent hi-tech establishments have been raised in Jerusalem, and in towns such as Yokneam Illit and Israel's first "private city," Airport City, near Tel Aviv.

History

Israeli hi-tech firms originally began to form in the 1960s. In 1961 ECI Telecom was founded, followed in 1962 by Tadiran and Elron Electronic Industries regarded by many to be the "Fairchild of Israel." The number of internationally successful firms grew slowly, with only one or two new successful firms each year until the early 1990s. Motorola was the first US corporation to set up an R&D unit in Israel, in 1964. The center initially developed wireless products including remote irrigation systems and later developed leading chips such as the 68030. Following the 1967 French arms embargo, Israel was forced to develop a domestic military industry, focusing on developing a technological edge over its neighbors.^[5] Some of these military firms started to seek and develop civilian applications of military technology. In the 1970s more commercial innovations began, many of which were based on military R&D, including: Scitex digital printing systems which were based on fast rotation drums from fast-rotation electronic warfare systems., Elscint, which developed innovative medical imaging and became a leading force in its market. (for Elbit's high tech achievements – see above).

World software market takes off

Slowly, the international computing industry shifted the emphasis from hardware (in which Israel had no comparative advantage) to software products (in which human capital plays a larger role). The country became one of the first nations to compete in global software markets. By the 1980s a diverse set of software firms had developed. Each found niches which were not dominated by US firms and between 1984 and 1991 "pure" software exports increased from $5 million to $110 million. Many of the important ideas here were developed by graduates of Mamram, the Israeli computer corps, established by the IDF in the 1960s.

During the 1980s and early 1990s several successful software companies emerged from Israel, including: Amdocs (established in 1982 as Aurec Information), Cimatron (established in 1982), Magic Software Enterprises (established in 1983), Comverse (established in 1983 as Efrat Future Technologies), Aladdin Knowledge Systems (established in 1985), NICE Systems (established in 1986), Mercury Interactive (established in 1989) and Check Point Software Technologies (established in 1993). The 1990s saw the real takeoff of hi-tech industries in Israel, with international media attention increasing awareness of innovation in the country. Growth increased, whilst new immigrants from the Soviet Union increased the available hi-tech workforce. Peace agreements (including Oslo agreement) increased the investment environment and Silicon Wadi began to develop into a noticeable hi-tech cluster.

Dot-com boom

In 1998, Mirabilis, an Israeli company that developed the ICQ instant messaging program, which revolutionized communication over the Internet, was purchased by America Online (AOL) for $407 million in cash, 18 months after it was founded and having no revenues. The free service attracted a user base of 15 million in that period and by 2001, ICQ had over 100 million users worldwide. The success of Mirabilis triggered the dot-com boom in Israel; thousands of start-up companies were established between 1998 and 2001, while venture capital raised by Israeli companies reached $1,851 million in 1999, peaking at $3,701 million in 2000. Over fifty Israeli companies had initial public offerings on NASDAQ and other international stock markets during that period.

Silicon Wadi today

For more than 50 years local demand fueled Israeli industrial expansion, as the country's population grew rapidly and the standard of living rose. More recently, world demand for Israeli advanced technologies, software, electronics, and other sophisticated equipment has stimulated industrial growth. Israel's high status in new technologies is the result of its emphasis on higher education and research and development. Cultural factors contributing to the expansion includes chutzpah and openness to immigration. The government also assists industrial growth by providing low-rate loans from its development budget. The main limitations experienced by industry are the scarcity of domestic raw materials and sources of energy and the restricted size of the local market. One certain advantage is that many Israeli university graduates are likely to become IT entrepreneurs or join startups, about twice as much as US university graduates, who are also attracted to traditional corporate executive positions, according to Charles A. Holloway, co-director of the Center for Entrepreneurial Studies and a professor at the Stanford Graduate School of Business of Stanford University. ICQ, for instance, is one of the world's most famous Israeli software products, developed by 4 young entrepreneurs. IBM has its IBM Content Discovery Engineering Team in Jerusalem, which is part of a number of IBM R&D Labs in Israel.

Genealogical research

According to research conducted by Prof. Shmuel Ellis, Chair of the Management Department at Tel Aviv University's Faculty of Management, together with Prof. Israel Drori of the School of Business Administration at the College of Management and Prof. Zur Shapira, Chair of the Management and Organizations Department at New York University, the RAD Group, founded in 1981 by brothers Yehuda and Zohar Zisapel, has been "the most fertile ground" for creating Israeli entrepreneurs, having produced 56 "serial entrepreneurs" who established more than one start-up each. RAD Group "graduates" were responsible for the establishment of a total of 111 significant hi-tech initiatives. Due to the small size of Israel, the concentration of hi-tech firms across much of the country is enough for it to be recognised as one large cluster. Most activity is located in the densely populated areas of metropolitan Tel Aviv, Haifa (Matam), and Jerusalem (Technology Park, Malha, Har Hotzvim and JVP Media Quarter in Talpiot), and the Startup Village Ecosystem in the Yokneam area, although some secondary with additional activity include the corridor to Beer Sheva, including Kiryat Gat, and the Western Galilee. In all, this is an area no larger than 6000 square kilometers, half of the extended Silicon Valley's geographical coverage.

High-Tech in the Palestinian territories

During the 2000s a High-Tech sector has emerged in Palestinian territories, supported by its proximity to Israel, and by 2013 4,500 Palestinians worked in the IT sector, specializing in software outsourcing (including outsourced work from Israeli High-Tech companies), telecommunication development and manufacturing equipment. The Palestinian IT sector grew from 0.8% of GDP in 2008 to 5% in 2010. The industry has seen a 64% increase in foreign business since 2009. The majority of Palestinian IT companies are concerted in the city of Ramallah north of Jerusalem.

Economy

Many international technology companies have research and development facilities in this region, including companies such as Intel, IBM, Google, Facebook, Hewlett-Packard, Philips, Cisco Systems, Oracle Corporation, SAP, BMC Software, Microsoft, Motorola and CA. Many Israeli high-tech companies are based in the region, including Zoran Corporation, CEVA, Inc., Aladdin Knowledge Systems, NICE Systems, Horizon Semiconductors, RAD Data Communications, RADWIN, Radware, Tadiran Telecom, Radvision, Check Point Software Technologies, Amdocs, Babylon Ltd., Elbit, Israel Aerospace Industries and the solar thermal equipment designer and manufacturer Solel, with most of them being listed on the NASDAQ, which even has an Israel Index. Intel developed its dual-core Core Duo processor at its Israel Development Center located at the Merkaz Ta'asiya ve'Meida (Matam - Scientific Industries Center) in the city of Haifa. In 2006, more than 3,000 start-ups were created in Israel, a number that is only second to the US. Newsweek Magazine has also named Tel Aviv as one of the world's top ten "Hot High-Tech Cities". In 1998, Tel Aviv was named by Newsweek as one of the ten technologically most influential cities in the world. In 2012, the city was also named one of the best places for high-tech startup companies, placed only second behind its California counterpart. The importance of Silicon Wadi was first recognised internationally by Wired magazine, who in 2000, ranked locations by the strength of cluster effects, giving the Israeli high-tech cluster the same rank as Boston, Helsinki, London, and Kista in Sweden, second only to Silicon Valley.

Venture Capital

The origins of the now thriving Venture Capital industry in Israel can be traced to a government initiative in 1993 named the Yozma program ("Initiative" in Hebrew); which offered attractive tax incentives to any foreign venture-capital investments in Israel and offered to double any investment with funds from the government. As a result Between 1991 and 2000, Israel's annual venture-capital outlays, nearly all private, rose nearly 60-fold, from $58 million to $3.3 billion; companies launched by Israeli venture funds rose from 100 to 800; and Israel's information-technology revenues rose from $1.6 billion to $12.5 billion. By 1999, Israel ranked second only to the United States in invested private-equity capital as a share of GDP. And it led the world in the share of its growth attributable to high-tech ventures: 70 percent. Israel's thriving venture capital industry has played an important role in the booming high-tech sector, the financial crisis of 2007-2010 also affected the availability of venture capital locally. In 2009, there were 63 mergers and acquisitions in the Israeli market worth a total of $2.54 billion; 7% below 2008 levels ($2.74 billion), when 82 Israeli companies were merged or acquired, and 33% lower than 2007 proceeds ($3.79 billion) when 87 Israeli companies were merged or acquired. Numerous high tech Israeli companies have been acquired by global corporations for its provision of reliable and quality corporate personnel. Israel's venture capital industry has about 70 active venture capital funds, of which 14 international VCs with Israeli offices. Additionally, there are some 220 international funds, including Polaris Venture Partners, Accel Partners and Greylock Partners, that do not have branches in Israel, but actively invest in Israel through an in-house specialist. In 2009, the Life Sciences Sector led the market with $272 million or 24% of total capital raised, followed by the Software Sector with $258 million or 23%, the Communications sector with $219 million or 20%, and the Internet sector with 13% of capital raised in 2009.

9.4 THE BOOK START-UP NATION BY SENOR & SINGER, GOVERNMENT WEBSITE

The book Start-up Nation by Senor & Singer addresses the trillion dollar question: How is it that Israel – a country of 7.1 million, only 60 years old, surrounded by enemies, in a constant state of war since its founding, with no natural resources—produces more start-up companies than large, peaceful, and stable nations like Japan, China, India, Korea, Canada, and the UK? How is it that Israel has, per person, attracted over twice as much venture capital investment as the US and thirty times more than Europe? Israel has more companies on the tech-oriented NASDAQ stock exchange than any country outside the US – more than all of Europe and India combined. Nor is Israeli innovation limited to computers, security, and communications; the Jewish state leads the world in medical device patents, and is a strong global player in cleantech and biotech. Drawing on examples from the country's foremost inventors and investors, foreign policy insiders Dan Senor and Saul Singer describe how the country's adversity-driven culture, flattened hierarchies, and government policies create a society that uniquely combines both innovative and entrepreneurial intensity. As the authors argue, Israel is not just a country, but a comprehensive state of mind. Where Americans emphasize decorum and exhaustive prep, Israelis put chutzpah over charm. "When an Israeli man wants to date a woman, he asks her out that night. When an Israeli entrepreneur has a business idea, he will start it that week"... At the geopolitical level, Senor and Singer dig in deeper to show why Israel's policies on immigration, R&D, and military service have been key factors in the country's rise. "No college experience disciplines you to think like [the military does], with high stakes and intense pressure," one veteran notes, explaining how state service preps Israelis to communicate, to forge teams, and to improvise at work. At a time when innovation has become the key to driving global economic recovery and growth, the authors show the myriad ways the world's most dynamic "start-up nation" can inform America's successes. As START-UP NATION shows, there are lessons in Israel's example that apply not only to other nations, but also to individuals seeking to build a thriving organization. As this country reboots its can-do spirit, there's never been a better time to look at a remarkable, resilient nation for some impressive, surprising clues.

And from the website of the Israeli Government:

Microsoft built their first R&D facility outside the US in Israel.

Cisco built their first R&D facility outside the US in Israel.

Motorola's Israel facility is the company's largest development center worldwide.

IBM chose Israel for its first VC investment outside of the US.

Intel has 4 R&D facilities and 2 manufacturing centers in Israel, employing 7,000 Israelis.

Google opened two R&D centers in Israel.

EMC built its Israel Development Centre of Excellence in two locations.

Israeli breakthroughs – selected examples: Given Imaging's first ingestible video camera used to view the small intestine and diagnose disorders. Intel's Sandy Bridge, Core 2 Duo, and Centrino M System's Disk on Key and Disk on Chip flash memory. GE Healthcare's portable cardiac ultrasound system 11. Phillips Brilliance CT Scanner. IP Telephony invented by founders of Vocal Tec. Argo Medical– First commercially available upright walking technology enabling wheelchair users to walk and climb stairs. Link to Israeli Medical Breakthroughs.

I write on innovations and inventors also in the chapter: Jacques Cory – an alternative biography. In the alternative biography I bring in detail some French inventions and investors, as in this chapter I emphasize on Israeli inventions, and in the chapter on Jewish authors in modern literature I bring links to inventions made by Jewish inventors, and in other chapters I write about Nobel Prize inventors and scientists who were awarded the Nobel Prize in Chemistry, Physics and Medicine. All this emphasis on innovation and scientists stem maybe from my potential career in science, when at high school I excelled in sciences and it was almost selbstverständlich – obvious that I will be a scientist or an engineer as my brother. But as I opted for the Social Sciences because I wanted to be a diplomat I studied Economics and Political Sciences, later on I studied Business Administration and ultimately I received a PhD and started an academic career at the age of 60 in Business Ethics. During all my life I learned and read literature, but never as a profession, and if I could – in an alternative biography as I did – I would combine all three occupations and be an academic in literature writing new kinds of literature, inventing and innovating in Sciences and Social Sciences, devising new forms of governments.

10. HUMOR, COSMOPOLITAN PRIVATE JOKES AND SAYINGS, HUMOROUS SCENES IN PLAYS, FILMS AND MUSICALS, CROSS CULTURAL AND BUSINESS JOKES

The reader can find details on the books and topics on Wikipedia & Encyclopaedias, on Amazon/Local Books websites, on Cory's/books/topics websites

Reading - Jewtopia, A Husband is a Funny Matter by Tammar Avidar-Ettinger, The humor of the Jewish people in history by Adir Cohen, Humor in Business by Shalom Luz.

I may prefer drama, tragedies, and documentaries, but I like as well to read dozens of humoristic books in many languages, finding that it is very difficult to translate humor. So, for me it was a revelation reading Shalom Aleikhem's Tevye the Dairyman in Yiddish, laughing non stop, while I read tens of years ago the book in its Hebrew translation which managed to lose all its humor. Comedies by Moliere are so funny, but their translation is seldom so good. The same applies to Shakespeare, although I lose a lot of his humor as I don't understand perfectly Shakespeare's language, but still it is much better than to read a translation. The same applies to Vargas Llosa in Spanish, Jorge Amado in Portuguese, Il barbiere de Siviglia in Italian, and even Brecht has a special acerbic sense of humor, best perceived in German. In German too I have in my library and we can read Max und Moritz by Wilhelm Busch in 9 Germanic dialects, in Letzebuergesch, and in Hochdeutsch (it has been translated also to many other languages and I tell the story to my grandchildren who are delighted by their naughtiness in Hebrew): Plattduetsch, Koelsch, Hessisch, Schwaebisch, Bairisch, Berlinerisch, Saechsisch, Wienerisch, Schwyzerduetsch. It goes without saying that Jerome K. Jerome's Three Men in a Boat is one of the funniest books ever written but especially in its English version, Hanoch Levin's plays sound funny in Hebrew, but they are performed in China and all over the world with a great success. Finally, Djoha's stories in Ladino are as funny as the best funny stories and comedies, as Ladino's language is exceptionally comic, sometimes because of reiteration of words. Charlie Chaplin's silent movies were so funny, that the Ladino's ads in Smyrna where my father Albert grew up, a hundred years ago, and that was populated mainly by Greeks, Jews, and Armenians called them "komik, muncho de reir", meaning the same – comic, a lot of laughing. I also wrote satires and comic texts that can be found on my website, & a vast correspondence, with humor in many languages.

10.1 AMERICAN AND BRITISH SITCOMS I LIKE BEST

I used to laugh a lot at comedies and sitcoms, however, in the last twenty years almost nothing makes me laugh, but also almost nothing makes me cry either. The problem is that I used to laugh a lot from funny films, musicals, and plays and from sitcoms. Still, I saw recently Victor Borge and Dean Martin's Musical Phonetic Punctuation, and it made me laugh as in the good old days. I remain completely indifferent to the humor of Seinfeld and Friends, to modern musicals and comedies, and the same applies to standup actors and Israeli sitcoms that don't make me laugh. The best sitcoms of all times, in my opinion anyhow, were: 1. The Golden Girls, with Beatrice Arthur (Dorothy Zbornak), Rue Mc Clanahan (Blanche Devereaux), Betty White (Rose Nylund) and Estella Getty (Sophia Petrillo). I know that it is a silly sitcom, although to make a silly sitcom that makes you laugh so much requires talent as in the best productions. What is really genial is that although all 4 actresses play stereotypes and you know exactly how they would behave, they are such good actresses, that make you laugh in spite of that. Each of the four stars received an Emmy Award, and the series ranked among the top ten highest-rated programs for six out of its seven seasons. 2. All in the Family, with Carol O'Connor (Archie Bunker), Jean Stapleton (Edith his wife, I saw her on Broadway in Arsenic and Old Lace, and she was even better), and Rob Reiner (Meathead, that had a fantastic career as Director). The best way to eradicate prejudices and racism is through plays, films and even sitcoms. I think that "light" racists (not member of the Ku Klux Klan of course) saw in this sitcom how they were ridicule with their prejudices and probably changed their attitude towards minorities, gays, and strangers. Archie Bunker was named TV's greatest character of all time, All in the Family was ranked the fourth best written TV series ever and fourth greatest show of all time. 3. Dear John (John Lacey) with Judd Hirsch, the eternal loser who has a golden heart, this sitcom is so realistic that its realism transcended its satire, and John Lacey is an almost tragic character. It was based on the British sitcom of the same name. As the American sitcoms that we see occasionally are not funny, and we don't enjoy reality or TV programs in general, I see only films on TV, and Ruthy sees also actuality programs and news, which I avoid seeing as they ruin my day. I don't read either newspapers or periodicals as they are a waste of time, as in the meantime I can write a book, read a novel, see a play or a film, or travel to the Balkans, Provence, Paris or New York.

The British Sitcoms that we enjoyed the most were: 1. Fawlty Towers, named the best British television of all time, with John Cleese, is by far the most funny of all sitcoms. It shows also the salient difference between British and American sitcoms, which are much more sophisticated, with excellent directors, screenwriters and actors, in short – works of art. 2. Yes, Prime Minister with Paul Edington (James Hacker) and Nigel Hawthorne (Sir Humphrey Appleby), not only did I read the book, but also I introduced one of the episodes (about the smokers who die from cancer) into my curriculum and thousands of students saw for the first time this sophisticated (and almost true) sitcom and were amazed how funny it was. Here, again, through humor you can convince people to be more ethical, and show the grotesque and dangerous facets of corruption and the double standards of British and Global politics. Some situations were conceived as fiction, but were later revealed to have real-life counterparts. Yes, Prime Minister is a sequel of Yes Minister, both were written by Antony Jay and Jonathan Lynn, and transmitted by BBC Television. 3. Last but not least, the British sitcom and the sitcom in general that I enjoyed most – Are You Being Served? With Mollie Sugden (Betty Slocombe), Frank Thornton (Captain Stephen Peacock) and Harold Bennett (Young Mr. Grace). I only saw the credits that I started to laugh and I couldn't stop even half an hour later. In short, it made my night and I went to sleep with a big smile on my face, and so my wife Ruthy, who enjoyed all the sitcoms mentioned above, and doesn't like either the new sitcoms. Unfortunately, we don't share the same sense of humor with our children or grandchildren, who say that I, as an Egyptian, still live in the Pharaohs epoch, and maybe beyond our back they call us "overbutel"/passe in Yiddish/French, that is if they knew Yiddish or French, oldies from the last century as all our grandchildren were born in the new century while I started school in the first half of the past century. But, still, they love us very much and forgive us our lack of taste and sense of humor, as we overlook the scratches of an antique furniture, bearing in mind that it was manufactured in the Victorian area.

10.2 FAMILY PRIVATE JOKES

Ruthy and me laughed together a lot when we met and during our almost 50 years of marriage we continue to laugh, even when we encounter serious problems. I make many jokes in several languages with words having different meanings, and Ruthy who speaks also those languages laugh a lot from them. It is enough to say a word in one of the languages to understand the funny situation that we encounter. We have sayings for false poets (in Romanian – la mini su pat, nonsense in rhyme), for a woman staying all the time close to her husband (in Ladino – Hanah detras/after de Muhulu), for pompous people (in Arabic – Nefsi Kebir/big nose, in Italian – siamo o non siamo – we are or we are not... high society). For false intellectuals (in Aramaic – Istra balagina kish kish karia/empty jar makes a lot of noise even with one coin), for cheap rich people (in Yiddish – Mehr Oisher Mehr Hazer/more riches more piggish conduct). For stupid old people (in Hebrew – Baa Zikna Baa Tipshut/when you grow old you become stupid – although in the last 20 years we have stopped to use it). We call a woman heavily made-up Bubulina like the heroine of Zorba the Greek, and Ruthy calls all my girlfriends prior to her Godzilas, if she is dressed very chic I call her in German Ausgeputzt, but if she doesn't like my sweater she says in Ladino that it is zurzuvi/multicolored, and a woman dressed without taste is Hastrapula or Tchloha. When we want to say mockingly that the situation is excellent we say in Turkish that it is birlanbir, and if we see a man, who cannot appreciate the opera where he goes and leaves in the intermission or art in a museum, we say – vender Djoyas a Bahchavanes/sell jewelry to a gardener in Turkish Ladino. A woman who complains all the time is called viven los yoradores/long live those who cry, in Ladino/Spanish, social climbers are nouveaux riches in French or es passt nicht – it is not fit in German, the crooked tycoons who poison the population with their factories' emissions but donate a cancer department at the hospital is called by us in Ladino – rova pitas i beza mezuzot/steal bread and kisses mezuzah. When we notice that someone spends a lot of money that we don't know where are his sources we ask in Romanian: "De unde ari/from where to they have" (of course we are not jealous...). If we spend too much beyond our means we say in Turkish – Paras chok, we have plenty of money. However, if we pay a small amount of money and get a lousy job done, we say in Turkish: "bu kadar para, bu kadar boya/you get the shoeshine in proportion to what you pay", or in Ladino: "Lo karo es barato i lo barato es karo/the cheap is expensive and the expensive is cheap". This proverb exists in many other languages, and was invented by the boutiques who sell you expensive stuff trying to convince you that because you pay a lot it is also worth a lot. Experience has shown us that in many instances we buy the best products at a low price and we pay an outrageous price for a lousy service. We gave in this book examples to that axiom, inter alia when we related the expensive tour in Saint Petersburg that was of the lowest quality. When a husband treats his wife badly we call her in Ladino "La pare basha/the low wall... on which you can throw whateve you like". And when we want to say that there is no need to rush we say in Italian Chi va piano va sano e va lontano, in German Langsam aber Sicher, in Romanian Nu Fugi Trenu, in French Rien ne sert de courir il faut partir a point, in English It is never too late, in Hebrew and Arabic – Hahipazon min hasatan/alajala min alshaitan... All of those proverbs mean the same, as it is amazing to notice how human society arrived to the same conclusions in all the cultures and languages. In short we have a funny expression for everything, in about ten languages...

Caricatures are another vehicle of humor and I am fond of caricatures even today, as at least in this medium I am not old fashioned as in the other vehicles of humor. I tried to find a caricature on the political issues of the Middle East, but most of them were anti-Semitic and anti-Israeli, inspired by Der Stuermer's ideology. On the other hand I didn't opt for a caricature that would be anti-Arab, as I am against any racism. So, this caricature is probably the only one that is politically correct, and I hope that I'll not be condemned by a fatwa, as it has nothing against the Islam, which I respect, against Muhammad, who understood and honored business ethics, being himself merchant, it is just a caricature against the world hypocrisy and the naivety of Europe.

Above is a picture taken during the Balkans trip in June 2015, with Ruthy laughing of my joke, and another picture taken in Nahariya, Israel, in June 1969, a few weeks after I met Ruthy.

10.3 COMIC MUSICALS, FILMS AND PLAYS

We enjoyed the most humorous scenes in the films, musicals, and plays that we saw: Make 'em laugh from Singing in the rain, which I have seen several times in film and on the stage, the Marx's Brothers - A Night At The Opera: Crowded Cabin Scene, Danny Kaye in The Inspector General (Revizor by Gogol), which was part of my courses on Business Ethics, here in a memorable scene – The Gypsy drinking song. From South Pacific - I'm Gonna Wash That Man Right Out Of My Hair, There Is Nothing Like a Dame. South Pacific was one of the first musicals that I've ever seen and I enjoy every time that I see the film or the musical. From Annie Get Your Gun - Doin' What Comes Natur'llly, with Betty Hutton, I'm an Indian Too, with Judy Garland, You Can't Get a Man with a Gun, with Megan Mullally. Irving Berlin's Annie Get Your Gun is by far the best musical that I've ever seen, I have seen it several times, the movie and the DVD, on stage in two performances – one in Los Angeles where I drove for an hour thru Watts right after the riots to see it, and one on Broadway with my favorite actress Bernadette Peters. This the perfect musical where everything is perfect – the music, the lyrics, acting, directing, it is first of all very funny, the funniest musical as well, it is so good that it brings me tears into my eyes, when I watch the movie on DVD or see the play on Broadway. And, frankly, there is only one scene that brings me tears also – this is the final scene of It's a Wonderful Life, which I have seen at least fifty times, as it is part of my business ethics courses. Other humorous scenes are: from West Side Story - Gee Officer Krupke!, from My Fair Lady – With a Little Bit of Luck. West Side Story was the first musical that I've seen live in New York in 1968, at a school trip of all our Insead class that lasted about a month and was financed by David Rockefeller who gave us our diplomas. It was a revelation for me in a year that opened for me the world – first in Berlin where I studied German, then at Insead near Paris, and finally in the US with the school trip. I went for the first time to the best theaters, saw plays and musicals, and finally saw West Side Story, at the location where it happens – New York. People use to forget that in such a tragic play of Romeo and Juliet there is a funny scene as Officer Krupke, but it is one of the funniest scenes in the history of musicals. My Fair Lady is another story, it started with Pygmalion by George Bernard Shaw, one of my favorite playwrights which I read several times, then of course there was the movie, I saw the musical several times in London and in Israel, every time I enjoy it, as it is the most sophisticated musical, a masterpiece in all its aspects, so British, so true...

Another British musical is The King and I, well half British and half Siamese, with the humorous scene of the March of the Siamese Children. I have seen it several times, in the film, on Broadway, and it is a wonderful fairy tale about overcoming prejudices. Speaking of prejudices, another brilliant musical is Fiddler on the Roof, which showed for the first time to the general public that Jews are not "always" rich, and had a very important contribution to eradicate anti-Semitic prejudices. One of the most humorous scenes is of course If I Were a Richman, here in the film with Topol, but also on Broadway with Zero Mostel, one of the best actors, whom I have seen also at least fifty times, as I teach Rhinoceros in my business ethics courses and he gave an unforgettable performance in this play, especially when he becomes a rhinoceros, in the transformation scene. The Sound of Music is probably the most popular musical, at least "old fashioned" musical, and not tasteless musicals as Cats or Evita, Chorus Line or Jersey Boys. Here we can see the humorous song "do re mi fa" with Julie Andrews and the von Trapp children in the film. I have seen it many times in film, DVD and on stage, and every time, I get excited and delighted by this wonderful musical. Cabaret is a different kind of musical, very acerbic, not a l'eau de rose, as many other musicals. I have seen it many times on stage and in film, in Israel and in Europe, here we can see from the film Liza Minnelli and Joel Grey in the humorous Money. I didn't include the musical or the song in my courses, but it fits quite well with their contents. I enjoyed also very much the following excellent musicals, some of which I have seen on stage and all of them I saw in films: Oklahoma, Hello Dolly!, The Wizard of Oz, Mary Popins, Oliver, Little Shop of Horrors, Meet Me in St Louis, How to Succeed in Business Without Really Trying, Porgy and Bess, Fame, Gigi, Kiss Me Kate, Hair, Grease, On the Town, Show Boat, The Band Wagon, Easter Parade, Gentlemen Prefer Blondes, Mamma Mia, Yentl, Seven Brides for Seven Brothers, White Christmas, and the films Gilda, Top Hat, Blue Skies.

Anything Goes is one of the best musicals I've ever seen, with music and lyrics by Cole Porter. I've seen it several times in films and also once on Broadway with Patty LuPone in an excellent performance. I love all the songs and here we bring You're the Top, from a 1956 film "Anything Goes", with Bing Crosby, Donald O'Connor, Mitzi Gaynor and Zizi Jeanmaire (who sat on my knees in Paris when singing "Je cherche un millionnaire" asking me if I was a millionaire). The song has outstanding lyrics, relating about symbiosis in a couple. We give also as a bonus the excellent performance of Frank Sinatra and Ethel Merman in a film from 1936. "You're the top! You're a dance in Bali. You're the top! You're a hot tamale. You're an angel, you, Simply too, too, too diveen, You're a Boticcelli, You're Keats, You're Shelly! You're Ovaltine! You're a boom, You're the dam at Boulder, You're the moon, Over Mae West's shoulder, I'm the nominee of the G. O. P. Or gop! But if, baby, I'm the bottom, You're the top!" Ruthy and I think the highest on each other and we continue saying how beautiful or smart he/she is. The second song Friendship, here sung at a rehearsal on Broadway with Sutton Foster and Joel Grey: "If you're ever in a jam, here I am. If you're ever in a mess, S. O. S. If you ever feel so happy, you land in jail. I'm your bail. That's friendship, friendship. Just a perfect blendship. When other friendships have been forgot. Ours will still be hot." Beyond esteem stands also friendship, experiencing together life, counting on each other. The third song is I get a kick out of you, sung by Frank Sinatra and Natalie Cole, and the lyrics are also outsanding. "I get no kick from champagne. Mere alcohol doesn't thrill me at all. So tell me why should it be true That I get a kick out of you?". Well, in our case it is also true as Ruthy and me don't drink alcohol and we get no kick in a plane too. As I don't drink alcohol, coffee or Cola, don't smoke, don't drive speedy cars, and don't get excited by food, clothes or houses, I center all my kicks on Ruthy and vice versa (well, in my case also on plays, films, reading, writing, ethics, but only after Ruthy). That is why I included the three songs in my Audio Play to Ruthy in 1989, and I called them the ingredients of love – having the highest esteem on each other/you're the top – the head, having friendship as pals – the heart, and most of all having the kick out of you, the chemistry, the guts between the couple. And finally the song Anything Goes with Patty LuPone on Broadway, the performance that I saw. Here also the lyrics are very actual, although not as acerbic as in Tango Cambalache, well, it is a comedy, not a satire, the musical excels as one of the best comic musicals ever made. "The world has gone mad today And good's bad today, And black's white today, And day's night today. When most guys today That women prize today Are just silly gigolos. And though I'm not a great romancer I know that I'm bound to answer When you propose, Anything goes."

Some of the most hilarious comic operas were made by Gilbert and Sullivan - here The Pirates of Penzance with the scene of Hold Monsters Major General, and in The Mikado – Behold the Lord High Executioner in the hilarious Act I. I have seen many times on stage and in films those operas, as also Offenbach's operas, which are the most famous and hilarious comic operas – here La Belle Helene, Orphee aux enfers, La vie parisienne. I'll just mention also Mozart's Le Nozze di Figaro, and Verdi's Falstaff, as two more examples of hilarious operas. And we cannot finish this chapter on comic plays, films and musicals, without refering to the best comedian of the twentieth century who was a true cosmopolitan, who fought for social justice, whose films are cornerstone on the fight for workers recognition – Charlie Chaplin, in Modern Times, especially in Factory Scene, The Gold Rush, especially the scene of eating his shoe, Monsieur Verdoux, especially the trial scene, The Great Dictator, with the very funny barber scene and the globe scene, The Kid, The Immigrant, The Idle Class, The Tramp, Police, A Dog's Life, Limelight. It goes without saying that films of the best comedians that I enjoyed much can be watched on the Internet, such as The General by Buster Keaton. The best comic plays – Moliere's plays at the Comedie Francaise: L'Avare, part I and part II, Le Bourgeois Gentilhomme, L'Ecole des Femmes, Les Precieuses Ridicules, Georges Dandin. Le Misanthrope, part I and part II, Tartuffe, part I, part II, Les Femmes Savantes, Les Fourberies de Scapin, Le Malade Imaginaire. It is amazing how these ten plays, the best of Moliere and many more, played by the Comedie Francaise, the best theater on earth, can be watched on the Internet free of charge, as most of the plays, concerts, some of the best films and TV series as well. If you cannot afford to go to the theater because you don't live in Paris or you don't have enough money you can watch the plays at home whenever you wish so. And those are the best plays with the best actors at the best theaters. Because we deal here with comedies we didn't linked the book with tragedies, but most of them can be watched on the Internet as well free of charge. For those who cannot understand French (I strongly recommend them to study the language without delay) they can watch the plays in English, Spanish or Italian on the Internet free of charge as well. Such as Tartuffe or the Imposter by the Royal Shakespeare Company with Nigel Hawthorne, L'Avare or El Avaro in Spanish, Le bourgeois gentilhomme or Buerger als Edelmann in German, Le Misanthrope or Il Misanthropo in Italian, L'ecole des femmes or Beit sefer lenashim in Hebrew, and so on. We have of course other excellent comedies by Aristophanes – Lysistrata and The Birds, by George Bernard Shaw – Man and Superman, Arms and the Man, Oscar Wilde – Lady Windermere's Fan, An Ideal Husband and The Importance of Being Earnest, Plautus – Amphitryo, Ephraim Kishon – Ho, ho, Yulia, Haktuva, Salah Shabati, Taalat Blaumlich, Hashoter Azulay, and others.

10.4 TOPAZE & LES MARCHANDS DE GLOIRE BY PAGNOL, YES MINISTER

I have quoted many comedies and comic scenes in my books, which is completely uncommon in academic books and dissertations, but as I received my PhD at the age of 60, I felt free enough to do what I like and what was fit to do according to my ideas. That's how in my academic books we can find texts of plays by Marcel Pagnol and scenes from the TV's Yes Minister, as follows:

"At the third act of Marcel Pagnol's Topaze we discover that the honest teacher was transfigured and has become corrupted. He is sitting behind a desk, while on the walls we can read: 'Soyez brefs' – be brief, 'Le temps, c'est de l'argent' – time is money, 'Parlez de chiffres' – speak in numbers. Topaze is a frontman, a man of straw. He feels soiled and cannot suffer the look of an honest man. He tries to maintain still that money does not bring happiness, but Suzy, the woman he loves answers him 'No, but it buys it from those who make it'. In the corrupted environment he starts to prove himself and becomes much more competent than his colleagues. In confrontation with his old friend he justifies himself: 'Tout ce que j'ai fait jusqu'ici tombe sous le coup de la loi. Si la société était bien faite, je serais en prison.' – 'All that I have done is legal. If society was just, I would have been in prison.'

And he concludes: "Regarde ces billets de banque, ils peuvent tenir dans ma poche mais ils prendront la forme et la couleur de mon désir. Confort, beauté, santé, amour, honneurs, puissance, je tiens tout cela dans ma main... Tu t'effares, mon pauvre Tamise, mais je vais te dire un secret: malgré les rêveurs, malgré les poètes et peut-être malgré mon cœur, j'ai appris la grande leçon: Tamise, les hommes ne sont pas bons. C'est la force qui gouverne le monde, et ces petits rectangles de papier bruisant, voilà la forme moderne de la force. (Pagnol, Oeuvres Complètes I, Topaze, p. 453) "Look at those banknotes, they can fit in my pocket but they will soon take form and color of my desire. Comfort, beauty, health, love, honors, power, I hold all this in my hand... You are bewildered, my poor Tamise, but I will tell you a secret: in spite of the dreamers, in spite of the poets and maybe in spite of my heart, I have learned the big lesson: Tamise, men are not good. It is power which governs the world, and this small rectangles of noisy paper, this is the modern structure of power."

Pagnol, alternatively pessimist and optimist, describes to us admirably the dilemmas of all of us and how many of us resolve them. If Topaze would have remained in his environment, as a teacher with an honest headmaster, he would have remained the most honest man. But it is because he has suffered injustice and has joined a corrupted society that he has been corrupted himself and has sold his soul, while being convinced that he is on the right track. He becomes much more corrupt than his mentors, as he thinks that this is the only way to survive, and he finds justifications that manage to convince him as well. This is therefore the predominant role of the moral environment, which succeeds in most of the cases, especially with men who do not have a strong and well-formed character, to fashion its member into its image. Tell me who your friends are, and I will tell you who you are."

"But even the members of the Supervision Board can be corrupted and behave like men of straw. Berlureau needs a man of straw for a fishy business in Corsica, and he contemplates sending Henri in order to get rid of him. Henri, who had scruples prior to then, plays the game and sells himself to the highest bidder.

"Henri – Mais puisque je vends mon ame au diable, j'ai besoin de deux mille francs pour apaiser mes scrupules.

Berlureau – Ils sont un peu chers vos scrupules.

Henri – C'est qu'ils sont grands, et assez douloureux... Le scrupule, mon cher Ferdinand, est une maladie pénible dont tu n'as probablement jamais souffert. Mais c'est aussi cruel qu'une sciatique. Par bonheur, il existe un très vieux remède, mais dont l'effet est immédiat: c'est le cataplasme d'oseille.

Berlureau (joyeux) – Les remèdes de bonne femme ont toujours été les meilleurs. D'accord.

Bachelet – Il ne faudrait tout de même pas abuser...

Henri – Tu trouves que ce n'est pas MORAL?

Berlureau – Edouard, ne sois pas confus, parce que moi, ça me rassure. Je craignais que l'amnésie ne l'ait rendu inutilisable, et je l'envoyais la-bas pour l'escamoter... Mais puisqu'il a toute sa tête, et qu'il a compris la musique, il peut me rendre de grands services. C'est une affaire très délicate. Les deux mille francs, il les vaut."

(Pagnol, Les Marchands de Gloire, Oeuvres Complètes I, p. 153)

"Henri – But if I sell my soul to the devil, I need two thousand francs to appease my scruples.

Berlureau – Your scruples are a little bit expensive.

Henri – It is because they are huge, and quite aching... The scruple, my dear Ferdinand, is a painful sickness from which you have probably never suffered. But it is as painful as sciatica. Luckily, there exists a very old cure, with an immediate effect, the poultice of dough.

Berlureau (happily) – The old women cures were always the best. I agree.

Bachelet – You should nevertheless not exploit the situation...

Henri – You think that it is not MORAL?

Berlureau – Edouard, don't be confused, because I am reassured. I was afraid that the amnesia has made him unusable, and I was sending him there to make him disappear... But as he has got all his senses, and he has understood the tune, he can render me valuable services. It is a very delicate matter. He is worth the two thousand francs."

So, even in the Supervision Board nothing prevents its members from abusing their rights and working as men of straw of the majority shareholders. The independent directors in the Board of Directors are already tempted in many cases to act in favor of the majority shareholders, and this scenario can repeat itself also in the Supervision Board. We should therefore elect to this board members with a reputation of incorruptibility. The organism that will take care of electing most of the members of the Supervision Board and will verify their integrity is therefore the Institute of Ethics."

"The English treat the same subject in a humorous manner in the TV series Yes Minister, which describes the trials of the British minister James Hacker and his chief of cabinet, Sir Humphrey Appleby. The minister discovers that the British government has received a contract from an Arab country by paying bribes. He is scandalized by his discovery and tries to clarify the facts with Sir Humphrey.

"Humphrey. Are you telling me that BES got the contract through bribery?"

He looked pained. 'I wish you wouldn't use words like 'bribery', Minister.'

I asked if he'd prefer that I use words like slush fund, sweeteners, or brown envelopes.

He patronisingly informed me that these are, in his view, extremely crude and unworthy expressions for what is no more than creative negotiation.

'It is the general practice', he asserted.

I asked him if he realised just what he was saying. After all, I ratified this contract myself, in good faith.

'And in that communique I announced to the press a British success in a fair fight.'

'Yes,' he mused, 'I did wonder about that bit.'

'And now,' I fumed, 'you are telling me we got it by bribery?'

'No, Minister,' he replied firmly.

There seemed to be a light at the end of the tunnel. My spirits lifted.

'Ah,' I said, 'we didn't get it by bribery.'

'That's not what I said,' he said carefully.

'Well what did you say?'

'I said I am not telling you we got it by bribery.'

(Lynn and Jay, Yes Minister, p. 412)

Will the Europeans implement the new norms or will they find ways to get around them? The eternal dialogue between Don Quixote/Hacker the idealist, and Sancho Panza/Humphrey the practical man, will probably continue endlessly, with much humor and sarcasm...

10.5 BUSINESS HUMOR AND JOKES

Here is some humoristic material on international business and ethics, focusing on cross-cultural differences, we hope that nobody will be offended and apologize in advance on the stereotypes.

How International Corporations Work

Explained with the Help of Cows

Traditional Capitalism

You have two cows.

You sell one and buy a bull.

Your herd multiplies, and the economy grows.

You sell them and retire on the income.

An American Corporation

You have two cows.

You sell three of them to your publicly listed company, using letters of credit opened by your brother-in-law at the bank, then execute a debt/equity swap with an associated general offer so that you get all four cows back, with a tax exemption for five cows.

The milk rights of the six cows are transferred via an intermediary to a Cayman Island company secretly owned by the majority shareholder who sells the rights to all seven cows back to your listed company. The annual report says the company owns eight cows, with an option on one more.

Sell one cow to buy a new president of the United States, leaving you with nine cows. No balance sheet provided with the release.

The public buys your bull.

A French Corporation

You have two cows.

You go on strike because you want three cows.

A Japanese Corporation

You have two cows. You redesign them so they are one-tenth the size of an ordinary cow and produce twenty times the milk.

You then create clever cow cartoon images called 'Cowkimon' and market them World-Wide.

A German Corporation

You have two cows.

You reengineer them so they live for 100 years, eat once a month, and milk themselves.

An Italian Corporation

You have two cows, but you don't know where they are.

So you break for lunch.

A Swiss Corporation

You have 5000 cows, none of which belong to you.

You charge others for storing them.

An Indian Corporation

You have two cows.

You worship them.

Only in Britain ?

Can a pizza get to your house faster than an ambulance

Do supermarkets make sick people walk all the way to the back of the shop to get their prescriptions while healthy people can buy cigarettes at the front.

Do people order double cheeseburgers, large fries, and a DIET coke.

Do banks leave both doors open and chain the pens to the counters.

Do we leave cars worth thousands of pounds on the drive and lock our junk and cheap lawn mower in the garage.

Do we use answering machines to screen calls and then have call waiting so we won't miss a call from someone we didn't want to talk to in the first place.

Are there disabled parking places in front of a skating rink.

Japanese management lecture

Four corporate presidents, one English, one French, one Japanese and one American, were on their way to an international business conference when they were kidnapped by terrorists and taken to a secret hideout.

"You, your companies, and you countries are enemies of the Revolution," screamed the terrorist leader, "and you're going to be executed! Do you have any last requests?"

The Englishman spoke first.

"Before I die, I want to honor my country and protest this barbaric act by singing 'God Save The Queen' to all your men."

"That can be arranged," said the terrorist.

The Frenchman said, "And I want to honor my country before I die by singing The Marseillaise to your men."

The Japanese said, "Before I die, I wish to honor my country by giving the lecture I was going to present on the Japanese style of industrial management."

The terrorist turned finally to the American.

"What is your last request?"

The American replied, "I want you to kill me right now so I don't have to listen to another lecture on the Japanese style of industrial management!"

Job Interview Question

You are driving along in your car on a wild, stormy night. You pass by a bus stop, and you see three people waiting for the bus:

1. An old lady who looks as if she is about to die.
2. An old friend who once saved your life.
3. The perfect man (or) woman you have been dreaming about.

Which one would you choose to offer a ride to, knowing that there could only be one passenger in your car?

Think before you continue reading. This is a moral/ethical dilemma that was once actually used as part of a job application.

You could pick up the old lady, because she is going to die, and thus you should save her first; or you could take the old friend because he once saved your life, and this would be the perfect chance to pay him back. However, you may never be able to find your perfect dream lover again.

The candidate who was hired (out of 200 applicants) had no trouble coming up with his answer. He simply answered: "I would give the car keys to my old friend, and let him take the lady to the hospital. I would stay behind and wait for the bus with the woman of my dreams." Never forget to "Think Outside of the Box."

Before going to Europe on business, a man drives his Rolls-Royce to a downtown New York City bank and asks for an immediate loan of $5,000. The loan officer, taken aback, requests collateral. "Well then, here are the keys to my Rolls-Royce," the man says. The loan officer promptly has the car driven into the bank's underground parking for safe keeping and gives the man the $5,000. Two weeks later, the man walks through the bank's doors and asks to settle up his loan and get his car back. "That will be $5,000 in principal, and $15.40 in interest," the loan officer says. The man writes out a check and starts to walk away. "Wait, sir," the loan officer says. "You are a millionaire. Why in the world would you need to borrow $5,000?" The man smiles, "Where else could I find a safer place to park my Rolls-Royce in Manhattan for two weeks and pay only $15.40?"

Three businessmen were having dinner at a club. When it came time to pay the check, each grabbed for it.

"It's a business expense," said one.

"I'll pay," said the second. "I'm on cost plus."

"Let me have it," argued the third. "I'm filing for bankruptcy next week"

10.6 JEWISH HUMOR

And we cannot finish this humoristic chapter without a joke on anti-Semitism. Actually, as we say in Yiddish: "Es ist weit von gelaechter" – it is far from being funny, as it illustrates the fact that all the anti-Semites, the UN resolutions outrageous double-standards, the boycott only-Israel organizations, and all the hard-core extreme left and right organizations continue to blame the Jews and Israel on all the troubles in this world, they are afraid to blame the fundamentalist Muslims as they don't understand "jokes and caricatures", they are afraid to blame the aggression of super powers against small states and their own citizens, it is not politically correct to blame retrograde countries who infringe human rights, so they have their "donkey" that they can kick with impunity as they are too democratic and fair to respond – the Jews and Israel are responsible for all the troubles in the world – killing Jesus, spreading the Black Plague, causing bankruptcies of states, poverty, famine, World War I, World War II, even 9/11 is a conspiracy of the Jews, and of course we are responsible for all the civil wars in Iraq, Afghanistan, Egypt, Syria, Lebanon, Yemen, Lybia, Algeria, Sudan, and so on. As a matter of fact, it has become so outrageous that it is really a joke and should be treated in the humor section of the book...

An anti-Semite meets a Jew and asks him what his name is.

The Jew responds: Eisenberg.

The anti-Semite punches him on his face, saying: This is because you sank the Titanic.

Eisenberg responds: But, this was because of an iceberg.

And the anti-Semite concludes: Iceberg, Eisenberg, Goldberg, it is always your fault...

10.7 ROSSINI'S LARGO AL FACTOTUM FROM IL BARBIERE DI SIVIGLIA

To illustrate the hopeless attempt to translate a funny text, we bring here the courageous translation of Ellen H. Bleiler to Sterbini/Rossini's Largo al Factotum/MakeWay For the Handyman from Il Barbiere di Siviglia. Read the original in Italian and the English translation:

Largo al factotum della città.
 Presto a bottega che l'alba è già.
 Ah, che bel vivere, che bel piacere per un barbiere di qualità! di qualità!

Make way for the handyman of the city.
 Hurrying to his shop now that it is already dawn.
 Ah, what a fine life, what a fine pleasure
 For a barber of quality! Of quality!

Ah, bravo Figaro!
 Bravo, bravissimo!
 Fortunatissimo per verità!

Ah, well done Figaro!
 Well done, very good!
 Very fortunate indeed!

Pronto a far tutto, la notte e il giorno
 sempre d'intorno in giro sta.
 Miglior cuccagna per un barbiere, vita più nobile, no, non si da.

Ready to do everything,
 Night and day
 He is always on the move
 A more plentiful fate for a barber,
 A more noble life, no, it cannot be had.

Rasoi e pettini lancette e forbici, al mio comando
 tutto qui sta.
 V'è la risorsa,
 poi, del mestiere
 colla donnetta... col cavaliere...

Razors and combs
 Lancets and scissors,
 At my command
 Everything is here.
 There are the tools,
 Then, of the trade
 With the ladies... with the gentlemen...

Tutti mi chiedono, tutti mi vogliono, donne, ragazzi, vecchi, fanciulle:
 Qua la parrucca... Presto la barba...
 Qua la sanguigna...
 Presto il biglietto...
 Qua la parrucca, presto la barba,
 Presto il biglietto, ehi!

Everyone asks for me, everyone wants me,
 Ladies, children, elders, young girls;
 Here is the wig... The beard is ready...
 Here is the blood...
 The ticket is ready...
 Here is the wig, the beard is ready,
 The ticket is ready, hey!

Ahimè, che furia!
 Ahimè, che folla!
 Uno alla volta, per carità!
 Ehi, Figaro! Son qua.
 Figaro qua, Figaro là,
 Figaro su, Figaro giù,

Figaro! Figaro! Figaro!, etc.
 Alas, what a fury!
 Alas, what a crowd!
 One at a time, please!
 Hey, Figaro! I am here.
 Figaro here, Figaro there,
 Figaro up, Figaro down,

Pronto prontissimo son come il fulmine:
 sono il factotum della città.
 Ah, bravo Figaro! Bravo, bravissimo;
 a te fortuna non mancherà

Quicker and quicker I am like lightning:
 I am the handyman of the city.
 Ah, well done Figaro! Well done, very good;
 You will never lack for luck!

VII. PROFESSIONAL LITERATURE

The reader can find details on the books and professional literature on Wikipedia & Encyclopaedias, on Amazon/Books websites, on Cory's/books/authors websites

I was maybe stuck at page 52 in reading classics in Russian and Greek, but in the meantime I purchased and read since 2009 more than 120 professional books on Capitalism, the Great Recession of 2007-2010, Sustainability, Social and Economical Justice and Globalization, for my courses on those subjects and as background material for the book I want to write about capitalism. I watched for his courses more than 130 films and plays, and for my dissertation, courses, and academic books published until 2009 I read about 130 books and many articles. All that, while teaching sometimes full time and sometimes only a day or two a week at the best universities in Israel, a semester at Insead, and sometimes working full time at a business job. The full and partial lists of books and videos can be seen at the Cultural Activities Document on Cory's website – About Jacques Cory, as well as on the bibliography of Cory's courses in Courses, the bibliography in Books, the bibliography with Hebrew books in Hebrew 1 and 2, etc. Details on the books can be seen among others on Amazon's websites in different countries.

It is extremely interesting to read professional books on such fascinating subjects as the Great Recession, the Future of Capitalism, Sustainability, Business Ethics, Globalization or Social and Economic Justice. We are living in interesting times and very dangerous ones, partially in wars, internal turmoil, and terror, in the Middle East (with the wars in Iran, Iraq and Afghanistan, the Palestinian conflict, the Arab Spring - after and before – the civil wars in Egypt, Syria, Lebanon, Yemen, Tunisia, Algeria, Somalia, Iraq, Afghanistan, Libya, etc.), the wars in Africa, in former Yugoslavia, in Asia, etc... But the main danger is not from war and terror but from the economic crises accelerating every decade, and reaching in the near future losses of tens or hundreds trillion dollars, more than the world GDP, as there is a chaos in regulation, no control on the derivatives, a dictatorship of the neoliberal economic regimes. Instead of business being controlled by governments the governments are ruled by business, bribing directly or indirectly most of the politicians in the oligarch democracies. Nothing was learned from the Great Recession of 2007-2010, and we are in a state of limbo, with no price for money, no interests on deposits, with artificial revival of the economy when the Feds/National Banks have reduced the interest to zero. The Domsday Depression ahead of us will occur not later than in 2020 if we don't take preemptive measures right away. The writing is on the wall and very few economists see it, no politicians take any action, except maybe a few righteous professors as Joseph Stiglitz or Robert Reich, authors as Naomi Klein, Matt Taibbee, Nassim Taleb, Joel Bakan..., and Cory.

Jacques Cory's activities in professional literature consists of writing 3 academic books in English, published by Springer, Kluwer and Mellen, held at thousands of university libraries all over the world, 2 academic books in Hebrew, published by Magnes & an eBook, that are unique in their kind and are the basis of teaching business ethics at many universities, 1 academic book and one PhD dissertation in French, the first one in the world on ethics to minority shareholders. Cory has also participated with essays in edited books in French and Hebrew, wrote dozens of articles on leading websites, wrote and taught dozens of courses and lectures in English, French, and Hebrew, and built a website www.businessethicscory.com, with most of Cory's works.

LIST OF PROFESSIONAL BOOKS

PROFESSIONAL BOOKS ON CAPITALISM, THE GREAT RECESSION OF 2007-2010, BUSINESS ETHICS, CSR, SOCIAL, ECONOMIC & ECOLOGICAL JUSTICE, MANAGEMENT, SUSTAINABILITY, GLOBALIZATION (250+ books in English, French and Hebrew, about half of them read in the years 2009-2014, and half in the years 1998-2008)

The bibliography is based on the books and articles of the most prominent authors and journalists, businessmen, regulators and professors: Joseph Stiglitz, Naomi Klein, Charles Ferguson, Thomas Friedman, Michael Mandelbaum, Milton Friedman, John Maynard Keynes, Paul Krugman, Andrew Ross Sorkin, Erin Arvedlund, Barbara Ehrenreich, John Kenneth Galbraith, Charles Gasparino, Paul Hawken, Daniel Kahneman, Nassim Taleb, Dave Kansas, Michael Lewis, Roger Lowenstein, James Stewart, George Soros, Muhammad Yunus, Gregory Zuckerman, Akio Morita, Henry Paulson, Bryan Burrough, Alice Schroeder, Joel Bakan, Jagdish Bhagwati, John Cassidy, William Cohan, Harry Dent, Kenneth Goodpaster, Laura Nash, Henri-Claude de Bettignies, Al Gore, Justin Fox, Hyman Minsky, Charles Ellis, David Wessel, Richard Posner, Gary Stern, David Cay Johnston, Jonathan Harr, Lee Kuan Yew, Robert Hagstrom, Robert Monks, Joseph Badaracco, Richard De George, Charles Derber, Thomas Donaldson, Amitai Etzioni, Francis Fukuyama, Ron Grover, Harvey Hornstein, Robert Jackall, Peters and Waterman, Meir Tamari, Manuel Velasquez, Ben Cohen, Ernest Wallwork, Barry Eichengreen, Jeremy Rifkin, David Coates, Jonas Pontusson, T.R. Ried, Eric Einhorn, Nouriel Roubini, Stephen Mihm, Matthew Bishop, Suzanne McGee, Duff McDonald, Matthew Lynn, Sanjay Anand, Robert Pozen, Raghuram G. Rajan, Larry Bartels, Wilhelm Hankel, Robert Isaak, Carmen Reinhart, Kenneth Rogoff, Michael Roberts, Robert Shiller, George Akerlof, George F. DeMartino, Fareed Zakaria, Gordon Brown, Todd Gitlin, Matt Taibbi, Noam Chomsky, Sheila Bair, Gretchen Morgenson, Joshua Rosner, Costas Lapavistas, Chrystia Freeland, Robert Reich, Dan Ariely, Robert L. Heilbroner, Abhijit Banerjee, Bastasin Carlo, Esther Duflo, Jeffrey Sachs, Les Leopold, Olivier Blanchard, Tyler Cowen, John Mackey, Anat Admati, Martin Hellwig, Thomas Piketty, as well as the books by Nick Leeson, Brian Cruver, Bill Bamber, Lawrence McDonald, Jacques Cory, and the best videos on those subjects, such as The Ascent of Money with Niall Ferguson, Capitalism: a Love Story by Michael Moore, The Corporation by Jennifer Abbott and Mark Achbar, The Flaw by David Singleton, Collapse based on a book by Michael Ruppert, and Inside Job by Charles Ferguson.

Acharya Viral V., Cooley Thomas F., Richardson Matthew P., Walter Ingo, Regulating Wall Street The Dodd-Frank Act and the New Architecture of Global Finance, Wiley, 2011

Admati Anat and Hellwig Martin, The Bankers New Clothes: What's Wrong with Banking and What to Do about It, Princeton University Press, 2013

Akerlof George A. and Shiller Robert J., Animal Spirits: How Human Psychology Drives the Economy, and Why it Matters for Global Capitalism, Princeton University Press, 2009

Anand Sanjai, Essentials of the Dodd-Frank Act, Wiley 2011

Ariely Dan, The (Honest) Truth About Dishonesty: How We Lie to Everyone - Especially Ourselves, Harper, 2013

Ariely Dan, Predictably Irrational, HarperCollins Publishers, 2008

Ariely Dan, The Upside of Irrationality, Harper, 2010

Aristotle, Ethics, Penguin Classics, 1976

Articles in leading international newspapers

Artus Patrick and Pastre Olivier, Sorties de crise: Ce qu'on ne nous dit pas, Ce qui nous attend, Editions Perrin, 2009, in French

Arvedlund Erin, Too Good to Be True: The Rise and Fall of Bernie Madoff, Portfolio Hardcover, 2009

Badaracco, Jr. Joseph L., Defining Moments, When Managers Must Choose Between Right and Right, Harvard Business School Press, 1997

Bair Sheila, Bull by the Horns: Fighting to Save Main Street from Wall Street and Wall Street from Itself, Free Press, Simon & Schuster, 2012

Bakan Joel, The Corporation, The Pathological Pursuit of Profit and Power, Free Press, Published by Simon & Schuster New York, 2004

Bamber Bill and Spencer Andrew, Bear-Trap: The Fall of Bear Stearns and the Panic of 2008, Brick Tower Books, 2008

Banerjee Abhijit V. and Duflo Esther, Poor Economics: A Radical Rethinking of the Way to Fight Global Poverty, PublicAffairs, Perseus Books, 2012

Barbera Robert, The Cost of Capitalism: Understanding Market Mayhem and Stabilizing our Economic Future, McGraw-Hill, 2009

Bartels Larry M., Unequal Democracy: The Political Economy of the New Gilded Age, Princeton, 2008

Bastasin Carlo, Saving Europe: How National Politics Nearly Destroyed the Euro, The Brookings Institution, 2012

Betbeze Jean-Paul, Crise par ici la sortie: Exit, Presses Universitaires de France, 2010, in French

Bhagwati Jagdish, In Defense of Globalization, Oxford University Press, 2004

Bishop Matthew & Green Michael, The Road from Ruin: How to Revive Capitalism and Put America Back on Top, Crown Business, 2010

Blanchard Ken, O'Connor Michael, Managing By Values, Berrett-Koehler Publishers, 1997

Blanchard Kenneth, Peale Norman Vincent, The Power of Ethical Management, William Morrow and Company, Inc., 1988

Blanchard Olivier, Romer David, Michael Spence, and Stiglitz Joseph, edited by, In the Wake of the Crisis: Leading Economists Reassess Economic Policy, The MIT Press, 2012

Bollier David, Aiming Higher, 25 Stories of how Companies Prosper by Combining Sound Management and Social Vision, Amacom, 1997

Bonder Nilton Rabbi, The Kabbalah of Money, Insights on Livelihood, Business, and All Forms of Economic Behavior, Shambhala, 1996

Boyer Louis, Le livre de morale des écoles primaires (cours moyen, cours supérieur) et des cours d'adultes, Editions des Equateurs, 2011 (édition originale 1895), in French

Briner Bob, The Management Methods of Jesus, Ancient Wisdom for Modern Business, Thomas Nelson, Inc., 1996

Brown Gordon, Beyond the Crash: Overcoming the First Crisis of Globalization, Free Press, 2010

Brown Judith M., Gandhi: Prisoner of Hope, Yale University Press, 1998

Burkett Larry, Business by the Book, The Complete Guide of Biblical Principles for Business Men and Women, Expanded Edition, Thomas Nelson Publishers, 1991

Burrough Bryan and Helyar John, Barbarians at the Gate, The Fall of RJR Nabisco, Harper Business Essentials, 2003

Casey Al with Seaver Dick, Casey's Law, If Something Can Go Right, It Should, Arcade Publishing, 1997

Cassidy John, Dot.con: How America Lost Its Mind and Money in the Internet Era, Harper Perennial, 2003

Cassidy John, How Markets Fail: The Logic of Economic Calamities, Farrar, Straus and Giroux, 2009

Chatfield Cheryl A., Ph.D., The Trust Factor, The Art of Doing Business in the 21st Century, Sunstone Press, 1997

Chomsky Noam, Profit Over People: Neoliberalism and Global Order, Seven Stories Press, 1999

Coates David, Models of Capitalism: Growth and Stagnation in the Modern Era, Polity, 2000

Cohan William D., House of Cards: A Tale of Hubris and Wretched Excess on Wall Street, Doubleday, 2009

Cohan William D., Money and Power: How Goldman Sachs Came to Rule the World, Doubleday, 2011

Cohen-Almagor Raphael, Arbel-Ganz Ori, Kasher Asa, Public Responsibility in Israel, Hakibbutz Hameuchad Publishing House/The Jerusalem Center for Ethics, 2012, in Hebrew

Cohen Ben and Greenfield Jerry, Ben & Jerry's Double-Dip, Lead with Your Values and Make Money, Too, Simon & Schuster, 1997

Cooke Robert Allan and Young Earl, "The Ethical Side of Takeovers and Mergers", Madsen, Essentials of Business Ethics, A Meridian Book, 1990, pp. 254-269

Cory Jacques, L'éthique des affaires et les actionnaires minoritaires, Éditions Universitaires Européennes, 2012, in French

Cory Jacques, Social, Economic & Governmental Justice: Essays, Articles & the Play "Nelly Doron", published on the Internet at Jacques Cory's website in HOME, BOOKS and HEBREW, at the University of Haifa's Library website - <http://lib.haifa.ac.il> (search by name of author or book), Transparency International Israel website, Ometz website, etc., 2012, in Hebrew

Cory Jacques, Business Ethics for a Sustainable Society: Conquering the Corporate Frankenstein, The Edwin Mellen Press, 2009. Paperback edition in 2010

Cory Jacques, Selected Issues in Business Ethics and Social Responsibility, Magnes – The Hebrew University of Jerusalem, 2008, in Hebrew

Cory Jacques, Business Ethics and the Minority Shareholders, PhD dissertation, CNAM, Paris, 2004, in French

Cory Jacques, Activist Business Ethics, Kluwer Academic Publishers, Boston, 2001. Paperback Edition by Springer, 2004

Cory Jacques, Business Ethics: The Ethical Revolution of Minority Shareholders, Kluwer Academic Publishers, Boston, 2001. Paperback Edition by Springer, 2004

Cory Jacques, Beware of Greeks' Presents, Bimat Kedem Publishers, 2001, in Hebrew

Cory Jacques with Amalia Eyal, Le choix de Nelly, a play translated from Hebrew into French by Saskia Cohen, Edilivre, 2012 (The play in Hebrew - Nelly's Choice, 2005 - is at the library of the University of Haifa. Reading of the play was performed at the Hebrew University of Jerusalem on July 30, 2008). A play in Hebrew by Jacques Cory Nelly Doron was published on Cory's website in 2012

Cory Jacques, Entretien avec Jacques Cory, de l'Université de Haïfa (Israel): "Une manière originale d'enseigner la RSE", a chapter in the book by: Lepineux François, Rose Jean-Jacques, Bonanni Carole, Hudson Sarah, La RSE, La responsabilité sociale des entreprises, Théories et pratiques, Stratégie, Dunod, 2010, in French

Vigoda-Gadot Eran and Cory Jacques, "In the Name of Citizens, Business or Officials? Insights on the Public Responsibility of the Government and Public Administration", a chapter in the edited book Public Responsibility in Israel by Cohen-Almagor Raphael, Arbel-Ganz Ori, Kasher Asa, published by Hakibbutz Hameuchad Publishing House/The Jerusalem Center for Ethics, 2012, in Hebrew

Cowen Tyler, The Great Stagnation: How America Ate All the Low-Hanging Fruit of Modern History, Got Sick, and Will (Eventually) Feel Better, Dutton, Penguin Books, 2011

Cruver Brian, Anatomy of Greed, The Unshredded Truth from an Enron Insider, Carroll & Graf, 2002

De George Richard T., Competing with Integrity in International Business, Oxford Univ. Press, 1993

DeMartino George F., The Economist's Oath: On the Need for and Content of Professional Economic Ethics, Oxford University Press, 2011

Dent Harry S., The Great Depression Ahead: How to Prosper in the Crash Following the Greatest Boom in History, Free Press, 2009

Derber Charles, The Wilding of America, How Greed and Violence Are Eroding Our Nation's Character, St. Martin's Press, 1996

Dodd-Frank Wall Street Reform and Consumer Protection Act, Enacted into Law on July 21, 2010, Enrolled Final Version (HR 4173), via the U.S. Government Printing Office, 2010

http://frwebgate.access.gpo.gov/cgi-bin/getdoc.cgi?dbname=111_cong_bills&docid=f:h4173enr.txt.pdf

Summary, Davis Polk, & Wardwell LLP, 2010

http://www.davispolk.com/files/Publication/7084f9fe-6580-413b-b870-b7c025ed2ecf/Presentation/PublicationAttachment/1d4495c7-0be0-4e9a-ba77-f786fb90464a/070910_Financial_Reform_Summary.pdf

(see also Wikipedia and Skadden, Arps)

Donaldson Thomas, The Ethics of International Business, The Ruffin Series in Business Ethics, Oxford University Press, 1992

Dresner Simon, The Principles of Sustainability, Earthscan Publications, 2002

Driscoll Dawn-Marie, Hoffman W. Michael, Petry Edward S., The Ethical Edge, Tales of Organizations that Have Faced Moral Crises, MasterMedia Limited, 1995

Edwards Andres R., The Sustainability Revolution: Portrait of a Paradigm Shift, New Society Publishers, 2005

Ehrenreich Barbara, Nickel and Dimed: On (Not) Getting By in America, Holt Paperbacks, 2008

Eichengreen Barry, The European Economy since 1945: Coordinated Capitalism and Beyond, Princeton, 2008

Eichengreen Barry, Exorbitant Privilege: The Rise and Fall of the Dollar and the Future of the International Monetary System, Oxford University Press, 2011

Einhorn Eric S. and Logue John, Modern Welfare States: Scandinavian Politics and Policy in the Global Age, Praeger Paperback, 2003

Ellis Charles D., The Partnership: The Making of Goldman Sachs, Penguin, 2009

Estes Ralph, Tyranny of the Bottom Line, Why Corporations Make Good People Do Bad Things, Berrett-Koehler Publishers, 1996

Ethics at Work, A Harvard Business Review Paperback, 1991

Etzioni Amitai, The Moral Dimension, Toward a New Economics, The Free Press, 1990

Faber Emmanuel, Chemins de traverse, Vivre l'économie autrement, Albin Michel, 2011, in French

FCIC – Financial Crisis Enquiry Commission, The Financial Crisis Inquiry Report, Public Affairs Report, 2011

Ferguson Charles H., Predator Nation: Corporate Criminals, Political Corruption, and the Hijacking of America, Crown Business, Random House, 2012

Fox Justin, The Myth of the Rational Market: A History of Risk, Reward, and Delusion on Wall Street, HarperBusiness, 2009

Freeland Chrystia, Plutocrats: The Rise of the New Global Super-Rich and the Fall of Everyone Else, The Penguin Press, 2012

Friedman Milton, Capitalism and Freedom, University of Chicago Press, 2002 (1962)

Friedman Milton, "The Social Responsibility of Business Is to Increase Its Profits", Madsen, Essentials of Business Ethics, A Meridian Book, 1990, pp. 273-281

Friedman Thomas L., Mandelbaum Michael, That Used To Be Us: How America Fell Behind in the World it Invented and How We Can Come Back, Farrar, Straus & Giroux, 2011

Friedman Thomas L., Hot, Flat, and Crowded, Why We Need a Green Revolution and How it Can Renew America, Farrar, Straus and Giroux, 2008

Friedman Thomas L., The World is Flat - A Brief History of the Twenty-First Century, First Updated and Expanded Edition, Farrar, Straus and Giroux, 2006

Fukuyama Francis, Trust, The Social Virtues and the Creation of Prosperity, A Free Press Paperbacks Book, 1996

Galbraith John Kenneth, The Great Crash of 1929, Mariner Books, 1997

Gasparino Charles, The Sellout: How Three Decades of Wall Street Greed and Government Mismanagement Destroyed the Global Financial System, HarperBusiness, 2009

Ginsburg Sigmund G., Managing with Passion, Making the Most of Your Job and Your Life, John Wiley & Sons, Inc., 1996

Girardet Herbert & Mendonca Miguel, A Renewable World: Energy, Ecology, Equality, A Report for the World Future Council, Green Books, 2009

Gitlin Todd, Occupy Nation: The Roots, The Spirit, and The Promise of Occupy Wall Street, itbooks HarperCollins Publishers, 2012

Goodpaster Kenneth E., Nash Laura L., de Bettignies Henri-Claude, Business Ethics: Policies and Persons, McGraw-Hill Irwin, 2006

Gore Al, An Inconvenient Truth: The Crisis of Global Warming, Viking, 2007

Grover Ron, The Disney Touch, Richard D. Irwin, Inc., 1991

Hacker Jacob S. & Pierson Paul, Winner-Take-All Politics: How Washington Made the Rich Richer – And Turned Its Back on the Middle Class, Simon & Schuster, 2010

Hagstrom Robert G., The Warren Buffett Way, John Wiley & Sons, Inc., 2005

Hall William D., Making the Right Decision, Ethics for Managers, John Wiley & Sons, Inc., 1993

Handy Charles, The Hungry Spirit, Beyond Capitalism: A Quest for Purpose in the Modern World, Broadway Books, 1998

Hankel Wilhelm & Isaak Robert, Brave New World Economy: Global Finance Threatens our Future, John Wiley & Sons, 2011

Harmon Frederick G., Playing for Keeps, How the World's Most Aggressive and Admired Companies Use Core Values to Manage, Energize and Organize Their People, and Promote, Advance and Achieve Their Corporate Missions, John Wiley & Sons, Inc., 1996

Harr Jonathan, A Civil Action, Vintage, 1996

Harvey Brian, Edited by, Business Ethics, A European Approach, Prentice Hall, 1994

Hawken Paul, Blessed Unrest: How the Largest Movement in the World Came into Being and Why No One Saw It Coming?, Viking, 2007

Hawken Paul, The Ecology of Commerce, HarperCollins, 1994

Hawken Paul, Lovins Amory, Lovins Hunter L., Natural Capitalism: Creating the Next Industrial Revolution, Back Bay Books, 2000

Heilbroner Robert L., The Worldly Philosophers: The Lives, Times, and Ideas of the Great Economic Thinkers, 7th Revised Edition, Touchstone, 1999

Herrera Remy, Un autre capitalisme n'est pas possible, Editions Syllepse, 2010, in French

Heuvel Katrina Vanden, Meltdown: How Greed and Corruption Shattered Our Financial System and How We Can Recover, Nation Books, 2009

Hirsh Michael, Capital Offense: How Washington's Wise Men Turned America's Future Over to Wall Street, Wiley, 2010

Holliday Chad, Schmidheiny Stephan, Watts Philip, Walking the Talk: The Business Case for Sustainable Development, Berrett-Koehler Publishers, 2002

Hornstein Harvey A., Ph.D., Brutal Bosses and Their Prey, Riverhead Books, 1996

Inoue Shinichi, Putting Buddhism to Work, A New Approach to Management and Business, Kodansha International Ltd., 1997

Jackall Robert, Moral Mazes, The World of Corporate Managers, Oxford University Press, 1989

Jackson Jennifer, An Introduction to Business Ethics, Blackwell Publishers, 1996

Jacobs Joseph J., The Anatomy of an Entrepreneur, Family, Culture, and Ethics, ICS Press, 1991

Jay Antony, Management and Machiavelli: An Inquiry into the Politics of Corporate Life, Bantam Books, 1969

Johnson Simon, 13 Bankers: The Wall Street Takeover and the Next Financial Meltdown, Pantheon, 2010

Johnston David Cay, Free Lunch: How the Wealthiest Americans Enrich Themselves at Government Expense (and Stick You with the Bill), Portfolio Trade, 2008

Jorion Paul, Le capitalisme a l'agonie, Fayard, 2011, in French

Kahneman Daniel and co-authors, Rationality, Fairness, Happiness: Selected Writings, in Hebrew, Keter and the University of Haifa, 2005. Based on Kahneman Daniel and co-authors, Choices, Values, and Frames, Cambridge University Press, 2000

Kahneman Daniel, Knetsch Jack L., Thaler Richard H., Anomalities: The Endowment Effect, Loss Aversion, and Status Quo Bias, The Journal of Economic Perspectives, Vol. 5, No. 1 (Winter, 1991), pp. 193-206

Kansas Dave, The Wall Street Journal Guide to the End of Wall Street as We Know It: What You Need to Know About the Greatest Financial Crisis of Our Time and How to Survive It, Collins Business, 2009

Kaufman Allen, Zacharias Lawrence, Karson Marvin, Managers vs. Owners, The Struggle for Corporate Control in American Democracy, The Ruffin Series in Business Ethics, Oxford University Press, 1995

Kelley Michael, On Stone or Sand, The Ethics of Christianity, Capitalism, & Socialism, Pleroma Press, 1993

Keynes John Maynard, The General Theory of Employment, Interest and Money, Classic House Books, 2008 (1936)

Kidder Rushworth M., How Good People Make Tough Choices, Resolving the Dilemmas of Ethical Living, A Fireside Book published by Simon & Schuster, 1995

Klein Naomi, Fences and Windows, Dispatches from the Front Lines of the Globalization Debate, Picador, 2002

Klein Naomi, No Logo: Taking Aim at the Brand Bullies, Picador, 2000

Klein Naomi, The Shock Doctrine: The Rise of Disaster Capitalism, Picador, 2008

Kotlikoff Laurence J., Jimmy Stewart is Dead: Ending the World's Ongoing Financial Plague with Limited Purpose Banking, Wiley, 2010

Krugman Paul, End This Depression, W. W. Norton, 2013

Krugman Paul, A Country is Not a Company, Harvard Business School Press, 2009

Krugman Paul, The Return of Depression Economics and the Crisis of 2008, W. W. Norton, 2009 (1999)

Lapavistas Costas et al., Crisis in the Euro Zone, Verso, 2012

Lee Kuan Yew, Memoirs: From Third World to First, The Singapore Story: 1965-2000, Singapore Press Holdings, Times Editions, 2000

Leeson Nick, Rogue Trader, How I Brought Down Barings Bank and Shook the Financial World, Little, Brown and Company, Boston, 1996

Leopold Les, How to Make a Million Dollars an Hour: Why Hedger Funds Get Away with Siphoning Off America's Wealth, John Wiley & Sons, 2013

Lepineux François, Rose Jean-Jacques, Bonanni Carole, Hudson Sarah, La RSE, La responsabilité sociale des entreprises, Théories et pratiques, Stratégie, Dunod, 2010, in French

Lewis Michael, Liar's Poker, Rising through the wreckage on Wall Street, Penguin, 1990

Lewis Michael, Panic: The Story of Modern Financial Insanity, W. W. Norton, 2009

Lewis Michael, The Big Short: Inside the Doomsday Machine, W.W. Norton, 2010

Lordon Frédéric, D'un retournement l'autre, Comédie sérieuse sur la crise financière en quatre actes et en alexandrins, Editions du Seuil, 2011, in French

Lowenstein Roger, The End of Wall Street, Penguin, 2010

Lowenstein Roger, When Genius Failed, The Rise and Fall of Long Term Capital Management, Random House, 2000

Lubbers Eveline, edited by, Battling Big Business, Common Courage Press, 2002

Lynn Jonathan and Jay Antony, The Complete Yes Minister, The Diaries of a Cabinet Minister by the Right Hon. James Hacker MP, British Broadcasting Corporation, 1984

Lynn Matthew, Bust: Greece, the Euro, and the Sovereign Debt Crisis, John Wiley & Sons, 2011

Machiavelli Niccolo, The Prince, Bantan Books, 1981

Madsen Peter and Shafritz Jay M., Essentials of Business Ethics, A Meridian Book, 1990

McDonald Duff, Last Man Standing: The Ascent of Jamie Dimon and JPMorgan Chase, Simon & Schuster, 2009

McDonald Lawrence G. and Robinson Patrick, A Colossal Failure of Common Sense: The Inside Story of the Collapse of Lehman Brothers, Crown Business, 2009

McGee Suzanne, Chasing Goldman Sachs: How the Masters of the Universe Melted Wall Street Down... And Why They'll Take Us to the Brink Again, Crown Business, 2010

Mackey John & Sisodia Raj, Conscious Capitalism: Liberating the Heroic Spirit of Business, Harvard Business Review Press, 2013

McLean Bethany & Nocera Joe, All the Devils are Here: The Hidden History of the Financial Crisis, Portfolio Penguin, 2010

Minsky Hyman, Stabilizing an Unstable Economy, McGraw-Hill, 2008

Monks Robert A.G., The Emperor's Nightingale, Restoring the Integrity of the Corporation in the Age of Shareholder Activism, Addison-Wesley, 1998

Morgenson Gretchen, Rosner Joshua, Reckless Endangerment: How Outsized Ambition, Greed, and Corruption Led to Economic Armageddon, Times Books, Henry Holt and Company, 2011

Morita Akio, with Reingold Edwin M. and Shimomura Mitsuko, Made in Japan: Akio Morita and Sony, E.P. Dutton, 1996

Morris Charles R., The Two Trillion Dollar Meltdown: Easy Money, High Rollers, and the Great Credit Crash, Public Affairs, 2009

Mott Graham M., How to Recognize and Avoid Scams Swindles and Rip-Offs, Personal Stories Powerful Lessons, Golden Shadows Press, 1994

Nash Laura L., Ph.D., Believers in Business, Resolving the Tensions between Christian Faith, Business, Ethics, Competition and our Definitions of Success, Thomas Nelson Publishers, 1994

Nash Laura L., Good Intentions Aside, A Manager's Guide to Resolving Ethical Problems, Harvard Business School Press, 1993

O'Neill Jessie H., The Golden Ghetto, The Psychology of Affluence, Hazelden, 1997

Parks Robert H., Ph.D., The Witch Doctor of Wall Street, A Noted Financial Expert Guides You through Today's Voodoo Economics, Prometheus Books, 1996

Paulson Henry M. Jr., On the Brink: Inside the Race to Stop the Collapse of the Global Financial System, Business Plus, 2010

Péguy Charles, L'Argent, suivi de L'Argent Suite, Gallimard, 1932, in French

Péguy Charles, Une éthique sans compromise, textes essentiels de Charles Péguy, Agora Pocket, 2011, in French

Peicuti Cristina, Crédit, Déstabilisation et Crises, L'Harmattan, 2010, in French

Peters Thomas J. and Waterman, Jr. Robert H., In Search of Excellence, Lessons from America's Best-Run Companies, Warner Books, 1984

Piketty Thomas, Capital in the Twenty-First Century, The Belknap Press of Harvard University Press, 2014

Pontusson Jonas, Inequality and Prosperity: Social Europe Vs. Liberal America, Cornell University Press, 2005

Posner Richard A. The Honorable, A Failure of Capitalism: The Crisis of '08 and the Descent into Depression, Harvard University Press, 2009

Pozen Robert, Too Big to Save?: How to Fix the U.S. Financial System, Wiley, 2010

Pratley Peter, The Essence of Business Ethics, Prentice Hall, 1995

Precht Richard David, L'art de ne pas être un égoïste: Pour une éthique responsable, Belfond, 2012, in French, translated from German

Prins Nomi, It Takes a Pillage: Behind the Bailouts, Bonuses, and Backroom Deals from Washington to Wall Street, Wiley, 2009

Rae Scott B. & Wong Kenman L., Beyond Integrity, A Judeo-Christian Approach to Business Ethics, Zondervan Publishing House, 1996

Rajan Raghuram G., Fault Lines: How Hidden Fractures still Threaten the World Economy, Princeton University Press, 2010

Reich Robert B., Aftershock: The Next Economy & America's Future, Vintage Books, 2011

Reich Robert B., Beyond Outrage: What Has Gone Wrong with Our Economy and Our Democracy, and How to Fix It, Vintage Books, 2012

Reid T.R., The United States of Europe: The New Superpower and the End of American Supremacy, Penguin, 2005

Reinhart Carmen M. & Rogoff Kenneth S., This Time Is Different: Eight Centuries of Financial Folly, Princeton University Press, 2009

Richardson Janice, Edited by, World Ethics Report on Finance and Money, Editions Eska, 1997

Rifkin Jeremy, The European Dream: How Europe's Vision of the Future is Quietly Eclipsing the American Dream, Tarcher, 2005

Ritholtz Barry, Bailout Nation: How Greed and Easy Money Corrupted Wall Street and Shook the World Economy, Wiley, 2009

Roberts Michael, The Great Recession: Profit Cycles, Economic Crisis, A Marxist View, Michael Roberts, 2009

Rolfe John and Troob Peter, Monkey Business, Swinging through the Wall Street Jungle, Warner Business Books, 2000

Roubini Nouriel and Mihm Stephen, Crisis Economics: A Crash Course in the Future of Finance, Penguin, 2010

Rozen Aharon, Crisis and Punishment, What Happened to the World in 2007-2009 and Why the American Way of Life Is Bankrupt, Globes Hasifria, 2009, in Hebrew

Sachs Jeffrey D., The Price of Civilization: Reawakening American Virtue and Prosperity, Random House, 2012

Sapir Jacques, La démondialisation, Editions du Seuil, 2011, in French

Schroeder Alice, The Snowball: Warren Buffett and the Business of Life, Bantam, 2009

Senor Dan & Singer Saul, Start-Up Nation: The Story of Israel's Economic Miracle, Twelve Hachette Book Group, 2011

Shelp Ron with Ehrbar Al, Fallen Giant: The Amazing Story of Hank Greenberg and the History of AIG, Wiley, 2009

Shiller Robert J., Irrational Exuberance, Second Edition, Revised & Updated, Broadway, 2009

Skadden, Arps, Slate, Meagher & Flom LLP & Affiliates, Dodd-Frank Act, Commentary and Insights, http://www.skadden.com/Cimages/siteFile/Skadden_Insights_Special_Edition_Dodd-Frank_Act1.pdf, 2010

Smilansky Saul, 10 Moral Paradoxes, Haifa University Press, Yediot Ahronot – Sifrei Hemed, 2012

Solomon Robert C., Above the Bottom Line, An Introduction to Business Ethics, Second Edition, Harcourt Brace College Publishers, 1994

Solomon Robert C., Ethics and Excellence, Cooperation and Integrity in Business, The Ruffin Series in Business Ethics, Oxford University Press, 1993

Sorkin Andrew Ross, Too Big to Fail: The Inside Story of How Wall Street and Washington Fought to Save the Financial System – and Themselves, Viking Adult, 2009

Soros George, The Crash of 2008 and What it Means: The New Paradigm for Financial Markets, Public Affairs, 2008

Stern Gary H., Too Big to Fail: The Hazards of Bank Bailouts, Brookings Institution Press, 2009

Stewart James B., Den of Thieves, Simon & Schuster Paperbacks, 1991

Stiglitz Joseph E., The Price of Inequality: How Today's Divided Society Endangers Our Future, W. W. Norton, 2012

Stiglitz Joseph E., Sen Amartya, Fitoussi Jean-Paul, Mismeasuring Our Lives: Why GDP Doesn't Add Up, New Press, 2010

Stiglitz Joseph E., Freefall: America, Free Markets, and the Sinking of the World Economy, W. W. Norton & Co., 2010

Stiglitz Joseph E., The Stiglitz Report: Reforming the International Monetary and Financial Systems in the Wake of the Global Crisis, New Press, 2010

Stiglitz Joseph E., Making Globalization Work, W. W. Norton & Company, 2007

Stiglitz Joseph E., The Roaring Nineties: A New History of the World's Most Prosperous Decade, W. W. Norton, 2004

Stiglitz Joseph E., Globalization and its Discontents, W. W. Norton & Company, 2003

Strauss Michael, Volition and Valuation, University Press of America, 1999

Strober Gerald and Strober Deborah, Catastrophe: The Story of Bernard L. Madoff, The Man Who Swindled the World, Phoenix Books, 2009

Taibbi Matt, Griftopia: A Story of Bankers, Politicians, and the Most Audacious Grab in American History, Spiegel & Grau, 2011

Taibbi Matt, The Great American Bubble Machine (Goldman Sachs), Rolling Stone 1082-1083, July 9-23, 2009 http://www.rollingstone.com/politics/news/12697/64796?RS_show_page=0

Taleb Nassim Nicholas, The Black Swan: The Impact of the Highly Improbable, Random House, 2007

Tamari Meir, The Challenge of Wealth, A Jewish Perspective on Earning and Spending Money, Jason Aronson Inc., 1995

Velasquez Manuel G., "Corporate Ethics: Losing It, Having It, Getting It", Madsen, Essentials of Business Ethics, A Meridian Book, 1990, pp. 228-244

Wallwork Ernest, Psychoanalysis and Ethics, Yale University Press, 1991

Ward Gary, Developing & Enforcing a Code of Business Ethics, A Guide to Developing, Implementing, Enforcing and Evaluating an Effective Ethics Program, Pilot Books, 1989

Wessel David, In Fed We Trust: Ben Bernanke's War on the Great Panic, Crown Business, 2009

Wikipedia: Dodd-Frank Wall Street Reform and Consumer Protection Act, July 2010, 2010 European sovereign debt crisis (Greece, Goldman Sachs, Downgrading of debt, danger of default, role of speculators), PIGS (economics), Financial Crisis of 2007-2010 (Housing Bubble, Sub-prime Lending, Deregulation, Over-leveraging, Financial Innovation and Complexity, Incorrect Pricing of Risk, Boom and Collapse of the Shadow Banking System, Commodities Boom, Systemic Crisis, Greece, Iceland, Ireland, Spain), Late-2000s Recession/The Great Recession, References, Links, and other Articles.

Williams Oliver F., Houck John W., edited by, A Virtuous Life in Business, Stories of Courage and Integrity in the Corporate World, Rowman & Littlefield Publishers, Inc., 1992

Williams Oliver F., Reilly Frank K. & Houck John W., edited by, Ethics and the Investment Industry, Rowman & Littlefield Publishers, Inc., 1989

Wilson Rodney, Economics, Ethics and Religion, Jewish, Christian and Muslim Economic Thought, New York University Press, 1997

Woodstock Theological Center, Seminar in Business Ethics, Ethical Considerations in Corporate Takeovers, Georgetown University Press, 1990

Wright Lesley and Smye Marti, Corporate Abuse, How "Lean and Mean" Robs People and Profits, Macmillan, 1996

Wuthnow Robert, Poor Richard's Principle, Recovering the American Dream through the Moral Dimension of Work, Business, & Money, Princeton University Press, 1996

Yunus Muhammad, Creating a World Without Poverty: Social Business and the Future of Capitalism, PublicAffairs, 2009

Zakaria Fareed, The Post-American World, Release 2.0, Updated and Expanded, Norton, 2011

Zola Emile, Money (L'argent), Mondial, 2007

Zuckerman Gregory, The Greatest Trade Ever: The Behind-the-Scenes Story of How John Paulson Defied Wall Street and Made Financial History, Broadway Business, 2009

ADDITIONAL BIBLIOGRAPHY FOR COURSES AND PHD THESIS

The Holy Bible, The Old Testament, New International Version, International Bible Society, 2/96

The Holy Bible, The New Testament, New International Version, International Bible Society, 2/96

Brecht Bertolt, Die Dreigroschenoper, The Threepenny Opera, in German, Universal Edition, 1928, assigned to Brookhouse Music, Inc., 1957

Business Ethics Quarterly, January 1998, Vol. 8 No. 1, The Journal of the Society for Business Ethics

Business Ethics Quarterly, April 1998, Vol. 8 No. 2, The Journal of the Society for Business Ethics

Business Ethics Quarterly, July 1998, Vol. 8 No. 3, The Journal of the Society for Business Ethics

Business Ethics Quarterly, October 1998, Vol. 8 No. 4, The Journal of the Society for Business Ethics

Business Ethics Quarterly, The Ruffin Series Special Issue No. 1, 1998, The Journal of the Society for Business Ethics

Business Ethics Quarterly, January 1999, Vol. 9 No. 1, The Journal of the Society for Business Ethics

Business Ethics Quarterly, April 1999, Vol. 9 No. 2, The Journal of the Society for Business Ethics

Business Ethics Quarterly, July 1999, Vol. 9 No. 3, The Journal of the Society for Business Ethics

Business Ethics Quarterly, October 1999, Vol. 9 No. 4, The Journal of the Society for Business Ethics

Business Ethics Quarterly, The Ruffin Series Special Issue No. 2, 2000, Environmental Challenges to Business, A Publication of the Society for Business Ethics

Business Ethics Quarterly, January 2000, Vol. 10 No. 1, The Journal of the Society for Business Ethics

Cervantes Miguel de, El Ingenioso Hidalgo Don Quijote de la Mancha, Don Quixote, in Spanish, Catedra Letras Hispánicas, 1992

Dante, The Divine Comedy, Pan Classics, 1980

Dherse Jean-Loup, Minguet Hughes Dom, l'Éthique ou le Chaos?, Ethics or Chaos?, in French, Presses de la Renaissance, 1998

Feyerabend Paul, Contre la Méthode, Esquisse d'une Théorie Anarchiste de la Connaissance, Against Method, in French, Editions du Seuil, 1979

Homer, The Iliad, Penguin Classics, 1987

Homere, Odyssee, Le Livre de Poche, 1960

Huckabee Mike, the Honorable Governor of Arkansas, with Perry John, Character is the Issue, How People with Integrity Can Revolutionize America, Broadman
& Holman Publishers, 1997

Ibsen Henrik, An Enemy of the People, Modern Library College Editions, 1950

Kafka Franz, The Trial, Schocken Books, 1998

Kafka Franz, The Metamorphosis and Other Stories, Barnes and Noble Books, 1996

Koran, the Essential, the Heart of Islam, an Introductory Selection of Readings from the Qur'an, Translated and Presented by Thomas Cleary, Castle Books, 1993

La Fontaine, Fables, in French, Folio, Gallimard, 1991

Lawrence William D., with Turpin Jack A., Beyond the Bottom Line, Where Faith and Business Meet, Praxis Books Moody Press, 1994

Leibowitz Yeshayahu, Talks with Michael Shashar, On Just About Everything, in Hebrew, Keter Publishing House, 1988

Mao Tse-Tung, Quotations from Chairman, Foreign Languages Press, 1966

May William W., Business Ethics and the Law, Beyond Compliance, The Rockwell Lecture Series, Peter Lang, 1991

McLellan David, Karl Marx - His Life and Thought, A Paladin Book Granada, 1973

Miller Arthur, All My Sons, Six Great Modern Plays, Dell Publishing Company, Inc., 1977

Miller Arthur, The Crucible, The Portable Arthur Miller, Penguin Books, 1995

Miller Arthur, Timebends - A Life, Penguin Books, 1995

Mitterand Henri, Zola, Fayard, 1999

Pagnol Marcel, Judas, in French, Oeuvres Completes I, Theatre, Editions de
Fallois, 1995

Pagnol Marcel, Les Marchands de Gloire, The Merchants of Glory, in French, Oeuvres Completes I, Theatre, Editions de Fallois, 1995

Pagnol Marcel, Topaze, in French, Oeuvres Completes I, Theatre, Editions de

- Fallois, 1995
- Pagnol Marcel, L'Eau des Collines, Jean de Florette, in French, Oeuvres Completes III, Souvenirs et Romans, Editions de Fallois, 1995
- Pagnol Marcel, L'Eau des Collines, Manon des Sources, in French, Oeuvres Completes III, Souvenirs et Romans, Editions de Fallois, 1995
- Passeron Jean-Claude, Le Raisonnement Sociologique, L'Espace Non-Popperien du Raisonnement Naturel, Sociological Reasoning, in French, Collection Essais & Recherches, Nathan, 1991
- Piave Francesco Maria, Rigoletto, in Italian, TMK(S), Marca Registrada RCA Corporation, 1974
- Popper Karl R., La Logique de la Decouverte Scientifique, The Logic of Scientific Discovery, in French, Bibliotheque Scientifique Payot, Editions Payot, 1995
- Quintus Smyrnaeus, The Fall of Troy, Loeb Classical Library, 1984
- Scott Fitzgerald Francis, The Great Gatsby, Heinemann/Octopus, 1977
- Shakespeare William, Julius Caesar, Oxford University Press, 1959
- Shakespeare William, The Merchant of Venice, Oxford University Press, 1959
- Strauss Anselm L., Qualitative Analysis for Social Scientists, Cambridge University Press, 1996
- Troyat Henri, Zola, Flammarion, in French, Le Livre de Poche, 1992
- Virgil, The Aeneid, Translated by Robert Fitzgerald, Vintage Classics, Random House, 1990
- Voltaire, Candide, Dover Publications, Inc., 1993
- Yin Robert K., Case Study Research, Design and Methods, Second Edition, Applied Social Research Methods Series, Volume 5, Sage Publications, 1994
- Zola Emile, La Curee, The Quarry, in French, Gallimard, 1997
- Zola Emile, Le Ventre de Paris, The Stomach of Paris, in French, Gallimard, 1996

VIII. PUBLICATION OF BOOKS

Google Books – Jacques Cory – 3 printed books published in English and 2 in French

Google Books – יעקב קורי – 2 printed books published in Hebrew

All the details on the books by Jacques Cory can be found on his website in Books, Hebrew, etc.

The website of Jacques Cory: www.businessethicscory.com

WorldCat/Page 1, Page 2 – List of thousands academic and national libraries all over the world, but mainly in the United States including Library of Congress, holding Jacques Cory's books

1. ACADEMIC BOOKS IN ENGLISH

1. BUSINESS ETHICS: THE ETHICAL REVOLUTION OF MINORITY SHAREHOLDERS

Kluwer Academic Publishers – 2001 – hard cover, First Springer Science+Business Media, Inc. – 2005 – soft cover, and in subsequent years additional soft cover and eBook editions

ISBN - hard cover 0-7923-7300-6, 9780792373001, soft cover 0-387-23040-8, 9780387230405, eBook 0387232311, 9780387232317, in 33 editions, held by 976 libraries worldwide

The first published academic book in the world on business ethics to minority shareholders. A pioneer research, based on case studies of U.S., French & Israeli companies and on the author's extensive business experience, with a modern approach on activism in business ethics. The book found the rules that govern unethical conduct towards minority shareholders, which were validated by the Enron, WorldCom and corporate scandals after the publication of the book. You can read extracts, details, purchasing, and reviews of the book on Cory's website in Books.

2. ACTIVIST BUSINESS ETHICS

Kluwer Academic Publishers – 2002 - hard cover, First Springer Science+Business Media, Inc. – 2005 – soft cover, and in subsequent years additional soft cover and eBook editions

ISBN - hard cover 0-7923-7566-1, 9780792375661, soft cover 0-387-22848-9, 9780387228488, eBook – 0387229140, 9780387229140, in 31 editions, held by 1,362 libraries worldwide

Activist Business Ethics is quoted on Wikipedia & other websites, is quoted several times in the entry "Business Ethics" of Wikipedia, is recommended in Wikipedia and Answers.com for "Further Reading", and is treated as a standard text/source book in Talk: Business Ethics in Wikipedia. The book examines international aspects, business ethics in the religions, psychological and sociological aspects of business ethics, ethical and democratic evolution, the personification of stakeholders, the predominance of values & ethics for CEOs, & the inefficient safeguards of the stakeholders' interests. The book presents new vehicles for the safeguard of those interests, such as the Internet, Transparency, Ethical Funds and Activist Associations, and future activist vehicles, such as the Supervision Board and the Institute of Ethics. You can read extracts, details, purchasing, and reviews of the book on Cory's website in Books.

3. BUSINESS ETHICS FOR A SUSTAINABLE SOCIETY: CONQUERING THE CORPORATE FRANKENSTEIN

The Edwin Mellen Press – 2009 hard cover, 2010 soft cover

ISBN – hard cover 0-7734-3848-3, 9780773438484, soft cover- 0-7799-1291-8, 9780779912919

The book is a pioneering book on business ethics, social responsibility, sustainability, corporate governance and globalization. It covers the three main facets of those subjects: the theoretical with 11 chapters on the essence of ethics and sustainability in the context of the Economic Whirl and the ethical credo of the author, the empirical with 20 case studies written mostly as short and compelling stories on ethical and corporate governance dilemmas in international business, and the emotional with the analysis of dozens of films, plays, novels- masterpieces on those subjects. You can read extracts, details, purchasing, and reviews of the book on Cory's website in Books.

2. ACADEMIC BOOK IN HEBREW

4. SELECTED ISSUES IN BUSINESS ETHICS AND SOCIAL RESPONSIBILITY

סוגיות נבחרות באתיקה עסקית ובאחריות חברתית מאת יעקב קורי

SUGYOT NIVHAROT BE-ETIKAH 'ISKIT UVE-AHRAYUT HEVRATIT

The Hebrew University Magnes Press – 2008 soft cover, and subsequently eBook edition

ISBN – 978-965-493-355-1, 9654933551

The book "Selected Issues in Business Ethics and Social Responsibility" deals with a subject that is at the forefront of our economic and social agenda and presents the ethical credo of the author. It is unique in the sense that it comprises theoretical chapters, case studies that are based on the large business experience and the academic research of the author, and the analysis of films, plays, documentaries and novels - masterpieces on business ethics. The parts of the book focus on the ethical facets of leadership, integrity, whistleblowers, corporate governance, stock market, banking, government and business, corruption and bribes, wrongdoing of stakeholders, trust, transparency, decency, sustainability, social responsibility, activism, environment, globalization, international aspects and business ethics in Israel. The combination of theoretical and empirical components and the analysis of works on business ethics, addressing the reason and the emotions as well, was proven as a successful mix that has assimilated the concepts of ethics by businessmen and students. The author maintains in his book that it is possible to succeed in business while keeping rigorous ethical standards in the complex business environment of today. You can read extracts, details, purchasing, and reviews of the book on Cory's website in Books.

3. ACADEMIC BOOKS IN FRENCH

5. L'ETHIQUE DES AFFAIRES ET LES ACTIONNAIRES MINORITAIRES: DES VOIES NOUVELLES POUR SAUVEGARDER LES INTERETS DES ACTIONNAIRES MINORITAIRES

BUSINESS ETHICS AND THE MINORITY SHAREHOLDERS: NEW WAYS FOR SAFEGUARDING THE INTERESTS OF THE MINORITY SHAREHOLDERS

Editions Universitaires Europeennes – Sudwestdeutscher Verlag für Hochschulschriften GmbH & Co. KG, 2012, soft cover

ISBN – 978-3-8417-9771-1, 3841797717

Le livre examine le contexte actuel de l'éthique des affaires envers les actionnaires minoritaires, et propose des voies nouvelles. Il traite successivement de la nécessité de mener une recherche pionnière ; de l'intérêt d'une recherche qualitative et des études de cas ; de la légitimité de la recherche littéraire dans le cadre d'un livre académique ; des règles concluant le livre; de l'analyse comparative de l'affaire Enron et du livre. Le livre montre comment les mécanismes ou instances traditionnels visant à garantir les droits des actionnaires minoritaires ; à savoir le système légal, les actions collectives, les dirigeants des entreprises, les membres des conseils d'administration, les administrateurs indépendants, l'autorité de tutelle des marchés boursiers, les auditeurs, les analystes, les soumissionnaires et la presse; n'apportent pas souvent une protection suffisante aux actionnaires minoritaires. Le monde des affaires, qui ne donne pas assez d'importance aux éléments moraux, le manque d'éthique de beaucoup de dirigeants, et l'admiration que porte la société au succès à tout prix, ont une influence nuisible sur l'économie mondiale moderne. Dr. Jacques Cory (Ph.D. avec mention très honorable, CNAM, France, 2004, MBA Insead, France, 1968, BA Université de Jérusalem, 1966) est un homme d'affaires internationales et un auteur de livres académiques pionniers en éthique des affaires, un roman et une pièce. Il a enseigné des 2004 à l'Insead, aux Universités de Tel Aviv, Haïfa, Technion, etc. You can read extracts, details, purchasing, and reviews of the book on Cory's website in Books.

6. L'ETHIQUE DES AFFAIRES ET LES ACTIONNAIRES MINORITAIRES

BUSINESS ETHICS AND THE MINORITY SHAREHOLDERS

Thèse de doctorat en Sciences de gestion sous la direction de Yvon Pesqueux, soutenue en 2004 à CNAM, Paris, France. PhD dissertation on Business Ethics, 2004, at the libraries of CNAM Paris and ANRT Grenoble, France, as well as at the library of the University of Haifa, Israel

The thesis by publications, Business ethics and the minority shareholders, is based on two books of Jacques Cory that were published in 2001 by Kluwer Academic Publishers in Boston : Activist Business Ethics and Business Ethics : the ethical revolution of minority shareholders. The thesis examines the actual context of business ethics towards minority shareholders, the new vehicles to safeguard their rights, expands on the necessity to conduct a pioneer research , the methodology of the publications, the qualitative research, the case studies, the legitimacy of literary research as part of an academic research, the rules that conclude the books, a comparative analysis of Enron and the publications, describes in detail the basis of the bibliographical research and ends with the repercussions of the thesis on future research. A full list of the bibliography (books and articles) of the publications is given at the end of the thesis. You can read extracts and reviews of the thesis/dissertation on Cory's website in Books.

4. NOVEL IN HEBREW

7. BEWARE OF GREEKS' PRESENTS

הישמר מדרון יווני מאת יעקב קורי

HISHAMRU MI-DORON YEVANI

Kedem Publishing, Sidrat Keshet ha-Mizrah, 2001, soft cover

ISBN – 965-7103-11-8, 9789657103111

The book “Beware of Greeks’ Presents” describes in a trenchant way the corruption in the business world, as only a businessman who knows the reality from personal knowledge can describe. This is the basis of the book’s originality, that is very convincing by its authenticity and by the message it conveys about the future of society in the new Millennium, a message of despair mixed with some hope. The protagonists of the book are Ully (Ulysses) and Nelly (Penelope) Doron, an Israeli couple, who is not ready to succumb to the new norms and pays the full price for that, followed by the betrayal of their best friends. Their ordeal is related as a modern Odyssey, as the heroes are from Greek origin and are compared to those of Homer. You can read extracts, details, purchasing, and reviews of the book: in English on Cory's website in Books, and in Hebrew, and watch a film of two hours on the launching of the book in 2001.

5. PLAY IN FRENCH AND IN HEBREW

8. LE CHOIX DE NELLY

NELLY'S CHOICE - BEHIRATA SHEL NELLY - בחירתה של נלי מאת יעקב קורי ועמליה אייל

By Jacques Cory and Amalia Eyal, with an introduction and review by Joshua Sobol, translated from the Hebrew play by Saskia Cohen, French text edited by Jacques Cory

Edilivre, 2012, soft cover and eBook editions

ISBN – 978-2-332-50663-4 soft cover, 9782332506641 eBook

The play in Hebrew has not been published yet, but it can be found at the library of the University of Haifa, the text of the play and the music of the play are – on Cory's website, and reading of the play was performed at the Hebrew University of Jerusalem on July 30, 2008.

La pièce Le Choix de Nelly décrit d'une façon incisive la corruption qui règne au sein du monde des affaires, comme seul un homme d'affaires qui connaît personnellement la réalité peut le faire. Le thème de la corruption du monde des affaires, en particulier des méfaits commis à l'encontre des actionnaires minoritaires, n'a pas encore été étudié de façon adéquate dans la littérature contemporaine, et il n'existe presque pas de livres écrits par des hommes d'affaires sur ce sujet. La pièce originale et convaincante transmet un message sur l'avenir de la société moderne en ce siècle - un message de désespoir et d'espérance mêlés. La pièce aborde des problèmes tels que la corruption du monde des affaires, le racisme, la libération de la femme, l'amour et la trahison. You can read extracts, details, purchasing, and reviews of the play: in French and in English on Cory's website in Books, and in Hebrew, as well as the music of the play – the list and the audio.

6. ESSAY IN FRENCH ACADEMIC BOOK

9. ESSAY: UNE MANIÈRE ORIGINALE D'ENSEIGNER LA RSE – IN THE BOOK: LA RSE – LA RESPONSABILITE SOCIALE DES ENTREPRISES: THEORIES ET PRATIQUES BY FRANCOIS LEPINEUX, JEAN-JACQUES ROSE, CAROLE BONANNI, SARAH HUDSON

ESSAY - AN ORIGINAL METHODOLOGY FOR TEACHING CSR – IN THE BOOK: THE CSR – THE CORPORATE SOCIAL RESPONSIBILITY: THEORIES AND PRACTISES

Dunod Edition, 2010, soft cover and eBook editions

ISBN – 978-2-10-052648-2, 2100526480 soft cover, 9782100526482, 2100526480 eBook

Google Books – La RSE

La responsabilité sociale des entreprises (RSE) est un concept dans lequel les entreprises intègrent les préoccupations sociales, environnementales et économiques dans leurs activités et dans leurs interactions avec leurs parties prenantes. Cet ouvrage est le premier manuel de référence en français consacré à la RSE. Il présente les origines et le développement progressif de ce concept, puis montre comment la RSE se décline dans les différentes disciplines des sciences de gestion, et dans les différentes fonctions des entreprises. Enfin, il met l'accent sur les nouveaux types de gouvernance avec la RSE. L'ouvrage propose une approche interdisciplinaire (sciences de gestion, sociologie, sciences politiques...) et une orientation internationale (par les exemples choisis). Il contient des entretiens avec des spécialistes, tel Jacques Cory d'Israel. The essay of Cory can be read in French on Cory's website in Articles, and in a Hebrew version of it.

7. ESSAY IN HEBREW ACADEMIC BOOK

10. ESSAY: IN THE NAME OF CITIZENS, BUSINESS OR OFFICIALS? (ON SOCIAL AND ECONOMIC JUSTICE) BY ERAN VIGODA-GADOT AND JACQUES CORY – IN THE BOOK: PUBLIC RESPONSIBILITY IN ISRAEL, EDITED BY RAPHAEL COHEN-ALMAGOR, ORI ARBEL-GANZ, ASA KASHER

מסה: בשם האזרחים, העסקים או העסקנים? הארות על האחריות הציבורית של הממשל והמנהל הציבורי, מאת ערן ויגודה ויעקב קורי, בספר: אחריות ציבורית בישראל, עורכים: רפאל כהן-אלמגור, אורי ארבל-גנץ, אסא כשר

Hakibbutz Hameuchad Publishing House and the Jerusalem Center for Ethics, 2012, hard cover and eBook editions

ISBN – 0 0310005170 5

Google Books – Public Responsibility in Israel

Public responsibility is often conceptualized as an objective and universal expression beyond time and era. However, the individual's understandings and interpretations may emphasize the personal perspective of bureaucrats and elected officials' duties. How can one bridge between citizens' expectations and subjective concepts of the term public responsibility and the limited definition drawn by the public sector? These and other related questions are addressed in this seminal volume. For the first time, leading Israeli scholars and experts have gathered to explore the meaning of public responsibility. Each of the distinguished authors - historians, political scientists, sociologists, social-psychologists, philosophers, literature scholars, law professors, policy analysts, economists, former judges, legislatures and ministers – had clarified a different aspect of Public Responsibility, based on his professional discipline and resulting understandings of the discussed concept. The result in this book is a thorough review of the meaning of public responsibility. The essay of Cory can be read on Cory's website: in the version with the co-author Eran Vigoda-Gadot - extracts, full text, and in the original version by Jacques Cory.

IX. ACADEMIC, CULTURAL, GEOGRAPHY EBOOKS & BOOKS, CHILDREN BOOKS, DIARY, POETRY, SATIRES, LINGUISTICS, BUSINESS PLANS, BUSINESS WORKS, PLAY, SCREENPLAY AND AUDIO PLAY, COLLECTION OF ESSAYS AND ARTICLES, STORIES, CASE STUDIES, ETHICAL CODE, PERSONAL AND ACADEMIC CORRESPONDENCE, ACADEMIC COURSES AND LECTURES, PUBLISHED ON ACADEMIC, ORGANIZATIONS, JACQUES CORY'S AND OTHER WEBSITES, OR REVIEWED BY EXPERTS & YET UNPUBLISHED, BOOKS IN PROGRESS...

1. ACADEMIC EBOOK IN HEBREW

1. SOCIAL, ECONOMIC AND GOVERNMENTAL JUSTICE: ESSAYS AND ARTICLES

Google Books צדק חברתי, כלכלי ושלטוני: מסות ומאמרים מאת יעקב קורי

The eBook can be found at the websites of the libraries of the University of Haifa and Carmel Academic Center, Israel, the websites of Transparency International Israel, Ometz Israel, Cory...

The eBook from 2012 exists only in this format, & anyone can print it or read it free of charge.

The eBook is a compilation of essays and articles on Social, Economic and Governmental Justice, written by Jacques Cory and published in leading news and organizations websites. The book gives an alternative method to conduct business, more social in its approach, more humane – the opposite of the neoliberal approach prevailing in the United States and Israel. Its political implication is a new regime – the Second Republic of Israel – focused on the welfare of the 99% of citizens, which are not represented adequately in the Israeli government. But the ideology of the book is universal, as the same economic and social injustice prevails in all the neoliberal regimes and in many other so-called social regimes, which advocate minimal regulation, extensive ties between government and the tycoons ruling business, and a reckless market economy, which is in fact ruled by monopolies and oligarchs. Finally, the book analyzes the Scandinavian model and suggests adopting most of their precepts in order to achieve best results.

The eBook is based on "Essays & Articles on Social & Economic Justice, Business & Government in Israel", published since 2010 on journals & websites. Additional essays, articles, case studies and a code of ethics, as detailed subsequently, appear on Cory's and other organizations' websites and might be part of a published printed version of the eBook, if a publisher would publish the book in Israel. The updated eBook is split in two eBooks: a professional book – 2016 – "Ethical Codes and Case Studies, Essays and Articles on Social, Economic and Governmental Justice", comprising ethical codes, generic case studies on ethical codes, professional essays and articles published until 2015; and a book on general and personal topics – 2016 – "Essays, Memoirs and Articles on General and Personal Topics", comprising essays and articles on general topics, memoirs and personal topics based on my autobiography on literature, biographies, drama, linguistics, correspondence, a youth diary, my Ladino activities, and my views on the Israeli-Palestinian conflict; both eBooks are on Books.

Ethical Codes – קודים אתיים ואירועים על קודים אתיים, מסות ומאמרים על צדק חברתי, כלכלי ושלטוני.

Essays, Memoirs – מסות, זכרונות ומאמרים על נושאים כלליים ואישיים.

2. PLAY EBOOK IN HEBREW

2. NELLY DORON

Google Books גלי דורון, מחזה בחמש מערכות, מאת יעקב קורי

The eBook play Nelly Doron in Hebrew, by Jacques Cory, from 2012, exists only in this format and anyone can print it or read it free of charge. It was published with the academic eBook Social, Economic and Governmental Justice on all the websites mentioned above, and can be found in pp 487-649 of the academic eBook, with other non-academic works by Jacques Cory.

The plot of the play commences at a surprise party that Ully throws in his Tel Aviv house to his wife Nelly, in which all their friends participate. In the party a scheme is conceived to takeover at a manipulated price a company that Ully assisted its founder to make public and invested heavily in it, thus making him lose all his money as well as the investment of the minority shareholders. Ully, a modern Ulysses, is a shrewd and tough businessman, who tries to fight the corruption while keeping elementary ethical norms. However, he is not able to cope with the ruthless businessmen who act without any inhibitions and are backed by almost all the society.

On the other hand Nelly, a modern Penelope, develops out of the crisis from an innocent teacher to a fearless warrior. She ceases to be the submissive woman, weaving all day and keeping a complete fidelity to her husband, and becomes a modern woman who takes her fate in her own hands in order to save her husband, herself and their marriage. Finally, the solution is found by introducing a Trojan horse, a Greeks' present, into the fortress of the enemy. But, is the victory complete, are the methods employed by the protagonists adequate, are they not corrupting also, what is the limit that one should not cross when fighting corruption, and is such a victory worthwhile? This is the main dilemma of the play that every one of us faces with his own inclinations and finds the parallels in his personal experience, in France, Israel or the US.

3. CHILDREN EBOOKS IN HEBREW

3. THE RAIN FAIRY

פיית הגשם מאת יעקב קורי, איורים מאת יוסי קורי

The children eBook in Hebrew, by Jacques Cory, illustrated by Joseph Cory, from 2012, exists only in this format and anyone can print it or read it free of charge. It was published with the academic eBook Social, Economic and Governmental Justice on all the websites mentioned above and can be found in pp 469-476 of the academic eBook, with other works by J. Cory.

This book is a fairy tale on the Rain Fairy, who is there to assist everyone encountering difficult situations, sorrow, sickness or catastrophes. The Rain Fairy falls in love with a poor young man and decides to quit the fairy world and become human in order to live with her love.

4. IJKO AND HIS GRANDPARENTS IN THE JUNGLE

איז'יקו מטייל בג'ונגל מאת יעקב קורי, איורים מאת הלנה גת, עריכה מאת שירלי גרפונקל

The children eBook in Hebrew, by Jacques Cory, illustrated by Elena Gat, edited by Shirly Garfunkel, from 2016, exists in a book format with illustrations but it was not published yet, and also as an eBook (without the illustrations) on Jacques Cory's website. We have approached several publishers and we hope that it will be published as a printed book in the near future.

This book is based on the author's jungle stories to his children and grandchildren with names primarily deriving from funny words in Ladino, as the lion Hastrapula, the giraffe Siskerina, the monkey Sholobolo, the peacock Zurzuvi, the witch-doctor Melizina, the rhinoceros Haftona, etc. Over the years parts of the story were added by the author's daughter Shirly and grandson Ido. Shirly's contribution was inter alia when she decided that she has to be part of the story and added that she hid behind her father's seat in the plane to Iquitos and went out from her hide only when they arrived to their destination. Ido's contributions were when he decided that the Indian chief should have another grandchild besides the eldest son Gigimushu and the youngest daughter Chichibamba, he invented a "sandwitch" child Gugumushu, between the two other kids, exactly like in his family where he is a sandwitch kid between Noam and Yael. In another instance he decided that there should be another lion besides Hastrapula, who was a good lion playing with the kids, he invented a bad lion Hastrapulac, who wanted to eat Ijiko, but his grandfather Papu and the Indian chief Gagaraga rescued him. In the story I invented that the lion broke my left shoulder, which happened indeed but on my way to the cinematheque and not fighting a lion, and that the lion broke also all the teeth of Gagaraga. The witch doctor Melizina mended the broken shoulder with a miraculous ointment. But the good-hearted Ido decided that Melizina should also mend the teeth of Gagaraga. He also insisted that at the end of the story the 'bad' animals – Hastrapulac and the snake Bislihisti – should be good again, as all the other animals of the story – the crocodile Cocoroco, the tiger Tititata, and the elephant Grilisamba. But this was not the only creative contributions of Ido to his grandfather's stories. When he was 3, I read him from a book the story of the adventures of the small fish Caspion (see Jacques Cory telling a story to his grandson Ido). He was so excited by the story, that he tore accidentally a page of the book. I asked him why did he do it, and he maintained that he didn't do it. Exasperated by his reaction, I asked him "who did it, my grandmother?" (in Hebrew, when you want to say that something improbable happened you said that your grandmother did it). A few minutes later, Ido asked me: "what is the name of your grandmother?", I answered him: "Sarah", "and where does she live?", "she does not live, she is dead", "OK, but where is she, if she is dead?", "she lives on a cloud". When after that, at Ido's instance I read him once again the story, we arrived to the torn page. I asked Ido "who did it?", and he answered: "your grandmother Sarah who lives on a cloud, as she doesn't like to read books but to tear them" (in Hebrew to read – likro sounds almost the same as to tear – likroa). Ido, aged 3, rested his case...

4. ACADEMIC EBOOK IN ENGLISH IN PROGRESS

5. ETHICS PAYS: A COMPREHENSIVE ATLAS OF SALIENT PARAMETERS IN THE 300 COUNTRIES OF THE WORLD PROVING THAT ETHICS PAYS

Ethics Pays is a unique book analyzing multiple facets of academic findings in ethics, geography, economics, politics, business, psychology and sociology. The book analyzes the most relevant and actual parameters of performance in all the countries of the world in the prism of their ethical conduct and level of corruption – GDP per Capita, Gross National Saving, Industrial Production Growth Rate, Unemployment Rate, Average and Median Wages, Compulsory Deductions, Income Inequality, GINI Index, Middle Class Percentage, Taxes and Other Revenues, Budget Surplus or Deficit, Government Debt as % of GDP, Inflation Rate, Current Account Balance, Human Development Index, Education, Health, Standard of Living, Quality of Life, Poverty Index, Happiness Index, Where to be Born Index, Personal, Economic and Press Freedom, Gender Inequality Index, Democracy Index, Social Progress Index, Productivity Index, Global Peace Index – internal, external, criminality, political instability, terrorist activity, Incarceration Rate, Global Competitiveness Index, Financial Development Index, Credit Rating, Distribution of Wealth, Environmental Performance Index, Index of Globalization, and others.

The book has a message – it proves that "Ethics Pays", as the most ethical and least corrupt countries score the highest ranks in quite all the parameters examined in this book. Namely, the 11 most ethical countries, according to the Transparency International's Corruption Perception Index, scoring 80-90+ in this Index, almost consecutively over the years, have the best scores in the performance parameters mentioned above and many more – Denmark, New Zealand, Finland, Sweden, Norway, Switzerland, Singapore, Netherlands, Luxembourg, Canada and Australia. We analyze also the 20 most ethical countries, less ethical countries, and corrupt countries in all the levels of corruption down to the 20 most corrupt countries, finding that the most corrupt countries score as a rule the lowest grades in most of the parameters. However, the rule that links ethical/unethical conduct to high/low performance in the parameters applies mainly in the extreme level of ethics and corruption, but much less in the median levels.

The book condenses also the most salient parameters – geographic, economic, social, etc. – per country for the 300 countries in an abbreviated format or an extensive format for a sample of 30 countries, in 60+ tables/lists and 180+ links to the best sources, thus in one or two clicks one can find all the parameters he needs. Within a few minutes the readers can find all the relevant data on the country, its maps, flag, population, area, but also in the tables - the GDP, exchange rates, external debt, budget surplus, unemployment, or even corruption perceptions and quality of life indices. If the readers want even more data – they can with one click visit the best Internet's websites on those countries. This facet of the book does not analyze the data but presents it in the most reader-friendly manner possible giving to the reader who is interested in geography, economics or sociology at the country level all the information he needs, in a unique way of condensation, as the other atlases or textbooks are either too bulky or not comprehensive enough.

The third facet of the book is a personal subjective perspective of the author in praise of a cosmopolitan approach in culture, linguistics, travel, literature, films, plays, academics, business, etc., based on his personal cosmopolitan experience, trying to find what links all the countries together rather than what differentiates them, in praise of global humanism, ethics and multi-cultural approach, summarized in Mahatma Gandhi's precepts, which is true in all countries, cultures, religions, and social environment: "There are seven things that will destroy us: Wealth without Work, Pleasure without Conscience, Knowledge without Character, Religion without Sacrifice, Politics without Principle, Science without Humanity, Business without Ethics."

"Ethics Pays" was completed in its most important facet proving that Ethics Pays and this part of the book was reviewed very favorably by critics, the book writing is in the middle of the geographic-economic condensation of parameters per country (altogether – a few hundred pages), and the book is at a preliminary level of dozens outlines of other facets of the book. The book will be published as an eBook, due to its hundreds of links, but will be probably published in a hard cover and a soft cover format by a publisher, or at least be published in an eBook format on the websites of universities libraries, organizations and the author's website.

5. ACADEMIC BOOK IN ENGLISH IN PROGRESS

6. THE FUTURE OF CAPITALISM IN A SUSTAINABLE SOCIETY

The book addresses the most important issues of the world economy - the future of capitalism in a sustainable society - in the context of the Great Recession of 2007-2010, finding a pattern of the Economic Whirl starting in the eighties with damages of billions and incurring in 2008 damages of trillions. The book is unique in its holistic and comprehensive approach: psychological, economic, sociological, philosophical and moral, rather than descriptive as most of the books on this subject. It is less theoretical, more practical and understandable in approach to the issue of the future of capitalism. The book analyzes contemporary capitalism, the Recession and the Whirl, based on Dr. Cory's research and books, and more than 120 books, 130 videos, thousands of articles and documents, as well as hundreds outlines, researching them in a vivid, critical and captivating way. It examines various preferred solutions to the crisis of capitalism, corporate governance and conduct, adopted by regulators and business, recommended by eminent professors, writers and tycoons, and advocated by Cory in his works.

This book is not only timely, but urgent. In the next crisis which could occur not later than 2020, as nothing has changed while the pace of the crises has increased exponentially, the world economy could indeed collapse, with damages reaching into the hundreds of trillions of dollars, far beyond the scope of the world GDP. Adoption of the remedies offered might prevent this collapse. Academic, private and public institutions approached by Dr. Cory are not willing yet to fund the book as it differs fundamentally from the prevailing neo liberal views. The book will be written provided that it will be financed by an organization, university or individual, that are broad-minded enough to support this novel, contemporary, and in a way contrarian approach. In this research endeavor, the author finds the most profound sources of financial and economic instability and suggests workable remedies that can be adopted without delay. It is true that the economic future is uncertain, but unfortunately as the causes of the instability do not change, the results of the systemic failures can be predicted, while the only thing that changes is the order of magnitude of the crises. Economists tend to over-simplify their models – the neoliberals adopt free market theories, the Keynesians and even Stiglitz try to find the right balance between regulation and free markets. This book proposes a much more complex solution, based first of all on moral and ethics, but also on sociology, psychology, philosophy, while giving workable economic solutions. A precondition for a sustainable future of capitalism is to adopt appropriate corporate governance as stipulated in Cory's previous books with the changes needed to reflect the crises of the last decade, as the causes of the world crisis are primarily the reckless and unethical conduct of corporations, backed by governments, tending to comply with this conduct. Finally, the book suggests a new political economy of the state, new strategy for the private and public sectors, new economy of income and wealth distribution, in the context of a proper humane policy bringing economic development. It calls into question the conduct of corporations, leaders, executives and regulators before and during the Recession in order to help the reader to understand how the business models of the invisible hand, minimal regulation and maximization of profits have a perverse impact on the world economy, society and stakeholders and ultimately – business and profitability. The book encourages the reader to develop and follow her/his own insights, which could be different from the prevailing neo liberal ideology, and find the right equilibrium between profitability, business ethics, social responsibility, globalization and sustainability, complementing each other in the short run and in the long run.

In addition or alternatively a Hebrew academic book in progress: THE GREAT RECESSION OF 2007-2010 IN THE WORLD AND IN ISRAEL – see extracts, outline, TOC, bibliography.

6. ETHICAL CODE, CASE STUDIES, ADD'L ESSAYS/ARTICLES, WEBSITE

ETHICAL CODE, CASE STUDIES AND TRAINING FOR SIBAT INT'L DEFENSE

Writing of Ethical Code, 10 Case Studies, and Training for Sibat, International Defense, Appreciation letters by the Head of Sibat, 2014. The Ethical Code received the first prize of the Israeli Ministry of Defense. Photos of the signature on the Ethical Code by Head of Sibat, top executives, details on Sibat's activities – on Home of Cory's website \(click on photos and text\). The Ethical Code, list of case studies, & appreciation letter of Head of Sibat – on Cory's website.

The Ethical Code of Sibat and the 10 generic Case Studies are unique in their approach, based on an extensive experience in sales and marketing of systems and computers to the international defense market. It is not a window dressing document, like in many cases of defense companies and organizations, meant to give a better impression, and implicitly enabling a dishonest or deceptive conduct, tolerating corruption, bribery and nepotism. In this case, all the stakeholders of the Ethical Code cooperated in devising a workable Code, with the backing of management.

ESSAYS & ARTICLES PUBLISHED AFTER EBOOK ON SOCIAL JUSTICE IN 10/2012

All the essays and articles (15+) published in News1, Walla, etc., after the publication of the eBook "Social, Economic and Governmental Justice – Essays and Articles", in October 2012,

Social, Economic and Governmental Justice, News1, November 2012

Social, Economic & Governmental Justice, Introduction and Link to the eBook with the same name, Ethics Center Mishkenot Shaananim Bulletin, March 2013

Linking Economy and Society, Walla Business, March 2013

Who is the Real Aristocracy in Israel? News1, March 2013

Sustainable Justice in the World's Cultures, News1, April 2013

Lapid, Fisher and Netanyahu, Bourgeoisie's Knights, Walla, May 2013

Ethics Starts at the Top, News1, November 2013

Spanish Citizenship for Sephardim, News1, February 2014

Essay - On Orientalism and Europocentrism, News1, March 2014

Essay - On Theater, Cameri and Frost/Nixon, News1, March 2014

Spanish Citizenship for Sephardim in Ladino and Other Languages, Satire, April 2014

Spanish Citizenship for Sephardim, in Ladino, Dyalog Turkey, pp. 87-89, May 2014

Appreciation Letter and Speech to Professor Danny Shechtman, Nobel Prize Winner, Text of the Letter and Speech, with the Second Republic Platform, Partial Video of the Speech, June 2014

Eulogy for Zvi Aviel, One of the Greatest Israeli's Poets, January 2014

Article on Zvi Aviel, One of the Greatest Israeli's Poets, With the Translation from German into Hebrew by Cory of the Article on Aviel by Jurgen Voigt (November 2012), News1, 2/2014

All the published additional essays and articles can be found on Cory's website, & on Zvi Aviel.

JACQUES CORY'S WEBSITE – WWW.BUSINESSETHICSCORY.COM

After the publication of the eBook Social, Economic and Governmental Justice – Essays and Articles in October 2012, Jacques Cory published many essays and articles, wrote the Ethical Code, 10 Case Studies and Training for Sibat in 2014, and added many entries on Jacques Cory's website – altogether those three segments add up to a few hundred pages on the website and elsewhere - see diary and correspondence subsequently. If a publisher would be interested to publish the essays and articles published in the eBook on Social Justice and the material published subsequently, as a printed book – especially the ethical code and the new case studies, and/or the play Nelly Doron and other non-academic material in a separate book, this would add up to 1-4 books of a few hundred pages each in Hebrew. Most of the material, and especially the ethical code, the case studies, the essays and most of the articles, could be relevant in English too as they are universal, actual, and unique in their academic or non-academic approach. Cory's website was designed and executed by his daughter Shirly Cory Garfunkel, his son Amir Cory designed the home page and put him in contact with the American Website company Homestead, his son Joseph Cory/Geotectura designed the Economic Whirl and Cory's books cover pages. Cory's website comprises a large number of photos of Jacques Cory, his family, his career, his travels, of films on Cory's lectures and interviews, personal and family, links to many other websites, etc. They are not included in this book, as the addition of so many pictures would be too bulky, but we have inserted links to many photos and videos in the book, and if we click on the links we can access in seconds to the photos and videos. If we needed we can insert those photos and videos in the eBook and in the printed book although it would cost more to produce.

7. 2004 - COURSES IN ENGLISH & FRENCH ON BUSINESS ETHICS, ETC.

Most of the courses were taught at International MBA and BA courses in Israel and abroad and received an excellent acclaim (see Cory's website). The courses are based on an extensive bibliography read and analyzed by Dr. Jacques Cory, as well as on his books and articles. In many cases, the courses were the base of Cory's books, especially in the case on the Future of Capitalism. Apparently no courses in the whole world are based on the Great Recession 2007-2010 and on the books that were written subsequently, and Cory's contemporary courses appeal to a need perceived by Cory since 2004, and by thousands of students who organized after the Great Recession and in response to the "dictatorship of the neoliberal teaching" at most of the universities in the world, in the "International Student Initiative for Pluralism in Economics".

In their open letter of May 2014 they state: "It is not only the world economy that is in crisis. The teaching of economics is in crisis too, and this crisis has consequences far beyond the university walls. What is taught shapes the minds of the next generation of policymakers, and therefore shapes the societies we live in. We, over 65 associations of economics students from over 30 different countries, believe it is time to reconsider the way economics is taught. We are dissatisfied with the dramatic narrowing of the curriculum that has taken place over the last couple of decades. This lack of intellectual diversity does not only restrain education and research. It limits our ability to contend with the multidimensional challenges of the 21st century - from financial stability, to food security and climate change. The real world should be brought back into the classroom, as well as debate and a pluralism of theories and methods. Such change will help renew the discipline and ultimately create a space in which solutions to society's problems can be generated." Cory's courses were the first in the world before and after the Great Recession to address those problems and were received very favourably by the students.

10 MAIN COURSES – BUSINESS, ORGANIZATIONS AND UNIVERSITIES – LIST OF 200 PLAYS, NOVELS AND FILMS ON SOCIAL AND ECONOMIC JUSTICE DILEMMAS

THE FUTURE OF CAPITALISM IN A SUSTAINABLE SOCIETY IN A CONTEMPORARY CONTEXT OF THE GREAT RECESSION 2007-2010

BUSINESS ETHICS AND THE FUTURE OF CAPITALISM IN A SUSTAINABLE SOCIETY, INTEGRATED COURSE OF 26 SESSIONS

2 COURSES FOR BUSINESSMEN: THE FUTURE OF CAPITALISM IN A GLOBAL SUSTAINABLE SOCIETY, BUSINESS ETHICS IN FILMS

2 COURSES IN BUSINESS ETHICS IN FRENCH

8. 2004- COURSES IN HEBREW ON BUSINESS ETHICS...: PART I/PART II

See the foreword on the English courses, which applies also to the Hebrew courses of Dr. Cory, taught at MBA and BA courses, but unfortunately not at the Economics or Accounting Schools and not on most of the Business Schools at universities ruled by a neoliberal dictatorship. Cory's BA courses in special programs or multidisciplinary faculties were attended by many economics, business and accounting students, who were enthusiastic by Cory's novel and contemporary approach, and wrote that the courses opened for them a new world, responding exactly to their needs. The courses on business ethics based exclusively on plays, novels and films, also unique in the world, were also received very warmly and changed the students' attitude towards business ethics. Finally, the case studies based on Cory's business experience, achieved a very high degree of credibility, as most of the business ethics professors came from the philosophy departments, giving only few examples, having no business experience, and teaching only Aristotle and Kant. All Hebrew courses and appreciation letters can be found on Cory's website: PART I/PART II

10 MAIN HEBREW COURSES – BUSINESS, ORGANIZATIONS AND UNIVERSITIES

16 SESSIONS COURSE – BUSINESS ETHICS AND THE FUTURE OF CAPITALISM IN CONTEXT OF THE GREAT RECESSION

26 SESSIONS COURSE – BUSINESS ETHICS AND THE FUTURE OF CAPITALISM IN THE CONTEXT OF THE GREAT RECESSION

COURSE ON SOCIAL AND ECONOMIC JUSTICE IN ISRAEL

COURSE ON BUSINESS ETHICS IN THE DEFENSE INDUSTRY – MINISTRY OF DEFENSE AND THE ARMED FORCES – 20 LESSONS

COURSE OF ETHICS TO THE EDUCATION SCHOOL AND NGOs – 30 LESSONS

COURSE OF BUSINESS ETHICS, BASED ON THEORY, CASES, PLAYS, NOVELS AND FILMS – 24 LESSONS

9. DIARY AND CORRESPONDENCE IN HEBREW AND ENGLISH

DIARY – A PORTRAIT OF THE IDEALIST AS A YOUNG MAN

דיוקן של אידיאליסט כנער בוגר מאת יעקב קורי

After more than 50 years the author reads once again a diary written between the ages of 13 and 17 and is astonished how the character of the author was shaped in his early youth, while he had opposite materialistic and idealistic inclinations, intellectual and superficial tastes, egoistic and humanistic tendencies... What were his views on poverty and wealth, women, friendship, ethics, how he perceived his aims in life, on career, family, children, love, what kind of a man he wanted to be 50 years from now and what kind of a man he became? The author laughs, cries, is excited, amazed, finds analogies with his grandsons' conduct, and also a unique approach to life.

The diary in Hebrew comprises hundreds of pages, but the Portrait, written in 2013, gives its gist in 13 pages. As a matter of fact, the diary should be listed as Opus 1 of Jacques Cory's Works.

CORRESPONDENCE WITH CORY ON VARIOUS TOPICS, ON CORY'S WEBSITE, IN LETTERS, EMAILS. UN UNIVERSAL DECLARATION OF HUMAN RIGHTS IN ENGLISH

Correspondence between Joshua Sobol, one of the leading playwrights in the world, and Jacques Cory, in Hebrew. Review of Cory's play "Nelly's Choice" by Joshua Sobol \(emails translated into English\). Appreciation letters in Hebrew. Appreciation letters in English. Correspondence and Speeches in Hebrew, English, French, Romanian, etc., including on the translation of the UN Declaration of Human Rights into Ladino. Correspondence of Jacques and Ruthy Cory in the months prior to their wedding in 1969 – photocopies and reading of letters by Jacques Cory – see Audioplay. Additional correspondence in Cory's emails, letters... can be found in files and efiles.

10. AUDIOPLAY & SCREENPLAY ON RUTHY CORY'S ANNIVERSARIES, PHOTO CLIP AND VIDEO GREETINGS ON JACQUES CORY'S 70th ANNIVERSARY, NELLY'S CHOICE MUSIC OF THE PLAY

AUDIOPLAY OF PROGRAM BY JACQUES CORY TO RUTHY CORY ON THEIR 20TH WEDDING ANNIVERSARY IN 1989, WRITTEN AND READ BY JACQUES, LETTERS OF JACQUES AND RUTHY IN 1969 PRIOR TO MARRIAGE, HEBREW TEXT, AUDIOPLAY AND SONGS IN 12 LANGUAGES. SUMMARY OF THE AUDIOPLAY. RECORDING OF THE AUDIOPLAY IN ALBUMS 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6 – IN TOTAL 4 HOURS AND 38 MINUTES. – links to Cory's website.

Audioplay \(4'38"\) of Program by Jacques on 20th wedding anniversary, 1989, written & read by Cory, Letters of Jacques & Ruthy in 69, prior to marriage, text, music, play & songs in 12 languages, Summary, Albums 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6 – links to the Audioplay, Summary, 6 Albums.

SCREENPLAY AND DIRECTION OF FILM BY JACQUES CORY ON RUTHY'S 45TH BIRTHDAY IN 1992. SUMMARY, LIST OF CLIPS & SONGS, VIDEO 1, 2 – 1'20" HOURS. – links to Cory's website.

Screenplay/Direction of 1'20" Film by Jacques on Ruthy's 45th Birthday in 1992, Summary, List of Clips/Songs, Video 1, 2 – links to the Screenplay, Summary, List of Clips, Video 1, 2.

This film was published on YouTube in two parts, as well as academic lectures and interviews. Additional clips of Jacques Cory on YouTube - links to the 70th anniversary – clip of photos, Greetings of family – video of greetings.

This film and the Audioplay are on Cory's website: in Hebrew Read More, the academic lectures and interviews are: in Hebrew Lectures, and the music of the play Nelly Doron is: in Hebrew.

Nelly's Choice, a Play in Hebrew by Jacques Cory and Amalia Eyal – Summary, Review by Joshua Sobol and List of Musical Numbers, Audio of Music Part 1, Part 2 – direct links.

11. MAIN BUSINESS ACTIVITIES

- 2014 Writing of Ethical Code, 10 Case Studies, and Training for Sibat, the International Defense Cooperation Agency
- 2006 Chairman of the Advisory Board, Taditel, Israel.
- 2005 Business Manager CycleTec, affiliate of American Israeli Paper Mill, Israel.
- 2002 General Manager Corporate Recovery Management, W&S Israel.
- 1981-2000 Top-level management of large and small hi-tech companies, mainly in sales, marketing, strategy, and finance, M&A and strategic partnerships, international business, know-how transfer with conglomerates, shares and debentures offerings in the US & Israel, obtaining approved enterprises status and grants from the Chief Scientist, subsidiaries management, international and local turnarounds, initiating new ventures. Business activities in France, Germany, Spain, Italy, Switzerland, UK, Portugal, Peru, Singapore, Taiwan, US, Canada, Israel..

Writing of Turnaround Plans and successful implementation of Elbit (1981-1982), Elscint's subsidiaries (1987-1988), NBase (1995-1996), and other companies, in hi-tech and low-tech, in France, the US and Israel, increasing in several cases valuation by more than 1,000%.

M&A/JV Negotiations of Israeli, U.S., Canadian, French, German, and Spanish companies in the computer, Internet, data communication, telecom, imaging, semi-conductor, and aerospace industries. Due diligence, negotiations, writing of 100 business plans, strategic planning.

Technology Transfer: conducting of negotiations and agreements, including development, manufacturing and marketing rights, between large European, American and Israeli companies, such as Nixdorf, Alcatel, Hon and Global. Management of a Satellite Communications Consortium (1991-1993) comprised of some of the largest Israeli companies: IAI, Rafael/Galram, Elisra, Gilat, Technion. Writing of the applications to the Chief Scientist.

Obtaining Approved Enterprise Status: including writing the investments plans and conducting the negotiations with the Ministry. Mainly for foreign companies, including for huge investments, for new companies, for small and large companies, high tech and low tech.

Management: (1981-1987) Vice President in charge of business activities, sales and finance of Elbit, one of the largest Israeli hi-tech companies. Was directly responsible for the transition from heavy losses to peak profits, M&A, and international business breakthrough. Managed U.S. and Israeli public offerings, including participation in writing the prospectuses. Member of the United States and Israeli Boards of Directors. Initiated, managed and wrote Strategic Planning.

1973-1980: Sales Manager and Head of the Defense Sales Department at Elbit, Israel.

1970-1973: Export Manager and Assistant to the Executive CEO at Electra, Israel.

1968-1970: Assistant to the Strategic Planning VP of Israel Aircraft Industries, Israel.

12. LECTURES, PROFESSIONAL AND PUBLIC ACTIVITIES, ETC.

Since 2001, Jacques Cory gave a large number of academic and other lectures, he organized a symposium, held meetings to promote his books all over Europe and the US, participated in panels, forums and Ethics Days in: Israel, Italy, France, United States, etc. Some of the lectures can be found in text or on video at Cory's website in: Lectures, Hebrew Lectures, HL2.

PROFESSIONAL ACTIVITIES

2013 – Member of the Advisory Board of I.Q.L. The Israeli Directors Forum Ltd. The Forum (Integrity, Quality & Leadership) is designed to upgrade the work of directors as well as to enrich and equip them with professional tools for performance of their duty.

2012 - Initiating a proposal for the Award of Sustainable Justice Prizes in Israel and in other countries, member of the Prize Committee with well-known ethical experts in the award fields of: Social Justice, Economic Justice, Governmental Justice, Environmental Justice, Media Justice, Educational Justice & Cultural Justice, i.a. Nobel Prize laureate Professor Dan Shechtman, famous playwright Joshua Sobol, and leading professors, journalists & activists.

2011 - Organization of Symposium on Social & Economic Justice with the University of Haifa & Ometz in Haifa, Israel. Lecture by Cory, Participation of Leading Professors, Businessmen, Social Activists, NGO Leaders & Daphni Leef. Symposium filmed by the Academic Channel.

Participation in the Forums of the Israeli Social Protest Movement and Others for Enhancing Social Justice in Israel, Transparency, Ethics, & Reducing Business & Government Relations.

2001 - Lectures at Conferences, Universities, Organizations, Companies and Governmental Forums, in the U.S., Europe and Israel. Transcripts, Films & Articles on Lectures – on Cory's website.

Transparency International, Berlin – Drawing Lessons from the Great Recession - 2010

Insead, Fontainebleau, France - Lectures and Workshops at Ethics Days – 2001/2003

European Union - Stresa, Italy, Lecture on Trends in M&A - 2001

Ethics & Management - Symposium of Paris' high ranking executives - 2003

In Europe – meetings for promoting Cory's books in Paris, London, Frankfurt, Amsterdam and Copenhagen, with collaboration of Kluwer – 2001

In the USA – meetings for promoting Cory's books in Washington, Boston and New York, participating at the annual meeting of Society for Business Ethics in Washington – 2001

Israel: Keynote Speaker - Top Management of Israeli Bank Leumi, Transparency International, Israeli SEC, the Israeli Electric Company, Elbit, IAI, Apax & Insead Anciens Association, Ernst & Young. Magnes Launching of Book – ZOA hall, Tel Aviv, Bimat Kedem Launching of Book – Suzan Dalal hall, Tel Aviv. Speaker at the Hi-Tech Summit (Technology & People), Directors' Convention, Ethics Center at the Israeli Stock Exchange, Internal Auditors Convention, Mishkenot Shaananim Ethics Center, Ethics & Engineering, BDO, Migdal Insurance Group, Izraeli Ethics Center, Ometz, forums of the Technion and the University of Haifa, Reali High School, and on Israeli radio & TV.

2013 – Articles in Walla Business and Ethics Center Mishkenot Shaananim Bulletin

2010 – 2014 - Publicist, News First Class, NFC, News 1, a leading Israeli News Website

2009 - 2011 – Columnist, "Ethics and You" – The Israeli CPA Review

2008 – 2014 - Articles in Transparency International Israel and Ometz

2006 - Member of the Editorial Advisory Board, Society and Business Review, Emerald.

2001 - Israel: Essays/Articles on Social & Economic Justice, Business Ethics, Business & Gov't

PUBLIC ACTIVITIES

2015 – Award of the Israeli highest ethical prize by Ometz "Itur Hamofet".

1981 - Member of the Society for Business Ethics in the US; the France and United Kingdom Chambers of Commerce in Israel. Member of the Boards of Directors/Management of Transparency International Israel, Ometz ethical NGO, Haifa Theater, Haifa Film Festival.

LANGUAGES

Fluent in English, French (mother tongue), Spanish, Ladino, Hebrew. Fair knowledge of Italian, German, Portuguese, Romanian, Interlingua. Reading capabilities in 40+ other languages.

AVOCATIONS - Theater, Literature, Cinema, Languages, Research, Travel.

FAMILY AND PERSONAL STATUS

Married Ruthy Popliker, August 19, 1969. Three children: Joseph, Amir, Shirley, all of them married with children. Born in Cairo, Egypt, June 5, 1944, studied in French at the Lycee Francais du Caire. Living in Israel since 1953. Israeli citizen (mother Pauline Simon Cory was a Greek citizen).

13. POETRY, SATIRES, EULOGIES, HUMOR, TRAVEL, LADINO ACTIVIT.

On Cory's website one can find extensive material on Cory's poetry, satires, eulogies, humor, Ladino activities, and travel on the following pages: HL2, Articles, HA2. Worth mentioning are Cory's Ladino activities published in newspapers, magazines and websites, and especially the initiation of the translation into Ladino of the UN Universal Declaration of Human Rights, participation in the translation (with Ladinokomunita), and editing of the text. This is a unique case that combines Cory's ethical activities – teaching in all his courses the UN Declaration of Human Rights, as a cornerstone of universal ethical conduct, linguistic activities – reading in more than 60 languages the Declaration, as a finalization of learning 50+ languages, and Ladino activities, including poetry, literature, folklore, music, films, plays, prayers, history, culminating with the translation of the Declaration and the discovery of the synagogue of Coria in Spain.

2011 – Initiated and Participated with Ladinokomunita in the Translation and Editing of the UN Universal Declaration of Human Rights into Ladino, published on the UN Website (with 444 translations), and on the website eSefarad Spain in Ladino.

2014 – Spanish Citizenship for Sephardim in Ladino, Dyalog Turkey May 2014, pp. 87-89, Satire April 2014

2011 - How I discovered the synagogue of Coria? written by Cory in 5 languages (Ladino, Spanish, English, French and Hebrew), published: in Tarbut Sefarad Spain, in Spanish... Aurora Israel, in Spanish... Anajnu Chile, in Spanish... Shelanu Argentina, in Spanish... CCIU Uruguay, in Spanish... eSefarad Argentina, in Ladino & Spanish... Ladinokomunita USA, in Ladino... Forojudio Mexico, in Ladino... Los Muestrs Belgium, in Ladino... Aki Yerushalaim Israel, in Ladino... Sephardic Horizons USA, in Ladino... News1 Israel, in Hebrew... Sharsheret Hadorot Israel, in English & Hebrew... Halapid US, in English... Nahar Misraim France, in French... Letter from the Spanish Ambassador in Israel in Spanish with translation into English... Afterword by Cory in English with pictures on the current status of the synagogue of Coria.

April 2005 - Site of Ladino Poem – "Onde estas mujer kerida?" (published in Aki Yerushalayim no. 77, p. 75), Text of Ladino Poem "Onde estas mujer kerida?", with Hebrew Translation

Cory has published 20 to 36+ books and ebooks (depending on definition) as specified in parts VIII and IX of this book. In part VIII we can find the 10 books that were published as printed books – 4 academic books in English and Hebrew that comprise similar and different contents, a doctorate dissertation in French in the format of book and dissertation, a novel based on a play, 2 edited books in French and Hebrew comprising essays of Cory, and so on. In part IX we can find the 10 ebooks that were published on Cory's website and partly on universities, colleges and organizations' websites and libraries – 3 ebooks in Hebrew on original and updated essays and articles, including new materials as ethical codes, case studies, memoirs, on professional, general and personal topics, one geography and ethics book in English, one autobiography in English, 2 versions of a play in Hebrew, 2 children ebooks – one of them was also in a book format, 1 youth diary – with extracts published on the Internet. To those 20 books we can add Cory's courses in English, French, Hebrew, and correspondence published on the Internet and in books, Cory's website, an Audioplay, a Screenplay, poetry, satires, 2 books in progress with hundreds of pages as notes, and books/essays/surveys on literature, linguistics, drama, biographies, history, etc. If we add to those books turnaround plans, strategic plans, 100 business plans, business reports, finance and sales materials in format of books and brochures, they amount to hundreds.

X. APPENDIX – INTERNATIONAL CASE STUDIES, ANALYSES OF NOVELS, PLAYS, FILMS & DOCUMENTARIES - IN EUROPE, NORTH & SOUTH AMERICA, AFRICA, ASIA– US, UK, RUSSIA, SWITZERLAND, NORWAY, ARGENTINA, FRANCE, SINGAPORE, ISRAEL; PAUL HAWKEN ON SUSTAINABILITY, WARREN BUFFETT ON ETHICS AND SOCIAL RESPONSIBILITY, JOSEPH STIGLITZ ON GLOBALIZATION AND SOCIAL JUSTICE, TEN COMPONENTS IN TEN LANGUAGES ON SUSTAINABLE JUSTICE, UN UNIVERSAL DECLARATION OF HUMAN RIGHTS

1. FRANCE – ETHICS FOR MINORITY SHAREHOLDERS IN BANKING & STOCK EXCHANGE - THE BOOK & FILM "L'ARGENT" BY EMILE ZOLA

Based on the book "L'Argent" (1890) by Emile Zola

The film is based on the book with slight changes:

L'Argent TV 1988, 250 minutes, Director Jacques Rouffio, with Claude Brasseur, Miou-Miou and Michel Galabru

Summary and Analysis:

If we could choose one film, book or play that describes in the most trenchant way the dilemmas of business ethics, tycoons, the stock exchange, banking, and especially ethics for minority shareholders it is undoubtedly the book L'Argent (Money) by Emile Zola, which was adapted to the screen and the stage several times. Zola was one of the first, together with Ibsen, to deal with business ethics in literature and he did it in a superb way, in a moving style that touched readers and spectators very deeply. Zola, who was a social radical, dared to attack the capitalist system, the stock exchange, the tycoons and the banks, at least the "rotten apples" of this system.

The plot of the book takes place during the Second Empire, that of Napoleon III in France, the nephew of the great Napoleon. Napoleon III epitomized all the corruption and hypocrisy of French society, but also the glory, the joie de vivre and the debauched life. If the emperor had a mistress whom he acquired at an astronomical price, Aristide Saccard, the hero of the book, had to get her at a higher price, and ensured that all of Parisian high society knew it, as it was a status symbol and was also good for business. But Saccard was also close to a pure soul, Caroline Hamelin, who was attracted to him like a butterfly to a flame. She becomes his mistress and in spite of the enormous difference in their characters and way of thinking, she falls in love. His vitality, his unending energy and his occasional bursts of kindness facilitated her infatuation. Saccard, who was bankrupt, gains the confidence of a princess who founds an orphanage from her own money, and he assists her pro bono. But he also tries to receive the management of her immense fortune from her, 500 million francs that she inherited from her husband. He wants to speculate with the money on the stock exchange, but she refuses categorically, as this money was acquired by her husband in unethical but legal ways on the stock exchange. Her husband was responsible for the loss of the savings of poor minority shareholders, and that is why she wants to invest it only in philanthropy and not be ashamed anymore.

Saccard was bankrupt because of his rivalry with Gundermann, a Jewish banker, serious and ascetic. Gundermann is the opposite of Saccard the hedonist. Both visit the same luxurious restaurants, but while Saccard eats the best gourmet dishes with the most refined wines Gundermann drinks only a glass of milk and behaves modestly in spite of his legendary wealth. At one of the family dinners of Saccard and Caroline, he hears from her brother, Georges Hamelin, that all the projects that Georges devised to develop Lebanon/the Middle East – mining, transport, schools, hospitals, industry, cannot actualize because of a lack of funds. George's vision fades, and he is unable to achieve his dream, as a fervent Catholic, to enable the Pope to return to the Holy Land and to spare him the humiliation that he receives from the nationalist Italians who want to chase him away from his territories. Saccard, the eternal entrepreneur, sees an opportunity in Georges' plans to sway the Catholic masses with the dream of reclamation of the desert in the Middle East and the Holy Land. He markets dreams, like the modern entrepreneurs, only a fraction of which ultimately succeed in their high tech ventures. Saccard chooses a challenging name: La Banque Universelle, no more, no less. One could ask: who is the true entrepreneur – Georges who had the vision, made the plans, spent long periods in the Middle East, or Saccard who implemented the programs in the real world, found the money (l'argent) to make the vision come true... or not, as we shall see later on?

Saccard meets Mazaud, a broker, and asks him to raise 25 million francs. "Think Big", as our modern tycoons would say, while leveraging their investment with unreasonable proportions of 10:1, ten times more loans than the private equity that they bring in. In Saccard's case, as in many other modern schemes, the entrepreneur doesn't bring any money of his own, because he doesn't have any or he doesn't want to risk it. If he succeeds - the benefits will be his because he was the entrepreneur, but if he loses - the banks or the shareholders will bear the costs. The slogan of many of the modern tycoons is to work with "Other People's Money". Mazaud is astonished at Saccard's daring, he knows that he doesn't have a dime, that the project is not even his, and nevertheless he wants to raise tens of millions, later even hundreds of millions. But Saccard believes that you need two things in order to succeed in life: dream like a crazy and work like an animal, and he excels in both. When Caroline asks him if he doesn't want to rest he answers her that rest means death.

Saccard approaches a colleague who manages an Ottoman Bank in the Middle East and wants to interest him in the project. The banker answers him in Russian and Saccard goes to his friend Sigismond who speaks many languages and who is in the process of translating the Communist Manifest by Karl Marx. He is a fervent communist, but Saccard likes people who fight for their causes, such as Sigismond the communist or Georges Hamelin the Catholic. Saccard says that "Passion" is the most important thing, it is what makes the world go around, it sounds like "Money/l'argent, makes the world go around" of "Cabaret" or "Greed makes the world go around", as maintained by Gordon Gekko in "Wall Street". Sigismond reads the letter and tells Saccard that the Banker's answer is affirmative. Sigismond is very ill and Bush takes care of him. Bush is a loan shark, who specializes in collecting bad debts. Thus, for many years he has been trying to find a man who gave IOUs to a young woman who gave birth to his child, but disappeared. By comparing Saccard's handwriting to that of this man, he understands that Saccard is the man he is looking for. Saccard has changed his name several times in his career because of his schemes, but Bush tells his partner Madame Mechain, that the time is not appropriate to approach Saccard as he doesn't have any money to pay for the IOUs. Indeed, Saccard is the same man that we know from Zola's previous book "La Curee"; he became rich and lost all his money several times, he was married twice, had plenty of mistresses. He even has a legitimate son from his first marriage to Renee – Maxime, who inherited money from his rich mother after she died, but his son doesn't want to help his father as he knows of his schemes. Saccard's illegitimate son from the young woman who received the IOUs is Victor, who became an unbridled vagabond. Originally Saccard was called Rougon, the origin of his family is from the south of France and he is the brother of Son Excellence Eugene Rougon (Zola's hero in another of his books in the series of the Rougon-Macquart), a prominent minister in Napoleon III's regime. Eugene disavows Saccard, as he knows of his schemes, and doesn't want to have any ties with him.

Saccard goes to a luxurious restaurant, where he meets Gundermann. He tells him defiantly that he has founded a new bank with a capital of 25 million francs. He asks him, cynically, if he would be willing to invest in his bank as the shares will rise enormously. Gundermann of course refuses and predicts that Saccard will fall once again, however from a greater height, as he has connections and support from other tycoons, the Catholic milieu and possibly the Pope. Saccard's drive beyond the lucrative aspects, are ego considerations: he wants to win in the showdown with his rival, as it is a struggle between different temperaments, religions and ideologies. It reminds us of The Merchant of Venice, but this time the prudent Jew wins while the frivolous Catholic loses. It is not surprising if we remember that Zola would write "J'accuse" on the Dreyfus affair several years later. The world has evolved since the times of the Duke of Venice. We are in the 19th century, in a democratic France, but the hatred of the Jews was still prevalent. Nobody likes the stern Gundermann, while masses of minority shareholders like Saccard very much and are even willing to forgive him his bankruptcy as the Jews are to blame in their conspiracy against the Catholics and the Pope. Zola based his novel on a similar case that had happened in France a few years earlier, when a Catholic bank collapsed because of its speculations and the Jewish Rothschild bank was blamed by those who lost their money. Yet, Saccard and his likes do not exist anymore, while the Rothschilds still exist and prosper. We know of course that speculation has nothing to do with religion. There are many Jewish (and Israeli) speculators who behaved unethically to their stakeholders, while other bankers and tycoons who were Catholic, Protestant or Moslem behaved ethically and meticulously fulfilled all their obligations. The Bible invented business ethics, but the Jews do not have the copyright on ethics. Business Ethics is universal and has nothing to do with religion and Zola proves it in his book L'Argent. Saccard also wants to prove to his arrogant brother Eugene that he can succeed even more than he had, as he is as good. The book proves to us, once again, that what makes the business world go around is not Adam Smith's invisible hand, but primarily feelings, psychology, love, hate, ego, envy and competition.

Saccard meets Huret, his brother Rougon's confidant, and asks him to intercede in his favor with his brother. Huret tells him that he doesn't have a chance, as Eugene despises him, but when Saccard offers him shares in the bank and a seat on the Board of Directors, Huret is willing to comply. Saccard tries to play the Catholic card but Huret tells him that Gundermann has come to the rescue of the government with loans when it needed them and the stern banker has the favor of the Emperor. Saccard tells Caroline that the business world is like a war and those who are afraid die first. All that happened long before the admiration street fighters get today. Zola "invented" modern business ethics, and if I had to choose between reading the books of the best modern ethicists or Zola's "L'Argent", I would recommend Zola, as he encompasses most of the issues in a much more interesting way. Saccard is willing to risk everything (especially as it is not his money), he has the mentality of a gambler, as it is his only possibility to rise once again from the ashes. Zola also invents the "externalities" here, the stakeholders bear the costs and risks, while Saccard doesn't risk a thing. The directors of La Banque Universelle have not invested anything in the Bank; they have received their shares (illegally) from Saccard, if they are "wise" enough they can sell their shares at their peak as some of them do, if they are too loyal they risk losing their money and reputation. Yet, this is only in Zola's book. Zola, who is a moralist, shows that at the end the speculators lose, bringing down thousands of innocent minority shareholders with them, while in modern economies in most cases the unethical businessmen do not bear the costs of their speculations, except in a few cases such as Enron, WorldCom, Barings and so on. By externalizing the costs and the risks, those who pay the price are the minority shareholders who lose their savings, the employees who lose their jobs, the banks who lose their loans, the suppliers who are not paid and the customers who don't get the goods and services that they paid for, and, of course the environment and the community who have to pay to remove the toxic waste.

Caroline is in love, she is still young but has grey hair after suffering from an earlier love affair. She only sees Saccard's positive sides: he is brave, impulsive and generous. In comparison to him, Daigremont is much more cynical. He is a tycoon who wants to win easily, eat and drink in the best restaurants, have women and entertainment, with a minimal risk. He is willing to cooperate with Saccard as long as he has something to gain from it. Daigremont is willing to join the bank but only if Rougon backs the venture. Saccard adds Sabatini to the Board; here is an unscrupulous hedonist with a dubious past, who remained friendly with Saccard in his bad moments. Another acquisition to the Board is the Marquis de Bohain, contributing his name and pedigree to the Bank. However, he is also a hedonist who cheats in cards and entangles Saccard in his problems. Another protagonist in the novel and the film is the journalist Jantrou, who founds a journal named L'Esperance (Hope) with Saccard's money. He is Saccard's straw-man, writing laudatory articles about him and the Bank, as well as about the regime and Rougon. Huret intercedes with Rougon in favor of Saccard, but the minister answers him: "Let my brother do whatever he likes, but he shouldn't count on me". But Saccard tells Huret: "The ministry is not eternal, the empire is not eternal, but money is eternal". Finally, he convinces Huret to tell everybody that Rougon cannot back up Saccard openly because he is his brother, but he said nevertheless: "Let my brother do whatever he likes". Telling half truths and not behaving transparently is something as common in Zola's time as it is nowadays. Huret doesn't repeat the end of the sentence, he remains vague, he doesn't disclose the bad news, and exaggerates the good.

The conscientious and moral Caroline, who became Saccard's mistress, continues to be skeptical of her lover's work methods, but he shows her her brother's plans of and convinces her that he'll manage to build factories, mines and schools from them. People will find employment, sick people will be cured, prosperity will be achieved. Caroline is worried, as according to the law, the issued capital should also be paid up, but some of the founders have not paid for their shares, like Huret and de Bohain. He appeases her by telling her that everybody does the same thing, another typical excuse of unethical businessmen. The bank keeps some shares illegally, under the name of Sabatini, who is his straw-man, exactly like Topaze in Pagnol's play, written 40 years later. Saccard mocks Caroline who is always worried, but she answers him that she loves him and doesn't want him to be hurt. And, indeed Saccard has a winning personality, he is liked by almost everybody, like many unethical businessmen (Gordon Gekko, to name one). It is hard not to like him as it is easy to hate Gundermann the righteous, cold and distant man, with his eternal glass of milk. Drinking milk and not wine to a Frenchman is probably pure heresy. However, Saccard also wants his bank to be perceived as a modest and serious bank, it is a bank working for people with modest income, with a solid appearance, a modest building, he even asks for the Princess' permission to locate the bank initially in her orphanage. But later on, Saccard intends to start his speculations. He thinks that the Bank's regulations are intended only for the notaries, it is not regulations that built the Suez Canal, it is the energy, the inventiveness, the vision. He says that speculation, to the masses, is a dirty word, but it is speculation (in Boesky's words Greed) that develops the country, it is the new world, it reinforces. Without the stock exchange and speculation everything is small, it is at a standstill, it is dead. But with the stock exchange everything is possible, there are factories, employment, railways, prosperity, and new opportunities. MONEY (L'ARGENT) IS GOD, ALL THE WORLD WILL BE RICH WITH THE BANQUE UNIVERSELLE, AND EVERYBODY WILL BE HAPPY, BECAUSE OF ME!, says Saccard. Saccard is much more convincing than Ivan Boesky or Michael Milken. He is much more picturesque, true and credible, although he is fiction and they are real, but Zola's style is so real that he makes a fictional novel sound like a documentary.

Saccard governs the Board of Directors in typical corporate governance, where the yes-men agree with whatever Saccard does, even if it is unethical or illegal, nobody cares about the minority shareholders anyway and everybody owes his seat to Saccard. The film chooses to show the Board meeting like in a silent movie and as a matter of fact an earlier version of "L'Argent" was a silent movie by L'Herbier. Words are superfluous anyhow, as nothing is different in Board meetings of unethical companies, either in Zola's times or nowadays. Gundermann says about Saccard: "Saccard thinks that I despise him because he is not a Jew. It is untrue. I will break him as I respect our mission as bankers. I don't like people fooling with the seriousness of the banks. I will let him grow, take his revenge on me and then I'll break him." And in the meantime the shares are sold at higher and higher prices. Pensioners buy them, as do noblemen and merchants. But Maxime is not willing to invest in his father's bank, he knows too well who his father is. At the Shareholders' Meeting nobody asks any questions, decisions are taken unanimously. We should bear in mind that as always Zola was a pioneer, he was one of the first to describe at length what happens in Board meetings, shareholders' meetings, banks, minority shareholders, speculation, entrepreneurs. Today it is obvious, but in the romantic 19th century his naturalistic approach was unheard of. However, even today Zola's "L'Argent" seems modern, as if it were written in the US, France or Israel of the years 2000. His protagonists are immortal, his plot is universal and his insight is unmatched.

Saccard asks his friend Sigsimond how in his communist world people will live without money, and he answers him "they'll live freely". The communist is even eager that Saccard succeed, as in the days of the revolution the proletariat will nationalize all the private enterprises and instead of nationalizing many banks they'll have to nationalize only one - Saccard's. Lenin would say a few years later that the worse it gets the better it gets for the communists, who managed to rule Russia because of the catastrophes of the Tzarist regime. We are curious to know what Zola would say of the neo-liberal world of today, with a few tycoons and multinationals controlling the world's economy, not so far from the communist world of Sigsimond and the Soviet Union where the state controlled everything, and very similar to the worship of speculation, greed and money by Saccard. Speculation and greed are bad; they ruin companies, economies, make millions miserable and enrich the few. Gundermann's way of thinking is sensible, cautious, moderate, even if he or his likes are not as charismatic as Saccard or Gekko. Masses and shareholders tend to follow the demagogues, the speculators, the panaceas of the scoundrels. We are today somewhat blasé, tired of revolutions: fascists, communists, nationalists, tired of socialists, neo-liberal and ultra-capitalist regimes. We should return to the basics: to Aristotelian moderation, to Stiglitz's third way, to Zola's neo-social doctrines. Extremism is bad; we have seen it from the French revolution to Milton Friedman's nightmarish inhuman world where you have to maximize profits, widen the social gaps, pay exorbitant salaries to executives, while more and more people have McJobs. The third way doctrines are not utopic, they exist in Scandinavia, in the Netherlands, even in many ways in France. They don't exist in the US or in Israel and in many other countries, but reading Zola's novels, studying Stiglitz's academic books and watching movies like Erin Brockovich could assist in bringing about the changes. This is the ultimate purpose of my book in bringing together all these elements and illustrating them by case studies based on an international business career, academic studies and teaching, and analyzing the immortal masterpieces of Zola, Ibsen, Arthur Miller or the prophet Amos.

The minority shareholder is characterized by the junior employee of the newspaper Dejoie, who invested all his savings in the Bank's shares in order to pay for his daughter's dowry. When the Bank collapses, he blames his ambition (the victim's syndrome) not Saccard. In some way he is right, as he had enough money for the dowry but then he wanted to have money for his pension as well, and his appetite grew bigger and bigger until the price of the shares collapsed and he lost everything. So, should we blame him for being greedy or Saccard, who ruined Dejoie? I believe categorically that there is only one guilty party: Saccard. Dejoie is "blind" and Saccard put a stumbling block to his feet, like in the Bible's time, like in the subprime mortgage crisis. He doesn't have the insider information of Saccard, he is innocent and cannot follow the intricacies of the stock exchange. Of course he shouldn't speculate, people like him should save money in saving accounts and it should be forbidden for pension funds to invest in the stock exchange, least of all in speculative shares. If pension funds want to invest a small amount of their funds in the stock exchange they could at least do it in Ethical Funds and thus avoid the risks of unethical investments. Dejoie's daughter leaves him as her fiancé broke the engagement and she is not willing to forgive his father. She runs away with an "aged" man of 40 in a way that will bring her to perdition. Dejoie cries in the presence of Caroline after the bankruptcy and when she blames Saccard he resents and says: "Saccard was right when he persuaded me not to sell. The business is fantastic. We could have won if the traitors hadn't have left us. Only Saccard can save us now and it is a pity that he was sent to jail. I told the judge to give him back to us and I'll give him all my savings, my life, once more as this man is God, he did whatever he wanted. Tell Saccard when you see him that we'll always be with him." After these astonishing and true statements of the minority shareholders who never learn, we should not be surprised if Gilda, Rigoletto's daughter, is willing to sacrifice her life in order to save the life of the man who abducted her, the Duke of Mantua, who complains that women are frivolous, la donna e mobile. The victims' syndrome is a very common mental sickness in love as on the stock exchange.

Back to the novel's plot – Saccard doubles the capital of the Bank, he raises money from the public several times at higher and higher prices, as he is always short of money in order to keep up with the speculation. He illegally keeps 3,000 shares, which could assist him in crucial votes at Shareholders' meetings, as he knows that Gundermann is secretly buying shares in the Bank in order to ruin him in due course. Saccard forces George to sign a false statement stating that all the shares were funded and he entangles him in an illegal act that could put him in jail, as indeed ultimately it does. When George and Caroline come to Saccard in order to pay for the shares that they have illegally received for free, after they inherited enough money to pay for the shares, Saccard doesn't allow them to do so. His rationale is that they deserve the money for their initiative, but he really wants to make them his accomplices, after they declared that they had paid for the shares and the books had been forged accordingly. The tycoons have a vital interest in making their partners accomplices in their schemes as in this manner they cannot disclose all the illegal deeds of the tycoons. When the partners participate in the schemes they do it for "peanuts", while the tycoons gain the millions, in most of the cases they sign on behalf of the tycoons as Georges did for Saccard, Bud Fox did so for Gordon Gekko, and all the junior managers do it for their bosses, unless they become state witnesses, as in Enron or in other scandals. Caroline is worried because of the war with Prussia that is imminent, but Saccard tells her that it doesn't interest him, as all his thoughts are with the Bank and the minority shareholders... This is another typical excuse of unethical tycoons who are always worried about the employment of their employees, the welfare of the community, the country's prosperity, while they are maximizing their profits to the detriment of all the stakeholders, the minority shareholders; they don't pay taxes, externalize the waste and hurt the environment but advertise that they are green companies who donate 1% (!) of their profits to welfare, while obtaining the other 99% by schemes and unethical acts. And Saccard summarizes that the motto of business is to create a snow ball based on the trust of the shareholders.

The Baroness Sandorf is a compulsive speculator who invests all her money without the knowledge of her husband, who is a counselor in the Austro-Hungarian Embassy in Paris.

Jantrou, the journalist, is willing to give her some insider information in return for her favours, but she prefers to give them to Saccard, who treats her like a prostitute, but delivers some useful information from time to time. Saccard and Jantrou mislead the investors with disinformation on the happenings in Lebanon, where the Bank's money is invested in order to enliven the speculation. What is essential is not what happens but what is reported in the newspaper; this is a kind of virtual reality, of a perception of the truth and not of the sheer truth. The only truth is what is written in the news, and, of course, they never heard of transparency. The strong ties of unethical tycoons with the media are present throughout books, plays and films such as An Enemy of the People, The Visit, Topaze, The Insider. Sometimes the role of the media is positive, as in The China Syndrome. In L'Argent, Jantrou wants to convince the readers that the imminent war with Prussia will not affect the Bank as all its investments are in the Middle East. Caroline who is always worried prays "God, make all this succeed", and Saccard replies: "Leave God outside, he is too far away from the stock exchange". Saccard receives insider information from his partner Huret that France was summoned to act as a mediator in the Austro-Prussian war and the war is nearing its end. He decides to risk all his money (correction – other people's money that he controls) and all the money of the saving accounts of the Bank's clients (without their knowledge of course) to speculate, resulting in a huge profit of 20 million francs. Saccard doesn't risk anything, he knows for sure, because of the insider information, what the result of the war will be and this shows, once again, how the market is not perfect, as maintained by all the neo-liberals. If the speculation succeeds the Saccards benefit from all the profits, but if it fails it is the minority shareholders, the clients and the employees who bear the costs. If worse comes to worse, Ken Lay and Jeff Skilling are called Bad Apples and those who were not caught continue their schemes in spite of Sarbanes-Oxley.

Saccard wins 20 million francs and gives a million to Georges and Caroline. He is undoubtedly generous, he is not a miser; he helps his accomplices, in contrast to Gundermann, who doesn't keep his word. And Gundermann summarizes the event in his laconic way: "I like the profit of 20 million francs that Saccard has made. It will make him conceited and it is like the plague". Caroline tells Saccard that he has become a slave to money, but Saccard answers her that money is a vehicle to create employment, education, hospitals, prosperity. This dual language is like a mantra of unethical tycoons. Saccard buys a palace from Gundermann for the Bank; it is no longer the modest bank but an extravagant bank, as Enron was an extravagant company before it collapsed. This time Saccard explains it by saying that the clients would prefer a sumptuous bank, a bank that makes plenty of money and shows it off. And de Bohain even adds "and an honest bank as well". The share price of the bank is now 1,300. Caroline continues to love Saccard, as he has something exciting, gentle, that makes her forget his swindling. In the meantime he continues to artificially boil the kettle of the market until it explodes. Saccard's new ambition is to reach a price of 3,000, not the employment of tens of thousands; he has forgotten this argument, it is now sheer speculation.

In one of the comic interludes of the film we see a ball in Parisian high society near the end of the reign of Napoleon III. Saccard's new mistress, who has been the emperor's mistress, introduces the two. Bismarck, the guest of honor at the ball, who will, in a short while, win the war against France and make the rotten regime collapse, remarks: "Both started from zero, both will have the same end, the end of the adventurers". But Saccard is at the height of his career and believes that his success will last forever. Daigremont raises a toast in Saccard's honor at the ball and congratulates him for being the King of Paris. Meanwhile, a friendship starts between Maxime and Caroline. He urges her to leave Saccard and not to endanger her money in his schemes as he ruins everyone with whom he works. Maxime sees Georges as a weak man who is under the influence of the charismatic Saccard; he is risking his reputation and freedom with the false financial statements, the straw-men, the false statements on the capital of the Bank, the fraud on the Bank's books. Caroline is weighing whether to sell her shares but decides not to do so, as she believes and loves Saccard and could not face his disappointment if he learned about it. But Huret tells Saccard that he doesn't believe in him anymore and forces him to buy out his shares in cash. Saccard's friends start to leave him, but even at the price of 3,000 Saccard has no intention stopping, because if the price stagnates the shareholders will lose their confidence in the Bank and start selling their stock, and Gundermann will take over the Bank. The final gunfight between the two is imminent. Finally, Caroline sells all their shares after seeing that the Pope is not willing to back up Saccard. The Pope is not willing to back up a speculative bank even if it is Catholic. Saccard conceals the decision by the Pope from the public, as he is afraid of the collapse of the share' price. The Baroness comes to Gundermann and offers him information in return for assistance. Gundermann tells her that he is aware of the conduct of all the directors of the Bank. He confesses that he is a lonely man without any joy of life. He promises to recompense her generously. However, when she tells him of all the plans made by Saccard, her lover, he sends her away without giving her anything, because he doesn't like traitors. When she insists on receiving some piece of advice from him he tells her: "Don't deal with money, it makes you ugly". Gundermann's conduct presents us with another ethical dilemma: should you reward squealers who assist you or not. What is more important: a promise made by Gundermann or not keeping a promise to squealers?

The price of the share reaches 3,000. Saccard is exhilarated, but more and more people are leaving the sinking boat. The last of them is Jantrou, Saccard's closest counselor. Gundermann has already purchased 40% of the capital of the bank. He lets Saccard know that he is going to attack him on November 22, the day of the dividend' payment. Gundermann plans to sell more shares than Saccard could buy, thus making the Bank collapse. Saccard is convinced that he is going to win this time also and that he will become France's no. 1 banker. However, Daigremont betrays him, after learning that Rougon doesn't back his brother; he sells all his shares. Saccard then tries to convince his former friend, in the name of the small shareholders who are going to lose all their money. Daigremont tells him that he should have thought of them before he lied to him about his brother. After the fall, Mazaud, the broker who committed fraud and lost his reputation, commits suicide. His wife and children discover his body when Caroline visits them. And Maxime tells Caroline: "My father has caused victims throughout his life: his wives, his mistresses, his friends, those who trusted him, you, your brother, me, all of us were betrayed, were knifed by him, and when I think that he called his newspaper Hope, he should have called it shame, lie, rubbish". Caroline, still backing Saccard, tells Maxime that Saccard was willing to sell all his belongings in order to save the minority shareholders, but he hasn't had enough time to do it. Only after she visits Saccard in jail she is convinced that he is an incorrigible cheat without remorse. He claims that they call him a cheat because he has lost the battle, but if he had won, everybody would have praised him as they had in the past. He has no remorse, as he is not guilty, he hasn't caused the death of Mazaud, Daigremont has done it with his betrayal. However, in his trial he intends to disclose everything and reveal the behaviour of the elites, the haute finance, all those who have brought about his ruin. He will make them share his ruin, they will fall with him and he will start all over again. He will even find money to compensate the minority shareholders. But those have lost everything, their world has collapsed, their lives are ruined. Caroline is too sensitive to their fate and when Saccard tells her that he'll make her rich once again, when she sees that he has no remorse, she decides to leave him. However, as nowadays, the rotten apples don't pay the price. Rougon who is afraid of the scandal involving his reputation as well, decides to banish his brother to Amsterdam. In the puritan Netherlands Saccard starts all over again, making a presentation to a Dutch Board of Directors, trying to convince them to build a huge dam in order to dry part of the sea; it will be a project similar to the Suez Canal, which will add huge amounts of fertile soil to the small country, bringing about employment and prosperity. And he ends by saying: "Give me the money and I'll give you life".

Saccard perceives himself to be like God, who brings life, not like Satan, who brings destruction. He continues in his endeavors, like many other unethical tycoons who destroy economies, the lives of innocent people, the ecology and even the earth. The ethical people can unite against the demonic power of the Saccards, as we - workers, customers, the community - have the power, as ethics is the ultimate guarantee for justice, prosperity, life!

2. ISRAEL - BRIBE CASE – ETHICS IN GOVERNMENT TENDERS

(All the characters and plot and all the names of the companies in this case are fictitious)

It was undoubtedly a macabre scene. Emil and Simon walked in mourning behind the coffin of their neighbor who had died of cancer at the age of sixty. When all of a sudden Simon told Emil: "Look what is happening in our country, that a nobody dares to sue large and respectable companies like Shannont. Not long ago a dubious person came to me at the District Court where I am judge with a bizarre lawsuit requesting a commission from Shannont for the receipt of a huge project of Telecommunications, $300M or so. During the trial, he told us that he had acted as middleman between Shannont and a high ranking government official who supposedly was their consultant in this deal. He didn't have a signed contract and it smelled bad to me, as if he had mediated a bribe. I didn't at all understand what he wanted from me. You should have seen how Shannont's first rate lawyer made him a laughing stock in court. Finally, I sentenced this blackmailer to pay damages to Shannont." They continued to follow the coffin with the widow and children, the sun was burning and Simon continued to tell his story: "Why am I telling you all this? I remember that you once worked at Shannont and you know how ethical and honest they are. So, maybe you can tell me, now that the trial is over, if you have heard anything about this story as, in retrospect, it looks really odd. Why should such a man wake up one morning and sue such a respectable company, just like that..."

Emil phoned his friend Maurice, who was the CEO of the company that was the main competitor of Shannont in this project. Maurice burst into a roaring laughter and said: "Look, there is no end to the idiocy of our dear judges. You rightfully earned a lavish lunch that would dispel the bad taste of the confession in the morgue that you had to suffer." The day after that they met at the most expensive restaurant in town. They ate calamari, drank fine French wines and, a little tipsy, Maurice said: "Perhaps you remember the Shannont of ten years ago when you worked there, but it is no longer the ethical and honest company that you used to know. In the last few years they wanted to reach a sales turnover of a billion dollars at all cost. They had to increase their earnings every quarter in order to meet the analysts' forecasts, and somewhere in the middle of the road they lost their compass. They could no longer grow from their own resources, they tried to enter into new market segments but to no avail, they acquired companies but failed in merging them; in short, Norbert, the CEO, did not succeed in the legitimate ways of growth and he was looking for new unorthodox methods. And then, Patrick, his CFO, came to him with the brilliant idea that they should participate in the $300M telecommunications tender. There was only one slight problem; they didn't know a thing about this market segment, while my company was the market leader. You remember the tender, all the newspapers wrote about it and especially about the scandal of how Shannont won, with no experience, while we, who had delivered tens of projects in this field, couldn't do a thing. When we heard that Shannont was competing, we grinned and didn't take them seriously. So, when they won I knew that there was something fishy in it. After hiring the best detectives in the country, we learned that Patrick had a brother-in-law, who was the mediator who sued Shannont, This man told him casually at one of the family dinners that if Shannont wanted to win the telecommunications contract he could mediate with the high ranking government official responsible for the project and they would win. It would cost them the moderate amount of $0.5M to be paid, in Switzerland, to the law abiding civil servant. The mediator asked for only $100K for his mediation and he was also willing to receive it in Switzerland, after receipt of the contract. However, the official insisted on receiving the money immediately, as he had been conned in the past and believed only in cash a priori." Emil and Maurice were eating their soufflé with an excellent digestif and Emil congratulated his colleague on the excellent choice of the restaurant.

"Don't mention it; anyhow, it is at my company's expense... But, the best part of the story is yet to come. Patrick proposed to Norbert that he pay the bribe and report it in the company's books as the import of software. Nobody would ever know a thing, he promised him, "but you have to give me your word of honor that my brother-in-law will receive his commission after receipt of the order. It is peanuts if you take into consideration what we'll earn from the project; you should be grateful that we are not in South America, as those guys would charge you with a much higher bribe. The government officials in our ethical countries can be bought at reasonable prices, so why not seize the opportunity instead of investing in R&D and acquiring expensive companies." Norbert was hesitant as to whether he should comply with Patrick's offer. Until now they hadn't ever bribed anyone, at least not in their own country. However, he heard from his colleagues that today it was quite common to win a tender by paying bribes and they did it often. And if we didn't pay the bribe our competitors would... We have to meet our ambitious target of a billion dollar sales or we will be sacked. Norbert had a duty towards his controlling shareholders to maximize profits and this was the cheapest way to do it, no risks, a high return on investment, nobody will ever know." Maurice continued: "You probably wonder how I quote whole conversations of the two rascals, but you'll soon understand. Therefore Patrick received the green light, transferred the bribe to the official's bank account in Switzerland and Shannont got the contract. We were all stunned, Shannont admitted that they didn't know anything in this field but told the reporters that it had been its strategic objective for a long time to enter this new market and they would invest millions of their own funds in R&D." Maurice paid, Emil left a large tip and they left the restaurant.

"Let us go along the boardwalk, we'll soon get to the "puenta". Norbert, my dear colleague, probably forgot that I was not born yesterday and I smelled that all this business was not kosher. I hired the best detective bureau in town, they gathered all the information on what really happened and within a few weeks I learned all that I told you. In our young country we do not have yet the law of Omerta, and everybody talks. We don't have the tradition of silence like in the civilized countries where you don't say a word on the bribes you pay and on the mistresses you take. And this is how I cracked the secret; cherchez la femme, my friend. Patrick told everything to his mistress; she wanted to break up anyhow and she recorded him on tape. My detectives bought Patrick's bedroom confessions from his mistress for $20K, gave me the tapes and I showed them to poor Patrick. I told him that he had two choices, either go to the police himself or let me do it, but the only chance he got was to be a state's witness. He said that he wanted to consult Norbert before he went to the police and I strongly recommended him not to do so. But he insisted, I warned him that Norbert was a dangerous guy, he belonged to the elites, played golf with all the ministers and millionaires, he was a personal friend of the chief of police and his lawyer was a special advisor to the Prime Minister. Norbert would never agree to get mixed up in such a story and he would put all the blame on Patrick if the stinking story were discovered."

On the beach hundreds were sunbathing, playing and eating. Maurice continued: "Oh, how I envy those who have the time to go to the beach. I work so hard and they do nothing... On Monday morning Patrick met Norbert. Nobody knows what happened in this meeting, but the yelling was heard in all the adjoining offices. Patrick left Norbert's office after a couple of hours and told his secretary that he was going home to rest. He got into bed and never woke up; they said that he had a heart attack, but I know that Patrick was the healthiest man I ever met. Without Patrick I didn't have a case anymore and I couldn't do a thing against Shannont. The day after, I attended Patrick's funeral and I don't know why I had the impression that I was participating in a carnival. Everybody looked happy, as if they were relieved of something. I couldn't avoid going to Norbert to pay my condolences. You should thank God, as Patrick's death saves you from prison, I told him. Norbert answered me smiling - what can I do, God is always on my side, my mother told me that I have a guardian angel who will rid me of any foe that I'll encounter in my life. I grinned and answered Norbert - an angel or his associate - pointing at him. Norbert looked at me with such murderous eyes that I felt a chill up and down my spine. I returned to my office and decided to bury the case. Rather bury the case than be buried, life is too short, I have to enjoy it and not risk it even for my company's sake. Patrick didn't learn the lesson and he paid the full price!"

Emil was smoking an expensive cigar and offered one to Maurice. He suddenly said: "I don't know yet how Judge Simon got into the picture." Maurice smiled and continued: "It is true, because of that I invited you to lunch. The mediator saw that all at once he would be deprived of the $100K that had been guaranteed by Patrick, God save his soul. He came to Norbert and asked him to pay the money. Norbert told him that he didn't know what he was talking about and if he had any recrimination against Patrick, he should sue him in hell. The mediator was furious and tried to receive the money from the government official, who told him that they hadn't made any agreement between them. He had no choice but to sue Shannont for $1M - the $100K promised to him and $900K for aggravation. He went to the press, but everywhere he went, he was perceived as a madman and blackmailer, especially since Norbert used all his contacts to discredit him. Norbert hired his lawyer friend who managed to win a similar case where another "blackmailer" had sued Shannont prior to an IPO for breaking its obligations and causing them huge losses. The brilliant lawyer managed to receive damages from the blackmailer although everybody knew that Shannont was guilty. The same lawyer appeared before Simon and impressed him with his learned arguments. Simon, who didn't understand anything in business and was impressed by the rhetoric of the lawyer, the honorable appearance of Norbert and Shannont's witnesses, perceived them as honest and ethical people suffering from the lunatic allegations of a blackmailer. He dismissed the case and forced the mediator to pay for Shannont's legal fees."

Emil and Maurice departed with a handshake. After all, it was a pleasant afternoon, much more interesting than an idle sunbath at the beach. A copious meal in a luxurious restaurant, an entertaining story, good wines and an expensive cigar, what could be better than that to strengthen your joie de vivre!

ANALYSIS AND TOPICS FOR CONSIDERATION ON: BRIBE CASE - ETHICS IN GOVERNMENT TENDERS

Topics for consideration on the personal, business and ethical dilemmas of the main protagonists of the case: 1. Maurice, CEO of a telecommunications company, 2. Norbert, CEO of Shannont, 3. Patrick, CFO of Shannont, 4. Simon, a District Court Judge.

- * Is the criticism against the District Court Judge Simon justified? Had he any chance of discovering the truth?
- * Do you know of similar cases? Do you think it is a fictitious case or that similar cases could happen also in your country?
- * Why did Simon choose to "confess" to Emil at their neighbor's funeral?
- * If you were Simon, how would you solve the case?
- * Who is Maurice: A warrior for justice and ethics, a revengeful man who wants to get his revenge for losing the tender, a coward who doesn't want to mess with people like Norbert?
- * Why does Maurice tell Emil the story after all?
- * Patrick - a tragic character of a rogue, a loyal executive of Shannont who wants its success, a blackmailer who wants to involve Norbert in his schemes?
- * What do you think happened during the meeting between Norbert and Patrick?
- * Was Patrick right when he went to consult Norbert before becoming a state's witness?
- * Do you believe that such an honorable man as Norbert would mess in criminal acts against Patrick or does he only want to be perceived as a dangerous man?
- * Describe the metamorphosis that happened to Norbert who turned from an ethical man into a bribe giver, or possibly a murderer?
- * What were the alternatives Maurice had after Patrick's death?
- * Why has the mediator decided to sue Shannont against all odds?
- * Are there any prejudices in the legal system: in favor of large companies, brilliant lawyers, members of the elites, and against minority shareholders, third rate lawyers, John Does who cannot express themselves in the right legal jargon?
- * How can you explain that such an intricate case comprising the dubious death of an executive, a legal suit, bribe allegations, an investigation of Maurice's company, was not covered by the media, there was no police investigation, and no tattle-tale ever spoke?
- * Would it change the story if Patrick were single, married, old, young, with low class or elite origins, Afro-American, a WASP?
- * Describe the apologetics on Norbert's part: he has to act this way because of the cut-throat competition, the controlling shareholders putting pressure on him, the analysts wanting him to meet his forecasts, he failed as a CEO but still has to deliver the goods. Isn't a bribe the speediest and safest way to meet his objectives, it was not his idea to give the bribe, he didn't give written instructions, Patrick was too dangerous and could jeopardize Shannont's success.

- * Why did Maurice decide to threaten Patrick and not go straight to Norbert?
- * Why are the low or middle level executives always those who go to jail, if at all, in such cases? Why are the CEOs and Tycoons almost always exonerated?
- * What are the lessons that you can draw from this case: live and let live, if you want a long life don't mess with the elites, justice will prevail after all, as Emil will start a campaign against Shannont and Norbert?

CONCLUSION

Emil didn't start a campaign against Shannont and Norbert. Even if he wanted to do so he had no smoking gun evidence. Shannont was acquired a few years later by an ethical tycoon who managed to get rid of the unethical executives. One of the first moves he made was to fire Norbert, with a golden parachute of $10M.

Patrick died, but his memory will always be with us. Norbert published a book in memory of Patrick, financed by Shannont. In the foreword of the book, Norbert wrote: "I have seldom worked with such a dedicated, ethical and loyal executive as Patrick. As VP Finance, Patrick's name became synonymous with integrity and honesty. He had an employee aged 70 and in spite of the pressure put on him to let him retire, he kept him in his department, as he was a good employee and a good example for the young managers. My father, said Patrick, was laid off at the age of 55 and it ruined his life. I want everybody to know that you can continue to work at Shannont even if you are old and not as efficient as in the past, but yet with the right motivation and dedication. However, unfortunately, Patrick didn't manage to reach 70 or even 55. He died relatively young and his loss is our loss. Dear Patrick, we love you and will never forget you. Rest in peace, our friend, your example will always guide us!"

Maurice continues to work hard, he changed several jobs and is now independent. He has completely forgotten the Patrick saga and if it were not for Emil he wouldn't even remember it. He continues to eat gourmet dinners and generously invites his friends. However, his doctors told him that if he doesn't go on a diet he might suffer from obesity. Recently he received a cigar box from Emil, who was in Cuba on business.

Norbert succeeded very well in his career. Over the years he gave bribes of many millions in his country and abroad. He always managed to do so secretly, most of the time indirectly, to family members - sons or cousins, in anonymous bank accounts. Nobody ever dared let him down, everybody knew, after the Patrick case, that you shouldn't mess with him. He only complained that the bribes he had to pay in his country were higher and higher, it was no longer like in the good old times when you could buy a $300M tender for only $500K. As he is an honorable man, he pays the bribes every time on the dot and his clients can count on him.

Last year, Norbert joined the ruling party and his name has been mentioned by the newspapers as a serious candidate for the Treasury Ministry. It is high time he says in his interviews that our country had ministers who are businessmen with integrity, taking care of the interests of all the stakeholders, and not corrupt politicians, who are always on trial for corrupt practices. We need ethical executives like me, let me lead our people!

Norbert never contributed anything to the community. He says that his contribution is much more than a miserable million or two to a hospital or a university. His contribution is in committing his life to the country, its economy and its people. Nevertheless, he was quite disappointed at not getting the highest honors of his country, as many old professors did. He said: "They write articles on subjects that nobody understands, while I am maintaining this country with my bare hands. My country is ungrateful, as they cannot recognize my merits."

Recently, Norbert received an anonymous letter with a citation of Cicero's first oration against Catiline: "Nihil agis, nihil moliris, nihil cogitas, quod non ego non modo audiam, sed etiam videam planeque sentiam". He didn't understand it, after all he was never good in Latin...

3. NORTH AMERICA - TRUST AND FAIRNESS CASE - BRIDGING IN MERGERS

(Due to confidentiality and editing reasons some of the names and details have been changed. The amounts are given for indication purpose only)

When Anthony was invited to lunch by Douglas, the President and Owner of American Furniture, he was not convinced that he should accept the invitation. Douglas' company was one of the largest furniture companies in the world and its subsidiary in his country was the main competitor of one of Anthony's major clients - International Furniture. Anthony, formerly a high tech executive and currently an International M&A program manager, maintained impeccable ethical standards and this was part of his reputation, together with the high rate of success of his M&A. He was a personal friend of Christian's, the President and Owner of International Furniture. In spite of the age differences and their different hobbies (Christian was a well-known sportsman while Anthony never watched a basketball or soccer game) they became close friends. Anthony started to work for Christian a few years ago and assisted his company in strategic planning, know-how agreements with a large American multinational, the turnaround of the company's activities, financial matters and the organization of the sales department. Anthony naturally informed Christian that he was about to meet Douglas, but promised him that he wouldn't disclose insider information on his client. Christian encouraged him to meet Douglas, as he was aware of the fact that the American company was dissatisfied with the performance of its local subsidiary. Both companies were competing in the same market and in the multimillion tenders they engaged in cut-throat competition to the detriment of both. This competition had a very negative impact on their profitability and on their market share, but Christian's company balanced the losses with the multimillion royalties it received for its know-how from the American company, with whom it had signed a know-how agreement, with the assistance of Anthony.

Douglas was very friendly to Anthony, he told him the story of his life, a holocaust refugee who came to America penniless and constructed a multibillion empire with his own hands. Douglas told Anthony that he had heard excellent reports about him, his success with International Furniture, and complimented him on the fact that Christian's company was so profitable, probably because of Anthony's contribution. Anthony answered him that he was only a consultant to Christian and all the credit was due to Christian and his partner, who were excellent managers and experts in their fields. They had transformed their company into a high-tech company although it was in the furniture business, and most of their customers were indeed high-tech companies that liked the modern and sophisticated designs and their state-of-the-art technologies very much. Towards the end of the meal, Douglas told Anthony what the reason for his invitation was; he asked Anthony to assist him in the same manner that he had helped Christian to overcome the losses of the local subsidiary and to prepare and implement its strategic planning. Anthony told him right away that it would be impossible for him to do so as it contradicted his ethical standards, but Douglas clarified that he didn't expect him to divulge any secrets from Christian's operations but just implement the same methods which were not proprietary, and he would receive a very high remuneration for that. When Anthony insisted in his refusal, Douglas asked him: "So, what do you suggest?"

Anthony told him that instead of engaging in a cut-throat competition they should merge their local operations. He suggested that Christian and his partner conduct the merger with the local subsidiary and turn the merged company around with Anthony's assistance and thus bring the merged company to very high profitability. Anthony specified that that was his own opinion and he hadn't consulted Christian on this, but Douglas, who was very impressed by Anthony's integrity and his competence, gave him a full mandate to pursue his proposal, on the one condition that he, Anthony, would conduct the negotiations as a mediator and he would be remunerated equally by both parties. Anthony was very surprised by this act of confidence; for the first time in his very long career he was offered such a deal. He was sure that he could be a fair mediator, but he asked Douglas nevertheless: "Don't you think that I might be more inclined to be on Christian's side, since he is not only my client but also my personal friend?" Douglas answered him with a smile: "A few minutes ago you passed your integrity test brilliantly and I have no doubt that in the near future we will also become good friends".

Christian immediately agreed to concur with Anthony's proposal. He was also convinced that there was no point in having such fierce competition in such a small market as the local market, selling similar products with similar quality and similar prices. There were enough competitors, local and foreign, and together they could achieve a critical mass in the local market that would enhance sales and profitability. Although he didn't want to lose control of his company, he was aware of the fact that the modern business world belongs to mega corporations and in the long run he needed to join forces with such a large company as Douglas'. He checked into past merger possibilities, with Anthony's assistance, with some of the American companies but they were not interested, as the local market seemed too small for them. Douglas' case was different, as he had already a local subsidiary, although it lost money, and Christian could give him an added value. Christian had tried to make an IPO without success, as the stock exchange was interested only in high-tech companies and a small foreign furniture company was not attractive enough. Therefore, the idea of merging with Douglas' subsidiary made sense. He knew that Douglas was a sophisticated businessman with an excellent ethical reputation. Christian hoped that he would convince him to merge only the local operations in a 50%-50% partnership, but in the back of his mind he knew that ultimately his company would be acquired fully by American Furniture, as it didn't make sense to have a joint venture while a fully integrated subsidiary would be much more profitable. He was still young and hoped that he would succeed in making an impact in the multibillion company in the European organization or even in the American organization. He was confident of his managerial skills and his state-of-the-art products and he knew that he had much more to offer than in managing the local business. Christian's partner in the local company was more reserved, but he agreed to investigate the matter further.

In preparation for the negotiations in America Anthony prepared a document that included four subjects: the logic of the merger, the preferences of both companies, parameters for the valuation, details on the financial statements of International Furniture. In the document on the logic of the merger the advantages of a larger company were detailed, especially in manufacturing and sales, the substantial savings in overhead, the avoidance of a cut-throat competition, keeping the two brand names with their relative advantages and segmentation of the market accordingly, increase of the local market share, making the activities of the American subsidiary profitable, contribution of the state-of-the-art technology of International Furniture to the R&D activities of the Americans, introducing revolutionary locally-designed products to the product mix of the Americans throughout the world, unification of the manufacturing facilities on the premises of Christian's company, thus benefiting the subsidiary's products, which were not manufactured in a development zone from the approved enterprise status, similar objectives for both companies, a similar entrepreneurial and ethical mission, a very fast return on investment, minimal exposure and low risk, rationalizing of the manufacturing and purchasing process, a combined and aggressive management.

The preference of the local company was that the merger be executed only with the subsidiary. The subsidiary had a similar turnover of several tens of millions of dollars annually, but they encountered a problem of valuation, as the subsidiary lost money and its pricing was based on transfer prices from the American parent company for the imported products. However, a large part of the sales were of products manufactured in the local subsidiary, which also exported part of its production to Europe. Christian preferred that all the manufacturing of products to Europe should be done locally due to the proximity to Europe and the trade agreements with the EU. He also hoped that in the near future it would be possible to make an IPO of the merged company in Europe or the US. The American company was already a public company.

Nevertheless, the Americans were interested in acquiring 100% of the local company and merging its operations with the parent company. Anthony suggested that in this event part of the consideration should be in cash and part in shares of the American company guaranteed with a bank guarantee on the nominal value. Both parties agreed that part of the consideration should be linked to the performance of the merged company, as it was agreed that Christian and his partner would continue to work in the merged company for at least three more years. The prospects seemed bright as the common objectives were far more prevalent than the differences, but very soon some cardinal divergences of opinions were perceived: a very large gap between the valuations of the local company by the parties, the distribution of the consideration to the different components, and who was going to manage the merged company. Anthony perceived his main task in bridging between the opposite views of the parties.

Christian figured that Douglas would offer him no more than a valuation of $40M, based on the net profit of the local company with a multiple of 15. In the furniture business this was the maximum that could be achieved as the multiples were not as high as in the high-tech industry. This was also the multiple of the American company that was profitable on the American stock exchange. Furthermore, Christian asked for royalties of 3% on the sales of some revolutionary products that were developed but not yet marketed, as the Americans did not agree to incorporate them in the valuation of the company. Anthony suggested to Christian that he agree to receive part of the consideration in shares of the American company with a bank guarantee on the nominal value. Christian and his partner agreed to receive their current salaries, but required bonuses of up to 50% of their annual salaries if they meet objectives mutually agreed upon. Douglas requested, after signing a confidentiality agreement, that he receive full disclosure on the local company, including the know-how agreements, the royalties and sales breakdown, pricing data and other details of the financial statements. He was particularly interested in data on the local factory, the equipment, R&D, aging of customer' debts, banks loans, details on the salaries and the forecasts of sales of the different products. After a preparatory meeting with Douglas and his managers and discussions with Christian and his management, Anthony suggested a detailed proposal according to the following lines.

The minority shareholders of International Furniture, who owned one third of the shares and were mainly relatives of the first generation founders, would not be employed by the company after the merger. Christian believed that they would be willing to agree to a much lower valuation of the company as they were interested in an immediate exit and would not contribute to the success of the merged company, as the two CEOs would. Christian and his partner, the two CEOs, who held two thirds of the shares, would remain in the company as executives and contribute to the success, sales and profitability of the merged company locally, in Europe and in America. The agreement would be for five years and they would receive an employment agreement, including salaries, bonuses and warrants. The bonuses and warrants would be tied to objectives, but would not be part of the consideration for selling their company. The minimum payments for the company were open for discussion by the parties. Those figures were based, inter alia, on the savings in costs due to the merger, the increase in profitability, the sales growth, obtaining more lucrative tenders by avoiding competition, the new products, the decrease in overhead, the relocation of the subsidiary's facilities to the approved enterprise zone, economies of scale and so on. All the proposals were given in full transparency and the minority shareholders had to agree to the different valuations for them and for the partners.

It was proposed that the minority shareholders, who held one third of the shares, would receive $7M, half in cash - $3.5M - and half in shares of the American company, with a bank guarantee of $3.5M for 5 years. This guarantee would not be subject to any objectives. If Douglas' forecasts of an annual 25% increase in the price of the shares of his company materialized, the value of the shares would increase to $10M after 5 years and they would therefore receive $13.5M in five years, amounting to a valuation of $40M, as they had one third of the shares. In the worst case, they would receive $7M, with a valuation of $21M, thus giving them an upside of twice the valuation, which is equivalent to the price that they wanted, and a downside of half this price, but they knew that the Americans did not want to acquire the company for its assets, but mainly because of the two partners who would contribute to the growth of the merged company; for that reason Christian and his partner deserved to receive more. This differentiation between the shareholders, with full transparency, was one of the main ingredients of the compromise that was ultimately achieved in the negotiations in order to overcome the huge gaps between the requirements of the buyer and the sellers. The minority shareholders, who wanted to have an exit and couldn't get it unless the company was sold or traded, were willing to compromise much more than the two partners.

Anthony proposed that Christian and his partner, who remained in the merged company and continued to manage it, should receive the following consideration: a cash payment of $6.5M and shares of the American company amounting to $6.5M and guaranteed by a five year bank guarantee. However, if the profitability of the merged local activities dropped lower than the current profitability of American Furniture, including its local subsidiary, the bank guarantee would only amount to $3.2M, or 50%. If, on the other hand, the valuation of the American company did not increase as forecasted, threefold in five years, the bank guarantee would increase to $13M, or twice the initial amount, provided that the profitability of the merged local company increased by at least twice in those five years, at the same rate of increase as the bank guarantee. This compromise bridged between the large gaps of the parties' positions in a sophisticated manner, as it reflected the profitability of the local company, which was influenced by the performance of the local partners, and the profitability of the American company which was influenced by the performance of the American partners.

Anthony also proposed that the local partners should receive 3% royalties on the revolutionary new products. Christian believed, after conducting market research and consulting his worldwide distributors, that the sales of these products would amount to $200M in five years. They would therefore receive $6M in royalties. If the Americans decided to exercise the option to market those products and did not market or succeed in marketing the products, the partners would get at least $3M, or more if sales were higher. However, if the Americans did not exercise the option to market the products, the local partners were free to find other companies that would want to market the products and give them royalties. Therefore Christian and his partner would receive, in the optimal case of an increase of threefold in the price of the shares in five years, the amount of $32M (6.5 in cash, 6.5x3 in shares, 6 in royalties) with a valuation of $48M, which was similar to what they wanted originally: a valuation of $40M and 3% royalties on sales of $200M or $6M. In the more realistic case, that the price of the shares did not increase threefold and the bank guarantee on an increase of twofold were exercised, and if Christian's forecasts on the profitability of the local merged company and the royalties did materialize, they would receive $26M (6.5 in cash, 6.5x2 in shares, 6 in royalties), with a valuation of $39M. In the worst case, they would receive $13M (6.5 in cash, 3.2 in shares, 3 in royalties) or a valuation of $20M.

The exposure of the Americans was $20M maximum, for the whole company ($10M in cash for the partners and the minority shareholders and $10M in shares or actually dilution of their ownership). This amount would increase to $26M if the increase in the price of the shares in five years were less than twice, but could also decrease to $17M if the profitability of the local operations were less than forecasted. The royalties were not taken into account in the amount of the exposure, as the Americans had the option not to market the new products. According to Anthony's proposal, the local partners received what they wanted: a valuation of $40M in realistic scenarios, and the Americans were exposed to a valuation of $20M which was the price that they were willing to pay, and even this, only half in cash and half in shares. How was this alchemy achieved? By the differentiation of the minority shareholders with full transparency, payment of half the consideration in shares with a bank guarantee on the original amount and by keeping the new products and their royalties out of the formula. Other parameters were also introduced into these proposals, linking the consideration to the performance of local activities and the conduct of the price of the shares. We will see that ultimately the compromise that was achieved was even more complicated, but kept however the same principle, that the local partners get what they want and the Americans pay only what they want, in spite of the large gap between the positions of the two parties.

A few weeks later more parameters were added to this formula. First of all, it was decided that the Americans would not acquire the local company, but its activities, assets and liabilities, goodwill, etc., with some clauses on the loans made by International Furniture to its shareholders, and it was decided that the local partners would maintain ownership of the premises of the plant in the development zone. The Americans committed to a five-year lease contract of the manufacturing facilities with an option to increase it to ten years that they would enter upon signature of the agreement, paying an annual rent payment of $0.6M. The Americans committed themselves to pay the partners a sum of $10M in five years subject to achieving certain objectives. This amount was based on 50% of the increase of the merged local company's profitability in five years compared to the aggregate profitability of International Furniture and the loss of the subsidiary in the base year. On top of the salaries of the partners, which would remain unchanged, they would receive bonuses of 5% of the pretax profitability of the merged local company. The partners would also receive, upon achieving their objectives, 30,000 five-year warrants to purchase shares of the American company, to be exercised at the price that was on the stock exchange on the day that they received the warrants.

In the following weeks negotiations were held, with frequent business trips, in an attempt to overcome the gaps between the positions of the parties, to investigate the tax implications, the problems of issuing new shares, managing the merged operations and so on. Anthony examined different scenarios with both parties, optimistic, pessimistic, realistic, minimum and maximum exposure, forecasts of the locally merged operations, sales and profitability in the next five years, financial and legal implications and so on. The possibility of giving convertible debentures instead of shares was examined, the requirements for bank guarantees, what the prerequisites were to signing the agreement: approval of the Boards of Directors, approval of the Chief Scientist, approval for the approved enterprise status, approval of the anti-trust authorities, approval of the owners of the know-how, approval of the banks that had liens and so on. Anthony flew back and forth to America and tried to keep his status of a fair mediator.

In November 1998, two months after the beginning of negotiations, the local partners received a formal proposal from the Americans as follows: American Furniture will purchase the activities, assets and liabilities, goodwill, know-how, and so on of International Furniture, excluding some of the assets and liabilities. American Furniture will pay a sum of $10M for the acquisition in convertible debentures of the company that can be converted into shares within five years but that cannot be traded during this period. American Furniture will give a five-year bank guarantee for those debentures. The premium of convertibility will be of 15% over the price of the shares on the stock exchange on the day of signature of the agreement. The interest rate of the debentures will be the US Libor. The bank guarantee is accepted as collateral for getting bank loans. The cost of the loans will be the difference between the bank interests and the Libor. If the local partners do not convert the debentures within five years and the price of the shares after five years is lower than the conversion rate, the local partners will exercise the bank guarantee. However, if the price of the shares is higher, the local partners will be compelled to convert the debentures to shares, but they will be able, of course, to sell the shares on the stock exchange immediately. During those five years it will be possible to partially convert the debentures into shares.

The additional conditions that the Americans proposed were: they will pay the shareholders of International Furniture $1M, which will enable them to reimburse the bank loan that they took in the past in order to invest this amount in their company. In parallel, the local partners will keep the bank loans that they have taken in order to build the plant in the development zone and will continue to pay the interest. The Americans will have the option to purchase 50% of the plant for a cash payment of $1.5M. The value of the plant and the land is about $6M and the outstanding loans amount to $3M, thus the net value of the plant is $3M. The rent will amount to $600K annually, in a five-year contract renewable to five more years. The Americans will have the option to acquire the rights on the new products and pay the local shareholders 3% royalties on the sales of the new products. If they do not exercise the option within a few months, the local shareholders will have the option to sell the know-how to other parties.

The local partners will receive $2M every year for the first three years of the agreement, to a total $6M, for both. The precondition for receiving those amounts is their work in the merged company during each year of this period. The Americans insisted on adding other conditions such as best efforts in their work and so on. Both parties were very suspicious of the implementation of this clause: the Americans were afraid that the two executives would only come to work and do nothing in order to receive the $6M, while the local partners were afraid that the Americans would try to find excuses for not paying those amounts, saying they have not made their "best efforts", and so on. It will then be too late for them to do anything, as the company will already be owned by the Americans. In addition, the local partners were to receive, from the Americans, an amount of $9M in five years, subject to meeting several objectives: 50% of the additional profitability of the merged company, compared to the initial profitability up to a maximum of $1.8M annually, or $9M in five years. This topic raised many arguments as the local partners wanted to be involved in the international activities of American Furniture and didn't want to be evaluated only on the profitability of the local organization, it was not clear what the base profitability was, as the subsidiary was losing money and received transfer prices for some of their products, there were many non recurring costs, how would the profits be calculated on the sales of the products manufactured locally to the other subsidiaries in Europe, how would the R&D component of the P&L be neutralized from the calculation, and so on. The partners were requested to sign a five-year employment contract with American Furniture on the basis of the existing salaries and social benefits; every partner would receive a bonus of 5% on the annual pretax profit of the locally merged company on the first $1M, 4% on the second million, 3% on all the other profits. The partners would also receive 30,000 warrants each for purchasing the shares of the American company according to the employees stock options plan. It was not decided what the positions of the two partners in the company would be.

On November 27, 1998, a Letter of Intent was signed according to the abovementioned outlines. This was much less than what the local partners wanted and the risks involved were much larger. No cash payment was granted, in the best case the partners were about to receive $28M, 67% of $20M (10 debentures, 3 net for the lease of the plant, 1 loan, 6 royalties) or $13M as well as specific payments of $15M (6 employment contract, 9 additional profitability), in total $28M or a valuation of $42M. The valuation of the company for the minority shareholders was the abovementioned $20M, as they expected and it also left them an upside if the price of the shares increased, but without a guarantee on the basic payment if the price of the shares did not increase. For the Americans the exposure was minimal, as except for the repayment of $1M of the loan in cash, they didn't pay anything in cash. They issued convertible debentures that they knew would be converted, as they were confident that the price of the shares would increase in five years, the dilution was minimal, they were not required to buy the facilities of the plant and they benefited from the rent that was according to market prices, receiving approved enterprise status and transferring their manufacturing facilities there, saving large amounts of overhead. They were not required to exercise the option on the new products, but they committed to pay an unconditional $6M to the partners and $9M subject to meeting profitability objectives. However, the Americans were convinced that they would increase the local profits by at least $25M in five years, and pay to the partners $15M. The Americans bought a company with a large potential for almost nothing, with an adequate solution to the losses in their local subsidiary; it was a good transaction for them.

The risk for the local partners was in the fact that half of the consideration was linked to the objectives and working in the merged company; as the Americans were not enthusiastic about purchasing the new products, the prospects of finding other partners for those products was slim; they would not receive anything in cash, they were not happy with the proposal of convertible debentures, and it was probable that the amount that they would receive would be \$20M or less if there were no royalties and if they received only half of the conditional consideration $(4+6+67\% \times 14)$. However, in spite of all the risks, there were many prospects, as they were convinced that they would increase the profitability substantially, they knew that they would continue to be employed by the company as they believed in the integrity of the Americans, they hoped for a substantial increase in the share' prices and had a moderate hope of receiving at least part of the royalties. On second thought, they believed that they might receive a valuation that would be similar to the \$40M valuation that they wanted initially. If only they could receive part of the consideration in cash they would be satisfied with the agreement. Therefore, in spite of the signature on the Letter of Intent, which was subject to the approval of the Boards and receipt of many other approvals, the parties continued to negotiate in order to clarify different points, with an indefatigable Anthony, who tried to bridge between the divergent standpoints of the parties.

In parallel to the negotiations, a thorough due diligence was conducted on the local company, all the repercussions of the merger were examined including tax considerations and an employment contract was ultimately devised. It was decided that the salary base of the workers in the two local entities would be unified, without increasing the labor costs substantially, in spite of large gaps in the salaries of the two organizations. Similar gaps were also in the number of company vehicles. It was decided to make profit centers for the main activities of the merged company, with the involvement of the managers in the decisions on transfer prices, sale prices, efficiency criteria and so on. A joint organization was devised and it was decided that Christian would be General Manager of Sales, his partner would be General Manager of Design and Development, and Taylor, the President of the merged company, would continue to benefit from the full confidence of Douglas and would be the boss of the two partners. Taylor was a newcomer and was not responsible for the losses of the subsidiary and the partners agreed to receive his leadership after they knew him better. Taylor did his utmost to attenuate their apprehensions and they were confident that they would manage to work as a team as they had a lot to gain in bonuses and incentives from the success of the merged company. Nevertheless, it was decided that only Douglas would have the authority to fire Christian and his partner.

In February 1999, a local newspaper published an article disclosing that International Furniture was contemplating the possibility of introducing a strategic partner to the company - American Furniture. For half a year the parties managed to keep their negotiations confidential, but after such a long period of time and after many parties were now involved in the negotiations, it was no longer possible to hide it from the press. No amounts were disclosed and the newspaper wrote only about partnership and not full acquisition. The suspicions of the parties were still very high and Anthony had to work overtime in order to attenuate them, taking into consideration that the lawyers of the parties also tended to augment the suspicions level. It is not clear if this was a tactic of negotiations, but every disclosure on obligations to the banks, ecological problems, problems with suppliers and customers, in the know-how agreements, taxation and so on increased the suspicions and the final contract comprised hundreds of pages and it took more than a year to finish the legal negotiations. Anthony continued to have the full confidence of both parties, but it was harder and harder for him. The local partners couldn't understand why the American lawyers spent thousand of hours trying to find insurmountable problems on issues that seemed trivial to them, the exorbitant legal costs didn't improve the confidence of the parties.

In the final agreement, there were no more convertible debentures and the basic consideration decreased to $8M in cash, much less than what was stipulated in the letter of intent and of course less than in the initial phases of the negotiations. However, the parties were exhausted after more than a year of negotiations and the local shareholders were eager to receive at least part of the consideration in cash. The Americans committed to assuming all the liabilities of the company and the personal guarantees of the shareholders. This amount was corrected according to the profitability of 1999. The local plant remained under the ownership of the local shareholders and the Americans committed to rent it as mentioned above. The salaries, social benefits and bonuses were as mentioned above. However, the amount subject to employment in the company was reduced from $6M to $4M in three years. The conditions for receiving those amounts were employment in the company, working fully and exclusively for the company, devoting reasonable best efforts to enhancing the interests of the company (on these topics only the parties negotiated for a week...), the partners would not engage in activities that might bring substantial harm to the interests of the company, while the financial results were not part of those activities. The $4M payments would be paid in shares of the American company according to the share price prevalent on the date of the signature of the contract, thus if the shares increased twice or thrice in three years the partners would receive two or three times more if they sold their shares immediately. The partners would also receive consulting fees of $20K monthly for five years and in total $1.2M. The overall amount that was not linked to performance amounted to $5.2M (4+1.2) instead of $6M in the letter of intent; this amount was slightly less than in the LOI but most of it would be paid in shares that might double.

In addition, a special bonus would be paid conditional to increase in sales and gross profit every year for three years. The maximum amount to be paid would be $2M in three years, the conditions for obtaining it were easier than in the letter of intent, but the amount was much less - $2M in three years instead of $9M in five years. The royalties were as stipulated in the letter of intent but the Americans didn't exercise their option and the local partners didn't succeed in finding a company that was interested in the know-how. The maximum amount of conditional payments was therefore reduced by $13M (6 royalties and 7 bonuses). If we add the reduction in the basic payments to that, the consideration that the local shareholders received was much less than what they wanted, what they were promised in the first stages of the negotiations and what they signed for in the letter of intent. The Americans managed, after more than a year of attrition, to obtain the commitment of the local partners, who couldn't retreat, and maybe because they had come to the conclusion that the local company was not as profitable as they hoped, their liabilities were much higher and the risks larger, to acquire the company for $8M; as for all the other considerations, they managed to pay them from the increase in profitability and the saving of expenses.

The minority shareholders received a minimal amount, although they could have vetoed the transaction if they were not satisfied, as everything was done with full transparency. They actually received a valuation of \$11M (8 cash and 3 net for the plant); as they held one third of the shares, they received \$3.5M, most of it in cash; as for the plant, it was also in cash, in monthly leasing payments. This was much less than \$20M and of course less than \$40M that they had hoped to receive at the beginning of the negotiations, but it was at least in cash and they got the exit that they were so eager to receive. The two partners received \$15M ($11 \times 67\% + 4 + 1.2 + 2$) instead of the \$25M or more that they had hoped to receive. It represented a valuation of \$22M, half of their original requirements. However, we have to remember that the initial amount included the royalties that became irrelevant, shares, and conditional payments subject to meeting very aggressive objectives. Now, the amounts were much less, but with a much lower risk. There was also a substantial upside with 3% to 5% of the annual profit for every partner and a potential increase in the price of the shares in the first three years of an amount of up to \$4M. After such a long and exhausting Odyssey, they thought that they had achieved the best that they could get.

In retrospective of years, Anthony continued to keep a very warm friendship with Christian, the merger was a tremendous success, the merged company had high profits, in the harsh years of the recession they managed to survive while individually they could have collapsed, and the merger saved large amounts of expenses. The local partners received a substantial consideration and an excellent employment agreement, the Americans had, at last, substantial profits from their local operations, with almost no risk and exposure on their part. Douglas continued to be in touch with Anthony and congratulated him on favorable developments in his career. This case is therefore an excellent example of success for all parties involved, proving that ethics and trust, excellent business competence, alchemic and charismatic bridging can bring any difficult transaction to a win-win situation.

ANALYSIS AND TOPICS FOR CONSIDERATION ON: TRUST AND FAIRNESS CASE - BRIDGING IN MERGERS

Topics for consideration on the personal, business and ethical dilemmas of the main protagonists of the case: 1. Christian, President and Owner of International Furniture, 2. Douglas, President and Owner of American Furniture, 3. Anthony, Program Manager of the Merger, 4. Taylor, President of the local Subsidiary of American Furniture.

- * What are the ethical motives of the case and how did they affect the results?
- * The friendship relations between a client and a consultant, an advantage or a disadvantage?
- * To what extent is the merger the result of Anthony's initiative and would the merger occur even without his involvement?
- * Was there a party who won, lost, won partially, and does it matter, in view of the fact that all parties were satisfied with the results?
- * What would have happened to the local subsidiary of American Furniture if the merger had not taken place?
- * What would have happened to International Furniture if the merger would not take place?
- * Has the merger contributed favorably to the local economy, although part of the competition was eliminated together with its cut throat price wars?
- * Do you know of other cases where two parties divided the remuneration of a consultant who bridged between their positions?
- * How did the two partners of International Furniture agree to become salaried after they had been owners throughout their whole career?
- * Why are shareholders reluctant to purchase low tech shares, especially of small companies?
- * To what extent did the full transparency assist the Americans, the minority shareholders and the two local partners?
- * What are the benefits of the merger to the merged company in this case?
- * Why was the alternative of a 50%-50% merger between the local subsidiary of American Furniture and International Furniture ultimately not chosen by the parties?
- * Prepare a table of the changes in the valuation of International Furniture throughout the case.
- * To what extent did the final valuation match Anthony's original proposal?
- * What were the major ingredients of Anthony's "alchemy formula", which gave each party what they wanted?
- * Was the different valuation of the shares of the minority shareholders ethical for them?
- * Was the substantial reduction in valuation offered by the Americans at the end of the negotiations ethical towards the local shareholders?
- * How did the negotiators overcome the ego differences of the three executives of the merged company?

- * What do you think of the creative solutions of: offering of shares with a bank guarantee on their nominal value, leaving the facilities in the development under the ownership of the local shareholders and renting them with a long-term contract to the Americans, different valuation to minority and controlling shareholders, linkage of part of the remuneration to profitability objectives that do not cost anything to the Americans, as their alternative is currently a loss of their subsidiary, taking the new products out of the valuation of the company and giving royalties on their sales should the company succeed in marketing them, and so on?
- * How were Anthony's bridging-proposals of balanced between both parties and did he perform his job as a mediator fairly?
- * Why was Douglas so interested in the management skills of Christian and his partner and would he have acquired the company without them?
- * Why has the merged company failed to find customers for the new products and why didn't the local shareholders receive any royalties?
- * Was the chain of events of the negotiations intricate or normal, taking into considerations the large amounts and the length of the negotiations?
- * What were the reasons for the American lawyers in finding more and more hurdles during the negotiations? Was it a war of attrition, was it justified, to whom? Were the lawyers ethical towards Douglas who paid them more than a million dollars, or did Douglas save much more in valuation because of the lawyers' tactics?
- * Why were all parties concerned satisfied with the results of the negotiations?
- * What was the exposure of the Americans and did they take unnecessary risks? Were those risks higher than those they took when they opened their local subsidiary?
- * Were the Americans right in forcing all the executives to work together: their local CEO, who was not an expert in furniture but was a good executive, and the two local executives, who were considered as the best experts in designing and marketing of furniture?
- * What is the difference between acquiring the company and acquiring its activities, assets and liabilities?
- * What were the reasons for the length of negotiations - more than a year?
- * Do you think that the consideration which is linked to the performance of the company is justified and contributes to the success of the company?
- * How have the parties overcome the mutual suspicions in linking part of the remuneration to the performance of the merged company?
- * Was the trade-off between the amount and the mix of the consideration reasonable?
- * Why were the Americans so afraid of finding skeletons in the closets and why didn't they ultimately discover any skeletons?
- * Could the premature publication of the merger in the press jeopardize the success of the merger?
- * Is this case indeed a good example of a win-win transaction?

4. ARGENTINA - LABOR RIGHTS IN THE GLOBAL CONTEXT - THE DOCUMENTARY FILM "THE TAKE" - SUMMARY AND ANALYSIS

Based on the film:

The Take, 2004, 87 min., documentary directed by Avi Lewis, written by Naomi Klein.

Summary and Analysis:

The film "The Take", based on Naomi Klein's screenplay, describes the struggle of workers in Argentina against unemployment and bankruptcy of their factories, due to the collapse of the economy, IMF involvement and corruption. It shows that cooperative alternatives do work. Naomi Klein's parents were war-resistant, her father is an alternative doctor and her mother a militant feminist. Naomi crossed Canada at the age of 16, campaigning against nuclear power. She wrote her best seller "No Logo", attacking globalization, in her twenties. Klein's film about the economic catastrophe that hit Argentina relates the weary campaign of unemployed steel workers to join a couple of hundred other factory "occupations" and take control of their abandoned steel works. Klein and her spouse, Avi Lewis, were in Argentina for about six months, with a substantial crew and budget.

In suburban Buenos Aires, 30 unemployed auto-parts workers walk into their idle factory, roll out sleeping mats and refuse to leave. All they want is to re-start the silent machines. But this simple act - the take - has the power to turn the globalization debate on its head. Armed only with slingshots and an abiding faith in shop-floor democracy, the workers face off against the bosses, bankers and a whole system that sees their beloved factories as nothing more than scrap metals for sale. With "The Take", Avi Lewis, one of Canada's most outspoken journalists, and Naomi Klein champion a radical economic manifesto for the 21st century. Argentina is a rich country that was impoverished by its regimes. Carlos Menem, President of Argentina in the nineties, reshaped Argentina's economy according to the directives of IMF: turnaround, downsizing, privatization, selling the government assets into private hands. This was followed by massive unemployment. The model was approved by the IMF and its management, including Stanley Fisher. This miracle, the recovery of Argentina's economy, soon turned into a disaster. Half of the country slipped beneath the poverty level. Argentina became the capitalistic Far West, with a large part of the population unemployed, with a free flow of money, utilized by the multinational banks to transfer out of the country 40 billion dollars without any opposition. The government panicked and froze all the bank accounts. The middle class Argentineans all of a sudden became poor, deprived of their savings while the rich people found ways to transfer all their money abroad.

But this could not occur without reaction. Millions invaded the streets, broke shop-windows, rioted. The people shouted slogans like "Que se vayan todos", down with all who were connected with this catastrophe. 30 people were killed by the police. Within three weeks five presidents took office, and during the same month that Enron went bankrupt, December 2001, Argentina also went bankrupt, the largest bankruptcy of any country in history. The basic rules of capitalism - repayment of loans and open bank accounts - were broken by complete adherence to the capitalistic precepts. The public was fed up with the model, in the same wave of resistance that spread from Seattle to South Africa. This economic policy was global and the resistance also became global. The advocates of globalization blamed Naomi Klein, Avi Lewis, and the anti-globalization movement in general for only being "anti", without suggesting alternative ways. Lewis and Klein looked for alternatives and they heard of a new movement starting in Argentina, a new economic model with hundreds of factories taken over by their workers after they were shut down by their owners. The workers operated the factories independently, as cooperatives, without bosses. The national organization of the reorganized factories adhered to a slogan: seize, resist, manufacture. The film takes us to a factory - Forja San Martin, the steel factory of San Martin, whose workers received a permit from the bankruptcy court to find proof in the factory that the former owners had sold off factory assets without the court's permission. If they succeeded in finding the proof, they would have the right to take over the factory and manage it by themselves. They found that the owners had taken out the raw materials and the cables.

The workers decide to take over the factory, receive modest and equal salaries and manage the factory as a cooperative. They seize the company in order to prevent the owners from taking out other assets from "their" (the workers or the owners, to whom does the factory belong - to the owners who caused its bankruptcy and left it, or to the stakeholders, the workers who want to make a living out of the ruins) factory. The workers hope to convince the court to approve. The Zanon factory is their model; it is another factory where the workers have taken over. They manufacture ceramics; it has been operated successfully by its workers for two years now; it is the forefather of the resistance movement - the take. Zanon has 300 workers, the decisions are taken by the assembly of the workers, where every one has an equal vote; the salaries are equal for all. The former owners accumulated huge debts after receiving huge subsidies from the government and now, after the recovery, the former owner wants Zanon back. Zanon's owner is sure of his case, although he caused the collapse of the company and the workers made the turnaround. He says that the government owes it to him, but the workers guard the factory 24 hours a day and do not permit the restitution of the factory to its former owner. They fight the policemen with slingshots, they are backed by the public, as they are convinced that those who successfully operate the factory should own it and not the owner who caused its ruin.

The workers are employed, the ceramics are cheaper than before, so the customers also benefit from the take, and the future seems bright. The former owners received huge subsidies from the government but didn't invest them in the factory. As we know, Argentina is one of the most corrupt countries in the world, and that is one of the main reasons for the collapse of its economy. If a factory owner had committed such a crime in Singapore, one of the most ethical countries in the world, we let you imagine what would have happened to him? Ethics should be enforced with determination by all countries. Nevertheless, one should also think of the legal implications of such takeovers. What should prevail - ethics or the law? The owner says that it is legally his factory, it is worth $90M; therefore the workers have stolen his property from him. The workers answer that it is not stealing but confiscating, as the factory was idle anyhow. They donate ceramics to hospitals and schools. Thousands of sympathizers invade the factory every time the police want to interfere, defending their jobs by force. Today, the factory is still owned by the workers.

We remember the response of the French young people to the legitimate laws of a government who wanted to enable the employers to fire them without cause. They invaded the streets of Paris, rioted, clashed with the police; the students rallied to the struggle and they prevailed. Is it justified, legal, ethical, effective? More than 15,000 workers have taken over factories in Argentina. The number of takes doubles itself every year. It is not a new phenomenon. We could compare it to the worst dictatorial regimes of the Soviet Union or Cuba. But there the confiscation was done forcefully by a socialistic-regime, while in Argentina the takes come from the people and the factories are not managed by bureaucrats who are more corrupt than the darkest capitalistic regimes, but by the workers themselves. It proves, according to them, that no bosses are needed (what would business schools do if this model proves to be successful?). The takes happen in shipyards, in schools, in clinics, in ice-cream factories, in textile, all of them operated by cooperative management with their own unions, and today there are two hundred companies that have brought thousands back to employment. So is this phenomenon justified or should the government reconstitute the factories to their previous (legal?) owners?

However, the factories need business plans, marketing, "professional" management. They receive inspiration from a tractor factory, Zanelo, operated by its workers, which made a partnership with a group of former managers and with the distributors. Zanelo decided not to pay everyone the same salary, so the model of the take is not uniform and has many derivatives. Every factory decides what course of action to take; it is direct democracy. The Zanelo factory decides to send the raw material to the Forja San Martin, the Forja will manufacture the tractors parts and will sell them to Zanelo. The Forja workers hope that the judge, Dr. Fernandez, will understand their plea and approve the take. The cooperatives are a threat to many stakeholders: the owners, the receivers, the creditors who want their money back. These are factories that went bankrupt and the creditors are not paid by the workers who took over the factories, so what will happen to their debts? But what are their alternatives as the factories had virtually no assets and the equipment would be sold as scrap? In court, the judge, Fernandez, says that no one would want to buy a factory (the Forja) that was taken over by its workers. The receiver says that nothing is missing in the factory, but the workers say that a lot is missing. The judge tells the workers that they hinder the prospects of finding a buyer for the factory who would repay at least some of the debts. She requests that the workers leave the factory and give it back to the receiver.

Many citizens want Menem back, the leader who sold them the dream of recovery as he compared himself to Jesus. IMF proposes "the same old lady", a drastic cut of government expenses (it will not affect the rich of course, but only the poor and the former middle class, who have lost their money, their savings, their jobs and who receive some money from the government), a massive increase in the price of electricity and water (here again those who foot the bill are the majority of the people, but not the rich, who have most of the assets, if they are not already expatriated). One of the key employees of the IMF is arrested on corruption charges. The IMF is not very popular in Argentina, to say the least. A wife of one of the Forja's workers says that the politicians have stolen their self respect, as there is nothing sadder than to see a man unemployed, a humiliated man, but she hopes that the take succeeds. The Brokeman suits factory is reconstituted to its former owners. It is not just one of the factories; it is the first factory that was taken. In the Brokeman factory the owners decided to face the competition from poorer countries by cutting the salaries of their workers and threatening to close the factory. One day the owners just left the factory and disappeared. But the workers decided to continue operations, did it successfully and now they have been thrown out of the factory, which was given back to the owner who deserted it. The Brokeman workers were very popular; they were adopted by the widows of May Square, who had lost their husbands when the fascistic Junta took over the government and murdered tens of thousands of "leftist" Argentineans without proper trials. Massive demonstrations are held in favor of the Brokeman workers .

But the Forja workers are luckier. The La Plata parliament votes in a law to give the Forja to its workers. The workers cry out of joy; in the background we hear a song by Mercedes Sosa: "Quien dijo que todo esta perdido, Yo vengo ofrecer mi corazon, Hablo de cambiar esta nuestra casa" - who said that everything is lost, I come to offer my heart, I speak of changing our home. Masses of workers attack policemen who are guarding the closed Brokeman factory. A former worker who got cancer tells us that the owners deducted the hours in which she went to receive chemotherapy treatments from her salary. However, the workers who now operate the company assist her, as they have moral values. When Naomi Klein and Avi Lewis came to Argentina the first time they received a letter from a local citizen saying: "We are your mirror that you should look into. We are the mistake that you should not make. Argentina is the ruin of a country that was globalized. We stand in the place in the direction all of you are going." But what they saw in Argentina was a country trying to learn from its mistakes. Menem finally lost to Nestor Kirshner. The workers hope that he will help the cooperatives and not the multinationals. The cooperatives are the way the Argentineans have found to create a modern world, to sweep away the old wicked one. Six months later, Naomi and Avi returned to Argentina, where they saw a Forja San Martin operating successfully, Zanon has increased its production and hired new workers. In spite of his promises, Kirshner has signed a new agreement with the IMF, very similar to the former agreements. The parliament of Buenos Aires has restituted the Brokeman factory to ... the workers. The factory has opened once again and is now being operated by its workers.

5. UK AND SINGAPORE - ETHICS IN BANKING – BARINGS BANK - THE FILM "ROGUE TRADER" - SUMMARY AND ANALYSIS

Based on the book by Nick Leeson with Edward Whitley: Rogue Trader, How I brought down Barings Bank and Shook the Financial World, Little, Brown and Company, Boston, 1996

The film is based on the book with slight changes:

Rogue Trader 1999, 101 min., Director James Dearden, with Ewan McGregor, Anna Friel

Summary and Analysis:

The film shows the importance of the CEO's personal example for the ethical climate of the bank/company. Peter Baring, the Chairman of Barings Bank is the descendant of an illustrious family of bankers who has managed the English bank for over 200 years. He succumbs to the business environment and instructs the managers to make profits at all cost, disregarding the conservative image that the bank has maintained throughout the years. This example has permeated throughout the whole organization until it gets to Nick Leeson who caused to the bank a loss of over a billion pounds, because of an irresponsible conduct in trading in the futures and options market in Singapore. Leeson is cited as an example by his superiors as he earns fictitious profits of up to ten million pounds in a week. There is no effective control and management of Leeson's transactions which are extremely intricate. The immediate cause that the Bank of England found for the bank's collapse in 1995 was lack of control of the bank. But no measures were taken against the managers and controllers of the bank, probably due to the extensive connections of the family with English society.

Peter Baring boasted in 1993 that it is not so difficult to make large profits on the stock exchange. The failure of the bank was also caused by lack of transparency, predominance of profitability over ethics, and lack of ethical screening of employees which enabled a careless and uneducated person like Leeson to reach such a high level position in the bank. As "usual", the people responsible for the collapse of the bank were not punished (besides Leeson of course who was caught because of his clumsiness), and those who lost were the stakeholders, shareholders, customers, community and employees. In the Barings case, as in Enron, the executives were interested mainly in receiving huge bonuses, overlooking Leeson's scams which were apparent long before the collapse. The British press gave a very negative coverage of the scandal and complained the fact that Leeson was the only manager found guilty.

Some of the issues raised by the film and the book are: Could a rogue such as Nick Leeson be recruited in our company/bank/organization or promoted to a senior position? What are the most sensitive positions in our company and how could we avoid recruiting people such as Leeson? Should there be an ethical screening for positions in sales, purchasing, finance, control, human resources, quality control, top-level management? Why is ethics and the implementation of the Ethical Code the ultimate guarantee that such cases as Barings' collapse would not take place in our organization? Even if people like Leeson would infiltrate an organization and the control would fail in detecting unethical acts, such cases would not have occurred if there was no aggressive policy of granting huge bonuses to management regardless of ethical considerations. What are the positive aspects in the conduct of Leeson, Peter Baring and Barings Bank's management and control, if any? Following Barings' precedent should we become paranoid and suspect every one or should we still trust people and expect that most managers are ethical? Is the integrity of management the most important characteristic in a company? If not - what is the most important one?

Can a similar case occur in a French Bank – Societe Generale for example, with another young man named Jerome Kerviel in 2008? Milton Friedman commented on Enron as a rotten apple, when will they ever learn that what is rotten is not the apples but the system, putting emphasis only in maximizing profits and valuation, disregarding values, ethics, social responsibility? The only preventive cure for those cases is by educating all the echelons of management in business ethics, screening the candidates first of all on integrity and ethics basis, and by returning to basics, namely that the mission of companies and banks is not to maximize profits but to optimize profits while finding the right equilibrium between the rights of all the stakeholders.

6. SOUTH AMERICA - CORRUPTION CASE – ETHICS IN SALES

(All the characters and plot and all the names of the companies in this case are fictitious)

Claudio immigrated to his country from Argentina when he was one year old. He of course didn't remember a thing from his Latin American childhood, he didn't even dream in Spanish as his parents did, both of them were professors of Spanish Literature who immigrated for economic reasons. His mother tongue was indeed Spanish as the Argentineans in his new country didn't want to relinquish their heritage. Claudio made over the years frequent trips to Argentina to visit his many uncles and aunts who remained in Buenos Aires. When he compared his fate to the fate of his cousins he was very happy that his parents have decided to immigrate. He loathed the corrupted ambience in Argentina, the corrupted politicians, the regime that was often dictatorial, the shaky economy and the poverty that he encountered in the streets. He received his MBA from one of the best Californian universities. He enjoyed very much the couple of years that he spent there, the weather was fair, the mentality was American but most of his friends there were Hispanic. Nevertheless, when he received an offer that he couldn't refuse he decided to return immediately to his country. He was offered a job as sales manager to Latin America of one of the leading defense companies, Global Defense, that sold tens of millions dollars annually to this continent. He was not bothered by the fact that in many cases he sold similar military systems to belligerent countries which had often border skirmishes and he contributed to the arms race in those countries, which were the poorest in the world. He enjoyed every moment during his frequent trips to Latin America, he was single and the long negotiations didn't tire him. He did not encounter corruption cases as he worked with local agents and what they did with the 10% commission he gave them from the sales to the armies was none of his business. His conscience was crystal clear.

After several years in which he succeeded very much in his job Claudio received the most important assignment of his career. He was about to submit a proposal of $80M to the Air Force of one of the leading armies in the region. It was the largest proposal his company ever made and, if he succeeded in receiving the contract, there was a good chance that he would replace his boss as VP Sales and his boss, John, will become CEO of the company. "Not bad", he thought, "to become a VP of one of the leading companies in my country being younger than 30. My mother would finally forgive me for not becoming a lawyer or a physician as most of the children of her friends." At about this period he started to date a young lawyer of his age who wanted to get married very soon and have children. He worked night and day to prepare the proposal to his agent Jesus, who was the brother-in-law of the Chief of Staff of this country's army. Claudio's client was Jose, a Colonel in the local Air Force, with whom he made excellent personal contacts. They visited often local bars, got drunk, met with local women, although Jose was married and had children, and played tennis every morning when Claudio was in the capital. Now and then Jose hinted to him that the receipt of "goodies" would improve the chances of receiving the large contracts but Claudio insisted on giving only a 10% commission to Jesus and only after the award of the contract. John backed this attitude and told him that when you start to give bribes you never know when to stop. But Jesus insisted on receiving at least a few hundred thousand dollars in the proposal phase in order to improve the chances of receiving the contract.

This time the situation was different. If Global Defense would receive the contract, the company's profitability would increase by twenty million dollars, a substantial percentage of its annual profit. There was no doubt that after receipt of the contract Claudio and John would receive very large bonuses, and this would help Claudio to start his married life. He made the trip to his client with mixed feelings. He knew that Jesus insisted on receiving a "prepayment" of at least $1M in order to pay it to the Chief-of-Staff - his brother in law, the Air Force Commander and Jose. But he knew that in the past there were many cases that such prepayments were paid by his competitors and they didn't get the contract after all. He was in a big ethical dilemma, although the problem was only of the timing of the payment of the bribe, prior to the receipt of the contract or as a part of the 10% commission - or $8M - that Jesus would receive after the signature of the contract. There was a long delay in the flight and Claudio figured that he would arrive at one o'clock in the morning of Saturday when the deadline for submitting the proposal was on Friday midnight. He could therefore miss the deadline for technical reasons and lose everything, even his job. Claudio phoned in panic from the stopover where he was delayed and begged Jesus to do his utmost for obtaining him a few hours delay. Jesus told him "not to worry" in his nonchalant way but Claudio told him harshly "you are about to receive $8M from this contract for a few hours work so do anything needed in order to get the contract..."

When Claudio arrived to the Airport gates, Jesus waited for him with a large smile. "Why are you so happy?" asked him the nervous Claudio "Have you got a postponement?" "Better than that", answered Jesus, but he didn't want to explain. Claudio tried to get from him an explanation but Jesus remained silent. "Paciencia", he told him at last, "you will know soon". Claudio noticed that they drove in a new direction which was not the hotel or Jesus' home. "Where are we going?" he asked, but before Jesus could answer the car stopped in front of a large hacienda in one of the most luxurious suburbs of the capital. "Take with you the proposal and some blank pages with your company's letterhead" said Jesus. The door of the hacienda opened and Jose received Claudio to his home with a strong "abrazo". "Mi casa es tu casa", he said. It was the first time that Claudio visited Jose's home, as Jose preferred to prevent Claudio from meeting his wife (and the "suegra") for obvious reasons. When the worried Claudio asked him where his wife was, Jose answered him with a wink: "I sent her to the country with her mother, as we are going to have a very special machos' entertainment". "Ay", thought Claudio, "This sex maniac must have invited call girls instead of taking care of the proposal. He forgot that I am almost married!"

But Jose took him to his study where he found five open envelopes with all the proposals of Claudio's competitors. The envelope of Global Defense contained a hundred blank pages. "This is your envelope that Jesus has submitted to us duly sealed right on time. As I have received the proposals to review them during the week-end, and in view of our warm friendship, and if you promise to lose five consecutive times in our tennis matches, you are invited to hand me your proposal now. We read all the proposals and found that the cheapest one is the American with $91M, so that we ask you kindly to submit your proposal at a price of $90M instead of the $80M that Jesus told me that you intended to submit. It will still be the lowest bidder, but Jesus and his friends are going to receive a commission of $18M instead of the original $8M, let us say because of our warm hospitality. Your company will receive $72M net and will not lose a thing, you will meet the deadline although you were late, my country will give the contract to the lowest bidder and will not lose a thing. It is a win-win situation, but you have to give us an immediate answer and you cannot consult anybody as we are afraid of bugs. What do you decide? Say yes and the contract is yours!" Claudio knew that he stood at the most important ethical crossroad of his career, he couldn't delude himself anymore, this was the "real" thing, he was asked to pay bribe, to commit an unlawful act. If he would decline the friendly offer he might lose the contract and even his job, after all he was late and they did him a favor to receive his proposal. He might even get fired because of his negligence of not coming a day earlier. If he agreed, John might disapprove as he told him several times not to give any bribes. But was it a bribe? After all, he only increased the commission from ten to 20%, his company would receive anyhow the $72M it has forecasted, the profitability will be enormous, he will be promoted to VP, receive huge bonuses, John might agree after all and nobody would ever know. Should he accept or decline the offer?

ANALYSIS AND TOPICS FOR CONSIDERATION ON: CORRUPTION CASE - ETHICS IN SALES

Topics for consideration on the personal, business and ethical dilemmas of the main protagonists of the case: 1. Claudio, Sales Manager Latin America in Global Defense, 2. John, VP Sales in Global Defense, 3. Jesus, Global Defense's local agent, 4. Jose, Colonel in the local Air Force.

- * Describe the ethical attitude of Claudio.
- * Is it possible to conduct business in a corrupted country and remain ethical?
- * Is the argument that "paying a 10% commission to the local agent in a corrupted country after the receipt of the contract" valid from an ethical point of view or is it only self delusion?
- * To what extent does the background of Claudio affect his decision: his Latin American origin, his revulsion from the corrupted practices in Argentina, the ethical education that he received at home, the ethical deterioration in his country's business environment, the ethical standards of Global Defense, the ethical standards or double standards in the defense industries in the world?
- * Do Jesus and Jose see the imbroglio that has developed as a problem or an opportunity?
- * How will John react when Claudio will tell him about the events: if he agrees to the friendly persuasion or declines it?
- * Acceptance of Jose's offer would break Claudio's country law, the local law, the American law?
- * Does Claudio incur a risk of being arrested by the local authorities?
- * Jesus tempts Claudio (he knows well enough the ethical inhibitions of his "client") by telling him that Global Defense would receive exactly what it had forecasted with a large profit, there is no a priori bribe, there is no direct bribe, the country of Jesus doesn't suffer as it gives the contract to the lowest bidder, is it really a win-win situation?
- * Claudio's conscience might be corrupted as he is involved now for the first time in his life in giving directly a bribe. He knows that Jose shouldn't show him his competitors' proposals, that he shouldn't let him participate in the bid as he was late, that his friends will benefit from the additional ten million dollars and not their country, that the lowest bidder - the American company - will not get the bid although technically they should win.
- * What do you think of the scenario that Claudio would tell his hosts: "It is all fine, but I haven't been in Jose's home. I came to give a proposal of $80M and this is what I shall do, take it or leave it!" Would his hosts agree reluctantly to his attitude, would it affect their future relationships, should he inform John later on of all that happened if they agree or if they refuse?
- * What do you think of the scenario that Claudio would tell his hosts: "You are asking me to risk going to jail in your country and the prisons are quite filthy here. I risk ten years of my life and don't get a thing while you will be $10M richer. I agree on one condition that you give me a kickback of $2M, you'll still get $16M instead of $8M, doubling your commission, and I'll get $2M for the risk that I take. This is really a win-win situation to all!"
- * How do you think would be the reaction of Claudio's fiancée when she hears of what happened if he will agree to Jose's offer? She works in the state's prosecutor office. Should he tell her, assuming that they have no secrets from each other?

- * What are the risks that Jose incurs in this tricky case?
- * Whose initiative was it to make the offer to Claudio? Who is going to receive most of the "increased commission"?
- * What will happen to Claudio in his future career if he agrees to the offer?
- * The US have enacted an Anti Corruption Act in 1977 prohibiting paying bribes in foreign countries. Most of the Western countries have issued similar laws. Claudio's country has not. Can Claudio be charged according to the US Act, can Jesus and Jose be charged, assuming that the American company that offered $91M and lost the bid although technically it was the winner would discover all the scheme? Is there any chance that they would discover it?
- * In Rome do as the Romans do. Is it valid in a Latin American country that is used to bribes? Is it valid in an anthropophagic tribe if you visit there? What about your own values?
- * Is business ethics universal as the Declaration of Human Rights?
- * Is paying bribes an ethical wrongdoing? Why? How does it distort competition, the local country's budget, the local social justice, the income gaps between the richest and the poorest?
- * Was Claudio right in befriending with Jose? Would the situation be different if they were not old buddies?
- * Claudio is not yet 30. Can he afford to commit unethical acts at his young age, but promise to himself that in the future he will always be ethical? Are elder men/women more ethical?
- * How would the situation change if the Sales Manager Latin America was woman aged 40 with a lot of experience in Sales and was not from a Latin American family?
- * Did John hoped in the deep of his heart that Claudio, being a "Latin American", would find a way to deal with his compatriots without telling him how he does it?
- * Would John agree to give a written or tacit approval to Claudio to accept Jose's offer?
- * What are the lessons that you can draw from this case? How would you act if you were Claudio? John? Can you be more Catholic than the Pope? Do you have first of all an allegiance to your company, yourself, your country, who cares about the other stakeholders?

CONCLUSION

Claudio agreed to increase his proposal to $90M and accepted Jose's offer. He wrote a letter to Jesus stating that if they will receive the contract he will get a commission of $18M, to be sent to whatever location Jesus will indicate.

Global Defense received the contract. The profitability of the company increased subsequently to unprecedented levels, the shares' prices increased by 30% and the executives, including Claudio and John who had options, received huge amounts. The "deal" remained the secret of four people: Claudio, Jesus, Jose, and later on John.

John backed Claudio retroactively but didn't give him a written approval. He even congratulated him on his resourcefulness. John was promoted CEO of Global Defense and Claudio became its VP Sales.

Claudio married his sweetheart but he didn't tell her what happened.

Global Defense continued to conduct business with local agents mainly with Latin America and South East Asia. But the amounts and percentages of "commissions" skyrocketed and amounted sometimes even to 40% of the contracts.

After five years, the internal auditor of Global Defense discovered a kickback deal in which Claudio received from his South Asian agent half of the commission of $30M that the agent received from a $90M contract. The auditor learned it from the Chinese ex-wife of the South East agent who didn't receive from her ex-husband the alimony that she hoped to get and decided to blow the whistle and tell everything she knew, thus incriminating her ex-husband and all his associates.

Claudio was fired on the spot by John, although he denied the allegations of the agent's ex-wife. "I am innocent!" he said, "This is a second Dreifuss case!" Claudio's wife divorced him after speaking with the ex-wife who told her that Claudio received also "other kinds" of bribes...

The agent's ex-wife was found drowned in suspicious circumstances in the pool of her beautiful house. The police discovered that the South East agent was connected also to the local mafia that probably received part of the commission. Claudio and the agent were exonerated after the police couldn't find any evidence on the kickback, the only witness being dead.

Claudio felt outraged from the alleged suspicions to his impeccable integrity and immigrated to a Polynesian Island State. He married there the daughter of the local Prime Minister. Claudio was appointed recently as his country's consul in this tiny state, and it has become the most fervent supporter of his country in the United Nations. Claudio even invested $2M in the local tourism and boosted by far the local economy.

7. US - SOCIAL RESPONSIBILITY, BUSINESS AND COMMUNITY - THE FILM "IT'S A WONDERFUL LIFE" - SUMMARY AND ANALYSIS

Based on the film:

It's a Wonderful Life, 1946, 130 min., Director Frank Capra, with James Stewart, Donna Reed

Summary and Analysis:

George Bailey spends his entire life giving up his big dreams for the good of his town. His family's business a mortgage bank is what stands between the citizens and Mr. Potter, the evil richest man in town, who takes sick pleasure in taking from everybody, without even caring how it affects them. Bailey's guardian angel comes to earth in a moment of despair when George contemplates suicide and shows him how his town, family and friends would turn out if he had never been born. Bailey decides to return to his family and discovers that the entire town has united in rescuing him. This marvelous fairy tale about social responsibility is modern even today.

George Bailey rescues his brother from drowning, his father's bank from collapsing, decides to stay in town in order to help poor people to obtain cheap loans, marry Mary and raise four children. Bailey is falsely accused of embezzlement but decides to continue his struggle against evil embodied by the unscrupulous Potter. At the unforgettable ending scene on Christmas' eve all those who were rescued by George come to his assistance. Can it happen in today's business world, does gratitude exist today?

Some of the issues raised by the film are: Why does Bailey continue his struggle in favor of the stakeholders in spite of all the hurdles? We can try to figure, following George's example, what would have happened if we were never born. What would happen to our family, friends, company, subordinates, country, community, colleagues, competitors, enemies? What are the risks of assisting stakeholders relentlessly? Why does Potter do his utmost to ruin Bailey, tempt him to leave his bank, discredit him? What are the motives of Potter? What are the motives of Bailey? What are the alternatives facing an ethical businessman when he reaches an impasse: continue his struggle against all odds, commit suicide, quitting the business world and start teaching at school or at a university like Dr Wigand in The Insider, relying on friends, fight against the system if not against the corrupted businessmen, leave the country?

After George's father death Potter tells the Board of Directors of the mortgage bank that the way he managed the bank was not businesslike, was utopian and unpractical. Is it true? Bailey defends the cause of the so called "rabble" the hard working people who benefit from the cheap loans of the mortgage bank in order to purchase a modest house instead of renting the slums of Potter. George's first dilemma is to forego his studies at the university in order to takeover the bank and continue his father's mission. He foregoes his own good for the good of the community. After his marriage, he plans to go on a honeymoon but invests all the money he has in order to rescue the bank from its customers' panic that were willing to sell their shares at half their price to Potter if Bailey would not have invested all his money.

Georges' social responsibility is also in erecting Bailey's Park with new small houses for the hard working people who at last have their own houses. Potter tells Bailey that he is an old man whom nobody loves and who loves nobody, he is lonesome, although he owns most of the town. He offers him a huge salary to come and work for him, thus closing the mortgage bank. George is tempted but refuses. Ultimately, what is the purpose of a company: maximize profits, valuation, benefits to the controlling shareholders, answering the needs of the customers, suppliers, community, country, employees, minority shareholders? What are the lessons drawn from the film? Has it changed our attitude towards ethics? Is the social responsibility the main mission of a company as every company should have a social meaning?

8. ISRAEL - THE WORTHWHILENESS OF TRUST CASE – THE ETHICS OF VALUATION

(Due to confidentiality and editing reasons some of the names and details have been changed. The amounts are given for indication purpose only)

Amos tried often to understand what was the reason that some negotiations were concluded promptly while others dragged on and on for months or over a year, costing millions of dollars. If it only were possible to increase the level of trust between parties so that negotiations would last minutes or hours and be concluded in a handshake... It would save millions in transactions costs in the average M&A negotiations on due diligence, contractual negotiations, financial negotiations. Think of how many people are involved in an M&A process: the management of both parties, employees of both parties, lawyers receiving hundreds of dollars per hour, they come sometimes by two, three or even six together on each side, they submit invoices on thousands of hours amounting sometimes to millions of dollars for transactions of only millions or even tens of millions dollars, expenses of auditors and due diligence, consultants of every kind, analysts, investment bankers, not including sometimes illegal tapping, detectives and business intelligence.

The costs of mistrust are the Achilles' Hills of modern business and amount to tens of billion dollars annually. We could solve all the hunger problems of the world if businessmen would only trust each other. We could behave like in the diamond industry where deals in millions are concluded by a handshake and saying the Hebrew words: "Mazal Oubraha", luck and blessing. But, today, even in the diamond industry there are a lot of breaches in these norms. Nevertheless, the application of ethics and integrity by both sides could save most of the costs if you would reduce the due diligence and the length of negotiations. The problems are more acute in modern business with multinationals as you need a vast knowledge of many issues, especially if the companies are unethical and hide skeletons in their closets. If an Institute of Ethics would rate the companies by their ethics like the ratings of solvency, the costs of mistrust could be reduced as in M&A negotiations between ethical companies only minimal costs would be invested in due diligence and contractual negotiations. Bear in mind, that in any case there should be financial negotiations as it is not expected even from the most ethical companies to agree on the prices and terms right away. Or is it so? as this case will describe.

In 1993, Amos received an urgent phone call from his friend Oded, CEO of Telephonia Israel. Oded worked with Amos in the past on several projects and they trusted and appreciated each other. Oded was appointed CEO of the company a few months ago by Zalman, the owner of the company, an orthodox Jewish tycoon who received a franchise on callback calls from Israel to other countries. Oded hired a professional company to prepare a business plan on the feasibility of the project in order to present it to a multibillion American mega corporation, a leader in this field, that showed interest in the project. The CEO of the mega corporation was Steve who urged Zalman to come to Los Angeles in order to conclude the deal.

Zalman, an orthodox Jew in his thirties, learned in a Yeshiva most of his life but his family, American billionaires, wanted him to go into business. He was married to an educated and beautiful wife and had already five small children. His family contributed a very large amount to a well-known American Business School and consulted them on how they could teach Zalman business administration. The Dean built for Zalman a special program with his best lecturers and after a short while Zalman graduated and was ready to enter into business. But he preferred to learn Torah, Talmud and the holy books, Zalman met several times a week the most holy Israeli orthodox rabbi (who also blessed his business), donated large amounts to the community, widows and orphans, and was perceived as the most cherished (and rich) man in the orthodox community in Israel. As a matter of fact, if you are a billionaire it is probably enough to understand the business issues, as you can always hire professional businessmen who would conduct all the necessary business transactions and manage your companies. Or is it not? Anyhow, Zalman hired Oded, gave him a large office in his house in an orthodox neighborhood, and from this office Oded managed the orthodox startup of Telephonia Israel.

But the business plan was not prepared on time and did not meet the standards expected by Steve's company - Telecommunications Inc. The negotiations were due to start within a week and the business plan was not ready. Even worse, the preliminary version didn't prove the expected valuation of the owners for the expected merger with the Americans, it didn't look professional enough and did not suit a company like Telephonia Israel that was positioned as an Israeli leader in its field. In this critical timing Oded phoned Amos and asked him to rescue them urgently in return to a substantial amount. "Leave everything else that you are doing and come for a week to the orthodox town. You'll have to work around the clock, eat Kosher food ("You don't mind, do you?"), and finish the business plan before we leave for LA." Amos left home and came to Zalman, who was considerate enough not to ask him to wear a yarmulke in his house. Amos was agnostic but he respected all cultures and religions, including his own.

Since Amos started to be a program manager for M&A he worked with all kinds of clients, from all backgrounds, socio-economic conditions, religions and countries. He worked with tycoons, basketball players, rural Arabs, people with elementary school education and university professors, former taxi drivers, former Generals, Kibbutzniks, labor union leaders, government organizations, public and private companies, companies selling less than a million dollars or over a billion dollars annually, high tech wizards, young people in their twenties, aged people in their seventies, Israelis, Americans, Chinese, Frenchmen, Italians, Germans, Englishmen, Latin Americans, Spanish, Swiss, men and women, and so on. But Zalman was really an exception, very shy in spite of being a billionaire, a Yeshiva man but also an elite tycoon, a devoted family man who runs his army of aides, cooks, servants, nannies, bodyguards, chauffeurs, teachers and gardeners. Amos befriended the small kids who were baffled who was this strange guy who was the only one at home not wearing a yarmulke.

Oded told Zalman that Amos was the only one in Israel who could accomplish the job on time, he trusted him fully, he was very competent (and expensive), but his work was first rate. He saw how Amos convinced mega corporations, with sophisticated fully documented business plans in English, on high valuations of small Israeli companies. Zalman fully backed Oded's decision and returned to his beloved studies of the Talmud. When Amos arrived to Oded's office in Zalman's house he was bewildered by all the material gathered for the business plan. He read everything thoroughly, had to understand the technical background of the business plan, employed the company's managers in order to analyze all the calculations, and started to contribute his creative ideas. He deliberated with Oded and Zalman what should be the valuation of the company. Amos saw often in his long career valuations of companies that amounted to $17.88M and were backed by piles of documentations. He believed that valuation should not be based exclusively on mathematical formulas, but on many other considerations, such as the value for the acquirer of the company, know-how, market positioning, competence of the executives, and so on. Those methods of valuation were not less legitimate than the mathematical ones with their "accurate" forecasts and present values.

In the case of Telephonia it was only a franchise that its value could be set according to the business it will bring. There were several market researches with different estimates, which could validate a valuation of $5M as well as $20M. After many deliberations he asked his colleagues: "Forget about all the material. Tell me truly what do you think would be fair for you and for the Americans. Would you invest in the company with such a valuation if you were the Americans? My experience shows me to try always to understand the other party. It doesn't mean that I should agree with them but it indicates me what to do. Sometimes the valuation that I can get is much higher than what I thought but if this is how the acquirer values me this is the true valuation. On the other hand if I am convinced that I should get a very high valuation but I know that the other party wouldn't want to pay it, what does it matter if I put this exorbitant valuation that he wouldn't pay anyhow? Don't forget that you are bringing a strategic partner in the company that you would have to live with him for many years. If he'll think that you conned him he'll get even with you in the long run. So be fair to him while not forgetting your own interests and you'll find the right valuation." Finally, they decided on a pre-money valuation of $8M. With this number Amos validated the valuation rather easily, as he also thought that it was a fair price. He prepared the outlines of a detailed business plan with full substantiation, but he had a problem - it was already Friday afternoon and the flight to LA was scheduled on Monday morning.

Zalman asked Amos if he would be ready for the meeting on Tuesday morning LA time. Amos answered him that he would be ready only if he worked on Saturday. The meeting could not be postponed as many American managers were invited with a very tight schedule, as it is always the case with such mega corporations. But Zalman didn't even want to consider that Amos would work on the Sabbath. He was ready to lose the project and not sign the deal but not to ask one of his subcontractors to infringe the religious precepts. "Why do you care?", said Amos, "I am anyhow agnostic, I always work on the Sabbath, seven days a week, I even work in Yom Kippur and of course I don't fast." But Zalman made Amos swear that he will not work on the business plan at home nor phone to one of Zalman's employees or even think about the project. "You'll go home a couple of hours before the Sabbath as you are not also allowed to drive on the holy day and you'll come back a couple of hours after the Sabbath. If it is necessary you'll work all night and on Sunday. You are flying with us on first class on Monday morning and you'll be able to sleep on the plane. I am paying you and I am responsible that you'll not commit a religious offence on my behalf. Trust me, if you'll do it, God will be with us and we'll win the contract. But if you'll not be ready, it means that God was not willing to let us win."

Amos thought that it was very convenient to be religious, as it is a win-win situation even if you loose, but didn't want to cross his employer. He kept his word and didn't work on the business plan. He even had a guilty conscience as he remembered that the deal on which he worked on Yom Kippur didn't come through, maybe because of him. After returning to Zalman's "castle" he worked around the clock and managed to finish the business plan a couple of hours before the flight. During the long flight he prepared very thoroughly the presentation, the justification of the price, the details of the negotiations.

The meeting took place in the Board room of the multibillion American mega corporation. Steve came with six VPs, lawyers and consultants. Zalman came with Oded, Amos, a lawyer and the technical manager. After a few words of welcome by Steve, Zalman stood up, explained the project in a few sentences and asked Amos to present the business plan in details. Steve stopped Zalman and told him: "I understand that you ask for $4M in return of one third of the company, or a pre-money valuation of $8M. We intend to invest this amount in equipment and training. Tell me with your word of honor - do you believe in the business plan, in the project, in the investment? Do you think that it is fair to us as well as to you and can we trust each other as partners? In short, do you recommend me to invest according to this valuation?" Everybody in the room was silent, the lawyers of both parties looked at each other with uneasiness. Oded and Amos looked at Zalman with wondering eyes and were not sure what will be his answer.

But Zalman answered with full confidence that he believed in the program, the valuation and the investment. He was convinced that it was fair to all parties concerned. Steve continued: "I know your family for many years and have learned that all your deals are done with integrity and ethics and your reputation was never stained by a foul deal. I accept your word of honor as the best guarantee and I renounce to any due diligence and contractual negotiations. I just ask the lawyers of both parties to prepare a one-page memorandum of understanding highlighting what we have agreed. Gentlemen, thank you for coming to LA, the meeting is over!" Amos was stunned, throughout all his long career he has never encountered such an event. He has witnessed once a case where the parties decided to break apart after a few hours of negotiations, but such a "miracle" has never happened to him - to conclude an agreement in a few minutes based on trust. Zalman would say that it was due to a divine interference, Amos preferred to believe that it was due to trust, ethics and a good reputation. On the same day, the MOU was signed and the Americans instructed their division to send the equipment as agreed by the parties.

Amos made all the way to LA and back for a few minutes. He barely had time to enjoy the treat of the luxurious Beverly Hills hotel. The victory dinner was held in the Kosher restaurant of the mother of Steven Spielberg. When they were in the last course, Zalman winked to Amos and told him: "All this happened because you didn't work on the Sabbath. This is the reward of a Mitzve." After returning home Amos didn't continue working with Zalman, he continued to manage other M&A projects, not so short as this one (otherwise he wouldn't have a livelihood). But he was not cross at Zalman, he paid him fairly and Amos was glad that all went well with his client. Oded informed Amos every now and then on the new developments of the project and learned that everything was working on schedule. Suddenly, Amos heard of the tragic death of Zalman. His wife tried to continue the business, but unfortunately she didn't have even the elementary background in business that Zalman had and, in spite of her efforts, the company collapsed. The Americans lost apparently their money and Oded and the employees were fired.

Amos didn't become religious and started to believe in miracles after these events. But it reinforced his conviction that the most important factors in business should be ethics, trust and integrity (and of course luck, as Zalman lost his life and the Americans their money for not being lucky). Maybe the diamond dealers who wish each other with their hand shake "Luck and Blessing" are the wisest of all - why luck it is obvious, but the blessing is probably the ethics, trust and integrity that bless every ethical transaction and make it prosperous. Amos was convinced that if there is trust between the parties the merger succeeds, Amos started to conduct researches, write academic books and doctorate dissertations on the connections between ethics and success in business. No, definitely business ethics is not an oxymoron, and Amos teaches it in many courses to different audiences, in what can be named in context of the religious events of this case - the Gospel of Amos...

ANALYSIS & TOPICS FOR CONSIDERATION ON: THE WORTHWHILENESS OF TRUST CASE - THE ETHICS OF VALUATION

Topics for consideration on the personal, business and ethical dilemmas of the main protagonists of the case: 1. Zalman, Owner of Telephonia Israel, 2. Oded, CEO of Telephonia Israel, 3. Steve, CEO of Telecommunications Inc., 4. Amos, Program Manager of the Deal.

- * What are the most important characteristics for the success of M&A?
- * What are the interests of the different parties involved in M&A, are they contradictory, are they bridgeable?
- * Give examples of negotiations that ended promptly because of the trust between the parties.
- * Give examples of lengthy negotiations that took months and years because of the lack of trust between the parties.
- * How is it possible to bridge over the lack of trust between the parties?
- * Which due diligence is essential even in case of full trust between the parties?
- * Is there a connection between the professional capabilities of the lawyers and the complexity of the contracts that they prepare?
- * Give examples in which lawyers were instrumental in the successful completion of deals.
- * Give examples in which lawyers raised pointless arguments and entangled negotiations unnecessarily.
- * What is in your opinion the professional ethics of lawyers in M&A?
- * Does the adding of an M&A program manager facilitate or not the closing of the deal? How do the other professionals involved in the negotiations - lawyers, executives and auditors - accept it?
- * Why are there more and more lawyers who graduate also in accounting, economics and business?
- * What is in your opinion the professional ethics of auditors in M&A?
- * Should there be in your opinion full transparency in M&A negotiations? After the Merger?
- * Was there full transparency in the negotiations on the Telephonia merger?
- * Describe the ethical characteristics of the case.
- * Is there a connection between the ethics of Zalman and the fact that he is an orthodox Jew?
- * Give examples on the connection between ethics and religion in the business world: Christians - Catholics, Protestants, Fundamentalists, Orthodox, Quakers; Jews - Orthodox, Secular; Moslems, Buddhists, Atheists, Freemasons, Witnesses of Jehovah, Pagans (Aristotle...), and so on.
- * Why was the deal signed within minutes according to the conditions asked by the Israelis? Because of Zalman's ethics, his family record and reputation, his orthodoxy, the blessing of the Rabbi before the trip, the good deeds and contributions of Zalman, the business plan of Amos, the deal was very small for the mega corporation, Amos didn't work on the Sabbath?

- * How much could be saved in the business world if there were trust between the parties?
- * To what extent can Ethical Funds assist in the establishment of trust in business?
- * Is it possible to conclude deals like in the diamond business with a hand shake and saying the Hebrew words: "Mazal Oubraha", luck and blessing?
- * Is a process of long negotiations and thorough due diligence a prerequisite for a successful M&A?
- * Is a process of short negotiations and minimal due diligence too risky and does it jeopardize the M&A?
- * Can you be a good businessman as well as an intellectual or a scholar in the Bible? Is there a contradiction between the characteristics or is it a precondition for the success of the deal?
- * Does a second-generation tycoon need to be an MBA in order to succeed in business or can he hire professional businessmen?
- * Was the method of the project's pricing ethical?
- * What is the ethical way of setting a price for a company, or is it just a negotiations issue that has to be resolved by give and take?
- * What is the value of a franchise, how can it be validated?
- * Is the multiculturalism of the program manager an important condition for the success of the negotiations? How was Amos able to conduct M&A negotiations in completely different ambiances, mentality, business practices and countries: Israel, Europe, China, Latin America, US, orthodox Jews and Christians, Arabs, socialists and capitalists, men and women?
- * What are Steve's considerations in deciding not to conduct a due diligence and contractual negotiations?
- * To what extent were instrumental the trust and friendship between Amos and Oded to the success of the deal?
- * Why Telephonia didn't continue its business relations with Amos after signing the deal?
- * Was Zalman a frustrated Yeshiva scholar or a sophisticated businessman or both?
- * Was Oded a good manager or did he pilot the decisions to Zalman and the work to Amos?
- * Was Steve's decision to invest in the project justified although he lost all his investment due to force majeure?
- * What are the lesson that you draw from this case? How would be your conduct if you were each one of the protagonists?

9. RUSSIA - CORRUPTION IN THE LOCAL GOVERNMENT - THE PLAY "REVIZOR" BY NIKOLAI GOGOL - SUMMARY AND ANALYSIS

Based on the play Revizor (1842) by Nikolai Gogol

The film is based on the play with substantial changes:

The Inspector General, 1949, 102 min., Director Henry Koster, with Danny Kaye

Summary and Analysis:

Gogol introduces us into the ethical dilemma of the play from the first line when the mayor tells his colleagues: "I have invited you in order to announce you very unpleasant news, a Revizor is coming to inspect us". Following the astonishment of his colleagues he tells them that it is a revizor from Petersburg who is about to visit the town incognito with secret instructions. The revizor is about to disturb their peace of mind, preventing them from receiving bribes and not fulfilling their duties, while none of the citizens is complaining. They do their schemes in obscurity and all of a sudden the revizor will shed light on their stealing and they will become transparent.

When the alleged revizor (a bum who is mistakenly perceived as the incognito revizor) agrees to receive from them bribes they can at last obtain their peace of mind, as "he is one of us and we can come to terms with him, like with all the others". The merchants who dare to complain are rebuffed by the Mayor who tells them that he is a good friend with the Revizor, who intends to marry the Mayor's daughter (The Mayor doesn't know of course that his wife tried to seduce as well the Revizor but he possibly wouldn't mind if the Revizor would be willing to overlook the Mayor's crimes). In the climax of the euphoria comes the postmaster with a letter from the alleged revizor where he describes cynically to his friend all the drawbacks of the elites of the town. They finally understand that they, who normally con everybody else, have been conned by a smarter crook. And then the real revizor comes and the play ends showing their astonished faces.

Gogol describes the mayor as a man who gets old in his position, very clever, receiving bribes but perceived as a man of honor. Many politicians could fit into this profile. All the important men of the town are honorable men, but beneath their conduct they are corrupted as the worst thieves. They are willing to bribe the revizor or the inspector general in the English version, as it is a price worthwhile to be paid in order to perpetuate their schemes. The play was actual in Tsarist Russia as it is actual today all over the world, especially in unethical countries.

The Russian censors were afraid to authorize the play but the Tsar Nikolai I had to interfere personally in order to allow the play to be staged as he wanted to eradicate the corruption in his country. The Mayor and the corrupted civil servants claim that this is the way to do business and nothing can be changed in the human nature. These are the usual norms and what is ethics after all if not abiding to the common norms. But if corruption is universal so is ethics and one cannot say that it does not apply in his country.

Gogol's satire has no sympathetic characters, all are crooked, distorted, corrupted. The play displays greed, stupidity and corruption. Khlestakov, the alleged revizor, is reckless, irresponsible and light-minded. Revizor can be played as a realistic or surrealistic play. It is even perceived as the precursor of the absurd movement, of Ionesco and Rhinoceros. It deals with the hypocrisies of everyday life as with the essence of the corruption of the elites.

10. AFRICA AND SWITZERLAND - UNIVERSALITY OF ETHICS - THE PLAY "THE VISIT" BY FRIEDRICH DUERRENMATT AND THE AFRICAN FILM "HYENAS" - SUMMARY AND ANALYSIS

Based on the play:

The Visit (Der Besuch der alten Dame), 1964, by Friedrich Duerrenmatt.

The films are based on the play with some changes:

Hyenas, 1992, 113 min., Director Djibril Diop Mambety, African film

The Visit 1964, 100 min., Director Bernhard Wicki, with Ingrid Bergman

Summary and Analysis:

The town Guellen, where the play happens, is probably in Switzerland, the homeland of Duerrenmatt, but could be also in Africa, India, Israel, US, France or anywhere where money has a supreme importance overshadowing all other values. Goethe visited Guellen, Brahms has composed there a quartet, it has cultural institutions, a mayor, a teacher, a priest, all very civil, all of them honorable men with culture and values. But the town is in bankruptcy and its inhabitants need money at all cost. The play demonstrates what the trade-off between money and values is. Duerrenmatt believes that only a desperate town would agree to sacrifice a person for a billion dollars. Duerrenmatt is not aware of the ethics of some modern corrupted businessmen, otherwise he would know that the price is too high for such a minor "crime". In the beginning of the play the citizens do not know who has caused their bankruptcy. They blame the usual people: the Freemasons, the Jews, the business tycoons, the communists. In fact, it is Claire Zahanassian, the richest person in the world, who has caused it in order to take revenge of Ill and the citizens who have wronged her in her youth, when she was pregnant with Ill's child. Ill hired false witnesses to prove that it was not his child, as he wanted to marry a rich woman.

The mayor asks Claire to donate large amounts to the town in order to help them on those harsh days, they praise her and overlook the causes of her departure from the town. They even ask Ill to convince her to rescue the bankrupt town. Ultimately she agrees to donate one billion dollars to the town and its citizens in return to the execution of Ill. Claire, the widow of the richest man in the world, tries to corrupt all the officials - the mayor, the chief of police, the priest, the doctor - and make them collaborate to her scheme. Ill was very popular in town and was about to be nominated as mayor, but the citizens are dazzled by the huge amounts at stake (Duerrenmatt wants to prove that everyone has his price, is it true? if yes, what is yours?) and after protesting vehemently they agree to execute Ill. Not even one objects, including his wife and children. Ill tries to convince Clara that he married the rich Mathilda to save Clara from a wretched and poor life with him. This excuse that the wrongdoer commits a crime for the benefit of the victim is common to all criminals, such as Cesar in Jean de Florette, Gekko in Wall Street and The Mayor in An Enemy of the People. But this time the victim is too clever and rich.

Claire has not forgotten a thing, she is willing to invest any sum in order to get a revenge. Scoundrels tend to say that they have "a great soul" and look ahead but the victims cannot look ahead until they get their revenge. Why is it always the victims who have to pardon their aggressor? Not all the victims can afford to avenge the offences but Clara can do it. The mayor is shocked by her proposal, he refuses in the name of humanity, it is better to remain poor but pure, but Claire gives them credit to satisfy their needs and when she asks for repayment they have to sacrifice Ill and their conscience. We can give recent examples in the business world and in some regimes where people sacrifice their conscience and innocent people (not guilty ones like Ill) for much less than a billion. The friends of Ill buy on credit from his store as they know that he can't afford to turn them down, they promise to repay him, but he knows that they will do it only after his death. Ill asks the chief of police to arrest Claire but he refuses as he doesn't have "smoking gun evidence". This is what is requested also from minority shareholders and stakeholders who are wronged, but they can't afford to gather those evidences, especially as most of the ethical crimes are committed in the dark and are subject to the laws of Omerta. Ill goes to the Mayor and tells him that he is afraid. But the mayor answers him that as he is himself guilty towards Claire he has not the moral right to ask for protection. Is it true?

Ill is doomed but everyone treats him nicely, Claire, the mayor, the teacher and practically all the citizens. Ethical criminals tend to be nice to their victims, they wrong (or kill) them with a smile and with all the best intentions, as it is for their benefit, as nothing is personal. The priest even finds references from the bible that Ill is not entitled to mercy as he has offended Claire and it is only just that he should be punished. But how can you justify a murder in order to remedy an offence which happened long ago and who was subject to imprisonment, and if so, why didn't they apply their "justice" before Claire returned? The teacher states that it is impossible to compromise with one's conscience and offers Claire to buy the assets of the town, but she answers him that she has already done it secretly and she has caused the bankruptcy of the town. He asks her to forgive them and she answers that nobody forgave or pitied her when she was thrown away from the town forcing her to become a prostitute and to lose her child, although she was innocent and loved Ill, who abandoned her for a rich woman. Now that she is rich she is entitled to revenge. She says that noble sentiments apply only to normal people, the richest men have their own code of conduct and they are allowed to transgress all moral laws as money transcends them. An honest man is one who pays and Claire is willing to pay, prosperity in return to a corpse...

When the press comes to the town the law of Omerta applies and nobody tells the reporters of the deal offered by Claire. Only the teacher who is drunk wants to disclose the crime but Ill forbids him to do so as he is doomed anyway. Ill achieves greatness when admitting his crime and recognizing that he deserves the punishment, he only asks his friends to condemn him as he doesn't want to alleviate their conscience by committing suicide as requested by the mayor. The teacher says that crime will not stop at Ill's death, once you start to become a criminal you perpetuate your conduct towards everyone, as there is no "justified" crime. The town stage a trial, or rather a "mock trial" where the true offenses and punishment is concealed in order to save the reputation of Ill for the sake of his family, but rather to keep appearances of an ethical town with high moral standards. The image of criminals should be kept intact, just as the gloves of Mack the Knife are always white, and his knife is never seen. Duerrenmatt conveys a message that wealth corrupts people. Most of the time the victims even cooperate with their oppressors even if they are completely innocent. There is a tendency of the victims to belittle themselves in front of the rich who are allowed to commit any crime. Duerrenmatt paints everything in the play in yellow or gold. The leaves are yellow in the fall, the new shoes are yellow, Ill drives in the yellow air with the new car that his family has purchased on credit waiting for his death. They go to a movie and he goes to his death.

If we state the ethical and unethical conduct of the protagonists of the play: Clara, Ill, Ill's wife, the teacher, the priest, the mayor, the chief of police, can we decide who is more ethical? Ultimately, the teacher states in a typical double standard rationalization that Ill is condemned in the name of justice. Murder is called by the powerful justice, the wronged minority shareholders are called speculators, the absurdity of the play perpetuates very often in the business world where absurdity is the name of the game, the wronged oppress their aggressors, the lamb offends the wolf, and humanists are called enemies of the people. Money equals conscience, crime equals morals, truth is murdered, opaqueness is the name of the game, transparency is the act of tell-tales, and the journalists report that Ill died happily, maybe during the intermission of the movie when his wife and children were eating their popcorn and drinking their cokes.

While the African version of The Visit (Hyenas) keeps with a chilling realism the spirit of Dürrenmatt, the version of Bernhard Wicki has a happy ending and Ill is not executed after being sentenced to death. The Old Lady decides to leave him among his "friends" and in this way she thinks that her vengeance would be complete. He'll know that his so-called friends were willing to murder him for money and he'll not forgive them, while the citizens will have every day in front of them the proof of their treason. Wicki is wrong and the African Mambety and of course the original author are right. Ill is corrupted, he is a criminal and deserves to be punished. He already sold his soul, his love and his child for a grocery store, he understands the mentality of his friends, his wife and children. After all, he could be an example for them and he should be the last one to complain when somebody sells his soul for money. On the contrary, the citizens are very ethical in comparison to Ill, they sentence to death a criminal that maybe doesn't deserve death but deserves a severe punishment, they have extenuating circumstances - their town is bankrupt, they are dying of hunger, they want to do what Ill did without any justification, except greed. So, if Ill remains in town he'll probably resume his good relationships with his friends, he will participate in the booty that Claire left and become even richer, he'll continue to love his wife and children, and probably he will be elected Mayor in the next election. Greedy and corrupted people find always a common interest and work in unison. Claire will not be avenged and everything will return to normal, or even worse, because now all the crooks will share her money and think in sarcasm how idiotic Claire was she wanted to punish them in such a clumsy way. Dürrenmatt and Mambety truly sense the atrocity of a corrupted society and an unethical business world and convey it in the clearest way in what can be perceived as a masterpiece in Business Ethics.

11. NORWAY & INDIA - A WHISTLEBLOWER WITH SOCIAL RESPONSIBILITY - THE PLAY "AN ENEMY OF THE PEOPLE" BY HENRIK IBSEN & THE INDIAN FILM "GANASHATRU" - SUMMARY & ANALYSIS

Based on the play "An Enemy of the People" (En Folkefiende), 1882, by Henrik Ibsen

The films:

An Enemy of the People, 1978, 90 min., Director George Schaefer, with Steve McQueen, is based on the play with slight changes

Ganashatru, 1989, 99 min., Director Satyajit Ray, Indian masterpiece based on the play, with substantial changes

Summary:

Dr. Thomas Stockmann is a doctor in a small Norwegian town and the medical officer of the baths developed by his initiative under the management of his brother Peter, the Mayor of the town. The baths brought a surge in tourism and the financial conditions of the citizens improved substantially. Thomas and his wife have many friends who are often invited to dinner at their home, especially Hovstad the editor of the local newspaper and Billing the sub-editor. Thomas is a family man worshipped by his daughter Petra, a teacher, and by his sons Ejlif & Morten. His father-in-law is Morten Kill, a tanner, whose factory pollutes the water of the baths. When Thomas discovers the pollution he decides to write an article in the local newspaper in order to warn the citizens of the danger to their health. The editors and Aslaksen, the publisher of the newspaper, back him at first and Thomas tells them modestly that he doesn't want them to honor him with a dinner for his contribution to society. But, after the interference of the Mayor, the publisher and editors change their mind and decide not to publish Thomas' report, as they are afraid that the citizens will have to bear the costs of repairing the contamination. Thomas refuses to accept this and decides to convene a meeting of the town's citizens in order to explain them the dangers of the pollution. In the meeting, the Mayor convinces the citizens to back him, Thomas is denounced as a lunatic, anti-democrat, as he maintains that he is right and the majority is wrong. He is proclaimed an Enemy of the People, is fired from his position at the Baths, his daughter is fired, hooligans break the windows of his house and he is asked to leave his house. Thomas decides to remain in town and fight for his principles against all odds.

Analysis:

The play illustrates the dilemma of the whistleblower and his moral motives. Is he a despicable tell-tale, a martyr, or a fearless hero? Society bans the whistleblower, even when he blows the whistle in order to rescue the people. Ibsen shows the double-talk of unethical persons who talk like the Mayor on a need of tolerance and civility, but act on behalf of the town's rich people. Another aspect is the consideration of ego in business: whose idea it was to open the Spa - Peter's or Thomas'. But things are not clearcut. We see the modesty of unethical people like Peter as compared to the lavishness of ethical people like Thomas. Is it at all relevant to the ethical issues? The unethical businessmen depict those who fight for ethics as having their own agenda, they are megalomaniac, lunatics, anti-business, short or long in their shares' transactions, they are unfaithful to their wives or husbands, they are shoplifters if they refuse to pay for a damaged can-opener, and so on.

In the play we see the joy of creation of Thomas the innovator as compared to the gloom of Peter the bureaucrat. Thomas is very generous by inviting his friends frequently to dinners, however it doesn't pay off. We face the dilemma whether Thomas was right when he didn't disclose to Peter his suspicion about the polluted water. Thomas should be loyal and transparent, but to whom? To his superiors in the Spa's board, to his brother the Mayor, to the inhabitants of his town, to the tourists who use the Spa, to his family, to his conscience, to his profession? Is it justifiable to blow the whistle on corrupted business practices? Is the Mayor correct in telling Thomas that the individual in society should be loyal to the authorities of society who are responsible for the welfare of the public? To what extent should the individual adapt himself to the norms of society, and be a "conformist"? As those who are not ready to conform risk the retaliation of society, their bosses, their colleagues...

The Mayor doesn't have broad interests and is very narrow-minded, he confines himself to work only, but he is very efficient. However, he is under the pressure of election, and being slightly paranoiac he is afraid that all the "schemes" of Thomas and his father-in-law are all intended to undermine his position and to benefit from the low prices of the shares of the Baths. The pressure on Peter reminds of the pressure exerted on politicians by election to the parliament or the presidency, on executives of companies traded on the stock exchange by quarterly reports, controlling shareholders, audits, etc. Does it justify an unethical conduct of the managers? Ibsen, Thomas and the Captain, who hosts the citizens' assembly, believe in elitism. This raises the question: Who should lead: the elites, assuming that they are competent and ethical, or the masses, even if they are ignorant and without values?

Other facets of the analysis: The criticism of Petra on hiding the truth at school where she teaches and at home towards her younger brothers. Dr. Stockmann is in favor of maximum transparency and raising the curtain on the evils of society. But is it always justifiable? The ecology as a driving factor in this play, one of the first plays to raise ecological issues. What is more important economy and progress or ecology, should there be a contradiction between them? Should we always be concerned by economic factors even when human lives and health is at stake? If we advocate maximization of profits - the answer is yes.

Another facet is: The naivety of whistleblowers like Stockmann who believe that society will give them prizes and honor to reward them of what they have discovered. But are all Thomas' intentions pure, to what extent is his conduct motivated by rivalry with his brother, revulsion from his father-in-law the tanner who spoils the water of the Spa with his factory's waste, ego considerations, revenge from the Spa's board who wanted to save the costs of expensive piping? What about the rationality of economics? And maybe the most important issue: Is Dr. Stockmann a Don Quixote who doesn't have an economic vision or are his considerations valid for the long run only? Possibly, a little more cunning (like Ulysses and the Trojan Horse) would have assisted Thomas in his campaign, if the end justify the means. After all, what has Stockmann achieved? He has lost his job, Petra was fired, they cannot live anymore in their house, their children are beaten, the pollution will continue and people will get sick and die, he was declared an enemy of the people and has lost most of his friends. So, what can we suggest Thomas to do in order to achieve at least part of his plea, without giving up his convictions? Could he embark in such a campaign without a political sense?

Dr. Stockmann thinks that his brother will envy him because it was he who discovered the pollution. His more practical wife suggests him to tell the Mayor that it was his idea from the beginning. The attitude of Mrs. Stockmann up to the people's assembly is quite critical and down-to-earth, but when she sees how the editors and the people treat her husband she decides to back him fully, although she might disagree with his methods. The citizens do not want to recognize the truth about the pollution and convince themselves that it is a sheer invention of the lunatic Dr Stockmann. Ultimately, a simple problem like the water's pollution becomes a pawn in the campaign of the tanner against the Mayor, the journalist against the tycoons, the Mayor in his election campaign, and the citizens who do not want to pay more taxes. Hovstad mutates from the journalist who starts as a fighter against the tycoons and ends as their most fateful lackey. This raises the question whether it is a common aspect in the relations of the media with business?

Thomas starts as the most popular man in town and ends up as an enemy of the people. He is inconsistent as he is in favor of majority when he thinks that everybody is with him and favors the minority when he learns that he is left almost alone. The victim is always guilty. Peter blames Thomas that the Spa will be closed because of him and not because he objected investing enough money in the piping. Peter objects the disclosure of the pollution for ethical reasons as it will hurt his credibility as a civil servant. The Mayor, as well as many unethical businessmen state "that the public does not need new ideas, as the old ones serve us pretty well". Would Galileo, Emile Zola and Brutus agree? The mayor accuses Thomas of being paranoiac and individualistic, and in fact it is a very common accusation against the whistleblowers. Peter asks Thomas to retract from his disclosure, although he knows that Thomas would not be able to do so. But even if he would have agreed, it would discredit Thomas in the eyes of his few supporters and he would be fired anyway, as he is perceived as a whistleblower. Another common allegation against the whistleblowers is that they oppose everyone who is their superior. Is the ideal employee the obedient yes-man, who agrees with the whims of his bosses even when their commands are unlawful and unethical?

The silence of the lambs, the law of Omerta, community of thought, like in The Enemy of the People, may be slogans of the Mafia, totalitarian regimes, banana republics, but they often apply to a part of the business world. The Mayor tells Thomas that as an employee he is not entitled to his own opinion and especially if it contradicts the ideas of his superiors. This statement is very common in many companies, but in any case one should find the golden mean between this idea of total discipline as opposed to total chaos and insubordination. Peter tries to convince his sister-in-law to call to order her husband for the sake of her family and welfare. This tactic is very common - to try and influence or intimidate the family of the whistleblower - and succeeds only in cases where the family is not cohesive enough, like in The Insider or The Visit, but not in cases like the Dreyfuss Affair. The whistleblowers are not rewarded for their actions, they are dismissed and banned. Often because they are not politically correct in their allegations, like Dr. Stockmann who finds an analogy between the polluted water and the polluted moral climate of his town. But, who loves the town more: the Mayor or the physician? One would tend to think that the physician, but we can also find justifications to the Mayor's conduct as well.

Mrs. Stockmann tells her husband that justice without power has no value. We could think of many examples that validate this statement and the opposite one as well. The communists believed that they were just but they didn't prevail until they had the power. However, the dissidents like Solzhenitzyn and the East Germans democrats at the end of the eighties, as well as the Indians in 1948 prevailed although they didn't have the power. These arguments raise the question: Does the end justify the means and is a person who fights for justice allowed to act against his people, his religion or his country? To the detriment of his family, his welfare, his health and even his life? Is the whistleblower a modern hero who fights for justice? Thomas may sound selfish when he doesn't pay attention to the admonition of his wife who tells him to think of his family and compromise with the evils of society. But Thomas perseveres in his fight even against the whole world. Thomas may also sound manipulative when he says that he wants to be able to look in the eyes of his sons when they will grow up and be free men. Here again he acts on behalf of the victims, for their own good, without even asking them, although Petra supports him from the start.

Dr Stockmann is accused of being a revolutionary, and so is Lowel Bergman in The Insider. Is it a compliment, an insult, a fact? Was it his intention from the start? As Thomas didn't want to be a revolutionary but was driven to that, we could argue that circumstances make most of revolutionaries what they are. Dr. Stockmann could have stuck to his findings as a scientist and not transgress his fight to political issues. Doing so, it wouldn't have hampered his credibility and allow slander that he is motivated by revenge against his brother or by ambition to become the new Mayor. Aslaksen states that he is a coward in the local arena but is not afraid to state his own views in the national arena. We could explain that by his fear of personifying the struggle. Aslaksen and Hovstad change their views by 180 degrees after they talk to the Mayor, as the strength of their moral convictions is in opposite function to the strength of the pressure exerted on them. On some people putting pressure is effective but with others it goes on the opposite way and strengthen their resistance. Ibsen shows how flattery is effective in the business world. The mayor flatters Aslaksen and is successful but Dr Stockmann fails, because he is too blunt. Aslaksen was ready to fight for a cause when it was abstract. But when it affects his welfare and the welfare of his colleagues he opposes it. Charity begins at home.

Why do Aslaksen and Hovstad fall into the trap of the Mayor? They could have said that the Spa's company which is entitled to all the profits should bear also all the investment for repairing the pipes. The piping should not be on the community expenses as they don't share the profits. But this is a common attitude of unethical businessmen to ask for the assistance of government and community when the situation deteriorates but not to share with them profits when it improves. Thomas sounds sometimes as a macho, when he tells his wife to go home and take care of the household while he will take care of the problems of society. Another issue which is relevant even today is: Who decides what should be written in the newspaper: the editor, the owner, the readers, the authorities? Hovstad, Aslaksen, Dr Stockmann or the Mayor? Does mediocrity shut the truth up or is 'vox populi vox dei'? We could see many commonalities between the town's citizens meeting and the shareholders' meetings. The chances of an individual shareholder or a man with dissident opinions to express himself and to influence others are very slim, as the Chairman and the mighty act in both cases arbitrarily.

Aslaksen advocates for the golden mean like Aristotle, Dr Stockmann is a "revolutionary" who wants to destroy the corrupted society. But who is more ethical? Aslaksen and Hovstad, the conformists are expected to receive their reward from the Mayor and the wealthy people in due time, indirectly, as they owe them now. Dr. Stockmann in the meeting does not flatter his people but attacks them, still he wants their support, or is he trying to maintain a cause which he know has no chance to prevail? Stockmann wants the destruction of his hometown as it is based on lies. Is it effective? We could draw analogies from Soviet Russia and Great Britain. In the Soviet Union the revolution didn't work on behalf of the masses while in Great Britain the masses are in much better conditions without any revolution. What about other political regimes, racial conflicts, economic and social conflicts? Is destruction the only way to remedy the evils? The examples of the fascist and communist regimes as opposed to democracies where people compromise and don't destroy are illuminating in advocating for moderation.

When they don't find rational arguments against Stockmann his friends resort to slander: he is crazy, he wants a raise in his salary, he wanted to purchase the shares of the Spa with his father-in-law at a very low price and that's why he invented the story about pollution. Ibsen raises another issue: what is preferable to stick to your country and society even if they are corrupt and you are persecuted in order to change them from within or emigrate. Dr. Stockmann wanted to emigrate to the US but ultimately he decides to stay and fight in his hometown. "One should not wear his best trousers when he wants to fight for truth and freedom". Is it a private joke of Ibsen or does it contain a lot of truth about the risks of the struggle? Ibsen illustrates the brutality of society and the mighty who break Stockmann's windows, threaten him and his family, fire him and the captain his only friend, his daughter... Is it common also today? The cases and the research show that in many cases it is still common. Peter tries to convince Thomas to sign a declaration that he was wrong and maybe they will hire him back in the future. This is a common communist device to give a so-called appearance of justification to their brutal acts. But luckily Thomas refuses as he doesn't want to deny his convictions, as Galileo said e pur si muove and Dreyfus maintained that he was innocent. Thomas' father-in-law, Morten Kiil, tries to bribe him as he wants to preserve his reputation. Unethical persons insist in maintaining a faultless reputation and they are willing to pay for it. Finally, is Dr. Stockmann a model for imitation, will he achieve success at least in the long run?

Norway is today the most ethical country in the world, and Ibsen has contributed to it with his plays. However, in the Indian film Ganashatru we have a happy ending, with many young people coming to support the enemy of the people and others deciding to publish his report, still India is among the most corrupt countries in the world. What approach is best for reform?

Ganashatru (Bengali: গণশত্রু Gônoshotru "Enemy of the People") is a 1990 Indian film by Satyajit Ray. It is an adaptation of Henrik Ibsen's play An Enemy of the People. Ray adapts the play to an Indian setting: a flourishing township in Bengal, in which a temple attracts devotees as well as tourists. Dr. Ashoke Gupta is the head of the of a town hospital. Gupta's younger brother Nisith is the head of the committees running the hospital and the temple. Both were built by a local industrialist. The temple is a big tourist attraction. Dr. Gupta is convinced that the holy water of the temple is contaminated due to the faulty pipe-laying. It is causing an epidemic in the town and he warns his brother Nisith.

Nisith, the industrialist and other town officials reject the idea that holy water might be the cause of the epidemic. They refuse to close the temple to carry out the repairs because of the loss that will ensue. Dr. Gupta wants to write an article in the newspaper to warn people, but giving-in to the pressure from the powerful people, the editor refuses to publish it. Left with no alternative, Dr. Gupta organizes a public meeting that is also sabotaged. And Dr. Gupta is proclaimed an enemy of the people.

The movie brings forth the eternal conflict between hard scientific fact and the opposing religious doctrine. In the movie the young generation ultimately favors science and this optimism about India that Ray has envisioned is completely unrealistic. There are two possibilities to warn the people – tell them the truth as Ibsen did and cover-up the truth as Ray does. If you want that the audience of the play or the film would go home in a good mood – you can adopt Ray's methods, but if you want to educate the people even if they would be reluctant at first to see the truth that hurts – adopt Ibsen's methods, which in the long run has brought Norway to the top of the ethical countries, while people in India are still in a nirvana watching Bollywood movies.

12. FRANCE & ISRAEL - CULTURAL, ETHICAL & MENTALITY GAPS IN INTERN'L BUSINESS CASE - THE IMPORTANCE OF BEING A POLYGLOT

(Due to confidentiality and editing reasons some of the names and details have been changed. The amounts are given for indication purpose only)

English has become a long time ago the international business language. Most of the international agreements are written in English and the business negotiations are held in this language. The due diligence is performed in English, and businessmen from Sweden, Italy, Russia, Japan, Argentina, Egypt and Israel speak among themselves in English, with a foreign accent, with spelling and grammatical mistakes, but they understand each other quite well. Only one country in the world insists in keeping its language and heritage in spite of the global trends and refuses to be swept by the English tides - France. It is very harsh for the nation of Louis XIV, Napoleon and De Gaulle to relinquish its international position after being until half a century ago a global superpower with a transcontinental empire, with a fabulous history, a magnificent culture, leadership in all the fields: technology, science, aviation, cinema, theater, fashion, gastronomy, tourism, literature, music, arts and most of the other fields. Furthermore, French was until a century ago the international diplomatic language, French schools were scattered all over the world, and the francophone culture did not succumb to the English culture that became the dominant culture after World War II. Towards the end of the 20th century cracks started to appear in the French fortress and the young French businessmen speak fluently English, sometimes even without an accent. The high tech revolution, New Economy and the Internet, globalization and M&A are the main reasons for this change, and France has discovered that if it wanted to survive in the global economy, being in the center of Europe (and the world...?), it had to speak English as everybody else. Board meetings of French multinational companies, such as Alcatel, Vivendi and Thomson, are held in English, correspondence is in English, even French/European business schools become the Business Schools for the World and courses are held exclusively in English. The language of the European Union is effectively English, in spite of its official 20 languages, and all the largest legal and audit firms in France operate in English, if they are not American or British firms located in Paris.

The mother tongue of Emile was French. He was not born in France but in one of the francophone diasporas and in the French school where he studied in his childhood the young children: Jews, Muslims, Christians, French, Italians, Greeks, Armenians and Copts, learned about the French heritage, their forefathers the Galls, and learned by heart the poetry of Hugo and the plays by Racine. The exposure to multiculturalism was a major ingredient in the personality of Emile and he was fluent in more than ten languages - French, English, Spanish, German, Italian, etc. In the M&A negotiations he had a very important edge when he could speak with his business colleagues in their mother tongues, about their culture: Lorca, Moliere, Shakespeare, Pirandello or Brecht. In 1979, a few days after the birth of his youngest daughter, he conducted business negotiations in Taiwan for six long weeks on a huge contract. The Chinese decided to submit this European businessman to Chinese torture in attrition tactics that succeeded in most of the cases. They held for a long week negotiations on the penalties clause, made long breaks, and were convinced that this young businessman will not be able to stay for such a long period in Taipei, which was not very "international" in those days. Emile and his colleague stood alone against hosts of Chinese counterparts, exhausted and homesick. They knew that the Chinese had among them one who was fluent in their tongue and they volunteered disinformation in this tongue while communicating also in Romanian, the mother tongue of Emile's wife, which he learned in order to understand her culture. But as the weeks went by and because of the intellectual curiosity of Emile, he started to study Chinese and he told his Chinese colleagues every morning what new sayings of Confucius he had learned. His Chinese accent was despicable but his colleagues learned from his attitude that he was not ready to succumb to their tactics. He joked that his people was a people as ancient as the Chinese, and both nations were known for their patience. After Emile started to go every night to Chinese operas, his counterparts gave up and agreed to the conditions of Emile. The contract was signed after six weeks, the most profitable contract ever in Emile's high tech company. Emile learned a lesson that he was to cherish throughout his whole business career that a multicultural attitude is the cornerstone of most of international negotiations.

Philippe, the President and owner of Electronique France, was a fervent catholic, aged seventy, who prayed devotedly every day in the ancient cathedral of his hometown near Paris. He started his own company that manufactured electronic components for electronic scales when he was quite aged as he hoped that his son Louis will continue to manage the company. But over the years he had to admit that Louis, in spite of being a brilliant salesman and a good engineer, was not made of the stuff of a manager and preferred to be employed most of his time in the flourishing flower business of his second wife. Philippe didn't speak English but Louis spent many years in the US with his first wife and was fluent in English. Philippe called the shots, but his health was deteriorating and he wanted to sell his company as soon as possible. The only company that was interested in Electronique France was Scales, a foreign company that needed the French technology. Richard, the CEO of Scales, was a successful businessman who managed his company very efficiently. He came to Philippe at the beginning of the negotiations, assisted by foreign auditors and lawyers. The negotiations with Philippe, who belonged to the old school, did not succeed and the main problems were in the cultural gaps between parties. Richard who didn't understand French decided to hire Emile, who spoke this language fluently and had a vast experience in doing business with French companies.

Emile insisted that the first meetings with Philippe, after his employment in mid October 1997, were to be held tête-à-tête and indeed within a short while he found a common language with Philippe and a good chemistry was established between the aged fervent catholic and the agnostic Emile who was twenty years younger. They talked about French literature, theater, history, Paris, arts and almost any subject other than business. Frenchmen, especially those of the older generation, want to evaluate firstly your character, your culture, your scope of interests, your integrity, before they start to speak about business. With the same generalization, and indeed one should not generalize, an American will treat you as an extraterrestrial if in a business lunch you'll speak with him about Arthur Miller or Scott Fitzgerald. The maximal detour from business allowed in a lunch is a discussion about the merits of the restaurants in New York, San Francisco or Los Angeles. After breaking the ice between Emile and Philippe, they started to talk business and a formula was found within a short while that could overcome the gaps. As a matter of fact there was not a large gap between the parties in the prices and conditions. The gaps were in the payment terms, as Philippe was afraid that the (greedy?) foreigners would not pay the last payments that would be withheld until the acquisition was completed. In their original proposal the buyers requested that the Dutch law would prevail in this contract and finally the parties agreed on the French law. Emile convinced Richard to give up on immaterial clauses which raised the suspicion level of Philippe, as he knew that Richard was an honest person and Philippe's apprehensions were not justified.

Scales is a public company with a sales turnover of $100M and plants in England, Germany, Israel, the US and China. The company, which one third of its ownership is held by a British company selling $400M annually, had several product lines including electronic scaling and they needed the electronic components of the French company in order to rationalize and decrease the production costs. After acquiring the French company, the buyers wanted to appoint a local VP Finance. Later on, they wanted to appoint a French CEO and Emile was asked to find with a local head hunter a French candidate. Finally, a Scales executive with a French background was sent to manage the company. Scales was registered as a Dutch company for various reasons. They offered the French $2M for the company as the valuation seemed fair for the know-how, the plant (1,200 sq.m.), the on-going concern and the employees. In M&A there is a minimal threshold of price, which below that renders the acquisition expenses prohibitive. In fact, if we calculate the acquisition expenses, including legal and audit - French and local, the remuneration of Emile, the frequent trips, hotels, French meals, due diligence, restructuring costs and so on, we can arrive to a conclusion that those expenses amount to a substantial part of the acquisition costs. But in our case, in spite of those considerations, Scales paid those expenses willingly as the know-how of the French company was very valuable for Scales' operations. Philippe wanted to sell his company at any price as he didn't have a genuine alternative, operating in a very small niche, and he thought that the valuation that he received was adequate.

Electronique France was a sarl company, as most of the small companies in France. In the Financial Statements of 9.9.97 it was stated that the two companies (operations and assets) had no Boards of Directors, the CEO had very large responsibilities, there was no need of an audited report, the accepted accounting standards were not needed for the financial reports, there could be only one shareholder and the exclusive signature requirements could be only of the CEO. In a SA company there was a Board of Directors comprising of at least 3 people, an external audit has to be nominated who would be employed for at least 6 years, the Financial Statements have to be audited according to accepted accounting standards, there should be at least 7 shareholders, the responsibilities of the CEO are similar in both methods. The social benefits in Electronique France amount to 42.5% of the salaries, 13 monthly salaries are paid every year, the salaries are examined twice a year. It was found that $200K were missing to the pension funds. After the due diligence it was decided to acquire the equity of the company with its shares and not only its assets and liabilities. On 14.10.1997 Richard sent to Philippe a Letter of Intent specifying the terms and conditions of the acquisition. It was proposed that $1.1M would be paid for the company upon signature of the contract, $0.6M would be paid a month after receiving the audited 1997 report of the company and $0.3M would be paid within 6 months of the signature. The topics requiring due diligence were decided upon, it was decided that the company would not be offered for sale until the expected signature date of 15.1.1998, that the parties would bear each his own expenses, there would not be a public disclosure until the signature, validity, law, and so on.

In the clause 2.2 of the Letter of Intent it was stated that the severance pay of Louis, Philippe's son, would be deducted from the purchase price. It was not stated what was agreed already that Scales would reimburse the loans that Philippe has given to Electronique France, Philippe objected and disagreed that his company would be part of the transaction that should be exclusively with the shareholders of the company with a guarantee of Philippe to the accuracy of the financial reports of the company. Philippe was surprised that the transformation of his company to a SA has become a prerequisite of the transaction, he was ready to discuss financial adaptations but only according to French accepted accounting standards. He insisted that only $0.4M of the consideration would be withheld until the date of the acquisition financial statements. He wanted to be reimbursed of the $200K that he had given as a loan to his company and he was willing to be a guarantor on the accuracy of the financial statements up to a maximum of 40% of the consideration price. He insisted that the French law would prevail on the transaction. In this intricate situation Emile started his involvement in the project. He approached several law firms, but because of economic considerations they remained with the original law firm that Richard has hired although another partner was chosen. The audit firm, which was one of the largest ones in the world, chose another auditor, who had worked in the past several times with Emile. This audit firm was also the auditor of Scales. Emile held in the 3rd to 7th of November meetings with the lawyers and auditors, visited the company and met with Philippe.

Electronique France sold $5M annually and had 32 employees. The breakdown of sales was: 75% products and 25% services. Materials were 23% of sales and subcontractors 17%, labor costs 50% and depreciation 5%. The Net Profit amounted to 5% of the sales. The equipment was obsolete and the insurance companies evaluated the net value of the company at $7M. In the balance sheet of the company to the end of 1997 there were $100K in cash, accounts receivable $1.3M, stocks $0.9M, fixed assets (excluding the plant) $0.1M, in total $2.9M. The bank loans of the company amounted to $0.5M, accounts payable $0.4M, Net Worth $1M. In the Assets company (the Plant of the company) the assets amounted to $0.9M and the bank loans to $0.6M, loans from Philippe's family $150K, the Net Worth $40K. It was decided that all the expenses of the transformation of the company to a SA would be paid by Scales. 84% of the shares of the company were held by Philippe's family and 16% by partners who agreed a priori to Philippe's moves. Richard learned that upon signature of the agreement three directors have to be appointed, while the CEO has to be a citizen of the EU. As in a SA there has to be at least 7 shareholders it was required to give the names of 4 people or companies on top of the three directors. It was agreed to reimburse the $200K loan that Philippe gave to the company, the guarantee of Philippe to the company on the accuracy of the financial statements was limited to $400K. The acquisition agreement that was written in French was signed on 12.2.1998. It was between Philippe's family and Scales. Philippe committed to transfer to Scales all the shares of the company, including those of his partners. The patents of the company were included in the agreement. Philippe stated that the stocks were salable, there is no lien on the equipment, that there are no legal claims against the company, that it has paid all its taxes, that the employment contracts have no clauses that are not standard, that the company complies with the ecological requirements, that there was no deterioration in the business conditions of the company since the date of the 1997 financial statements until the date of the acquisition, that the loans of the company are $200K, etc. It was decided that the French law would prevail on the acquisition contract, no competition for five years, arbitration clauses and so on. In a separate contract the ownership of the plant and its liabilities was transferred to Scales.

A few months after Emile became to be involved in this case an agreement was signed between Electronique France and Scales. During those months dozens of meetings were held between Philippe and Emile, Louis and Emile, as well as meetings with Richard, the lawyers and the auditors. The hurdles were overcome and the parties have reached a high level of trust. The acquisition of the company was done without any problems and all the consideration was paid on time to the owners. Possibly, a few prejudices also disappeared. The good ambience was also due to the gourmet meals in the hometown of Philippe and in Paris, the good wine and the excellent food contributed to the high spirits and to the flexibility of the parties. All parties were satisfied with the results of the negotiations although they saw previously insurmountable hurdles that disappeared, often because of the contribution of Emile who put things in the right proportions, and assisted in overcoming the cultural gaps. No turnaround plans were devised, no sophisticated negotiations tactics were used, the due diligence was rudimentary and the length of negotiations was relatively short. Richard participated only in the decisive meetings and of course on the signing of the agreement, thus saving a lot of his management attention and enabling him to attend more important matters. He didn't understand a word of the documents he signed, of the financial statements and of the representations. He leaned now and then towards Emile and whispered to him: "I trust you blindly, I depend on you that you wouldn't put us in a difficult situation because of misunderstandings due to the language and the contents". Emile assured him that he can count on his competence and integrity and he would not have to regret the signature of the agreement and the trust that he put on him. And so, Richard continued to sign the hundreds of pages... This case describes the cultural gaps facets of international business, which are neglected in many cases, but are one of the main causes of the failure of those business. Many workshops are held on negotiation tactics in Japan and China, but this case proves that it would be advisable to try and understand cultural gaps much closer home, in countries like France, Germany or Italy.

ANALYSIS AND TOPICS FOR CONSIDERATION ON: CULTURAL, ETHICAL AND MENTALITY GAPS IN INTERNATIONAL BUSINESS CASE - THE IMPORTANCE OF BEING A POLYGLOT

Topics for consideration on the personal, business and ethical dilemmas of the main protagonists of the case: 1. Richard, President of Scales, 2. Philippe, President of Electronique France, 3. Louis, the son of Philippe, 4. Emile, manager of the M&A program.

- * Describe the importance of the knowledge of languages and cultures in the modern business world.
- * English has become the international business language, can we be satisfied with that?
- * The importance of Ethics and the knowledge of languages and business cultures in the business faculties - a necessity or a luxury?
- * Describe problems of cultural gaps that you have encountered in your business career? In the US?
- * Is France an exception in its business mentality or is it common to all Europe?
- * Describe the Chinese experience of Emile, was it because of intellectual curiosity, negotiations tactics, or both?
- * Businessmen learn golf in order to reach a common "language" with their colleagues, why shouldn't they learn languages and cultures?
- * Were the suspicions of Philippe based on prejudices or ignorance?
- * Describe the mentality gaps between Philippe and Louis.
- * Why was Philippe convinced that he made a good deal in spite of the low valuation of his company?
- * Would the negotiations end successfully without the involvement of Emile?
- * To what extent is the personality of Emile an exception in the modern business world?
- * What was the background of the trust that Richard had to Emile?
- * What would have happened if one of the parties, including Emile, would not act in good faith?
- * What were the mistakes of Richard, if any, in the conduct of negotiations with Philippe prior to the employment of Emile?
- * Do the French, English, Chinese or Americans have prejudices towards their business counterparts and even towards their compatriots?
- * If we will not do business with those who have prejudices towards us, with whom will we do business?
- * Is it easy or difficult to overcome suspicions between people from different cultures and are the necessary steps to be taken in order to overcome them prohibitive?
- * What is the proportion of the fixed costs out of the total costs of every transaction: legal, audit, consulting and so on?

- * Is it more difficult to conduct negotiations with French businessmen than with Americans, Italians, Germans or Chinese?
- * Is there a distinct business mentality to the French, British, Dutch, Scandinavian, Japanese, Latin American, Singaporean, Swiss businessmen?
- * Is it important for a foreign company conducting business in France not to agree to have the French law as the binding law of the acquisition agreement?
- * Richard had companies in England, Germany, Israel, the US and China. Why has he encountered problems only in France?
- * Are there ethical gaps between France, Great Britain, Singapore and the US?
- * Why did Emile insist that the first meetings with Philippe will be held tête-à-tête?
- * Why have Philippe and Emile found a common language despite of the huge differences between them?
- * Is the mentality of Emile similar to a chameleon that adapts himself to every interlocutor, or does it have a backbone?
- * Are the French businessmen, as they appear in this case, more intellectual than the Americans, or is it only not usual to speak in the US about culture in business dinners? What about Germany, China, Japan, Italy, Spain and other countries?
- * Would there be a better chemistry if the negotiations would be held between Richard and Louis?
- * What is preferable for a foreign company acquiring a French company, to appoint a French, foreign, or foreign with a French culture as a CEO?
- * Is it preferable to have the Europeans headquarters in Paris, London, Zurich, Rome, Amsterdam, Brussels, or Frankfurt?
- * What is the difference between a sarl and a SA company in France, why did Scales insist to change the company to SA before its acquisition? Is it because of the consolidation of the financial statements with the parent company?
- * To what extent is it difficult for a foreign company in France to adapt to the labor legislation and the high social benefits?
- * What are the differences between the Letter of Intent of Richard and the final agreement?
- * How can you explain that Louis learned from the Letter of Intent that he had no job in the merged company?
- * Why did Philippe answer with such a harsh letter to the Letter of Intent of Richard?
- * Is the business valuation of Electronique France equal to the Net Worth in the Balance Sheet - $1M, the selling price of $2M, the valuation for insurance purposes - $7M, other? Is it important in view of the fact that the company was sold?
- * Do you learn from the financial statements of Electronique France about any problems or is the company in a sound financial condition?

- * Why did Philippe agree to be a guarantor of the accuracy of the financial statements?
- * Why was the company that had the ownership of the assets of Electronique France a separate company from the company that was responsible for the business activities?
- * Was the length of negotiations between the parties reasonable?
- * How were improved, with the assistance of Emile, the relations between Philippe and Richard, and how they became by the end of the negotiations almost friends?
- * Describe your impression on the importance of the cultural gaps in business. How do you think that you will be able to overcome those gaps in your business career?

13. FRANCE/PROVENCE - THE VICTIMS OF CORRUPTION - THE NOVEL "JEAN DE FLORETTE" BY MARCEL PAGNOL - SUMMARY & ANALYSIS

Based on the novel Jean de Florette (1962) by Marcel Pagnol

The film is based on the novel with slight changes:

Jean de Florette, 1986, 122 min., Director Claude Berri, w. Yves Montand, Gérard Depardieu

Summary and Analysis:

In a rural French village in Provence a rich old man, Cesar, and his only remaining relative, Ugolin, cast their covetous eyes on an adjoining vacant property. They need its spring water for growing their flowers and are dismayed to hear that the man who has inherited it, Jean Cadoret, son of Florette, is moving in with his wife, Aimee, and his little daughter, Manon. They block up the spring, thus not disclosing this insider information to the underdog "shareholder" Jean, while the village inhabitants abide the rule of Omerta and do not interfere against the "tycoon" of the village, Cesar. Cesar and Ugolin watch as their new neighbor tries to keep his crops watered from wells far away through the hot summer. Though they see that Jean's desperate effort is breaking his health to death and his wife and daughter's hearts, the two unethical "businessmen" wanting to maximize their profits think only of getting the water and the money it will bring them.

In the sequel of Jean de Florette, Manon des sources, Manon has grown into a beautiful young shepherdess living in the idyllic Provencal countryside. She determines to take revenge upon the men responsible for the death of her father. Cesar and Ugolin have become successful flower growers using water from the spring of the former property of Jean which they have bought at a very low price from his widow right after his death. They made the valuation of the property (the shares' prices) collapse by withholding the insider information on the spring = money. Manon avenges the crime they have committed and the silence of the lambs in the village and blocks the central spring of the village which she has discovered. The villagers are taken by remorse as they think that it is God's punishment to suffer the same fate as the late Jean, they denounce in front of Manon the crimes of Cesar and Ugolin. Ugolin wants to compensate Manon whom she loves by marrying her but she refuses, disgusted to marry her father's murderer. Cesar discovers finally from an old friend that Jean was his own son born from a love affair he had with Florette who decided to marry Cadoret in another village after she has not received an answer to her desperate letters to Cesar who was in the war and didn't get her letters. Cesar stunned by the knowledge that he has murdered his own son dies from remorse. The lesson of the story is similar to the lesson of Arthur Miller's All My Sons: When you commit unethical acts that bring the death of people it will have a repercussion on you, as if you have murdered your own son.

Some of the leitmotives of the novel are: The symbol of the water (or money in business) stolen by Cesar and Ugolin, who are not ethical towards the weak stakeholders. The law of Omerta in Les Bastides which is - don't interfere with other people's business. Is it typical to France, to Sicily, to the US, to China, to Germany, the UK, or is it international? The villagers are ready to unite only against those who threaten their capital.

Ugolin is greedy and kisses his gold coins. Money is his only raison d'être. Cesar also is extremely greedy but he is afraid that if Ugolin doesn't marry he will not have anyone to bequeath his money to. Both don't have any ethical inhibitions. If Ugolin wants to grow flowers it is not because they are beautiful but because he can get more money from them than from vegetables. The villagers know also of another crime - the murder of the hunter by Pique-Bouffigue but they don't say a word because of the Omerta. That is why they don't interfere to help Jean (they discover only at the end of the sequel Manon that Jean was the son of Florette who was originally from the same village.) But, not knowing that Jean was one of theirs, they perceive him as an outsider, not a member of the local "elites", he is also an intellectual, not rich, doesn't buy anything from them, and even worse - he is a hunchback. The Bastidians can understand that a crime could be committed for greed but not for wickedness, as you shouldn't mix sentiments with business, nothing is personal. Pique-Bouffigue himself is murdered by Cesar as he didn't want to sell his property to Cesar, although he was offered a fair price. Cesar does it without inhibitions because he wants to improve the valuation of the property by growing flowers which will give a higher return on investment than Pique-Bouffigue's. In order to maximize profits everything is permissible, according to Cesar and he commits twice a murder even if it is indirect. The second murder, Jean's murder, is also justified as he is a fool, a bad businessman, and both the victims mix sentiments with business, which is completely forbidden, according to Cesar's ethical code.

Crespin, the village of Cadoret who married Florette, is a neighboring village of Les Bastides. They hate and fight each other, which is quite understandable, because if you don't fight your neighbors whom are going to fight? This is similar to what Michael Milken, who was convicted for fraud in Wall Street, said: "If you don't con your friends whom can you con?" The hate between similar villages, people or companies is very common. The worse fights are between similar newspapers, cut-throat competition of similar companies, hate relationships in families of tycoons. Cesar utilizes disinformation in order to enforce his position. He says to one of the villagers Anglade that the spring was dry, that an "accident" happened to the spring and blocked it. The unethical companies use the same methods, giving ambiguous justifications for their unethical acts. They "rescue" the poor minority shareholders by buying their shares at 10% of their price after they caused the collapse of the prices. They disclose "insurmountable" problems in their companies in order to make the prices collapse and then buy the shares at a much lower valuation.

Water for the villagers is like money for businessmen. When you block the spring it is similar to blocking the knowledge on the prospects of your own company in order to acquire the shares of the minority shareholders who don't know that the situation is excellent. But this is known only to the controlling shareholders who have the insider information about the spring or the prospects of the company. Cesar and the unethical tycoons utilize time to their benefit, as they have all the time necessary for their schemes, having a lot of money and resources, while the minority shareholders or Jean don't have time and unlimited resources. It takes Cesar three years and two murders in order to acquire the property for growing flowers. Some unethical companies plan their schemes five or ten years ahead. They also drag trials for five years or more in a war of attrition with their opponents, who cannot afford to wait for five years in order to recoup the money they lost. At Cesar's suggestion, Ugolin becomes Jean's friend in order to learn of his plans and give him wrong advices. He does therefore industrial (or agricultural) intelligence (or espionage), while Cesar doesn't want to meet Jean as he prefers to commit the crimes without knowing the victims, as personification can jeopardize his schemes. But he laughs at Ugolin who becomes sentimental like his mother and wants to assist Jean, moved by his misfortunes. Cesar tells him: "Do you want carnations or friends?", namely - make up your mind, because if you'll help Jean you'll never get his property. He could also tell him like Gordon Gekko in Wall Street: "If you want to have a friend in business, take a dog!"

Cesar and Ugolin cut Jean from the Bastidians, as they don't want him to learn from them that his property has a spring. Cesar speaks ill of Jean to the Bastidians and Ugolin speaks ill of the Bastidians to Jean. Ill speaking is a legitimate weapon for many unethical businessmen. One of the worst mistakes of Jean (and he made many) is that he doesn't befriend with the Bastidians in spite of everything. If he would have done so and told them that his mother Florette was a Bastidian they might have told him about the spring. Cesar and Ugolin give Jean wrong advices like unethical companies encourage analysts to give unreal forecasts on their companies, in order to make the prices collapse. Manon with her intuition hates Ugolin from the start as she senses that he wishes them ill. Finally she takes her father's revenge after his death. It might be too late as her father died, they were ruined, she became a shepherdess instead of a lady, and more than ten years have elapsed. But being a shepherdess she thinks like a Bedouin who taking his revenge after 40 years says that he has one regret - that he took his revenge too early...

Jean is like the scientific businessmen who base their decisions on mathematical models about the conduct of the shares, the market trends and everything else. He doesn't employ his common sense, psychology, or intelligence on the Bastidians. The statistics blur his mind from seeing that without water (or money) he doesn't have a chance to succeed. He thinks that he knows everything and doesn't take the advice of specialists, which he is not. We could analyze the conduct of Jean as a start-up entrepreneur. He spends fourteen thousands francs in equipment and remains with no reserves or working capital. As in many other cases, Cesar buys ultimately the start-up for peanuts. He always has money and waits patiently to take advantage of the inexperienced entrepreneurs who remain without cash, just before the breakthrough. He makes all the profits while the entrepreneurs made the investment and lost. What are the reasons of Jean's ambitions and why does he want to prove to everybody else that he is the smartest, although he is a hunchback? He doesn't understand that in business like anywhere else everybody has a hunchback, sometimes it is a real defect, sometimes it is a virtual one, like low-class origin, a ruined family, an oriental or Afro-American origin in a racist society. He cannot overcome his complexes, which are only in his imagination, although he has a beautiful loving wife, a worshiping daughter, a heritage of a property and plenty of money. Jean is very intelligent, but he loses everything because of his complexes and ego.

Cesar on the other hand doesn't commit any mistake, he is cool, a good example of an unethical businessman. He doesn't personify his victim, he plans his schemes years ahead, he manipulates and "buys" the goodwill of all the villagers, he cooperates with Ugolin, who is the scapegoat should anything go wrong. But maybe Cesar commits the worse mistake of all, as he murders his own son Jean, Ugolin commits suicide, and he has to bequeath all his money and the properties to his victim - Manon. Jean's family, sympathetic, ethical and loving lose all their money and Jean loses also his life, while Cesar and Ugolin, single, selfish and mean gain everything, at least in the first part of the story. What is therefore the conclusion? That the first part of the story describes the normal way of conduct in business, while the second part was written only to have a happy ending and it doesn't reflect truly what happens in business, where Cesars prevail and Jeans lose everything? Is the vengeance of Manon effective or does it come too late? What would we do if we were in Jean's place?

Cesar remains calm also when the whistleblower, who has seen him block the spring, comes and confesses to the community. He denies it against all evidence and tries to discredit the witness. He is always business-like, all his conduct is rational, maximizing the profits. Pamphile and his wife are a good example of the attitude of society towards ethical crimes. Pamphile wants to assist Jean but his wife opposes it with all the standard argumentation: Jean comes from Crespin and we hate those guys, you don't interfere with other people's business, Jean wanted to kill Cabridan (while it was the opposite), and finally - Jean doesn't buy from him anything while Cesar has just placed an important order. Ugolin has a clear conscience as he has warned Jean of the catastrophe coming and Jean didn't want to quit. But he forgets the basic fact that he has blocked the spring and if he wouldn't have done it, Jean would not have died. We can compare that to the clear conscience of tobacco companies that warn their clients of the dangers of smoking and if they smoke, it's their own customers' business as they are adults who know what will happen to them. Furthermore, they contribute tens of millions to the community, to opera-houses, to universities, to arts.

What is the reason of Jean's death: his megalomania, Ugolin's treason, Cesar's scheme, the Omerta of the Bastidians, the blind love of Aimee who backs up all his foolishnesses? Cesar and Ugolin simulate the finding of the spring one hour after buying the plot. Manon, Jean's small daughter, sees them and understands that they have blocked the spring and caused Jean's death. Just like the controlling shareholders of a "failing" company discover after purchasing the remaining 70% of the shares from the minority shareholders, who didn't have the insider information and sold their shares to the tycoons at 10% of the price, that the company after being privatized has really a tremendous potential and is about to make a breakthrough.

14. SUSTAINABILITY – PAUL HAWKEN - THE BOOK "THE ECOLOGY OF COMMERCE" - SUMMARY AND ANALYSIS

Based on the book:

Hawken Paul, The Ecology of Commerce, HarperCollins, 1994

Based on the film:

The New Great Transformation, 2007, 71 min., Paul Hawken hosted by Stewart Brand

Summary and Analysis:

Paul Hawken is perceived by many as the prophet of sustainability. He is not only an excellent writer, his books move us deeply, but he is also a very successful businessman. This combination is very uncommon in business ethics, social responsibility and sustainability. Normally, you can be an ethical businessman but you don't write on ethics, you can be an excellent ethicist but you don't practice business. Rather, this "oxymoron", adds so much to the credibility of Hawken's books and activities, that it has influenced millions of people. One of the people he has influenced most is Ray Anderson, the founder and chairman of Interface, the world's largest carpet manufacturer of commercial carpet. After reading The Ecology of Commerce by Hawken, Anderson wept, he reached the conclusion that until then he was a "plunderer of the earth" and he decided to change his company into a sustainable company because it is good to earth, to society, to humans and to business.

Biography of Paul Hawken from his official website:

"Paul Hawken is an environmentalist, entrepreneur, and author. Starting at age 20, he dedicated his life to sustainability and changing the relationship between business and the environment. His practice has included starting and running ecological businesses, writing and teaching about the impact of commerce on living systems, and consulting with governments and corporations on economic development, industrial ecology, and environmental policy.

He has appeared on numerous media including the Today Show, Larry King, Talk of the Nation, Charlie Rose, and has been profiled or featured in hundreds of articles including the Wall Street Journal, Newsweek, Washington Post, Business Week, Esquire, and US News and World Report. His writings have appeared in the Harvard Business Review, Resurgence, New Statesman, Inc, Boston Globe, Christian Science Monitor, Mother Jones, Utne Reader, Orion, and over a hundred other publications.

He is author and co-author of dozens of articles, op-eds, papers, as well as six books including The Next Economy (Ballantine 1983), Growing a Business (Simon and Schuster 1987), and The Ecology of Commerce (HarperCollins 1993). The Ecology of Commerce was voted in 1998 as the #1 college text on business and the environment by professors in 67 business schools. His book, Natural Capitalism: Creating the Next Industrial Revolution (Little Brown, September 1999) co-authored with Amory Lovins, is published in fourteen languages and has been read and referred to by several heads of state including President Bill Clinton who has called it one of the five most important books in the world today. His books have been published in over 50 countries in 27 languages and have sold over 2 million copies. Growing a Business became the basis of a 17-part PBS series, which Mr. Hawken hosted and produced. The program, which explored the challenges and pitfalls of starting and operating socially responsive companies, was shown on television in 115 countries and watched by over 100 million people. His piece on Seattle and the WTO entitled “N30” was published on over 100 websites and by 13 magazines. His latest book was published by Viking in May 2007 entitled Blessed Unrest: How the Largest Movement in the World Came Into Being, and Why No One Saw It Coming. www.blessedunrest.com

Companies he has founded or co-founded software companies specializing in proprietary content management tools; Smith & Hawken, the garden and catalog retailer; and several of the first natural food companies in the US that relied solely on sustainable agricultural methods. He is presently the head of PaxIT, PaxAuto, and PaxFan, three companies associated with Pax Scientific, Inc., a research and development company focused on energy-saving technologies that apply biomimicry to fluid dynamics.

Paul heads Highwater Research LLC in Sausalito, California. Highwater Research was established to promote a new methodology for reviewing and rating corporate social, ethical and environmental behavior. Highwater believes their methodology raises the standards for the SRI industry as a whole, and will become the preferred method for SRI selection in the future. By establishing standards for social and environmental responsibility, bringing transparency to current business behavior, and driving investment to those companies who have adapted to these higher standards, Highwater reasserts the original intent of SRI - to influence the way business is done. Baldwin Brothers, Inc. and Highwater Research launched the Highwater Global Fund on September 1, 2005, to address global sustainability opportunities by building a team of experts combining environmental, social and financial research into an alpha driven public equity fund.

Paul heads the Natural Capital Institute (www.naturalcapital.org), a research organization located in Sausalito, California. The Natural Capital Institute has created a hub for global civil society (www.WiserEarth.org). It is a collaboratively written, free content, open source networking platform that links NGOs, funders, business, government, social entrepreneurs, students, organizers, academics, activists, scientists, and citizens.

As a speaker, he has given keynote addresses to the Liberal Party of Canada, King of Sweden at his inaugural Environmental Seminar, American Bookseller's Association, Urban Land Institute, SRI International, Harvard University, Stanford University, Wharton, Cornell, Prime Minister of New Zealand's Conference on Natural Capitalism, US Department of Commerce, Australian Business Council, Yale University and Yale University Commencement, University of California (Berkeley) Commencement, Ministry of Agriculture France, American Association for the Advancement of Science (AAAS), Prince of Wales Conference on Business and the Environment—Cambridge University, Commonwealth Club, Herman Miller, National Wildlife Federation, State of Washington, American Society of Landscape Architects, American Institute of Architects, American Institute of Graphic Arts, American Solar Energy Association, Apple Computer, World Business Council for Sustainable Development, Cleveland City Club, Conference Board, U.S. Forest Service, Ontario Hydro, Environment Canada, EPA, and several hundred others.

He has served on the board of many environmental organizations including Point Foundation (publisher of the Whole Earth Catalogs), Center for Plant Conservation, Trust for Public Land, Friends of the Earth, and National Audubon Society. Among recognition and awards received are: The 2008 Green Prize for Sustainable Literature Award by the Santa Monica Public Library,

Green Cross Millennium Award for Individual Environmental Leadership presented by Mikhail Gorbachev in 2003; World Council for Corporate Governance in 2002; Small Business Administration "Entrepreneur of the Year" in 1990; Utne "One Hundred Visionaries who could Change our Lives" in 1995, Western Publications Association "Maggie" award for "Natural Capitalism" as the best Signed Editorial/Essay" in 1997; Creative Visionary Award by the International Society of Industrial Design; Design in Business Award for environmental responsibility by the American Center for Design; Council on Economic Priorities' 1990 Corporate Conscience Award; American Horticultural Society Award for commitment to excellence in commercial horticulture; Metropolitan Home Design 100 Editorial Award for the 100 best people, products and ideas that shape our lives; the Cine Golden Eagle award in video for the PBS program "Marketing" from Growing a Business; California Institute of Integral Studies Award "For Ongoing Humanitarian Contributions to the Bay Area Communities"; Esquire Magazine award for the best 100 People of a Generation (1984); and five honorary doctorates."

In "The Ecology of Commerce" Hawken maintains (p.xiv-xv) that in order to be sustainable we must begin with a set of objectives: 1. Reduce absolute consumption of energy and natural resources in the North by 80 percent within the next half century, it amounts to making things last twice as long with about half the resources. We already have the technology to do this in most areas, including energy usage. 2. Provide secure, stable, and meaningful employment for people everywhere. (Hawken, a humanist, sees sustainability as a holistic concept that encludes of course employment, welfare and happiness). 3. Be self-actuating as opposed to regulated or morally mandated. Humans want to flourish and prosper, and they will eventually reject any system of conservation that interferes with those desires. 4. Honor market principles. We can't just ask people to pay more to save the planet. They won't do it in some cases – and can't in most. 5. Be more rewarding than our present way of life. Present-day limits need to become opportunities. 6. Exceed sustainability by restoring degraded habitats and ecosystems to their fullest biological capacity. Any viable economic program must turn back the resource clock and devote itself actively to restoring damaged and deteriorating systems. 7. Rely on current income. Redesigning all industrial, residential, and transportation systems so that everything we use springs easily from the earth and returns back to it. 8. Be fun and engaging, and strive for an aesthetic outcome. Government, business and environmental organization cannot create a sustainable society. It will only come about through the accumulated effects of daily acts of billions of eager participants. Furthermore, the urge to create beauty exists in commerce as well as in society.

Hawken, as Joel Bakan in "The Corporation", as Aristotle and the Bible, believes that: "The ultimate purpose of business is not, or should not be, simply to make money. Nor is it merely a system of making and selling things. The promise of business is to increase the general well-being of humankind through service, a creative invention and ethical philosophy. Making money is, on its own terms, totally meaningless, an insufficient pursuit for the complex and decaying world we live in... Businesspeople must either dedicate themselves to transforming commerce to a restorative undertaking, or march society to the undertaker." (Hawken, The Ecology of Commerce, p.1-2) It is quite untorthodox for a businessman to say that the ultimate purpose of business is not to make money. Not only not to maximize profits, but simply not to make money. Business should ensure the general well-being of humankind, not the well-being of tycoons, of controlling shareholders, or even of executives. Business should be restorative or society would march to the undertaker. This is not the saying of a detached philosopher, Hawken is a successful businessman, and he substantiates his theories in his books in business terms. 15 years later, Bill Gates will advocate a new kind of capitalism, a creative or social capitalism, Warren Buffett will donate most of his wealth to society.

Hawken says that business has three basic issues to face: what it takes, what it makes, and what it wastes. The harmful way it exploits natural resources, the excessive amounts of toxins and pollutants it produces, and the excessive energy it consumes in the process. This is completely uneconomical, as in nature there is no waste. Business should be patterned according to basic ecological principles. In nature, waste equals food, all growth is driven by solar energy, and the overall well-being of the system depends on diversity and thrives of difference. Everything should be reclaimed, reused or recycled. In the restorative economy some businesses will get smaller but hire more people (bioagriculture in small farms for example), more money can be made by selling the absence of a product or service (for instance, where public utilities sell efficiency rather than additional power), and where profits increase when productivity is lowered. In short, those recommendations are quite the opposite of current business theories as preconized by Milton Friedman. It is indeed a revolution, a fresh and pioneering school of thought, advocated by few, as Ray Anderson, but feasible.

But there are always the skeptics, the groups of interests, oil companies, politicians who don't believe or prefer not to believe that sustainability issues are so important. Still, Hawken maintains that we must levy a carbon tax on energy, and issue significant green taxes on hydrocarbon-based chemicals, replacing them with processes derived from the organic, non-polluting, renewable resources, because it will ultimately help to eliminate most of the toxins in our food and water and the ozone-destroying chemicals in our atmosphere. "If we continue on the same path and find out forty, fifty, or one hundred years from now that the scientific projections about global warming were correct, it may be too late to mount an effective counter-strategy. On the other hand, if we choose to make the transition to an economy that runs on perpetual solar income and we later find out that the CO₂ buildup was less a problem than anticipated, we are still ahead on every count. We have eliminated hundreds of billions of tons of pollution from the air, ground and water, and improved health worldwide. We have engendered a myriad of new, safer, and friendlier technologies to replace those deposed. We have not poisoned the planet or our bodies with the toxins produced in a hydrocarbon-based economy. We have created hundreds of thousands of new companies and many more jobs than we lost, while moving toward a world whose work and money are infused with meaning and vision, toward a just and constructive future." (same, p.182-183)

Hawken is visionary and practical; he tackles the issues generically and specifically. Resources are not infinite in supply and we see that they are being depleted at an alarming rate. Therefore, Hawken introduces the term biological accounting, we have to end waste, shift to renewable power (solar, hydro, wind), and Hawken concludes: "We have to recognize that we've reached a watershed in the economy, a point at which 'growth' and profitability will be increasingly derived from the abatement of environmental degradation, the furthering of ecological restoration, and the mimicking of natural systems of production and consumption." (same, p.210)

15. SOCIAL RESPONSIBILITY OF MODERN BUSINESS TYCOONS - WARREN BUFFETT (BERKSHIRE HATHAWAY) - SUMMARY AND ANALYSIS

Based on the film:

Warren Buffett - Oracle of Omaha, 2000, 60 minutes, documentary about the story of Berkshire Hathaway.

Not all financial tycoons are Gordon Gekkos, Michael Milken or Ivan Boesky. Warren Buffett is an excellent example of a tycoon, controlling Berkshire Hathaway with integrity, taking into consideration the interests of the stakeholders, with a humane approach to business, while still becoming a billionaire. Recently, he decided to donate most of his fortune to the community.

In the 2002 Annual Report of Berkshire Hathaway Inc. Warren Buffett wrote that "Derivatives are financial weapons of mass destruction". He wrote this five years before the worst financial crisis since the Great Depression that was due mainly to the unethical use of derivatives with massive leverage, taking advantage of other people's money and ultimately being rescued by the government and the tax payer. Wall Street was at that period in euphoria and Buffett was among the few who saw the writing on the wall. He wrote: "The range of derivatives contracts is limited only by the imagination of man (or sometimes, so it seems, madmen). At Enron, for example, newsprint and broadband derivatives, due to be settled many years in the future, were put on the books. Or say you want to write a contract speculating on the number of twins to be born in Nebraska in 2020. No problem – at a price, you will easily find an obliging counterparty. When we purchased Gen Re, it came with General Re Securities, a derivatives dealer that Charlie and I didn't want, judging it to be dangerous. We failed in our attempts to sell the operation, however, and are now terminating it. But closing down a derivatives business is easier said than done. It will be a great many years before we are totally out of this operation (though we reduce our exposure daily). In fact, the reinsurance and derivatives businesses are similar: Like Hell, both are easy to enter and almost impossible to exit."

Nicknamed "The Oracle of Omaha", Buffett is one of the few sages in the world economy who did not participate in the Economic Whirl, whether it is the Dot.com Bubble, the Corporate Scandals or the Subprime Crisis. He saw the dangers of the virtual economy and wrote: "Another commonality of reinsurance and derivatives is that both generate reported earnings that are often wildly overstated. That's true because today's earnings are in a significant way based on estimates whose inaccuracy may not be exposed for many years... the parties to derivatives also have enormous incentives to cheat in accounting for them. Those who trade derivatives are usually paid (in whole or part) on "earnings" calculated by mark-to-market accounting. But often there is no real market (think about our contract involving twins) and "mark-to-model" is utilized. This substitution can bring on large-scale mischief... In recent years, some huge-scale frauds and near-fraud have been facilitated by derivatives trades. In the energy and electric utility sectors, for example, companies used derivatives and trading activities to report great "earnings" – until the roof fell in when they actually tried to convert the derivatives-related receivables on their balance sheets into cash. "Mark-to-market" then turned out to be truly "mark-to-myth." I can assure you that the marking errors in the derivatives business have not been symmetrical. Almost invariably, they have favored either the trader who was eyeing a multi-million dollar bonus or the CEO who wanted to report impressive “earnings” (or both). The bonuses were paid, and the CEO profited from his options. Only much later did shareholders learn that the reported earnings were a sham... Charlie and I believe, however, that the macro picture is dangerous and getting more so. Large amounts of risk, particularly credit risk, have become concentrated in the hands of relatively few derivatives dealers, who in addition trade extensively with one other. The troubles of one could quickly infect the others. On top of that, these dealers are owed huge amounts by non-dealer counterparties. Some of these counterparties, as I’ve mentioned, are linked in ways that could cause them to contemporaneously run into a problem because of a single event (such as the implosion of the telecom industry or the precipitous decline in the value of merchant power projects). Linkage, when it suddenly surfaces, can trigger serious systemic problems. Indeed, in 1998, the leveraged and derivatives-heavy activities of a single hedge fund, Long-Term Capital Management, caused the Federal Reserve anxieties so severe that it hastily orchestrated a rescue effort... The derivatives genie is now well out of the bottle, and these instruments will almost certainly multiply in variety and number until some event makes their toxicity clear. Knowledge of how dangerous they are has already permeated the electricity and gas businesses, in which the eruption of major troubles caused the use of derivatives to diminish dramatically. Elsewhere, however, the derivatives business continues to expand unchecked. Central banks and governments have so far found no effective way to control, or even monitor, the risks posed by these contracts. Charlie and I believe Berkshire should be a fortress of financial strength – for the sake of our owners, creditors, policyholders and employees. We try to be alert to any sort of megacatastrophe risk, and that posture may make us unduly apprehensive about the burgeoning quantities of long-term derivatives contracts and the massive amount of uncollateralized receivables that are growing alongside. In our view, however, derivatives are financial weapons of mass destruction, carrying dangers that, while now latent, are potentially lethal.” One would think that this essay was written as a penitential confession of an investment banker or a regulator in 2009...

Warren Edward Buffett (born August 30, 1930) is a wealthy American investor and businessman. Buffett has amassed an enormous fortune from astute investments, particularly through his company Berkshire Hathaway. In 2008, Buffett was ranked by Forbes as the richest person in the world with an estimated net worth of approximately $62 billion. Despite his immense wealth, Buffett is famous for his unpretentious and frugal lifestyle. He continues to live in the same suburban house in Omaha he bought in 1957 for $31,500. His chairman's salary from Berkshire Hathaway of $100,000 per annum is extremely modest by corporate American standards. Buffett is also a notable philanthropist, having pledged to give away 85% of his fortune to the Gates Foundation.

"Warren Buffett is not easy to describe. Physically, he is unremarkable, with looks often described as grandfatherly. Intellectually, he is considered a genius, yet his down-to-earth relationship with people is truly uncomplicated. He is simple, straightforward, forthright, and honest. He displays an engaging combination of sophisticated dry wit and cornball humor. He has a profound reverence for all things logical and a foul distate for imbecility. He embraces the simple and avoids the complicated.... When reading Berkshire's annual reports,... unabashed honesty. Buffett is candid in his reporting. He emphasizes both the pluses and the minuses of Berkshire's businesses... When Buffett took control of Berkshire the corporate net worth was $22 million. Forty years later, it has grown to $69 billion.... Since he took control of Berkshire in 1964, the gain has been much greater: Book value per share has grown from $19 to $50,498, a rate of 22.2 percent compounded annually." (Hagstrom, 2005, p.4)

Buffett's investment philosophy is based on a three-prong approach:

Generals: undervalued securities that possess margin of safety and meet expected risk/return characteristics

Arbitrages: company events that are not related to broader market changes such as mergers and acquisitions, liquidation, etc.

Controls: build sizable holdings, ally with other shareholders or employ proxies to effect changes in companies

Buffett views himself as capital allocator more than anything else. His primary responsibility is to allocate capital to businesses with good economics and keep their existing management to lead the company. Besides his skills in managing Berkshire's cash flow statement and income statement, Buffett is skilled in managing the company's balance sheet. Since taking over Berkshire Hathaway, Buffett has weighted every decision against their impact on the balance sheet. Knowing that he is not a computer prodigy or an innovation genius, Buffett set out to obtain a competitive advantage by building a financial fortress. Buffett takes comfort that in the foreseeable future his company will not be one of those shaken by economic or natural catastrophes. He repeated over the years that his insurance operation is the only one he knew that can clear the check the next morning. However, Berkshire Hathaway was shaken by the 2008 crisis. It suffered a 77% drop in earnings during Q3 2008 and several of his recent deals appear to be running into large mark-to-market losses. Buffett has called the downturn in the financial sector "poetic justice", but this justice penalized him as well. Yet, he remained faithful to his saying that one should be fearful when others are greedy and greedy when others are fearful, and after being very cautious in his investment policy in the years before the downturn he made during the 2008-2009 downturn large investments in what he perceives as lucrative investments.

Over the years, his purchases of entire companies with Berkshire's cash included National Indemnity from Jack Ringwalt, National Fire and Marine Insurance, Illinois National Bank and Trust from Eugene Abegg, Blue Chip Stamps, See's Candies, Buffalo News, Wesco Financials, Mutual Savings and Loans, Associated Retail Stores, etc. When choosing common stocks, Berkshire employs a focused strategy with a medium to long term horizon. Stock picks from 1970s through 1980s included GEICO, Washington Post Company, Capital Cities/ABC, Ogilvy & Mather International, Interpublic Group of Companies, Knight-Ridder Newspaper, Kaiser Industries, SAFECO Corporation, Amerada Hess, Affiliated Publications, Media Generals, Times Inc., General Foods, R.J. Reynolds Industries, Beatrice, F.W. Woolworth Company, Exxon Corporation, Handy & Harman, Freddie Mac, Coca-Cola Companies, etc. Arbitrage positions included Arcata Corporation which was sold to KKR.

While being very ethical, Buffett does not focus his investments in ethical investments, clean technologies or ethical funds. During the RJR Nabisco, Inc. hostile takeover fight in 1987, Buffett was quoted as telling John Gutfreund: "I'll tell you why I like cigarette business. It costs a penny to make. Sell it for a dollar. It's addictive. And there's fantastic brand loyalty." Jeffrey Wigand wouldn't have liked this remark after having sacrificed his career in order to prove that cigarettes were addictive, thus saving probably the lives of millions by his revelations. Buffett cannot be compared either to Paul Hawken or Ray Anderson, to Ben & Jerry's and many other ethical investors and executives. But we need heroes, different than the "rotten apples" that are increasing exponentially. Even if he invests in investment banks, in AIG or in Coca Cola, that would not be the prime choice of ethical funds, he does it in a very ethical way, transparent, honest, achieving one of the highest return on investment with a minimal risk in the long run. Buffett stated that he only paid 19% of his income from 2006 in total federal taxes, while his employees paid 33% of theirs, despite making much less money. Buffett favors the inheritance tax and believes government should not be in the business of gambling. That is quite different than the neo liberal approach on taxation and regulation, and he cannot be nicknamed "anti-business" as many neo social thinkers that hold similar views are named, because he is the richest businessman in the world and we all know that "you can't argue with success..."

16. JOSEPH STIGLITZ – A THIRD WAY ALTERNATIVE FOR CAPITALISM, GLOBALIZATION, AND SOCIAL AND ECONOMIC JUSTICE

Joseph Eugene Stiglitz, born in 1943, is an American economist and a member of the Columbia University faculty. He received the Nobel Prize in 2001. Stiglitz served in the Clinton Administration as the chair of the President's Council of Economic Advisers. Former Senior Vice President and Chief Economist of the World Bank, he is famous for his critical view of globalization, free-market economists (market fundamentalists, neo-liberals or Washington Consensus advocates) and some international institutions like the IMF and the World Bank. Stiglitz writes: "The Washington Consensus policies, however, were based on a simplistic model of the market economy, the competitive equilibrium model, in which Adam Smith's invisible hand works, and works perfectly. Because in this model there is no need for government – that is, free, unfettered, "liberal" markets work perfectly – the Washington Consensus policies are sometimes referred to as "neo-liberals", based on "market fundamentalism", a resuscitation of the laissez-faire policies that were popular in some circles in the nineteenth century. In the aftermath of the Great Depression and the recognition of other failings of the market system, from massive inequality to unlivable cities marred by pollution and decay, these free market policies have been widely rejected in the more advanced industrial countries, though within these countries there remains an active debate about the appropriate balance between government and markets." (Stiglitz, Globalization and its Discontents, p.74)

Stiglitz perceives a danger that following the neo-liberal policies, the social cohesiveness of the countries will be eroded. The citizens will cease to abide by the rules and a social agitation will occur. One of the "rules" is that the poor should benefit from the prosperity in times of growth and the rich would bear their part of the burden in times of recession. Unfortunately, the present situation is in many cases similar to the song "With you it's all or nothing – all for you and nothing for me". In times of recession the poor are requested to bear their part in the burden and the state assists the corporations and tycoons, cut the taxes and subsidizes them. In times of growth the poor do not share the growth, as nothing trickles down, and the state is not rewarded by the corporations, although many officials may be rewarded personally with positions in multinationals, huge salaries and stock options. "Trickle-down economics was never much more than just a belief, an article of faith. Pauperism seemed to grow in nineteenth-century England even though the country as a whole prospered. Growth in America in the 1980s provided the most recent dramatic example: while the economy grew, those at the bottom saw their real incomes decline. The Clinton administration had argued strongly against trickle-down economics; it believed that there had to be active programs to help the poor." (same, p.78) Stiglitz says that one Nobel Prize winner, Arthur Lewis, argued that inequality was good for development and economic growth, since the rich save more than the poor, and the key to growth is capital accumulation. However, South Korea, China, Taiwan and Japan showed that high savings did not require high inequality, that one could achieve rapid growth, without a substantial increase in inequality. Governments ensured that wage inequalities were kept in bounds, that educational opportunity was extended to all. Their policies led to social and political stability, which in turn contributed to an economic environment in which business flourished.

Elsewhere, where governments adopted the Washington Consensus policies, the poor have benefited less from growth. In Latin America, growth has not been accompanied by a reduction in inequality, or even a reduction in poverty. In some cases poverty has actually increased, as evidenced by the urban slums that dot the landscape. The IMF talks with pride about the progress Latin America has made in market reforms over the last decade of the century. But most of the progress didn't trickle down to the poor, Argentina, the star student, collapsed in 2001, and recession and stagnation have afflicted many "reform" countries recently. Stiglitz examines at length the economic saga of Russia and its oligarchs: "At one point, they claimed to control 50 percent of the country's wealth! Defenders of the oligarchs liken them to America's robber barons, the Harrimans and Rockfellers. But there is a big difference between the activities of such figures in nineteenth-century capitalism, even those carving out railway and mining baronies in America's Wild West, and the Russian oligarchy's exploitation of Russia, what has been called the Wild East. America's robber barons created wealth, even as they accumulated fortunes. They left a country much richer, even if they got a big slice of the larger pie. Russia's oligarchs stole assets, stripped them, leaving their country much poorer. The enterprises were left on the verge of bankruptcy, while the oligarch's bank accounts were enriched." (same, p.160) Stiglitz even sees an analogy between the neo-liberals' methods and the bolsheviks' methods, after all - why not?, as extremists behave identically if they are fascists, capitalists or bolsheviks, fundamentalists or fanatics, in a way that oppresses the masses and is profoundly undemocratic and inhumane. This is the insurmountable difference between the precepts of Aristotle, Kant and the Bible and those of Machiavelli, the Darwinists and the Utilitarians: "In effect, the radical reformers employed Bolshevik strategies – though they were reading from different texts. The Bolsheviks tried to impose communism on a reluctant country in the years following 1917. They argued that the way to build socialism was for an elite cadre to 'lead' (often a euphemism for 'force') the masses into the correct path, which was not necessarily the path the masses wanted or thought best. In the 'new' post-Communist revolution in Russia, an elite, spearheaded by international bureaucrats, similarly attempted to force rapid change on a reluctant population." (same, p.163)

Stiglitz traces his credo in the last chapter of his book - "The Way Ahead", maintaining that there is an alternative to the neo-liberal ideology and it works well in many countries, a Third Way, an Aristotelian way, a balanced view: "But there is not just one market model. There are striking differences between the Japanese version of the market system and the German, Swedish, and American versions. There are several countries with per capita income comparable to that of the United States, but where inequality is lower, poverty is less, and health and other aspects of living standards higher (at least in the judgment of those living there). While the market is at the center of both the Swedish and American versions of capitalism, government takes on quite different roles. In Sweden, the government takes on far greater responsibilities promoting social welfare; it continues to provide far better public health, far better unemployment insurance, and far better retirement benefits than does the United States. Yet it has been every bit as successful, even in terms of the innovations associated with the 'New Economy'. For many Americans, but not all, the American model has worked well; for most Swedes, the American model is viewed as unacceptable – they believe their model has served them well. For Asians, a variety of Asian models has worked well, and this is true for Malaysia and Korea as well as China and Taiwan, even taking into account the global financial crisis... In my own work – both in my writings and in my role as the president's economic adviser and chief economist of the World Bank – I have advocated a balanced view of the role of government, one which recognizes both the limitations and failures of markets and government, but which sees the two as working together, in partnership, with the precise nature of that partnership differing among countries, depending on their stages of both political and economic development. But at whatever stage of political and economic development a country is, government makes a difference. Weak governments and too-intrusive governments have both hurt stability and growth. The Asia financial crisis was brought on by a lack of adequate regulation of the financial sector. Mafia capitalism in Russia by a failure to enforce the basics of law and order. Privatization without the necessary institutional infrastructure in the transition countries led to asset stripping rather than wealth creation. In other countries, privatized monopolies, without regulation, were more capable of exploiting consumers than the state monopolies. By contrast, privatization accompanied by regulation, corporate restructuring, and strong corporate governance has led to higher growth." (same, p.217-220)

Stiglitz believes that we can use the force of the markets to provide incentives in order to make globalization and national economies better. We have learned how to temper the problems of market economy. We have learned how to make sure that the market's benefits do not go just to a few people at the top but are enjoyed broadly by society as a whole. We have learned that we have to regulate markets, there is an important role of government providing safety nets, supporting research, developing new ideas, providing first rate education. We have striven to get a balance between the role of the market and government. These lessons have to be extended to the way we run global economy. We have a global society, in which we become more interdependent, but we don't have yet a global system of dealing with the political consequences, and it is this gap between economic globalization and political globalization that is at the core of so many problems that we see with globalization today. Stiglitz believes that not only is another world possible, he believes that another world is necessary. He knows that economically this other world is possible. He knows that on the basis of economics we can make globalization work. The issue today is one of politics. Can we use the forces of democracy; can we narrow the gap between economic globalization and political globalization? If we can, then he believes that we can reshape globalization, we can make globalization and national economies work not only for the rich and the richest countries of the world but for the poor and the rich in the developed and the developing countries alike.

Tycoons, multinationals and neo-liberal governments need the employees to work in their companies and to pay income taxes, need the consumers to buy their products and to pay sales taxes, need the suppliers, the communities, need also environment and earth as business cannot exist in a vacuum. It is possible that corporations would prefer to have a minimum number of workers, as some garment and athletic shoes companies, will subcontract all their production or possibly their R&D, QA, accounting, human resources, sales and advertising. A company of one person, the CEO, could be the Milton Friedman's ideal, outsourcing everything, working with temporary workers without social benefits, with subcontractors in sweat shops, and with American Idols as Michael Jordan. It is possible that corporations would prefer to be a monopoly, controlling 95% of the market as some hi-tech or software companies, charging very high prices for their products with an insurmountable amount of bugs as there is no alternative for the customers. It is even possible that companies would ruin the environment like many petrochemical companies, externalizing all their costs, forcing communities to pay for cleaning the pollution while other companies will manage to force all of us to buy their patented genetically engineered seeds together with their unsustainable herbicides.

But if the customers, the employees and the communities would exert their strength and their rights, if we could find alternatives, if we could change the ideology from maximizing profits to finding the right equilibrium between all the stakeholders, we could restore David's fallen tent, repair its broken places, renew its ruins, and build the corporation as it used to be – an organization intended to serve society, to take part in the community activities, to employ many employees that would be contented with their work, to deliver goods and services which will satisfy the customers, to be sustainable and not pollute the environment, and to have a social responsibility, all that while obtaining an optimal profitability and an adequate return on investment. Not maximizing anything but achieving a holistic harmony of the interests of all stakeholders – employees and executives, customers, controlling and minority shareholders, suppliers, community, country, ecology, earth, in a healthy and sustainable environment with happy, equal and sociable people, working in companies which do not exist in order to be profitable but which are profitable in order to live.

17. SUSTAINABLE JUSTICE – TEN COMPONENTS IN TEN LANGUAGES

The cosmopolitan gist of this book elaborates ten components of sustainable justice in ten languages summarizing Cory's beliefs on sustainable, social, economic, governmental, public, ecological and global justice, meaning the same in all the languages, philosophy and religions, in Hebrew, Aramaic, Spanish, Latin, Norwegian, English, German, Italian, Ladino or French.

1. Sustainable Justice should be holistic, encompassing all systems of life in harmonious unity.

"There are seven things that will destroy us: Wealth without Work, Pleasure without Conscience, Knowledge without Character, Religion without Sacrifice, Politics without Principle, Science without Humanity, Business without Ethics." Mahatma Gandhi. In English, Indian philosophy.

2. Social Justice should not be received from government, tycoons, but coming from the people.

"Justice is not requested. Justice is not given. Justice is growing from the bottom, from the people, from a man who helped his friend in need, from a house who was open for the poor, from a husband who was kind to his wife, from a son who respected his father, from a friend who didn't cheat his friend. Justice is like wheat and barley. You cannot find it in another country – but in your country." Milhemet bnei or, Moshe Shamir, in Hebrew.

"צדק אין מבקשים אותו. צדק אינו ניתן. צדק דרכו שהוא צומח. מקרקעו של עם, מאדם שסייע לחברו בשעת הדחק, מבית שנפתחה דלתו לאביון, מאדם שנהג חיבה באשתו, מבן שנהג כבוד באביו, מחבר שלא הונה את חברו. צדק כמוהו כחיטה וכשעורה. לא בארץ אחרת תמצאנו - אלא בארץ".
דברי שמעון בן שטח, מלחמת בני אור, משה שמיר

3. There is no Economic Justice when society doesn't ostracize the wrongdoers, the "haircutters".

"Hoy resulta que es lo mismo ser derecho que traidor...! Ignorante, sabio o chorro, generoso o estafador...! Todo es igual. Nada es mejor." Tango Cambalache, Enrique Santos Discepolo.

"Today, there is the same result if you are honest or you don't keep your promises! Ignorant, wise, licentious, generous or scoundrel! Everybody is the same. No one is better!" Tango Cambalache, Enrique Santos Discepolo, Argentina, in Spanish.

4. For achieving Governmental and Public Justice, one should denounce the wrongs.

"Qui tacet, consentire videtur, ubi loqui debuit ac potuit" Latin proverb, in Latin.

"He who is silent, when he ought to have spoken and was able to, is taken to agree."

5. There is no Legal Justice when there is a huge gap between the law which favors the rich and powerful and justice which is meant to assist the weak and poor.

"Les lois sont des toiles d'araignées à travers lesquelles passent les grosses mouches et où restent les petites" La maison Nucingen, Honoré de Balzac.

"The laws are spider's webs that the fat flies succeed to go through, while the small flies get stuck to them." La maison Nucingen, Honore de Balzac, in French.

6. Communication Justice is achieved with transparency and full reporting of the wrongdoing to the public without interference of the government or powerful tycoons.

"Und Macheath, der hat ein Messer Doch das Messer sieht man nicht." Die Dreigroschenoper, Bertolt Brecht.

"Und Macheath has got a knife

But the knife remains unseen."

The Threepenny Opera, Bertolt Brecht, in German.

7. Educational Justice is meant to prevent conformism and imitation of the wrongdoers.

"Chi va con lo zoppo impara a zoppare".

"He who goes with the crook learns to be a crook". Italian proverb, in Italian.

8. Cultural Justice will be achieved if the intelligentsia will dare to express itself, even if they are alone, against the wrongdoing of the government, business and society.

"Den sterkeste mann i verden, det er han som står mest alene." En Folkefiende, Henrik Ibsen.

"The strongest man in the world is he who stands alone most of the time." An Enemy of the People, Ibsen, in Norwegian.

9. Ecological Justice will be achieved if we can perceive on time the storm that is ahead of us, that can ruin the world.

"La dulce esperansa repoza sovre su kuesta,

I no lo desha sentir la boz de una tempesta

Ke furioza, menaza de destruyir el mundo."

La Vinya de Navot, Yosef Avraam Papo

"Sweet hope resides on its summit

Without being able to hear the noise of the tempest

That furious, is threatening to destroy the world."

La Vinya de Navot, Yosef Avraam Papo, in Ladino.

10. Global Justice will be achieved when all nations, societies and human beings will adhere to the Golden Rule, which is the basis of ethics and justice.

"דעליך סני לחברך לא תעביד" (שבת לא א – הלל)

One should not treat others in ways that one would not like to be treated. (Shabat, 31:1), in Aramaic. In Judaism, Christianity, Islam, Confucionism, Buddhism, Hinduism, etc.

18. COSMOPOLITAN QUOTES ON BUSINESS ETHICS

1. “Morten: And what are we going to do, when you have made liberal-minded and high-minded men of us?”

Dr. Stockman: Then you shall drive all the wolves out of the country, my boys!”

(Ibsen, An Enemy of the People, Act V)

2. “Selon que vous serez puissant ou miserable,

Les jugements de Cour vous rendront blanc ou noir.”

According to your mighty or miserable position,

The judgment of court will render you white or black.

(La Fontaine, Fables, Livre septieme, Fable I)

3. “All truth passes through three stages. First, it is ridiculed. Second, it is violently opposed. Third, it’s accepted as being self-evident.”

(Arthur Schopenhauer, German philosopher, 1788-1860)

4. “I’ve become rich, friendless and mean, and in America, that’s as far as you can go.”

(Mr. Vandergelder, “Hello, Dolly!”)

5. “The accomplice of a thief is his own enemy;

He is put under oath and dare not testify.”

(The Bible, Proverbs, 29:24)

6. “In a too limpid water, there are no fishes.”

(Zen Proverb)

7. “Dr. Stockman: And just look here, Katherine – they have torn a great rent in my black trousers too!

Mrs. Stockman: Oh, dear! – and they are the best pair you have got!

Dr. Stockman: You should never wear your best trousers when you go out to fight for freedom and truth.”

(Ibsen, An Enemy of the People, Act V)

8. “Now a traveler came to the rich man,
But the rich man refrained from taking one of his own sheep or cattle
To prepare a meal for the traveler who had come to him.
Instead, he took the ewe lamb that belonged to the poor man
And prepared it for the one who had come to him.”
David burned with anger against the man and said to Nathan,
“As surely as the Lord lives, the man who did this deserves to die!
He must pay for the lamb four times over,
Because he did such a thing and had no pity.”
Then Nathan said to David: “You are the man!”
(The Bible, 2 Samuel, 12:4-7)

9. “Obsequium amicos veritas odium parit”
Readiness to oblige creates friends, frankness engenders hatred
(Terence, Andrienne, I,1,68)

10. “Hippolyte – Quelques crimes toujours precedent les grands crimes.
Quiconque a pu franchir les bornes legitimes
Peut violer enfin les droits les plus sacres;
Ainsi que la vertu, le crime a ses degres;
Et jamais on n’a vu la timide innocence
Passer subitement a l’extreme licence.”
(Racine, Phedre, Acte IV, Scene II, 1094-1098)

“Hippolyte – Some crimes always precede major crimes.
Whoever has crossed the legitimate borders
Can ultimately violate the most sacred rights;

As with virtue, crime has its degrees;
 And never have we seen timid innocence
 Cross over suddenly to extreme license.”

11. “He who walks righteously and speaks what is right, who rejects gain from extortion and keeps his hand from accepting bribes, who stops his ears against plots of murder and shuts his eyes against contemplating evil – this is the man who will dwell on the heights, whose refuge will be the mountain fortress.
 His bread will be supplied, and water will not fail him.
 Your eyes will see the king in his beauty and view a land that stretches afar.
 In your thoughts you will ponder the former terror:
 ‘Where is that chief officer?
 Where is the one who took the revenue?
 Where is the officer in charge of the towers?’
 You will see those arrogant people no more,
 those people of an obscure speech, with their strange, incomprehensible tongue.”
 (The Bible, Isaiah, 34:15)

12. “The problem with being in the rat race is, even if you win, you’re still a rat.”
 (Lily Tomlin)

13. “Les vertus se perdent dans l’interet comme les fleuves se perdent dans la mer.”
 Virtues get lost by personal interests like rivers that disappear into the sea.
 (La Rochefoucauld, Maximes)

14. “God loves from whole to parts; but human soul
 Must rise from individual to the whole.

Self-love but serves the virtuous mind to wake,
 As the small pebble stirs the peaceful lake;
 The centre moved, a circle strait succeeds,
 Another still, and still another spreads;
 Friend, parent, neighbour, first will it embrace;
 His country next; and next all human race.”
 (Alexander Pope, 1688-1744, An Essay on Man)

15. "The truth can wait, for it lives a long life"
 (Arthur Schopenhauer, German philosopher, 1788-1860)

16. “This is the land of the great big dogs, you don't love a man here, you eat him! That's the principle; the only one we live by.”
 (Miller, All My Sons, Act Three)

17. “It is often easier to fight for principles than to live up to them.”
 (Adlai E. Stevenson in a lecture in New York City in 1952)

18. “No servant can serve two masters. Either he will hate the one and love the other, or he will be devoted to the one and despise the other. You cannot serve both God and Money.” (The Bible, The New Testament, Luke, 16:13)

19. “Do not exploit the poor because they are poor
 And do not crush the needy in court,
 For the Lord will take up their case
 And will plunder those who plunder them.”
 (The Bible, Proverbs, 22:22-23)

"על דאטעם – אטפוד, וסוף מטיפיד – יטופון"

Al deateft atafouh - vesof metifaih yetoufoun (Aramaic).

"Because you have drowned others - you were drowned, and those who have drowned you - will be drowned."

When Hillel the wise, as told in the Jewish Mishna, saw the head of a robber whom he knew, floating in the river, Hillel said: "Because you have robbed and murdered your victims and thrown their bodies into the river, your murderers who are also criminals have murdered you, and their crime will be punished by other criminals who will also kill them and throw their bodies into the river."

The Mishna says in Sanhedrin (kof, ain aleph):

"במידה שאדם מודד – מודדין לו"

Bemida sheadam moded – modedin lo.

"A criminal is punished by the same measure of his crime."

Haman wanted to hang Mordachai and he himself was hanged. The Egyptians drowned the Hebrew babies and were themselves drowned while chasing the Hebrews who fled from Egypt.

20. "And We showed them the two highways. But they have not embarked upon the steep road. And what will convey to you what the steep road is? Emancipating a slave, or feeding on a day of hunger an orphaned relative or a pauper in misery. The one will be of those who believe, and enjoin patience on one another, and exhort each other to kindness: they are the company on the Right Hand. But those who repudiate our signs, they are the company on the Left Hand: over them will be a vault of fire."

(Koran, The City, 10-20)

21. "Dr. Stockman: Well, but is it not the duty of a citizen to let the public share in any new ideas he may have?

Peter Stockman: Oh, the public doesn't require any new ideas. The public is best served by the good, old-established ideas it already has."

(Ibsen, An Enemy of the People, Act II)

22. "I tell you the truth, unless you change and become like little children, you will never enter the kingdom of heaven. Therefore, whoever humbles himself like this child is the greatest in the kingdom of heaven."

(The Bible, Matthew, 18:3-4)

23. The TV series Yes Minister describes the trials of the British minister James Hacker and his chief of cabinet, Sir Humphrey Appleby. The minister discovers that the British government has received a contract from an Arab country by paying bribes. He is scandalized by his discovery and tries to clarify the facts with Sir Humphrey.

"Humphrey. Are you telling me that BES got the contract through bribery?"

He looked pained. 'I wish you wouldn't use words like 'bribery', Minister.'

I asked if he'd prefer that I use words like slush fund, sweeteners, or brown envelopes.

He patronisingly informed me that these are, in his view, extremely crude and unworthy expressions for what is no more than creative negotiation.

'It is the general practice', he asserted.

I asked him if he realised just what he was saying. After all, I ratified this contract myself, in good faith.

'And in that communicate I announced to the press a British success in a fair fight.'

'Yes,' he mused, 'I did wonder about that bit.'

'And now,' I fumed, 'you are telling me we got it by bribery?'

'No, Minister,' he replied firmly.

There seemed to be a light at the end of the tunnel. My spirits lifted.

'Ah,' I said, 'we didn't get it by bribery.'

'That's not what I said,' he said carefully.

'Well what did you say?'

'I said I am not telling you we got it by bribery.'

(Lynn and Jay, Yes Minister, p. 412)

24. "- Signor Hakham, el asno se cayo al poso!

- No se puede hazer nada, car c'est Hilul Shabat, il est défendu de travailler le jour du Sabbath.

- Ma es su asno, signor Hakham!

- Ah Dio santo! Se deve salvarlo! Mon Dieu, dans ce cas la, Pikuah nefesh dokhe Shabat, pour sauver une âme on peut faire outre du Sabbath."

(Kuento, Judeo-Spanish folk story, told in Ladino, French and Hebrew, by Pauline & Albert Cory)

"- Mister Rabbi, the donkey has fallen into the well!

- We cannot do anything, as it would be the sacrilege of Sabbath if we work on the holy day.

- But it is your donkey, Mister Rabbi!

- Good Lord! We have to save him! It is permitted in the Law to work on Sabbath in order to save a soul."

25. "Conscience is but a word that cowards use,

Devis'd at first to keep the strong in awe:

Our strong arms be our conscience, swords our law.

March on, join bravely, let us to't pell-mell;

If not to heaven, then hand in hand to hell."

(Shakespeare, Richard III, Act V, Scene III)

26. "Theories are like nets: only those who throw them, will fish."

(Novalis)

27. "Who will guard the guards themselves?"

(Juvenal, Satires)

28. "A gift from the Danaans, and no ruse?

Is that Ulysses' way, as you have known him?

Achaeans must be hiding in this timber,

Or it was built to butt against our walls,

Peer over them into our houses, pelt

The city from the sky. Some crookedness

Is in this thing. Have no faith in the horse!

Whatever it is, even when Greeks bring gifts

I fear them, gifts and all. 'Timeo Danaos et dona ferentes.' "

(Virgil, The Aeneid, Book II, 62-70)

29. Nihil agis, nihil moliris, nihil cogitas, quod non ego non modo audiam, sed etiam videam planeque sentiam.

Nothing you do, nothing you undertake, nothing you plan that I would not only hear but would indeed plainly see and observe.

(Cicero in the Senate, the first oration against Catiline)

30. "Je fis souffler un vent révolutionnaire.

Je mis un bonnet rouge au vieux dictionnaire.

Plus de mot sénateur! plus de mot roturier!

Je fis une tempête au fond de l'encrier,

Et je mêlai, parmi les ombres débordées,

Au peuple noir des mots l'essaim blanc des idées;

Et je dis: Pas de mot ou l'idée au vol pur

Ne puisse se poser, toute humide d'azur!...

Je bondis hors du cercle et brisai le compas.

Je nommai le cochon par son nom; pourquoi pas?"

(Victor Hugo, Reponse a un acte d'accusation, Reply to a bill of indictment)

"I have swept a revolutionary wind.

I have put a red hat on the old dictionary.

No more noble! no more common people!

I have made a tempest at the bottom of the inkstand,

And I have blended, between the overloaded shadows,

The white swarm of ideas with the black multitude of words;

And I said: No words where the pure flight of ideas

Cannot land on, all humid from the azure sky!...

I have leaped out of the ring and broken the compass.

I have pointed the finger at the pig; why not?

19. UNITED NATIONS' UNIVERSAL DECLARATION OF HUMAN RIGHTS

Jacques Cory has quoted in his books the United Nations' Universal Declaration of Human Rights and teaches it in his courses. The Declaration was translated into 444 languages and Cory has initiated, translated (with Ladinocomunita) and edited the translation of the document into Ladino, his mother tongue. This Declaration is the most comprehensive document on cosmopolitan human rights, business ethics, sustainable, social, economic, educational, and governmental justice. It is the common basis of international ethics and law.

Universal Declaration of Human Rights

Preamble

Whereas recognition of the inherent dignity and of the equal and inalienable rights of all members of the human family is the foundation of freedom, justice and peace in the world,

Whereas disregard and contempt for human rights have resulted in barbarous acts which have outraged the conscience of mankind, and the advent of a world in which human beings shall enjoy freedom of speech and belief and freedom from fear and want has been proclaimed as the highest aspiration of the common people,

Whereas it is essential, if man is not to be compelled to have recourse, as a last resort, to rebellion against tyranny and oppression, that human rights should be protected by the rule of law,

Whereas it is essential to promote the development of friendly relations between nations,

Whereas the peoples of the United Nations have in the Charter reaffirmed their faith in fundamental human rights, in the dignity and worth of the human person and in the equal rights of men and women and have determined to promote social progress and better standards of life in larger freedom,

Whereas Member States have pledged themselves to achieve, in cooperation with the United Nations, the promotion of universal respect for and observance of human rights and fundamental freedoms,

Whereas a common understanding of these rights and freedoms is of the greatest importance for the full realization of this pledge,

Now, therefore,

The General Assembly,

Proclaims this Universal Declaration of Human Rights as a common standard of achievement for all peoples and all nations, to the end that every individual and every organ of society, keeping this Declaration constantly in mind, shall strive by teaching and education to promote respect for these rights and freedoms and by progressive measures, national and international, to secure their universal and effective recognition and observance, both among the peoples of Member States themselves and among the peoples of territories under their jurisdiction.

Article 1

All human beings are born free and equal in dignity and rights. They are endowed with reason and conscience and should act towards one another in a spirit of brotherhood.

Article 2

Everyone is entitled to all the rights and freedoms set forth in this Declaration, without distinction of any kind, such as race, colour, sex, language, religion, political or other opinion, national or social origin, property, birth or other status.

Furthermore, no distinction shall be made on the basis of the political, jurisdictional or international status of the country or territory to which a person belongs, whether it be independent, trust, non-self-governing or under any other limitation of sovereignty.

Article 3

Everyone has the right to life, liberty and security of person.

Article 4

No one shall be held in slavery or servitude; slavery and the slave trade shall be prohibited in all their forms.

Article 5

No one shall be subjected to torture or to cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment.

Article 6

Everyone has the right to recognition everywhere as a person before the law.

Article 7

All are equal before the law and are entitled without any discrimination to equal protection of the law. All are entitled to equal protection against any discrimination in violation of this Declaration and against any incitement to such discrimination.

Article 8

Everyone has the right to an effective remedy by the competent national tribunals for acts violating the fundamental rights granted him by the constitution or by law.

Article 9

No one shall be subjected to arbitrary arrest, detention or exile.

Article 10

Everyone is entitled in full equality to a fair and public hearing by an independent and impartial tribunal, in the determination of his rights and obligations and of any criminal charge against him.

Article 11

1. Everyone charged with a penal offence has the right to be presumed innocent until proved guilty according to law in a public trial at which he has had all the guarantees necessary for his defence.
2. No one shall be held guilty of any penal offence on account of any act or omission which did not constitute a penal offence, under national or international law, at the time when it was committed. Nor shall a heavier penalty be imposed than the one that was applicable at the time the penal offence was committed.

Article 12

No one shall be subjected to arbitrary interference with his privacy, family, home or correspondence, nor to attacks upon his honour and reputation. Everyone has the right to the protection of the law against such interference or attacks.

Article 13

1. Everyone has the right to freedom of movement and residence within the borders of each State.
2. Everyone has the right to leave any country, including his own, and to return to his country.

Article 14

1. Everyone has the right to seek and to enjoy in other countries asylum from persecution.
2. This right may not be invoked in the case of prosecutions genuinely arising from non-political crimes or from acts contrary to the purposes and principles of the United Nations.

Article 15

1. Everyone has the right to a nationality.
2. No one shall be arbitrarily deprived of his nationality nor denied the right to change his nationality.

Article 16

1. Men and women of full age, without any limitation due to race, nationality or religion, have the right to marry and to found a family. They are entitled to equal rights as to marriage, during marriage and at its dissolution.
2. Marriage shall be entered into only with the free and full consent of the intending spouses.
3. The family is the natural and fundamental group unit of society and is entitled to protection by society and the State.

Article 17

1. Everyone has the right to own property alone as well as in association with others.
2. No one shall be arbitrarily deprived of his property.

Article 18

Everyone has the right to freedom of thought, conscience and religion; this right includes freedom to change his religion or belief, and freedom, either alone or in community with others and in public or private, to manifest his religion or belief in teaching, practice, worship and observance.

Article 19

Everyone has the right to freedom of opinion and expression; this right includes freedom to hold opinions without interference and to seek, receive and impart information and ideas through any media and regardless of frontiers.

Article 20

1. Everyone has the right to freedom of peaceful assembly and association.
2. No one may be compelled to belong to an association.

Article 21

1. Everyone has the right to take part in the government of his country, directly or through freely chosen representatives.
2. Everyone has the right to equal access to public service in his country.
3. The will of the people shall be the basis of the authority of government; this will shall be expressed in periodic and genuine elections which shall be by universal and equal suffrage and shall be held by secret vote or by equivalent free voting procedures.

Article 22

Everyone, as a member of society, has the right to social security and is entitled to realization, through national effort and international co-operation and in accordance with the organization and resources of each State, of the economic, social and cultural rights indispensable for his dignity and the free development of his personality.

Article 23

1. Everyone has the right to work, to free choice of employment, to just and favourable conditions of work and to protection against unemployment.
2. Everyone, without any discrimination, has the right to equal pay for equal work.
3. Everyone who works has the right to just and favourable remuneration ensuring for himself and his family an existence worthy of human dignity, and supplemented, if necessary, by other means of social protection.
4. Everyone has the right to form and to join trade unions for the protection of his interests.

Article 24

Everyone has the right to rest and leisure, including reasonable limitation of working hours and periodic holidays with pay.

Article 25

1. Everyone has the right to a standard of living adequate for the health and well-being of himself and of his family, including food, clothing, housing and medical care and necessary social services, and the right to security in the event of unemployment, sickness, disability, widowhood, old age or other lack of livelihood in circumstances beyond his control.
2. Motherhood and childhood are entitled to special care and assistance. All children, whether born in or out of wedlock, shall enjoy the same social protection.

Article 26

1. Everyone has the right to education. Education shall be free, at least in the elementary and fundamental stages. Elementary education shall be compulsory. Technical and professional education shall be made generally available and higher education shall be equally accessible to all on the basis of merit.
2. Education shall be directed to the full development of the human personality and to the strengthening of respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms. It shall promote understanding, tolerance and friendship among all nations, racial or religious groups, and shall further the activities of the United Nations for the maintenance of peace.
3. Parents have a prior right to choose the kind of education that shall be given to their children.

Article 27

1. Everyone has the right freely to participate in the cultural life of the community, to enjoy the arts and to share in scientific advancement and its benefits.
2. Everyone has the right to the protection of the moral and material interests resulting from any scientific, literary or artistic production of which he is the author.

Article 28

Everyone is entitled to a social and international order in which the rights and freedoms set forth in this Declaration can be fully realized.

Article 29

1. Everyone has duties to the community in which alone the free and full development of his personality is possible.

2. In the exercise of his rights and freedoms, everyone shall be subject only to such limitations as are determined by law solely for the purpose of securing due recognition and respect for the rights and freedoms of others and of meeting the just requirements of morality, public order and the general welfare in a democratic society.
3. These rights and freedoms may in no case be exercised contrary to the purposes and principles of the United Nations.

Article 30

Nothing in this Declaration may be interpreted as implying for any State, group or person any right to engage in any activity or to perform any act aimed at the destruction of any of the rights and freedoms set forth herein.

20. ANALYSIS OF CORRUPTION PERCEPTIONS INDICES IN 2012-2014, 2005, 1996 AND 1995: TRANSPARENCY INTERNATIONAL'S RANKING OF ETHICS AND CORRUPTION IN THE WORLD

Each year countries are scored on how corrupt their public sectors are perceived to be. It is a combination of surveys and assessments of corruption, collected by a variety of reputable institutions. The CPI is the most widely used indicator of corruption worldwide. Corruption comprises illegal activities, which are deliberately hidden and only come to light through scandals, investigations or prosecutions. There is no meaningful way to assess absolute levels of corruption in countries or territories on the basis of hard empirical data. Capturing perceptions of corruption of those in a position to offer assessments of public sector corruption is the most reliable method of comparing relative corruption levels in countries.

Transparency International (TI) maintains that corruption is a major threat facing humanity, it destroys lives and communities and undermines countries and institutions. It generates popular anger that threatens to further destabilise societies and exacerbate violent conflicts. The Corruption Perception Index (CPI) scores countries on a scale from 0 – highly corrupt – to 100 – very clean. While no country has a perfect score, two-thirds of the countries score below 50, indicating a serious corruption problem. Corruption translates into human suffering, with poor families being extorted for bribes to see doctors or to get access to clean drinking water. It leads to failure in the delivery of basic services like education or health care. It derails the building of essential infrastructure, as corrupt leaders skim funds. Corruption amounts to a dirty tax, and the poor and most vulnerable are its primary victims. Governments need to integrate anti-corruption actions into all aspects of decision-making. They must prioritise better rules on lobbying and political financing, make public spending and contracting more transparent, and make public bodies more accountable. But corruption is not limited only to the public sectors, as examined in the surveys of TI. It spills over to all the segments of activities in the country, first of all to business, but also to the relations with all the stakeholders in society – customers, environment, employees, community, suppliers, shareholders and especially minority shareholders, creditors, all levels of society, the media, education, welfare, hospitals, schools, universities, culture, and so on. Those problems are the leitmotif in all the research, courses, books, lectures and articles of Dr. Jacques Cory, who was also a member of TI's Board in Israel, and were presented to the management of Transparency International in Berlin in 2010 (see detailed synopsis at the end of this section).

The Scandinavian countries - Denmark, Finland, Sweden and Norway, with New Zealand, Switzerland, Singapore, the Netherlands, Luxembourg, Canada and Australia are in most of the years among the 10-12 more ethical and least corrupt countries, scoring 80-90+. But those countries score also the best grades in most of the other data entries, thus proving that there is a direct causal connection between ethics, wealth, happiness, democracy, human development, quality of life, social progress, peace, competitiveness, and total freedom.

This book analyses the performance in the most salient parameters of the 11 most ethical and least corrupt countries in the world, scoring consistently over the years between 80 and 90+ - "very clean", namely Denmark, New Zealand, Finland, Sweden, Norway, Switzerland, Singapore, Netherlands, Luxembourg, Canada and Australia. But right after them one can find Germany, Iceland and United Kingdom that have also scored in the past more than 80 but now they score less. We found common denominators and behavior of the ethical countries proving that "Ethics Pays" as they perform in general much better than the other countries. On the other hand the most corrupt countries score the worst results in almost all parameters: in ascending order - Somalia, North Korea, Sudan, Afghanistan, South Sudan, Iraq, Turkmenistan, Uzbekistan, Libya, Eritrea. And the 10 following countries are: Yemen, Venezuela, Haiti, Guinea-Bissau, Angola, Syria, Burundi, Zimbabwe, Myanmar, Cambodia.

One can see how the most ethical and least corrupt countries score the highest ranks in most of the other parameters – Happiness based on real GDP per capita, healthy life expectancy, having someone to count on, perceived freedom to make life choices, freedom from corruption and generosity, HDI human development index based on education, literacy, life expectancy, standards of living and quality of life, Least Income Inequality (Gini Index) and Least Poverty, Quality of Life based on GDP per capita, life expectancy at birth, family life, political freedoms, job security – unemployment rate, climate, personal physical security ratings, community life, governance – ratings for corruption, gender equality in parliament seats, Freedom in the World, Economic Freedom and Press Freedom Indices, Democracy Index based on electoral process and pluralism, functioning of government, political participation, political culture, civil liberties, Social Progress Index based on 52 indicators of basic human needs, foundations of wellbeing and opportunity to progress, providing for the social and environmental needs of citizens, rather than economic factors, including ecosystem sustainability, health, wellness, shelter, sanitation, equity, personal freedom and personal safety; as well as purely Economic Indicators such as the efficiency parameter - highest GDP (PPP) per Hour Worked, lowest Unemployment Rates, best results in Wealth Indicators, etc. We have analyzed dozens of parameters, but we have not analyzed much more in order to focus only on the most salient parameters. However, it is worthwhile to mention that the most ethical countries score the best/lowest results also in other parameters, such as Life Expectancy at Birth, Maternal Mortality Rate, Infant Mortality Rate, people and society, economy, energy, communications, transportation and other important parameters as well.

The most ethical countries are located mostly in cold weathered Northern Europe - all the Scandinavian countries, even Iceland is ranked no. 12, all the Benelux countries: Luxembourg, the Netherlands, even Belgium is ranked no. 15, and Switzerland, or have mostly Northern/Anglo-Saxon European origins (Canada, New Zealand and Australia). The majority of their population has North/West Germanic ethnicity and languages (except Finland, but even Germany is ranked no. 12 and United Kingdom no. 14) and most of the population shares Protestant religions, but they have in many cases large religious minorities.

Singapore is an exception, located right near the Equator, a former UK colony with a deep British influence, with a majority of Chinese and minorities of Malaysians and Indians, and with a common language – English. However, China is ranked no. 100 in TI index, Malaysia – no. 50, and India – no. 85. The reason of Singapore's lack of corruption could be the leadership of its founder Lee Kuan Yew who lead and influenced Singapore since its inception, which could prove that ethical leadership is a very important indicator of ethics.

Even in the other most ethical countries ethnicity and religion are not the exclusive determinators - as Finns have no Germanic ethnicity and language but have a long legacy of social progressivism, in 1906 becoming the first nation in the world to give full suffrage to all adult citizens. French/Italian Switzerland, French Canada, and in Belgium (no. 15) the Walloons, as well as most of the non Anglo-Saxon immigrants to Australia and Canada, are not Germanic or Protestants. However, all peoples of those countries share the same ethical heritage and cultural beliefs, whether they are the descendants of the Vikings, Australian Greeks or Vietnamese (but Greece is ranked no. 69 and Vietnam – no. 119 in TI's index), Canadian Jews or Arabs (but Israel is ranked no. 37, Jordan - no. 55, Lebanon – no. 136, and Syria – no. 159), Swiss Italians (Italy is ranked no. 69), Dutch Indonesians (Indonesia is - no. 107), or in the case of the US (no. 17 in TI's index) – Mexicans, Russians or Haitians (Mexico - no. 103, Russia –136, Haiti – 161), proving that culture is a very dominant factor of ethics.

We analyze occasionally, the second tier countries, scoring 74-79, ranked 12-17/20 – mostly: Germany (12) - the largest Germanic country, Iceland (12) – the 5th Scandinavian country, United Kingdom (14) – the parent nation of the Anglo-Saxon countries, Belgium (15) – the 3rd Benelux country, Japan (15) – the largest Eastern capitalist country, influenced deeply after World War II by the US constitution and capitalist model, Barbados (17) – an Afro-Caribbean population, with the deepest English influence, Hong Kong (17) – a Chinese population with the deepest English influence, Ireland (17) – the 5th Anglo-Saxon-Celtic capitalist country among the most ethical countries, and finally the United States (17) – the largest Anglo-Saxon Protestant country, and the model of modern capitalism in the world.

If we try to find a common denominator for the most ethical countries it could be - countries of Germanic ethnicity (most of the population in Scandinavia, Benelux, Germany, and Switzerland), with Anglo-Saxon-Celtic origins (most of the existing or founding population of New Zealand, Canada, Australia, the United Kingdom, Ireland and the United States), with Anglo-Saxon capitalist influence (Singapore, Japan, Barbados, Hong-Kong), with a majority of protestant population in almost all those countries (except Singapore, Ireland Republic, and Japan). However, with substantial minorities from Latin, Slavic, African or Asian origins, with Catholic, Orthodox, Jews, Muslims and Eastern religions, but sharing the same ethical culture or influenced by ethical leaders as the founding fathers of the US or Lee Kuan Yew.

But what about the most corrupt countries, can we find for them also a common denominator that affects their ethics and cause them to have the worst scores in almost all the parameters? Who are those countries? The 10 most corrupt countries score 8 to 18 in TI's index, comparable to 80 to 90+ for the most ethical countries: 174. Somalia, North Korea, 173. Sudan, 172. Afghanistan, 171. South Sudan, 170. Iraq, 169. Turkmenistan, 166. Uzbekistan, 166. Libya, 166. Eritrea. What is common for all those countries? Most of them are Moslem countries, except South Sudan and North Korea (Eritrea is half Moslem). But we have to bear in mind that some Moslem Oil-Rich countries have a high ranking in TI's index – United Arab Emirates – 25, Qatar – 26. All of them have totalitarian regimes and limited civil rights, although some of them as Iraq and Afghanistan made attempts to be democratic. This is true also for the next 10 most corrupt countries (scoring 19-21). Most of them have made wars or suffered from civil unrest recently, like Iraq, Afghanistan, Sudan, Somalia, South Sudan, Syria, Libya, Yemen. All of them are very poor countries, most of them in Africa and some of them in Asia and Latin America. North Korea spends huge amounts for its defense and Venezuela is very generous towards communist regimes like Cuba. They suffer from the worst quality of life in the world, worst social progress and worst economic performance.

An important factor of analysis is the analysis over the years. We have chosen to compare the ranking of the most ethical countries, less ethical and most corrupt in 1995 – the first year of the Corruption Perception Index of Transparency International, with 41 countries surveyed, 1996 – the second year with 54 countries, and 2005 – the 11th year with 159 countries surveyed. We have analyzed above the ranking in 2014, the most recent results available in this book, but as we have also in the table the scoring in the years 2012, 2013 and 2014 (with 175 countries), we can compare the changes occurring in the last three years. In those years the scoring of the 25 most ethical countries hasn't changed much (more than 3 points in 3 years) except for Australia, UK, Ireland. We see it all over the period of the index – 20 years – that the ranking of the most ethical and corrupt countries haven't changed much and especially not within the brackets of the 10 and 20 most ethical countries as well as the most corrupt states.

In the period of the 3 years 2012-2014 the few material changes in the scoring of the countries were as follows: a deterioration of 7 points in Eritrea, 6 points in Syria, Guinea-Bissau, 5 points in Australia, Spain, Gambia, Timor-Leste, 4 points in Rwanda, Turkey, Liberia, Malawi, Tanzania, Madagascar, Yemen, an improvement of 4 points in UK, Lithuania, Slovakia, Lesotho, Philippines, Laos, Afghanistan, 5 points in Ireland, Estonia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Egypt, Saudi Arabia, 6 points in Latvia, Swaziland, Myanmar, 7 (!) points in Greece, Senegal. Overall, if we don't count small changes of 1, 2 or 3 grades out of 100, there was a deterioration of 67 points in 2012-2014 and an improvement of 85 points, or a net improvement of 18 points for 175 states in three years, this isn't much but perhaps it shows a slight improvement in the fight against corruption over the years. One can be optimistic to find that corrupt countries as Greece, Myanmar, Egypt and Saudi Arabia have become more ethical over the years, and that former communist countries, as Latvia, Estonia, Lithuania, Slovakia, have become more ethical, as well as African countries such as Senegal, Swaziland, Lesotho, and Asian countries as Afghanistan, Philippines, Laos. On the other hand there was a sharp deterioration in ethics in very corrupt countries as Eritrea, Syria, Guinea-Bissau, Yemen, Tanzania, Madagascar, but also in ethical countries as Australia and Spain.

It is amazing to find that there was no change in the 10 most ethical countries over the years: In 1995 – New Zealand, Denmark, Singapore, Finland, Canada, Sweden, Australia, Switzerland, Netherlands, Norway – exactly like in 2014, twenty years after, bearing in mind that in 1995 Luxembourg was examined together with Belgium and not separately as in 2014. And who are in the first 10 places in 1996? – New Zealand, Denmark, Sweden, Finland, Canada, Norway, Singapore, Switzerland, Netherlands, Australia. Exactly as in 1995 and 2014. And what happens in 2005, ten years after the first survey? Here we have a small surprise – Iceland in no. 1 with a fantastic score of 9.7, sic transit gloria mundi – 3 years later Iceland was involved in one of the worst unethical banking scandals of the Great Recession, and was ranked in 2012 in the 11th rank, excellent ranking but not no. 1 as a few years before, in 2013 – 12 and in 2014 – 12. But who comes just after Iceland? The same members of the exclusive club as in all the previous years: Finland, New Zealand, Denmark, Singapore, Sweden, Switzerland, Norway, Australia, Austria, Netherlands, United Kingdom, Luxembourg, Canada. The 11 most ethical countries of 2014 are here ranked from no. 2 to 14. And in 2012 – Denmark, Finland, New Zealand, Sweden, Singapore, Switzerland, Australia, Norway, Canada, Netherlands, Iceland, Luxembourg. Only a slight change: Luxembourg is here no. 12 while in 2014 Iceland is ranked no. 12 and not no. 11 as in 2012. But in 2013 we find the same results as in 2013 (but not in the same exact ranking within the 11 most ethical countries in 2014): Denmark, New Zealand, Finland, Sweden, Norway, Singapore, Switzerland, Netherlands, Australia, Canada, Luxembourg. All is the same in an ethical front!

The same similarity can be found as well in the next ethical countries up to no. 20 and even beyond a few rankings: in 1995 – Ireland, UK, Germany, Chile, USA, Austria, Hong Kong, France, Belgium/Luxembourg, Japan. Iceland and Barbados were not surveyed, and Chile, Austria and France are even in 2014 very close to no. 20. In 1996 – Ireland, UK, Germany, Israel, USA, Austria, Japan, Hong Kong, France, Belgium. In 1996 we find the same results in the 20 most ethical countries as in 1995 and as in 2014, but with one exception – Israel, ranked here no. 14 with a score of 7.71. Here we can say even more sic transit gloria mundi, as there was a huge deterioration in Israel ranking from no. 14 in 1996 to no. 37 in 2014, with the very low score of 60 instead of 7.71. Israel has become a much more corrupt country in 18 years, going down 23 grades, perhaps the most drastic negative change in TI's surveys.

In 2005 we find in the ranks 12-22: United Kingdom, Luxembourg, Canada, Hong Kong, Germany, USA, France, Belgium, Ireland, Chile, Japan. Exactly the same countries as in the previous and following years. In 2012 – after Iceland in no. 11 and Luxembourg in no. 12, Germany, Hong Kong, Barbados, Belgium, Japan, United Kingdom, United States, Chile (and Ireland in no 25, due to the problems it had in the Great Recession). In 2013 – Germany, Iceland, United Kingdom, Barbados, Belgium, Hong Kong, Japan, United States, Uruguay, Ireland (in no. 21). So, in all those years as in 2014 we find the same countries in the 20 most ethical countries, with minor changes within the ranks in the Big 20, as in Iceland and Ireland. However, if we analyze the score of the first 10/11 ethical countries we find in 1995: 9.55-8.61, 1996: 9.43 – 8.60. 2005: 9.7 – 8.6, 2012: 90 – 82, 2013: 91 – 80, 2014: 92 – 80. The scores are much lower over the years, but the issue is too complex to be analyzed in this book. In the 11/12-20 countries the scores were in 1995: 8.57 – 6.72, 1996: 8.45 – 6.84, 2005: 8.6 – 7.4, 2012: 80 – 72, 2013: 78 – 73, 2014: 79– 74. The gaps have narrowed over the years because there are now much more countries in the survey: 175 instead of 41-54, 20 years ago.

The most corrupt countries remained almost the same, though in the first years of TI's index most of them were not surveyed. In 1995 the most corrupt countries (in a total of 41 states) were Greece with a score of 4.04, Colombia, Mexico, Italy, Thailand, India, Philippines, Brazil, Venezuela, Pakistan, China, Indonesia with a score of 1.94. In 1996: Italy with a score of 3.42, Argentina, Bolivia, Thailand, Mexico, Ecuador, Brazil, Egypt, Colombia, Uganda, Philippines, Indonesia, India, Russia, Venezuela, Cameroon, China, Bangladesh, Kenya, Pakistan, Nigeria with a score of 0.69. In 2005: Burundi with a score of 2.3, Cambodia, Republic of the Congo, Georgia, Kyrgyzstan, Papua New Guinea, Venezuela, Azerbaijan, Cameroon, Ethiopia, Indonesia, Iraq, Liberia, Uzbekistan, Democratic Republic of the Congo, Kenya, Pakistan, Paraguay, Somalia, Sudan, Tajikistan, Angola, Cote d'Ivoire, Equatorial Guinea, Nigeria, Haiti, Myanmar, Turkmenistan, Bangladesh, Chad with a score of 1.7. There were some changes over the years: Afghanistan has become much more corrupt, and so are Libya, Syria, Eritrea and so on, while Bangladesh is less corrupt, and so are Georgia, Indonesia, Cameroon, Liberia, etc. There is therefore hope for improvement over the years.

21. GLOBAL CORRUPTION BAROMETER - % OF PEOPLE WHO PAID BRIBES – TRANSPARENCY INTERNATIONAL – 2013

All the surveyed countries out of the top 20 most ethical countries have the lowest percentage of paid bribes in the world - 1% to 7% - in the first 21 ranks of the Barometer: Australia, Denmark, Finland, Japan, Canada, New Zealand, Norway, Belgium, United Kingdom, Switzerland, United States. No mention of the reasons for not surveying the other top 20 countries was mentioned but from other sources they have probably also one of the lowest ranks of bribery and corruption: Sweden, Singapore, Netherlands, Luxembourg, Germany, Iceland, Ireland, Hong Kong, Barbados. This is another proof that Ethics Pays – in wealth and quality of life – but not in bribes! The other countries with the lowest % of bribes – up to 10% - are mostly ethical and quite ethical: Spain (TI – 37), South Korea – 43, Malaysia – 50, Maldives, Portugal – 31, Uruguay – 21, Croatia – 61 (quite corrupt), Georgia – 50 (yet, it has the highest rate of shadow economy), Italy – 69 (quite corrupt), Estonia – 26, Slovenia – 39, Bulgaria – 69 (quite corrupt) and Chile – 21. In the first 24 countries paying bribes of 10% or less – we find all the most ethical and most of the ethical countries surveyed with a few exceptions of 3 quite corrupt countries but no corrupt or very corrupt countries. It shouldn't be too surprising, as paying bribes is per se not ethical and one expects to find that the most ethical countries do not pay bribes. In the following ranks of 20 countries paying bribes – up to 27% of the population - one can find a mixture of quite ethical, quite corrupt and up to very corrupt countries. As we have mentioned before that the rule that ethics pays is mostly true in the extremes of the 20 most ethical/20 most corrupt countries, this barometer shows the same.

25. El Salvador (TI – 80), 25. Hungary – 47, 25. Israel – 37, 25. Jamaica – 85, 25. Philippines – 85, all of them with 12% paying bribes. It is probably surprising that a corrupt country as Argentina (TI – 107) has only 13% paying bribes only a few percent more than Switzerland, and even more surprising than the most corrupt country in the world – Sudan – has only 17% of the population paying bribes, putting a question mark to the validity of the Barometer – bearing in mind that the Barometer is based on people being surveyed whether they have paid a bribe to a public body during the last year, with a margin of error for each country of 3%. Yet, for a small number of countries, including Brazil and Russia, data on particular questions has been excluded because of concerns about validity and reliability. People may be afraid to tell the truth in this matter. However, the percentage of people paying bribes increases drastically in most corrupt and very corrupt countries as Papua New Guinea and Venezuela (27%), Iraq, Pakistan, Madagascar, Ukraine, and inexorably we find that the 20 countries with the highest percentage of people paying bribes – 44%-84% - are in most of the cases also the most corrupt countries in the world – Kyrgyzstan, Afghanistan, Democratic Republic of the Congo, Cambodia, Cameroon, Libya, Uganda, Zimbabwe, Kenya, Yemen, Nigeria, but in some cases also "just" corrupt countries as Liberia, Mozambique, Senegal, India, Morocco, South Africa, Ghana, Morocco, Tanzania. So, corruption is heavily linked to paying bribes.

22. THE RISE AND FALL OF BUSINESS ETHICS FOLLOWING THE GREAT RECESSION OF 2007/10 BY JACQUES CORY, PhD

King Solomon, the wisest man in history, said "Don't be right often". And indeed, the business world after The Great Recession of 2007-2010 is not willing to forgive those who were right in their forecast, who saw the catastrophe approaching and who now tell everybody "Look, we were right!" In the last decade, there were a few academics and businessmen who dared challenging the consensus of vox populi, the alchemy and euphoria of those who made gold out of subprime assets, and who forecasted that the markets will crash because of the excessive leverage, risk and overconfidence that no one would dare to harm those who are too big to fail. Warning lights could be seen from the "remote" times of the junk bonds collapse, the Asian, Latin American, Russian insolvency, the burst of the dot-com bubble, the corporate scandals and the subsequent meteoric rise of the stock markets which was not sustainable. Among the few who dared to oppose the prevailing neoliberal laissez-faire views was Joseph Stiglitz who did it very bravely in his books, articles, lectures and videos, who advocated a Third Way approach, with tighter regulation and who didn't believe in trickle-down economics and the Invisible Hand. He saw instead a greedy hand getting richer and richer, with the tacit cooperation of the neoliberal regimes in the U.S. and other Western economies.

When the Great Recession of 2007/10 occurred, ethicists and whistleblowers had a short-lived epiphany. Most of politicians, governments, international organizations, businessmen and faculties admitted being wrong and admitted that from now on they will act conscientiously, will devote all the time needed for business ethics courses, will work with lower leverage and more respect to other people's money, will increase regulation and not maximize profits with unfettered risk at the expense of the interests of the stakeholders. But following the trillions dollars bailouts and the miraculous recovery of the stock markets due to zero interest rates, none of the culprits was held responsible. Lehman's Dick Fuld is still active on the stock exchange market, LTCM's Myron Scholes is still the chairman of an Advisers company, and our old friend Drexel's Milken is a well-known philanthropist and Chairman of the Milken Foundation. Only poor Bernie Madoff was sentenced to 150 years in prison, but he was the only one indicted in the 65 billion fraud, or even on the Recession's quasi-frauds, a superman!

The Titanic was rescued at the last moment thanks to Hank Paulson and to the fact that global warming has thawed the icebergs in her route. The one and only Warren Buffet who called the derivatives a weapon of mass destruction buys Goldman Sachs's shares on the cheap instead of investing in clean technology, and the hero of the day is John Paulson who speculated on the downturn and won billions. Even if some regulation was enacted, we can bet that neo-Enron's wizards will find a way to circumvent it as they did with Sarbanes-Oxley Act that proved totally inefficient in the last Crisis. All is legal, crooks continue to donate money to politicians and to charities, and we, the fools, continue to invest in the stock exchange in unethical companies headed by unscrupulous businessmen, who will scheme our pension funds again and again, ad infinitum. The heavy smokers, who recovered miraculously from lung cancer, are smoking even more than in the past, since they know that nothing will happen to them, and if worse comes to worse, some minority shareholders with a victim's syndrome will donate one of their lungs (or even two, why not?) to them in order to enable them to catch their breath in the toxic assets environment where they breathe.

Inequality has reached an unprecedented level, unemployment is still very high, and the Economic Whirl, which has started twenty years ago with damages of billions, has reached now damages of trillions. We are not far from a Doomsday Depression as we need to increase only by a factor of 10 in order to reach damages of tens of trillions, the world economy is only $54 trillions, bringing about the collapse of the world's economy. When we reach this level, even maverick neoliberal economists will not be able to rescue us or to bailout their friends on Wall Street. In the meantime, they have sterilized every opponent, business ethics courses were eliminated or cut down drastically, as the universities don't have funds because of the Crisis or Madoff, or both. When they teach ethics the students learn about Aristotle, Kant or Adam Smith, but not about the Crisis and its causes which are mainly ethical. In corporations and banks no ethical screening for executives is practiced, and when we have now and then a Chief Compliance Officer, it is mostly the Legal Counsel who advises the corporate how to evade paying taxes legally, how to pollute the environment externalizing the costs legally, how to wrong minority shareholders legally and prevent labor's rights legally.

Yet, the ethicists were promoted, they are no longer hallucinated Don Quixotes, they are now the Enemies of the People, and everything is permitted to discredit their previsions. Instead of teaching business ethics courses of 50, 100 or 150 hours at the universities, the faculties continue to teach irrelevant quantitative theories that were proven wrong now, as with LTCM, and they invite once in a while Nassim Taleb to tell them fairy tales about Black Swans. It sounds nice but they wouldn't dare to invite Daniel Kahneman to teach about irrational economics. Economics is a science, prices of shares can be predicted, we can hedge them with CDS, we can speculate on Lehman's going bankrupt, with derivatives, shorts, put options, because if economics is not a science how would Scholes, Friedman and Von Hayek get a Nobel Prize? We are now like the Good Soldier Shweik at six o'clock after the First World War. We don't pay attention to Winston Churchill who is a grouchy old bore, to Bertolt Brecht's Threepenny Opera, to Keynes' theories. We live in the roaring twenties, with exiting new technologies, no regulation, financial engineering and unshakable optimism. The Economic Whirl will not deter us, illegitimi non carborundum, we have marginalized Joseph Stiglitz and Naomi Klein, and have managed to surround presidents and prime ministers with Wall Street's and equivalents old boys. We are the new Freemasons and our moral and metaphysical ideals, our new Supreme Being, are money, greed, maximization of profits, unfettered capitalism, unlimited risk, CBOs, CDOs, CLOs, CMBS, CMOs, CDS, LTCM, S&Ls, RMBS, CMBS, OPEC, NASDAQ (and good old Bernie, its Chairman), SEC (who?), TARP (shock therapy to the suckers), Fannie Mae & Mae West, Freddie Mac & McDonald's.

But it is not too late, we may have lost an eye and a tooth (not ours of course, but of the taxpayers, as we don't pay taxes, it is against our beliefs), we have another eye and plenty of teeth, maybe Bear Stearns and Lehman Brothers were drowned in the tsunami, but the other banks with the bailout are stronger than ever. Main Street is recovering; we have time for a new beginning with business ethics, social responsibility and sustainability as a cornerstone. It is the only guarantee for a full long term recovery, with minimal leverage, low risk, living according to our means, humane capitalism, effective regulation and optimal profits taking into consideration the interests of all the stakeholders, including customers, suppliers, employees, creditors, minority shareholders, society and the environment. It depends on us to make the change, as the power is with the stakeholders, not with the tycoons and the politicians. Change will come from those who are not willing to be wronged anymore, who don't suffer from the victim's syndrome, who learned the lesson, who desire to live!

23. THE MAIN PRINCIPLES FOR THE FUTURE OF CAPITALISM IN THE NEW SUSTAINABLE SOCIETY

Cory's theories analyze contemporary capitalism, the Great Recession and the Economic Whirl, based on Dr. Cory's research & books, and more than 150 books, 130 videos, thousands of articles and documents, researching them in a vivid, critical and captivating way. It examines various preferred solutions to the crisis of capitalism, corporate governance and conduct, adopted by regulators and business, recommended by eminent professors, writers and tycoons, and advocated by Dr. Cory in his works. In the next crisis which could occur within the current decade, as nothing has changed while the pace of the crises has increased exponentially, the world economy could indeed collapse, with damages reaching into the hundreds of trillions of dollars, far beyond the scope of the world GDP. Adoption of the remedies offered might prevent this collapse. These theories differ fundamentally from the prevailing neo liberal views, but are nevertheless contemporary, with a contrarian approach.

In this research endeavor, the author finds the most profound sources of financial and economic instability and suggests workable remedies that can be adopted without delay. It is true that the economic future is uncertain, but unfortunately as the causes of the instability do not change, the results of the systemic failures can be predicted, while the only thing that changes is the order of magnitude of the crises. Economists tend to over-simplify their models – the neoliberals adopt free market theories, the Keynesians and even Stiglitz try to find the right balance between regulation and free markets. These theories offer a much more complex solution, based first of all on moral and ethics, but also on sociology, psychology, philosophy, while giving workable economic solutions. A precondition for a sustainable future of capitalism is to adopt appropriate corporate governance as stipulated in Dr. Jacques Cory's previous books with the changes needed to reflect the crises of the last decade.

Finally, Dr. Cory's theories suggest a new political economy of the state, new strategy for the private and public sectors, new economy of income and wealth distribution, in the context of a proper humane policy bringing economic development. It calls into question the conduct of corporations, leaders, executives and regulators before and during the Great Recession in order to help the reader to understand how the business models of the invisible hand, minimal regulation and maximization of profits have a perverse impact on the world economy, society and stakeholders and ultimately – business and profitability. The theories encourage the reader to develop and follow his own insights, which could be different from the prevailing neo liberal ideology, and find the right equilibrium between profitability, business ethics, social responsibility, globalization, sustainability, complementing each other in the long run.

After witnessing, as a businessman and academic, the Economic Whirl starting in the eighties and culminating in the Great Recession of 2007-2010, Dr. Cory draws the lessons for the future of capitalism and the obvious necessary conclusions which are based and substantiated by the events, but are regrouped in the building blocks which are the preconditions for the new sustainable society, for the future of capitalism in a sustainable society, namely:

- * what is the raison d'être of the company
- * ethical leadership
- * low leverage and low risk with other people's money
- * discarding maximization of profits
- * financial moderation
- * transparency
- * adequate regulation

- * new mission of auditors and lawyers
- * changing the attitude of society
- * cooperation instead of cut-throat conduct
- * establishing the Institute of Ethics
- * electing truly independent directors
- * bridling of derivatives to be functional rather than speculative
- * analyzing long term Treasury Bills return on investment versus Dow Jones Index
- * pension funds investing only in T-Bills
- * full disclosure in financial reports and prospectuses
- * heavy penalties for fraud and tax evasion
- * adequate ratio between highest and lowest salaries
- * corporate social responsibility, environment and sustainability
- * business ethics, ethical strategic planning & screening of management, assimilating ethical standards
- * replacing neo liberal policies by humane capitalism
- * limiting government and business influence
- * encouraging whistleblowers
- * minimal social gaps and enlarging the middle class
- * activist conduct of stakeholders
- * Main Street creativity instead of financial creativity
- * obeying the Golden Rule
- * model citizenship
- * progressive taxation
- * abolishing investment in tax heavens and legal but unethical tax evasion
- * living within your means with minimal credit and adequate savings
- * drawing lessons from the Scandinavian Capitalism
- * eliminating "soft" corruption
- * paying very high salaries to politicians and civil servants
- * prohibiting crossing between public and private careers
- * a new balanced approach between unbridled capitalism and socialism
- * 90% taxation on excessive compensation
- * taking into consideration irrational economics
- * restraining contributions to politicians, political parties and lobbying
- * eliminating bailouts to "too big to fail" corporations
- * restraining monopolies, cartels, large multinationals and banks
- * ensuring an adequate return on investment for savings regardless of the Fed's monetary policy
- * devising from scratch a holistic sustainable economy doing justice to the people and not to tycoons

24. THE PRINCIPLES OF BUSINESS AND ETHICS IN THE ECONOMIC WORLD TOWARDS 2020

1. Companies should see profitability as a viability precondition and not as their only reason for existence, as corporations also employ people, sell products, and contribute to society.
2. The mantra of maximization of profits should be discarded, as it necessarily causes maximization of risks and wrongdoing of stakeholders: employees, customers, community and the ecology.
3. Financial moderation should prevail, with a balanced leverage (not 30:1 as in Lehman Brothers), sufficient equity, low indebtedness, a positive cash flow, integrity of the financial management, even if it is at the expense of maximizing profitability, growth and valuation.
4. Financial reports should be accurate and transparent and instead of spending tens of millions in order to circumvent the Sarbanes-Oxley Act, companies should spend millions to be ethical.
5. Lawyers who assist companies to evade taxes "lawfully" would be unemployed, as all companies would pay the full taxes, after being convinced that it is the only way to maintain law and order, eradicate crime and to fund defense, education, health and infrastructure equitably.
6. All pension funds should cease to invest in the stock exchange, no longer risking pensions, and minority shareholders should invest only in ethical funds and ethical companies.
7. Independent directors should be really independent and should ensure the stakeholders' rights.
8. An Institute of Ethics should be established, giving ethical ratings to companies, controlling shareholders and executives, and the management should have an impeccable ethical record, preventing the collapse of AAA ethical companies due to unethical conduct.
9. The internet would become the ultimate ethical vehicle, ensuring full transparency, preventing the use of insider information and enabling open communication between all stakeholders.
10. Cooperation, equilibrium and harmony would replace the principles of cut-throat competition and street fighting, having the killer instinct and adopting war tactics.
11. Companies should not compete in adopting unbridled marketing campaigns, deceptive advertising, deceiving customers, but should compete on who gives better service and products at fair prices, without putting "stumbling blocks" before the blind subprime customers.
12. Our examples of model businessmen would be Warren Buffett, Jerry Greenfield and Paul Hawken, and not Ken Lay and the executives of Lehman Brothers, Bear Stearns and AIG.
13. Society would not judge people by the size of their wallets but by the greatness of their minds.
14. The ideal manager should lead his company in an authoritative, democratic and humane approach, and not be inconsiderate, brutal and lacking in sensitivity.
15. We should prevent sexual harassment, race, gender, age and other discrimination, nepotism, and all workers should be treated equitably and recruited with ethical screening.
16. The ratio between the highest and lowest salaries in a company should not exceed 30:1.
17. The environment in our cities would be as good as in Copenhagen and not as bad as in Naples, and petrochemical companies would invest in preventive measures as in the Netherlands.
18. Our country would be rated among the ten most ethical countries in the Transparency International Corruption Perception Index, our model would be Finland and not Nigeria, and those who enforce the ethical laws would not cross the lines to work for those who infringe upon them.

19. Companies and tycoons should not perceive corporate social responsibility as the donations of one percent of profits being the essence of ethics, but should earn the other 99% ethically.

20. Government would not be neo-liberal or social democratic but neo-social, adopting the "third way" of Joseph Stiglitz, with a balanced equilibrium between free market and regulation.

21. Perception of success would not be living on a property of $125 million but on a modest property, like Warren Buffett, known for his personal frugality despite his immense wealth.

22. The model of a politician would be Mahatma Gandhi, practitioner of non-violence, truth, integrity, austerity, simplicity and peace, as opposed to many corrupt politicians of today.

23. The excessive ties between government and business would be loosened, politicians would not be responsible to tycoons and their lobbies but to the people and would be funded by them. Civil servants should not be employed by the tycoons after quitting their jobs, putting their motives in doubt.

24. Milton Friedman's vision would be achieved - that companies should not invest in social responsibility and the policy of the neo-liberals would be implemented with minimum regulation, because if companies are ethical, there will be no need for charity or regulation.

25. Society would not worship bankrupt businessmen who outsmarted their creditors, tax evaders who conned the government, and controlling shareholders who wronged minority shareholders, but nerds who pay their taxes, behave ethically and repay their debts.

26. White-collar criminals should be sentenced to 20 years imprisonment, without plead bargains, indirect or direct bribes, and judges should not be lenient toward bankers, tycoons and corrupt politicians, who are usually represented by the best lawyers.

27. Society would ostracize those who withhold payments to suppliers and employees, those who employ people without providing them with social benefits, and those who prevent unionizing aimed at improving working conditions.

28. Society should encourage and reward whistleblowers who warn against corruption, wrongdoing to stakeholders and ethical criminals.

29. Our country would have minimal social gaps and would rank close to Sweden, with 50% of its population in the middle class and not 50% of the wealth owned by the richest 1%, since democracy is not voting every few years, but having equity, welfare and equal opportunities.

30. We should take our fate in our own hands, acting lawfully and ethically but decisively, investing only in ethical companies, working only in ethical companies, buying only from ethical companies and welcoming only ethical and sustainable companies into our communities.

31. We should not aspire to be creative capitalists or creative accountants, but to be creative in our R&D in high tech, green energy and low tech, with holistic ethical strategic planning.

32. Quality and excellence should be the cornerstones of a company's activities, by adhering to specifications and standards, without jeopardizing quality and endangering people's lives.

33. Ethical standards, codes and assimilation would not be eyewash but the basics of a company.

34. Tenders would not be bent, positions would not be promised to the boys, and lawsuits would not drag on, in an economy with minimal red tape and an ethical environment and infrastructure.

35. We should return to basics: obeying the Golden Rule by not doing to others what we do not want to be done to us, acting in equity, moderation and equilibrium; the Categorical Imperative with its moral obligations should prevail, concluding in an All My Sons Credo.

36. The significant progress that has happened in the last decades in consumerism, quality, health, education and democracy would also be expanded to ethics, social responsibility, corporate governance and sustainability towards the year 2020, if we wish to preserve life.

25. PROFITABILITY AND BUSINESS ETHICS

Many businessmen believe that a company can either be profitable or ethical but that it can't be both at the same time. If a company has to compromise on one of those issues, it prefers to do so on ethics, as the success of a company and its management is primarily based on its profitability and not on its ethics. An unethical company is not penalized for its unethical conduct, if it does not infringe any law, and the same is true for its executives who continue to receive their high salaries, stock options and benefits, as long as they maximize profitability, even at the expense of ethics. We should examine the oxymoron stated by Milton Friedman, that the objective of a company is only to maximize profits and that a company should not have any objectives of social responsibility. Where are we maximizing our behavior in our lives? Do we maximize our eating, drinking, vacations, or even return on investment? Each maximization has a price tag: eating excessively results in bulimia, drinking too much results in drunkenness, too long vacations degenerate, while a very high return on investment has a tradeoff with risk or brings too many competitors. Aristotle preconized more than two thousand years ago that we should find moderation in everything we do, the golden mean, as excessiveness ultimately corrupts. His precepts were true then as they are true today. One should find the right balance between the hardware of business: production, sales, profitability and valuation, and the software of business: ethics, quality, integrity and humaneness. Only thus is it possible to find the perfect harmony that will ensure the long term prosperity of the company and its stakeholders.

There are 12 outstanding principles and basic conditions that are the prerequisites for an ethical and profitable company:

1. Ethics, Profitability and the Interests of the Stakeholders

Everybody believes that a prerequisite for a viable and prosperous company is profitability. A company that is not profitable will not be able to survive in the long run and we should do our best in order to be profitable. Profitability is like the oxygen that we breathe; it is a precondition for our living. However, nobody decides where to live exclusively on the basis of the amount of oxygen that exists in his neighborhood. Or paraphrasing Moliere in his play "L'avare" – we should be profitable (eat) in order to live but we should not live in order to be profitable (eat). The quality of life of every human being, like the quality of life of every company, has other parameters as well, primarily the safeguarding of the interests of the stakeholders of the company and fair conduct toward them: the employees, customers, suppliers, creditors and so on. The company has, therefore, to obey the Golden Rule: "Don't do unto others what you wouldn't want done to you". This issue will be further emphasized, as it is a key element in ethical thinking.

2. Financial Integrity and Strength

Financial creativity can ruin companies, as we have seen in many cases in recent years, such as Enron, Barings Bank and others. In order to survive in the long run a company has to be financially moderate, with a balanced leverage, sufficient equity, low indebtedness, a positive cash flow, integrity of the financial management, even if it is at the expense of maximum profitability, growth and valuation. A prerequisite of survival is security, for the individual, the corporation and the nation. As a nation spends a large part of its GNP for defense, so a company has to ensure its security and cannot jeopardize its existence with financial creativity, transferring profits to affiliated companies, taking loans through related companies, reporting expenses in next year's financial statements, actualizing forecasted profits for the next ten years in this year's income statement, reporting R&D expenses as assets, and so on. Sometimes the auditors cooperate with the reckless executives; often the SEC or even the public look benevolently on such conduct, but a company that acts carelessly in its finances will not subsist in the long run.

3. Enforcement by an Authoritative and Democratic Management

Many believe that an authoritative and democratic management is an oxymoron, but the most successful and prosperous companies prove that it is feasible. Management has to be authoritative in a company as in a nation; it is impossible to manage in a flabby way, where everyone does whatever he wants, nobody is accountable, directives are not implemented, instructions are not enforced, and the whole company is managed like a fraternity. Therefore, a company has to be managed in an authoritative way, obeying management directives, enforcing the company policy and decisions. Nevertheless, enforcement has to be carried on graciously, not through a dictatorial management, and to take the inputs of lower level management and employees into consideration. Most of the modern business books preconize such methods of management, but unfortunately many companies are managed by brutal bosses, or in an anarchical manner; few companies are managed by an authoritative and democratic management. This mode of management can even be seen as a prerequisite for an ethical company, as it combines the best methods.

4. Quality and Excellence

The company in the third millennium perceives quality and excellence as prerequisites of success, but in many cases this is only a slogan or a panacea. How is it possible to solve the dilemma of improving quality while obtaining a profitability which is lower than the maximal one? What is the value of quality and to what extent should it be enhanced, even if it is not needed? Standards are set by the Standards Institutions, the customers' specifications set what is required and those who abide by the standards and the specs should encounter no problems. However, unethical companies that want to maximize profits at all costs do not abide by those rules, deliver products that do not comply with the specs, sometimes even endangering human lives. Maximization of profits is always at the expense of something else; you deliver lower quality products to your customers, you pay lower than average salaries to your employees, you postpone payments to your suppliers, you reschedule the installments of your loans, you evade paying taxes, you externalize your ecological expenses, and of course, you do not meet the standards and excellence required by an ethical company. An ethical company should, therefore, find the right balance between profitability, quality and excellence, while safeguarding the interests of all its stakeholders.

5. Truthful and Transparent Reporting

The Sarbanes-Oxley Act is supposed to improve the truthfulness and transparency of reporting of American companies and companies that are traded in the US. Many companies have reluctantly decided to abide by the new rules, even if they find them somewhat "draconic". Others invest huge amounts of money in order to find ways of circumventing the act without breaking the law. However, the obvious way should be to act ethically and give true and transparent reports as companies are bound by law to do. It is by far the simplest and cheapest way to cope with the Act, as it is ultimately more efficient to be ethical in the long run. Those who have a clean conscience should not be afraid of transparency. Opaque reporting is a sign of unethical conduct, as we have seen at Enron, Barings, WorldCom and many others. Reporting should also be comprehensible to minority shareholders in financial statements, prospectuses, special reports and so on. It is recommended that companies should add ethical, social responsibility and ecological reports to their annual reports. Fraudulent reports are beneficial only to unethical executives, assisted by lawyers and auditors who operate in contradiction to their professional ethics, which require truthful and transparent reporting.

6. Aggressive and Creative Marketing

In a world that has limited wars to a minimum, the business world has become the outlet for aggression. "Street fighter" is a compliment for an aggressive businessman, but it is, however, recommended to limit the aggression to marketing instead of finance and human relations. Only in marketing should businessmen set free their native aggression and creativity, as we live in a very competitive market and the meek do not survive. A company can be ethical in its advertising and its conduct toward competitors while employing war-like tactics of cunning. Should a company abide by the rule of "let the buyer beware" or "giving full disclosure of all the products' deficiencies"? Does it have to emphasize its strengths as well as its weaknesses in the same manner? If you are transparent in marketing, should you light up your problems with a torch or show how your products are better than those of your competitors? In negotiations should you tell the whole truth or just not lie? A prerequisite to the success of a company is growth and obtaining a large market share. It is very difficult to find companies that can achieve that by being completely ethical. It is almost impossible to find companies or businessmen who are 100% ethical, and if you have to give leeway to your aggressions and cunning, it could be that it is preferable to do so in marketing rather than in finance, as the competitors are strong enough to care for their own interests and it is questionable if stakeholders in the company, such as the community or government, are.

7. The Humaneness of Management

The most important resource of a company is its employees and management. A company with the best products, with the most advanced technology, with the most revolutionary know-how, cannot survive without dedicated, excellent, motivated and honest employees, who see their company as their second home, who are loyal and give their utmost to the organization. In order to achieve this goal management has to be humane; there should be no sexual, racial, religious, or age discrimination, there shouldn't be too wide gaps in the level of salaries, there should be almost no temporary workers without social benefits and no wrongdoing done to employees. Many unethical companies achieve maximum profitability by paying minimal salaries, no social benefits, widely employing temporary workers, banning unions, adopting brutal methods to enforce discipline, with constant threats of layoffs, while keeping the huge salaries of top management untouched. Those companies can increase profitability in the short run, but cannot be profitable in the long run, as employees contribute most in a supportive environment. The basic quality of managers, doctors, teachers and civil servants who interact with people should be humaneness, and as a doctor with despicable conduct towards his patients is a bad doctor, even if he is very proficient, so is a brutal boss who enjoys rendering the lives of his subordinates miserable a bad manager and he will not succeed in his job in the long run.

8. Social Responsibility

In the last few years there is a confusion of terminology between business ethics, social responsibility and sustainability. The best specialists deal with those issues and many see their terms as encompassing all the others. Social Responsibility, in its strict terminology, is the care of the community, society and the interests of the weaker segments of society. There could be a contradiction between business ethics and social responsibility, as the Mafia can contribute millions to society while obtaining the funds for their donations in the most unethical manner. Tobacco companies contribute millions to cultural activities but do they become ethical because of that? Companies that wrong minority shareholders in millions of dollars can donate part of those sums to a business school or even found a Center for Business Ethics. Social Responsibility is undoubtedly one of the pillars of Business Ethics, but it does not replace it. It is preferable that a company should not wrong its stakeholders: employees, customers, creditors and suppliers, while not contributing anything to social responsibility and the community, than to have a company that wrongs all its stakeholders and donates part of those unethical profits to the community. The community will be far better off if a company behaves ethically without giving any donations, as the community is comprised of the stakeholders of the company: the employees, the suppliers and the customers. Unethical companies wrong their stakeholders usually ten times more than the amounts that they donate to the community, so society has a much larger deficit incurred as a result of unethical conduct than the benefit it derives from social responsibility. The Robber Barons who wronged their employees, customers and suppliers donated only a fragment of what they have earned unethically to society. A company is perceived as very ethical if it donates one percent of its profits (not of its income...) to society. We are far more interested on how the company obtained the remaining 99% of its profits. The same token applies with sustainable companies who contribute to ecology while wronging their stakeholders. An unethical company which is socially responsible or sustainable is an oxymoron; it is sheer hypocrisy and eyewash!

9. Environment

One of the most common ways to maximize profitability is by externalizing expenses from the company to the government or the community. Those expenses, which the company does not incur although it causes them, are called externalities. Thus, if a company dumps its toxic waste into a river, into the air, the sea or the soil, it does not incur the cost it causes to ecology, which is incurred to the community or the government if they want to remediate the harm. Nowadays, there is quite extensive legislation on the preservation of the environment in the US, countries in Europe, Canada, Australia, and so on. However, the enforcement of those laws is not easy and unethical mega-corporations try very hard to evade them, as it is much cheaper to externalize the expenses to the community, thus maximizing profits. In many cases those companies contribute funds to unethical politicians, who assist them in evading the laws. The Government cannot allocate the funds to fight against those corporations, and NGOs, communities and individuals find it even harder. Thus, the main approach should be ethical, by abstaining from investing in companies that harm the environment and investing in ecological funds. The harm to the environment ultimately affects all of us, if not in this generation then in the next one. Cancer and many other illnesses result from those wrongdoings, as all of us breathe the same air and are affected by global warming. We are, after all, every one of us, part of the same life chain.

10. Ethical Infrastructure

An ethical company or an ethical individual cannot survive in a corrupt environment. The whole infrastructure should be ethical in order to facilitate the ethical conduct of a company. If society does not condemn wrongdoing and glorifies unethical conduct, there is no incentive to managers to behave ethically, as we are social-minded and most of us cannot live in a society where we are ostracized. In the past, religion was the watchdog of morals and of ethics, although there were too many cases of abuse. Today, society should condemn ethical criminals instead of condemning whistleblowers who try to remedy their wrongdoing. A total change of attitude is needed in order to glorify and reward whistleblowers. Those who wrong their stakeholders should be banned from society, as should bankrupts who manage to salvage all their wealth by externalizing the bankruptcy to their creditors, employees and suppliers. Nowadays, the wrongdoers are treated by society as “smart guys”, who con their creditors, who con the government while evading paying taxes by “tax-planning”, which may be legal but is unethical.

If it is possible to bribe judges and policemen, buy pardons and fix tenders, no ethical codes could prevent one from committing those crimes, as the prerequisite of the implementation of the ethical codes is that the managers and employees, as well as the society, should be ethical. Unethical companies, such as Enron, crumble in the same way that corrupt societies, such as the Soviet Union, crumbled. The infrastructure of the society, local administration, police, judicial system, politics and government will ultimately become ethical when the situation becomes unbearable, when corruption finally distorts the whole economy, as only ethical economies and nations can prosper in the long run. The same rule applies to the business environment. No ethical Don Quixote can remain ethical when all his colleagues are unethical; therefore education on ethical conduct is a prerequisite for a profitable and ethical company. In the same manner that a transportation, sewage and energy infrastructure is formed, so an ethical infrastructure for the survival of society has to be formed.

11. Ethical Tycoons

In order to discern which companies are ethical we have to examine who their executives are and take them as an example. Warren Buffett is a typical example of an ethical tycoon who has succeeded to be almost the richest man in the world by combining, in a remarkable manner ethical conduct with very high profitability. However, he is soon to give up most of his wealth to community, thus achieving social responsibility as well. Buffett believes that excessive wealth that was originated in society should go back to society, not 10% or 1%, but most of it, as he has shown. Not by legislation as in ultra-socialist countries, not by nationalization as in communist countries, but in a humane capitalistic regime, setting a voluntary example for every businessman. This is an inspiring example in an environment that has become less and less ethical, in a society where most of the wealth belongs to very few tycoons. We need to follow the example of ethical businessmen such as Buffett and to condemn the unethical conduct of the Lays and Skillings, in order to prove that being profitable and ethical is not an oxymoron. We should ostracize tycoons who made their fortunes by bribing corrupt politicians in order to receive privatized assets at a minimal price, by wronging minority shareholders, by stealing from pension funds and by manipulating the price of shares. We should glorify the ethical businessmen, with impeccable reputations and records of fair conduct to stakeholders, in order to induce managers to work in their companies and be proud of it, to convince customers to buy their products, services or funds, to influence banks to lend them money, as they should be set as an example for all of us.

12. A Holistic Business and Ethical Strategy

Each one of those principles is viable and a prerequisite for an ethical and profitable company. However, the precondition for their implementation is the orchestration of all of them in unison. Only a company that implements all the principles would/should prosper in the long run. It is obvious that nowadays there are many companies that do not comply with any of the principles, with the exception of marketing aggressiveness. Nevertheless, they prosper in the short run and sometimes even in the long run. Enron prospered for many years and was set as an example in the best business schools. Companies that were founded by the Robber Barons exist even today. But we can decide if unethical companies prevail. We can decide not to work for them, not to lend them money, not to buy their products and not to sell them ours. We have the power as employees, with our unions and pension funds, as customers who can be organized, as minority shareholders who can obtain control of their companies, as communities who can forbid unethical companies to operate in their towns, as bankers who can decide not to lend them money. Recent history has proven how we can organize ourselves in such a way as to make ethical conduct prevail, thus safeguarding the interests of the stakeholders. It was the Labor Unions who forced unethical companies to pay fair wages to their employees. The Greens have forced mega-corporations to preserve the environment. Activist associations have changed resolutions which were unfair to the minority shareholders. Ethical countries have managed to eradicate bribery and corruption; ethical communities ostracize unethical corporations. We should exercise our power with a holistic approach, assisted by the Institutes of Ethics, the Supervision Boards, and the Ethical Funds, to find the ethical companies and invest only in them. We should trust only ethical companies and businessmen and ostracize the others. It is not a utopian dream; it is feasible if we are properly organized, if we train management to be ethical, if we prove that we can be both profitable and ethical. We can achieve this goal in the foreseeable future to the benefit of society and individuals who want to survive in a sustainable environment.

26. LIST OF CORRUPTION PERCEPTION INDEX - TRANSPARENCY INTERNATIONAL – RANK IN 2014, SCORES IN 2012, 2013, 2014

2014 RANK	COUNTRY	SCORES
		2014	2013	2012
1	Denmark	92	91	90
2	New Zealand	91	91	90
3	Finland	89	89	90
4	Sweden	87	89	88
5	Norway	86	86	85
5	Switzerland	86	85	86
7	Singapore	84	86	87
8	Netherlands	83	83	84
9	Luxembourg	82	80	80
10	Canada	81	81	84
11	Australia	80	81	85
12	Germany	79	78	79
12	Iceland	79	78	82
14	United Kingdom	78	76	74
15	Belgium	76	75	75
15	Japan	76	74	74
17	Barbados	74	75	76
17	Hong Kong	74	75	77
17	Ireland	74	72	69
17	United States	74	73	73
21	Chile	73	71	72
21	Uruguay	73	73	72
23	Austria	72	69	69
24	Bahamas	71	71	71

25	United Arab Emirates	70	69	68
26	Estonia	69	68	64
26	France	69	71	71
26	Qatar	69	68	68
29	Saint Vincent and the Grenadines	67	62	62
30	Bhutan	65	63	63
31	Botswana	63	64	65
31	Cyprus	63	63	66
31	Portugal	63	62	63
31	Puerto Rico	63	62	63
35	Poland	61	60	58
35	Taiwan	61	61	61
37	Israel	60	61	60
37	Spain	60	59	65
39	Dominica	58	58	58
39	Lithuania	58	57	54
39	Slovenia	58	57	61
42	Cape Verde	57	58	60
43	Korea (South)	55	55	56
43	Latvia	55	53	49
43	Malta	55	56	57
43	Seychelles	55	54	52
47	Costa Rica	54	53	54
47	Hungary	54	54	55
47	Mauritius	54	52	57
50	Georgia	52	49	52
50	Malaysia	52	50	49
50	Samoa	52	N/A	N/A
53	Czech Republic	51	48	49

54	Slovakia	50	47	46
55	Bahrain	49	48	51
55	Jordan	49	45	48
55	Lesotho	49	49	45
55	Namibia	49	48	48
55	Rwanda	49	53	53
55	Saudi Arabia	49	46	44
61	Croatia	48	48	46
61	Ghana	48	46	45
63	Cuba	46	46	48
64	Oman	45	47	47
64	The FYR of Macedonia	45	44	43
64	Turkey	45	50	49
67	Kuwait	44	43	44
67	South Africa	44	42	43
69	Brazil	43	42	43
69	Bulgaria	43	41	41
69	Greece	43	40	36
69	Italy	43	43	42
69	Romania	43	43	44
69	Senegal	43	41	36
69	Swaziland	43	39	37
76	Montenegro	42	44	41
76	Sao Tome and Principe	42	42	42
78	Serbia	41	42	39
79	Tunisia	40	41	41
80	Benin	39	36	36
80	Bosnia and Herzegovina	39	42	42
80	El Salvador	39	38	38

80	Mongolia	39	38	36
80	Morocco	39	37	37
85	Burkina Faso	38	38	38
85	India	38	36	36
85	Jamaica	38	38	38
85	Peru	38	38	38
85	Philippines	38	36	34
85	Sri Lanka	38	37	40
85	Thailand	38	35	37
85	Trinidad and Tobago	38	38	39
85	Zambia	38	38	37
94	Armenia	37	36	34
94	Colombia	37	36	36
94	Egypt	37	32	32
94	Gabon	37	34	35
94	Liberia	37	38	41
94	Panama	37	35	38
100	Algeria	36	36	34
100	China	36	40	39
100	Suriname	36	36	37
103	Bolivia	35	34	34
103	Mexico	35	34	34
103	Moldova	35	35	36
103	Niger	35	34	33
107	Argentina	34	34	35
107	Djibouti	34	36	36
107	Indonesia	34	32	32
110	Albania	33	31	33
110	Ecuador	33	35	32

110	Ethiopia	33	33	33
110	Kosovo	33	33	34
110	Malawi	33	37	37
115	Côte d'Ivoire	32	27	29
115	Dominican Republic	32	29	32
115	Guatemala	32	29	33
115	Mali	32	28	34
119	Belarus	31	29	31
119	Mozambique	31	30	31
119	Sierra Leone	31	30	31
119	Tanzania	31	33	35
119	Vietnam	31	31	31
124	Guyana	30	27	28
124	Mauritania	30	30	31
126	Azerbaijan	29	28	27
126	Gambia	29	28	34
126	Honduras	29	26	28
126	Kazakhstan	29	26	28
126	Nepal	29	31	27
126	Pakistan	29	28	27
126	Togo	29	29	30
133	Madagascar	28	28	32
133	Nicaragua	28	28	29
133	Timor-Leste	28	30	33
136	Cameroon	27	25	26
136	Iran	27	25	28
136	Kyrgyzstan	27	24	24
136	Lebanon	27	28	30
136	Nigeria	27	25	27

136	Russia	27	28	28
142	Comoros	26	28	28
142	Uganda	26	26	29
142	Ukraine	26	25	26
145	Bangladesh	25	27	26
145	Guinea	25	24	24
145	Kenya	25	27	27
145	Laos	25	26	21
145	Papua New Guinea	25	25	25
150	Central African Republic	24	25	26
150	Paraguay	24	24	25
152	Congo, Republic of	23	22	26
152	Tajikistan	23	22	22
154	Chad	22	19	19
154	Congo, Democratic Republic of	22	22	21
156	Cambodia	21	20	22
156	Myanmar	21	21	15
156	Zimbabwe	21	21	20
159	Burundi	20	21	19
159	Syria	20	17	26
161	Angola	19	23	22
161	Guinea-Bissau	19	19	25
161	Haiti	19	19	19
161	Venezuela	19	20	19
161	Yemen	19	18	23
166	Eritrea	18	20	25
166	Libya	18	15	21
166	Uzbekistan	18	17	17
169	Turkmenistan	17	17	17

170	Iraq	16	16	18
171	South Sudan	15	14#N/A
172	Afghanistan	12	8	8
173	Sudan	11	11	13
174	Korea (North)	8	8	8
174	Somalia	8	8	8

XI. CONCLUSION

After finishing to write this book I feel a sense of humility. I thought that I knew a lot, in literature, drama, films, languages, but following the research that I made in order to write the book I reach the conclusion that I know almost nothing. A few years ago, I felt that I am not reading enough the books in my library in the many languages that I have learned. So, I decided to start reading about 500 books in about 50 languages and I read about 50 pages of each of those books just to get the flavor of the book, knowing that it will take me years to read even some of the books in view of the many occupations that I had in teaching and writing books, social occupations, seeing all the dozens of plays, concerts, lectures, and hundred of films that I saw every year at the theaters in Israel and abroad, at the cinematheque, on TV and at DVD libraries, and most of all spending "quality" time with my wife, children, grandchildren and friends. I know well only a few languages, there are many more talented people than me who know better dozens of languages, and it takes me too much time to read the "new" languages Russian, Greek, Arabic, Dutch or the Scandinavian languages. When I prepared the literature chapters of my book I found out that the thousands of books that I read in the past and the hundreds that I read simultaneously are only a drop in the sea of all the thousands of books that I want to read if to mention only the books of the authors in the modern era since 1860. I know that in my life time I'll not read even a large part of those books, it is a sisyphic effort beyond me...

There are many more intellectuals who know better the literatures that I read, almost all the authors have written many more books than me (even those who were less prolific than Alexandre Dumas pere), many more businessmen have succeeded much more than me - becoming CEOs of large companies, becoming millionaires, founding their own startups. Almost all the academics had a more brilliant career than me, became professors, and published books and articles in the most prestigious places. But I started at the age of 57 to publish books and at the age of 60 to teach at the university. However, I reached the conclusion that none of the people I know or heard about had a similar aggregate knowledge that I have, while continuing to live a normal life with a loving family, friends, working full time with an exemplar career, traveling and enjoying a cultural life. I think that I have achieved in the domain of business ethics a world reputation, laying the foundations of ethics to minority shareholders being the first in the world to write about this so important, relevant and topical subject, being the foremost academic in Israel on business ethics having taught thousands of enthusiastic students who chose me as the best lecturer, having written in a decade ten books published by the best publishers on such diverse topics as ethics, globalization, social justice, corporate governance, a novel, a play, dozens of articles and essays, a website with all my personal and academic publications.

Most of the academics that I know are not very intellectual, most of the intellectuals that I know are not so successful, the polyglots specialize mostly in their languages, and so on. So, my uniqueness is probably the variety of interests that I have (called by one of the world prominent authors Joshua Sobol "a renaissance spirit"), not so professional but far better than dilettante, and in the domain of business ethics highly professional and innovative. Yet, I want to know more, to experience much more, to visit dozens of new countries, see hundreds of plays, read thousands of new books. I don't know what is the dead-line..., or the line of death, I am not sure that my health will enable me to accomplish even a fraction of my plans, so I have written this book in order to share with my readers part of my knowledge and experience, and give them the urge to read, watch, or visit new countries. If I'll succeed in that it will be a tiny contribution to society, give one more purpose to my life.

What can a man yearn for at the age of 72, if not that his milieu, his colleagues, his friends, his students, his readers, his compatriots, and especially his family, would tell him like to Figaro – Ah! Bravo Giacomo! Bravo, bravissimo; a te fortuna non mancherà – Ah, well done Jacques! Well done, very good; You will never lack for luck! And, indeed, in spite of the feelings that I have once in a while when I encounter personal, economic, health and justice setbacks, I consider myself a lucky man, who has achieved most of his goals in life, with self fulfilment, affluence, grateful students and readers, supporting friends, and most of all a marvelous and warm family, who backed with great empathy my activities.

Who would have believed that I would get an Insead MBA, that opened for me a brilliant and lucrative business career, and when I decided to act against the lack of business ethics, to write a dissertation – the first on ethics to minority shareholders - and get a PhD (with Distinction) at the age of 60. That I would write more than 10 books, some of them held in thousands libraries, teach and influence thousands of students, learn 50 languages, read thousands of books, see hundreds of plays, and visit the five continents. So, I am grateful for all what I have achieved, Figaro is sometimes su/up or giù/down, but gracias a la vida que me ha dado tanto, thanks to life who gave him so much, while hoping to contribute even more. This book is therefore not the beginning of the end but the end of the beginning.

I hope that there would be at least a few thousands readers who share with me if not all my interests, at least most of my interests, or even some of my interests in literature, plays, films, business, ethics, academics, culture, languages, music, politics, history, geography, anthropology, sociology, psychology, philosophy, biographies, poetry, folklore, humor, art, innovation, religion, etc. You can read my book in one hour or during a lifetime, as the book (which is also bulky as it encompasses so many topics) has links or can have links to thousands of books, films, songs, directly from this book (I've started to indicate the links but due to their huge number I've ceased to do it quite early but anyone can complement this list), or from Wikipedia, Netflix, YouTube, Amazon, Encyclopedias, the Gutenberg project where you can read thousands of books that I've mentioned in my book free of charge, you can also hear and watch the films, plays, songs, poems, classical music, musicals with the links or without links free of charge, in English or in the other languages mentioned in my book. What is amazing is the availability of culture free of charge or at a very low cost on the Internet and elsewhere. You can read most of the books and plays by Emile Zola, Victor Hugo, Shakespeare, Cervantes, Goethe... and watch most of the plays, films and songs free of charge. For example you can watch the 10 best plays by Moliere played marvelously by La Comedie Francaise free of charge. You can watch most of the films by Charlie Chaplin gratis. And if not - you can purchase the classics in books, plays, films at a very low cost on Amazon or elsewhere on the Internet. An example on how the best authors are disregarded is the case of Paul Johann Ludwig Heise, a German author who won the Nobel Prize about a century ago in 1910. Only 3-27 downloads took place since his works in German were included in the Gutenberg Project. Heise, whom one of the Nobel judges said that 'Germany has not had a greater literary Genius since Goethe'.

So, if the reader is relying on my taste and guidance he can reach a high level of intellectuality at practically no cost. When you think how much you have to pay to see a tedious musical on Broadway ($500 for a couple of good tickets) or see a popular singer (up to $1,000 for two or even one ticket)... You can prefer to read a book by Zola, read or watch a play by Shakespeare, watch a film by Ingmar Bergman, or hear a song by Edith Piaf and a concert by Barenboim on the Internet and gratis. So, we are in a topsy-turvy situation: the kitsch costs too much and the best of the best, the divine entertainment in reading or watching classics costs nothing. You just have to change your state of mind, like

I did in my teens, and you'll be transformed to a much better person, an intellectual, a cosmopolitan at no cost. You can even stop keeping in touch with the superficial social network on Facebook, send endless photos of your kids on your mobile phone, or even not use the latest version of this phone which is completely senseless. The best costs nothing and the worst costs a lot, yet there is a lot of demand for the worse while there is almost no demand for the best, all this due to the brainwash of the opium for the mass sellers. And when you think that the neoliberal capitalist regimes accused the communists of brainwashing. This brainwashing was nothing in comparison to the brainwashing of the neoliberals seducing you to pay a lot for products that you don't need, spend your time in occupations that are senseless, and working for a smaller and smaller salary and standard of living while they (the top 1% and the politicians and civil servants working for them) spend millions on even more senseless occupations. The reason for that is that if you become an intellectual reading the classics you might reach the conclusion that those elites do not contribute anything to society and decide to use your democratic rights, chose a new regime – a second republic that will work for the masses' benefits and not for their own. And so a new era will begin, a new gilded age, an intellectual age, an age of social and economic justice, for those of us who would opt at last for a better and new life!

I want to shake the complacency of businessmen, statesmen, fundamentalists, peacelovings, and I am aware that I may be called an enemy of the people or a Don Quixote. I may even be called a dilletante, anti-business, anti-academic, anti-democratic, a pseudo-intellectual, a bloody Jew, a retrograde Oriental, a Pharaonic Egyptian, a monstrous Israeli, a plagiarist, a Collage painter, a nationalist, fascist, Nazi, racist, anarchist, communist, or probably I'll be ignored. I don't want to justify myself. It is true that my book includes a collage of hundreds of entries from Wikipedia, Encyclopedia Britannica and other encyclopedias and Internet websites, extracts of books and plays, works in dozens of languages, but I have edited this collage thus creating a new whole, I would even say a new form of literature, that combines all those, but more than 50% of this book is yet completely original - a bulky book of 800+ pages. This book can be a Life Companion for the Universal Intellectual Humanist, as you can read it during all your lifetime together with all its links to books, films, music, arts, personalities, history, politics, songs, languages, philosophy, drama, etc.

This book is my credo, my truth, which may not be convenient to neoliberals who rule the world's economy, to crookish tycoons, to hypocrite civil rights peacelovings, countries, and international organizations who condemn Israel and back the Hamas, Hezbollah, Iran and terrorism. I advocate cosmopolitanism without relinquishing your national identity, culture in all its forms but primarily the Western culture that I know, tolerance for all nations, religions, and credos, provided that they don't advocate terrorism and don't want to hinder progress, women's rights, making us "return" to the Middle Ages, liberte, egalite, fraternite. I believe like Victor Hugo, Emile Zola, Gandhi and Herzl that we have to take our fate in our own hands, aide-toi et le ciel t'aidera – help yourself and Heaven will help you. I do not think like Schopenhauer who wrote: "The truth can wait, for it lives a long life." At the age of 72, I don't have another long life to live, I am doing it primarily for the sake of my children, my grandchildren, my family, my true friends, my community, city, country, and humanity. I am not afraid as Hugo, Amos, Nathan and Zola were not. I can no more lecture, but I can still write books, and this is what I am doing, not only for bibliotherapy, but rather to leave it as a legacy. I am not a philosopher who waits for eternity to make his impact. I do my utmost to shorten the time for achieving justice and truth, hoping that my readers will continue my mission, as they will have in the future a very long life to achieve them vehemently, humanely, and justly, at last in their lifetime.

XII. CV, FILMS, PHOTOS, LIST OF LINKS

JACQUES CORY – CV AND LIST OF PUBLICATIONS

Dr. JACQUES CORY – CURRICULUM VITAE

PERSONAL INFORMATION

Home Address: 2, Costa Rica Street, Haifa, Israel 34981

Telephone: 972-4-8256608 or 972-4-8246316. Mobile: 972-544-589518.

Fax: 972-4-8343848

E-mail: coryj@zahav.net.il or cory@netvision.net.il

Website: <http://www.businessethicscory.com> or <http://www.businessethics.co.il>

EDUCATION

Ph.D. Business Administration (with distinction), CNAM - Conservatoire National des Arts et Metiers, Paris, France, 2004. Doctoral Dissertation in French - 'Business Ethics and the Minority Shareholders' - the first dissertation on this subject in the world.

MBA Business Administration, INSEAD, Fontainebleau, France, 1968. An International MBA in a trilingual program: English, French and German.

BA Economics and Political Sciences, Hebrew University of Jerusalem, Israel, 1966.

ACADEMIC ACTIVITIES

2004-2013 Lecturer at the MBA, International MBA, MA, BA programs, and 17 classes of the Naval Academy, at The University of Haifa, Israel, on: Corporate Governance, Business Administration, Social & Economic Justice, Business Ethics, CSR - Corporate Social Responsibility, Sustainability, Globalization, M&A - Mergers & Acquisitions, Business and Government, Leadership and Stakeholders, NGOs and the Public Sector. Elected in 2005 as the Best Lecturer of the University of Haifa and received appreciation letters from deans and students.

2010-2011 Lecturer at the International MBA program in English, at The Tel Aviv University, Israel, on: The Future of Capitalism in a Sustainable Society, a Contemporary Course in the Context of the Great Recession of 2007-2010; and a Course on Business Ethics.

2009-2010 Lecturer at the Executive MBA program, at The Technion Israel Institute of Technology, Tel Aviv, Israel, on: Business Ethics & the Future of Capitalism in a Sustainable Society.

2006 Visiting Professor, INSEAD, Singapore, on: Semestrial Course of Business Ethics - 'Individual, Business & Society: The Ethical Dilemma'.

2005 Lecturer at the Ruppin Academic Center on Business Ethics.

2010-2014 Lecturer at the Carmel Academic Center in English and in Hebrew on Business Ethics and the Future of Capitalism.

BUSINESS ACTIVITIES

- 2014 Writing of Ethical Code, 10 Case Studies, and Training for Sibat, the International Defense Cooperation Agency
- 2006 Chairman of the Advisory Board, Taditel, Israel.
- 2005 Business Manager CycleTec, affiliate of American Israeli Paper Mill, Israel.
- 2002 General Manager Corporate Recovery Management, W&S Israel.
- 1981 - 2000 Top-level management of large and small hi-tech companies, M&A and strategic partnerships, international business, know-how transfer with conglomerates, shares and debentures offerings in the US & Israel, subsidiaries management, international turnarounds, initiating new ventures. Business activities in France, US, Europe, Israel.

Turnaround Plans and successful implementation of Elbit (1981-1982), Elscint's subsidiaries (1987-1988), NBase (1995-1996), and other companies, in hi-tech and low-tech, in France, the US and Israel, increasing in several cases valuation by more than 1,000%.

M&A and JV Negotiations of Israeli, U.S., Canadian, French, German, and Spanish companies in the computer, Internet, data communication, telecom, imaging, semi-conductor, and aerospace industries. Due diligence, negotiations, 100 business plans, strategic planning.

Technology Transfer: conducting of negotiations and agreements, including development, manufacturing and marketing rights, between large European, American and Israeli companies, such as Nixdorf, Alcatel, Hon and Global. Management of a Satellite Communications Consortium (1991-1993) comprised of some of the largest Israeli companies: IAI, Rafael/Galram, Elisra, Gilat, Technion.

Management: (1981-1987) Vice President in charge of business activities, sales and finance of Elbit, one of the largest Israeli hi-tech companies. Was directly responsible for the transition from heavy losses to peak profits, M&A, and international business breakthrough. Managed U.S. and Israeli public offerings. Member of U.S. and Israeli Boards of Directors. Initiated and managed Strategic Planning.

1973-1980: Sales Manager and Head of the Defense Sales Department at Elbit, Israel.

1970-1973: Export Manager and Assistant to the Executive CEO at Electra, Israel.

1968-1970: Assistant to the Strategic Planning VP of Israel Aircraft Industries, Israel.

BOOKS

"Business Ethics for a Sustainable Society: Conquering the Corporate Frankenstein", The Edwin Mellen Press, US, 2009. An academic book in English, focusing on the Economic Whirl, starting in the eighties with damages of billions and culminating in the Great Economic Crisis of 2008 with damages of trillions, its origins, analysis and potential solutions. The book comprises of theoretical issues, cases based on business experience, and works: on business ethics, sustainability, globalization, corporate governance, & social responsibility. Hard cover - 2009, soft cover - 2010, used as textbook.

"Selected Issues in Business Ethics and Social Responsibility", published by Magnes Publishers, the Hebrew University of Jerusalem, Israel, in July 2008: Analysis of theoretical issues and ethical dilemmas in original cases, films, plays & novels, forecasting the world economic crisis & presenting practical vehicles to overcome the crisis. Received an outstanding acclaim and used as textbook.

Two books - "Business Ethics: The Ethical Revolution of Minority Shareholders" and "Activist Business Ethics", published by Kluwer Academic Publishers Boston, US, in 2001 (now Springer). Paperback Editions by Springer, US, 2004. Pioneer research, based on case studies of U.S., French & Israeli companies and extensive business experience, with a modern approach on activism in business ethics. The books found the rules that govern unethical conduct towards minority shareholders, which were validated by the Enron scandal. Activist Business Ethics is quoted on Wikipedia & other websites, is quoted several times in the entry "Business Ethics" of Wikipedia, is recommended in Wikipedia and Answers.com for "Further Reading", and is treated as a standard text/source book in Talk: Business Ethics in Wikipedia. The book is in about one thousand university libraries all over the world (USA – 750, Germany – 41, Canada – 36, France, UK, Netherlands, Belgium, Norway, Denmark, Poland, Italy, Switzerland, Romania, Slovenia, Spain, Mexico, Colombia, Lebanon, Israel, Saudi Arabia, United Arab Emirates, Turkey, Qatar, South Korea, South Africa, Malaysia, Singapore, China, etc.), and sells also in Russia, India, Japan, Greece, Thailand, Brazil, etc.

Doctoral Dissertation in French - 'Business Ethics & the Minority Shareholders', 2004, at CNAM, Paris, France, in 2004 and at other locations. Book "L'ethique des affaires et les actionnaires minoritaires", published by Editions Universitaires Europeennes in France in 2012. Used as textbook.

Novel in Hebrew "Beware of Greeks' Presents", Bimat Kedem, Israel, 2001, a modern Odyssey on Business Ethics, with the essay "Business Ethics in Israel – the Dream and the Calamity", one of the first essays on this topic. Used as textbook. A Play in Hebrew - "Nelly's Choice", Jacques Cory with Amalia Eyal, in 2005 (on Cory's website and at the library of the University of Haifa). Used as textbook. Reading of the play was performed at the Hebrew University of Jerusalem on July 30, 2008. Translated into French in 2008 by Saskia Cohen - "Le choix de Nelly", published in 2012 in France by Edilivre. A Play in Hebrew "Nelly Doron" by Jacques Cory, written in 1997 and published on Cory's website, University of Haifa, Transparency International Israel, Ometz, Carmel websites, etc. in 2012.

Chapters in Edited Books – "Une maniere originale d'enseigner la RSE" (An original method to teach CSR), in the book "La RSE – La responsabilite sociale des entreprises – Theories et pratiques", by Francois Lepineux, Jean-Jacques Rose, Carole Bonanni, Sarah Hudson, published by Dunod in France in 2010. "In the Name of Citizens, Business or Officials? Insights on the Public Responsibility of the Government and Public Administration" by Eran Vigoda Gadot and Jacques Cory, in the book "Public Responsibility in Israel" by Raphael Cohen-Almagor, Ori Arbel-Ganz, Asa Kasher, published by Hakibbutz Hameuchad Publishing House & The Jerusalem Center for Ethics, in Hebrew, in Israel, 2012. One of the first essays on Business & Government & Social Justice in Israel.

2012 - "Social, Economic & Governmental Justice: Essays, Articles & the Play 'Nelly Doron'" free ebook in Hebrew, published on the Internet at Jacques Cory's website in HOME, BOOKS and HEBREW, at the University of Haifa's Library website - <http://lib.haifa.ac.il> (search by name of author or book), Transparency International Israel, Ometz, Carmel Academic Center websites, etc. Includes also short stories: "Baruch Ashem", "Rain Fairy", correspondence, appreciation letters, social justice projects, satires, Ladino activities, case studies... Based on "Essays & Articles on Social & Economic Justice, Business & Government in Israel", published since 2010 on journals & websites. Additional essays, articles, case studies and a code of ethics appear on Cory's and other organizations' websites and might be part of a published printed version of the eBook, if a publisher would publish the book in Israel. The updated eBook is split in two eBooks: a professional book – 2016 – "Ethical Codes and Case Studies, Essays and Articles on Social, Economic and Governmental Justice", and a book on general and personal topics – 2016 – "Essays, Memoirs and Articles on General and Personal Topics".

2010 - "The Future of Capitalism in a Sustainable Society" in English, based on The Great Recession of 2007-2010: book in progress, along an outline on Cory's website. Bibliography of 120 books, a similar number of videos, and hundreds of articles, was read and hundreds of notes were prepared as basis for writing the book upon receipt of adequate financing. The book calls into question the conduct of corporations, leaders, executives and regulators before, during and after the Recession and shows how the invisible hand, minimal regulation and maximization of profits have a perverse impact on the world economy, society, stakeholders, business and profitability. Finally, the book suggests a new political economy of the state, new strategy for the private and public sectors, new economy of income and wealth distribution, in the context of a proper humane policy bringing sustainable development.

2016 – "Ethics Pays: A Comprehensive Atlas of Salient Parameters in the 300 Countries of the World Proving that Ethics Pays" in English. The eBook proves that the most ethical countries obtain the best results in all the parameters - GDP per capita, democracy, peace, equality, freedom, happiness, social progress, efficiency, globalization, competitiveness, etc., and the most corrupt countries obtain the worst results. The book is also a geography book describing the 18 - 55 most salient parameters of the world's countries, and comparing the achievements of all the 300 countries of the world. The most salient parameters can be allocated to each country, or can remain in the tables of the book and in the links of the book.

2016 – "Cory's Cosmopolitan Cultural Credo: Autobiography – A Lifetime Companion for the Universal Intellectual Humanist" in English. An eBook describing Cory's experience, works and thoughts on his fields of interest, a new kind of literature, comprising of a mixture of: novels, drama, biographies, non-fiction, linguistics, geography, business, ethics, academics, economics, history, music, arts, films, philosophy, poetry, folklore, sociology, travel, and even humor. Cory blended all those ingredients in his long careers in diverse occupations and avocations, which might interest the intellectual reader of the book. The book is Cory's credo and truth, an ode to humanism, moderation and harmony, in Cory's cosmopolitan, polyglot and holistic approach. It can be read, seen, or heard during thousands of hours, everybody can find interest in parts of this book, which hopefully will arise a desire to learn languages, literature, philosophy, history, geography, ethics, and drama, and watch the best films, music, folklore, and arts. In this book Cory wants to shake the complacency of businessmen, statesmen, fundamentalists, peacelovings, academics, & intellectuals, who often don't see the whole picture, as this book does, encompassing most of the facets of culture.

2016 – "Ijiko and His Grandparents in the Jungle" – in Hebrew. The children book by Jacques Cory, illustrated by Elena Gat, edited by Shirly Garfunkel, exists in a book format with illustrations but it was not published yet, and also as an eBook (without the illustrations) at Jacques Cory's website. This book is based on the author's jungle stories to his children and grandchildren, who also contributed their inputs to the plot, with names primarily deriving from funny words in Ladino, as the lion Hastrapula, the giraffe Siskerina, the monkey Sholobolo, the peacock Zurzuvi, the witch-doctor Melizina, the rhinoceros Haftona, etc.

PROFESSIONAL ACTIVITIES

- 2013 – Member of the Advisory Board of I.Q.L. The Israeli Directors Forum Ltd. The Forum (Integrity, Quality & Leadership) is designed to upgrade the work of directors as well as to enrich and equip them with professional tools for performance of their duty.
- 2012 - Initiating a proposal for the Award of Sustainable Justice Prizes in Israel and in other countries, member of the Prize Committee with well-known ethical experts in the award fields of: Social Justice, Economic Justice, Governmental Justice, Environmental Justice, Media Justice, Educational Justice & Cultural Justice, i.a. Nobel Prize laureate Professor Dan Shechtman, famous playwright Joshua Sobol, and leading professors, journalists & activists.
- 2011 - Organization of Symposium on Social & Economic Justice with the University of Haifa & Ometz in Haifa, Israel. Lecture by Cory, Participation of Leading Professors, Businessmen, Social Activists, NGO Leaders & Daphni Leef. Symposium filmed by the Academic Channel.
Participation in the Forums of the Israeli Social Protest Movement and Others for Enhancing Social Justice in Israel, Transparency, Ethics, & Reducing Business & Government Relations.
- 2001 - Lectures at Conferences, Universities, Organizations, Companies and Governmental Forums, in the U.S., Europe and Israel. Transcripts, Films & Articles on Lectures – on Cory's website.

Transparency International, Berlin – Drawing Lessons from the Great 2008 Recession - 2010

Insead, Fontainebleau, France - Lectures and Workshops at Ethics Days – 2001/2003

European Union - Stresa, Italy, Lecture on Trends in M&A - 2001

Ethics & Management - Symposium of Paris' high ranking executives - 2003

In Europe – meetings for promoting Cory's books in Paris, London, Frankfurt, Amsterdam and Copenhagen, with collaboration of Kluwer – 2001

In the USA – meetings for promoting Cory's books in Washington, Boston and New York, participating at the annual meeting of Society for Business Ethics in Washington – 2001

Israel: Keynote Speaker - Top Management of Israeli Bank Leumi, Transparency International, Israeli SEC, the Israeli Electric Company, Elbit, IAI, Apax & Insead Anciens Association, Ernst & Young. Magnes Launching of Book – ZOA hall, Tel Aviv, Bimat Kedem Launching of Book – Suzan Dalal hall, Tel Aviv. Speaker at the Hi-Tech Summit (Technology & People), Directors' Convention, Ethics Center at the Israeli Stock Exchange, Internal Auditors Convention, Mishkenot Shaananim Ethics Center, Ethics & Engineering, BDO, Migdal Insurance Group, Izraeli Ethics Center, Ometz, forums of the Technion and the University of Haifa, Reali High School, and on Israeli radio & TV.

2013 – Articles in Walla Business and Ethics Center Mishkenot Shaananim Bulletin

2010 - Publicist, News First Class, NFC, News 1, a leading Israeli News Website

2009-2011 – Columnist, "Ethics and You" – The Israeli CPA Review

2008- Articles in Transparency International Israel and Ometz

2006 - Member of the Editorial Advisory Board, Society and Business Review, Emerald.

2001 - Israel: Essays and Articles on Social & Economic Justice, Business Ethics, Business & Government

PUBLIC ACTIVITIES

2015 – Award of the Israeli highest ethical prize by Ometz "Itur Hamofet".

1981 - Member of the Society for Business Ethics in the US; the France and United Kingdom Chambers of Commerce in Israel. Member of the Boards of Directors/Management of Transparency International Israel, Ometz ethical NGO, Haifa Theater, Haifa Film Festival.

LANGUAGES

Fluent in English, French (mother tongue), Spanish, Ladino, Hebrew. Fair knowledge of Italian, German, Portuguese, Romanian, Interlingua. Reading capabilities in more than 40 other languages.

AVOCATIONS

Theater, Literature, Cinema, Languages, Research, Travel.

FAMILY AND PERSONAL STATUS

Married Ruthy Popliker, August 19, 1969. Three children: Joseph, Amir, Shirley, all of them married with children. Born in Cairo, Egypt, June 5, 1944, studied in French at the Lycee Francais du Caire. Living in Israel since 1953. Israeli citizen (mother Pauline Simon Cory was a Greek citizen).

LIST OF PUBLICATIONS – Dr. JACQUES CORY

BOOKS

2012 - "Social, Economic & Governmental Justice: Essays, Articles & the Play 'Nelly Doron'" free ebook in Hebrew, published on the Internet at Jacques Cory's website in HOME, BOOKS and HEBREW, at the University of Haifa's Library website - <http://lib.haifa.ac.il> (search by name of author or book), Transparency International Israel, Ometz, Carmel Academic Center websites, etc. Includes also short stories: "Baruch Ashem", "Rain Fairy", correspondence, appreciation letters, social justice projects, satires, Ladino activities, case studies... Based on "Essays & Articles on Social & Economic Justice, Business & Government in Israel", published since 2010 on journals & websites. Additional essays, articles, case studies and a code of ethics appear on Cory's and other organizations' websites and might be part of a published printed version of the eBook, if a publisher would publish the book in Israel. The updated eBook is split in two eBooks: a professional book – 2016 – "Ethical Codes and Case Studies, Essays and Articles on Social, Economic and Governmental Justice", and a book on general and personal topics – 2016 – "Essays, Memoirs and Articles on General and Personal Topics".

2010 - "The Future of Capitalism in a Sustainable Society" in English, based on The Great Recession of 2007-2010: book in progress, along an outline on Cory's website. Bibliography of 120 books, a similar number of videos, and hundreds of articles, was read and hundreds of notes were prepared as basis for writing the book upon receipt of adequate financing. The book calls into question the conduct of corporations, leaders, executives and regulators before, during and after the Recession and shows how the invisible hand, minimal regulation and maximization of profits have a perverse impact on the world economy, society, stakeholders, business and profitability. Finally, the book suggests a new political economy of the state, new strategy for the private and public sectors, new economy of income and wealth distribution, in the context of a proper humane policy bringing sustainable development.

2016 – "Ethics Pays: A Comprehensive Atlas of Salient Parameters in the 300 Countries of the World Proving that Ethics Pays" in English. The eBook proves that the most ethical countries obtain the best results in all the parameters - GDP per capita, democracy, peace, equality, freedom, happiness, social progress, efficiency, globalization, competitiveness, etc., and the most corrupt countries obtain the worst results. The book is also a geography book describing the 18 - 55 most salient parameters of the world's countries, and comparing the achievements of all the 300 countries of the world. The most salient parameters can be allocated to each country, or can remain in the tables of the book and in the links of the book.

2016 – "Cory's Cosmopolitan Cultural Credo: Autobiography – A Lifetime Companion for the Universal Intellectual Humanist" in English. An eBook describing Cory's experience, works and thoughts on his fields of interest, a new kind of literature, comprising of a mixture of: novels, drama, biographies, non-fiction, linguistics, geography, business, ethics, academics, economics, history, music, arts, films, philosophy, poetry, folklore, sociology, travel, and even humor. Cory blended all those ingredients in his long careers in diverse occupations and avocations, which might interest the intellectual reader of the book. The book is Cory's credo and truth, an ode to humanism, moderation and harmony, in Cory's cosmopolitan, polyglot and holistic approach. It can be read, seen, or heard during thousands of hours, everybody can find interest in parts of this book, which hopefully will arise a desire to learn languages, literature, philosophy, history, geography, ethics, and drama, and watch the best films, music, folklore, and arts. In this book Cory wants to shake the complacency of businessmen, statesmen, fundamentalists, peacelovings, academics, & intellectuals, who often don't see the whole picture, as this book does, encompassing most of the facets of culture.

2012 - "In the Name of Citizens, Business or Officials? Insights on the Public Responsibility of the Government and Public Administration" by Eran Vigoda Gadot and Jacques Cory, in the edited book "Public Responsibility in Israel" by Raphael Cohen-Almagor, Ori Arbel-Ganz, Asa Kasher, published by Hakibbutz Hameuchad Publishing House/The Jerusalem Center for Ethics, in Hebrew, in Israel. One of the first essays (written in 2008) on Business & Government and Social Justice in Israel.

2010 - "Une maniere originale d'enseigner la RSE" (An original method to teach CSR), in the book "La RSE – La responsabilite sociale des entreprises – Theories et pratiques", by Francois Lepineux, Jean-Jacques Rose, Carole Bonanni, Sarah Hudson, published in French by Dunod in France. On teaching CSR with plays, novels & films on business, CSR & ethics.

2009 - "Business Ethics for a Sustainable Society: Conquering the Corporate Frankenstein", The Edwin Mellen Press, US. An academic book in English, focusing on the Economic Whirl, starting in the eighties with damages of billions and culminating in the Great Economic Crisis of 2008 with damages of trillions, its origins, analysis and potential solutions. The book comprises of theoretical issues, cases based on business experience, and works: on business ethics, sustainability, globalization, corporate governance, & social responsibility. Hard cover - 2009, soft cover - 2010, used as textbook.

7/2008 - "Selected Issues in Business Ethics and Social Responsibility", published by Magnes Publishers, the Hebrew University of Jerusalem, Israel: Analysis of theoretical issues and ethical dilemmas in original cases, films, plays & novels, forecasting the world economic crisis & presenting practical vehicles to overcome the crisis. Received an outstanding acclaim and used as textbook.

Two books - "Business Ethics: The Ethical Revolution of Minority Shareholders" and "Activist Business Ethics", published by Kluwer Academic Publishers Boston, US, in 2001 (now Springer). Paperback Editions by Springer, US, 2004. Pioneer research, based on case studies of U.S., French & Israeli companies and extensive business experience, with a modern approach on activism in business ethics. The books found the rules that govern unethical conduct towards minority shareholders, which were validated by the Enron scandal. Activist Business Ethics quoted on Wikipedia & other websites, is quoted several times in the entry "Business Ethics" of Wikipedia, is recommended in Wikipedia and Answers.com for "Further Reading", and is treated as a standard text/source book in Talk: Business Ethics in Wikipedia. The book is in about one thousand university libraries all over the world (USA – 750, Germany – 41, Canada – 36, France, UK, Netherlands, Belgium, Norway, Denmark, Poland, Italy, Switzerland, Romania, Slovenia, Spain, Mexico, Colombia, Lebanon, Israel, Saudi Arabia, United Arab Emirates, Turkey, Qatar, South Korea, South Africa, Malaysia, Singapore, China, etc.), and sells also in Russia, India, Japan, Greece, Thailand, Brazil, etc.

Doctoral Dissertation in French - 'Business Ethics & the Minority Shareholders', 2004, at CNAM, Paris, France, in 2004 and at other locations. Book "L'ethique des affaires et les actionnaires minoritaires", published by Editions Universitaires Europeennes in France in 2012. Used as textbook.

Novel in Hebrew "Beware of Greeks' Presents", Bimat Kedem, Israel, 2001, a modern Odyssey on Business Ethics, with the essay "Business Ethics in Israel – the Dream and the Calamity", one of the first essays on this topic. Used as textbook. A Play in Hebrew - "Nelly's Choice", Jacques Cory with Amalia Eyal, in 2005 (on Cory's website and at the library of the University of Haifa). Used as textbook. Reading of the play was performed at the Hebrew University of Jerusalem on July 30, 2008. Translated into French in 2008 by Saskia Cohen - "Le choix de Nelly", published in 2012 in France by Edilivre. A Play in Hebrew "Nelly Doron" by Jacques Cory, written in 1997 and published on Cory's website, University of Haifa, Transparency International Israel, Ometz, Carmel websites, etc. in 2012.

2016 – "Ijiko and His Grandparents in the Jungle" – in Hebrew. The children book by Jacques Cory, illustrated by Elena Gat, edited by Shirly Garfunkel, exists in a book format with illustrations but it was not published yet, and also as an eBook (without the illustrations) at Jacques Cory's website. This book is based on the author's jungle stories to his children and grandchildren, who also contributed their inputs to the plot, with names primarily deriving from funny words in Ladino, as the lion Hastrapula, the giraffe Siskerina, the monkey Sholobolo, the peacock Zurzuvi, the witch-doctor Melizina, the rhinoceros Haftona, etc.

ARTICLES

2009 – 2011 – Columnist: "Ethics and You" at Roeh Haheshbon, Israeli CPA Review

June 2011, Holistic Ethics, "Ethics & You", Column in Roeh Haheshbon, Israeli CPA Review

March 2011 - Inside Information and Insider Trading, "Ethics and You", Israeli CPA Review

October 2010 - Lessons for the Insurance Industry, "Ethics and You", Israeli CPA Review

August 2010 - Teaching Business Ethics with Plays, "Ethics and You", Israeli CPA Review
(also in French)

June 2010, The Greatest Scheme in History, "Ethics and You", Israeli CPA Review

April 2010 - Mark to Market & the Great Recession, "Ethics and You", Israeli CPA Review

February 2010 - Sustainability - Paul Hawken, "Ethics and You", Israeli CPA Review
(also in English)

October 2009 - Drawing Lessons from the Great Recession of 2008, Israeli CPA Review
(also in English)

August 2009 - CPA's Ethical Mission, "Ethics and You" Column in Israeli CPA Review
(also in English)

June 2009 - Chinese Wall's Illusion, "Ethics and You" Column in Israeli CPA Review

April 2007 – Essay "The Twelve Commandments", 12 Rules on Reconciliation between Profitability and Ethics, in Roeh Haheshbon, the Israeli CPA Review (also in English)

2013 - Walla Business, a Leading Israeli News Website

May 2013 – Lapid, Fisher, Netanyahu, Bourgeoisie's Knights

March 2013 – Linking Economy and Society

2010 - Publicist at News First Class, NFC, News 1, a Leading Israeli News Website

March 2014 – On Theater, Cameri, Frost/Nixon

March 2014 – On Orientalism and Europocentrism

February 2014 – Eulogy for Zvi Aviel, one of the greatest Israeli's Poets, with Translation from German by Cory of one of his first stories

February 2014 – Spanish Citizenship for Sephardim

November 2013 – Ethics Starts at the Top

April 2013 - Sustainable Justice in the World's Cultures

March 2013 – Who Is the Real Aristocracy in Israel?

November 2012 – Social, Economic and Governmental Justice

August 2012 – The Nightmare of Julia, a satire

June 2012 - Absolute Responsibility for the Carmel Disaster and the Breaking of the Social Justice Movement

March 2012 - Social & Economic Justice Activists - Anarchists, Communists & Impudents?

February 2012 - Essay - The Actual Context of the Play "The Visit of the Old Lady"

November 2011 - Social & Economic Justice in Israel (Published also on Ometz's website)

August 2011 - Open Letter to the Leaders of the Social Movement

March 2011 – How I Discovered the Synagogue of Coria?

December 2010 - Brethren, Our Country is on Fire

July 2010 - Bibliotherapy and Me

2013 – Ethics Center Mishkenot Shaananim Bulletin

March 2013 – Social, Economic and Governmental Justice

2011 – Initiated and Participated with Ladinokomunita in the Translation and Editing of the UN Universal Declaration of Human Rights into Ladino, published on the UN Website, and on the website eSefarad Spain in Ladino.

2008 -2009 - Transparency International Israel's Website and Nihul Shakuf

October 2009 - The Decline of Ethics following the Great Recession of 2008

November 2008 - 36 Principles of Business and Ethics in the Economic World Towards 2020
(also in English)

2009 - Ometz's (Israeli Ethical Organization) Website

December 2009 - Article on the Great Recession

May 2009 - Futuristic Satire "Children of Winter 1973 – 2049"

April 2009 - The Basic Principles of the Political Platform of the Israeli Second Republic Movement

February 2009 - The Ethical Failures of the World Economic Crisis

(As well as articles published on other websites from 2010 onwards)

2004 - Articles published in Globes, a leading economic daily newspaper

September 2008 - (G Magazine pp. 25-30) an Interview with Cory and a Review by Dror Feuer on Cory's Book

August 2008 - Anat Cohen, On Ethical Screening for MBA Students, with Interviews of Leading Academics, including Jacques Cory

July 2004 – an Article by Jacques Cory "Stop the Rhinoceros we want to step down"

Other Articles

2014 – Spanish Citizenship for Sephardim in Ladino, Diyalog Turkey May 2014, pp. 87-89, Satire April 2014

2011 - How I discovered the synagogue of Coria? written by Cory in 5 languages, published: in Tarbut Sefarad Spain, in Spanish... Aurora Israel, in Spanish... Anajnu Chile, in Spanish... Shelanu Argentina, in Spanish... CCIU Uruguay, in Spanish... eSefarad Argentina, in Ladino & Spanish... Ladinokomunita USA, in Ladino... Forojudio Mexico, in Ladino... Los Muestrs Belgium, in Ladino... Aki Yerushalaim Israel, in Ladino... Sephardic Horizons USA, in Ladino... News1 Israel, in Hebrew... Sharsheret Hadorot Israel, in English & Hebrew... Halapid US, in English... Nahar Misraim France, in French... Letter from the Spanish Ambassador in Israel in Spanish with translation into English... Afterword by Cory in English

April 2005 - Site of Ladino Poem – "Onde estas mujer kerida?" (published in Aki Yerushalayim no. 77, p. 75), Text of the Ladino Poem, with Hebrew Translation

Site of "Oriental Wind – Who is Oriental?" (Hakivun Mizrah Review no. 2, p. 12, - Bimat Kedem), Text of the poem

August 2002 - Academic Books appear in home page of Kluwer's site as "Books Relating to the Enron Scandal".

July 2002 - Review on "Business Ethics" and novel in the National Chapter Bulletin of Transparency International

June 2002 - Essay on "Internet and Transparency as Ethical Vehicles" in the Israeli review "Status"

2002 - Review on "Business Ethics" in the European IQ Magazine no. 2, 2002, with a circulation of 30,000 copies to the Insead Alumni and Companies' contacts

2001 - 36 Laws of Wrongdoing to Minority Shareholders in Unethical Companies

2001 - Essay on Business Ethics in Israel (with a summary of Cory's Kluwer academic books)

Ethical Strategic Planning, The International Ethical Fund, The Global Center for Business Ethics, Integrity Tests

September/October 2001: The Internet and Transparency as Ethical Vehicles (Mashavei Enosh, 165-166)

How to Implement a Turnaround Plan (published in Investment & Society Israel 1989, Seven Days Ltd., pp. 36-37)

Summer 2001 - Review on "Business Ethics" in Transparency and Management, Transparency International Journal, Shvil

Introducing new materials on Jacques Cory's website: www.businessethicscory.com Book in Hebrew "Social, Economic & Governmental Justice", Articles, Extracts of Books, Social, Economic, Cultural, Travel & Linguistic Activities, Courses, Photos, Lectures & Videos of Lectures, Correspondence, Audio Play, Screenplay, Play "Nelly Doron", Stories, Lists, Internet Links...

FILMS & PHOTOS OF JACQUES CORY, HIS FAMILY, CAREER, TRAVELS

FILMS OF JACQUES CORY'S LECTURES

FILM BY ISRAELI ACADEMIC CHANNEL OF THE SYMPOSIUM ON SOCIAL & ECONOMIC JUSTICE, ORGANIZED BY JACQUES CORY WITH THE HAIFA UNIVERSITY & OMETZ ON SEPTEMBER 25, 2011, INCLUDING CORY'S LECTURE & TEXT OF LECTURE/ATTACHMENT

<http://actv.haifa.ac.il/programs/Item.aspx?it=2179>

KEYNOTE SPEAKER AT TRANSPARENCY INTERNATIONAL ISRAEL'S SEMINAR ON JANUARY 18, 2009: "THE CHALLENGES OF ETHICS AND PROFITABILITY IN THE BUSINESS WORLD IN THE CONTEXT OF THE ETHICAL FAILURES OF THE WORLD ECONOMIC CRISIS", IN PRESENCE OF PROFESSOR JOSEPH GROSS, CHAIRMAN TI ISRAEL, ARIEH AVNERI, CHAIRMAN OMETZ, GALIA SAGUY, CEO TI ISRAEL, DANIEL MILO, CEO ETHICS CENTER MISHKENOT SHAANANIM, PROFESSOR RAN LACHMAN, SHUKI STAUBER..., AT THE UNIVERSITY OF TEL AVIV

FILM OF 50 MINUTES OF LECTURE AT TI ISRAEL ON JANUARY 18, 2009 (ALSO ON TI ISRAEL'S SITE AND OMETZ'S SITE)

SUMMARY OF LECTURE AND PANEL AT TI ISRAEL ON 1. 18. 09

<mms://vod4.haifa.ac.il/p/ac/cory1.wmv>

TELEVISION INTERVIEW WITH AMIR GILAT, ISRAELI'S CHAIRMAN OF THE ISRAELI BROADCASTING AUTHORITY SINCE 2010, ON THE ACADEMIC CHANNEL OF ISRAEL ON FEBRUARY 13, 2007, IN HEBREW, ON BUSINESS ETHICS <mms://vod4.haifa.ac.il/p/ac/1807B.wmv>

FILM OF 2 HOURS OF THE LAUNCHING OF THE NOVEL "BEWARE OF GREEKS' PRESENTS" AT SUZAN DALAL HALL IN TEL AVIV ON JULY 29, 2001, WITH LECTURE AND INTERVIEW OF JACQUES CORY BY ITZHAK GOREN, EDITOR & PUBLISHER OF THE NOVEL, READING OF OF EXTRACTS BY THE ACTORS LELIA ABARUH & RAANAN LEVY, AND A PANEL ON BUSINESS ETHICS IN ISRAEL WITH THE JOURNALIST AND AUTHOR ARIEH AVNERI, PROFESSOR PERETZ LAVIE, ENTREPRENEUR JONATHAN ADERETH & JACQUES CORY

<mms://vod4.haifa.ac.il/p/ac/cory2.wmv>

Screenplay/Direction of 1'20" Film by Jacques on Ruthy's 45th Birthday in 1992, Summary, List of Clips/Songs, Video 1, 2

Audioplay \(4'38"\) of Program by Jacques on 20th wedding anniversary, 1989, written & read by Cory, Letters of Jacques & Ruthy in 69, prior to marriage, text, music, play & songs in 12 languages, Summary, Albums 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6

Clip on Jacques Cory's 70th Birthday: Presentation, Greetings

Jacques Cory telling a story to his grandson Ido

A Felicidade, a Brazilian carnival song, sung by in-law Vera Shaham with Jacques Cory, 6/2012

Forever Young - Ruthy Cory Clip on YouTube

Summary of the Play "Nelly's Choice", in English / Review by the great Israeli playwright Joshua Sobol on the play, in English/ List of 1'30" Music of the play in English Audio of Music Part 1, Part 2

Greetings on June 13, 2014, to Professor Danny Shechtman, in-law of Cory and Chemistry Nobel Prize winner 2011, on his President Candidacy, with the Second Republic Platform, Text and Partial Video

Jacques Cory's website: home page, with photos of the signing of Sibat's (Israeli International Defense Cooperation Agency) ethical code by its general manager, management and employees, portrait photo of Cory, photo of Cory lecturing at the Israeli Internal Auditors Conference – short CV of Cory, News of Cory 2011-2014 with links

Photo of Cory, the ethical officer of Sibat and The Ethical Code

Photo of Cory and Shahar Horev, the initiator and promoter of the Ethical Code, who won the first prize of the Israeli Ministry of Defense.

Photo of The Economic Whirl – more detailed CV of Cory, News of Cory 2009-2010, with links

About Jacques Cory on Cory's website, with photos of Cory's family in December 2013, portrait photos of Cory in 1987 and 2009, Appreciation certificate for conducting Elbit's IPO on Wall Street – July 1, 1987, Panel on Business Ethics in Israel – July 29, 2001, with Jacques Cory, Jonathan Adereth (former CEO of Elscint), Arie Avneri (Chairman of Ometz ethical organization), and Peretz Lavie (subsequently President of the Technion university, Israel) – links to CVs of Cory, appreciation letters, cultural and linguistics activities by Cory.

Jacques Cory in his family photo, from left to right: Amir Cory - son, Itai Cory – son of Amir, Jacques Cory, Noga Cory – daughter of Amir, Ruthy Cory (formerly Popliker) – Jacques' wife, Yael Garfunkel – daughter of Shirly, Shirly Garfunkel (formerly Cory) – daughter, Joseph/Yossi Cory – son, Tomer Cory – son of Joseph. In front of them – Ophir Cory – son of Joseph, Doron Cory – son of Joseph, Noam David Garfunkel – son of Shirly, Ido Garfunkel – son of Shirly. Other members of the family, not in this picture but in other pictures: Ronny Garfunkel – Shirly's husband, Ella Shechtman Cory (formerly Shechtman) – Amir's wife, Nira Cory (formerly Shaham) – Joseph's wife, Haim Cory – Jacques' brother, Rachel Zeiler – Ruthy's twin sister.

Informal photos of Cory's family – 12/2013

Photo of ten business cards of Cory since 1985 – additional details about Cory

Photo of Cory with Amos Gitai, the famous Israeli film director, and Joseph, on the inauguration reception of Joseph's sustainable architecture works at the Gitai museum in Haifa, Israel, 2015

Books on Cory's website - Photo of Cory at his library and photos of Cory's Kluwer/Springer books, Magnes book, Mellen book, and his novel – Links to Cory's books

Photo of Cory's French academic book

Photo of Cory's book on Social Justice

Cory at a meeting of the Advisory Board of I.Q.L. – The Israeli Directors' Forum Ltd.

Photo of Cory at his library, the cover of Cory's book Business Ethics: The Ethical Revolution of Minority Shareholders, and Jacques Cory at a celebration in Heidelberg, Germany, congratulating a friend on his sixtieth birthday, giving a speech in 18 languages, including proverbs in: English, German, French, Spanish, Catalan, Ladino, Italian, Greek, Latin, Hebrew, Arabic, Turkish, Yiddish, Romanian, Portuguese, Aramaic, Russian and Chinese \(see speech\).

Ruthy and Rachel at the age of 18 looking like Siamese twins with 2 heads, 1 body and 2 arms

Ruthy and Jacques at a synagogue in Portugal

Cory in East Berlin \(August 1967\) with French and German friends

Photos of Cory at his library, the cover of Cory's book Activist Business Ethics, and photo of Baron Edmond de Rothschild, with the Israeli grantees of Insead MBA's studies

Ruthy Cory in Prague

Cory at the gardens of Fontainebleau Palace \(1967\)

Photo of Baron Edmond de Rothschild, 7th from right, with the Israeli grantees of Insead MBA's studies, in front of the Palace of Fontainebleau, where Insead was located originally. Professor Teddy Weinshal is 6th from right and Jacques Cory is 2nd from right.

Cory's dissertation: Jacques Cory at his library, in front of CNAM, Paris, at the Celebration of the award of the PhD on March 23, 2004, with the members of the Jury: Professors Henri-Claude De Bettignies - Cory's Academic Mentor, Henk Van Luijk - the Best Man Cory has ever known \(see correspondence about his death\), Gregory Katz Benichou, Yvon Pesqueux, Aldo Levy.

Jacques as a very young boy with his mother Pauline and his grandfather Jakob \(papou\)

Itai as a very young boy

Jacques Cory answering to the Jury's questions at CNAM's hall, March 23, 2004

Amir at the reception of the Nobel Prize in Chemistry by his father-in-law Dan Shechtman in Stockholm, Sweden, 2011

Amir and his wife Ella at the reception of the Nobel Prize in Chemistry by Ella's father Dan Shechtman in Stockholm, Sweden, 2011

Ella's family – Dan Shechtman - father, Ziporah - mother, Amir - husband, Yoav - brother, Ella, at the Nobel Prize reception hall in Stockholm, Sweden, 2011

Cory at his library, cover of the book Selected Issues in Business Ethics and Social Responsibility, and photo of Israeli's president Itzhak Navon, with Cory, as VP Sales of Elbit, demonstrating to Navon Elbit's pioneering minicomputer.

Cory, as VP Sales of Elbit, \(left\), demonstrating to Yitzhak Navon, Israeli President & author of Sephardic plays, Elbit's pioneering minicomputer, writing the text of a poem "En el vergel de la reina", in Ladino & Hebrew.

Ruthy with her cellular phone

Ruthy laughing with hands up

Beware of Greeks' Presents - Cory at his library, lecturing at the Launching of his Novel, interviewed by Itzhak Goren, with the actors who played some scenes of his novel, and the Panel on Business Ethics in Israel with Jacques Cory, Jonathan Adereth, Arie Avneri - Cory's Activist Mentor, Peretz Lavie - all at Suzan Dalal Hall in Tel Aviv on 7/29/01

Cory in Corfu, Greece

Itai as a young boy

Jacques and Ruthy at Club Med in Bodrum, Turkey

Jacques in Prague on a bridge over the Moldau river

Jacques and Ruthy by the museum/mosque/basilica Hagia Sophia in Istanbul, Turkey

Jacques as a young man of 25 by the beach in Tel Aviv

Nelly's Choice - Cory at his library, with the actors who played some scenes of his novel/play at Suzan Dalal Hall in Tel Aviv on July 29, 2001, painting by Angelika Kauffmann Penelope von Eurykleia geweckt 1772 – detail, Wikipedia Commons, photo of Uri Levit.

Uri Levit, Jacques Cory's Business Mentor, the most ethical businessman Cory has ever known and collaborated with. Levit was CEO of Poalim Investments from 1981 to 1997, he founded with Cory who was VP of Elbit a 50%-50% subsidiary Eldor, collaborated with him on the purchase of Hazera, AG & other ventures, with integrity & ethics. All that, while Israel's business ethics deteriorated, as described in Cory's play "Nelly's Choice".

Ruthy and Jacques, with Ruthy's grandmother baba – Rosalia Cohen – at their wedding.

Ruthy and Jacques on bicycles in Naharyia, Israel

Ruthy in Naharyia prior to her wedding

Ruthy and Jacques in Naharyia prior to their wedding

Cory at his library, The Economic Whirl drawing/cover of book, cover of Business Ethics for a Sustainable Society

The Economic Whirl, cover of book Business Ethics for a Sustainable Society

Photos of Cory at his library and with his books – Links to articles by Cory

Amir, Noga and Itai at a lunch in our home

Noga playing the violin

Noga watching a piano concerto

Cory and Noga watching classical music

Lectures on Cory's website - Photos of Cory lecturing at the High Tech Summit (2001), the Internal Auditors Conference (2006), in Israel. Cory (1987) leading Elbit's NASDAQ IPO due diligence – details in writing on lectures, videos of lectures – see above in videos.

Lecture, Keynote Speaker at Transparency International, Berlin, 6. 4. 2010, on "Drawing Lessons from the Recession", with German Leitmotives based on "The Threepenny Opera"

Photos of Ruthy Cory at the Champs Elysees in Paris, viewing San Francisco, in Switzerland, at a museum and in Israel. Ruthy Cory with Amir and Joseph in Brussels, Belgium, Cambridge and Windermere, England.

Jacques as a boy with his brother Haim with a view of the Nile in Cairo

Ruthy shopping in Singapore

Jacques and Ruthy at a Buddha temple in Thailand

Ruthy, Joseph, Amir and Shirly at the beach in Tel Aviv

Jacques as a baby with his parents in the streets of Cairo

Ruthy, Shirly and Joseph, at his Bar Mitzva lunch

Fanny and David Popliker, Ruthy's parents, with Joseph on the day of his Bar Mitzvah

Pauline and Albert Cory, Jacques' parents, with Joseph, Amir and Shirly

Rhuty \(left\) with her twin sister Rachel as very young women

Amir with his grandfather David

Ruthy and Jacques as a young couple, hugging

Jacques and Shirly on a jet boat in New Zealand, on a balloon in Cairns, Australia, Jacques at a celebration in Elbit, with his mother Pauline at his Mt. Carmel house, in San Francisco, at home.
(click on the left photo to see 3 photos of Jacques' cousin Betty)

Pauline and Jacques, as a baby, at the balcony of their apartment in Cairo

Shirly with Aborigines in Australia

Cory with his colleagues at a business trip in Texas

Shirly as a very young girl doing her homework

Cory's mother Pauline as a young woman

Cory's parents Pauline and Albert, when they were very old

Cory touring Singapore

Pauline Cory and David Popliker, shortly before they passed away

Shirly, Amir and Joseph in Israel, Oslo and Copenhagen

Jacques at a balcony near the garden at his apartment in Tel Aviv

Shirly, Joseph and Amir, as young children

Albert, Pauline and Haim, Jacques' brother, at the ceremony of Haim's PhD graduation

Amir and Noga as a baby

Shirly smiling at a wedding

Joseph smiling, a few years ago

Amir talking, a few years ago

Amir and Ella Cory at their wedding in 2004, Joseph Cory \(center\) and Nira \(Shaham\) Cory at their wedding in 1998 with Shirly, Ruthy, Jacques and Amir. Shirly and Ronny Garfunkel at their wedding in 2006 with Jacques and Ruthy. Ruthy and Jacques Cory on one of their trips. Ruthy Cory with her children Amir, Joseph and Shirly at the celebration of her 60th birthday. Cory's family at a summer resort on Mount Carmel.

Ruthy and Jacques in Nahariya in June, 1969, a few weeks after they met

Fanny Popliker as the guest of honor at Amir's wedding, with Amir and Ella

Joseph and Nira at their wedding

Jacques and Shirly dancing at her wedding

Ruthy and Rachel at Ruthy's wedding

Jacques as a young boy disguised in Purim as Peter Pan, at the garden of their Kfar Ata house

Shirly and Ronny at their wedding

Ruthy smiling at her garden in the Mt. Carmel house

Ruthy's portrait at the age of 17

Ruthy Cory in Berlin, Paris, Italy, Spain, at an hotel and in Israel

Jacques with his father Albert at the balcony of their apartment in Cairo

Ruthy at Joseph's wedding

Ruthy and her in-law Danny Shechthman, shortly after he was awarded the Nobel Prize

Albert Cory near his library, with a map of Israel, large tapestries of Herzl/Herbert Samuel, large photos of Ben Gurion, Greta Garbo, his parents – Jakob and Sultana, and photos of the family

Fanny Popliker at her house, smiling

Ruthy Cory in Spain

Cory laughing with his grandchildren Tomer, Doron, Ophir and Noam

Ruthy, Jacques, Noga and Itai at Amir's Palo Alto house

Jacques as a young boy with his brother Haim – a portrait

Ruthy and Jacques Cory at their wedding in 1969, Naharyia, Israel, Ruthy at school in Haifa, where she taught for 28 years, at a trip with her school, with her high school band playing the trumpet, and at home, with her children Shirley, Amir and Joseph.

Cory near the Reading Tower of Tel Aviv

Noam laughing

Ido laughing

Ophir laughing

Yael as a baby smiling

Doron as a young boy smiling

Haim and Jacques in Cairo, Egypt, smiling

Tomer smiling

Noga smiling

Itai smiling

Cory on a stormy winter in Haifa, Israel, on a sunset in Darwin, Australia, in Germany, viewing Bryce Canyon, US, at Arc de Triomphe, Paris, with Shirley on top of Mount Cook, New Zealand

Ruthy as a groom, Rachel as a bride, disguised as young girls, in Purim, in Naharyia, Israel

Cory shopping in Singapore

Cory sightseeing in Taiwan

Cory as a small boy sitting on a lion statue between his brother and cousin in a Cairo Park

Cory sightseeing in Tokyo

Cory sightseeing in Johannesburg

Cory sightseeing in the Amazon, Iquitos, Peru

Cory with his best friend Georg Heine and his wife Marianna in Athens, Greece, 12/2000

Ruthy and her father David Popliker

Jacques Cory and Dan Shechtman at the wedding of their children: Amir Cory and Ella Shechtman. Ruthy and Jacques at the wedding of Shirley and of Joseph. Jacques Cory discovering the synagogue of Coria with Mrs. Castaniera, the owner of the house/synagogue, and the archeologist of Coria. Jacques, Amir and Shirley at home in Israel.

Ruthy and her cat at Botosan, Romania, when she was two years old

Cory speaking with in-law Nobel Prize winner Dan Shechtman at a dinner at Cory's home, with from left - Rachel Zeiler, David Golan, Dalia Golan, Zippi Shechtman.

Itai Cory in Israel as a young boy

Itai dancing on a table with his laughing father Amir in Cory's Haifa house \(watching - Nira, Ido\)

Cory and the Coria archeologist watching the synagogue's entrance

Jacques as a young boy between his parents Pauline and Albert in Cairo

Noga as a young girl with a smile of Mona Lisa

Coria's archeologist and Cory examining ancient books at Mrs. Castaniera's library/synagogue

Ruthy and Jacques hugging and smiling in Nahariya - 1969

Cory's Courses - Cory lecturing in one of the large halls of the University of Haifa, with students of the International MBA at the University of Haifa, receiving an appreciation letter by his class, with Ruthy in front of Insead's Main Building at Fontainebleau, France

Joseph and his son Ophir reading a book

Cory telling his grandchild Ido the story of Ulysses with a French illustrated book

Ido with a red shirt laughing

Shirly with her son Noam

Shirly with her sons Noam and Ido

Cory's Links with photos of Jacques at Shirly's wedding and the cover page of the Magnes book

Noam with a green shirt smiling

Yael with a red dress

Jacques Cory celebrating his 70th anniversary

Cory's Links II with photos of Jacques at Shirly's wedding, the cover page of the Magnes book, Baron Edmond de Rothschild with Jacques and Ruthy Cory

Ruthy crying at Jacques' 70th anniversary celebration and Jacques' hand calming her

Ruthy and Jacques smiling at Jacques' 70th anniversary celebration

Ruthy laughing at Jacques' 70th anniversary celebration

Harry Recanati, one of the most ethical international bankers, and Cory's mentor

Hebrew on Cory's website: CV, Appreciation Letters, Cory's academic books, novel and play in Hebrew, Audio of Cory's play music, ethical code, Hebrew Courses, links to Articles, Lectures. With photos of Cory at sunset in Darwin, Australia, 1999, Diary, covers of novel, Magnes book.

"Fight" with Tomer, Noam, Ophir and Noga

Article in Hebrew, with photos, on Joseph Cory's Porter Building

Interview with photos, with Joseph Cory, son of Jacques Cory, on his architecture works

Article in English, with photos, on Joseph Cory's Porter Building

Contact Us with Jacques Cory's contact details, with photos: Cory's portrait, Cory giving a lecture at the Tel Aviv Stock Exchange on the ethical failures of the stock exchange and the economic crisis on November 20, 2008 (Ethics Center of Jerusalem's Seminar, photo), when about all the shares' prices collapsed, the screens turned red & negative, the trade was suspended. Jacques Cory (1973, as Exports Manager of Electra Israel) demonstrating Electra's Airconditioners to the Minister of Industry and Trade General (Reserve) Haiim Barlev. Daphni Leef (the leader of the social justice movement of 2011) and Jacques Cory at the Symposium on Social Justice in Israel organized by Cory, with the University of Haifa and Ometz, on 9. 25, 2011. Dr. Jacques Cory (Business Ethics, CNAM) with his son Dr. Joseph Cory (Geotectura, Sustainable Architecture, Technion), 2008, at the award of the PhD to Joseph at the Technion.

Jacques Cory with Tomer and Doron, 2015

Jacques, Ruthy, viewing Kotor Bay in Montenegro, on the Balkans tour organized by Cory, 2015

Shirly and Ido, 2015

Ophir, 2015

Yael, alias Shirley Temple, 2015

Noga and Itai laughing

Hebrew II on Cory's website: Appreciation Letters, Hebrew Courses, Case studies, Haifa Theater Strategic Planning, Export's Prize, the play Nelly Doron, Stories, Children books, List of plays, Screenplay with videos, Audio play with Albums, Correspondence, links to Articles, Ometz. With photos of Cory at sunset in Darwin, Australia, 1999, covers of novel and Magnes book.

Yael running 2015

Ido, aged 5, in a leading role, surrounded by beauties, 2015

Noam at Shirly's Office 2015

Ruthy laughing from Jacques' joke, Balkans, 2015

Hebrew Articles I – links to articles and essays. With photos of Cory at sunset in Darwin, Australia, 1999, covers of novel and Magnes book.

Yael smiling 2014

Yael eating 2014

Itai reclining on hand 2014

Yael with sun glasses, 2015

Hebrew Articles II – links to articles and essays, poems, satires, letters, speeches, eulogies, initiation and translation of the UN Universal Declaration of Human Rights into Ladino.

Yael laughing, 2015

Amir, Noga, Itai, helping needy old people, 2015

Ruthy, Rachel, Itzik Bsor – Balkans Guide, Romania, 2015

Cory congratulating Balkans' guide, 2015, with guide Itzik Bsor, Rachel, Arnon Gat, the Lazars

Hebrew Lectures I – links to videos on Lectures and Interviews of Cory, Panels and Symposiums with Cory, Transcript of lectures, details on lectures.

Jacques at Calanques on a trip to Provence organized by Cory in 2014

Jacques and his group dancing 'sur le pont d'Avignon' on the bridge in Avignon, Provence, 2014

Jacques and Ruthy in the Pyrenees on a trip organized by Cory in 2014

Ruthy at Apolonia, Albania, Balkans Tour, 2015

Hebrew Lectures II – links to lectures, interviews, videos on Cory, Insead Group trips, travel, list of films, plays, DVDs, eulogy and translation.

Ruthy in Toulouse on a trip to Provence organized by Cory, in 2014

Ruthy near Henri IV's bed at his Pau palace, south of France, on a trip organized by Cory, 2014

Ruthy laughing at St. Remi, Provence, on a trip organized by Cory in 2014

Cory at the Sophia synagogue, Bulgaria, Balkans Tour, 2015

Award of Ometz Highest Ethical Prize by Arie Avneri 2015

Award of Ometz Highest Ethical Prize 2015

Grandson Ido Garfunkel aged 6, 2015

Granddaughter Yael Garfunkel aged 3, 2015

ABOVE - JACQUES CORY (2006), IN DARWIN AUSTRALIA, BELOW LEFT (1999), AND RIGHT RECEIVING AN APPRECIATION LETTER FROM HIS CLASS (2005).

Jacques Cory with his family - wife Ruthy; children - Amir, Shirly, Joseph; grandchildren - Itai, Ophir, Doron, Noga, Yael, Noam, Ido, Tomer.

Jacques Cory in his family photo, from left to right: Amir Cory - son, Itai Cory – son of Amir, Jacques Cory, Noga Cory – daughter of Amir, Ruthy Cory (formerly Popliker) – Jacques' wife, Yael Garfunkel – daughter of Shirly, Shirly Garfunkel (formerly Cory) – daughter, Joseph/Yossi Cory – son, Tomer Cory – son of Joseph. In front of them – Ophir Cory – son of Joseph, Doron Cory – son of Joseph, Noam David Garfunkel – son of Shirly, Ido Garfunkel – son of Shirly. Other members of the family, not in this picture but in other pictures: Ronny Garfunkel – Shirly's husband, Ella Shechtman Cory (formerly Shechtman) – Amir's wife, Nira Cory (formerly Shaham) – Joseph's wife, Haim Cory – Jacques' brother, Rachel Zeiler (formerly Popliker) – Ruthy's twin sister. And of course, Jacques' parents – Pauline & Albert Cory, Ruthy's parents – Fany & David Popliker, grandparents, family, friends...

BELOW: RUTHY & JACQUES LAUGHING – LEFT – BALKANS, 2015, RIGHT – NAHARIYA, ISRAEL, 1969

ABOVE - JACQUES AND RUTHY CORY, KOTOR BAY, MONTENEGRO, 2015
BELOW - RUTHY CORY, APOLONIA, ALBANIA, 2015

Cory lecturing: High Tech Summit (2001) - right, Internal Auditors Conference (2006) – left, his students - below. Cory leading Elbit's NASDAQ IPO due diligence (1987) – bottom.

Cory telling his grandson Ido in Hebrew the story of the Greek Homer's Odyssey, in a French comics book, with Odysseus (Ulysses in Latin), his wife Penelope, his son Telemachus, Calypso, Circe, Poseidon, the Cyclops Polyphemus, Aeolus, the Lotus-eaters, Athena, and the kid remembered all.

Below – Cory with the Archeologist of Coria in Spain in the patio of the house that was apparently the old synagogue of Coria, which Cory has discovered.

Above – Photo of signing in April 2014 the Ethical Code of Sibat, the Israel Ministry of Defense/MOD International Defense Cooperation Directorate, which Cory has written, assisted by the Director of Sibat Brigadier General Shamaya Avieli, its top management, as well as the initiator of the process Shahar Horev. In the photo - the top management and the employees, from center to right – the Director, Shahar Horev, and Dr. Jacques Cory.

Below left - Jacques Cory at the Celebration of the PhD award on March 23, 2004, with the Jury's members: from left - Professors Henri-Claude De Bettignies - Cory's Academic Mentor, Henk Van Luijk, Gregory Katz Benichou, Yvon Pesqueux – directeur de these, Aldo Levy. Below right – Jacques cory in front of the university – CNAM in Paris, France.

Above - Baron Edmond de Rothschild, 7th from right, with the Israeli grantees of Insead MBA's studies, in front of the Palace of Fontainebleau, where Insead was located originally. Professor Teddy Weinshal is 6th from right and Jacques Cory is 2nd from right.

Jacques Cory in front of part of his library in 2008. Photo by Hagai Aharon for the main article of Globes' Magazine on Cory's achievements and books in the context of the Great Recession which he has foreseen. Cory has in his library thousands of books: novels, plays, biographies, non-fiction, linguistics, cinema, arts, music, ethics, in more than 50 languages.

LIST OF THE LINKS TO THE TEXTS OF THE BOOK

In some cases I mention the songs or films that appear at the end of the links, but those songs or films vary every time, nevertheless it is an indication what can be found on the web.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

Henri-Claude de Bettignies – link to Insead Web Profile

Henk Van Luijk – link to Cory's website: Books/Doctoral Dissertation – Article in Dutch and Review of Cory's dissertation and books by Professor Henk Van Luijk, Jury Member at CNAM. Correspondence with Henk Van Luijk and his family about his malignant disease and death.

Baron Edmond de Rothschild – link to Cory's website: Links – photo of the Baron with Corys

Harry Recanati – link to Cory's website: Links – photo of Recanati

Uri Levit – link to Cory's website: Books/Nelly's Choice – photo of Levit and a short eulogy

Georg Heine – link to Cory's website – photo of Heine, his wife Marianna and Cory

Dietmar and Carlita Fuchs – link to Cory's website: Books/Business Ethics - photo of Cory with text and speech on Dietmar's 60th anniversary in Heidelberg

INTRODUCTION

Jacques Cory, link to Jacques Cory's website.

potpourri, link to Kamilada Russian Classical Music Potpourri, 4:19.

a pause for reflection, pictures on this topic on Google.

LINGUISTIC ACTIVITIES

II. LEARNING OF 50+ LANGUAGES - link on Cory's website: About Jacques Cory

1. THE METHODOLOGY OF LEARNING LANGUAGES –

French, link to French Language on Wikipedia

Ladino, link to Ladino/Judaeo-Spanish Language on Wikipedia

Hebrew, link to Hebrew Language on Wikipedia

English, link to English Language on Wikipedia

Arabic, link to Arabic Language on Wikipedia

Spanish, link to Spanish Language on Wikipedia

German, link to German Language on Wikipedia

Italian, link to Italian Language on Wikipedia

Aramaic, link to Aramaic Language on Wikipedia

Portuguese, link to Potruguese Language on Wikipedia

Russian, link to Russian Language on Wikipedia

Romanian, link to Romanian Language on Wikipedia

Yiddish, link to Yiddish Language on Wikipedia

marvelous story – link to Cory's article in English in the Journal of the Israel Genealogical Society (2011, vol. 25, no. 1) – How I discovered the synagogue of Coria in Spain? P. XXVI

2. ARAMAIC, HAGGADAH, BOOK OF DANIEL, TALMUD, LANGUAGE OF JESUS

Haggadah – link to Haggadah on Wikipedia

Halachma Anya - link to artscroll – questions and answers on the Haggadah

sung in Aramaic – link to the song sung in an Iraqi style, 1:31 (one minute, 31 seconds)

Meneh, meneh, tekel oufarsin, link to a visualization of Daniel's chapter 5 in the Bible, 4:16.

means Talmud, link to The Talmud, a documentary, 57:01.

Talmud was written, link to Inside Judaism – Jewish History, a documentary, 1:51:39.

Hebrew and Aramaic, link to The Jewish Americans, PBS 1, 2, 3, 4, 1:55:06 + 1:54:04 + 1:50:45

folio 161a, link to Babylonian Talmud in English, Tractate Baba Batra, Folio 161a.

א סדר of Baba Batra, link to the Babylonian Talmud in Hebrew and Aramaic, Baba Batra, א סדר.

the language of Jesus, link to Language of Jesus on Wikipedia

Eli Eli lema sabachthani, link to a clip on this theme with visualization of the crucifixion, 4:22

Abwoon d'bwashmaya, link to the prayer in Aramaic with lyrics in that language, 4:40

prayer in Ancient Aramaic, link to original Lord's prayer in Ancient Aramaic with lyrics, 2:09

Our Father in Jewish Aramaic, link to the original Our Father in Jewish Aramaic tells the story of the reconstruction of the prayer, 10:57.

with English translation, link to the Lord's prayer in Aramaic, lyrics, English translation, 2:41

3. LATIN, CICERO, ON OLD AGE

two thousands year ago – link to Cicero's first oration against Catiline read in original Latin, 3:16 (three minutes, 16 seconds)

Cicero – link to Cicero on Wikipedia

first oration against Catiline – link to a translation of the three orations

Cicero's who writes, link to Cicero's essay On Old Age in an audio book, 1:13:09.

virtue and good deeds, link to the speech of Gregory Peck, the elderly CEO Andrew Jorgenson, on business ethics, values and good deeds, in the film Other People's Money, 5:05.

why old age, link to a trailer of Marcel Pagnol's Jean de Florette, with outstanding acting of the elderly evil man, the "tycoon" of the village Cesar/Le papet Yves Montand, 2:39.

Old age is the closing, link to the film Der Besuch der Alten Dame, the visit of the old lady, by Friedrich Duerrenmatt, with the old-aged richest woman on earth Clara Zachanassian, 1:56:31.

Carmina Burana – link to Carmina Burana by Carl Orff sung in Latin with lyrics and translation, performed by UGA orchestra and Chorus, 1:02:39 (one hour, two minutes, 39 seconds)

Miserere Mei Deus – link to Miserere Mei Deus by Gregorio Allegri, sung in Latin, with lyrics and translation, 9:14

Mozart's Requiem – link to Mozart's Requiem, sung in Latin, with lyrics and translation, 40:23, followed by the excellent performance by Arslys Bourgogne Camerata Salzburg, 52:50

4. DUTCH, PROFESSOR VAN LUIJK, ANNE FRANK

Professor Henk Van Luijk, link to correspondence with Professor Van Luijk, prior to his death

Anne Frank wrote in her diary – link to the full Audiobook – The Diary of a Young Girl by Anne Frank in English, 8:51:10

after I was born – link to the film "Anne Frank – The Whole Story" in English, 3:02:44

Het is me ten enenmale onmogelijk alles – link to Dagboek van Anne Frank Nederlands Gesproken – a play in Dutch – 2:20:09

English – link to You'll be in my heart – Anne Frank/Otto Frank, Phil Collins with a clip from the movie Anne Frank, 3:56

Anne Frank – link to Anne Frank on Wikipedia

5. YIDDISH, SOHEM ALEICHEM, HIS NOVEL - TEVYE THE DAIRYMAN, THE MUSICAL - A FIDDLER ON THE ROOF, ANSKY'S PLAY – DYBBUK

Yiddish is written in the Hebrew alphabet – link to Yiddish Literature on Wikipedia

Ladino written in the Rashi alphabet, link to Judaeo-Spanish (or Ladino) on Wikipedia

Sholem Aleichem, link to this page on Wikipedia

Tevye, link to this page on Wikipedia

Fiddler on the Roof, link to this page on Wikipedia

Fiddler on the Roof, link to Matchmaker with subtitles & other songs - Fiddler on the Roof, 3:47

musical was based, link to Huntington Beach Playhouse theatrical production – Fiddler on the Roof, 2:20:40

in Yiddish \(1939\), link to the film Tevye the Dairyman, 1939, with English subtitles, 1:35:25

Tevye in English, link to the full text of the novel Tevye the Dairyman in English

Tevye in Yiddish, link to the full text of the novel Tevye the Dairyman in Yiddish

folklore of Jewish diaspora, link to The Jewish Language Research Website

Dybbuk, the most well-known play in Yiddish, by S. Ansky, link to the play on Wikipedia

Yiddish, link to a very valuable website with the full text of major Yiddish literature

Gesher performance of Dybbuk in Israel, link to a video clip with photos of the play, 4:55

to the famous film, link to the film The Dybbuk, 1937, in Yiddish, with English subtitles.

Mirele Efros, link to Hebrew 1958 play in Habimah with Hannah Rovina as Mirele Efrat, 3:50

several times, link to the 2014 play in Yiddish by Yiddish Spiel group with Yona Elian, 4:42

6. JEWISH FOLKLORE, FOLK SONGS IN YIDDISH, YEMENITE AND LADINO – CHAVA ALBERSTEIN, OFRA HAZA, YITZHAK NAVON'S BUSTAN SEPHARDI, YEHORAM GAON'S FROM TOLEDO TO JERUSALEM

Ashkenazi, link to Ashkenazi Jews on Wikipedia

Oriental, link to Mizrahi Jews on Wikipedia

Sephardic, link to Sephardi Jews on Wikipedia

Jewish Virtual Library, link to the Folklore chapter of the Jewish Virtual Library

Chava Alberstein's Yiddish songs, we bring here about fifty songs sung by Alberstein in Yiddish, and some songs sung by her in Hebrew.

Zog Nit Kayn' Mol, link to Never Say This Is The End, the Jewish partisan's song during World War II, sung in Yiddish by Chava Alberstein, with English subtitles and relevant videos, 2:50, followed by the documentary film: 912 Days of the Warsaw Ghetto, 36:36.

Tumbalalaika, link to a beautiful performance of the song sung in Yiddish at the Budapest synagogue, 5:06, followed by the song sung by the Barry Sisters, 2:48, and Barry Sisters' Greatest Yiddish Hits, 1:29:35, including Hava Naguila.

Arvoles yoran por luvias, link to the song sung by the Jews from Saloniki when they were deported to Auschwitz, here sung by Yehoram Gaon, 3:49.

La vida do por el raki, link to the song by Glykeria, 2:50, followed by a beautiful performance of the Greek singer Sinnefiasmeni Kiriaki, with subtitles, 4:16, and after that other Greek songs.

My Yiddishe Mame, link to the song sung here in French by Charles Aznavour, 6:31, followed by the whole Concert of Aznavour at Palais des Congres in 2004, 1:50:04 (which I saw earlier).

Neil Sedaka, link to the song My Yiddishe Mame, sung in English, 4:30.

Dudu Fisher, link to the song My Yiddishe Mame, sung in Yiddish, 5:38.

Adio Kerida in Ladino sung by Ofra Haza, with Ladino subtitles, 4:03. This is followed by the Ladino song Morenica sung by Ofra Haza, 3:17, and with Goran Bregovic – Elohai, 4:12, from the soundtrack of the film La reine Margot, and other Hebrew songs by Haza – Latet, etc.

Enrico Macias and Yasmin Levy, link to their singing Adio Kerida, preceded by Mi Korason. The performance is 7:51 long, Mi korason is the first - 3:22, followed by Adio Kerida, 3:42-7:51.

Ofra Haza, link to Ofra Haza on Wikipedia

Im Nin'alu, link to the song sung by Ofra Haza, 5:20

B'cherem Teiman, link to the song sung by Ofra Haza, 3:12

Tzur Menati, link to the song sung by Ofra Haza, 3:04

Galbi, Shaday, link to the songs sung by Ofra Haza, 4:52. First is Galbi – 3:02, and after that Shaday – 3:02-4:52.

Kaddish, link to the song sung by Ofra Haza, 5:38

Ya Be Ye, link to the song sung by Ofra Haza, 5:11

We cannot speak of Ladino folk songs without mentioning (link to) the documentary film by Yehoram Gaon "De Toledo a Yerushalayim" - From Toledo to Jerusalem, spoken in Ladino with English subtitles, in which he relates the history of the Sephardic Jews in Spain, in the Diaspora until they returned to Jerusalem, with the best Ladino folk songs sung by Gaon, 1:01:41.

7. HAITIAN, POETRY

Haitian, link to Nou Gen Fos – Haiti Coeur de Femme, Haitian songs and dances, 3:37

Haitian poets, link to Josaphat-Robert Large – Bel Fanm nan, Large reads his poetry, 4:39

Jozafa Wobe Laj/Josaphat Robert Large, link to Large's website on Wikipedia

M'ap ekri youn powem, link to an American woman reciting the poem M'ap ekri youn powem, I'm writing a poem, by Togiran, in Haitian and English, 5:48

Rene Filoktet, link to the poet Rene Filoktet, reciting one of his poems Entre les seins des saints, in French, 6:54

Rene Philoctete, link to the page Rene Philoctete on Wikipedia

8. ARABIC, QURAN, NAGUIB MAHFOUZ, LEARNING MORE LANGUAGES

Arabic, link to Muslim Kid School, learning Arabic Alphabet, 3:22

Quran, link to Quran on Wikipedia

Fatihah/Opening, link to Al-Fatihah Compilation – 13 Different Recitors, 10:31

Midaq Alley, link to the text of the book Midaq Alley by Naguib Mahfouz in English

Naguib Mahfouz, link to Naguib Mahfouz on Wikipedia

Midaq Alley is, link to the film El Callejon de los Milagros, in Spanish, based on the book Midaq Alley, 4:00

Zuqāq al-Midaq, link to the film Zuqāq al-Midaq in Arabic, based on Mahfouz' book, 2:03:43

Naguib Mahfouz, released, link to an interview with Naguib Mahfouz, 7:01

The story is about, link to the American University in Cairo Press documentary with interviews with Mahfouz, paying tribute to the extraordinary literary achievements of the Egyptian Nobel Laureat, in 2011, on the centenary of the birth of the author (1911-2006), 17:54.

the Little Prince, link to The Little Prince on Wikipedia

there is a website in all those languages, link to the books of The Little Prince in 23 languages, texts by Kafka, Poe, Orwell, etc., paintings by Monet, Munch, Gauguin, Van Gogh, Goya, etc.

a website with a few sentences in hundreds of languages, link to a paragraph of The Little Prince in 230 languages, name of the language and of the book, details on the books in those languages.

255+ languages and dialects, link to The Lord's Prayer in 1817 languages and dialects, and different editions of the prayer in every language.

I can understand more than 70 languages, link to the website of the United Nations' Universal Declaration of Human Rights in 444 languages.

9. RUSSIAN, ANNA KARENINA, CHILDREN SONG, VISIT OF ST. PETERSBURG

Tolstoy's Anna Karenina, link to the text of the book in Russian Anna Karenina, link to Anna Karenina on Wikipedia, with links to films, play, opera and texts of translation into English.

Anna Karenina is the, link to the film Anna Karenina, with Keira Knightley & Jude Law, 2:43:58

Count Vronsky, link to Part I of the TV mini series Anna Karenina with Helen McCrory, 1:15:51

story starts, link to Part II of the TV mini series Anna Karenina with Helen McCrory, 53:07

she arrives, link to Part III of the TV mini series Anna Karenina with Helen McCrory, 52:01

midst of a family, link to Part IV of TV mini series Anna Karenina, with Helen McCrory, 56:50

brother's unbridled, link to Anna Karenina with Vivien Leigh, in German, 1:33:53

something that, link to the text in English of Anna Karenina

her own later, link to Anna Karenina with Isabelle Adjani, in French, 1:21:03

experience less, link to Anna Karenina with Tatiana Samoilova, in Russian, part 1, 1:13:01

by others, link to Anna Karenina with Tatiana Samoilova, in Russian, part 2, 1:04:47

eager to marry, link to Anna Karenina with Greta Garbo, 6:23

commits suicide, link to Different Versions of Anna Karenina Train Deaths, 8:38

"May there always be sunshine", Пусть Всегда Будет Солнце, the song sung in Russian by small children from different colors, girls and boys, and an outstanding choir and orchestra, 3:13. Followed by the performance of the song by Tamara Miansarova, 2:36.

10. GREEK, ZORBA THE GREEK, THE ODYSSEY, POLYGLOT GREETINGS

Aristophanes, link to Aristophanes' Lysistrata, with a cast of 12 Swarthmore actors, 2:03.

Greek, link to Anthony Quinn and Mikis Theodorakis, dancing the famous dance from the film, at the Koenigsplatz in Munich after the concert performance of "Zorba" ballet, 10:11.

Zorba the Greek, link to amazing people dancing in the street the dance from Zorba, 8:10

there I got stuck, link to Mikis Theodorakis popular music concert in Brussels, 1985, 1:09:17.

translation, link to Greek Traditional Dances from all over Greece, 1:22:41.

easier to read, link to Greek songs and music, sung by Glykeria, 1:58:43.

Odyssey, link to the film Ulysses, with Kirk Douglas, Silvana Mangano, Anthony Quinn 1:41:45

Greek, link to the film Rembetiko in Greek, with English translation, 2:30:08.

the Odyssey, link to Odyssey on Wikipedia.

and Greek, link to the Odyssey in Greek.

journey to the, link to the Odyssey in English

"IR" as follows, link to the greetings on Cory's website.

11. PROVENÇAL, AUTHORS FROM PROVENCE: PAGNOL, ZOLA, MISTRAL, SAYINGS

Provençal, the language, link to Provençal (language) on Wikipedia

Provence, and in, link to Provence (region) on Wikipedia

Frederic Mistral, link to Frederic Mistral on Wikipedia

Provençal language, link to Cantic dei Santei Marias, a song in Provençal – extract from Mirelha by Frederic Mistral, 3:29

the Nobel Prize, link to 45 Languages of France, spoken in those languages – named each, 15:06

true inspiration, link to a Japanese woman who speaks Occitan, 2:51

the most revered, link to Corou de Berra Mireio 2014 – Mireio text with music, 26:00

modern Provençal, link to le Corrou de Berra, singing Mireio, 8:00

opening verses, link to Mireio, music and Provence scenery, 6:12

and in Mireio, link to Mireio on Wikipedia, you can click in order to read the full text in Occitan and in English.

click in order, link to Creche bilingue occitan – français, bilingual kindergarden Occitan and French, spoken in Occitan/Provençal with subtitles in French, 3:00

Alphonse de Lamartine, link to Lamartine on Wikipedia

my heart and my soul, link to film Cresus, 1960, with Fernandel, happening in Provence, 1:30:31

Charles Gounod, link to Gounod on Wikipedia

Mireille, link to the opera Mireille, on Wikipedia, an 1864 opera in five acts by Charles Gounod to a French libretto by Michel Carré after Frédéric Mistral's poem Mireio.

the full opera, link to a performance of the opera Mireille by Gounod, based on Mistral's Mireio, 2:50:25

We bring, link to the story L'enfant polit, told in Provençal by the Occitan author Joan Bodon with subtitles in Provençal, 9:59

part 1 – 4:59, part 2 – 9:23, part 3 – 5:05, part 4 – 8:44, part 5 – 7:22 – link to the film Malaterra in five parts, in Provençal with French subtitles

masterpieces of Emile Zola, link to the film The Life of Emile Zola, 4:50

of 3 to 18, link to Best picture goes to The Life of Emile Zola, 7:35

The Fortune of the Rougons, link to this entry on Wikipedia

La Fortune des Rougon, link to the text of the book in French

Émile Zola, link to this entry on Wikipedia

Les Rougon-Macquart, link to this entry on Wikipedia

partly an origin story, link to the text of the book The Fortune of the Rougons in English

Second Empire, link to the Second French Empire on Wikipedia

Napoleon III, link to this entry on Wikipedia

Aix-en-Provence, link to this entry on Wikipedia

La Conquête de Plassans, link to the text of this book in French

the fourth novel, link to the entry La Conquete de Plassans on Wikipedia

Pot-Bouille, link to this entry on Wikipedia, with links to the text of the book in French, English

Au Bonheur des Dames, link to this entry on Wikipedia, with links to text of the book in French

La Faute de l'Abbé Mouret, link to the text of this book in French

Abbe Mouret's Transgression, link to the text of this book in English

fifth novel, link to the French film La faute de l'Abbe Mouret, 1970, 1:29:31

twenty-volume, link to La Faute de l'Abbe Mouret on Wikipedia

anticlerical, link to Anti-clericalism on Wikipedia

Doctor Pascal, link to the text of Doctor Pascal in English

Le Docteur Pascal, link to the text of Le Docteur Pascal in French

twentieth and final, link to the entry Doctor Pascal on Wikipedia

Alfred Dreyfus, link to a Documentary in English Alfred Dreyfus, 42:29

carbon monoxide poisoning, link to this entry (the cause of Zola's death) on Wikipedia

ventilated chimney, link to the documentary L'ombre d'un doute – L'assassinat de Zola (the murder of Zola), 1:07:31

L'Intransigeant, link to this entry on Wikipedia

Henri Rochefort, link to this entry on Wikipedia

Libération, link to this entry on Wikipedia

Zola was initially, link to the entry Mort d'Emile Zola (death of Zola) on Wikipedia

Panthéon, link to this entry on Wikipedia

Victor Hugo, link to this entry on Wikipedia

Alexandre Dumas, link to this entry on Wikipedia

Is Zola misogynist?, link to essay on Les Rougon-Macquart, with a short summary of each novel

Marcel Pagnol, link to this entry on Wikipedia

Marius, link to the play at the Theatre Elie Chouraqui, 1:28:14

Fanny, link to the film – 1960 – directed by Joshua Logan, with Maurice Chevalier, Charles Boyer, Leslie Caron, 2:13:54

Cesar, link to the play at the theatre Baudrac & Co., 16:38

Topaze – Acte 1, link to the play at the Versailles theater, Act 1, 50:49

Acte 2, 3, link to the play Topaze at the Versailles theater, Act 2 and 3, 1:39:50

Les marchands de gloire, link to the programme of the play

Jazz, link to a review of the play and of other plays by Pagnol, an extract of the play Jazz

Judah, link to a review of the play with an extract of the text

Jofroi, link to an extract of the play Jofroi with Michel Galabru, 17:37

Jean de Florette, link to the film, directed by Claude Berri – 1986 – with Daniel Auteuil, Yves Montand, Gerard Depardieu, 2:01:00

Manon des sources, link to the trailer of the film, directed by Claude Berri – 1986 – with Daniel Auteuil, Yves Montand, Emmanuelle Beart, 2:42

La gloire de mon père, link to the film, 1990, 1:45:00

Le château de ma mere, link to the trailer of the film, 1990, 2:02

Le temps des secrets, link to the film, 2007, 1:39:11

Le temps des amours, link to the film, 2007, 1:28:29

La femme du boulanger, link to the film directed by Marcel Pagnol, 1938, with Raimu, 2:07:16

Topaze, link to the film directed by Marcel Pagnol, 1950, with Fernandel, 2:54:36

Marius, link to the film with a scenario by Marcel Pagnol, 1931, with Raimu, 2:00:15

Fanny, link to the film with a scenario by Marcel Pagnol, 1932, with Raimu, 2:00:35

Cesar, link to the film directed by Marcel Pagnol, 1936, with Raimu, 2:12:58

Manon des sources, link to the film directed by Marcel Pagnol, 1952, 1:57:30

Ugolin, link to the film directed by Marcel Pagnol, 1952, 1:47:47

La belle meuniere, link to the film directed by Marcel Pagnol, 1948, 1:39:33

La fille du puisatier, link to the film directed by Marcel Pagnol, 1940, 2:18:55

12. PROPOSAL - LEARNING FIVE LANGUAGES AT SCHOOL – MOTHER TONGUE, ENGLISH, SPANISH, FRENCH, ONE OF NINE ADDITIONAL LANGUAGES, WITH LINKS TO POPULAR SONGS, DANCE, AND MUSIC IN THOSE 12 LANGUAGES. MULTINATION POLYGLOT? COUNTRIES. LISTS OF COUNTRIES WHERE ENGLISH, FRENCH, SPANISH, RUSSIAN, PORTUGUESE, ARABIC... HAVE OFFICIAL STATUS

Enta Omri, link to lyrics and English translation of the Arabic song Enta Omri, you are my life.

Umm Kulthum, link to Umm Kulthum, the greatest Arab singer, on Wikipedia.

1 hour and 18 minutes, link to a live performance of the famous song Enta Omri, you are my life, sung by Umm Kulthum, exactly the same duration of the masterpiece Topaze by Marcel Pagnol, 1933, 78 min., Director Harry d'Abbadie d'Arrast, with John Barrymore & Myrna Loy. 1:18:22.

well-known Arab, link to a film in Arabic – Bent el Akaber, with Layla Mourad, 1:55:17.

Leila Mourad, link to Leila Mourad on Wikipedia. Mourad was a well-known Arab singer, who was born Jewish, converted to Islam, and was a personal friend of my aunt.

Why English is obvious

become

international language

the first global

franca

important cultural

and it

the mother tongue

many countries as the US, UK

South Africa

Canada

widely spoken

India

Singapore

altogether

spoken by 1.2 billion

English is the world's widely used language newspaper book publishing

international telecommunications publishing

international trade

entertainment

diplomacy

has replaced

dominant language scientific research

Spanish is also obvious spoken by the mother tongue

Spain

and is spoken understood in many

It has an important is very important

Spanish is language of 20

worldwide

the second

French

obvious

you are of course century was an international language

commerce literature standards diplomatic language

Today

spoken by million people

mother tongue

France

Belgium

Switzerland

former colonies

it is can be understood

other countries

French

official language countries

dependencies has important

heritage is very important

Business

second-most language

after

French

third-most understood

in the EU is one top three languages

for business

Russian

million

mother tongue

Russia

understood

countries

former

Union

It has an

cultural

is needed

business only

Russia and Mandarin

largest

China

number

Taiwan

Singapore

Arabic, link to the song Amal Hayati by Oum Kalthoum – the hope of my life, 1:14:05

is spoken, link to Amal Hayati – lyrics in Arabic and English translation

by 390, link to Mohammed Abd el Wahab – Han el Wed, 8:15

people, link to Laila Mourad, singing the song Ana albi dalili from an Arab film, 5:31

countries, link to Samira Tawfil, singing Bassak Teji Haretna, 11:23

many countries, link to Dalida singing Helwa ya baladi, 3:29

in Africa, link to Salma ya salama with Ishtar and the Gypsy Kings, 3:34

language, link to Farid Alattrach singing Ya Habaybi Ya Ghaybeen, 8:24

Hindi

important

spoken

million

however

India

Urdu

mutually

but uses

spoken

million

Moslems

Portuguese

important

million

most of them

Portugal

Angola

Malay

important

with 270

almost

two countries

Singapore

Japanese is

by 123

people

Japan

few in

diaspora

Swahili

spoken

Africa

million Africa

lingua franca

German

important

145 million

million

Austria

Switzerland

tens of

in other

countries

Austro-Hungarian

German

second most

important

design

fashion

within the church

is known

large part

ecclesiastical

is used

substitution

Latin in official

leader who has founded

Lee Kuan Yew

From Third World to First – The Singapore Story 1965-2000

Language Policy in Multilingual Switzerland