ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

I would like to dedicate this book to a precious friend to whom I am deeply grateful - Henri-Claude de Bettignies, my academic mentor, one of the most prominent ethicists in the world, who believed in my academic capabilities and gave me the opportunity to lecture at Insead on Ethics Days, recommended me to Yvon Pesqueux at CNAM in Paris for writing a dissertation there and receiving my PhD. Bettignies participated in the jury, and agreed to be a rapporteur, reading my two academic books in English, my dissertation in French, and granting to me with the other members of the jury the mention tres honorable. Bettignies also offered me to teach at Insead Singapore for a semester in 2006, which was my first academic assignment outside Israel. Bettignies read my third academic book in English "Business Ethics for a Sustainable Society", and wrote an excellent review for the publishers. He kept in touch during all my academic years, encouraged me, recommended me, and gave me valuable advices. I identify myself completely with him and am deeply touched by all what he has done for me, but mostly by his friendship.

I would like to thank five mentors and friends who passed away, but assisted me very much in all my endeavors. First of all Henk Van Luijk, a dear friend, the best man I have ever known, the most erudite, the kindest man. Without knowing me, he agreed to meet me in Amsterdam, read my books and gave me very valuable comments. He participated in the jury of my PhD, and wrote excellent reviews on my work. Baron Edmond de Rothschild believed in me and gave me a full scholarship for my MBA studies at Insead. Afterwards, he continued to be interested in my career and met me with the other Israeli grantees several times. Harry Recanati, one of the founders of the Israeli and international Discount Bank, was one of the most ethical businessmen I have ever known, he was a good friend, encouraged me, and was very interested by my work. Uri Levit, the CEO of Poalim Investments, was one of my best friends but also a colleague with whom I enjoyed working for many years during my career. He was very ethical and suffered because of it, in an environment which was more and more corrupt. Finally, my best Insead friend, Georg Heine, a true cosmopolitan, fluent in all the languages of Insead – English, French, German - & Greek on top of that, whose good heart was legendary and his friendship a treasure.

I would like also to thank my directeur de these at CNAM Yvon Pesqueux, who believed in me and enabled me to receive my PhD degree at the age of 60. I am thankful also to Ilan Meshulam, who invited me to teach at the University of Haifa and invited me to teach at the International MBA programme for 3 years. Without their support I wouldn't be able to lecture in business ethics. Itzhak Gormezano Goren is a close friend who stood by me in the most difficult moments, encouraged me and dared to publish my ethical novel combating the unethical practices of Israeli business. The most prominent figure in the fight against corruption in Israel is Arie Avneri, who became a symbol with his unabated stamina, his integrity and his ethical leadership. He influenced very much my ethical thought and is for me an admired mentor.

I would like to thank my colleagues at the University of Haifa: Ido Landau, Tzipora Shechtman, and Aharon Ben Zeev, at the University of Tel Aviv: Itzhak Saporta, Yehuda Kahane, and Ran Lachman, at the Technion Institute: Peretz Lavie and Dan Shechtman, at the Carmel Academic Center: Nahum Biger, as well as at Magnes of the Hebrew University of Jerusalem: Hai Tsabar. I would like to thank especially Shahar Horev, who invited me to write an ethical code and case studies, and train the managers of Sibat at the Israeli MOD – a project that received the first prize and was a tremendous success. Special thanks to Joshua Sobol, David and Dalia Golan, who recommended my application for the Emet prize, and Michel Ohayon for a fruitful cooperation.

I have a deep gratitude to friends all over the world, who were interested in my projects and assisted me in advice – Robert Ferris, Alex Lajoux, Miklos Marschall, Anthony Simon, Dietmar and Carlita Fuchs, Angus Fraser, Jonathan Franklin, Einar Dahl, Georges Kryceve, Alain Somia, Claudio Gino, Robert Briefel, Francis Desforges, Jak Kori, Jean-Pierre Lorrain, Jean-Pierre Lehmann, Aldo Levy, Francois Lepineux, Genevieve Ferone, Paolo Jurkic, Moses Pava, etc.

Many family members, friends and colleagues have influenced, assisted and backed me, and I would like to thank them all: my mother, Pauline Simon Cory, who was my ethical inspiration since my early childhood. In her kindness, grace, wisdom and common sense, she gave me a model which I have followed ever since. My father Albert Cory who believed in me all the way, my grandchildren Tomer Cory, Doron Cory, Ophir Cory, Noga Cory, Itai Cory, Noam David Garfunkel, Ido Garfunkel, Yael Garfunkel, family members and friends Ronny Garfunkel, Nira Cory, Ella Shechtman Cory, Rachel and Eitan Zeiler, Haiim and Nehama Cory, the late and beloved cousin Betty Rosen, the late and beloved parents of Ruthy my wife – David Popliker and Fanny Popliker, and Rosalia Cohen, Shaul Marin, Galia Sagy, Rachel Bortnick, Shosha Goren, Hanita and David Malkov, Amalia and Opher Eyal, Jonathan and Leah Adereth, Itamar Levin, Arnon and Elena Gat, Shuki Schwartz, David and Vicky Schlachet, Reuven Maskit, Ruthy Mayblum, Naomi and Arie Barsilay, Meir Heth, Eran Vigoda-Gadot, Ora Rubinstein, Amos Carmeli, Yoav Itzhak, Yariv Yairi, David and Zahava Braha, Asaf Sudri, Joseph and Galila Manchik, Carmela Biger, Avi and Dafna Dinerman, Tzofi and Ori Lev, Ofra and Udi Ben Ari, Shlomit Levanon, Meir Tamari, Dalia Zelikovich, Irit Levit, Zeev Nahari, Naftali and Ronit Fried, Ami and Yehudit Ofek, David Prihar, Eyal Tsofan, Avi Rimmer, Uzi and Vera Shaham, Alberto and Tali Garfunkel, Dov Nardimon, Dove Izraeli, Itamar Theodor, Gaby and Shosh Nagar, Teddy Weinshall, Izi Lavie, Mike Doron, Arnon and Elena Gat, Oded and Hana Rosenthal, Dalia and Zvi Aviel, Smadar and Shmuel Paz, and so many others. I also want to thank my excellent editor who has done a very valuable job to publish the book in a record time.

But my greatest thanks are to my wife, Ruthy, and to my children, Joseph, Amir and Shirley, who continue to support me in spite of all the difficulties and the personal sacrifices. They could have been in a much better economic situation if I would have joined the caravan of the crooks, as nothing happens to them and they flourish and succeed against all odds. But I preferred to adhere to my principles, in spite of all the hardships, and fortunately my children succeeded on their own, and did not need my assistance. I still need and receive their warm support, and especially of my beloved wife, who is the backbone of our family, the Rain Fairy, helping all of us who are in need. I am lucky to have this support, like Dr. Tomas Stockmann had in En Folkefiende by Henrik Ibsen – the support of his wife Katherine, his two sons Eilif and Morten, and his daughter Petra. I enjoy the support that I receive from my students, readers and friends, but nothing can compare to the support of my family, as it is the most precious present that one can hope for.

"The only true wisdom is in knowing you know nothing. I cannot teach anybody anything I can only make them think. Strong minds discuss ideas, average minds discuss events, weak minds discuss people. By all means marry; if you get a good wife, you'll become happy; if you get a bad one, you'll become a philosopher. When the debate is lost, slander becomes the tool of the loser. I am not an Athenian or a Greek, but a citizen of the world. We can easily forgive a child who is afraid of the dark; the real tragedy of life is when men are afraid of the light. When you want wisdom and insight as badly as you want to breathe, it is then you shall have it." Socrates

I. INTRODUCTION

"Cory's Cosmopolitan Cultural Credo" is not an autobiography, nor is it a tedious list of credits or achievements of me, Jacques Cory, although one can have access to the lists. This book is rather a tasteful delight, a potpourri, a mixture of linguistics, literature, travel, business and culture, drama and non-fiction, ethics and academic activities, that I have achieved and was exposed to, having the privilege to blend all those ingredients in my long careers in diverse occupations and avocations, in a multidisciplinary – interdisciplinary - transdisciplinary approach that might interest the humanist and intellectual reader.

I blend creative and active achievements in all my fields of interest – literature, plays, biographies, linguistics, geography, business, ethics, academics, economics, history, music, art, films, philosophy, poetry, sociology, and even humor. I advocate most moderation and harmony, in my cosmopolitan, polyglot and holistic approach. I focus my interest in European humanities and social research, but I respect and read most of the other fields of interest in most of the other countries and cultures, to achieve a holistic harmony.

This eBook is interesting, contains more than a thousand pages and thousands of links to books, essays, articles, novels, plays, chapters of the Bible, poems, songs, in dozens of languages, the Odyseey in Greek, Cicero's writings in Latin, Sayings in Chinese, Romances in Ladino, Folk music from all over the world, Extracts of Plays by Brecht, Rostand, Arthur Miller...I used in many cases quotes from Encyclopaedia Britannica, Wikipedia, The New York Times, and other excellent sources, as I preferred to use excellent quotes rather than invent the wheel again. I tried to mention all the sources, except encyclopedias.

Only when I had an original contribution to make I did it, but my personal views are also extensively given in this book, in hundreds of pages. This book can be read, seen, heard during thousands of hours, everybody can find interest in at least parts of this eBook, that hopefully will arise a passion to learn languages, literature and drama. This book contains chapters/references in 36 languages, extracts in 200+ languages, links to 2000 languages, with an emphasis on the best novels, plays, biographies, music, nonfiction in the world.

After retiring at the age of seventy, I summarize my academic, business, culture, drama and ethics activities. Not because it is an end of my activities, but rather because it is a pause for reflection, to check what was achieved until now, and plan what should be done in the next "50" years, until 120. The achievements have struck a right balance between creative & active works, reading so many books in many languages, but also writing many books in the past 15 years, and planning to write many books in the next years as well.

At the end of the eBook, that can be published also as a printed book but with a DVD in order to visit the websites in the links, we can find an Appendix comprising some of the best cosmopolitan and ethical works that I have ever written: an essay about the French book and film L'Argent – Money by Emile Zola, case studies and analysis of plays, books, documentaries, films on bribes, trust, banking, corruption, whistleblowing, mentality gaps - from Israel, France, North/South America, US, UK, Singapore, Argentina, Russia, Africa, Switzerland, reviews on Joseph Stiglitz, Paul Hawken and Warren Buffett, 10 components in 10 languages on sustainable justice, quotes, UN's universal declaration of human rights.

This autobiography is not a standard biography. The story of my life can be found all over the book in the context of my fields of interest. When I write about literature, languages, ethics, music or films, I refer to related events in my life, built as a coherent holistic mosaic.

1. THE METHODOLOGY OF LEARNING LANGUAGES, MASTERING LANGUAGES, MONEY IN 50 LANGUAGES, PROVERBS ABOUT MONEY, RICH AND POOR, ETHICS

At the age of 10 I spoke fluently 4 languages: my two mother tongues: French (learned also at the Lycee in Cairo, Egypt) and Ladino (learned only at home), Hebrew (after immigrating to Israel at the age of 9, I was first of my class at 10), and English (learned at school). I also had basic knowledge of Arabic, learned at school in Cairo, and could understand Spanish and Italian.

At the age of 20 I had learned for two years Spanish and German at the university and one year Italian at the Dante Alighieri School. I read fluently those 7 languages, and especially the classics – Shakespeare, Racine, Agnon, Cervantes, Goethe, Pirandello and Romances in Ladino. But I received also the final grade of 9 in Arabic at high school, I learned and could read the Talmud in Aramaic, and read quite well Portuguese although I never learned the language, altogether – 10 languages that I have learned or could understand, most of them fluently.

At the age of 30 I had learned intensively Russian for a few months, when I was unemployed (although I had a very partial knowledge of Russian and Arabic which were not as easy to learn as the Romance languages). I succeeded much more in Romanian and Yiddish that I learned when I married Ruthy and wanted to understand her mother tongues, while Ruthy learned French and Ladino wanting to understand my mother tongues. I could read Shalom Aleikhem in Yiddish and a Romanian newspaper. Altogether, about 13 languages learned, most of them fluently...

The knowledge of languages was a tremendous benefit in several aspects: 1. It enriched my multicultural approach in literature, poetry, films, media, and plays, specializing in the classics that I was delighted to read in the original language. But, also in my meetings with French, English or Italians, I could befriend them and communicate easily, understanding their mentality, culture and literature. 2. I was received at Insead, the European Institute of Business Administration at Fontainebleau, France, although I didn't have good enough grades in my BA, but I was the only Israeli student who knew well enough the three languages in which business was taught at Insead – English, French and German. I received a full scholarship from the Baron Edmond de Rothschild, which enabled me to learn there, as I didn't have any funds to finance my very expensive studies. I was very popular among the European students, speaking to them in their mother tongue, although I noticed that the Dutch and Scandinavians spoke the three Insead languages much better than me, on top of their mother tongues, while the French preferred to speak only in French. I befriended the Lebanese, although I didn't speak Arabic, but they were of course fluent in French and English, and prepared with them and the Israelis a Middle Eastern evening. Briefly, I was at last in my element, being a cosmopolitan as other polyglot students.

3. In business, as an export manager making business trips to Europe and Africa, and later on as a VP Sales and Finance at a high tech company, or a free lance consultant, making business trips also the Americas and Asia, I had a fantastic advantage, as the knowledge of languages added a lot to my credibility with no language and mentality barriers. Doing business in France and French speaking countries was of course the easiest, and I even wrote a case study on the advantages of being a polyglot and how I overcame the Anti-Semitic prejudices of a devout Catholic, speaking with him during a week about theater and literature before I started talking business. I understood excellently the American mentality that was very similar to the Israeli one, starting at once talking business and not talking about Arthur Miller or Gershwin, if I didn't want that my counterpart would think that I am a freak. In Spain, I took it easy, arriving at ten to work, going to lunches and dinners of three hours each with my customers, speaking to them in Spanish and assimilating in the environment, sensing every time that I came to Madrid that I was at home, because of my Spanish origins. I also discovered the synagogue of Coria, after 500 years of absence, and wrote a marvelous story about that in five languages – Spanish, Ladino, English, French, Hebrew - on more than twenty newspapers and websites all over the world.

I even succeeded in conducting business in Germany, although my German was far from perfect. There, I shared the mentality of exactitude, the seriousness at work, the politeness, setting the meetings a year in advance and finishing the negotiations on time no matter what. I maybe shared with the Spanish their culture and conducted there as they did, but I preferred personally the German way of doing business, which was much more efficient, without any jokes, friendships, or small talk. Well, as a matter of fact, I didn't mind to conduct business in any of the countries I visited, as I found commonalities with each people, in Singapore I was a Singaporean, in Peru I was a Peruvian, and in Ticino I was a Ticinese. I felt at home also in Toronto, London, Brussels or Athens, but felt quite estranged in Africa. Even when I made business in Taiwan, I started learning Chinese, going to local opera, impressing my clients with Confucius sayings. Finally, I signed with them a very lucrative contract, although I couldn't drink "Campe" like the others. I noticed everywhere commonalities instead of differences.

When I decided to write a PhD dissertation on business ethics and no Israeli university was interested, and I couldn't afford to learn full time at an American university, I wrote my dissertation in French and received my PhD with distinction after answering satisfactorily in French all the questions of the CNAM jury in Paris. I taught in English at the International MBA programs and at Insead in Singapore, gave lectures in French to top level businessmen in Paris, taught of course in Hebrew, and even allowed my foreign students in Israel to write their final papers in Spanish, French, English, Italian, German and Portuguese. No one ever gave me a final paper in Ladino, but I wrote poems to my wife in this language (and to her mother in Romanian), and even initiated the translation of the UN Declaration of Human Rights into Ladino. My linguistic activities in Ladino consist of several facets, including participation in Ladino forums, writing in Ladino, and contributing substantially to the preservation of the Sephardic heritage.

When I speak of knowing a language I mean primarily that I have learned the language, mostly by myself with Teach Yourself books, sometimes with audio books, with dictionaries, and I know the language in different levels. I put Hebrew, the language I know most, as a yardstick giving it 100% (of course nobody knows a language 100%, but it is only a relative measure to assess my knowledge of languages), as I studied in Hebrew at the elementary and high schools, the Hebrew University of Jerusalem (Economics and Political Sciences), I worked all my life in Israel. I am fluent in writing, speaking and reading, and I wrote academic books, articles, case studies, business plans, a novel and a play in Hebrew. I taught at several Israeli universities, gave lectures to many forums, and was also interviewed. I would say that I know almost perfectly the language with a slight deficiency in vocabulary and grammar, as it is not my mother tongue.

I know Ladino – 95%, it is my mother tongue although spoken only occasionally by my parents between themselves. I am fluent in speaking, reading and writing the language in Latin alphabet, but only reading in Rashi alphabet. I initiated, edited and participated in the translation of the UN Universal Declaration of Human Rights into Ladino, wrote and published articles and poems, gave lectures, was interviewed on the radio. I have some deficiency in writing and speaking, in vocabulary and grammar, as I have never learned the language at school or by myself.

I know French – 90%, it is my mother tongue, and the main language that we spoke at home, I speak with my brother, my French speaking relatives, I spoke and learned during 4 years at the Lycee elementary school in Cairo, Egypt, and I speak with my French speaking friends. I learned at Insead, Fontainebleau, France, in French, English and German Business Administration. I wrote my PhD dissertation in French with all the process of the PhD held in French at CNAM, Paris, France. I worked over the years in French in France, Belgium, Switzerland, and African countries, and during a few years I traveled every month to Paris on business. I held an extensive correspondence over the years with friends & family in French, I gave lectures in French. I didn't write my play in French and preferred to give it to translation, as I do not master slang, but edited it. I am fluent in reading, speaking and writing, but I have problems in spelling, style, and rather archaic vocabulary, as I read the classics Racine and Hugo, but lived in France only one year in 1967-1968. Bearing in mind that I studied at a French school only 4 years and that friends who studied more cannot write in French, it is a miracle how I master the language, while living in Israel since 1953 and speaking with my wife, kids, Israeli friends, at work, etc. only in Hebrew, and rarely in French. It is probably because I persevered during the years in reading most of the time in French, learning time and again French vocabulary, and visiting France/Paris very often.

I would say that I know French, Ladino and Hebrew at the level of mother tongues minus, as probably those who learned those languages exclusively as mother tongue master them better. The following languages I master at a good level, but not at the same level for all of them.

I know English – 85%. This was my second language in elementary and high schools and at the Hebrew University, the main language in which I learned at Insead Business Administration. Most of my work outside Israel and some of my work in Israel was held in English. The correspondence in many multinational companies is held in English. I worked mostly in the US, Canada and the UK, and often in other English speaking countries, but work with most of the other countries was also held in English – Taiwan, Africa, Singapore, Netherlands, Portugal... I published many academic books and articles in English, taught in English at Insead Singapore, at International MBAs in Israel, gave lectures at Insead France, and in many forums worldwide. I am fluent in reading, writing and speaking, but I have problems in vocabulary, grammar and accent. As a matter of fact, I do not excel in grammar in any of my languages, as I find the grammar rules rather tedious and superfluous, and I think that all languages should have only a very basic vocabulary like in Interlingua. Most of my correspondence is in English on business, with friends, my academic correspondence, and I would say that I excel most in reading, understanding almost everything (but much less Shakespeare), writing with minor mistakes but my books needed editing, and speaking quite well but with an Israeli/French/Egyptian accent.

I know Spanish – 80%. I learned Spanish for two years at the Hebrew University of Jerusalem, and it was quite easy for me as I master Ladino which is very close to Spanish Castellano, much closer than Yiddish to German Hochdeutsch. Yet, because of that I may have mistakes in speaking Spanish using Ladino or French words, but people understand me quite well. I held Business negotiations in Spain and Latin America mostly in Spanish, visited those countries as a tourist, and wrote articles and correspondence with my Spanish speaking friends in Spanish. I was astonished how from the start I could understand almost perfectly books that I read in Spanish (best – Cervantes who is closer to ancient Spanish/Ladino as Jews were expelled from Spain in 1492 and since then had no contacts with Spain, and least – Latin American books which have local idioms). I am fluent in reading, speaking and writing, but have problems in vocabulary, grammar and accent, although I speak Spanish with a better accent than English.

I know Interlingua – 75%. Interlingua was a pleasant surprise. After starting my teach yourself linguistics I found out that I understand almost perfectly Interlingua which is an artificial language based on Romance languages. I read it fluently and have read already many books and articles in Interlingua, however I have never spoken or written in Interlingua, but I figure that if I go to a one week course held often in this language I could master that and the only reason that I don't do it is that I don't see the use to communicate with one thousand Interlingua speakers... What I admire in Interlingua is the one page grammar which is the easiest in the world. For me the language is very easy because I master most of the Romance languages. I hope that Interlingua would become the international language, but know that there is no chance, as English has won the battle & has become the language in which most of humanity communicate.

I know Italian – 70%. I have studied one year at the Dante Alighieri Institute in Israel 50 years ago, and I was probably the only young man at the course. So, those who are interested in meeting women should study Italian without delay. Italian is a beautiful language, probably the most beautiful language in the world. I found out that it has an excellent literature, and as a bonus you can at last understand all the libretti of the operas you love. If you learn English, French and Spanish because of practical considerations (I personally learned them because of their literature), you learn Italian because of your soul. However, I used Italian in my business and tourist trips to Italy. I read almost fluently Italian, speak with many mistakes (with French and Spanish words) but with good colloquial understanding, and have practically no sufficient experience in writing. I have of course problems in vocabulary and grammar as always.

I have good knowledge in 4 languages – English, Spanish, Interlingua, Italian, and with the three languages that I speak at a level of mother tongue – Hebrew, Ladino and French – I can say that I am quite fluent in 7 languages that are widely spoken in Europe, America and over the world (except Ladino, Hebrew and Interlingua, and not counting Chinese, Indian, Japanese & Arabic).

The languages in which I have sufficient knowledge are first of all German – 65%. German is a very difficult language, especially for me who specializes in Romance languages. I have studied the language for two years at the Hebrew University of Jerusalem with an excellent teacher. Before starting my studies at Insead I had a 5 weeks seminar at the Goethe Institute in Berlin. I can read books at two different levels: for difficult books like the books by Thomas Mann I need to read them with a translation, as it would be too difficult to read them with a dictionary, which I need once in a while for reading in Italian or Spanish, or for writing in English or French. However easier books as books by Remarque or Feuchtwanger I can read without a translation. But I remember that 50 years ago I could read even Goethe without a translation so my knowledge of German has deteriorated over the years. I conducted business in Germany, but mostly in English, however sometimes also in German, for conversations, reading letters and documents, and understanding the news. Today, I have an average knowledge in reading, speaking and writing with many mistakes, with deficient grammar and vocabulary.

I know Portuguese – 65%. I have studied the language in a teach yourself audio course and passed at 100% the examination. As the language is very close to Spanish I can read it almost fluently, but sometimes I need a dictionary. I have never used the language for writing but I believe that with a bit of practice I could write it and understand it quite well. Even now, I understand Portuguese if it is spoken slowly, and if I spend a few months in Brazil or Portugal I believe that I could speak and understand the language quite well. After I have "discovered" my Portuguese ancestry I have a special interest to master the language but I need to read more and visit more frequently Portugal (I toured it for a fortnight) and Brazil, where I have also cousins.

I know Romanian/Moldavian – 60%. I have learned the language mostly by hearing it for more than 40 years at my wife's family, until I was able to understand and speak it averagely. I also studied the language from a teach yourself book, and I can read it quite well – difficult texts with a translation and easier texts with a dictionary. I have a very limited experience in writing although once in a while I wrote texts for family use, as greetings for my mother-in-law birthdays. When I visited at last Romania in 2015 I saw that I can communicate quite well, but as my in-laws passed away the knowledge of the language is deteriorating, with strong deficiency in vocabulary and grammar. However, I notice that I can understand also words originating from Russian and Turkish, and so the loop is closed between my wife's Romanian and my Ladino.

I know Catalan – 60%. I have studied the language in a teach yourself course, as I have studied most of the following languages. I made several trips to Barcelona and Catalunya, and understood there quite well Catalan if spoken to me slowly, although I have no experience in speaking or writing the language. I can read difficult texts with a translation and easier texts with a dictionary, however with a bit of practice I could probably master Catalan as Spanish, as it is based on Spanish and French which I master well. But there is no urge to do it soon.

I know the France Dialects/Languages averagely – 60%: Provencal, Gascon, Occitan auvergnat, Occitan Languedocien, Picard, Wallon, reading almost fluently, but with no experience in speaking and writing. The same goes with England Dialects/Languages: Old English, Scots Braid, and so on. The same goes with Spain Dialects/Languages: Asturian (Bable), Galician (Galego), Aragonese... Finally, the same applies with Aramaic, which I can read quite well but understand better with a translation into Hebrew. I do not and cannot have any experience in writing or speaking, as the language is a dead language, although some people still speak it,

I know the Italy Dialects/Languages averagely – 55%: Corsican, Sardinian, Friulian (northern Italy), Rumantsch (Switzerland), Sanmarinese (San Marino), Venetian, Sicilian, Ladin, Sardinian, Calabrese, Neapolitan, Piemontese, Lombard, etc. – reading quite well texts, better with translation, with no experience in speaking and writing. I have studied all the new languages beyond the ten first ones in order to be able to read them, with no aspirations to write or speak them, and without wanting of course to master their grammar. The same applies also to Creole and Pidgin – Kreyol (Haiti), French (Mauritius, Guadeloupe, Martinique, Guyane, Cajun...), English (Nigerian, Sranan...), Spanish, Portuguese (Papiamentu...), and others.

I know Yiddish – 50%. The language is based mainly on German and Hebrew, and has much more Hebraic words than Ladino, so it is quite easy for me to understand. Besides, I live in a Yiddish environment in Israel for more than 60 years, my wife's mother tongue is also Yiddish, and I had a strong urge to learn the language (with a teach yourself audio book) in order to read Sholom Aleichem and other prominent authors in Yiddish and understand the Yiddish plays at the theatre. It is also highly recommended when you marry to learn each others' mother tongues as Ruthy and me did, so no in-laws can talk behind your back... When I see Israelis who are married to Russians, Moroccans, Frenchs, and have not learned the language, I really cannot understand it as it is almost a prerequisite to learn your mate's culture and language in order to understand him/her better. So, I read, speak and understand Yiddish averagely, and even try once and then to write in Yiddish. Of course my vocabulary and grammar are deficient, but you are not expected to speak fluently Yiddish, especially when you are a Sephardi Jew. Which brings me to a final remark – in the past and now much less there was a discrimination by the Ashkenazis against the Sephardis, so if you speak their language you become almost one of ours!

I know Artificial Languages – 50%. There are dozens of Artificial languages. We have written about Interlingua, and we give in this book a list of many other artificial languages. I have learned Esperanto and Ido but can understand averagely many other artificial languages.

However, I understand better Ido, as Esperanto is not only based on Romance and even Germanic languages, trying to introduce words from many more languages, which make it much difficult for me to understand it. I can read the languages with a translation but with easy texts even without translations. I have no experience in writing and speaking those languages.

I know below average Germanic Dialects/Languages: 45%: Plattdeutsch (Low German), Bavarian, Kolnisch, Luxembourgish, Gothic, Old Saxon, Alsatian, Hessisch, Schwabisch, Sächsisch, Schwitzerdeutsch, Vienes, Berlinerisch – reading mostly with translation, with no experience in speaking and writing, but who can find somebody to speak with him in Old Saxon? It is easier to find a Luxembourgian or Alsatian, but I would probably speak to them in French and they would understand me perfectly well, as those languages as most of the other regional Italian and French languages tend to disappear, while some of the Spanish regional languages – Catalan, Galego, Basque - are now widely spoken in their regions.

I know below average Dutch (Nederlands) and Flemish: 45%. I learned the languages as usual with Teach Yourself audio books, and understand below average texts, requiring me to use a translation. But I read the texts quite fast using now and then the translation, not like Russian or Greek where it is much more difficult for me to read texts even with a translation. I have made business and tourists trips to the Netherlands and Belgium, and I even worked for half a year with a Dutch firm. But I have no experience in writing or speaking the languages, although with some effort I can understand colloquial Dutch if it is spoken to me very slowly.

I know Latin – 40%. This is the basis of all the Romance languages, but it is very difficult to learn, especially the grammar. The vocabulary is easier as it resembles much Italian, Spanish and French and the analogies are the same. I cannot read Latin without a translation but I believe that if I tried very hard I could do it, but as I don't intend to visit the Vatican soon I see no urgent need to speak and write Latin, and it is enough for me to read Plautus or Seneca, Cicero or Vergil, with a translation at an average speed of 4 pages an hours. If I would be assured that in Hades I would meet all of them I would invest much more in learning Latin and Ancient Greek...

I know Afrikans (South Africa, based on Dutch), Vlach (Romania), Pennsylvania Dutch, Anglo-Saxon, Frisian (in the Netherlands), etc. much below average – 35%. Reading only with a translation but not very slowly, and with no experience in speaking and writing. Here again, the main reason for learning those languages were not a sudden urge to read their excellent authors or planning to visit those countries soon, not even a need to become an Amish, but just because they were there, very close to the other languages that I have learned, like Rumantsch or Friulian with Italian. I believe that it would be much more interesting to learn Chinese or Hungarian but as those are very difficult languages (I started to learn Chinese to no avail), I did not find the time and the abilities to do that and I found more rewarding to learn quite easily Afrikans.

I know Arabic – 30%. Here is a case that with a very little effort I could double my knowledge of Arabic from 30% to 60% and know it at least as Catalan. I have studied three times Arabic, the first one in Egypt at the Lycee (after the Shabab almost burned us alive during the riots of January 1952), the second time at high school (I have a final grade of 90, when the Arab countries did not want to recognize Israel although there were no occupied territories and they started wars and terror attacks time and again), and the third time in the summer of the Second Lebanese War when all the citizens of Northern Israel stayed at home in their shelters and suffered from thousands of rockets launched by the Hizballah in thanking us that we have withdrawn totally from Lebanon, as their friends from the Hamas launched later thousands of rockets thanking us that we have withdrawn from Gaza, and as Arafat, the Nobel Peace Prize laureate, sent suicide bombers killing more than a thousand civilians after we have withdrawn from most of the West Bank following the Oslo agreements. Well, from this "Introduction" we can understand that the subject is quite "loaded", and I suggest to leave the subject right away, as I deal with those issues at length in my book. Factually, Arabic is very similar to Hebrew, I have excellent foundations to know Arabic quite well, but at present it is enough for me to study occasionally the language enabling me to read one page an hour with a translation, with no experience in writing, almost no experience in speaking, and understanding about a third of a conversation. Hopefully, when there will be peace, when the Arabic schools would not teach Nazi-like propaganda against the Jews, when we'll be welcomed as tourists, and the Egyptian intelligentsia will not ban not only Jews but also Nobel Prize Winners as Naguib Mahfouz who advocated warm relations with Israel after we have withdrawn from every inch of Sinai, when the Arabs will not promote a boycott against Israelis, their leaders would not encourage suicide bombing, their tycoons will not finance terror, and their streets will not be named after Shahids killing dozens of innocent civilians before going to heaven to meet 72 virgins..., personally I believe that this wishful thinking will happen only at Bukra fil Mishmish/A nehtiger tug/The Messianic Age, not because I don't want it but because they don't want us, but I'll try nevertheless to learn Arabic, and my motivation will grow at the same pace of our mutual love. I hope that I'll master Arabic quite well, as I have nothing against the language or the Quran which I appreciate much, as I have also nothing against the peoples who are misled by extremist leaders and motivated by lies and anti-Semitic propaganda, often with the assistance of European and American anti-Semitic organizations who hate so much the Jews as they do not see the danger of fundamentalist Islam aimed primarily against the West and nurtured in some of the Madrasahs.

I know Swedish, Norwegian Bokmal, Norwegian Nynorsk, Danish – 30%. This is much below average, and even this is due to the similarities with German and the strong urge to study those languages with teach yourself audiobooks, as I appreciate much their people, ethics, democracy, economies, and their regimes, the Scandinavian model, as opposed to the Middle East model with mass murders and wars, corruption, terrorism, women segregation, in Syria, Iraq, Afghanistan, Yemen, Algeria, Lebanon, Palestine, Sudan... I have made Business and tourist trips to Scandinavia, and I can read much below average and only with a translation, at a pace of a few pages an hour, yet with exhilaration when I read the masterpieces by Ibsen, Strindberg and Andersen in their original languages. It goes without saying that I have no experience in speaking and writing, but my main exposure to those languages, besides reading their literature is by watching films by my favorite director Ingmar Bergman and by other excellent cineasts.

I know Icelandic, Faroese, Old Norse – 25%. It is much difficult for me to read those languages, which are even harder than the other Scandinavian languages. I studied them only because of their similarities to the others, mainly Icelandic with learning books and dictionaries.

I know Greek – 25%. It is very important for me to study Greek and I started several times to learn it, as my mother was Greek and spoke it perfectly well and my grandfather was born and lived in Larisa before emigrating to Egypt. But most of all because I exhilarate when I can read at a pace of one page an hour the Odyssey by Homer or tragedies by Sophocles. I wish to read them faster but as I am so occupied by writing books, learning new languages or reading masterpieces, going to the theater, film festivals or visiting new countries, I don't believe that I'll ever be able to read Greek faster or even at this pace as first of all I write the new books. I studied a basic course of Greek with less than satisfactory results. I enjoyed very much business and tourist trips to Greece. I have a very slight colloquial understanding, cannot write at all, and have no experience in speaking Greek. Greek is the basis of European languages, has a very difficult grammar, but part of the vocabulary can be found in French, English and German.

I know Russian – 20%. I started many times to learn Russian but I have problems to understand it as it is a very difficult language, totally different from the Romance languages and the Germanic languages. Sometimes I wish that we would live in the times of Tolstoy as about half of War and Peace is written in French, the leading language of Russian aristocracy. But with my luck I would be probably born to a serf and barely speak rudimentary Russian without knowing how to read and write. This time I finished two audio books and even learned some patriotic and children songs that I bring in this book, so I am supposed to know the language well. But nevertheless I read Anna Karenina at a pace of one page an hour and the alphabet is very difficult (this is also true for Greek and Arabic). So, I can barely read, I understand about a quarter of what I hear, actually I think that even less, I have no experience in writing, and I cannot speak at all. But I'll not give up as I have a lot of admiration to the literature and culture.

I know Slavonic languages – 15%. I have studied Polish and Ukrainian but can understand them even less than Russian, reading at a very low pace, without any ability to write and speak. I have noticed in my trips to the Balkans that I can understand some words of the Slavonic languages because of the Russian that I have learned – it applies to Macedonian, Czech, Croatian, Bulgarian, Bosnian, Serbian, Montenegrin, Slovene. And as far as I can read it applies also to Belorussian, Slovak, Palitian (Bulgaria), Sorbian (Germany), Old Church Slavonic, etc. It is not much but I don't feel estranged when I can read the Cyrillic alphabet and understand a few words. I have read texts in those languages – the UN Declaration of Human Rights, extracts from The Little Prince, prayers and the Bible – and I believe that I understand about 15%, however with a translation I can follow the text, and I like it very much. It goes without saying that I have no experience in writing and speaking those languages and don't think that I'll ever do it.

I know Turkish – 10%. This is the country where my father was born and lived until the age of 16. He taught me many proverbs, words and sayings, and when I read a text I can understand about 10% of the text, mainly the European and International words and the words that are similar to Arabic and Hebrew. I have not learned Turkish, barely a conversation manual, I have visited Turkey twice as a tourist. I can understand about ten percent of a conversation, and cannot even follow a text with a translation – I've tried it with the UN Declaration to no avail. Of course I cannot write or speak the language. Many words in Ladino come from Turkish and even words in Romanian come from Turkish, but black coffee is either Greek or Turkish.

I have started to learn Chinese/Mandarin and I know several proverbs and words. I have no knowledge of reading and writing. Which is more than my knowledge in Hindi or Swahili, yet in those two languages, as in some of the other African languages, there are many words originating from English (right choice), French (monsieur le maire), Spanish or Portuguese. Even in Albanian that I visited in 2015 I could understand about 5% of the words, because of their international origin. So, I would say that in all the European languages that I haven't learned but visited, including Hungarian, Finnish, Romani, or Estonian, I can understand about five percent of the language, because of the international words. The same applies also probably from what I can gather from texts to countries that I have not visited in Europe, as Latvian, Irish Gaelic, Lithuanian, Basque, I would say that also in African and Asian languages with Arab influence as Hausa in Nigeria, Malay in Malaysia, Indonesia Bahasa, Urdu in Pakistan, I can understand some words originating from Arabic (but also from English), maybe also about 5%.

As far as I can know there are languages that I cannot understand at all even a few words, such as Japanese, Amharic, Korean, Thai, Tibetan, Vietnamese, Armenian, Azeri, Blackfoot (North American Indian), BoBang (Zaire), Bororo (Brazilian Indian), Burmese, Cherokee, Eskimo, Georgian, Greenlandic, Guarani (Indian Paraguay), Hawaiian, Javanese, Kashmiri, Lapp, Lao, Luganda (Uganda), Malagasi, Maori, Mohawk, Navajo, Nepali, Nsenga (Zambia), Quechua (Bolivia Indian), Samoan, Sioux, Tahitian, Tamil, Toaripi (New Guinea), Zapoteco (Mexico, Indian), Zulu, Uzbek, Houailou (New Caledonian), Habbe/Dogon (Mali), Fijian, Awabakal.

After all this dissertation, showing here and subsequently that I can read and follow at least with a translation more than 250 languages and dialects, if somebody asks me how do you say money in all those languages I probably would fail in the examination. I remember how I saw on TV a scholar who wrote a huge Chinese dictionary and when he was asked how you say money in Chinese he didn't know. So, I decided to examine myself and find in how many languages I know how to say money right away or even if I find it in the dictionary – if I knew the word and just forgot it. So, three levels of knowledge: immediate, knew but forgot, don't know. I think it should be easy, a piece of cake, so wait and see, as said our placid British CEO at the business game of Insead, until at the middle of the play we fired him and started to play when we saw that we were last. I should know money as I am an economist, a businessman (and an ethicist...). Money in English, as in Cabaret: "money makes the world go around". Kesef in Hebrew, does it come from the word Kisouf – yearning or Kishouf – sorcery? Actually, it comes from Silver – kesef. In French – argent, also comes from silver. In Ladino – paras, comes from Turkish para. Or like my father used to say "bu kadar para, bu kadar boya" – according to the amount of money you get the amount of shoeshine. In Romanian – bani, it does not come from silver – argint like in French, maybe from baie – bath, a bath of money, that is swell. In Spanish dinero (if you don't have money you don't dine), but in Argentine you say plata like silver, they should know as the name of their country comes from silver – argent. In Portuguese you say dinheiro for money and prata for silver, like in Spanish. In German you say Geld – has it any connection to Guilt, as very often you earn your money with a sensation of guilt, but silver is Silber. In Yiddish it is gelt like in German. In Italian soldi, it reminds me of solde/sale, as you need money to buy in the sales all what you want (not what you need, as you need much less than you want and you want much less than you buy). Silver is Argento like in French. In Latin it is pecunia (I know it from pecuniary) and silver is argentum, the root of all the other Romance languages. In Arabic I remember that money is flus/filus/fulus, but it is in colloquial Arabic, in literary Arabic you say naqd/nuqud, but I never heard of it. In Aramaic you say Kaspā, like in Hebrew. So, those are the languages that I knew the word without needing to look in a dictionary, not bad for a start. But to my surprise when I looked at the dictionaries of all the other languages that I learned I knew all the words in most of the cases, and I understand the word in texts that I read.

Let's start with Interlingua – it is moneta, like money, like monnaie in French used for change, currency and monetary. In Auvergnat it is argent like in French, and so it is in Occitan, Gascon and Provençal (however in Provençal you pronounce it arje-ent and not arge' like in French). In Creole – most of the French Creoles – you say monne, like in English and in French in similar meanings, but you say also lajan. The Creoles make it simpler, as you don't pronounce in French in L'argent/the money the ending of the word, you pronounce it phonetically lajan. In Picard you say argint, almost like in French. We go south to Spain – in Asturianu it is dineru like in Spanish, in Catalan it is diners like in Spanish, but the metal is argent like in French and plata like in Spanish, no wonder as Catalunya borders with both countries. In Galego it is moeda also like in Spanish, as in Spanish you can either say dinero or moneda, but moneda is more used as currency or coin. In Corsican you say soldi like in Italian and dinari like in Spanish, but silver is like in French argentu. The word dinero comes from Latin denarii – Roman silver coin originally worth 10 asses, as denarius means containing ten (den-ten). The Arabic currency Dinar derives from denarius in Latin. In Romansch you say also daners. In Esperanto you say mono like in Interlingua, English, Spanish and French. The Germanic languages offer no surprise as you say in Alsatian Gald like in German Geld, in Plattdeutsch and Luxembourgish – Geld, and also in Dutch you say Geld (the metal is zilver like in German and English). In Afrikans you say geld or munt (like moneta) and silver is silwer. But the Scandinavian languages use a different word that I remembered only after looking in the dictionary. Swedish – pengar, Norwegian – penge, Danish – penge, Icelandic – peningar. It goes without saying that it is hopeless to remember all the minor changes of Geld, money, argent or pengar from language to language and what is important is to remember the root words, as anyhow I learned most of the new languages only in order to read them and if I read Gald or diners I know of course that they mean money. What I don't understand is how there are Norwegians who don't understand Swedish with such minor changes. In Russian we say dengui, and I needed the dictionary to remember the word, in Polish pieniadze – I didn't know the word, which shows my poor knowledge of Polish. But in Ukrainian which I learned with Polish and is much easier and much closer to Russian money is Groshi and Valiouta, words that I know as groush is a penny in Hebrew and valeur in French is securities – from value, and anyhow there are many in Wall Street whose sole values are money. Finally, in Modern Greek it is hrimata or lefta, lefta I remember, hrimata not. But in ancient Greek the word for money is nomisma, which is derived from nomos – custom, law, because money exists not by nature but by law-nomos, according to the famous book of Aristotle – Nicomachean Ethics, which I learned for my PhD and taught in my classes, and also is dealt at length in this book. In modern Greek the word nomisma means currency. Well, to sum up, my achievements were quite good and I knew almost all of the words for money in the different languages that I have learnt.

Finally, we'll bring a list of proverbs about money and wealth, rich and poor, business and ethics:

A bird in the hand is worth two in the bush.
 A fool and his money are soon parted.
 A full cup must be carried steadily.
 A golden key can open any door.
 A king's chaff is worth more than other men's corn.
 A moneyless man goes fast through the market.
 A penny saved is a penny earned.
 A rich man is either a scoundrel or the heir of a scoundrel.
 A rising tide lifts all boats.
 A wise man's day is worth a fool's life.
 As the person who has health is young, so the person who owes nothing is rich.
 Bad money drives out good.
 Beggars can't be choosers.
 Better be safe than sorry.
 Big mouthfuls often choke.
 Cut your coat according to your cloth.
 Don't put all your eggs in one basket.
 Easy come, easy go.
 Fools build houses and wise men live in them.
 Forgetting a debt does not pay it.
 Full cup, steady hand.
 Give a thing and take a thing.
 Gold may be bought too dear.
 He who pays the piper calls the tune.
 If wishes were horses, beggars would ride.
 If you don't speculate, you can't accumulate.
 If you look after the pennies, the dollars will look after themselves.
 If you won't work you shan't eat.
 It is best to be on the safe side.
 It is better to be born lucky than rich.
 It is better to give than receive.
 Keep a thing seven years...
 Lend your money and lose your friend.

Let the buyer beware.
 Money doesn't grow on trees.
 Money has no smell.
 Money is power.
 Money is the root of all evil.
 Money isn't everything.
 Money makes a man.
 Money makes money.
 Money makes the mare to go.
 Money talks.
 Much would have more.
 Never look a gift horse in the mouth.
 Never marry for money but marry where money is.
 No penny, no paternoster.
 Nothing ventured, nothing gained.
 Of the wealth of the world each has as much as they take.
 One law for the rich and another for the poor.
 One man's loss is another man's gain.
 Out of debt, out of danger.
 Penny wise and pound foolish.
 Spare well and have to spend.
 Take the goods the gods provide.
 The best things in life are free.
 The more you get, the more you want.
 The worth of a thing is what it will bring.
 There's no such thing as a free lunch.
 Thrift is a great revenue.
 Time is money.
 Waste not, want not.
 What you have, hold.
 What you've never had you never miss.
 When poverty comes in at the door, love flies out of the window.
 Whose bread I eat, his song I sing.
 You can have too much of a good thing.
 You can't take it with you when you go.
 You cannot lose what you never had.
 You cannot serve God and Mammon.

This is the bread of affliction that our ancestors ate in the land of Egypt. Let all who are hungry come and eat. Let all who are in need come and celebrate Passover. Now we are here. Next year in the land of Israel. Now we are slaves. Next year we will be free.

Aramaic was the common language of the Eastern Mediterranean during and after the Neo-Assyrian, Neo-Babylonian, and Achaemenid Empires (722–330 BC) and remained a common language of the region in the first century AD. In spite of the increasing importance of Greek, the use of Aramaic was also expanding, and it would eventually be dominant among Jews both in the Holy Land and elsewhere in the Middle East around 200 AD and would remain so until the Islamic expansion in the seventh century. According to Dead Sea Scrolls archaeologist, Yigael Yadin, Aramaic was the language of Hebrews until Simon Bar Kokhba's revolt (132 AD to 135 AD). Yadin noticed the shift from Aramaic to Hebrew in the documents he studied, which had been written during the time of the Bar Kokhba revolt. Apparently, Jesus also spoke in Aramaic.

The book Daniel in the Bible is written in Aramaic, and the sentence that everybody knows from this book (ch. 5) is Meneh, meneh, tekel oufarsin (and not as it appears in the translation below).

25. "And this is the inscription that it wrote: Menah, menah, takil o parseen.
26. "Here is the meaning of the manifestation: 'Menah,' God took a reckoning of your kingdom and it was ended. 27. " 'Takel,' you were weighed in the balance and found to be lacking. 28. " 'Prass,' your kingdom was extended and offered to the Medes and the Persians."
29. Then King Beltshazzar ordered them to array Daniel in purple [robes,] to hang the golden medallion on his chest and to proclaim him as the authority over a third of the kingdom.
30. In that very night the Chaldeans killed King Beltshazzar.
31. And Darius the Mede received the kingdom at the age of twenty-six.

Matthew Henry's concise commentary explains those sentences in the context of the chapter: "5:18-31 Daniel reads Belshazzar's doom. He had not taken warning by the judgments upon Nebuchadnezzar. And he had insulted God. Sinners are pleased with gods that neither see, nor hear, nor know; but they will be judged by One to whom all things are open. Daniel reads the sentence written on the wall. All this may well be applied to the doom of every sinner. At death, the sinner's days are numbered and finished; after death is the judgment, when he will be weighed in the balance, and found wanting; and after judgment the sinner will be cut asunder, and given as a prey to the devil and his angels. While these things were passing in the palace, it is considered that the army of Cyrus entered the city; and when Belshazzar was slain, a general submission followed. Soon will every impenitent sinner find the writing of God's word brought to pass upon him, whether he is weighed in the balance of the law as a self-righteous Pharisee, or in that of the gospel as a painted hypocrite."

Why is it so important to learn ancient languages as Hebrew, Aramaic, Greek, and Latin? The amount of wisdom that permeates in the writings of these languages – the Bible, the Talmud, the Odyssey or Cicero, Vergil, and Seneca writings, exceeds in many cases the wisdom in the classic and modern literature, from 1500 to 2000. I receive from the ancients the reinforcement to overcome all the problems we encounter in our Odyssey of fighting the wrongdoing and obtain social, economic and governmental justice. Most of the population and especially the unethical businessmen do not see the writing on the wall as Daniel has seen and written in Aramaic "Meneh meneh tekel oufarsin", but I see it and write about it in my books, and I'll refer to it further on in this book, like Cicero says in Latin in the Senate: "nothing they do, nothing they undertake, nothing they plan that I would not only hear but would indeed plainly see and observe." Ultimately, as is said in Hebrew Psalms 92, my favorite chapter of the Bible: "Though the wicked sprout like grass and all evildoers flourish, they are doomed to destruction forever. The righteous flourish like the palm tree and grow like a cedar in Lebanon. They are planted in the house of the Lord; they flourish in the courts of our God. They still bear fruit in old age; they are ever full of sap and green." And this concurs with Cicero's essay on old age and also with my belief: "When that end comes, all that is left is what you have achieved by virtue and good deeds. I do not regret having lived, for I have so lived that I cannot think I was born in vain. If I err in believing men's souls to be immortal, I err willingly." I rest my case, for the moment...

But most of all, Aramaic means Talmud, as the Talmud was written in Hebrew and Aramaic, and in this page – folio 161a קסא א of Baba Batra, the page starts in Hebrew and after two lines switches to Aramaic, thus making it obligatory to master Aramaic and Hebrew if you want to learn the Talmud, unless you read it only in English. Those who want to learn this page can do it without the explanations in the links above in English and Hebrew, if they are erudite with enough hair-splitting casuistry. The reader can decide if it is worthwhile to spend an hour or two on this page in order to understand every finesse, or to read one or two pages of Anna Karenina in Russian, and what is more valuable for his soul and wisdom. Why is it so important for the ultra Orthodox Jews to study the Talmud day and night at the Yeshivot that you don't study secular studies as English, mathematics, geography or history, that you don't go to the army, and in many cases you don't work, as you continue to study the Talmud all your life? And what is the benefit that you can have in life for having studied only the Talmud, even the scholarly benefit? I leave to every reader to draw his own conclusions, as I don't want to judge such cases. I would only say that the Talmudic studies at high school were the most boring for me, and as I had to study at least one Judaic study at the university, I took the subject teaching how the Temple was built, as it is especially relevant for those who still hope that the Messiah will come and the Temple would be built. In the meantime someone has to foot the bill for all those who study it. Well, after you search Talmud on YouTube and you are exposed to such hatred, misconceptions and anti-Semitism, you wonder if after all the Hassidim are not right and you must learn the Talmud just to ensure that Jewish religion would prevail in spite of all the prejudices and hate.

There are many Christian prayers and songs in Aramaic, as it was the language of Jesus. One of the best known sayings of Jesus is his chilling saying on the cross: "Eli Eli lema sabachthani" in Aramaic, brought in Matthew 27:46 Around the ninth hour, Jesus shouted in a loud voice, saying "Eli Eli lema sabachthani?" which is, "My God, my God, why have you forsaken me?", and in Mark 15:34 And at the ninth hour, Jesus shouted in a loud voice, "Eloi Eloi lama sabachthani?" which is translated, "My God, my God, for what have you forsaken me?". This saying was true for Jesus, as for Jews dying in the Holocaust, for Muslims killed by terrorists, for all the oppressed & innocents robbed by tycoons, emprisoned by tyrants, violated in families. We bring here prayers in Aramaic: Abwoon d'bwashmaya, the original Lord's prayer in Ancient Aramaic, the original Our Father in Jewish Aramaic, the Lord's prayer in Aramaic with English translation.

As a free lancer and later on as an academic, I had periods of months without work, but instead of relaxing or go on vacation I decided to learn more and more languages – first of all the other Romance languages, this was easy as my mother tongues were Romance languages and I studied also Spanish and Italian quite easily when I was much younger. I liked the Latin peoples, their mentality, their culture, their literature, their countries, their music, their folklore. So, I learned quite quickly – Portuguese (I started with Jorge Amado's Dona Flor e seus dois maridos), Galician (reading at last a Harry Porter book just to practice the language), Catalan, Asturian, Occitan, Provençal (with Mistral's Mireille), Ladin, Friulian, Romansh, Venetian (with Goldoni's plays), Corsican, Sardinian, Interlingua, Auvergnat, Gascon, Picard, Walloon, Antilles and Haitian Creole, Papiamentu, Italian and Spanish dialects, etc., and finally Latin, reading Cicero, Vergil and Plautus in their mother tongue. I did it with teach yourself books, discs, dictionaries, finally with literature – children books, classics - original or with translations which was easier.

3. LATIN, VIRGIL – THE AENEID, CICERO, ON OLD AGE

I enjoyed very much learning Latin, as it gave me the impression of being there, in Rome, two thousands year ago, sitting near Cicero in the Senate, hearing his first oration against Catiline, which I quoted in my novel and case studies, as it expressed exactly my current mood on how nothing the wrongdoers do, undertake and plan is a secret to me who not only hear, but also see and observe all their schemes. This is what I have done in my academic books, my novel, play, articles and satire, to unveil the scams of the unethical tycoons, executives and businessmen. I was the first one in the world to write a dissertation and academic books on the rules of the wrongdoing to minority shareholders, I have foreseen the corporate scandals of December 2001 and onwards, the causes to the Great Recession of 2007-2010, I have denounced their conduct when no one dared to do so in Israel, the US and France, exactly like Cicero did in the past.

[1.8] Quid? cum te Praeneste Kalendis ipsis Novembribus occupaturum nocturno impetu esse¹³ confideres, sensistin illam coloniam meo iussu meis praesidiis, custodiis, vigiliis esse munitam? Nihil agis, nihil moliris, nihil cogitas, quod non ego non modo audiam, sed etiam videam planeque sentiam. IV. Recognosce tandem mecum noctem illam superiorem; iam intelleges multo me vigilare acrius ad salutem quam te ad perniciem rei publicae. Dico te priore nocte venisse inter falcarios--non agam obscure--in M. Laecae domum; convenisse eodem complures eiusdem amentiae scelerisque socios. Num negare audes? quid taces? Convincam, si negas. Video enim esse hic in senatu quosdam, qui tecum una fuerunt.

[1.8] What? When you were confident that by night assault Praeneste would be occupied by you on the 1st of November; you began to realize that upon my orders that colony was fortified by my guards and sentinels. Nothing you do, nothing you undertake, nothing you plan that I would not only hear but would indeed plainly see and observe. Recall with me please the night before last, you should realize my vigilance for the safety of the Republic was more keen than yours for its ruin. I say you, on that earlier night, entered among the Scythemakers; I should not be so vague, into the home of Marcus Laeca, met in this criminal folly with the same and, of his accomplices, several. Now do you dare deny it? Why are you silent? If you deny I shall refute. I see in fact, here in the Senate, certain men who were together with you.

I hope that my end will not be similar to Cicero's end. Cicero championed a return to the traditional republican government. Following Julius Caesar's death Cicero became an enemy of Mark Antony in the ensuing power struggle, attacking him in a series of speeches. He was proscribed as an enemy of the state by the Second Triumvirate and consequently executed by soldiers operating on their behalf in 43 BC after having been intercepted during attempted flight from the Italian peninsula. His severed hands and head were then, as a final revenge of Mark Antony, displayed in the Roman Forum. "Luckily", my works, lectures and teaching don't have the impact of Cicero's speeches, and no one bothers too much to contradict me, as I am preaching to the desert. However, I have influenced thousands of readers of my books and thousands of students, and maybe I have sowed some seeds for a future reform. My approach to old age is similar to Cicero's who writes: "quo propius ad mortem accedam, quasi terram videre videar aliquandoque in portum ex longa navigatione esse venturus." As I approach nearer to death I feel like a voyager at last in sight of land and on the point of reaching harbor after a long journey. And Cicero continues – "When that end comes, all that is left is what you have achieved by virtue and good deeds. Whatever span is allotted to a man he should be content. Intelligence and reason and prudence inhere in the aged; if there were no elders there could be no communities at all. That is why old age can transcend youth in courage and fortitude. I was informed also of the discourse on the immortality of the soul delivered on the last day of his life by Socrates, whom the oracle of Apollo has pronounced the wisest of men. Or do you suppose, to take an old man's privilege of boasting, that I would have undertaken such vast labors, day and night, at home and abroad, if I were going to limit my glory by the bounds of my life? But my soul somehow always strained to look forward to posterity, as if it would really live only when it departed from life. I do not regret having lived, for I have so lived that I cannot think I was born in vain. If I err in believing men's souls to be immortal, I err willingly. Old age is the closing act of life, as of drama, & we ought to leave when the plays grow wearisome, especially if we have had our fill."

And what do I think about death, at the age of 71? I prefer to bring here the quote on what I thought about death at the age of 17 (as opposed to 71), and wrote in my Diary, which I read recently after more than 50 years... It is not quite Cicero, nor is it written in Latin, but rather in Hebrew, another ancient language. At the end of the quote, I wrote a contemporary remark: "I am not afraid of dying. I am afraid of the torments before dying. If I die suddenly – it will do me nothing. I will of course do anything that this will not happen to me, as I am not a coward and do not leave the campaign from the beginning. But if, God forbids, it will happen I will not feel sorry. I am indifferent now, at the age of 17.5 towards death and of course to what happens after dying as I think that there is nothing. If death will come to me and I could do nothing to prevent it, all the more so – let it come. I will encounter it strong and steady. That is what I say when death is far away from me. We'll see what I'll say when death will be close. If death comes, I'll go to the nothingness. Because sorrow and joy are equal in life, I'll lose nothing if I die, and then there will be no joy nor sorrow. I am afraid from agony and sickness, this yes. Now I think that torments are preferable because of the happiness that will ensue after them according to the rule of equilibrium. Life is + and -, that ultimately amount to 0. Death is always 0. But death does not disturb me too much now. There is not even one soul in the world who is so dear to me that I'll feel sorry if I leave her and die. Nothing ties me up to home, city or the word. Who writes those lines – a boy of 17.5 or an old man of 68.5? Even today I am not afraid of death, nevertheless I'll do everything to prevent it because of the sorrow that it will bring to my wife, children and grandchildren, to some of my friends, readers, students, & to me also..."

Latin is also the Aeneid by Virgil, as Greek is the Odyssey by Homer. The Aeneid is a Latin epic poem, written by Virgil between 29 and 19 BC, that tells the legendary story of Aeneas, a Trojan who travelled to Italy, where he became the ancestor of the Romans. It comprises 9,896 lines in dactylic hexameter. The first six of the poem's twelve books tell the story of Aeneas's wanderings from Troy to Italy, and the poem's second half tells of the Trojans' ultimately victorious war upon the Latins, under whose name Aeneas and his Trojan followers are destined to be subsumed. The hero Aeneas was already known to Greco-Roman legend and myth, having been a character in the Iliad, composed in the 8th century BC. Virgil took the disconnected tales of Aeneas's wanderings, his vague association with the foundation of Rome and a personage of no fixed characteristics other than a scrupulous pietas, and fashioned this into a compelling founding myth or national epic that at once tied Rome to the legends of Troy, explained the Punic wars, glorified traditional Roman virtues and legitimized the Julio-Claudian dynasty as descendants of the founders, heroes and gods of Rome and Troy. We bring here an extract and a link to the Latin text in full and English translation in full:

Primus ibi ante omnis magna comitante caterva	40
Laocoon ardens summa decurrit ab arce, et procul 'o miseri, quae tanta insania, cives?
creditis avectos hostis? aut ulla putatis dona carere dolis Danaum? sic notus Ulixes?
aut hoc inclusi ligno occultantur Achivi,	45

aut haec in nostros fabricata est machina muros, inspectura domos venturaque desuper urbi, aut aliquis latet error; equo ne credite, Teucri.
 quidquid id est, timeo Danaos et dona ferentis.
 sic fatus ualidis ingentem viribus hastam 50 in latus inque feri curvam compagibus alvum contorsit. stetit illa tremens, uteroque recusso insonuere cavae gemitumque dedere cavernae.
 et, si fata deum, si mens non laeva fuisset, impulerat ferro Argolicas foedare latebras, 55
 Troiaque nunc staret, Priamique arx alta maneres

Urge diverse counsels, and in parts divide, 46
 Lo, from the citadel, foremost of a rout,
 Breathless Laocoon runs, and from afar cries out;

"Ah! wretched townsmen! do ye think the foe 55
 Gone, or that guileless are their gifts? O blind
 With madness! Thus Ulysses do ye know?
 Or Grecians in these timbers lurk confined,
 Or 'tis some engine of assault, designed
 To breach the walls, and lay our houses bare,
 And storm the town. Some mischief lies behind.
 Trust not the horse, ye Teucrians. Whatso'er
 This means, I fear the Greeks, for all the gifts they bear.'

"So saying, his mighty spear, with all his force, 64
 Full at the flank against the ribs he drave,
 And pierced the bellying framework of the horse.
 Quivering, it stood; the hollow chambers gave
 A groan, that echoed from the womb's dark cave,
 Then, but for folly or Fate's adverse power,
 His word had made us with our trusty glaive
 Lay bare the Argive ambush, and this hour
 Should Ilion stand, and thou, O Priam's lofty tower!

We can hear not only Cicero's texts in Latin, but listen also to Carmina Burana with a translation from Latin to English, Miserere Mei Deus with a translation into Spanish, and Mozart's Requiem with an English translation. So, Latin that was once, not so long ago, a language taught at high schools in England and France, lives not only in the Vatican, but also in the concert halls.

Then, I learned all the Germanic languages – this was tougher, but I knew already English and German, and I admired very much the Dutch and Scandinavian people and their political and economic regimes. So, I studied Dutch, Flemish, Afrikaans, Frisian, Plattdeutsch, Yiddish, Luxemburgish, Swedish, Norwegian, Danish and Icelandic. It was a pleasure to read in Norwegian En Folkefiende by Ibsen, my favorite playwright, Andersen in Danish, and Froken Julie by Strindberg. I had quite a problem to purchase the Diary of Anne Frank in Dutch until I discovered that in her mother tongue it is called Het Achterhuis. In those "tough" languages the best way to learn them was to read in parallel a translation, without recurring too much to dictionaries. Interlingua, a constructed language based on Romance languages, was a "bonus" as it is the easiest language in the world, with all its grammar condensed in one page.

4. DUTCH, PROFESSOR VAN LUIJK, ANNE FRANK

I quote later in this book Ibsen from En Folkefiende in Norwegian, and here I quote Anne Frank in Dutch in a letter to Professor Henk Van Luijk, my academic mentor, the best man I have ever known, who informed me that he is very sick, bade farewell from me, dying suddenly, too early:

Dear Henk,

It took me a couple of days to overcome my emotions and write you. In the whole world I know only a couple of people of your stature who have contributed so much to humanity. There are thousands of professors in business ethics, but you are one of the few who are wholly dedicated to the cause, who have such a humanistic approach, who are "good men". I can only advise you not to give up hope, I know that in Israel there are excellent doctors and if I can be of any assistance in this respect I am at your disposal.

Henk, I love you and so does Ruthy, I wish with all my heart that you'll be with us for many more years, if you don't deserve it who does? I am very pessimistic as to the fate of our world, I see a catastrophe coming if not now - by 2020 at the latest. Nothing serious is being done to change the attitude of business to be more ethical and less greedy. The order of magnitude is increasing in this economic whirl, from billions twenty years ago to trillions nowadays. And especially today we need you, your stature, your reputation...

At this moment I can only think of what Anne Frank wrote in her diary on July 15, 1944, 40 days after I was born:

Het is me ten enenmale onmogelijk alles op te bouwen op de basis van dood, ellende en verwarring. Ik zie hoe de wereld langzaam steeds meer in een woestijn herschapen wordt, ik hoor steeds harder de aanrollende donder, di ook ons zal doden, ik voel het leed van miljoenen mensen mee, en toch, als ik naar de hemel kijk, denk ik, dat dit alles zich weer ten goede zal wenden, dat ook deze wreedheid zal ophouden, dat er weer rust en vrede in de wereldorde zal komen. Intussen moet ik m'n denkbeelden hoog en droog houden, in de tijden die komen zijn ze misschien toch nog uit te voeren!

Jacques Cory

Attached (for the reader) the translation into English of this quote from the diary of Anne Frank:

"I simply can't build up my hopes on a foundation consisting of confusion, misery, and death. I see the world gradually being turned into a wilderness, I hear the ever approaching thunder, which will destroy us too, I can feel the sufferings of millions and yet if I look up into the heavens, I think that it will all come right, that this cruelty too will end, and that peace and tranquility will return again. Meanwhile, I try to put my thoughts at rest and watch for them in case that in the future they would be feasible." Saturday, 15 July, 1944

But Dutch did not remind me only sad events. I enjoyed very much visiting the Netherlands and Belgium, where I had friends. I took my family to visit Madurodam and Amsterdam, Brussels, Brugge, Gent, etc. I enjoyed working for a Dutch company during six months, and in Amsterdam I liked to visit the Rembrandt and Van Gogh museums, and strolling by its many canals.

Finally, I bring here the comments on my business ethics books made in 2004 by Professor Henk van Luijk in English as a member of the Jury of my dissertation at CNAM and in Dutch in an article written by him in Het Financieele Dagblad, the "Financial Times" of the Netherlands

"I have taken due notice of both books of Jacques Cory. The author shows a fine combination of an extended reading effort and a solid business experience. It is this combination, together with his serious commitment to the issue of the minority shareholders that yields something new and valuable. Up to now, the case of the minority shareholders has been seriously neglected. Jacques Cory gives them the attention they deserve. From his readings he brings a vast panorama of relevant insights in the topic of ethics in business, drawn from a variety of sources. From his business experience he brings a sensitivity for action and for the suitable forms that actions could take. One may discuss the question whether his suggestions with regard to a Supervisory Board and an Institute of Ethics can be made operational in the short run. One could even say that his theoretical remarks, taken each for themselves, although relevant and well-documented, are not all new. But with the two books taken together, Jacques Cory has contributed considerably to the moral cartography of a field that too long has remained unnoticed in the field of business ethics. In my opinion, his contribution is one of a well-informed practical pioneer. It bears the hallmark of creative activity. If supervision had been available, or sought, at an earlier moment, the publications could have gained in articulation and succinctness, but the fact that a wellknown academic publisher after due reviewings has accepted both manuscripts for publication may be seen as an indication of its comparable academic worth."

Hebben minderheidsaandeelhouders speciale rechten? Henk van Luijk

Tijd en plaats van handeling: een week geleden, Parijs, de Conservatoire national des Arts et Métiers, een gerenommeerde instelling van wetenschappelijk onderwijs in praktijkgerichte vakken. Inzet: een promotie op het gebied van de bedrijfsethiek, in de vorm van een 'thèse sur travaux'. Dat houdt in dat de promovendus enkele wetenschappelijke publicaties op zijn naam heeft staan, en de hoofdinhoud daarvan en de gehanteerde methode vervolgens aan de universiteit presenteert in de vorm van een thesis, ter verkrijging van de graad van 'doctor'.

Deelnemers: de promovendus, een zestigjarige Israëliische oud-zakenman, en de promotiecommissie, 'le jury', bestaande uit de promotor en vier toegevoegde hoogleraren. Ik was door de promotor uitgenodigd om van de jury deel uit te maken. Uitslag: de doctorstitel, met de aantekening 'très honorable', wat 'zeer eervol' betekent maar in Nederlandse verhoudingen neerkomt op 'ruim voldoende'. Een belangrijke vraag in de anderhalf uur durende sessie was: kunnen minderheidsaandeelhouders speciale morele rechten doen gelden? En zo ja, op welke grond?

De promovendus, Jacques Cory, auteur van twee boeken, 'Business Ethics. The Ethical Revolution of Minority Shareholders (2001) en 'Activist Business Ethics' (2002), heeft pionierswerk verricht, want over minderheidsaandeelhouders is in de bedrijfsethiek nog vrijwel niets te vinden. Speciale rechten voor kleine aandeelhouders? Cory vond uitdrukkelijk van wel. Zij hebben er recht op dat anderen geen misbruik maken van hun zwakke positie. Als grondslag hiervoor noemde hij het morele basisbeginsel dat mensen aan anderen geen schade dienen te berokkenen, en ook de Gulden Regel: 'Wat gij niet wilt dat u geschiedt, doe dat ook een ander niet'. Dit is, in het Nederlands, een honorabele stelling, zeker als je daarbij denkt aan de vele duizenden kleine aandeelhouders die in recente boekhoudschandalen hun spaargeld en vaak zelfs hun pensioenen hebben zien verdampen zonder dat zij daarop enige invloed konden uitoefenen. Maar de stelling van de promovendus blijkt wat pover onderbouwd.

Het is hier van tweeën één. Ofwel minderheidsaandeelhouders verkeren, wat hun morele rechten aangaat, in de positie die geldt voor elke marktdeelnemer, maar zij kunnen geen aanspraak maken op speciale rechten. Zij mogen een beroep doen op de beginselen van eerlijkheid, transparantie, wederkerigheid en gelijke toegang die samen de moraal van de markt vormen, maar dat is het dan ook. Ofwel er is wel degelijk sprake van speciale rechten voor kleine aandeelhouders, maar dan moeten die ook worden gespecificeerd en onderbouwd. Speciale rechten funderen op algemene beginselen is geen sterke strategie.

Een tweede bezwaar is geduchter. Het komt neer op: 'Niet zeuren, zo is het spel. Als je niet tegen de hitte kunt, verdwijnt dan uit de keuken. Natuurlijk heb je als minderheidsaandeelhouder rechten, maar wel naargelang het gewicht van je aandeel. Kleine aandeelhouders hebben kleine rechten. Wanneer je je als kleintje benadeeld voelt, zorg dan dat je groter wordt en sluit je aan bij de VEB, de Vereniging van Effectenbezitters. Het is op de markt net als in de politiek. De meerderheid maakt de dienst uit'. Een sterke tekst, maar de laatste parallel had beter achterwege kunnen blijven. Want zo werkt de politiek juist niet. Wie zich in een democratie beroept op het recht van de sterkste maakt zich schuldig aan democratisch cynisme. Politieke theoretici zijn het al jaren over één ding eens: je beroepen op je meerderheidspositie, en zeker je meerderheid onbekommerd uitbuiten, is de snelste weg om haar te verliezen. Een meerderheid die aan minderheden voorbijgaat holt zichzelf uit. Democratie is nu eenmaal een krachtsevenwicht dat bij voortduring onderhouden moet worden, indachtig het motto: 'Everybody to count for one, and nobody for more than one'. Hierachter zit het politieke profijtbeginnsel: je ondergraaft je eigen politieke positie wanneer je die van anderen, hoezeer ook een minderheid, veronachtzaamt.

Er is hier ook een hoger beginsel in het geding, en dat luidt: Een meerderheid bezitten in de politiek geeft niet primair rechten maar allereerst verantwoordelijkheden. Politiek is behartiging van het algemeen belang vanuit omschreven maatschappelijke voorkeuren. Zodra jouw voorkeuren ten koste gaan van het algemeen belang springt het maatschappelijk sein op rood. Op de markt is het niet anders. De morele intuïtie betreffende speciale rechten van minderheidsgroeperingen is begrijpelijk, de verontwaardiging over misbruik van informatie en macht van de kant van houders van meerderheidspakketten is terecht, maar op de markt moet misschien niet de liefde maar dan toch zeker het verstand wel van twee kanten komen. Verspreid opererende kleine aandeelhouders moeten zich groeperen, zich naar vermogen informeren, uitwijken misschien naar obligaties of ethische fondsen, en bovenal zich realiseren dat zij deelnemen aan een complexe en geavanceerde markt. Dus ogen open, de benen schrap en vermetelheid de deur uit.

Ondernemingsbesturen in een markt van sterk gespreid aandelenbezit, en houders van meerderheidspakketten in een markt waarin banken en institutionele beleggers de dienst uitmaken dienen zich bewust te zijn van hun verantwoordelijkheden ten aanzien van minderheidsgroeperingen van aandeelhouders. Om het systeem in stand te houden. Maar ook omdat er rechten in het geding zijn. Want inderdaad, minderheidsaandeelhouders hebben eigen rechten. Het recht met name dat, wanneer zij verstandig opereren, zij niet worden belemmerd in hun deelname aan de markt. Verantwoord ondernemen eist van alle betrokkenen ook verantwoord financieren. De Code Tabaksblat probeert betere verhoudingen tussen ondernemingsbestuur, commissarissen en aandeelhouders te bewerkstelligen. Haar aanwijzingen en aanbevelingen hebben echter, onuitgesproken, vooral de grote aandeelhouders in het vizier. Moet er dus nog een code komen die recht doet aan de speciale rechten van minderheidsaandeelhouders, of mogen we ervan uitgaan dat op de duur de kleine aanhouder vanzelf wel wint?

5. YIDDISH, SHOLEM ALEICHEM'S NOVEL - TEVYE THE DAIRYMAN, THE MUSICAL - A FIDDLER ON THE ROOF, ANSKY'S PLAY – DYBBUK, GOLDIN'S - MIRELE EFROS

Yiddish is written in the Hebrew alphabet and is based primarily on German and Hebrew. Yiddish (ייִדיש, ייִדיש or ייִדיש, yidish/idish, literally "Jewish") is the historical language of the Ashkenazi Jews. It originated during the 9th century in Central Europe, providing the nascent Ashkenazi community with an extensive Germanic based vernacular fused with elements taken from Hebrew and Aramaic, as well as from Slavic languages and traces of Romance languages.^{[4][5]} Yiddish is written with a fully vocalized alphabet based on the Hebrew script. The earliest surviving references date from the 12th century and call the language לשון־אַשכנז (loshn-ashknaz = "language of Ashkenaz") or טײַטש (taytsh), a variant of tiutsch, the contemporary name for Middle High German. In common usage, the language is called מאַמע־לשון (mame-loshn, literally "mother tongue"), distinguishing it from Hebrew and Aramaic, which are collectively termed לשון־קודש (loshn-koydesh, "holy tongue"). The term "Yiddish" did not become the most frequently used designation in the literature until the 18th century. In the late 19th and into the 20th century the language was more commonly called "Jewish", especially in non-Jewish contexts, but "Yiddish" is again the more common designation for this language.

My mother tongue was Ladino written in the Rashi alphabet and based primarily on ancient Spanish and Hebrew. Ruthy – my wife's mother tongue was Yiddish, and I found many similarities between Ladino and Yiddish, the languages of the Sephardic and Ashkenazi Jews. After marrying Ruthy I learned her mother tongues Yiddish and Romanian and she learned mine – French and Ladino. But also we assimilated and absorbed each other's folklore, Ruthy went with me to the Ladino plays and shows that were very popular in those years and I went to see Yiddish plays and read Yiddish literature, the first book was – Tevye the Dairyman by Sholem Aleichem. I did not patronize the language as most Israelis did in those days, nor had inferiority complexes as many orientals had towards the Ashkenazis. Those complexes were so absorbed in the DNA, that I remember when I first rented a room in a family in Jerusalem on the first year at the university, 1961, I was 17, the owner wanted to see my father who had to guarantee payments. I didn't have an accent in Hebrew (I immigrated at the age of 9) but my father had an "Egyptian" accent, so the woman asks my father: "And from which country did the boy immigrate?", my father answered: "From Egypt, but he is a good boy...". I encountered racism in all those years, but didn't suffer from it, as "luckily" I didn't have a name, an accent, the looks and the "conduct" of an oriental. Until today research has proven that if you have an Israeli name (as Eshkol) or an Ashkenazi name (as Rosenthal), you have more chances to be called to a job interview, even if you send the same CV with an oriental name (as Buzaglo). Serious judges and lawyers speak and write about the obligation to enforce the law against a public official in the same way that it is applied to the "average Joe" known in Israel as the "Buzaglo Test." It is so much in their DNA that they don't perceive the prejudice in calling the average Joe (or Dupont in French) a Buzaglo (Moroccan name) and not a Bugoslavsky (Polish name), or rather an Eshkol (Israeli name). It goes without saying that when I mention an oriental "conduct" it has nothing to do with your origins but with the prejudice that you have on the origin, as orientals are supposed to be less educated, more hotheaded, more violent, and with no manners, which is of course completely false, as when you happen to know a person you see that those characteristics have nothing to do with origins, as to be a miser, with a big nose, exploiting gentiles have nothing to do with Jews.

So, it is no wonder that, mainly due to ignorance and prejudices, many parents were worried when their daughter dated me, although I was a student at the university, a graduate in Economics, a lieutenant at the Israel army, and one of the most intellectual men that they have ever met. This was true even if the parents were Polish who were in the holocaust at Auschwitz. With Ruthy, my wife, and her parents Fanny and David and grandmother Rosalia/Baba, there were no such problems, they loved me at first sight as their daughter, and they were very happy when I proposed to her three weeks after we met and married her three months later, her parents facilitated the marriage instead of obstructing it. Furthermore, Romanian Jews spoke a Latin language as we did (I was "Egyptian" only de jure, but de facto I was Sephardic with European mother tongues and not Arabic), many of their habits had Turkish influence (even some words in Romanian) as we did in Ladino, and they were warm hearted "much more than the other Ashkenazis". These are of course generalities, and luckily today most of the youngsters marry regardless of the origin of their parents, a quarter to a half of the children have mixed origins (my grandchildren have ten origins...), and within a generation or two this problem will disappear. Anyhow, my attitude towards Yiddish was very favorable, I had a lot of respect to their culture, read Yiddish plays and novels first in Hebrew and then in Yiddish, and admired their folklore.

When we say Yiddish, we think, or rather a non-Jew thinks primarily of Tevye, or Tevye the Dairyman, by Sholem Aleichem the most famous book written in Yiddish by the most famous Yiddish author, and the most famous musical about Jewish life, based on the book Tevye – Fiddler on the Roof. Solomon Naumovich Rabinovich, better known under his pen name Sholem Aleichem (yiddish and Hebrew: שלום-עליכם ; Russian and Ukrainian: Шолом-Алэйхем) (1859 – 1916), was a leading Yiddish author and playwright. Sholem Aleichem's narratives were notable for the naturalness of his characters' speech and the accuracy of his descriptions of shtetl life. Early critics focused on the cheerfulness of the characters, interpreted as a way of coping with adversity. Later critics saw a tragic side in his writing. He was often referred to as the "Jewish Mark Twain" because of the two authors' similar writing styles and use of pen names. Both authors wrote for both adults and children, and lectured extensively in Europe and the US. When Twain heard of the writer called "the Jewish Mark Twain", he replied "please tell him that I am the American Sholem Aleichem." Both of them had of course a sharp sense of humor.

Tevye begins his literary life in 1894 with seven daughters. Over time, as Tevye "tells" Aleichem the tales of his family life, six of his seven daughters (Bielke, Chava, Hodel, Shprintze, Taybele, and Tzeitel) are named, and of these five play leading roles in Tevye's stories. The Tevye stories tell of his business dealings; the romantic dealings and marriages of several of his daughters; and the expulsion of the Jews from their village by the Russian government. The Tevye stories have been adapted for stage and film several times, including several Yiddish-language musicals. Most famously, it was adapted as the Broadway musical and later film Fiddler on the Roof. The Broadway musical was based on a play written by Arnold Perl called Tevye and his Daughters. Tevye the Dairyman had 3 film adaptations; in Yiddish \(1939\), English (1971), Russian (1991). Zero Mostel and Chaim Topol are the two actors most associated with the role of Tevye, although Theodore Bikel performed it many times on stage. For the film version, the part ultimately went to Topol, as producer-director Norman Jewison felt that Mostel's portrayal was too unnecessarily comic. Critic Pauline Kael warmly embraced Topol's performance, as he had appeared in many stage revivals. He was nominated for an Academy Award for his performance.

We bring here part of the first page of the chapter - Hodl, in Yiddish, and its English translation. "You've been wandering have you, Pan Sholem Aleichem, where I've been all this time? Tevye's chaged quite a bit, you say, grown suddenly gray? Ah, if only you knew the troubles, the heartache, that I've been through! It's written that odom yesoydoy mi'ofor vesoyfoy le'ofor, that a man can be weaker than a fly and stronger than steel – I tell you, that's a description of me! Maybe you can tell me, though, why is it that whenever something goes wrong in this world, it's Tevye it goes wrong with. Do you think that It's because I'm a gullible fool who believes whatever he's told? If only I'd managed to remember what our rabbis said a thousand times, kabdeyu vekhoshdeyhu – a man mustn't trust his own dog... But what can I do, I ask you, if that's my nature? And besides, I'm a man of faith, as you know, I have no complaints against God. Not that they would do me the least bit of good if I had them! Whatever He does must be for a reason, though. It's like the prayer book says haneshomoh lokh vehaguf shelokh – what does a man ever know and what is he really worth? My wife and I quarrel about that. "Goldie", I'm always telling her, "it's a sin even to think such things. There's a story in the Talmud that – " "Leave me alone with your Talmud!" she says. "We have a daughter to marry off, and after her, touch wood, two others, and after them three more, if first they don't break a leg...". The full chapter and full book of Tevye in English is brought in the link in English, and the full chapter and the full book of Tevye in Yiddish is brought in the link in Yiddish.

Yiddish theatre consists of plays written and performed primarily by Jews in Yiddish, the language of the Central European Ashkenazi Jewish community. The range of Yiddish theatre is broad: operetta, musical comedy, and satiric or nostalgic revues; melodrama; naturalist drama; expressionist and modernist plays. At its height, its geographical scope was comparably broad: from the late 19th century until just before World War II, professional Yiddish theatre could be found throughout the heavily Jewish areas of Eastern and East Central Europe, but also in Berlin, London, Paris, Buenos Aires and New York City.

Yiddish theatre's roots include the often satiric plays traditionally performed during religious holiday of Purim (known as Purim spiels); other masquerades such as the Dance of Death; the singing of cantors in the synagogues; Jewish secular song and dramatic improvisation; exposure to the theatre traditions of various European countries, and the Jewish literary culture that had grown in the wake of the Jewish enlightenment (Haskalah). Israil Bercovici wrote that it is through Yiddish theatre that "Jewish culture entered in dialogue with the outside world," both by putting itself on display and by importing theatrical pieces from other cultures.^[1] Themes such as immigration, assimilation and poverty can be found in many Yiddish theatre productions

To conclude this short presentation on the folklore of Jewish diaspora, we chose Ansky's Dybbuk, the most well-known play in Yiddish, that has become since 1916 a classic performed all over the world. The play depicts the possession of a young woman by the malicious spirit, the Dybbuk in Jewish folklore, of her dead beloved. We can also see some pictures of the Gesher performance of Dybbuk in Israel, and read below an extract of the play in Yiddish, written in Hebrew letters, with its English translation. The play by Ansky was authored between 1913 and 1916. It was originally written in Russian and later translated into Yiddish by Ansky himself. The Dybbuk had its world premiere in that language, performed by the Vilna Troupe at Warsaw in 1920. A Hebrew version was prepared by Hayim Nahman Bialik, the Jewish most renown poet, and staged at Habima Theater, Moscow in 1922. Hanna Rovina, the First Lady of Hebrew Theater, was Leah in the first performance and has continued to play until her death in 1980, having one of the longest acting career in world history. We bring here a link to the famous film The Dybbuk, 1937, in Yiddish, with English subtitles. Dybbuk also obtained international fame.

He does not want to leave from there.

A dybbuk is lurking around Bałachowicz.²
And fights with enthusiasm, with audacity
He mutters about freedom, about all kinds of fortun
And can obtain redress in no other way at all.
Except in Jewish blood.

And Jerzy Orenstein⁴ sits in Dwa Grosze
A dybbuk: he's one of a kind
But when are they going to take to him, oh, Momm
An incantation, even if the rebbe is a Tatar
That will drive him away from there.
I see the dybbuk wherever I turn
He soaks everything up inside him like a sponge.
There is also a dybbuk in literature.
His name is "Futurism;" oy, just listen to these rhyr
"Moonlit nights," "Goats," and "Bim, bam."

A dybbuk, a dybbuk has also gotten into the bread
It leaves a bitter taste in our mouths
Our guts churn and sing a song

I would like to mention also my most beloved Yiddish playwright Jacob Gordin, the Yiddish playwright who helped take Yiddish theater out of the realm of spectacle and biblical operetta into realism and naturalism in the second half of the 19th century. Ukrainian-born, he came to New York in 1891 and only then sought his livelihood in theater. Gordin's best-known work was The Jewish King Lear, which cast a spotlight both on Gordin and on Jacob Adler, who became the leading man of the Yiddish stage. Other Gordin plays of note (he wrote more than seventy) were Mirele Efros (which I saw several times), The Kreutzer Sonata, Khasye the Orphan, God, Man and Devil, and The Oath. Many of his works, conforming to the conventions of Yiddish theater, retained songs and dances and other "entertainment" elements, but his plots were realistic, if melodramatic, and his influence upon Yiddish theater and its actors was profound.

From the Yiddishpiel website we bring the plot of Gordin's play – Mirele Efros, which although very melodramatic is very moving, especially if it is played by outstanding actors. Mirele Efros, a rich merchantwoman from Grodno, comes to Slutsk with her two children and a retinue of servants and advisors, to marry off Yossele, her first-born son, to Sheindele, a poor but well-born girl. In Mirele's first meeting with her relatives by marriage, Reb Nachumtze and Chana Devora, she realizes she made a bad bargain. These people, who appeared to the matchmaker to be of little means but honorable, were no more than beggars and moochers, trying to build upon the match. When the situation becomes intolerable for her, she cancels the match, ordering Shalmon, her business executive, to hitch up the horses for the return to Grodno. But Yossele's stubbornness and devotion to his sweetheart defeat. Despite her uneasiness with the idea, she orders for the wedding to be held immediately.

Three years later, we return to meet the family but now in Mirele's home in Grodno. With Sheindele, the daughter-in-law, came her parents, Reb Nachumtze and Chana Devora. The family from Slutsk has not changed at all from its habits. They aspire, with Sheindele's assistance, to take over the house and property. Sheindele wants her independence and freedom, while Mirele Efros wishes to continue to rule her household and business as before. Sheindele tries to gain her ends through Yossele. First she incites him and Donya against Shalmon, the business manager. Later she pushes them to demand control of the property for themselves. Mirele, who cannot bear the continuous strife anymore, gives in and transfers all her property to her son's control.

The second act opens with Mirele Efros' richly appointed house looking completely different. Reb Nachumtze, who is now the business manager instead of Shalmon, returns drunk from a business trip, falling asleep on Mirele's couch. It soon becomes clear that he had lost 8 thousand rubles. Donya too, the younger son, who returned a few weeks earlier from a different business trip, does not want to report on the deals he made and their results. Mirele finds it difficult to stand up to the new order but bites her tongue and restrains herself, until Shalmon shows up asking for a donation towards the building of a new Jewish hospital. Not having funds of her own, she is forced to turn to Yossele, that he give her 200 rubles so as not to shame her publicly. Sheindele and Donya view this as a waste of money and prevent Yossele giving her the money. Mirele finds herself between the rock and a hard place. She is not willing to restrain herself any longer. She gathers together some of her things, asks Shalmon to give her sanctuary in his house, and leaves her home.

Ten years pass by. Mirele has settled into Shalmon's house and runs his affairs. On the day of Shlomele, the grandson's Bar-Mitzvah, Yossele arrives to make peace with Mirele and have her come back home. But Mirele prefers to send a present to the grandson without participating in the celebration. She is not prepared to make peace with her family who hurt her and shamed her so. Yossele leaves her shamefacedly. But Sheindele, her daughter-in-law cannot stand up to such a situation and takes the initiative. It does not matter that she is an unwelcome guest; she wants to bring her mother-in-law back home. But Mirele is not reconciled. In a sharp confrontation, they each reveal each others failings, and each one's weaknesses. And so, Sheindele too is forced to leave without achieving her object. After this confrontation, Mirele is exhausted, broken, and bewildered. Shlomele, the grandson, is the last of the visitors. In his direct and childish manner, he plays upon her heartstrings and wins her over.

Finally, we bring details on the film Mirele Efros by Joseph Berne, based on the play by Goldin: USA, 1939, 80 minutes, in Yiddish with English subtitles.

"Mirele Efros is likely the single most widely played piece in the Yiddish theatrical canon."
-J. Hoberman, Bridge of Light: Yiddish Film Between Two Worlds

Synopsis - Mirele Efros, "the Jewish Queen Lear," was the masterpiece of Ukrainian-born Jacob Gordin, an enormously influential Yiddish playwright whose works sought to describe and promulgate the ethos of mentshlekheyt: the practice of honesty, decency, and devotion toward family and community. This sophisticated version of his stage classic faithfully recreates Jewish life in turn-of-the-century Grodno, Poland. Berta Gersten gives a memorable performance as Mirele, a wealthy and pious widow whose devotion to her children extends to hand-picking a wife for her eldest son, gravely mistaking the young woman's character as giving and devout. The resulting conflict between the noble Jewish matriarch and her ungrateful, self-serving daughter-in-law provides both a cautionary tale and a lesson in the value of filial piety.

6. JEWISH FOLKLORE, FOLK SONGS IN YIDDISH, YEMENITE AND LADINO – CHAVA ALBERSTEIN, OFRA HAZA, YITZHAK NAVON'S BUSTAN SEPHARDI, YEHOAM GAON'S FROM TOLEDO TO JERUSALEM

The Jewish people in general and Israel in particular are an amalgamation of cultures and folklores with a common denominator Judaism. They comprise of three main communities – Ashkenazi: Jews from Germany and Eastern Europe and later – England, the US, most of them spoke Yiddish or German, but they spoke also Russian, Polish, English, Ukrainian, Romanian, Serb, Czech, and so on. Oriental – Jews living in Arab speaking countries: Morocco, Algeria, Tunisia, Libya, Egypt, Syria, Lebanon, Iraq, Yemen, and also Iran, Ethiopia and India. They spoke mainly Arabic or Judeo-Arabic languages, or Persian, Amhari and Hindi. Sephardic: Jews originating from Spain, Portugal and Italy, and living in Italy, Greece, Bosnia, Macedonia, Bulgaria, Turkey, Israel/Palestine, France, Netherlands, the US, Latin America, speaking mainly Ladino, but also Greek, Turkish, Italian, Arabic, Bulgarian, French, Dutch, Spanish, English. There were of course countries where there were Jews from the 2 or 3 communities – as Egypt, Turkey, Bulgaria, the US, Latin America, France, England, Yugoslavia, and of course Israel.

From the Folklore chapter of the Jewish Virtual Library: "Jewish folklore can be defined as the creative spiritual and cultural heritage of the Jewish people handed down, mainly by oral tradition, from generation to generation by the various Jewish communities. The process of oral transmission took place alongside the development of normative, written literature. The science of folklore ("folkloristics") is a discipline which studies the historic-geographic origin and diffusion of folklore institutions, their social backgrounds, functions, intercultural affinities, influences, changes, and acculturation processes and examines the meanings and interpretations of the institutions' individual components. The national cultural heritages of the gentile neighbors among whom the Jewish people has lived throughout its wanderings and dispersions have been assimilated into Jewish folklore. While mutual intercultural contacts are evident in many realms, Jewish folklore has certain specific features common to Eastern and Western Jews which are characteristic of the creative folk ego of the Jewish people. The Judaization and adaptation of universal traditions bear witness to the qualities, trends, and hopes of the Jewish transformers. Through a comparative study of neighboring cultures, normative Jewish religion, and folk evidence which is substantiated by the transmission of many generations and culture areas inhabited by Jews, the special character of Jewish folk tradition may be apprehended.

Best known and the most widespread among the Jewish folklore genres, the realistic tale is mostly comprised of jokes and anecdotes depicting the comic aspects of life, especially as seen through Jewish eyes. The main heroes are fools, wits, misers, liars, beggars, tricksters, and representatives of various professions. The point of the Jewish joke, seemingly concluding it, is often followed by a "hyperpoint" – some clever and sophisticated addition to the humorous story, stressing a new, often specific Jewish aspect. Though the humorous motifs are universal, there is less of visual (situational) humor in Jewish jokes than in universal jests, and there is more of verbal humor, consisting of clever retorts, wordplay, "learned" interpretations of words and sentences, jests, and witty noodle stories. In most Jewish jokes the realistic background is typically Jewish, as are the heroes – well-known local wags (Hershele Ostropoler, Motke Habad, Froyim Greydinger, Jukha, etc.) whose fame has spread far beyond the border of their original place of activity. There are also "wise" places as, for example, Chelm in Poland, Linsk in Galicia, etc., whose "wise" inhabitants (in fact, fools) perform the same deeds as their "wise" colleagues – the inhabitants of Abdera (Greece), Schildburg (Germany), Gotham (England), etc.

Among the droll characters of the Jewish jokes, typical "Jewish" professions and types of socioeconomic failures are well represented: schnorrers ("beggars"), shadḥanim ("matchmakers"), cantors, preachers, but mostly schlemiels and schlimazels. Social misfits, their gawkishness, clumsy actions, and inability to cope with any situation in life make the listener enjoy his own superior cleverness (the feeling is often subconscious). A witty folk-saying distinguishes between the two characters: "A schlemiel is a man who spills a bowl of hot soup on a schlimazel." Whereas the word schlimazel seems to be a combination of the German word schlimm ("bad") and the Hebrew word mazal ("luck"), the origin of schlemiel is obscure and has given rise to many German-Yiddish folk etymologies. Many of Shalom Aleichem's folk types, Tevye the Milkman and Menahem Mendel, have been given the traits of an irrepressible daydreaming schlimazel. Benyamin the Third, a character out of the world of Mendelev Mokher Seforim, is similarly portrayed. The undertone of sadness and frustration underlining many Jewish jokes is probably rooted in the ceaseless struggle for survival in an anti-Jewish society; the laughter is thus often through tears. While the jokes and anecdotes carry a note of satirical (sometimes even biting) self-criticism, they are a means of consolation as well, either through minimizing troubles and hoping for a happy end ("a Jew will find his way out"; "the troubles of many are half a consolation"), or by relating stories about rich, successful, and influential Jews - the Rothschilds, Baron Hirsch, Jewish dignitaries, with whom the poor Jewish listeners identify.

In spite of the negative attitude of normative rabbinic Judaism toward communal secular singing by both sexes, stemming from the talmudic saying kol be-ishah ervah ("a woman's voice is a sexual incitement"), the secular folk song was part of the life of the individual, the family, and the society on many occasions. The lyrics are very diverse and cover all aspects of Jewish life: the biblical past, the Messianic future, the year cycle, the lifespan ("from the cradle to the grave"), problems of livelihood, work and frustration, social protest, national hope, love, separation, luck, and misfortune. Texts of the East European (Yiddish) folk song have been collected (An-Ski, Beregovski, Cahan, Ginzburg-Marek, Idelsohn, Prilutski, Rubin, Skuditski), popularized (Kipnis, Rubin), studied, and analyzed (Cahan, Idelsohn, Mlotek, Weinreich) more than any other Jewish folklore genre. Recent annotated collections (Cahan, ed. Weinreich; Pipe, ed. Noy), as well as attempts at scholarly synthesis (see in bibl. Cahan's Studies; Rubin's Voices; Mlotek), see the Yiddish folk song as a well-defined artistic folk genre, both in its melodic (cf. Idelsohn, Sekuletz) and in its poetical form and contents. The lyrics are emotional, tender, and introspective, even if some of them, especially children's rhymes, are at times coarse, satirical, and comic. The melody is, almost always, in a minor key infusing the most joyous and even frivolous words with a touch of tenderness and sadness. According to Y.L. Cahan, the oldest among the Yiddish folk songs, going probably back to the European Renaissance period, are love and dance songs. Older Hebrew influences, stemming mainly from the Song of Songs and from remnants of love songs as preserved in talmudic literature (cf. Ta'an. 4:8–15th of Av song; Ket. 17a – a song "Before the Bride in the West," Palestine) are also evident.

The establishment of musical research institutes by universities in Israel and the development of the study of liturgical poetry and music into scholarly disciplines, mainly in the training centers for cantors of the Jewish Theological Seminary, the Hebrew Union College, and the Israel Institute for Religious Music led to the study, analysis, and elaboration of many aspects of music and song in folk traditions. Data are collected and research is being continued in the field of East European Jewish musical folklore, stressing the role of folk musicians (klezmerim) and folk jesters (badḥanim). Other aspects emphasized are the social role of folk music, the interrelationship between sacred, liturgical, and ḥasidic music and religious folk songs (Geshuri, Vinaver), the music of the various Oriental-Jewish ethnic groups and the interrelationship of Jewish and non-Jewish folk music (Gerson-Kiwi; Idelsohn's Thesaurus; Tunisia-Lachman; Sephardi-Algazi; L. Levy). Many works on Jewish music and musicians (Avenary, Gradenwitz, Fater, Holde, Idelsohn, Rabinovitch, Werner) include studies on the lyrics of the folk song and on folk music. The influence of Jewish folk songs on Jewish and non-Jewish modern composers is still to be investigated. Jews are among the most important composers of American jazz and the Jewish folk heritage might have had a considerable effect on their compositions. Many Yiddish folk songs entered the main popular musical stream of the U.S. and are sung by leading performers and millions of people (Bei Mir Bist Du Schein, Joseph-Joseph, etc.): through their penetration into a foreign setting, they have become alienated from their Jewish tradition.

Only a few collections and studies deal with the non-Yiddish, Oriental-Jewish folk song. Comparatively great attention has been paid to the folk song of the Yemenite Jews (Idelsohn, Ratzhabi, Spector) and to the romance and the copla (Spanish ballad or popular song) as sung in Ladino-speaking Sephardi communities dispersed all over the world: Tetuan, Spanish Morocco (Alvar, Armistead-Silverman, Palacin); Salonika, Greece (Attias); Atlanta, Georgia, U.S. (MacCurdy-Stanley); etc. (cf. also Avenary, Ben-Jacob, Gerson-Kiwi, Molho, Pelayo, Shiloah). The study of the Judeo-Spanish romancero ("a collection of ballads or romances"; Katz), is a very young branch of Jewish ethnomusicology (cf. Ladino Literature). Modern Palestinian and Israel folk songs are currently alive in Jewish folklore. The Holocaust put a tragic end to the Yiddish folk song which has become a subject for social-historical (Dvorkin), linguistic (Hrushovski), and folkloristic (Mlotek, Noy) studies, but no longer exists as a living tradition. The assimilation and emigration of Oriental Jewish communities, uprooted from their places of birth and traditional folkways, led to a similar process with regard to the Oriental-Jewish folk song transmitted in Ladino, Aramaic (by Kurdistan Jews; cf., Rivlin), and Judeo-Arabic dialects.

The Palestinian folk song is characterized by two main traits: (1) the Hebrew lyrics; (2) the main theme, which is national. The central idea in the folk song focuses on the return of the Jewish people to their old-new homeland. The hope for the return is variously expressed and the trials and tribulations undergone are as diverse as the songs. Most of the songs were written by Palestinian authors and composers between the two world wars. Many others, dating back to the beginnings of the Jewish national revival and to the rise of the Zionist movement in 19th-century Russia, are strongly influenced by the songs of composers and bards like A. Goldfaden and E. Zúñer. Some of the themes are: the yearning for Zion, the virtues of physical labor, self-defense, and pioneering in order to rebuild the land into a national home for the wandering Jew. The Palestinian folk song celebrates the struggles of the young and ardent halutz in his homeland: defense and standing guard (haganah and Trumpeldor songs); road building ("Hakh Pattish"); and agricultural work (Sabba Panah Oref) and love songs (Sahaki Sahaki Al ha-Halomot) were imbued with idealistic pathos alluding to national duties and hopes. Many of the Palestinian folk songs served as accompaniment (with or without words) to the various folk dances. The main musical influences on Palestinian folk songs (and folk dances) have been hasidic-Slavic, Oriental-Sephardi, Palestinian-Arabic, and Jewish-Yemenite (Music in Erez Israel.).

Most of the Jewish proverb collections are compilations of single statements, aphorisms, and dicta, excerpted from the talmudic-midrashic and medieval literatures, or from specific post-biblical gnomic treatises, which have been transmitted in writing. The tannaitic Avot, for example, inspired many similar compilations. Only in recent decades have genuine collections of folk proverbs, committed to writing from the living oral tradition of the various Jewish communities, been published. The most comprehensive among them is I. Bernstein's collection of Yiddish proverbs, followed later by paroemiological collections and studies of Ayalti, Beem (Jewish-Dutch), Einhorn, Hurwitz, Kaplan (World War II death camps and ghettos), Landau, Mark, Rivkind, Stutshkov, and Yoffie. Other culture areas and ethnic groups represented in the various proverb collections and studies are: Judeo-Arabic (Yahuda); Judeo-Spanish (Besso, Kayserling, Luna, Saporta y Beja (Salonika) Uziel, Yahuda); Bukharan (Pinhasi); Neo-Aramaic from Iraqi Kurdistan (Rivlin, Segal); North African (Attal); Samaritan (Gaster); Yemenite (Goitein, Nahum, Ratzhabi, Shealtiel); Palestinian-Hebrew in kibbutzim and villages (Halter)."

The best Israeli folk singers are undoubtedly Chava Alberstein in Yiddish and Hebrew, Yehoram Gaon in Ladino and Hebrew, and Ofra Haza in oriental Jewish songs, mainly Yemenite, in Hebrew and also in Ladino. Chava Alberstein's Yiddish songs, we bring here about fifty songs, are very loved by the Israeli public, but also by the Jewish diaspora, and she had the greatest influence to endear Yiddish songs to the young generations. One of the most well-known Yiddish songs is Zog Nit Kayn' Mol, Never Say This Is The End, the Jewish partisan's song during World War II, sung by Chava Alberstein, but there are also lighter songs as Tumbalalaika.

We can compare these two songs to the Ladino songs: Arvoles yoran por luvias, sung by the Jews from Saloniki when they were deported to Auschwitz, here sung by Yehoram Gaon, and the much lighter song La vida do por el raki sung by Glykeria. And there are of course the most known Yiddish song My Yiddishe Mame, sung by Charles Aznavour in French, Neil Sedaka in English, and Dudu Fisher in Yiddish, and Adio Kerida in Ladino sung by Ofra Haza, the Israeli no. 1 folk singer, and by Enrico Macias and Yasmin Levy, two of the best Sephardic singers.

Ofra Haza was known worldwide as a folk singer, very successful in Europe and the Americas; during her singing career, she earned many platinum and gold discs. Her major international breakthrough came in the wake of the album Shirei Teiman (Yemenite songs), which she recorded in 1984. The album consisted of songs that Haza had heard in childhood, using arrangements that combined authentic Middle Eastern percussion with classical instruments. Further recognition came with the single "Im Nin'alu", taken from the album Shaday (1988), which won the New Music Award for Best International Album of the Year. Other well known songs are: B'cherem Teiman, Tzur Menati, Galbi, Shaday, Kaddish, Ya Be Ye, and others.

We cannot speak of Ladino culture and folk songs without mentioning three masterpieces, the first two – Sephardic Romancero (1968) and Bustan Sephardi/Spanish Garden (1970), two musicals based on Sephardic folklore and wrote by Yitzhak Navon. Bustan Sephardi is the most popular play in Israel, performed more than 2000 times. It is a musical based on a musical collage telling the story of the Sephardic neighborhood of Ohel Moshe in Jerusalem in the thirties of the 20th century. The musical includes the most famous Sephardic romances from Yitzhak Levi's anthology, as well as Sephardic prayers and humorous stories on Sephardic life. Navon was one of the best Israeli presidents and is perceived as the man who did most to revive the Ladino language. Navon is the Chairman of the Autoridad Nasionala del Ladino.

The third Ladino masterpiece is the documentary film by Yehoram Gaon "De Toledo a Yerushalayim" – From Toledo to Jerusalem, spoken in Ladino with English subtitles, in which he relates the history of the Sephardic Jews from Spain into the Diaspora until they returned to Jerusalem. The film includes most of the well known folk songs in Ladino, Arvoles, La vida do por el raki, Irme a Yerushalayim, Si la mar era de leche, etc. Gaon is indeed a Genius (Gaon in Hebrew), as he has done a tremendous job in bringing the Jewish Sephardic heritage to the consciousness of a whole generation in Israel and throughout the world and he has revived the Ladino folk songs which were almost forgotten and now are loved by every one.

7. HAITIAN, POETRY

The Creole languages were very easy to learn and the most fascinating poetry that I read was Open Gate in Haitian, which differs from the Guadeloupe Creole, but still is a simplified version of spoken French. One of the outstanding Haitian poets is Jozafa Wobe Laj/Josaphat Robert Large. His poem Tekes XXX/Text XXX makes you hold your breath, as it is so tense:

Se sa!	Go ahead
Chire liv mwen nan bibliyotek	Tear my books up in the library
Mete dife sou non mwen	Set my name on fire
Efase figi-m nan libreri	Blot out my face in the bookstore
Touye lonbraj mwen	Kill my shadow
Se sa!	Go ahead!
Kraze glas la ak tout potre-m ladan-l	Break the mirror with my image still in it
Se sa monkonpe!	Go ahead, brother!
Masakre memwa-m	Massacre the memory of me
Bonbade souvni-m	Bombard my memories
Se sa monkonpe!	Go ahead, brother!
Tonne met detwi syel la	Thunder can destroy the sky
Van met bwote vil Jeremy ale	The wind blow the city of Jeremie away
Lanme met anvayi late	The sea invade the land
We pa we	Come what may
Zev mwen ap rete la tennfas!	My writings will endure
Ke w-vle	Like it
Ke w-pa vle!	Or not!

Another great Haitian poet is Pol Larak/Paul Laraque, who wrote against the dictatorships in his country, from one of his poems Legzil se pen rasi – Exile is stale bread, I bring here the last verses, that he wrote for his wife Marcelle Laraque, his life companion for 48 years and his main inspiration in poetry. If I change exile by ostracising, I could have written this poem to my wife Ruthy who is my life companion for 46 years and is my main inspiration in all my works. Dear Ruthy, in a paraphrase to the immortal song by Carole King – You make me feel like a natural man – sung by Carole King, by Aretha Franklin, with lyrics. My struggle without Ruthy would be hell, she pulled me from the mounth of despair, in the cold she brings fire, as she is the light in the darkness: ou rache-m lan bouch dezespwa/lan fredri ou pote chale/ou se limye lan fenwa.

A moving poem by Joj Kastru/Georges Castera about poverty:

Lamize fe tout bagay blaze,	Poverty makes all things faded
Kwochi, fannen, dekenmen	crooked, cracked, emaciated
Degrennen, rabi, ebete, graj,	wated away, dingy, stupid, ground-down,
Doukdouk,	pocked;
Le fini	when it's finished
Nou boukante ri pou kriye,	we're exchanging laughter for weeping
Nou boukante lamize ak fre	we're swapping misery with brothers
Pou nou sa kenbe ti bren.	in order to clutch at blades of grass.
Lesamdi, se tout vil lakot	On Saturdays, the whole town on the coast
Ki pati jete ko yo lan lanme	gets off by throwing their bodies into the sea
Tankou moun ki an chale.	Like people in heat.
Isit, lavi boule!	Around here, life burns!

A famous poem is M'ap ekri youn powem - I'm writing a poem, written by Togiram – Emil Selesten-Meji – Emile Celestin-Megie, depicting the poverty and injustice in Haiti:

Pou gason ki too pov ki pa kab gen madanm – For the guy too poor to have a woman
 Pou fi ki san mari, san okenn lot soutyen, - For the woman without a husband without any other support

Pou timoun ki oflen, ki pa gen dlo ni pen, - For the orphan kids who don't have bread or water
 K'ape tann bon pwochen pou lonje yo lamèn, - And wait for a good neighbor to lend a hand
 M'ap ekri youn powem ki p'ap janmen fennen. – I'm writing a poem that will never wither.

For the people who are homeless who sleep in doorways, Under trees, in town squares, alongside rivers, on the beach, In clumps of bushes, on straw, in dust, in the mud, In the rain, in the wind, without any cover, I'm writing a poem that can never end.

For all the people they accuse and arrest without proof, Condemn without trial, lock up in cells, Innocents forced onto chain gangs, Honest people that big torturers are forever abusing, (Mounn onet gwo bouwo ap maltrete tout tan,) I'm writing a poem that can never end.

For the disabled and for those who are lame, For the mutes the blind the deaf and the diseased, For the armless, the legless, those without ears and noses, For all the infirm people helpless on earth, I'm writing a poem that can never end.

M'ap ekri youn powem pou tout mounn sila yo. – I'm writing a poem for all those people.
 L'ap led pou espwate, l'a led pou kriminel, - It'll be ugly for the exploiter, ugly for the criminal,
 Men, l'ape bel anpil pou tout mounn ki debyen- But so very beautiful for all people who are good
 L'ap lonng, l'ap telman longg, kan mwen va vlope li – It'll be long, so very long, even if I wrapped it
 Mil fwa, dimilyon fwa otou glob teres la, - A thousand times, ten millions time around the earth,
 Li p'ap anko kaba, pret pretann pou l'kaba!... – It won't be finished, won't even be ready to pretend to be done!...

And satire is also much present in Haitian's poetry like in this poem – Yo Di, They Say by Siz Bawon, Suze Baron:

Yo di san kretyen enrichi late – They say human blood enriches the soil
 Si sete vre si sete vre mezanmi – If it were so if it were so my friends
 Ala diri pitimi ak mayi ki ta genyen lan peyi d'Ayiti – Rice millet, corn would be plenty in Haiti

And perhaps the most salient of all the poems M'chouke – I'm rooted by Rene Filoktet, Rene Philoctete, asking the eternal question "why I live here", in spite of all the hardships and sorrows.
 M'pa janm mande-m poukisa m'ret isit? – Do I ever ask myself why I live here?
 Tankou m'pa mande-m poukisa m'respire, - Like do I ask why I breathe, M'domi, sa k'fe m'pale jan m'pale ya? - Or sleep, or speak the way I speak?
 Alepouvini, poukisa m'ret isit? - Come to think of it why do I stay here?

Se petet gen youn mon yo rele mon La Sel,
 Youn chemen yo rele Kat Chemen
 Ou byen paske pa gen anpil lekòl, - Or because schools are few,
 Paske gen youn dlo yo rele Latibonit,
 Youn zwazo yo rele Madan Sara,

Ou byen paske pa gen lopital ase, - or else because hospitals are lacking,
 Paske gen youn ri yo rele ri Mirak,
 Youn fle yo rele fle dize
 Ou byen paske gen anpil moun ki lan fenwa. Or maybe because so many people stay in darkness
 Tout jan ou vire-l, poukisa m'ret isit? - Any way you look at it, why do I stay?

Paske FMI depatya-n, digonnen-n, degrennen-n, pije-n, For IMF jerks-pokes-squeezes us dry?
 Paske youn gad touye youn etidyan Plas Kapwa La Mo, - Because a cop killed a student Paske peyi ya tounen youn yoyo, youn lamadel, - Because the country turned into a yo-yo,
 Youn ke yanm san kouto. – The heart of a yam without a knife.

Men m'rete Paske gen youn pye bwa m'renmen sou wout Grandans Because there is a tree I love
 Youn soley ki p'ap chare soley, - A sun which doesn't play at being the sun
 Paske gen youn fanm yo rele Emeline Michel, - Because of a woman by the name of E.Michel Youn ko tambou ki pa janm rete - A chorus of drums which never stops, Paske gen youn chef yo rele Desalin, - Because of a leader named Dessalines, Paske we pa we – Because right or wrong
 Gen youn pep ki vle louvri lavi - There's a people who want to open life up.

Pourquoi ici demeuré-je?

Jamais je ne me suis demandé pourquoi je continue de vivre ici comme je ne me suis jamais demandé pourquoi je respire pourquoi je dors pourquoi je parle comme je parle
 Au fait pourquoi suis-je encore ici?

Peut-être pour ce pic appelé Morne-la-Selle, peut-être pour le chemin dit des Quatres-Chemins, ou parce qu'il manque d'écoles, pour ce fleuve nommé Artibonite, la dame-oiselle appelée Sara,
 ou pour le manque d'hopitaux,
 peut-être pour cette rue appelée rue des Miracles, une fleur qui fleurit à dix heures, peut-être pour toutes ces âmes qui vivent dans le noir.

Parce que le FMI nous abuse-atrophie-démantèle-vilipende, parce qu'un policier a tué un étudiant place Capois-la-Mort, parce que mon pays s'est fait yoyo, toupie folle, coeur d'igname sans couteau.

Mais je reste Pour cet arbre que j'aime à l'entrée de la Grande Anse,
 Pour mon soleil brûlant qui rit des faux soleils,
 Pour une femme nommée Emeline Michel,
 Pour ces tambours qui ne cessent de battre,
 Parce qu'il y a un héros appelé Dessalines,
 Parce que inébranlable
 il y a ici un peuple qui veut s'ouvrir à la vie.

8. ARABIC, QURAN, NAGUIB MAHFOUZ, LEARNING MORE LANGUAGES

After learning all those languages, which had a common ground with the languages that I already knew, this was not enough, and I decided to jump into deep water and learn languages that I always wanted to learn but I didn't have the time to do it. I started with Arabic, a language that I should have known long ago. First of all, I was born in Egypt and lived there 9 years, I learned at the Lycee French school one hour of Arabic every day, I had graduated from high school with a grade of 9 in Arabic, at Insead a Syrian friend taught me Arabic, and yet I didn't know the language, which is very similar to Hebrew, the language that I know best. So, I learned spoken and literary Arabic, and after "graduating" in my teach yourself books, I started to read Naguib Mahfouz, the Egyptian Nobel Prize writer – Midaq Alley, but I am still in page 80, the book is excellent but I have a very difficult time in understanding the language. I read large segments of the Quran in English for my PhD dissertation on Business Ethics, as I wanted to prove that all the main religions have in common the same business ethics precepts. I wrote in my book on the Muslim business ethics precepts and introduced them to my curriculum, to the delight of my Arab students who were not aware of this part of the Quran. After learning again Arabic, I bought the Quran with an English translation and started to read it in Arabic. As I read in parallel many books I succeeded to read it until page 26, not so bad, taking into consideration the difficulty of the text. Here is the Fatihah/Opening, that is quoted in all the Muslim mosques, the text and a compilation of 13 different reciters in a clip of mosques and celestial photos.

- ١ بِسْمِ اللَّهِ الرَّحْمَنِ الرَّحِيمِ
1 In the name of God, the Gracious, the Merciful.
- ٢ الْحَمْدُ لِلَّهِ رَبِّ الْعَالَمِينَ
2 Praise be to God, Lord of the Worlds.
- ٣ الرَّحْمَنِ الرَّحِيمِ
3 The Most Gracious, the Most Merciful.
- ٤ مَلِكِ يَوْمِ الدِّينِ
4 Master of the Day of Judgment.
- ٥ إِيَّاكَ نَعْبُدُ وَإِيَّاكَ نَسْتَعِينُ
5 It is You we worship, and upon You we call for help.
- ٦ اهْدِنَا الصِّرَاطَ الْمُسْتَقِيمَ
6 Guide us to the straight path.
- ٧ صِرَاطَ الَّذِينَ أَنْعَمْتَ عَلَيْهِمْ غَيْرِ الْمَغْضُوبِ عَلَيْهِمْ وَلَا الضَّالِّينَ
7 The path of those You have blessed, not of those against whom there is anger, nor of those who are misguided

Surah 1

*Bismillaah ar-Rahman ar-Raheem
Al hamdu lillaahi rabbil 'alameen
Ar-Rahman ar-Raheem Maaliki yaumid Deen
Iyyaaka na'abudu wa iyyaaka nasta'een
Ihdinas siraatal mustaqeem
Siraatal ladheena an 'amta' alaihim
Ghairil maghduubi' alaihim waladaaleen
Aameen*

In the name of God, the infinitely Compassionate and Merciful.
 Praise be to God, Lord of all the worlds.
 The Compassionate, the Merciful. Ruler on the Day of Reckoning.
 You alone do we worship, and You alone do we ask for help.
 Guide us on the straight path,
 the path of those who have received your grace;
 not the path of those who have brought down wrath, nor of those who wander astray.
 Amen.

Translated by Kabir Helminski

And from the Quran we quote one of the best Arabic books which I am reading – Midaq Alley by my compatriot Naguib Mahfouz, who won the Nobel Prize of Literature in 1988. Mahfouz espoused Egyptian nationalism in many of his works, and expressed sympathies for the post-World-War era Wafd Party. He was also attracted to socialist and democratic ideals early on in his youth. The influence of socialist ideals is strongly reflected in his first two novels, Al-Khalili and New Cairo, and also in many of his latter works. Parallel to his sympathy for socialism and democracy was his antipathy towards Islamic extremism as expressed by the Muslim Brotherhood in Egypt. He strongly criticized radical Islam in his works and contrasted between the merits of socialism and the demerits of Islamic extremism in his first two novels. He perceived Islamism as critically delineated and rejected it as unsuitable for all times. In his memoirs, he purportedly stated that of all the forces active in Egyptian politics during his youth, he most despised the Muslim Brotherhood. Mahfouz did not shrink from controversy outside of his work. As a consequence of his outspoken support for Sadat's Camp David peace treaty with Israel in 1978, his books were banned in many Arab countries until after he won the Nobel Prize. Like many Egyptian writers and intellectuals, Mahfouz was on an Islamic fundamentalist "death list". He defended Salman Rushdie after Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini condemned Rushdie to death in 1989, but also criticized his The Satanic Verses as "insulting" to Islam. Mahfouz believed in freedom of expression and, although he did not personally agree with Rushdie's work, he did not believe that there should be a fatwa condemning him to death for it. In 1989, after Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini's fatwa calling for Salman Rushdie and his publishers to be killed, Mahfouz called Khomeini a terrorist. Shortly after Mahfouz joined 80 other intellectuals in declaring that "no blasphemy harms Islam and Muslims so much as the call for murdering a writer." From this Wikipedia survey on Mahfouz we can learn that those who tend to paint all Arabs as fundamentalists and anti-democratic overlook a large segment of the population. However, it is unthinkable that most of the Egyptian intelligentsia condemned him for supporting the peace process with Israel. Out of fear from the fundamentalists or out of super nationalism the majority is often silent and the extremists have their way and this maybe the worst enemy of Arab liberal society, and only a writer of the stature of Mahfouz can dare to express his opinions. This conduct despairs the peace camp in Israel, as they see that even if there is peace and all the territories are restituted Israel does not gain anything from the peace process, and even if the Egyptian or Jordanian governments intend to maintain a cold peace, still it is at the mercy of a fundamentalist coup that may ruin peace as it almost happened in Egypt.

We bring here the first page of the book in Arabic (from the book in my library) and in English:

تنطق شواهد كثيرة بأن زقاق المدق كان من تحف العهود الغابرة ، وأنه تألق يوما في تاريخ القاهرة المعزية كالكوكب الدرى . أى القاهرة أعنى ؟ .. الفاطمية ؟ .. المماليك ؟ السلاطين ؟ ، علم ذلك عند الله وعند علماء الآثار ، ولكنه على أية حال أثر ، وأثر نفيس . كيف لا وطريقه المبلط بصفائح الحجارة ينحدر مباشرة إلى الصنادقية ، تلك العطفة التاريخية ، وقهوته المعروفة بقهوة كرشة تزدان جدرانها بتهاويل الأرابيسك ، هذا إلى قدم باد ، وتهدم وتخلخل ، وروائح قوية من طب الزمان القديم الذى صار مع كرور الزمن عطارة اليوم والغد .. !

ومع أن هذا الزقاق يكاد يعيش فى شبه عزلة عما يحديق به من مسارب الدنيا ، إلا أنه على رغم ذلك يضحج بحياته الخاصة ، حياة تتصل فى أعماقها بجذور الحياة الشاملة ، وتحفظ — إلى ذلك — بقدر من أسرار العالم المنطوى .

* * *

آذنت الشمس بالمغيب ، والتف زقاق المدق فى غلالة سمراء من شفق الغروب ، زاد من سمرتها عمقا أنه منحصر بين جدران ثلاثة كالمصيدة له باب على الصنادقية ، ثم يصعد صعودا فى غير انتظام ، تحف بجانب منه دكان وقهوة وفرن ، وتحف بالجانب الآخر دكان ووكالة ، ثم ينتهى سريعا — كما انتهى مجده الغابر — بيتين متلاصقين ، يتكون كلاهما من طوابق ثلاثة .

سكنت حياة النهار ، وسرى ديب حياة المساء ، همسة هنا وهمهمة هناك : يارب يا معين . يارزاق يا كريم . حسن الختام يارب . كل شئ بأمره . مساء الخير يا جماعة .. تفضلوا جاء وقت السمر . اصح يا عم كامل وأغلق الدكان .

1. Many things combine to show that Midaq Alley is one of the gems of times gone by and that it once shone forth like a flashing star in the history of Cairo. Which Cairo do I mean? That of the Fatimids, the Mamlukes, or the Sultans? Only God and the archaeologists know the answer to that, but in any case, the alley is certainly an ancient relic and a precious one. How could it be otherwise with its stone-paved surface leading directly to the historic Sanadiqiya Street. And then there is its cafe known as Kirsha's. Its walls decorated with multicolored arabesques, now crumbling, give off strong odors from the medicines of olden times, smells which have now become the spices and folk cures of today and tomorrow . . .

Although Midaq Alley lives in almost complete isolation from all surrounding activity, it clamors with a distinctive and personal life of its own. Fundamentally and basically, its roots connect with life as a whole and yet, at the same time, it retains a number of the secrets of a world now past.

The sun began to set and Midaq Alley was veiled in the brown hues of the glow. The darkness was all the greater because it was enclosed like a trap between three walls. It rose unevenly from Sanadiqiya Street. One of its sides consisted of a shop, a cafe, and a bakery, the other of another shop and an office. It ends abruptly, just as its ancient glory did, with two adjoining houses, each of three stories.

The noises of daytime life had quieted now and those of the evening began to be heard, a whisper here and a whisper there: "Good evening, everyone." "Come on in; it's time for the evening get-together." "Wake up, Uncle Kamil, and close your shop!" "Change the water in the hookah, Sanker!" "Put out the oven, Jaada!" "This hashish hurts my chest." "If we've been suffering terrors of blackouts and air raids for five years it's only due to our own wickedness!"

Midaq Alley is the English Translation of Zuqāq al-Midaq by Naguib Mahfouz, released in English in 1966. The story is about Midaq Alley, a teeming back street in Cairo which is a microcosm of the world. Mahfouz plays on the cultural setting. The novel is introduced with description of the Arabic culture. It centers around the list of characters described below. The novel takes place in the 1940s and represents standing on the threshold of a modern era in Cairo and the rest of the nation as a whole. Each character is expressed like a caricature in which one quality or trait is over-emphasized. Mahfouz is not satirizing the individual character – he is satirizing the character type: Kirsha, a café owner who illegally sells and uses hashish and has a predilection for young boys. Mrs. Kirsha, infamous for her temper. Uncle Kamil, good-hearted, bachelor sweets-seller, famously bloated and sleepy. Abbas, a young, kindly barber who wants to get married. Salim Alwan, the wealthy businessman who is embittered after surviving a heart attack. Sheikh Darwish, the old poet and former English teacher, who left his former life to roam the streets. Radwan Hussainy, a landlord who beats his wife and failed his al-Azhar exams, yet is revered for his high degree of education and devotion to God. He has lost all of his children. Hussain Kirsha, son of the café owner who works for the British. He marries a woman of lower class and returns home with her and her brother. Saniya Afify, widowed landlady who desires to remarry. Umm Hamida, the neighborhood matchmaker and bath attendant; Hamida's foster mother. Hamida, a beautiful young woman who dreams of a better life and has a distinctly self-centered personality, but is easily persuaded by wealth or power.

But in order to speed up my understanding of Arabic, I tried lighter texts. So, I tried "Alamir Aszair" – the Little Prince in Arabic, and The Woman in Black in Arabic, and it was much easier. The Little Prince is the book that after the Bible was translated into almost every language. I read it of course in French when I was a kid, and since then I have read it in English, Hebrew, Alsatian, and many other languages. Actually, I started to read it, at least parts of it, in dozens of languages, there is a website in all those languages, and even a website with a few sentences in hundreds of languages – 230 to be exact, and I could understand at least 130 languages and dialects. I also tried to understand sentences of the Bible, or the book of Ruth, as well as prayers, and I have succeeded to understand 255+ languages and dialects. The easiest way for me to check if I understand a language or not is to read the United Nations' Declaration of Human Rights, there – out of the 444 languages including Ladino, I can understand more than 70 languages. I have to clarify what I mean by understanding – if I read a text in Bulgarian or Icelandic, I wouldn't understand much, but if I read it with a translation, I can follow the text.

9. RUSSIAN, ANNA KARENINA, CHILDREN SONG AND FOLK SONGS ADAPTED FROM RUSSIAN IN ENGLISH, FRENCH AND HEBREW, VISIT OF ST. PETERSBURG

After learning Arabic for the third or fourth time, I decided to learn Russian for the second time (the first one was in 1967), I graduated from the teach yourself "university" with all the discs and accessories, and I started immediately to read Tolstoy's Anna Karenina, but there I got stuck at page 52. The problem is that with the difficult languages – Arabic, Russian and Greek, I can read a page or two in an hour, even with a translation, because the alphabet is so different and the language is so far from the languages I already know. Still, I learned by heart Anna Karenina's first sentence and I boast with it to every Russian born Israeli that I meet, but unfortunately most of the young students don't know the sentence, not because of my awful accent but because they never read the book. Finally, I discovered that the old doorman at college knew the sentence!

English: "Happy families are all alike; every unhappy family is unhappy in its own way"

Russian: "Все счастливые семьи похожи друг на друга, каждая несчастливая семья несчастлива по-своему."

vse-schastlivie-semi-pahozhi-drug-na-druga-kazhdaya-neschastlivaya-semya-neschastliva-pa-svoemu-l-n-tolstoj

Anna Karenina (Russian: «Анна Каренина»; Russian pronunciation: [ˈanːə kəˈrʲenʲinə]) is a novel by the Russian writer Leo Tolstoy, published in book form in 1878. Widely regarded as a pinnacle in realist fiction, Tolstoy considered Anna Karenina his first true novel, when he came to consider War and Peace to be more than a novel. Fyodor Dostoyevsky declared it "flawless as a work of art." His opinion was shared by Vladimir Nabokov, who especially admired "the flawless magic of Tolstoy's style," and by William Faulkner, who described the novel as, "the best ever written." The novel continues to enjoy popularity, as demonstrated by a recent poll of 125 contemporary authors by J. Peder Zane, published in 2007 in "The Top Ten" in Time, which declared that Anna Karenina is the "greatest novel ever written."

Anna Karenina is the tragic story of a married aristocrat/socialite and her affair with the affluent Count Vronsky. The story starts when she arrives in the midst of a family broken up by her brother's unbridled womanizing—something that prefigures her own later situation, though she would experience less tolerance by others. A bachelor, Vronsky is eager to marry her if she would agree to leave her husband Karenin, a senior government official, but she is vulnerable to the pressures of Russian social norms, the moral laws of the Russian Orthodox Church, her own insecurities, and Karenin's indecision. Although Vronsky and Anna go to Italy, where they can be together, they have trouble making friends. Back in Russia, she is shunned, becoming further isolated and anxious, while Vronsky pursues his social life. Despite Vronsky's reassurances, she grows increasingly possessive and paranoid about his imagined infidelity, fearing loss of control.

A parallel story within the novel is that of Konstantin Levin, a wealthy country landowner who wants to marry Princess Kitty, sister to Dolly and sister-in-law to Anna's brother Oblonsky. Konstantin has to propose twice before Kitty accepts. The novel details Konstantin's difficulties managing his estate, his eventual marriage, and his personal issues, until the birth of his first child. The novel explores a diverse range of topics throughout its approximately thousand pages. Some of these topics include an evaluation of the feudal system that existed in Russia at the time—politics, not only in the Russian government but also at the level of the individual characters and families, religion, morality, gender and social class. In short, a masterpiece!

I read of course Anna Karenina in its English translation long before I studied Russian and got stuck at page 52. It was quite frustrating to read such a novel at a speed of one page an hour, even if it is in the original language, so I looked at the Russian reading only as an exercise of learning the language, and counted on that that I already knew the story from reading the novel and seeing many films based on the novel. Yet, I don't share the common axiom that Anna was a victim of society, the conduct of Vronsky was based on his love for Anna, and they are positive heroes. I don't reckon any extenuating circumstances for their conduct, which I blame totally, as I see Anna Karenina as a selfish carefree woman, who is willing to abandon her boy for her lover. A woman or a man has a duty to their children and they have to put their welfare on top of any other consideration. I fully concur with Karenin's behavior, as Anna knew what he is (a cold fish) and should have waited for true love if she was so romantic in order to marry. Vronsky's conduct is despicable and he is to blame from the start, he is bad, careless, conceited, ignorant.

What happens to Anna is justified – the social ostracism, her husband's decision to take away her boy from her custody, as this is the best for the boy, and I don't feel compassion for her when she commits suicide. I feel complete sympathy with Levin and with Kitty (after she falls in love with Levin, while I condemn her of course for her love to Vronsky). I felt very moved by their love and by the ordeal that Levin had to pursue until love prevailed. It goes without saying that I believe that all marriages have to be based on love and not on pecuniary considerations. I saw many affinities between Levin and Kitty and between our marriage, as les gens heureux n'ont pas d'histoire, happy families are all alike, vse-schastlivie-semi-pahozhi-drug-na-druga, etc. All the marriages that I know of that were based on pecuniary considerations have failed, they have divorced or have hell in their marriage. So, how come that I blame Anna to go after her heart and leave her boy? Because I believe that you have to be responsible for your choices, and if you have a boy you should devote yourself totally to him. What is Karenin's blame – does he hit her, does he conduct badly to his boy, is he a miser? On the contrary, he may be cold hearted, but he loves very much Anna in his way, and he loves very much his boy, they live in a very high standard of living, Anna can do whatever she likes (within social norms), he works very hard. He is a very positive citizen, quite opposite to the careless Vronsky and to the libertine Anna.

We bring here the text of the first page of the book in Russian and its translation inot English:

Все счастливые семьи похожи друг на друга, каждая несчастливая семья несчастлива по-своему.

Все смешалось в доме Облонских. Жена узнала, что муж был в связи с бывшею в их доме француженкою-гувернанткой, и объявила мужу, что не может жить с ним в одном доме. Положение это продолжалось уже третий день и мучительно чувствовалось и самими супругами, и всеми членами семьи, и домочадцами. Все члены семьи и домочадцы чувствовали, что нет смысла в их сожителстве и что на каждом постоялом дворе случайно сошедшиеся люди более связаны между собой, чем они, члены семьи и домочадцы Облонских. Жена не выходила из своих комнат, мужа третий день не было дома. Дети бегали по всему дому, как потерянные; англичанка поссорилась с экономкой и написала записку приятельнице, прося приискать ей новое место; повар ушел вчера со двора, во время самого обеда; черная кухарка и кучер просили расчета.

На третий день после ссоры князь Степан Аркадьич Облонский — Стива, как его звали в свете, — в обычный час, то есть в восемь часов утра, проснулся не в спальне жены, а в своем кабинете, на сафьянном диване. Он повернул свое полное, выхоленное тело на пружинах дивана, как бы желая опять заснуть надолго, с другой стороны крепко обнял подушку и прижался к ней щекой; но вдруг вскочил, сел на диван и открыл глаза.

Happy families are all alike; every unhappy family is unhappy in its own way.

Everything was in confusion in the Oblonskys' house. The wife had discovered that the husband was carrying on an intrigue with a French girl, who had been a governess in their family, and she had announced to her husband that she could not go on living in the same house with him. This position of affairs had now lasted three days, and not only the husband and wife themselves, but all the members of their family and household, were painfully conscious of it. Every person in the house felt that there was so sense in their living together, and that the stray people brought together by chance in any inn had more in common with one another than they, the members of the family and household of the Oblonskys. The wife did not leave her own room, the husband had not been at home for three days. The children ran wild all over the house; the English governess quarreled with the housekeeper, and wrote to a friend asking her to look out for a new situation for her; the man-cook had walked of the day before just at dinner-time; the kitchen-maid, and the coachman had given warning.

Three days after the quarrel, Prince Stepan Arkadyevitch Oblonsky--Stiva, as he was called in the fashionable world--woke up at his usual hour, that is, at eight o'clock in the morning, not in his wife's bedroom, but on the leather-covered sofa in his study. He turned over his stout, well-cared-for person on the springy sofa, as though he would sink into a long sleep again; he vigorously embraced the pillow on the other side and buried his face in it; but all at once he jumped up, sat up on the sofa, and opened his eyes. "Yes, yes, how was it now?" he thought, going over his dream. "Now, how was it? To be sure! Alabin was giving a dinner at Darmstadt; no, not Darmstadt, but something American. Yes, but then, Darmstadt was in America. Yes, Alabin was giving a dinner on glass tables, and the tables sang, Il mio tesoro--not Il mio tesoro though, but something better, and there were some sort of little decanters on the table, and they were women, too," he remembered.

So, I read the Anthology of Russian Stories and there I was more successful because the stories are shorter and I managed to read until page 91 – Pushkin's The Stationmaster and Gogol's The Nose. Yet, when I visited Russia for the first time in a cruise to St Petersburg in 2014, the city and the language looked so familiar that I thought I am at home. Well, there are more than a million Russian Israelis and the language is heard at every street corner in Israel. Furthermore, most of the earlier Israeli folk songs have Russian melodies with Hebrew lyrics, as the first settlers were Russians and they brought with them their culture and folklore. There are many Russian words in Hebrew and of course in its slang. As a matter of fact, every Jew who came from one of the 100 countries of the Diaspora brought with him something of his culture, his language and his mentality, from Iraq, Egypt, Yemen, Morocco, Iran, India, Ethiopia, Russia, Poland, Germany, France, England, US, Argentina, Brazil, Italy, Greece, Turkey, Hungary, Romania, Bulgaria, South Africa, Australia, Canada, etc. The hit parade of the Israeli radio when I was young had songs from England, US, Mexico, Brazil, Spain, France, Argentina, Italy, Greece, Portugal, most of the intellectual Jews spoke at least five languages, but nowadays I am very sorry that the young generation speaks only Hebrew and English. They don't read the classics anymore, of course not in their original language. They are excellent in High Tech, but have a very limited scope of interests. Where have all the cosmopolitans vanished? In Europe, I found in the young generation many intellectuals, who spoke fluently at least 3 languages, but not in other countries and not in Israel, sic transit gloria mundi... (sorry, is it Chinese?)

The Russian "teachers" in the Teach Yourself books were kind enough to teach the Russian learners also children songs, as the following "May there always be sunshine", Пусть Всегда Будет Солнце, (1962), which is one of the most beautiful children songs ever written.

May There Always Be Sunshine (Pust vseгда budet solntse)

Music: Arkadiy Ostrovskiy, Lyrics: Lev Oshanin / T.Botting

Bright blue the sky,
Sun up on high -
That was the little boy's picture.
He drew for you,
Wrote for you, too
Just to make clear what he drew.

Chorus (twice):
May there always be sunshine,
May there always be blue skies,
May there always be mommy,
May there always be me!

My little friend,
Listen, my friend,
Peace is the dream of the people.
Hearts old and young
Never have done
Singing the song you have sung.

Chorus

Soldier lad, stay!
Hear what we say -
War would make all of us losers.
Peace is our prize,
Millions of eyes
Anxiously gaze at the skies.

Chorus

Down with all war!
We want no more.
People stand up for you children.
Sing everyone -
Peace must be won,
Dark clouds must not hide the sun.

Chorus

Солнечный круг,
Небо вокруг –
Это рисунок мальчишки.
Нарисовал он на листке
И подписал в уголке:

Припев:
Пусть всегда будет солнце!
Пусть всегда будет небо!
Пусть всегда будет мама!
Пусть всегда буду я!

Милый мой друг,
Добрый мой друг,
Людям так хочется мира.
И в тридцать пять сердце опять
Не устаёт повторять:

Припев.

Тише солдат,
Слышишь, солдат!
Люди пугаются взрывов.
Тысячи глаз в небо глядят,
Губы упрямо твердят:

Припев.

Против беды,
Против войны
Встанем за наших мальчишек.
Солнце навек! Счастье навек! –
Так повелел человек.

Припев.

Many Russian songs were adapted from Russian to Hebrew, French or English. We bring here the famous song Those were the days, sung by Mary Hopkin with Lyrics in English and Russian. The song was adapted from Russian by Eugene Raskin. The original song in Russian was composed by Boris Fomin, with Lyrics by Konstantin Podrevskii, and was called: "Dorogoi dlinnoyu" ("Дорогой длинною", lit. "By the long road"). It deals with reminiscence upon youth and romantic idealism. The song was recorded in over 20 languages, including Japanese, Spanish, German, Italian, French, Hebrew... On Christmas 1975, the President of Equatorial Guinea, Francisco Macías Nguema, had 150 alleged coup plotters executed in the national stadium while Hopkin's cover of 'Those Were the Days' was played over the PA system.

Слова К.Подревского

Ехали на тройке с бубенцами,
А вдали мелькали огоньки...
Эх, когда бы мне теперь за вами,
Душу бы развеять от тоски!

Припев:

Дорогой длинною,
Погодой лунною,
Да с песней той,
Что вдаль летит звеня,
И с той старинною,
Да с семиструнною,
Что по ночам
Так мучила меня.

Да, выходит, пели мы задаром,
Понапрасну ночь за ночью жгли.
Если мы покончили со старым,
Так и ночи эти отошли!

Припев:

В даль родную новыми путями
Нам отныне ехать суждено!
Ехали на тройке с бубенцами,
Да теперь проехали давно!

Припев:

English text by Gene Raskin

Once upon a time there was a tavern,
Where we used to raise a glass or two.
Remember how we laughed away the hours,
And dreamed of all the great things we would do.

Refrain:

Those were the days my friend,
We'd thought they'd never end,
We'd sing and dance for-ever and a day,
We'd live the life we choose,
We'd fight and never lose,
For we were young and sure to have our way.
Lalala lah lala, lalala lah lala
Those were the days, oh yes, those were the days.

Then the busy years when rushing by us.
We lost our starry notions on the way.
If by chance I'd see you in the tavern,
We'd smile at one another and we'd say:

Refrain:

Just tonight I stood before the tavern,
Nothing seemed the way it used to be.
In the glass I saw a strange reflection,
Was that lonely person really me.

Refrain:

Through the door there came familiar laughter.
I saw your face and heard you call my name.
Oh, my friend, we're older but no wiser,
For in our hearts the dreams are still the same.

Refrain:

A famous adaptation from Russian to French was the popular French song Le Galerien – the Galley Slave, wrote in 1942 by the author Maurice Druon (who was wrote also the lyrics of the French Partisans song), while Leo Poll adapted the music of an old song of Russian prisoners. We bring here the unforgettable interpretation by Les Compagnons de la Chanson, and the original song in Russian. The song tells the confession of a galley slave who regrets that he didn't here the advices of his mother and he has become as his father a galley slave. The refrain starts with those words: J'ai pas tué, j'ai pas volé Mais j'ai pas cru ma mère – I have not killed, I have not robbed, but I didn't believe my mother. The leitmotiv in the Russian song is as follows:

Помню, помню, помню я (Pomniou, pomniou, pomniou ia) I remember, I remember, I remember
Как меня мать любила, (Kak menia mat lioubila) As my mother loved me, И не раз, и не два (I ne raz, i ne dva) And not only once, and not only twice
Она мне так говорила (Ona mne tak govorila) She spoke to me as this

Je m'souviens, ma mère m'aimait
Et je suis aux galères,
Je m'souviens ma mère disait
Mais je n'ai pas cru ma mère
Ne traîne pas dans les ruisseaux
T'bats pas comme un sauvage
T'amuses pas comme les oiseaux
Elle me disait d'être sage

J'ai pas tué, j'ai pas volé
J'aurais couru la chance
J'ai pas tué, j'ai pas volé
J'aurais qu'un jour soit dimanche
Je m'souviens ma mère pleurerait
Dès que je passais la porte
Je m'souviens comme elle pleurerait
Elle voulait pas que je sorte

J'ai pas tué, j'ai pas volé
Mais j'ai pas cru ma mère
Et je m'souviens qu'elle m'aimait
Pendant que je rame aux galères.

Toujours, toujours elle disait
T'en vas pas chez les filles
Fais donc pas toujours ce qui t'plait
Dans les prisons y a des grilles
J'ai pas tué, j'ai pas volé
Mais j'ai cru Madeleine
J'ai pas tué, j'ai pas volé
J'aurais pas lui fait de peine

Un jour les soldats du roi
T'emmen'ront aux galères
Tu t'en iras trois par trois
Comme ils ont emmenés ton père
Tu auras la tête rasée
On te mettra des chaînes
T'en auras les reins brisés
Et moi j'en mourrai de peine

Finally, the Hebrew song Ruthy, like my wife's name, one of the loveliest Hebrew folk songs was an adaptation of the Russian folk song Вот мчится тройка почтовая. The Hebrew words were written by Haim Hefer and tell about the longing to a girl who waits for me in a distant shore. When I'll meet her I'll know what is the meaning of love, she will laugh and the wind will move her hair. Well, this describes exactly my longing to my girl Ruthy who waited for me at a distant shore of Naharya, she taught me what is love, with her laugh and unkempt hair. We bring here the song in Chinese, one more in Chinese, in Russian, one more in Russian, and one more, one more also, a Russian choir, another choir, with an orchestra, by a Romanian singer like my Ruthy who was born in Romania, a cartoon, in metal version, with balalaikas, and even more. With Russian subtitles, in a film 100 years old (1915), a karaoke version. In Hebrew - Nehama Hendel, Arik Lavie, Dudu Zakay, Arik Einstein – in memoriam, Lehakat Hel Hayam, etc.

לי כל גל נושא מזכרת
מן הבית, מן החוף,
מני עצים יפי-צמרת
וזהב שלכת בת-חלוף.

הנשאי, ספינה, ושוטי -
מה רבים הכסופים;
לי נצרה יש ושמה רותי,
המצפה באלה החופים.

תכול עיניך פשמים
מבטה בלהבה.
לו אה נשקתי השפתיים
אז ידעתי מה זאת אהבה

סער. הספינה חורקת.
תקפץ מגל אל גל.
אלי עם רעם היא צוחקת
ועם רוח לי תפרע תלתל.

По Волге-матушке зимой. Po Volge matushke zimoy. Along Mother Volga in the snow.
Ямщик, уныло напевая, Yamshik unylo napevayet, The coachman, forlornly singing, Качает буйной головой. Kachayet buynoy golovoy. Rocks his head wildly.

"О чём задумался, детина?- О chyom zadumalsya detina? "About what've you fallen to thinking, lad? – Седок приветливо спросил, - Sedok privetlivo sprosila, The passenger attentively asked. - Какая на сердце кручина, Kakaya na serdtse krushina, What's gotten a hold of your heart, Скажи, тебя кто огорчил?" Skazhi tebya kto ogorchil? Tell me, what's grieving you so?

"Ах, милый барин, добрый барин Ah milyi barin dobryi barin ""Akh, dear man, good man По мне лошадушки взгрустнутся, "My swift horses will grieve over me, Расставшись, борзые, со мной, On our parting. А мне уж больше не промчатся No longer will they dash По Волге-матушке зимой!" Along the Mother Volga in winter!"

I thought that I will feel myself estranged in my first visit to Russia in the Baltic Cruise. I heard such awful stories about crime, the Russian Mafia, but I liked the country and the people at first sight. Saint Petersburg is a beautiful city, the palaces are wonderful, the people friendly, and I felt himself at home, bearing in mind that more than a million Russians reside in Israel. In Saint Petersburg I wanted to visit at least for a few hours the Hermitage Museum. My friends who have already been in this cruise gave me the email of a local guide charging half of the price of the American Cruise Ship and adapting himself to your wishes, but I opted to go with the ship organized tour that charged a few hundred dollars for a one day tour to the city. They are experienced, safe, they will bring you back on time, they can't cheat you... But I forgot that probably the ship belonged to a corporation that had only one target: maximize profits according to Milton Friedman's neoliberal precepts, and the hell with ethics and the customers, charging the maximum and paying to the poor "Soviet" guide the minimum, squeezing an extra dollar wherever they can. The tour left the ship early in the morning and the guide took us, the tourists, first of all to visit the underground – you walk for miles and it costs pennies, the rationale – feel yourself as a local citizen. After that the guide took us to a souvenir shop, of his friends (?), where we stayed for an hour..., because it was too early to visit the other sites. Well, the poor guide who got a few rubles for his working day had to earn some extra money... Then, we visited a couple of churches, with rudimentary explanations by the guide in a broken English, and at noon we were brought to a public garden (it was cold and raining) where we were given a lunch box comprising of a sandwich, an apple and a bottle of water (the price of the tour for a couple was about $500)... Probably, there is no end to greed, but this time it was too much!

After that we went to visit the house where Rasputin was murdered (all the entrance fees amounted to a few dollars), and then we were taken once again to the souvenir shop, because one of the tourists wanted to buy some more souvenirs, at least that is what we were told. An hour before the scheduled return to the ship (we have to get back on time – Ordnung muss sein/there must be order, according to the Russian/German/Swiss saying), the poor tourists were taken to the Hermitage Museum au pas de course/at a run, leaving a few minutes to visit the wonderful impressionist exhibition which I loved so much. But this is not the catch! The catch was in what ensued. I decided that I will never cruise with this American company anymore and told this story to all my friends and the people that I met at the cruise. Yet, I wanted to leave them an opportunity to apologize and I complained to the CEO of the company, stating that I will never take another cruise with them. After a few days I received an answer from the special assistant of the CEO, stating very politely that they were sorry for the inconvenience and wanted to compensate me by giving me a voucher for upgrade at a ship restaurant (worth $10...) if and when I'll take another cruise with the company. To this we say in Italian – campa cavallo che l'erba cresce... wait horse until the grass will grow! And we conclude with the wisest of all, the neoliberal, friend/counsellor of Chilean dictator Pinochet - Milton Friedman, who said: "Well first of all, tell me: Is there some society you know that doesn't run on greed? You think Russia doesn't run on greed? You think China doesn't run on greed? What is greed? Of course, none of us are greedy, it's only the other fellow who's greedy. The world runs on individuals pursuing their separate interests." In this case we got a combined Russian/American excessive greed...

A Russian friend told me when we found a complaint box, called "tear box", in a former communist country of the Balkans, what an awful history those boxes had in the Stalinist Soviet Union, where at one time there were a hundred millions complaints, almost everyone complaining on the others, mostly anonymously, that they were against the regime, that they spoke against Stalin, that they were Zionists wanting to emigrate to Israel, (my forefathers in Spain and Portugal suffered probably from similar informers to the Inquisition), and every complaint was scrutinized, and were the basis for sending people to Siberia, sometimes also because they dared to complain overtly like Solzhenitsyn... Nowadays, when you complain in a neoliberal regime like the US, you are not sent to Siberia like in the USSR, but just sent to hell...

10. GREEK, ZORBA THE GREEK, THE ODYSSEY, POLYGLOT GREETINGS

I learned also Ukrainian and Polish, and tried to read texts in Czech, Slovak, Croatian, etc. with little success, but I could understand part of the texts, at least with the translations. One of the last languages that I learned, also for the second or third time was Greek. I have a lot in common with Greece, I like the country, the people, the mentality, my grandfather was Greek, born in Larissa, and my mother spoke fluently Greek and was a Greek citizen although born in Cairo. My most favorite book is the Odyssey, and my novel is based on Homer's classic. I like Greek tragedies and comedies very much and I even studied Aristophanes at the university. So, after learning Greek, I attacked Zorba the Greek and there I got stuck at page 52 (curiously enough, like in Anna Karenina). I tried to read Zola's Nana and Merimee's Carmen in Greek, thinking that the translation from French will make it easier to read. I tried even to read Homer's Odyssey in ancient Greek and was very glad that at least I can follow the text with the translation. It doesn't matter if I understand much or not, what is important is the process of learning new languages, making gymnastics to the brain, postponing as far as possible a potential Alzheimer disease. And as a bonus, now and then, having the exhilarating experience of understanding immortal texts in Greek, Russian, Norwegian, German, Swedish, Danish, Portuguese, Italian, Latin or Spanish.

I visited several times Greece – beautiful Athens, the islands – Rodos, Corfu, Kos, Crete, etc., Salonika... When I visited with my wife Athens, I wrote to my Insead friend Georg Heine that we shall reside at the hotel, but Georg came to fetch us from the airport and insisted that we would be their guests for Christmas' week. We stayed in Plaka in his private house and he gave us the penthouse room, we ate together with his family the Christmas dinner, he took us to visit the Acropolis, the Agora and all the interesting sites of Athens, we went to see a play in Greek where his beautiful wife who was the best actress in Greece acted, he took us to the premiere of Dalaras where we sat in the front row as they were the guests of honor, we went to see Haris Alexiou, made a cruise in the islands next to Athens, and spent with Georg the perfect host one of the best vacations ever, but alas he unfortunately died a few years later. We also visited Cyprus, where we felt at home, like in Greece and Israel. We took a tour to Nicosia and went along the wall that divides the city in two with the Turkish state, reminding me of the wall that divided Jerusalem when I was a student and the wall that divided Berlin when I studied in West Berlin German at the Goethe Institute, making visits to East Berlin – the capital of East Germany, that was so sad and boring, with people so indifferent, in a sharp contrast to the people in West Berlin, and see the "same" people in East Berlin after they were liberated from communism. East Berlin became by far the liveliest place in Berlin and we stayed there in 2010. I don't know what is the best solution for the Palestinian conflict, but those who suggest dividing once again Jerusalem don't know what they say, and should live in a divided city before making such suggestions. Nevertheless, Jews and Arabs should feel at home in a united Jerusalem.

Out of the Odyssey, we can follow in English and Greek from Ulysses' journey to the underworld how he met the ghost of Theban Teiresias, who asks him why he had come to visit the dead:

Then came also the ghost of Theban Teiresias, with his golden sceptre in his hand. He knew me and said, 'Ulysses, noble son of Laertes, why, poor man, have you left the light of day and come down to visit the dead in this sad place? Stand back from the trench and withdraw your sword

Ἦλθε δ' ἐπὶ ψυχῇ Θηβαίου Τειρεσίαο, χρύσεον σκῆπτρον ἔχων, ἐμὲ δ' ἔγνω καὶ προσέειπε· [διογενὲς Λαερτιάδη, πολυμήχαν' Ὀδυσσεύ,] τίπτ' αὐτ', ὦ δύστηνε, λιπὼν φάος ἡελίοιο ἦλυθες, ὄφρα ἴδῃ νέκυας καὶ ἀτερπέα χῶρον; ἀλλ' ἀποχάζεο βόθρου, ἄπισχε δὲ that I may drink of the blood and answer your questions truly.'

So I drew back, and sheathed my sword, whereon when he had drank of the blood he began with his prophecy.

'You want to know,' said he, 'about your return home, but heaven will make this hard for you. I do not think that you will escape the eye of Neptune, who still nurses his bitter grudge against you for having blinded his son. Still, after much suffering you may get home if you can restrain yourself and your companions when your ship reaches the Thrinacian island, where you will find the sheep and cattle belonging to the sun, who sees and gives ear to everything. If you leave these flocks unharmed and think of nothing but of getting home, you may yet after much hardship reach Ithaca; but if you harm them, then I forewarn you of the destruction both of your ship and of your men. Even though you may yourself escape, you will return in bad plight after losing all your men in another man's ship, and you will find trouble in your house, which will be overrun by high-handed people, who are devouring your substance under the pretext of paying court and making presents to your wife.

I have a lot of fun in learning dozens of new languages, besides of course the cultural and anthropological challenge. I don't mind if I am not fluent in the grammar of the new languages, especially in Russian and Latin, and I am grateful if I can at least understand something with the assistance of a translation. So, I purchase dozens of books in the new languages with the translated books and read the original text with the translation. The last languages that I have learned are Polish and Ukrainian, and probably I'll not learn any more languages, as I can follow and understand partly the Slavic languages – Croatian, Serbian, Bosnian, Macedonian, Czech, Bulgarian, etc. – with a translation, and I really don't need more. Learning Hungarian or Finnish, Swahili or Japanese, is out of question, as they are too hard to learn, and I really don't see any urge in learning them, as with Russian or Greek that I learned in order to read Chekhov or

Homer in the original. I am aware that the Romansh literature is much less extensive than the Japanese, but it took me a few days to learn Romansh, while to learn Japanese it will take me years as it is so difficult and the only Japanese author that I have read so far is Haruki Murakami. So, easiness of learning is a factor, and that explains why I made so many attempts to learn Russian, Greek and Arabic, with only limited success. On anniversaries of friends I write once in a while greetings in 18, 21 or more languages, I write the greetings in Hebrew, English, or other languages, and insert words in many languages, sometimes they even rhyme in "IR" as follows:

It starts with Sechzig er und sechzig wir – he is 60 and we are 60 in German, then it continues in Hebrew with endings in different languages: in the first line it ends with lemahbir – plenty in Hebrew, followed in the second line with lehagdir – to define in Hebrew, in the third line it ends with crystal clear in English, then bir lan bir – perfect in Turkish, lehazkir – to remind in Hebrew, Oivey zmir – oh oh oh in Yiddish, c'est pour rire – it is just for kidding in French, para durmir – for going to sleep in Ladino, Nefsi kibir – a big nose, pompous in Arabic, subtsire – thin in Romanian, spier – muscle in Dutch, cucire – to knit in Italian, ir – go in Interlingua, shamir – corundum in Hebrew, Richard Gere..., tsair – young in Hebrew, ashir – rich in Hebrew, Voyna i mir – war and peace in Russian, recibir – to receive in Spanish, acudir – to assist in Portuguese, tu es ille vir – you are the man in Latin, sagrir – cold and wet in Hebrew, massir – exhilarating in Hebrew, ferir i morir – wound and death in Catalan, lashir – to sing in Hebrew, adir – huge in Hebrew, hayir – the town in Hebrew. Well, those who know Hebrew are invited to follow the link above, and those who don't are invited to write their greeting with same endings.

Ruthy also received birthday greetings and letters based on many languages, greetings based on Gracias a la vida in Spanish – a love poem of Violeta Parra – or A Yiddishe Mame in Yiddish, and transposed to our love, letters based on French and German novels, a love poem in Ladino published in Israel, even a satiric poem in Arabic. From one of the birthdays greetings to Ruthy I bring here the first strophe in Hebrew/Spanish/Italian/German and its translation into English:

ארבעים שנה היו בני ישראל במדבר/ואילו אנחנו חיים ביחד ארבעים שנה בנווה מדבר/בשנים קצרות אלה שחלפו
ביעף/הפכת ממאמי למאמא ולאומאמא – /היית מאמי עד אשר נולדו הילדים/מאז הפכת למאמא ובעשור האחרון/את
כבר אומאמא, סבתא לחמישה נכדים./ולא סתם הכל מתחיל במ' כי היא בגימטריה ארבעים.

40 years our ancestors lived in the desert/And we live together 40 years in an oasis./In those short years that passed in a hurry/you've become from a Mami (honey/Spanish) to a Mamma (mother/Italian) and to an Omama (grandmother/German)/You were a Mami until the children were born/Then you became a mother and in the last 10 years/You are a grandmother of 5 grandchildren/And it is not a coincidence that all 3 names start with M/מ/40 in numerology.

But, I have written such greetings also to a German friend Dietmar, with whom I studied at Insead in Fontainebleau in 1967/68 and since then we keep excellent contacts, visiting each other whenever I am in Germany or even meeting him and his lovely wife Carlita in Barcelona for a week. We speak on the phone, write emails or speak in our meetings in a pot-pourri of German, Spanish, French and English, and they also participated at the Seder in our home in Israel, and were moved by the Passover Seder which was conducted in Hebrew, Aramaic, Ladino and Yiddish with the parents of Ruthy and me, they even understood quite well the Ladino/Spanish and the Yiddish/German. We bring here a greeting at a celebration in Heidelberg, Germany, congratulating Dietmar on his sixtieth birthday, giving a speech in 18 languages, including proverbs in: English, German, French, Spanish, Catalan, Ladino, Italian, Greek, Latin, Hebrew, Arabic, Turkish, Yiddish, Romanian, Portuguese, Aramaic, Russian and Chinese, as follows:

Heidelberg, Saturday 12th of April 1997

Dear Dietmar,

Bei uns, in Israel, we wish to good friends to live - עד מאה ועשרים - bis hundert und zwanzig! But for you it would not be enough, as with your temperament, smikalka, and joie de vivre, you could live at least until 200!

The secret of your longevity is first of all - Carlita, la mujer de tu vida; then the combination of hard work and loyalty to one company - Metalgesellschaft with long vacations in lovely Spain, Israel und so weiter; and last but not least - the hundreds of friends from all over the world that love, respect you, and say: "Tomemos este hombre para guía", let you be our example!

We are friends now for thirty years, half of your life, as we met at Insead 30 years ago. Since then, you have visited us in Israel and participated at the Passover Seder, praying in Aramaic: הא לחמא עניא, while Carlita was singing in Ladino: Los Bilbilicos Cantan. We had wonderful vacations in Catalonia, and even met several times in Frankfurt on business trips.

Through all these facets of friendship, you have remained the same old buddy, young in his heart, witty, with a wonderful sense of humor, but most of all - א גיטע נשומע, which means in Yiddish: a dear soul, that is always ready to help everybody cu dragoste, in heart and soul!

Dietmar, fratello mio, your name may be Fuchs or Fox, but in reality you are as sweet as a lamb. Just beware from transcending in this harsh world from a Twentieth Century Fox to a Twenty First Century Agnus Dei... Bismilla El Rahim this will not happen, as the Lord, our Good Shepherd, is guarding us all, when we pray to him Kyrie Eleison!

Don't misunderstand me, I am not turning into a priest, I am just rehearsing for the inauguration of our Christian Heritage project in Nazareth, and I hereby invite you and Carlita as our guests of honor.

But I hear rabbi Confucius whispering into my ears: "Hu Shuo Pa Tao", in other words, that I am talking nonsense in eight directions and eighteen languages. So I will just say: Dogum gunun kutlu olsun - happy birthday, in my fathertongue.

I hope that la celebracio del centenari del naixement del amic de tots - your hundredth birthday's festivities, Dietmar - the friend of all of us, in case you don't understand Catalan, will be even merrier than this one and we will all gather once again, in excellent health and high spirits, have good laughs and hope for even lovelier events in the next century!

From your best friends, at least in Asia, Ruthy and Jacques Cory

11. PROVENÇAL, AUTHORS FROM PROVENCE: PAGNOL, ZOLA, MISTRAL, SAYINGS

One of the easiest and most beautiful languages to learn is Provençal/Occitan, the language spoken in Provence, and in the southern part of France, Provençal (Occitan: Provençau or Prouvençau) is a variety of Occitan spoken by a minority of people in southern France, mostly in Provence. In the English-speaking world, "Provençal" is often used to refer to all dialects of Occitan, but more properly it refers to the dialect spoken in Provence. However there is an important controversy about whether Provençal is an Occitan dialect or a particular language. "Provençal" (with "Limousin") is also the customary name given to the older version of the langue d'oc used by the troubadours of medieval literature, while Old French or the langue d'oïl was limited to the northern areas of France. Occitan, also known as lenga d'òc French: langue d'oc) by its native speakers, is a Romance language. It is spoken in southern France, Italy's Occitan Valleys, Monaco, and Spain's Val d'Aran; collectively, these regions are sometimes referred to unofficially as Occitania. Occitan is also spoken in the linguistic enclave of Guardia Piemontese (Calabria, Italy). However, there are strong polemics about the unity of the language, as some think that Occitan is a macrolanguage. Others include Catalan in this family, as the distance between this language and other Occitan dialects (as the Gascon language) is similar to the distance among different Occitan dialects. In fact, it was considered as an Occitan dialect until the end of the 19th century. Native speakers of Provençal/Occitan are about half a million.

I visited Provence and South West France in 2014 (Avignon, Aix-en-Provence, Albi, Marseille, Nîmes, Carpentras, Orange, Roussillon, Cassis, Calanques, Isle-sur-la-Sorgue, Fontaine de Vaucluse, Pont du Gard, Les Baux, Arles, Camargue, Aigues Mortes, Saintes Maries de la Mer, Carcassonne, Toulouse, Montpellier, and previously Cannes, Nice, Monte Carlo, Monaco), after I have learned the language, read texts in this language, as Mireille/Mireio by Frederic Mistral, many novels, plays and poetry. Provençal is related to other languages spoken in the region – Occitan, Gascon, Limousin, Auvergnat, Nicard. Frederic Mistral (1830-1914) was a French writer and lexicographer of the Provençal language. He received in 1904 the Nobel Prize in Literature, "in recognition of the fresh originality and true inspiration of his poetic production, which faithfully reflects the natural scenery and native spirit of his people, and, in addition, his significant work as a Provençal philologist". Mistral is the most revered writer in modern Provençal/Occitan literature. I have read his delightfull masterpiece Mireio with the French translation Mireille, and I bring here the opening verses and translation, and in Mireio on Wikipedia – you can click in order to read the full text in Occitan and in English.

*Cante uno chato de Prouvènço,

I sing the love of a Provençal maid;
How through the wheat-fields of La Crau she strayed,
Following the fate that drew her to the sea.
Unknown beyond remote La Crau was she;
And I, who tell the rustic tale of her,
Would rather be Homer's humble follower.

*Emai soun front noun lusguèsse
Que de jouinesso, emai n'aguèsse
Ni diadèmo d'or ni mantèu de Damas,

Coume un rèino, e caressado
Pèr nosto lengo mespresado,
Car cantan que pèr vautre, o pastre e gènt di mas.*

What though youth's aureole was her only cro
And never gold she wore nor damask gown?
I'll build her up a throne out of my song,
And hail her queen in our despised tongue.
Mine be the simple speech that ye all know,
Shepherds and farmer-folk of lone La Crau.

Mistral's most important work Mirèio (Mireille) was published in 1859, after eight years of effort. Mirèio, a long poem in Provençal consisting of twelve songs, tells of the thwarted love of Vincent and Mireille, two young Provençal people of different social backgrounds. The name Mireille (Mirèio in Provence) is a doublet of the word meraviho which means wonder. Mistral used the occasion not only to promote his language but also to share the culture of an area, speaking about, among other things, Saintes-Maries-de-la-Mer, where according to legend the dragon, Tarasque, was driven out, and of the famous and ancient Venus of Arles. He prefaced the poem with a short notice about Provençal pronunciation. The poem tells how Mireille's parents wish her to marry a Provençal landowner, but she falls in love with a poor basket maker named Vincent, who loves her as well. After rejecting three rich suitors, a desperate Mireille, driven by the refusal of her parents to let her marry Vincent, runs off to Saintes-Maries-de-la-Mer to pray to the patrons of Provence to change her parents' minds. Having forgotten to bring a hat, she falls victim to the heat, dying in Vincent's arms under the gaze of her parents.

Mistral dedicated his book to Alphonse de Lamartine as follows: To you, I dedicate Mireille: It is my heart and my soul; It is the flower of my years; It is bunch of grapes from La Crau, leaves and all, a peasant's offering Lamartine wrote enthusiastically: "I will tell you good news today! A great epic poet is born ... A true Homeric poet in our time; ... Yes, your epic poem is a masterpiece; ... the perfume of your book will not evaporate in a thousand years." Mirèio was translated into some fifteen European languages, including into French by Mistral himself. In 1863, Charles Gounod made it into an opera, Mireille, and we bring the full opera here. We bring also the film Malaterra in Provençal with French subtitles: part 1, part 2, part 3, part 4, part 5.

Provence is the country of the painters who were born or operated there – Paul Cezanne, Henri Matisse, Vincent Van Gogh. But it is best known throughout the world (besides its scenery and cuisine) because of the masterpieces of Emile Zola who lived in Aix-en-Provence from the age of 3 to 18, and wrote his masterpiece about a family from Provence - Les Rougon-Macquart, originating from Plassans, a town inspired by Aix-en-Provence. While most of the 20 books of this masterpiece (I have read all of them a couple of times and some of them several times) are not located in Provence, some of them are and most of the characters originate from Provence. In my courses and books I focus, inter alia, on Aristide Saccard, the protagonist of L'argent/Money, his true name is Aristide Rougon, born in Plassans. We follow his career as a speculator and unethical businessman, model of many speculators of today in banking and real estate, in five books: La fortune des Rougon, La curee, La joie de vivre, L'argent and Docteur Pascal. He never pays for his schemes and those who pay for them are the small minority shareholders. The books of Les Rougon-Macquart that are located in Provence are: La fortune des Rougon, La conquete de Plassans, La faute de l'abbe Mouret, and Le docteur Pascal. In those books especially, but also in the other books that happen elsewhere in France with the main protagonists originating from Provence, one can find the character of the people of Provence, with their good and bad habits, the scenery of Provence, and the history of Provence in the nineteenth century and prior to that.

The Fortune of the Rougons (French: La Fortune des Rougon), originally published in 1871, is the first novel in Émile Zola's monumental twenty-volume series Les Rougon-Macquart. The novel is partly an origin story, with a huge cast of characters swarming around - many of whom become the central figures of later novels in the series - and partly an account of the December 1851 coup d'état that created the French Second Empire under Napoleon III as experienced in a large provincial town in southern France. The title refers not only to the "fortune" chased by protagonists Pierre and Felicité Rougon, but also to the fortunes of the various disparate family members Zola introduces, whose lives are of central importance to later books in the series.

After a stirring opening on the eve of the coup d'état, involving an idealistic young village couple joining up with the republican militia in the middle of the night, Zola then spends the next few chapters going back in time to pre-Revolutionary Provence, and proceeds to lay the foundations for the entire Rougon-Macquart cycle, committing himself to what would become the next twenty-two years of his life's work. The fictional town of Plassans (loosely based on the real city of Aix-en-Provence, where Zola grew up) is established as the setting for the novel and described in intimate detail, and then we are introduced to the eccentric heroine Adelaide Fouque, later known as "Tante Dide", who becomes the common ancestor for both the Rougon and Macquart families. Her legitimate son from her short marriage to her late husband, a labourer named Rougon who worked on Dide's land, is forced to grow up alongside two illegitimate children — a boy and a girl — from Dide's later romance with the smuggler, poacher and alcoholic Macquart, while the ageing Dide slides further and further into a state of mental illness and borderline senile dementia. From this premise, the next nineteen novels all get their central protagonists and to a certain extent their themes. This is an unprecedented masterpiece! The narrative continues along double lines, following both "branches" of the family. We see Pierre Rougon (the legitimate son) in his attempts to disinherit his Macquart half-siblings, his marriage to Felicité Puech, the voraciously ambitious daughter of a local merchant, and their continued failure to establish the fortune, fame and renown they seek, despite their greed and relatively comfortable lifestyles. Approaching old age, the Rougon couple finally admit defeat and settle, crushed, into their lower middle class destinies, until by a remarkable stroke of luck their eldest son Eugène reports from Paris that he has some news that they might find interesting. Eugène has become one of the closest allies of the future Emperor Napoleon III and informs his parents that a coup is imminent. Having been effectively given insider information about which side to back in the coming revolution, the Rougons then make a series of seemingly bold moves to show their loyal and steadfast support for Napoleon III, winning the admiration of the most influential people in the town, mostly royalists who are themselves afraid of showing too much commitment for fear of backing the "wrong horse" and losing their standing and fortune.

The narrative then switches over to the Macquart side of the family, whose grim working-class struggles to survive are juxtaposed keenly with the Rougons' seemingly trivial quest for greater wealth and influence in genteel drawing-room society. Descended from a drunken ne'er-do-well and a madwoman, Zola effectively predestines the Macquarts to lives of toil and misery. Zola's theories of heredity, laid out in the original preface to this novel, were a cornerstone of his entire philosophy and a major reason for his embarking on the mammoth Rougon-Macquart project in the first place in order to illustrate them. Largely discredited nowadays, and wrongfully so, the theories are largely "present but unseen" in most of the novels in the Rougon-Macquart cycle, allowing those books to be enjoyed without the overshadowing effect of Zola's somewhat suspect scientific ideas. Due to the original story nature of La Fortune des Rougon, the theories are placed much more to the fore, and can appear somewhat heavy-handed as a result.

A third branch of the family, the Mourets, descended from Macquart and Dide's daughter, are then introduced before the novel's focus is brought back to the "present", the night of the coup, via a quite brilliantly told love story. The idealistic but naïve Silvère Mouret falls madly in love with the innocent Miette Chantegreil, and after a long courtship they decide to join up with the republicans to fight the coup. The rest of the novel then picks up from where the opening chapter left off, and from then on is basically a dual narrative telling the story of the old Rougon couple and their increasingly Machiavellian machinations to get themselves into a position of fortune and respect in Plassans, juxtaposed with Silvère and Miette's continuing love story and the doomed republican militia's disastrous attempt to take the town back. Eventually, the Rougons exploit their half-brother Antoine Macquart into inadvertently helping crush the republican threat, and they achieve their life's ambition, fortune and favour. For Silvère and Miette, who committed themselves so completely to a doomed cause, there can be no such happy ending and Zola wisely leaves their half of the story at a bleak dead end, remaining the objective author.

La Conquête de Plassans (1874) is the fourth novel in Émile Zola's twenty-volume series Les Rougon-Macquart. In many ways a sequel to the first novel in the cycle, La Fortune des Rougon (1871), this novel is again centred on the fictional Provençal town of Plassans and its plot revolves around a sinister cleric's attempt at political intrigue with disastrous consequences for some of the townsfolk. At the start of the novel, the home life of Francois Mouret and his wife and cousin Marthe (née Rougon) is portrayed as a generally pleasant and relaxed existence. Francois is slightly compulsive in his behaviour and Marthe clearly suffers from some sort of mental illness, which Zola intended to portray as a genetic consequence of the Rougon-Macquart family's tangled ancestry. Their three children include the eldest son Octave, an intelligent but feckless ladies' man (featured as the principal character of two later novels in the cycle, Pot-Bouille (1882) and Au Bonheur des Dames (1883), but here little more than a footnote), as well as the quiet and introverted younger son Serge and the mentally-handicapped daughter Desirée.

Their home lives are shattered by the arrival of a strange cleric, Abbé Faujas, and his mother, who rent a room in the Mourets' house. Slowly, it transpires that the mysterious stranger has arrived to try and win influence in the town for outside political forces (which never manifest themselves) through a series of Machiavellian intrigues, plots, slanders and insinuations; in the process of doing so, he proceeds to unravel the Mourets' lives to such an extent that the bewildered Francois is unwillingly and unnecessarily committed to a mental institution, while poor Marthe becomes obsessively religious, though whether her devotion is to God or Faujas becomes increasingly unclear. In Mouret's absence, and Marthe's indifference, Faujas unscrupulous sister Olympe and brother in law Trouche take over the Mouret's house, and live high at their expense. The reaction of the townsfolk to Faujas' outside influence is fascinatingly drawn by Zola, and the tactics of the groups who are in "resistance" to Abbé Faujas' clever machinations are very keenly observed. The narrative is kept up at a tremendous pace and builds to a quite astonishing climax of violence & horror as Zola ends the novel in an apocalyptic fury.

La Faute de l'Abbé Mouret (1875), Abbe Mouret's Transgression, is the fifth novel in Émile Zola's twenty-volume series Les Rougon-Macquart. Viciously anticlerical in tone, it follows on from the horrific events at the end of La Conquête de Plassans, focussing this time on a remote Provençal backwater village. The plot centres on the neurotic young priest Serge Mouret, first seen in La Conquête de Plassans, as he takes his orders and becomes the parish priest for the disinterested village of Artauds. The inbred villagers have no interest in religion and Serge is portrayed giving several wildly enthusiastic Masses to his completely empty, near-derelict church. Serge not only seems unperturbed by this state of affairs but actually appears to have positively sought it out especially, for it gives him time to contemplate religious affairs and to fully experience the fervour of his faith. Eventually he has a complete nervous breakdown and collapses into a near-comatose state, whereupon his distant relative, the unconventional doctor Pascal Rougon (the central character of the last novel in the series, 1893's Le Docteur Pascal), places him in the care of the inhabitants of a nearby derelict stately home, Le Paradou.

The novel then takes a complete new direction in terms of both tone and style, as Serge — suffering from amnesia and total long-term memory loss, with no idea who or where he is beyond his first name — is doted upon by Albine, the whimsical, innocent and entirely uneducated girl who has been left to grow up practically alone and wild in the vast, sprawling, overgrown grounds of Le Paradou. The two of them live a life of idyllic bliss with many Biblical parallels, and over the course of a number of months, they fall deeply in love with one another; however, at the moment they consummate their relationship, they are discovered by Serge's monstrous former monseigneur and his memory is instantly returned to him. Wracked with guilt at his unwitting sins, Serge is plunged into a deeper religious fervour than ever before, and poor Albine is left bewildered at the loss of her soulmate. As with many of Zola's earlier works, the novel then builds to a horrible climax. Unusually for Zola, the novel contains very few characters and locations, and the level of realist observation compared to outright fantasy is most uncharacteristic; however, the novel remains extraordinarily powerful and readable, and is considered one of Zola's most linguistically inventive and well-crafted works.

Doctor Pascal (orig. French Le Docteur Pascal) is the twentieth and final novel of the Rougon-Macquart series by Émile Zola, first published in June 1893 by Charpentier. Zola's plan for the Rougon-Macquart novels was to show how heredity and environment worked on the members of one family over the course of the Second Empire. He wraps up his heredity theories in this novel. Le docteur Pascal is furthermore essentially a story about science versus faith. The novel begins in 1872, after the fall of the Second Empire and the end of the reign of Emperor Napoleon III. The title character, Pascal Rougon (b. 1813), is the son of Pierre and Félicité Rougon, whose rise to power in the fictional town of Plassans is detailed in the first novel of the series La fortune des Rougon. Pascal, a physician in Plassans for 30 years, has spent his life cataloging and chronicling the lives of his family based on his theories of heredity. Pascal believes that everyone's physical and mental health and development can be classified based on the interplay between innateness (reproduction of characteristics based in difference) and heredity (reproduction based in similarity). Using his own family as a case study, Pascal classifies the 30 descendants of his grandmother Adelaïde Fouque (Tante Dide) based on this model.

Pascal has developed a serum he hopes will cure hereditary and nervous diseases (including consumption) and improve if not prolong life. His niece Clotilde sees Pascal's work as denying the omnipotence of God and as a prideful attempt to comprehend the unknowable. She encourages him to destroy his work, but he refuses. (Like other members of the family, Pascal is somewhat obsessive in the pursuit of his passion.) Pascal's explains his goal as a scientist as laying the groundwork for happiness and peace by seeking and uncovering the truth, which he believes lies in the science of heredity. After he shows her the Rougon-Macquart family tree and demonstrates his refusal to sugarcoat the family's acts, Clotilde begins to agree with him. Her love for him solidifies her faith in his theories and his lifelong work. Clotilde and Pascal eventually begin a romance, much to the chagrin of his mother Félicité. (She is less concerned about the incestuous nature of the relationship than by the fact that the two are living together out of wedlock.) Félicité wants to keep the family secrets buried at any cost, including several family skeletons living nearby: her alcoholic brother-in-law Antoine Macquart and her centenarian mother-in-law Tante Dide. When Clotilde's brother Maxime asks Clotilde to come to Paris, Félicité sees this as an opportunity to control Pascal and access his papers to destroy them. Pascal suffers a series of heart attacks, and Clotilde is not able to return from Paris before he dies. Félicité immediately burns all of Pascal's scholarly work and the documents she considers incriminating. The novel, and the entire 20-novel series, concludes with the birth of Pascal and Clotilde's son and the hope placed on him for the future of the family. I strongly recommend to read all the 20 books of Zola's Les Rougon-Macquart, which is the peak of world's literature.

Emile Zola is known throughout the world more as the writer of J'accuse – I accuse, the famous article that he wrote in the newspaper L'aurore, where he denounced the unjust persecution of Capitaine Alfred Dreyfus who was condemned unjustly for treason and sent to the Devil's Island in French Guyana, mainly because he was Jewish and it was easier to chose a Jew as a scapegoat while the French army did not want to sentence the real traitor Esterhazy. It is not a coincidence that Zola chose to defend Dreyfus and it has to do with his origins, coming from Provence, which was much more liberal than other parts of France, having an Italian father, and living a large part of his life in poverty, thus not feeling obliged to defend the establishment – political, military and religious. He suffered a lot because of his courageous move, he had to flee to London (Hugo also fled from France during the reign of Napoleon III) as he did not want to be arrested for libel, half of French population hated him and thought of him as a traitor (well, this half or most of it did not appreciate either his novels which were naturalists and offended their beliefs), and he was probably murdered in 1902. Zola died on 29 September 1902 of carbon monoxide poisoning caused by an improperly ventilated chimney. His funeral on 5 October was attended by thousands, according to The New York Times. Dreyfus initially had promised not to attend the funeral but was given permission by Mme Zola and attended.

His enemies were blamed for his death because of previous attempts on his life, but nothing could be proved at the time. Expressions of sympathy arrived from everywhere in France; for a week the vestibule of his house was crowded with notable writers, scientists, artists, and politicians who came to inscribe their names in the registers. On the other hand, Zola's enemies used the opportunity to celebrate in malicious glee. Writing in L'Intransigeant, Henri Rochefort claimed Zola had committed suicide, having discovered Dreyfus to be guilty. Nothing surprises me on the part of anti-Semitic writers and leaders, who are convinced that the Holocaust was a Jewish invention, that the Jews are to blame for all the evils of history, and that the world is divided in two: the Arians (true French, British, WASPs, or Germans), and the others - the sympathisers of the Jews, the Blacks, the Muslims, who are bought by Jewish/Arab money). In 1953, an investigation ("Zola a-t-il été assassiné?") published by the journalist Jean Borel in the newspaper Libération raises the idea that the death of Zola might be a murder rather than an accident. It is based on the revelation of the Norman pharmacist Pierre Hacquin who was told by the chimney sweeper Henri Buronfosse that the latter intentionally blocked the chimney of the apartment of Émile Zola in Paris ("Hacquin, je vais vous dire comment Zola est mort. [...] Zola a été asphyxié volontairement. C'est nous qui avons bouché la cheminée de son appartement.").

Zola was initially buried in the Cimetière de Montmartre in Paris, but on 4 June 1908, just five years and nine months after his death, his remains were relocated to the Panthéon, where he shares a crypt with Victor Hugo and Alexandre Dumas. I had a most pleasant surprise when I found in my visit to the Pantheon that the three authors I admire the most – Zola, Hugo, and Dumas share a same crypt. We can say on the three of them what Anatole France said at Zola's funeral: « Il fut un moment de la conscience humaine », actually the three of them were a moment of human conscience, but to this glorious status we have to add, as true cosmopolitans, such prominent personalities, who contributed most to humanity: Henrik Ibsen, George Bernard Shaw, Arthur Miller, Shakespeare, Cervantes, Moliere, Brecht, Sartre, Joshua Sobol, Dickens, Gandhi, Ben Gurion, Franklin D. Roosevelt, Winston Churchill, Tolstoy, Marcel Pagnol, Muhammad Yunus, Verdi, Beethoven, Lorca, Martin Luther King, Joseph Stiglitz, Naomi Klein.

I have written many chapters in my books about Zola's contribution to human conscience, to the oppressed, the underprivileged, describing what motivates the rich and mighty in their schemes against the minority shareholders, as if he was a modern writer with a brilliant knowledge of business and economics. I strongly support whistleblowers as essential to eradicate wrongdoings that otherwise would remain in the dark, like the crimes of Brecht's Mack the Knife, like the crimes of Zola's Aristide Saccard, like the crimes of Pagnol's Cesar. There will always be cases where it will be argued that it is impossible to divulge a case as it is a state secret or a professional secret whose disclosure could endanger the company or the state. The most renowned case of a disclosure of a crime by act of conscience is probably the case of Colonel Picquart. One needs to have extreme courage in order to denounce his superiors, and bring against him the French army, the government and the majority of Frenchmen. But Picquart, imperturbable, testifies at the trial of Zola, after the latter wrote his famous 'J'accuse', where he accused the French authorities of concealing the truth about the innocence of Captain Dreyfus: "Pendant plus d'une heure, il expose, d'une voix tranquille, comment il a decouvert la trahison d'Esterhazy, les manoeuvres dont il a ete la victime et sa tristesse d'etre ecarte de l'armee. Les revisionnistes lui font une ovation. Apres quoi il est confronte avec ses anciens subordonnes, qui, tous partisans de Henry, l'accablent." (Troyat, Zola, p.274) "For more than an hour, he exposes, in a quiet voice, how he has discovered the treason of Esterhazy, the maneuvers that he was victim of and his sadness to be dismissed from the army. The revisionists make him an ovation. After that he is confronted with his old subordinates, whom, all colleagues of Henry, scorn him."

But Zola does not glorify the poors or underprivileged and condemn always the rich and mighty, he shows cases where petit bourgeois, honest people rival with the crimes of the unscrupulous rich, as he shows cases that the rich contribute to the welfare of society and are honest and benevolent. When we mention the word personification, we incorporate all its meanings, even in the negative sense of minority shareholders, who sometimes while being simple and honest men act more rapaciously than the worse of the majority shareholders. The Internet in many cases reveals this rapacity, this vulgarity, this egoism, which puts a question mark on the essential dilemma of this book. Is it worthwhile to safeguard the rights of minority shareholders or stakeholders if on the average they are just as unethical as the executives and majority shareholders? Emile Zola describes in his book 'Le Ventre de Paris' - 'The Belly of Paris' the conduct of Lisa Quenu-Macquart who finds herself in an ethical dilemma that would make a good case study on ethics. Florent, her husband's brother, has fled from the Devil's Island where he was imprisoned because of subversive conduct toward the regime of Napoleon III. He has the right of his part of the inheritance and she decides to give it to him, by fundamental honesty. She wants to give him the money, but Florent insists that she keep it in her butcher shop. "Vous avez tort, dit-elle, comme pour conclure. J'ai fait ce que je devais faire. Maintenant, ce sera comme vous voudrez... Moi, voyez-vous, je n'aurais pas vecu en paix. Les mauvaises pensees me derangent trop." (Zola, Le Ventre de Paris, p. 106) "You are wrong, she said, as to conclude. I have done what I had to do. Now, it will be as you wish... You see, I would have never lived in peace. Malicious thoughts disturb me too much."

Lisa is the epitome of honesty; her conscience does not reproach her of anything; she does not owe a penny, is not part of any skullduggery; she buys and sells good meat, she does not charge more than her competition... The dishonest people are people like Saccard her cousin the financier, the hero of L'Argent, the speculators, those who despoil the poor people. She is a proud 'minority shareholder' who despises the 'majority shareholders', the mighty. "C'est bon pour nos cousins, les Saccard, ce que tu dis-la. Ils font semblant de ne pas meme savoir que je suis à Paris; mais je suis plus fiere qu'eux, je me moque pas mal de leurs millions. On dit que Saccard trafique dans les demolitions, qu'il vole tout le monde. Ca ne m'etonne pas, il partait pour ça. Il aime l'argent a se rouler dessus, pour le jeter ensuite par les fenêtrés, comme un imbécile... Qu'on mette en cause les hommes de sa trempe, qui réalisent des fortunes trop grosses, je le comprends. Moi, si tu veux le savoir, je n'estime pas Saccard... Mais nous, nous qui vivons tranquilles, qui mettront quinze ans a amasser une aisance, nous qui ne nous occupons pas de politique, dont tout le souci est d'élever notre fille et de mener à bien notre barque! allons donc, tu veux rire, nous sommes d'honnêtes gens!" (same, p. 238-9) "It is good for our cousins, the Saccard, what you say here. They pretend to ignore that I am in Paris; but I am prouder than them, I don't care about their millions. They say that Saccard speculates in real estate, that he steals from everybody. It doesn't surprise me; he started like that. He likes money to roll with it on the ground, in order to throw it afterwards from the windows, like a fool... I understand that people of his kind who earn exorbitant fortunes have questionable conduct. For myself, if you want to know it, I don't estimate Saccard... But we who live quietly, who will need fifteen years to achieve an easy life, we who are not preoccupied by politics, whose only concern is to raise our daughter and row our boat properly! Come on, you are kidding, we are honest people!"

And it is this honest woman, who ultimately finds the political discussions of Florent despicable, who cannot stand the smell of fish that Florent brings to the table as it prevents her from eating, she – who probably has the smell of pork from her butcher shop. She thinks that Florent eats too much but he doesn't enjoy it. He cannot even get fatter, the miserable, as he is eaten up by his malice. The honest lamb Florent has become a wolf in the imagination of Lisa, when she sees that she can profit from the inheritance. "Elle s'était approchée de la fenêtre. Elle vit Florent qui traversait la rue Rambuteau, pour se rendre à la poissonnerie. L'arrivage de la marée débordait, ce matin-là; les mannes avaient de grandes moires d'argent, les criées grondaient. Lisa suivit les épaules pointues de son beau-frère entrant dans les odeurs fortes des Halles, l'échine pliée, avec cette nausée de l'estomac qui lui montait aux tempes; et le regard dont elle l'accompagnait était celui d'une combattante, d'une femme résolue au triomphe." (same, p. 242-3) "She approached the window. She saw Florent cross Rambuteau Street and reach the fish shop. The tide overflowed this morning; the mannas glistened like silver, the fishmongers' auctions were at their peak. Lisa followed the pointed shoulders of her brother-in-law entering the Halles, his back curved, with a nausea of the stomach that reached his temples; and the look with which she accompanied him was a look of a warrior, a woman resolute to win." Is Zola misogynist? Lisa, Gervaise, Nana, Renee, Therese Raquin, Severine, Adelaide, are to say the least not so positive characters. Critics find Zola misogynist, who tries to prove "scientifically" the negative aspects of women, nervous, irritable, unfaithful, women who betray their husbands, prostitutes who take advantage of their lovers, committing crimes. But Denise, Catherine, Angelique, Clotilde, and many others are positive figures, although not in modern terms, as they are not enough feminists.

Florent was condemned because of his smell of fish, of his 'malice', but really because these excuses gave her the legitimacy to steal his part of the inheritance that she coveted without admitting it, as she was honest. Exactly like those who condemned Captain Dreyfus to exile to the same Devil's Island where Florent was imprisoned, because of his Jewish smell, his treason, his innocence. And Zola, who 20 years later condemns the honorable and honest men who have judged Dreyfus in 'J'accuse'; blames Lisa of her treachery and honest people of their covetousness, after the policemen take Florent to prison. "Les bandes de lard entrevues, les moities de cochon pendues contre les marbres, mettaient la des rondeurs de ventre, tout un triomphe du ventre, tandis que Lisa, immobile, avec sa carrure digne, donnait aux Halles le bonjour matinal, de ses grands yeux de forte mangeuse. Puis toutes deux se penchèrent. La belle Mme Lebigre et la belle Mme Quenu échangèrent un salut d'amitié. Et Claude, qui avait certainement oublié de dîner la veille, pris de colère à les voir si bien portantes, si comme il faut, avec leurs grosses gorges, serra sa ceinture, en grondant d'une voix fâchée: 'Quels gredins que les honnêtes gens!' " (same, p. 424) "The packs of bacon, the half porks hanged over the marble, put over there roundness of bellies, a whole triumph of bellies, while Lisa, motionless, with her imposing dignity, gave to the Halles the good morning, with her large eyes. Then both of them stooped over. The beautiful Mme. Lebigre and the beautiful Mme. Quenu said a friendly hello to each other. And Claude, who certainly has forgotten to dine yesterday, furious to see them so healthy, decent, with their large bosoms, gripped his belt, while growling in an angry voice: 'What scoundrels are the honest people!' " So, honesty is not everything, ultimately...

The most Provençal of all the French authors, although he wrote in French as Zola and not in Provençal, is Marcel Pagnol, one of the best authors of world literature, probably the most humane who excelled in his plays (Marius, Fanny, Cesar, Topaze – Acte 1, Acte 2, 3. Les marchands de gloire, Jazz, Judah, Jofroi...), his novels (Jean de Florette, Manon des sources, La gloire de mon père, Le château de ma mère, Le temps des secrets, Le temps des amours...), and his films (La femme du boulanger, Topaze, Marius, Fanny, Cesar, Manon des sources, Ugolin, La belle meunière, La fille du puisatier...). Pagnol was one of the first writers who dared to show Judah as a positive person and not as a traitor. He loved all his protagonists, even the evil ones, as he could not hate anybody. Pagnol was one of the playwrights who understood most human nature. I have read almost all his books, plays and screenplays – about 30, as I have also read about 30 novels by Emile Zola, the 20 of the Rougon-Macquart and novels wrote before and after. These are two examples of my method of reading, where if I like a playwright, a novelist or a poet, I read almost all his work in order to understand him the best. Thus, I have read almost all the works by Arthur Miller, Tennessee Williams, Jean Anouilh, Joshua Sobol, Eugene O'Neill, Henrik Ibsen, William Shakespeare, Honore de Balzac, Albert Cohen, Benjamin Tammuz, Shai Agnon, Jean-Paul Sartre, Henry James, Franz Kafka, Racine, Moliere, and most of their biographies. From Pagnol's works I taught and wrote about Topaze, Jean de Florette, Manon des sources. I write extensively about Zola in this book's Appendix (L'argent), and about Pagnol's humor in the chapter about Humor. We bring here a short essay about Pagnol's Jean de Florette, which happens in Provence, and can be seen on film in the masterpieces Jean de Florette and Manon, that were produced after Pagnol's death, but Pagnol has made also his version of the films, long before Berri's films in 1986, which give a more modern approach:

Jean de Florette (L'Eau des Collines of Marcel Pagnol) has come to settle at Bastides Blanches in Provence, in the property of his deceased mother, which was coveted by Cesar Soubeyran, the Papet - the Father or rather the Godfather, and his nephew, Ugolin. Cesar was the richest landowner in the region and the Bastidians feared them or had their interests to remain in good terms with them. The property had a spring, which was known by the Bastidians, and was blocked by the Soubeyran in order to discourage Jean de Florette from cultivating his land. Nobody told Jean about the existence of the spring, even those who learned that it was blocked by the Soubeyran, as Jean was an 'outsider', to whom nobody has to disclose anything as 'you don't mess with others' business'. The 'insider information' is therefore not disclosed to those who are not insiders, part of the majority, mighty, although Jean had the right to know because the spring was in his property. Cesar sends his nephew to befriend Jean in order to get information on his whereabouts, but he himself does not want to know him, as criminals prefer not to personify their victims, because 'nothing is personal'. The criminal remains anonymous.

Since the victim is also anonymous, Cesar can keep his objectivity, and he tells off Ugolin who knows Jean and has scruples over him. Cesar even manages to prevent Jean from befriendng the Bastidians, who lose the last scruples they could have toward Jean, whom they do not know. Pamphile, one of the only Bastidians who wants to tell Jean about the spring, is prevented from doing so by his wife Amelie, who gives him the 'classical' arguments to dissuade him: "La premiere fois qu'il est venu au village, il a essaye de tuer Cabridan a coups de boules... ne t'occupe pas des affaires des autres. Tu as besoin d'avoir des clients... C'est pas un bossu de Crespin qui te donnera du travail. Justement, dit-elle le Papet est venu. Il veut que tu lui refasses la mangeoire de son mulet." (Pagnol, Oeuvres Complètes III, Jean de Florette, p.822) "The first time that he came to the village, he tried to kill Cabridan with bowls... do not mess up with others' business. You need to have clients... It is not a hunchback from Crespin who will give you work. By the way, she said, the Papet has come. He wants you to mend the manger of his mule." Anything goes: calumny, as it is Jean himself who received the bowls on his hump; Omerta – don't speak and don't mess with other people's business; intimidation, your livelihood can be endangered; xenophobia – as Jean is from Crespin, he is not one of ours...; and finally corruption, as the Papet buys his silence by giving work to Pamphile. Well, solidarity is fine as long as it does not hinder the business interests, as we see throughout the two parts of the novel.

The story is well known, Jean dies while trying to dig another well, Cesar and Ugolin buy at a bargain price the property from the widow. After having 'rediscovered' the spring on the property, they cultivate carnations, which need a lot of water, and get even richer. When the widow's and Jean's daughter Manon learns later on that the Soubeyran and all the village knew that the spring existed and it was blocked, she decides to avenge herself by obstructing the spring that gives water to the whole village. In so doing, many villagers are ruined, and the property of the Soubeyran is also devastated. In a splendid confrontation with the Papet and the villagers, they learn from Manon that the Papet has concealed from them that Jean was the son of Florette, who was born in the village of the Bastides. I was inspired by this confrontation in my novel.

‘Oyayaie!’ dit Pamphile, consterne, ‘personne ici ne l’a jamais su!’

(Manon) ‘Le vieux voleur, là-bas, l’a toujours su, et Ugolin aussi le savait...’

(Le Papet) ‘Qu’est-ce que ça change?’

Pour eux ‘ça changeait tout’. Avoir abandonné à son triste sort un paysan amateur venu de Crespin, c’était en somme de bonne guerre, mais la victime, c’était le fils de Florette des Bastides; non pas un locataire ou un acheteur étranger, mais le propriétaire d’un bien de famille, acquis par un héritage maternel.” (Pagnol, Oeuvres Complètes III, Manon des Sources, p. 1028)

“(Manon) ‘Yes, it was Florette Camoins, who was born in the farm where her son has died!’

‘Oyayaie!’ said Pamphile, with consternation, ‘nobody here knew it!’

(Manon) ‘The old thief, over there, has known it all the time and Ugolin also knew it...’

(Le Papet) ‘How does it change anything?’

For them ‘it changed everything’. To have left to his sad fate an amateur farmer who came from Crespin, was ultimately a good fight, but the victim, was the son of Florette from the Bastides; not a tenant or a foreign buyer, but the owner of a family wealth, acquired by a maternal inheritance.” Toward the end of the second part of the book (Manon des Sources), Cesar learns that Jean was his son whom he had with Florette, who was not able to reveal it to him as he was posted far away in the army and her letter got lost. Cesar dies from the shock of knowing that he caused the death of his own son... It reminds us of Arthur Miller's end of the play All My Sons.

Marcel Pagnol depicts in the most salient way the comic and tragic facets of Provence, his characters are so vivid, so funny, so tragic. When I visited Provence for the first time in 2014 (not counting short stays in Marseille in 1953... and on the Riviera), I felt that I know the places, the people, all Pagnol's characters came to my mind. I have seen several times the plays and films of Pagnol and enjoy them every time more. Jean de Florette/Manon was in my main course and I saw it probably 40 times with my students (17 times at the Naval Academy...), and I was moved to tears every time that Jean (Depardieu) and Manon (Beart) suffered as victims of the inexorable infamous Ugolin (Auteuil) and Cesar (Montand), played so masterly by three of the best French actors, and by the beautiful Beart, who on the last scene unveils to the people of the town the schemes of Ugolin and Cesar, causing their (justified?) death after they have caused her father's death. We hear French in a Provencal accent, and my students who don't speak French were moved by the film, even that they read the translation. Once they even tried to "embarrass" me by asking how come that I call Manon – Mano (in French you don't pronounce the last n), and Ugolin calls her Manon (pronouncing the final n)? I answered them that in Provencal you pronounce the final n, as in Spanish (Provence is very close to Spain) Jamon as opposed to Jambon. Although the players didn't speak Provencal their French was with a Provencal accent.

As we want to sense the sound of Provencal, read and hear the language, not only in high Provencal like in Mistral Mireio or popular French as in Pagnol's plays, novels, and films, we bring here a series of old and wise proverbs in Provencal with their English translation:

- Beat qu dou ben d'autruc fa son aprenissagi.
 - Translation: It is easiest to learn from another man's damage.
 - English equivalent: Wise men learn by other men's mistakes, fools by their own.
- Fa boòn pescar en aiga trobla.
 - Translation: It is good fishing in streamy water.
 - English equivalent: It is good fishing in troubled waters.
 - Meaning: In taking advantage of chaotic conditions one can easily serve one's own purposes.
- Fa de necessitat vertu.
 - English equivalent: Make a virtue out of necessity.
 - Meaning: Acquiesce in doing something unpleasant with a show of grace because one must do it in any case.
- Fau copa lou clos pèr avé l'amelo.
 - English equivalent: He that would eat the kernel must crack the nut.
 - Meaning: "Nothing is achieved without effort."
- Lou barbié piétadous fâi la vèrmènoûzo.
 - English equivalent: Mild physician – putrid wounds.
 - Meaning: Telling harsh truths constructively (to yourself as well) and stern measures makes for a good figurative and literal cure.
- L'aiglo non casso i mousco.
 - English equivalent: Eagles don't catch flies.
 - Meaning: "People of high rank are considered – or consider themselves – too important to deal with trivial things or lowly folk."
- L'us dau paire, l'efant l'aprend.
 - Translation: Such father, such son.
 - English equivalent: Like father, like son.
- Lo gòs peis manja lo pichon.
 - Translation: Big fish eat little fish.
 - English equivalent: Men are like fish; the great ones devour the small.

- Meaning: "Small organizations or insignificant people tend to be swallowed up or destroyed by those that are greater and more powerful."

That applies especially to Jean de Florette/Manon, and you can imagine Ugolin & Cesar telling it

- Mesura doás fes e copas qu'una.
 - English equivalent: Measure thrice, cut once.
 - Meaning: One should always act only after due consideration. A hasty action may involve an improper consideration of important aspects.
- Mirgo que n'a qu'un trpu est bientôt prise.
 - English equivalent: It is a poor mouse that has only one hole.
 - Meaning: It is dangerous to always depend on just one thing, because if it fails you, you will not have any alternatives.
- N'es pas tant pichon lou bouisson, qu'uno fes dou jourt non fasse ombro.
 - English equivalent: A bad bush is better than no shelter; Every hair casts its shadow; There is no little enemy.
- Parol de vendre la peau davant qu'avec la bestia.
 - English equivalent: Don't sell the skin till you have caught the bear.
- Pèr prene un toun, asardo uno meleto.
 - Translation: Who wants to win a gander, you need to weigh Drake.
 - English equivalent: Set a herring to catch a whale.
- Podètz pas servir dos mèstres.
 - Translation: Nobody can serve two masters.
 - English equivalent: Also, Nobody can serve two masters.
 - Meaning: One cannot serve two conflicting causes simultaneously. If this is attempted neither will be served properly.
- Urós quau es artisan de sa fortuna.
 - Translation: Every man is the master of his own fortune.
 - English equivalent: Also, Every man is the smith of his own fortune.
 - Meaning: In shaping one's own fortune one should not rely on the help of others, as they are also concerned mainly about their own matters.
- Vaut may istar soulet que mau accompagnat.
 - Translation: It is better to be alone than to be in bad company.
 - English equivalent: Better be alone than in bad company.
- Vieillos amours et vieil tizon, promptament ralumas sont.
 - English equivalent: Of soup and love the first is the best.
- Quand lei cats i son pas, lei garris dançan.
 - Translation: When the cat is away, the mice dance on the floor.
 - English equivalent: If the cat is away, the mice play.
 - Meaning: "In the absence of the person in authority those under his control will often neglect the duties/rules imposed on them."

12. PROPOSAL - LEARNING FIVE LANGUAGES AT SCHOOL – MOTHER TONGUE, ENGLISH, SPANISH, FRENCH, ONE OF NINE ADDITIONAL LANGUAGES, WITH LINKS TO POPULAR SONGS, DANCE, AND MUSIC IN THOSE 12 LANGUAGES. MULTINATION POLYGLOT? COUNTRIES. LISTS OF COUNTRIES WHERE ENGLISH, FRENCH, SPANISH, RUSSIAN, PORTUGUESE, ARABIC... HAVE OFFICIAL STATUS

What languages do we have to learn at school, even if we live in the US or England and our mother tongue is English? I believe that an intellectual man has to know well at least 5 languages: his mother tongue, English, Spanish, French, and one of the languages: Mandarin, Hindi, Arabic, Portuguese, Russian, German, Italian, Swahili, and Japanese. If his mother tongue is English or one of those languages he should learn another of those languages. Many countries have already in their curriculum 3-4 languages as Switzerland, Belgium, Singapore, Israel, etc. And we don't speak of the times where at the Lycee in Cairo you had to learn at least 6 languages – French, English, Arabic, Greek, Latin, and one more language: Hebrew (for the Jews), Italian..

I learned some of the languages also by learning their songs, and I enjoy not only reading the literature, mostly novels, of the countries – English, American, French, Italian, German, Russian, Arabic, Portuguese, Brazilian, Spanish, Latin American, but also plays and poetry in those languages, music and songs, learning about their art, philosophy, ethics, religion, history, geography, traveling to those countries, meeting people, doing business with them. In this book, we'll refer to all those parameters, beyond learning the languages, and in this chapter we chose links (direct and indirect) to hundreds of songs from those countries, that I like most of them, from Yves Montand to Joan Baez, from Domenico Modugno to Raj Kapoor, from Schubert to Verdi, from Anything Goes to My Fair Lady, from Argentinian to Arabic film songs, from children songs to folk songs, from patriotic songs to icon pop songs, from Brazilian to African songs, from Russian to Chinese, from mariachis to yodeling. In order to remain politically correct, we bring herebelow in Arabic – the classic song Enta Omri – you are my life, sung by the greatest Arab singer Umm Kulthum during 1 hour and 18 minutes, exactly the same duration of the masterpiece Topaze by Marcel Pagnol, 1933, 78 minutes, Director Harry d'Abbadie d'Arrast, with John Barrymore, Myrna Loy. Umm Kulthum called for the annihilation of Israel, and as a counterpart - a song in an Arab film by another well-known Arab singer – Leila Mourad – who was born Jewish, converted to Islam, and was a personal friend of my aunt.

Herebelow, we give the rationale for choosing the languages that should be learned – 5 out of 12.

Why English is obvious – it has become the international language of the world, the first global lingua franca, it has an important cultural heritage, and it is the mother tongue of many G20 countries as the US, UK, Australia, South Africa, Canada..., it is widely spoken in India, African countries, Singapore..., altogether it is spoken by 1.2 billion people. English is the world's most widely used language in newspaper publishing, book publishing, international telecommunications, scientific publishing, international trade, mass entertainment, and diplomacy. English has replaced German as the dominant language of scientific research.

Why Spanish is also obvious – it is spoken by 460 million people, and the mother tongue in Spain, Latin America, etc., and is spoken or can be understood in many other countries such as Brazil, Portugal, Italy, Philippines... It has an important cultural heritage, and is very important in business. Spanish is the primary language of 20 countries worldwide, making it the second most widely spoken language in terms of native speakers, and the third most spoken language by total number of speakers, after Mandarin and English. Spanish is the third most commonly used language on the Internet, after English and Mandarin. Spanish is also very easy to learn, and if you master the language you can understand quite well also Portuguese, Italian and even French.

Why French is less obvious, unless you are French, of course. A century ago it was an international language of commerce, literature, scientific standards, and the diplomatic language. Today it is spoken by 274 million people, and the mother tongue in France, Belgium, Switzerland, Canada, African former colonies, etc., it is spoken or can be understood in many other countries. French is the official language in 45 countries and dependencies. It has an important cultural heritage and is very important in Business. French is the second-most widespread language worldwide after English. French is the third-most widely understood language in the EU. French is one of the top three most useful languages for business, after English and Chinese. So, taking all those considerations in mind those three languages, English, Spanish and French, should be learned at school, receiving as a bonus fluency in their cultural heritage. They are also official languages of the UN, with Arabic, Russian and Mandarin.

Russian is spoken by 260 million people, the mother tongue in Russia, and is understood in all the Slavic countries – Belarus, Poland, Ukraine, Czech Republic, Croatia, Bulgaria, etc., and in many former Soviet Union countries as Kazakhstan and Kirghizstan. It has an important cultural heritage, but is needed for business only in Russia and some of the Slavic countries. The international business language in most of the Slavic countries is now English, especially in Poland, Czech Republic, Slovakia, the former countries of Yugoslavia, etc. Mandarin is the language spoken by the largest number of people in the world - 1.35 billion people. Almost all of them are in one country – China, and a small number of them are in Taiwan, Singapore and Chinese people in Malaysia, Indonesia, etc. In all those countries, except China, the business language is English. The native speakers in China, Arab countries, India, Kenya, Portugal, Japan, etc. are of course aware of the very important cultural heritage of those countries, that is not however widely known all over the world as the English, French or Spanish cultural heritage. Arabic is spoken by 390 million people – all Arab countries and many countries in Africa. The language is important for business only in those countries, and even in those countries English has become a very important business language. Many Arab countries are very rich with their oil reserves and Saudi Arabia is part of the G20, although in many Arab countries there is civil war.

Hindi is a very important language, spoken by 540 million people, however most of them are in India, and even there, other languages are widely spoken as Bengali (also in Bangladesh), Tamil, Panjabi, etc.. It goes without saying that English is widely spoken in India and it is a very important business language there. Urdu, which is mutually intelligible to Hindi but uses the Arabic script, is spoken by 376 million people, most of them Moslems in Pakistan and India. English is widely spoken in those countries and is an official language in both countries. Portuguese is a very important language with 336 million speakers, most of them as a mother tongue in Brazil, Portugal, Angola, Mozambique, etc. In those countries English is also a very important business language. Malay is an important language with 270 million speakers, but almost all of them are in two countries Malaysia and Indonesia, and some of the speakers are in Singapore and Brunei. In the Malay speaking countries, former British/Dutch colonies, English is a most important business language. Japanese is spoken by 123 million people, almost all of them in Japan, and a few in the Japanese diaspora. Swahili is widely spoken in Africa, spoken by 150 million people in Africa in Kenya, Tanzania, Uganda, Ruanda, Burundi, the Democratic Republic of the Congo, Comoros. It is used as a lingua franca in much of Southeast Africa.

German was and still is a very important language with 145 million speakers, 95 million in Germany, Austria and Switzerland, but tens of millions in other European countries that were part of the German and Austro-Hungarian Empires. In all those countries English is a very important business language. German is the second most commonly used scientific language and the third largest contributor to research and development. It is also a dominant language in business, culture, history, literature, philosophy and theology. Worldwide, Germany is ranked number 5 in terms of annual publication of new books. One tenth of all books (including e-books) in the world are published in German. German is also the third most used language used by websites. Italian is spoken by 64 million people, most of them in Italy and the others in the rather large Italian diaspora in the US, Australia and over Europe. In Italy also English is a very important business language, as in other European countries, such as the Netherlands, Belgium, Scandinavia, Baltic countries, Greece, etc. Italian is an important language in art, music, opera, design and fashion, and within the Catholic church Italian is known by a large part of the ecclesiastical hierarchy and is used in substitution for Latin in some official documents. Those who are interested in the cultural heritages of Germany or Italy would opt to study those languages, which otherwise are not as important or widely spoken, as Chinese, Japanese, or Arabic, although Germany & Italy are economic superpowers, being an important part of the EU.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES IN FORMER COLONIES AND IN MULTINATION COUNTRIES

On this topic of studying foreign languages, we should resort to the leader who has founded the free state of Singapore – Lee Kuan Yew. In his captivating biography "From Third World to First – The Singapore Story 1965-2000" he writes in page 181: "Bilingualism in English and Malay, Chinese or Tamil is a heavy load for our children. The three mother tongues are completely unrelated to English. But if we were monolingual in our mother tongues, we should not make a living. Becoming monolingual in English would have been a setback. We would have lost our cultural identity, that quiet confidence about ourselves and our place in the world. In any case, we could not have persuaded our people to give up their mother tongues. Hence, in spite of the criticism from many quarters that our people have mastered neither language, it is our best way forward. English as our working language has prevented conflicts arising between our different races and given us a competitive advantage because it is the international language of business and diplomacy, of science and technology. Without it, we would not have many of the world's multinationals and over 200 of the world's top banks in Singapore. Nor would our people have taken so readily to computers and the Internet." This applies to other countries also, small countries teach at school more languages than large countries, thus Scandinavian or Dutch students speak fluently several languages, but Americans or Chinese speak at best 2 languages.

Very few people know that Belgium has three official languages: French, Flemish and German, but more people know that Switzerland has four official languages: German, French, Italian and Romansch. Switzerland is often quoted as a success story for its handling of linguistic and cultural diversity. The problem is more complex if we bear in mind that proportion has changed over the years and that according to the 1990 Swiss Federal Census: German speaking citizens are 63.6% of the resident population, French – 19.2%, Italian – 7.6%, and Romansch – 0.6%. 9% of the resident population claims a non-national language as their main languages, which is a very high percentage in international comparison. These figures are taken from the essay "Language Policy in Multilingual Switzerland" by Francois Grin. The existence of fairly sharp linguistic boundaries separating corresponding language region means that, with the exception of a limited number of municipalities, there is no official bilingualism at the local level. Switzerland may be quadrilingual, but to most intents and purposes, each point of its territory can be viewed as unilingual. Correspondingly, living in Switzerland means living entirely in German, in French or in Italian. As long as Switzerland, Belgium or Canada have specific geographic language boundaries in which only one language is learned at a level of mother tongue, it would be impossible to teach thoroughly other languages as should be in a true multilingual country where all 3, 4 or 5 languages should be taught at the same level of fluency.

Furthermore, there is a growing tendency to study English as a second language, which complicates even more the language puzzle. In reality, kids start learning one foreign language in primary school, often along with English. They may learn a second later on. But the level of speaking skill is usually very low once people leave school. French Swiss make a point of not being able to speak German. They prefer English. The Swiss Germans pretend they can't speak French and when forced to do so often speak in an appalling accent, jokingly called "Français Federal" which uses heavy-handed German intonation and manages to thoroughly mangle French. Neither Swiss Germans nor Swiss French speak Italian widely. The Swiss Italians take German at school but are generally hopeless at actually speaking it. No-one learns Romansch at school unless you live in a Romansch-speaking region. So it looks great on paper, but the reality is that most Swiss aren't brilliant polyglots. They speak their language, usually pretty good English, & a smattering of another national language. What a pity, what a waste of opportunity!

In Belgium 59% of the population is Flemish, 40% is French and 1% is German. But 25% of the population are people of foreign background and their descendants – half are Europeans and half are non-Europeans. 55% of the Flemish population speaks French, while only 18% of the French population speaks Flemish. The differences between the French and Flemish are so acute that many Belgians consider seriously to split the country into two parts. I often wonder why is there such a level of animosity in multilanguage countries towards the other languages. Instead of seizing the opportunity to learn 5 languages which is the minimum that an intellectual person should speak, English Canadians are reluctant to learn French, Americans are reluctant to learn Spanish, German Swiss are reluctant to learn French, and French Belgians are reluctant to learn Flemish. However, there is a tendency for the minority language speakers to speak the language of the majority – Spanish speaking people in the US study more willingly English than vice versa, Arab speaking people in Israel and the West Bank study more willingly Hebrew than vice versa, French speaking Swiss sometimes reluctantly have to study German because of the economic importance of the Swiss German cantons, and so French speaking Belgians need to speak Flemish in modern Belgium, which was not the case a hundred years ago when French was the dominant language in Belgium and less so in Switzerland. Israeli Jews may be reluctant to learn Arabic, which is mandatory at school, because of the Palestinian conflict, but Arabic should not be "painted" by the conflict as it is a very rich language with a high culture. It is easy to say so, but if this is the case how come that I didn't study seriously Arabic at school in Egypt and in Israel (although I had a final grade of 9), and in spite of three to four serious attempts I still don't speak fluently the language, while I speak much better Spanish, Italian or German, which I studied much later and that are very far apart from Hebrew, the language I know best.

So, the answer has to be found in the historical animosities in those countries – why do German and French Swiss don't like each other, English and Spanish Americans, French and English Canadians, French and Flemish Belgians, Arabs and Jews in Israel? If we solve those animosities, in spite of wrongs dating hundreds of years, seeming insurmountable, with a history of oppression, superiority and inferiority complexes, sometimes linked to a different religion, we may arrive to the solution which should be beneficial to all - where everyone would speak perfectly at least four to five languages – in Belgium Flemish/Dutch, French, German and English (and in many cases a native language of Turkish or Spanish), in Switzerland – German, French, Italian, English and possibly Portuguese, in Canada – English, French, and possibly German, Italian or Chinese, in the US – English, Spanish, French, and possibly Chinese or Hindi, in Singapore – English, Mandarin, Malay, and possibly Tamil or French, in Israel – Hebrew, English, Arabic, French & Spanish. We can bring as an example the decision of Lee Kuan Yew who chose English as the first language in Singapore, contributing by that to the economic success of the country and lessening potential conflicts between the Chinese, Malayan and Tamil populations. Lee, who was one of the wisest leaders in the 20th century, arrived to the conclusion that he shouldn't punish the Singaporeans and the English language for the colonial wrongs committed by the British. He chose English because it was the best solution for his people.

And so did the Indians who suffered even more from the British, but chose English as their official language, by that contributing substantially to Indian economy, enabling American and English companies to outsource to India business of billions dollars, and lessening potential conflict between speakers of Bengali, Assamese, Kannada, Malayalam, Marathi, Odia, Punjabi, Tamil, Telugu, Urdu and speakers of so many languages, that would not want to adopt Hindi as their first language, although de jure India has two official languages – English and Hindi. But black South Africans suffered even more than the Indians, especially from Afrikaans speakers, and what do we see? More black, coloured, and Indian South Africans speak Afrikaans at home than white South Africans. According to a recent SAIRR study, based on data from the 2011 census, only 40 percent of those who speak Afrikaans at home are whites. This means that out of 6.9 million people who speak the language at home, 2.7 million are white, while the rest are from other racial groups. English is the home language of almost five million South Africans; of these, 1.6 million (or 34 percent) are white. Almost 1.2 million black South Africans have English as their mother tongue, while coloured people and Indians accounted for nearly 950,000 and 1.1 million, respectively. SAIRR researcher Thuthukani Ndebele said English was only the fourth most-spoken home language, but was the preferred language of learning in South Africa. About 64% of the 11.5 million pupils in public schools in 2010 chose to be taught in English, reflecting a global trend for the preference of the language. Yet, IsiZulu was the most common home language in South Africa, with 11.6 million South Africans listing it as their mother tongue.

Furthermore, the former colonies of France, UK, Belgium, Spain and Portugal, have chosen in most of the cases the colonial language as an official language. The former satellites of Russia have "divested" Russian in most of the cases, but still Russian is an official language in Belarus (9.5M), Kazakhstan (17.7M), Kyrgyzstan (5.4M), Tajikistan (7.6M), of course Russia (142.9M, although many people in the federation have another mother tongue), as well as many autonomous and de facto independent regions – Abkhazia, South Ossetia, Transnistria, Gagauzia – autonomous, and the following Oblasts in Ukraine – Kherson, Mykolaiv, Odessa, Kharkiv, Dnipropetrovsk, Crimea. Russian may not be official, but it is widely spoken in many other countries – Armenia, Azerbaijan, Estonia, Latvia, Lithuania, Georgia, Moldova, Mongolia, Turkmenistan, Uzbekistan (and Israel)... Although the Russians have oppressed those countries they have not punished the language, which remains a very important language worldwide. Worldwide 23 million people speak Dutch, most of them in the Netherlands (16M) and in Belgium (6M), but also in the former Dutch dependencies of Aruba, Curacao, Bonaire, Saba, St. Eustatius, St. Maarten, Suriname, elderly people and 20,000 students in the former Dutch colony of Indonesia, and Dutch immigrants to Australia, Canada, US, New Zealand. Furthermore, we have 6.9 million native speakers of Afrikaans in South Africa (most of them black), more than the 5 million native speakers of English. In Namibia people speak the similar Namibian African.

Last but not least, Sephardic Jews have suffered much from the Spanish in Auto-da-fes, expulsion, confiscation of assets, torture and murder, yet the Jews have not punished Spanish and continued to speak the language (Ladino) for 500 years, loving it, writing in it novels, plays and articles, keeping the Spanish folklore and romances. Even the Ashkenazi Jews who have suffered so much in Central and Eastern Europe continued to speak and write in Yiddish, which is based on German, with an outstanding contribution to world's culture in novels, plays and folklore in this language. The German Jews spoke German perfectly, the Polish Jews spoke Polish, Russian Jews spoke Russian, Romanian Jews spoke Romanian, Ukrainian Jews spoke Ukrainian, Croatian Jews spoke Croatian, Hungarian Jews spoke Hungarian, Greek Jews spoke Greek, and Italian Jews spoke Italian, although they suffered so much during the Holocaust, before and after from anti-Semitism, they continued to speak those languages and didn't punish them.

So, if South Africans and Indians have overcome their animosities towards English speakers, by choosing English as their official language, why can't Belgians, Swiss, Canadians, Americans and Israelis overcome their animosities, having suffered much less than the South Africans and Indians? They have nothing to lose from learning their compatriots language, on the contrary it would enhance mutual understanding, patriotic cohesiveness, with a clear economic benefit, and an invaluable cultural benefit. We refer to languages which are spoken by tens to hundreds of millions all over the world, spoken in countries with the strongest economies, with a very rich culture, an enchanting folklore – German, French, Italian, Spanish, English, Dutch, Arabic (and Hebrew). Or maybe I am completely wrong and in a generation or two everybody would speak only English or at most two languages – a mother tongue and English. This would be such a waste of culture, the end of a cosmopolitan society, a global world but very limited in diversity, as the languages are not to blame for the wrongs committed by their speakers. I am strongly opposed to such a solution and if this book would contribute to favor a diverse society, with an holistic approach to the world culture comprising of many segments – it would achieve its goal.

Finally, we bring here statistics on the numbers of people speaking the most spread world languages, mainly because of conquest of other countries: English, French, Spanish, Portuguese, Russian, Dutch, Arabic. This list proves that although the former colonies suffered much of the colonial powers, in most of them the language of their oppressors is still the official language of the former colonies. But this is not the rule in many cases – we'll take Algeria as an example, that was part of France prior to its independence and where French people were an important part of the population before they emigrated after Algeria's independence. In all the documentation Arabic is the official language of Algeria (spoken by 72% of the population, Berber is spoken by 28%), they fought one of the fiercest war of independence to get rid of the French rule. So, in Algeria French has no official status. But, Algeria is also the second-largest Francophone country in the world in terms of speakers, and French is widely used in government, media (newspapers, radio, local television), and both the education system (from primary school onwards) and academia due to Algeria's colonial history. It can be regarded as the de facto co-official language of Algeria. In 2008, 11.2 million Algerians could read and write in French. An Abassa Institute study in April 2000 found that 60% of households could speak and understand French or 18 million in a population of 30 million then. In recent decades the government has reinforced the study of French and TV programs have reinforced use of the language.

In Morocco, we find a similar case - French is widely used in governmental institutions, media, mid-size and large companies, international commerce with French-speaking countries, and often in international diplomacy. French is taught as an obligatory language at all schools. In 2010, there were 10,366,000 French-speakers in Morocco, or about 32% of the population. French also plays a major role in Tunisian society, despite having no official status. It is widely used in education (e.g., as the language of instruction in the sciences in secondary school), the press, and in business. In 2010, there were 6,639,000 French-speakers in Tunisia, or about 64% of the population. So, the Maghreb countries adopted a practical approach to the problem of the French language – they saved face in not giving it an official status, but de facto they recognized French as an official language and most of the population of the Maghreb still speaks French. On the contrary to that policy, Russian which was a mandatory language in all Polish schools from the end of the forties to the end of the eighties, is spoken now only by elderly people and no more taught as a mandatory language at school, Poles now opt much more to English, but also to French, Spanish and German. It is a question of how beneficial the language is to its learners –

Poles have never linked the French language to the French occupation in the times of Napoleon, they had always a great respect and love for the language and for the French people, contributing with their best people to the glory of both countries with Chopin and Marie Curie. They could have retained a grudge towards the Germans and the German language following the worst atrocities of mankind that were executed in their country during the German Nazi occupation, but they decided to open a new page and to judge the German people according to their conduct in the new Germany, without punishing of course the German language which is one of the most important languages in Europe. They cooperate with the Germans, study the language at school, as they study Spanish and English, which are three of the most important languages in business. However, they try very hard to forget the times where Russia/The Soviet Union dominated their country and oppressed their people, they don't study the language, and judge the benefits of learning the language in the context of the new post-Communist world, where Russia is not so important as in the past, and from their two neighbors the western and the eastern they prefer by far the western German, which open for them the gates to the European Union and to prosperity.

LISTS OF OFFICIAL LANGUAGES IN FORMER COLONIAL/COLONIES – ENGLISH, FRENCH, SPANISH, DUTCH, RUSSIAN, PORTUGUESE, GERMAN, ITALIAN, ARABIC

The following is a list of territories where English is an official language, that is, a language used in citizen interactions with government officials. In 2015, there were 67 sovereign states and 27 non-sovereign entities where English was an official language. Many country subdivisions have declared English an official language at the local or regional level.

^a In Spain, Spanish is the sole official language at the national level, while the languages of Basque, Catalan/Valencian, and Galician are co-official alongside Spanish in certain sub-national regions.

^b In Peru, Spanish is the sole official language at the national level while Quechua and Aymara hold co-official status in selected regions.

^c In Ecuador, Spanish is the sole official language at the national level while the Kichwa language holds co-official status in selected regions.

^d In Bolivia, the national constitution recognizes Spanish and various indigenous languages of Bolivia as official at the national level, though Spanish is predominant nationwide.

^e In Paraguay, Spanish and the indigenous Guaraní language are recognized as co-official at the national level and both are widely used in society.

^f Puerto Rico is an unincorporated territory of the U.S. where Spanish and English are the official languages^[20] and Spanish is the primary language. In November 2008 a district court judge ruled that a sequence of Congressional actions have had the cumulative effect of changing Puerto Rico's status to incorporated.^[24] However, by April 2011 the issue had not yet made its way through the courts,^[25] and in January 2013 the U.S. government still referred to Puerto Rico as unincorporated.^[26]

^g In Equatorial Guinea, the Spanish, French, and Portuguese languages all hold official status at the national level, though Spanish is the primary language in the public sphere and several Bantu languages are used at home and family settings.

SPANISH IS A COMMONLY USED LANGUAGE IN THE FOLLOWING COUNTRIES:

Though not an official language at the national level, Spanish is regularly spoken by at least 10% of the population in each of the nations and territories noted below. In each, public services and information are widely available in Spanish, as are various forms of printed and broadcast media. Spanish has been spoken in the United States for several centuries, particularly in the Southwest and Florida, which were all once part of New Spain. Spanish is the most studied foreign language in United States schools and is spoken as a native tongue by 35,437,985 people, who comprise 12.19% of the population. It is also de facto official in the U.S. state of New Mexico along with English and is increasingly used alongside English nationwide in business and politics. With over 50 million native speakers and second language speakers, the United States now has the second largest Spanish-speaking population in the world after Mexico. The Spanish language is not official but also holds a special status (in the education system, the media, and some official documents) in the Principality of Andorra and the British Overseas Territory of Gibraltar, both of which share land borders with Spain. Spanish has no official recognition in the Central American nation of Belize, a Commonwealth realm where English is the official national language. However, the country shares land borders with Spanish-speaking Mexico and Guatemala and Spanish is spoken by a sizable portion of the population there.

13. COMPARISON OF 120+ LANGUAGES, THE LITTLE PRINCE, HOLISTIC APPROACH

It is interesting to see how 120+ languages vary with their geography – Provençal has a lot in common with Spanish, Catalan sounds much more like French, Galego is very similar to Portuguese, Corsican sounds like Italian, Russian and Ukrainian are very similar, and so are Norwegian and Swedish, Esperanto resembles Romance and Germanic, Ido is based on Romance languages. Creole is based on French and African languages. Luxemburgish is in midway between German and French, Frisian is midway between English and German, Yiddish is midway between German and Hebrew, Ladino is midway between Spanish and Hebrew, etc. The easiest way to perceive the difference between the languages is to compare the same sentences in all those 120 languages, for example from The Little Prince, which was translated into so many languages. Out of the 230 languages of the text, we chose 120 languages – 20 French-based (from the north and Belgium as Picard and Walloon and the south as Provençal/Occitan, from the former colonies - Creole), 11 Spanish-based (as Catalan, Galego, Ladino, Asturiano), 6 Portuguese-based (as Creole, Fala, Mirandes), 17 Italian-based (as Corsican, Sardinian, Sicilian, Ticinese), Latin, 4 Rhaeto-Romance, 2 Romanian, 1 English (although there are many Pidgins that are not part of this collection), 25 German-based (from Germany's regions, Switzerland, Luxembourg, Austria, Italy, Slovenia, and even as far as Brazil, Canada and Pennsylvania), 4 Dutch, 6 Scandinavian, 15 Slavic (from Russia to Slovakia, Poland to Ukraine, Bulgaria to Serbia), Constructed languages as Esperanto, Interlingua and Ido, Hebrew, Arabic, Greek... And we included there only languages learned by me or deriving and understandable from languages learned – Provençal/Occitan were learned but Nicard/Limousin were not learned although they are understandable to French speakers and to me as well.

Turkish and Chinese that I have tried to learn, but with very minor success as they are very difficult, were not included, Turkish from my Turkish father's expressions and proverbs and books to learn Turkish, Chinese from my partial studies in Taiwan with tapes and proverbs, and subsequent studies in Israel. I advise you to hear as well the perfect presentation of Sid Efromovich who was watched by more than 1,838,805 people on TEDx (14:50 minutes) where he explains us how to learn languages. The Little Prince is the most translated book in the world – more than 250 languages, while The Bible is not a book, or a fiction book, but the Holy Scriptures including dozens of books – the base of the three monoteistic religions, and the UN Universal Declaration of Human Rights is a document of a few pages – both writings were translated into more languages, but are not books. And it is rightly so, as The Little Prince, on top of being a masterpiece for grownups and children, is also a cosmopolitan book based on the meeting of a French pilot who has flown all over the world and a little prince coming from a tiny asteroid after having visited six more asteroids and wanting to visit Earth, landing in the Sahara desert where he met the French pilot. But the best explanation to the largest number of translations is that its content can be understood by everyone in the world as it is universal.

The reader can find details on the 120-230+ languages on Wikipedia, Language Books, Encyclopaedias, Languages/Cory's/ & on the websites of The Little Prince

96. Faroese/Foroyiskt/Faroe Islands, Denmark: Áh, lítli prinsur! Sum fráleið skilti eg, hvussu syrgilig tilvera tín hevði verið. Í langar tíðir hevði tú ikki havt annað at tikið tær til, enn at sitið og hugt at bjørtu sólsetursglæmuni. Hetta fekk eg at vita fjórða dagin, tá ið tú segði: Mær dámar so væl at síggja sólina seta.

97. Icelandic/Íslensk/Iceland: Ó, litli prins! Þannig hefi ég smám saman öðlast skilning á dapurlegu lífi þínu. Lengi hafðir þú ekki haft annað til afþreyingar en blítt sólsetrið. Mér vitnaðist sú nýjung á fjórða degi að morgni, þegar þú sagðir við mig: Mér finnst sólsetrið svo fallegt.

98. Russian/Russkij/Russia: О Маленький принц! Понемногу я понял также, как печальна и однообразна была твоя жизнь. Долгое время у тебя было лишь одно развлечение: ты любовался закатом. Я узнал об этом наутро четвертого дня, когда ты сказал: Я очень люблю закат.

99. Slovak/Slovensko/Slovakia: Ach, malý princ, takto som pomaly pochopil tvoj prostý smutný život. Dlhý čas boli tvojím jediným rozptýlením iba čarovné západy slnka. Túto novú podrobnosť som sa dozvedel ráno štvrtého dňa, keď si mi povedal: Mám veľmi rád západy slnka.

100. Slovene/Slovenski/Slovenia: Ah! Mali princ, tako sem malo po malo spoznaval tvoje majhno, otožno življenje. Razen sladke miline sončnih zahodov dolgo nisi imel ničesar, kar bi te razvedrilo. To novo podrobnost sem izvedel četrtega dne zjutraj, ko si mi dejal: Zelo rad imam sončne zahode.

101. Sorbian/Hornjoserbsce/Germany: Ach, mały princo, poněčim sym twoje małe ćežkomyslně žiwjenčko zrozumił ... Dołho njejsy hinašeho rozwjesenjenja měł, hač lubozne chowanje slónca. To zhonich štwórty dzeń rano, jako sy mi prajił: Chowanje slónca přewšo lubuju.

102. Serbian/Srpski/Serbia: Ah! mali prinče, tako sam postepeno почео да схватам твој скучени и тужни живот. Благих сунчеви заласци дуго су били једина твоја разонода. За нову појединоост сазнао сам у зору четвртог дана, кад си ми рекао: Обожавам сунчеве заласке.

103. Belarusian/Belaruski/Belarus: Мой Маленькі прынец! З цягам часу я зразумеў, якім аднастайным і самотным было тваё жыццё. Доўга ў цябе была адна толькі забава: ты любавалася захадам сонца. Гэтая новая дэталёў дайшла да мяне наранку чацвёртага дня, калі ты сказаў: Я так люблю адвечоркі.

104. Croatian/Hrvatski/Croatia: Ah, mali prinče, tako sam, malo-pomalo, pronicao u tvoj malen turoban život. Jedina tvoja razonoda dugo je bila tek ljepota sunčevih zalazaka! Tu sam novu potankost doznao ujutro četvrtoga dana, kada si mi rekao: Volim zalaske sunca.

105. Molise Slavic/Moliski Hrvatski/Italy: A! Mali kraljič, ja sa razumija, na mala na votu, naka, tvoj mali život malingonik. Ti s'bi jima sa čuda vrima kana dištracijunu sama ono slako do sutanji. Ja sa znaja ovu malu aš novu stvaru, dōp četar dana jistru, kada ti s'mi reka: Su mi čuda drage sutanja.

106. Bosnian/Bosanski/Bosnia: Ah! Mali prinče, tako sam ja, malo po malo, shvatio tvoj mali, tužni život. Tvoja jedina razonoda dugo vremena bila samo ljepota sunčevih zalazaka! Tu sam novu poјedinost saznao četvrtog dana ujutro kad si mi rekao: Volim zalaske sunca.

107. Lemko/Lemkivskyj jazyk/Poland: Malyj printse, ja pomaly zrozumiù tvoje nevesele zhytja. Doùhij tshas lem zahid sontsja byù dlja tebe jedynom pryjemnistvo. Doznaù jem sja toho tshetvertoho dnja rano, kjed jes mi poviù: Barsh ljublju zahody sontsja.

108. Czech/Cesky/Czech Republic: Ach malý princí, tak jsem kousek po kousko pochopil tvůj teskný život. Dlouho pro tebe byly rozptýlením jen kouzelné západy slunce. Tuto novou podrobnost jsem se dověděl čtvrtého dne zrána, když jsi mi řekl: Mám strašně rád západy slunce.

109. Ukrainian/Ukrajinskyj/Ukraine:

О маленькій принце, помалу я зрозумів твоє сумне життя. Довгий час ти мав тільки одну роз вагу: мшувався заходом сонця. Я дізнався про це вранці четвертого дня, коли ти сказав мені: Я дуже люблю захід сонця.

О malen'kyj pryntse, pomalu ja zrozumiù tvoje sumne zhytnja. Doùhij tshas ty maù til'ky odnu rozvahu: myluvaùsja zakhodom sontsja. Ja diznaùsja pro tse ùrantsi tshetvertoho dnja, koly ty skazaù meni: Ja duzhe ljublju zakhid sontsja.

110. Macedonian/Makedonski/Macedonia:

О, Мал Принцу, ете така, малку по малку, го разбрав твојот малечок меланхоличен живот. Ти долго време немаше за забава ништо освен убавината на сончевиот залез. Тој нов детал го дознав, четвртиот ден изутрина, кога ми рече: Многу го сакам зајдисонцето.

111. Polish/Polski/Poland: Och, Mały Książę, stopniowo pojąłem na czym polega melancholia twego życia. Przez długi czas twoją jedyną rozrywką była słodycz zachodu słońca. Ten nowy szczególnie poznałem rankiem czwartego dnia, kiedy powiedziałeś: Przepadam za zachodami słońca.

112. Bulgarian/Balgarski/Bulgaria: Ах, мъничък принце, така постепенно разбрах твоя малък тъжен живот. Дълго време единственото ти развлечение е било сладостта на слънчевите залеzi. Научих тази нова подробност на четвъртия ден сутринта, когато ти ми каза: Много обичам слънчевите залеzi.

113. Esperanto/Constructed Language: Ho, eta princo, mi ekkomprenis tiele, iom-post-iome, vian melankolian vivon. Dum longa tempo vi havis kiel distraĵon nur la mildecon de sunsubiroj. Tiun ĉi novan detalon mi eksciis la kvaran tagon matene, kiam vi diris al mi: Al mi multe plaĉas sunsubiroj.

114. Ido/Constructed Language: Ho princeto! Pokope me komprenis la kauzo de vua melankolio. Longatempe vua unika distraĵo esis observar la dolceson de la sunokusho. Ton me savis en la matino de la quaresma dio, kande vu dicis a me: La sunokushi tre multe plezas me.

115. Hebrew/Ivrit/Israel:

הוּי, נְסִיךְ קָטָן! כָּכָה הִבְנָתִי, מַעֲט־מַעֲט, אֶת חֲיִיךְ הַנְּעִירִים הַנוֹגִים. יָמִים רַבִּים לֹא הֵיָתָה לְךָ
אֵלָּא הַנָּאָה אַחַת וְיַחֲדָה: נָעַם שְׂקִיעוֹת הַשֶּׁמֶשׁ. הַפָּרֶט הַתָּנֹשׁ הַזֶּה נִדְּעָ לִי בַיּוֹם הָרַבִּיעִי בַּבֶּקֶר,
בְּשִׂאמְרַת לִי: אֲנִי אוֹהֵב אֶת שְׂקִיעוֹת הַשֶּׁמֶשׁ.

116. Arabic/Al-arabiyyah/Egypt, Syria, Algeria, Saudi Arabia, Iraq, Morocco, Tunisia, Lebanon, Lybia, Yemen, Qatar, Oman, United Arab Emirates, Bahrain, Kuwait, Jordan, Palestine, etc.:

آه! أميري الصغير، لقد فهمت، شيئاً فشيئاً، حياتك الكمية الصغيرة. لم يكن لك،
منذ زمان، من وسيلة تسلية غير حلاوة غروب الشمس. لقد اطلعت على هذا
التفصيل الجديد في اليوم الرابع حينما قلت لي: أحب كثيراً غروب الشمس.

117. Greek/Ellinika/Greece:

Αχ, μικρέ μου πρίγκιπα, κατάλαβα έτσι, σιγά-σιγά, τη μελανχολική ζωούλα σου. Η ομορφιά που έχει το ηλιοβασίλεμα ήταν, για πολύ καιρό, η μόνη σου διασκέδαση. Έμαθα αυτή την καινούργια λεπτομέρεια το πρωί της τέταρτης μέρας, όταν μου είπες:
Μ' αρέσουν πολύ τα ηλιοβασιλέματα.

The Little Prince, The Bible, and other texts were translated into many more (135+) languages and dialects that are very similar to the languages above, different Frysian languages, other constructed languages, other Creole, Pidgin, English, Spanish, Portuguese, Italian, German, French, Arabic, Slavic languages, extinct languages... To complement this list to 120 languages (bis 120!), we bring here from another collection of Little Prince's extracts 3 more languages:

118. Interlingua/Constructed Language: Le parve prince Ecce mi secreto, un secreto multo simple: on vide ben solmente con le corde. Cosas essential es invisible al oculos.

119. Ladin-Verschiun-Badiot/Italy: Le Pice Prinz Chilo aste segn spo ince mi socret. Al e der scempl: an veiga ma bun cun le cor, l'essenzial ne veigon nia cun i edli.

120. Ladin – Gherdeina/Italy: L Pitl Prinz Tlo es mi sucret. L ie dret scempl: cun l cuer vejien l ben. Cie che ie plu empurtant ne vejien nia cun i uedli.

And this does not include translations of The Little Prince into Argentinian Rosarigasino, French Norman, and Italian Salentino, which are understandable to Spanish, French or Italian speakers.

A full list of the languages learned, the links, and some of the books read in every language can be found on Cory's website in About Jacques Cory in two texts about linguistics and cultural activities, but also in the following list, which comprises more than 255 languages. In this book and links, we give in addition to the comparison of extracts from The Little Prince, Pater Noster, Bible, Internationale, or UN Declaration, texts in main chapters with a wider reference than for the 200+ languages in extracts: poems, songs, letters, extracts of books and plays, proverbs, quotes, etc., - in 36 languages: English, French, Ladino, Italian, Spanish, German, Romanian, Hebrew, Portuguese, Interlingua, Norwegian, Dutch, Aramaic, Latin, Russian, Haitian, Greek, Yiddish, Arabic, Danish, Turkish, Chinese-Mandarin, Polish, Swedish, Catalan, Provençal, Icelandic, Esperanto, Mozarabic, Bulgarian, Irish Gaelic, Rumantsch, Asturiano, Gascon, Friulian, Galego. I have read Books in 50+ languages, texts in 250+ more languages, learned with reading capabilities, which are in Cory's library. This book brings links to 2000 languages, but most of the languages are spoken only by a few people.

I wonder who else in the world has made such holistic attempts to study so many languages, read so many plays and books, see so many theatrical and folklore shows, so many films, while continuing to work in top level positions, receiving a PhD at the age of 60, teaching for 10 years thousands of students, writing many academic books on Business Ethics in English, French and Hebrew, and articles also in Spanish and Ladino, being a pioneer in so many fields, writing a novel and a play, living a peaceful family life with the same wife for almost fifty years, three children and eight grandchildren. Undoubtedly there were many businessmen who succeeded much more than me, heading large multinationals, founding breakthrough high tech companies, earning millions or even billions. There were many academics who excelled as professors all their lives pioneering in their fields and admired by their students, writing many academic articles and books, receiving prizes and even the Nobel Prize. There were many novelists and playwrights who wrote so many novels read by millions, and plays staged all over the world with great success. Even in passive fields of reading books and learning languages there were much more people who learned many more languages and knew them much better than me, or read much more books and plays. There were much more people who traveled for many more countries that I visited or devoted themselves to community volunteering. But I think that I excel in the aggregate of all those fields of interest, as probably nobody did all what I have done together while working full time and living with a family, reading, writing, learning, teaching, visiting, watching, being active in community life, member of Boards, initiating and participating in such endeavors as translating the UN Declaration of Human Rights in Ladino.

I wonder who in due time will be interested to receive my library in all those languages. This book may present a countercurrent approach, advocating diversity, multiculturalism, multilingual education, while all the world goes in an opposite way of globalism, English being on top of others, a unification of interests, disrespect to different cultures and even on reading books in your own language. Am I a dinosaur, preaching for the world of yesterday, or am I on the contrary advocating in favor of the latest developments of diversity, multi cultures, that the Internet would make them accessible to millions, while in the past those cultures were accessible only to a few. Well, I have always swum countercurrent: at the age of 11 opposing everybody else who wanted to force me to be a metal worker, at the age of 23 going to Insead to study European business while most of the people believed that only the US model would prevail, at the age of 30 starting to work for a high tech company while most believed only in low tech technologies, at the age of 43 starting to work as a freelancer while most of others continued in a management career, at the age of 50 I fought almost alone against the largest companies in Israel and the wealthiest tycoons who had wronged me and many other minority shareholders, at the age of 57-60 starting a new career as a writer, obtaining a PhD and lecturing at seven universities on Business Ethics, succeeding to make an important impact in this field while most thought that it was an oximoron, and at the age of 70 writing new books on geography, linguistics and culture in a world that became less and less cultural, more and more monolingual. I think that this record shows a whole life of innovation in various fields of interest but with a common denominator – not to be a conformist, always seeking to find truth, attempting to improve society in different ways, beyond my family, my people, my country, my society, in favor of a better humanity.

Antoine de Saint-Exupery was many things - a pilot, a writer, but also a social and economic precursor. He wrote The Little Prince, long before the scandals of the late eighties, Michael Milken, Ivan Boesky, the corporate scandals of Enron, Ken Lay, Jeff Skilling, WorldCom, etc. occurring since December 2001, and the Great Recession of 2008, Bernie Madoff, Dick Fuld. But, like great men and authors he could understand the basic rules of economics, society, greed and ruthless capitalism. We have to bear in mind that in 1943 people remembered extremely well the catastrophe of the Great Depression of 1929 which lasted until World War II. In chapter 13 the Little Prince finds a businessman. He notices that he is very busy counting the stars and asks him what does he do with them, the businessman answers him "Nothing, I own them". 44 years later in 1987 Michael Douglas – Gordon Gekko – says in the film Wall Street – "I create nothing, I own". In those 4 to 5 words you can summarize all the tragedy of ruthless capitalism that we thought have died after World War II, but has resuscitated with the neoliberal regimes of two of the worst heads of state in world history – Ronald Reagan and Margaret Thatcher, backed by the Iago's bad counsel of Milton Freedman, who also counseled Chilean's Pinochet, and Israeli's Netanyahu, supporting his neoliberal reforms and congratulating him on his courage.

In my courses I dealt with all those issues and persons, showing in every course the film Wall Street, and refering as well to The Little Prince's excellent depicting of the businessman. However, in spite of the translation of the book that made it accessible to 95% of the world's population, from early childhood, nobody drew lessons for the future, nobody drew the necessary conclusions. If not, how do we explain that they didn't notice the writing on the wall, as put poetically by the Little Prince who tells the businessman that if he owned a silk scarf he could put it around his neck and take it away with him, but the businessman cannot pluck the stars from heaven, or in modern terminology the megarich cannot pluck the derivatives, the futures and make us of them. They can of course put them in the bank as the businessman tells the Little Prince but it is of no use to anybody, as they don't contribute anything to the economy especially if they are synthetic derivatives that are based on other derivatives, and even synthetic derivatives that are based on other synthetic derivatives... For those who are not familiar with derivatives, not counting the Little Prince and Saint-Exupery who foresaw those mass murder weapons, we bring here a short description from the Wikipedia showing the uselessness of them:

In finance, a derivative is a contract that derives its value from the performance of an underlying entity. This underlying entity can be an asset, index, or interest rate, and is often called the "underlying". Derivatives can be used for a number of purposes, including insuring against price movements (hedging), increasing exposure to price movements for speculation or getting access to otherwise hard-to-trade assets or markets. Some of the more common derivatives include forwards, futures, options, swaps, and variations of these such as synthetic collateralized debt obligations and credit default swaps. Most derivatives are traded over-the-counter (off-exchange) or on an exchange such as the Chicago Mercantile Exchange, while most insurance contracts have developed into a separate industry. Derivatives are one of the three main categories of financial instruments, the other two being stocks (i.e., equities or shares) and debt (i.e., bonds and mortgages). To give an idea of the size of the derivative market, The Economist has reported that as of June 2011, the over-the-counter (OTC) derivatives market amounted to approximately $700 trillion, and the size of the market traded on exchanges totaled an additional $83 trillion.

It goes without saying that with such risks of hundreds of trillions dollars, more than ten times the value of World Economy, an imminent collapse of the derivative markets will bring about a Doomsday Depression. And the Little Prince leaves the businessman speechless when he tells him that if he owns a flower he must water it every day – he is of some use to his flower, but the businessman is of no use to "his" stars. And this is the tragedy that will end up in a catastrophe within a few years – because of the neoliberal ideology and the ensuing ruthless capitalism – there is no use to most of the financial overcreativity of Wall Street, they don't create anything they just own thing, and those who don't create will undoubtedly disappear, like the kings and aristocrats, like the rotten empires based on greed and exploitation, like the unproductive species, as a world cannot subsist from speculation, with the cooperation of the governments and civil servants receiving direct and indirect bribes from the tycoons, lowering the cost of money to zero in order to facilitate the bubbles of the skyrocketing prices of shares, bonds and real estate, making the megarich even richer and eliminating the middle class, lowering the share in the economic pie of those who contribute to the economy, those who create, to the level that existed a hundred years ago, or even to the "welfare" state of the times of Dickens and Emile Zola.

"And what do you do with these stars?"

"What do I do with them?"

"Yes."

"Nothing. I own them."

"You own the stars?"

"Yes."

"But I have already seen a king who--"

"Kings do not own, they reign over. It is a very different matter."

"And what good does it do you to own the stars?"

"It does me the good of making me rich."

"And what good does it do you to be rich?"

"It makes it possible for me to buy more stars, if any are discovered."

"This man," the little prince said to himself, "reasons a little like my poor tippler . . ."

Nevertheless, he still had some more questions.

"How is it possible for one to own the stars?"

"To whom do they belong?" the businessman retorted, peevishly.

"I don't know. To nobody."

"Then they belong to me, because I was the first person to think of it."

"Is that all that is necessary?"

"Certainly. When you find a diamond that belongs to nobody, it is yours. When you discover an island that belongs to nobody, it is yours. When you get an idea before any one else, you take out a patent on it: it is yours. So with me: I own the stars, because nobody else before me ever thought of owning them."

"Yes, that is true," said the little prince. "And what do you do with them?"

"I administer them," replied the businessman. "I count them and recount them. It is difficult. But I am a man who is naturally interested in matters of consequence."

The little prince was still not satisfied.

"If I owned a silk scarf," he said, "I could put it around my neck and take it away with me. If I owned a flower, I could pluck that flower and take it away with me. But you cannot pluck the stars from heaven . . ."

"No. But I can put them in the bank."

"Whatever does that mean?"

"That means that I write the number of my stars on a little paper. And then I put this paper in a drawer and lock it with a key."

"And that is all?"

"That is enough," said the businessman.

"It is entertaining," thought the little prince. "It is rather poetic. But it is of no great consequence."

On matters of consequence, the little prince had ideas which were very different from those of the grown-ups.

"I myself own a flower," he continued his conversation with the businessman, "which I water every day. I own three volcanoes, which I clean out every week (for I also clean out the one that is extinct; one never knows). It is of some use to my volcanoes, and it is of some use to my flower, that I own them. But you are of no use to the stars . . ."

The businessman opened his mouth, but he found nothing to say in answer. And the little prince went away.

"The grown-ups are certainly altogether extraordinary," he said simply, talking to himself as he continued on his journey.

And we'll finish with the most famous sayings of The Fox, that should be adopted by humanity in 250 languages: "It is only with the heart that one can see rightly; what is essential is invisible to the eye.", as "It is the time you have wasted for your rose that makes your rose so important." Employers, businessmen, nation leaders should treat their workers with the heart, based on a long term sensitive and responsible (like for the roses) employment, and not exclusively through the bottom line, following the path of F.D. Roosevelt, Warren Buffett, Johnson & Johnson.

A 'gumbo' is a spicy okra-based stew, it also means a particular kind of mud; it is one of the few Bantu (African) words that has become part of the English language, itself a gumbo of a language.

The site is primarily an archive of public domain and redistributable language learning resources. We are also developing special content for the site which will be of interest to language learners, travelers, linguists, and other language aficionados.

There are many sites on the Internet with interactive dictionaries and language learning aids; there are also several freeware dictionary/flashcard programs with extensive vocabulary sets. However, in most cases, these sites shroud their data sets in binary or database formats. At Wordgumbo we've done the hard work of converting these data sets into flat files and posting them in one convenient archive, organized by language family.

Files here are either HTML or extended (8-bit) ASCII. Where possible, text files are tab delimited. Some files have been converted into standard HTML encoding (ISO-8859-1) from Unicode. The closest equivalent character in ISO-8859-1 was selected, and any diacritics simulated using <SUB> and <SUP> and the closest equivalent punctuation mark. In the case of Cyrillic, Greek and Hebrew, a consistent transliteration scheme was used. The source for each file contains hidden tags which specify the Unicode value for each character which has no ISO-8859-1 equivalent. To obtain these values, you can download the file or view its source in your browser. The tags have the form <!u XXXX>character</!u>, where XXXX is the four digit hexadecimal value of the Unicode character.

Some of the material on this site may be copyrighted; we ask that you respect these copyrights by only using it for academic 'fair use'. This includes files labeled as 'freeware data'. Files which are copyrighted will be clearly indicated as such. Commercial use of the copyrighted material at this site may be restricted. Other files are clearly in the public domain and can be used for any purpose. These files will be identified as such.

We encourage you to visit our sister site The Internet Sacred Text Archive (www.sacred-texts.com), which has a comprehensive collection of public domain religious texts. We have provided cross-links to related content at sacred-texts where relevant.

I have compared previously another text from The Little Prince in 120 languages which I can understand with translation, but the book was translated to many more exotic languages which I don't understand, however they were translated and read by those people. We bring here the translation of the other extract into 4 languages which I don't understand but have started to learn as Chinese Mandarin (in Taiwan and Israel) and Turkish (from my father who was born in Turkey), or languages that I don't understand at all but have an emotional connection as the Romani/Gypsy language, the people who had a similar fate to the Jews, as eternal refugees, persecuted and exterminated by the Nazis, with a similar folklore, and Ancient Egyptian Hieroglyphs, the ancient culture of the country where I was born – Egypt. I still remember the exhilaration in which I collected in a special book postcards of mummies and hieroglyphs, visited the museums so many times with my class, and visited the Pyramids and the Sphinx. In order to understand the content of the extract, we bring the content of this extract in English:

We only know the things that we tame, said the fox. People no longer have the time to know anything. They buy things already made for peddlers. But since there are no peddlers of friends, they no longer have friends. If you want a friend, tame me! Goodbye, said the fox. Here's my secret; it's very simple: we see well only with the heart. The essential is invisible to the eyes.

1. Turkish: İnsan ancak evcilleştirirse anlar, dedi tilki. İnsanların artık anlamaya zamanları yok. Dükkânlardan her istediklerini satın alıyorlar. Ama dostluk stailan bir dükkân olmadığı için dostları yok artık. Eğer dost istiyorsan, beni evcilleştir! Hoşçakal, dedi tilki. İşte sana dir sır, çok basit bir şey : İnsan yalnız yüreğiyle doğruyu görebilir. Asıl görülmesi gerekeni gözler göremez.

2. Chinese Mandarin, China

我们只了解被驯服之物，狐狸说。人类今天已经
 没有时间去了解什么了。他们从商人那儿买回现
 成品。可是，既然不存在销售朋友的商人，人们
 就再也没有朋友了。如果你要交一个朋友，驯服
 我吧。永别了，狐狸说。这就是我的秘密，很简

4. Ancient Egyptian Hieroglyphs – Reflections About the Damage of the New Constructed Languages: Facebook and Twitter:

The translators of the book were so nice as to translate the book also for the Ancient Egyptians, that were extinct thousands of years ago, unless you mean "dinosaurs from the times of the Pharaohs", as I am sometimes called by my grandchildren referring to my Egyptian origins. And here are the Egyptian Hieroglyphs, which I am supposed to know, being born in Egypt, and because I am so backward for not playing Play Station, using the smartphone only for speaking and not for taking photographs of myself in "selfies" (it is so idiotic, especially with the stick for long distance pictures), not for playing silly games as my neighbors in the theater, who play until the last moment before the real "play" begins, as for them a play by Brecht or a smartphone play are identical. I don't tweet either announcing all my followers that I have arrived now to the train station, that I am having lunch in a restaurant, that I am going to sleep, watching my TV... I don't use Facebook either, receiving every second a notice from my thousand friends that they enjoy their vacations, look at the pictures of the kids, write Like, and reading their profound thoughts as "how nice they are", "you could eat them", "enjoy"... And you have to answer them also, as noblesse oblige... That is why I have time to write books, study languages, read classics, watch plays, talk to my wife, children, and friends.

I believe that the damage of Facebook, Twitter, and the electronic games is huge, as it distracts the attention of the pupils at school, the students at the university, and the workers at work. It is a lost case to try and prohibit the use of those "gadgets", as the new generation would always find ways to circumvent your ban. In ten years of teaching at the university I noticed how the students who were enthusiastic from my teaching methods with films and plays and participated joyfully in the group dynamics, prefer now to send SMS during the courses, play silly games, or watch news and messages on their phones. I have not changed my teaching methods. Who has the time now to read books of a thousand pages or even watch a classic film of two hours. The span of their attention is no more than a few minutes, as they are accustomed to receive every few minutes a "breaking news" from their Internet friends (I am now at the beach), and they have to answer them (I envy you, I didn't have time to read the book or watch the movie for this class).

All those games and correspondence don't have any added value for the personality and values of the youth. When the alternative for reading the 1,200 pages of Don Quijote is to answer 1,200 silly messages of their Facebook friends, and you have to answer, otherwise it is not polite and your friends would not answer you either, Cervantes and your intellectual self are losing. God forbids, you can never mute your phone as you might lose the breaking news. You go to sleep with the phone and receive during the night messages from your overseas friends, so you don't sleep well either. If you are awake and cannot sleep you play silly games and send messages, so tomorrow you cannot concentrate at work or at class. The youth, or most of them, don't read even adventure books, Jules Verne, Alexandre Dumas, Karl May, Mark Twain, as to play the games is much more rewarding for them, and so they lose lesser values but still important values from those authors. In short, I am perceived and feel also as an ancient Egyptian, liking irrelevant old occupations: classic books, languages, black & white films, 19th century art, 20th century plays. Facebook and Twitter have invented a new constructed language, completely useless, spoken by a billion people, number three after Mandarin and English, without poetry, without philosophy, without novels, plays or films, with three words only: Like and Don't Like.

I have in my library Bibles in many languages, as well as CDs, not counting of course the texts in more than 400 languages on the Internet, as in the following links. I have Bibles in Hebrew, English, French, Haitian, Rumantsch, Yiddish, Bulgarian, Dutch, German, Greek, Hungarian, Portuguese, Romanian, Russian, Spanish, Swedish, Ukrainian, Aramaic, the Quran in Arabic and English, the Haggadah in Hebrew, Aramaic and Ladino, the New Testament, the Old Testament..

I'll bring here from my library 3 texts of Genesis 1:1-8 in English, Rumantsch and in Haitian.

English, UK, US:

1. In the beginning God created the heavens and the earth.
2. The earth was formless and void, and darkness was over the surface of the deep, and the Spirit of God was moving over the surface of the waters.
3. Then God said, "Let there be light"; and there was light.
4. God saw that the light was good; and God separated the light from the darkness.
5. God called the light day, and the darkness He called night. And there was evening and there was morning, one day.
6. Then God said, "Let there be an expanse in the midst of the waters, and let it separate the waters from the waters."
7. God made the expanse, and separated the waters which were below the expanse from the waters which were above the expanse; and it was so.
8. God called the expanse heaven. And there was evening and there was morning, a second day.

Azeri, Azerbaijan:

1) Başlangıçda Allah göyləri və yeri yaratdı. 2) Yer quruluşsuz və boş idi. Dərin sular üzərində qaranlıq var idi. Allahın Ruhu suların üzərində dolaşırdı. 3) Allah dedi: «Qoy işıq olsun». Işıq oldu. 4) Allah gördü ki, işıq yaxşıdır. Sonra O, işığı qaranlıqdan ayırdı. 5) Allah işığı «gündüz», qaranlığı isə «gecə» adlandırdı. Axşam oldu, səhər açıldı; bu, birinci gün idi. 6) Sonra Allah dedi: «Qoy suların arasında bir qübbə olsun və suları bir-birindən ayırsın». 7) Allah qübbəni düzəltdi və qübbənin altındakı suları onun üstündəki sulardan ayırdı. Belə də oldu. 8) Allah qübbəni «göy» adlandırdı. Axşam oldu, səhər açıldı; bu, ikinci gün idi.

Malagasi, Madagascar:

1 [Ny namoronan'Andriamanitra izao tontolo izao] Tamin'ny voalohany Andriamanitra nahary ny lanitra sy ny tany. 2 Ary ny tany dia tsy nisy endrika sady foana; ary aizina no tambonin'ny lalina. Ary ny fanahin'Andriamanitra nanomba tambonin'ny rano. 3 Ary Andriamanitra nanao hoe: Misia mazava; dia nisy mazava. 4 Ary hitan'Andriamanitra fa tsara ny mazava; ary nampisarahin'Andriamanitra ny mazava sy ny maizina. 5 Ary Andriamanitra nanao ny mazava hoe andro; ary ny maizina nataony hoe alina. Dia nisy hariva, ary nisy maraina, andro voalohany izany. 6 Ary Andriamanitra nanao hoe: Misia habakabaka eo anelanelan'ny rano; ary aoka hampisaraka ny rano amin'ny rano izy. 7 Ary Andriamanitra nanao ny habakabakaka ka nampisaraka ny rano ambanin'ny habakabaka tamin'ny rano ambonin'ny habakabaka; dia nisy izany. 8 Ary Andriamanitra nanao ny habakabaka hoe lanitra. Dia nisy hariva, ary nisy maraina, andro faharoa izany.

1-3 Halangdon nga Teofilo:

Daghan na ang nagsulat mahitungod sa mga nanghitabo dinhi kanato. Gisulat nila ang mahitungod kang Jesus sumala sa gibalita kanato niadtong mga tawo nga nagsangyaw sa Maayong Balita ug nakakita mismo sa mga panghitabo gikan pa sa sinugdanan. Mao nga gisusi ko gayod pag-ayo kining tanan gikan pa sa sinugdan. Unya akong nahunahunaan nga isulat usab kanimo kining maong mga panghitabo sa maayong pagkahan-ay, 4 aron imong masiguro nga tinuod gayod ang mga butang nga gisulti kanimo.

Nagpakita ang Anghel kang Zacarias

5 Ingon niini ang nahitabo: Niadtong panahon nga si Herodes ang hari sa Judea, may pari didto nga ginganlan ug Zacarias nga gikan sa kaliwat sa banay ni Abias nga mga pari. Ang iyang asawa mao si Elisabet nga kaliwat usab sa mga pari. 6 Silang duha nagkinabuhi nga matarong atubangan sa Dios. Gituman gayod nila ang tanang mga sugo ug balaod sa Ginoo. 7 Apan wala silay anak, kay dili makaanak si Elisabet ug tigulang na usab kaayo sila.

We marked with 🍷 the languages for which we present an image of the ceramic tile at the Convent of the Pater Noster. We marked with 🍷🍷 the languages for which we have images of multiple ceramic tiles. 🍷 marks the languages for which we present the Hail Mary prayer. 🍷🍷 marks the languages for which we present the Hail Mary and the Lord's Prayer is not available at this time. 🍷 marks the languages for which we present the Apostles' Creed prayer. 🍷 marks the languages for which we present the Rosary prayers. 🍷 marks the languages for which we present other prayers (Prayer to the Holy Spirit, Salve Regina, Sub Tuum, Angelus, Regina Coeli, Sign of the Cross and other prayers). We marked with NT those languages for which we have a complete New Testament in PDF format. We marked with c all constructed languages; (n) temporarily marks the new language pages while (r) temporarily marks the recently revised language pages. All flags displayed on language pages are provided by the FOTW Flags Of The World website at <http://fotw.digibel.be/flags/>.

In each language we can find the prayer/prayers and details on the languages, countries, flags...

From the abovementioned sources we bring the Christian's Lord's Prayer/Our Father/Pater Noster, which is a venerated prayer that, according to the New Testament, was taught by Jesus to his disciples. Two forms of it – in the Gospel of Matthew as part of the Sermon on the Mount, and in the Gospel of Luke, as Jesus told his disciples how to pray. Christianity and its prayers is the most cosmopolitan religion which spread to the whole world in almost all the languages. This time we bring samples of languages, which were not introduced in this book, some of them with reading capabilities and some of them completely different from the languages that I have learned, just in order to catch the flavor of the language and to read in the link to the language details on the different language. Some of the languages were already part of the 120 languages with reading capabilities of The Little Prince, but this time we bring also extinct languages.

1. The Pater Noster in English in the Gospel of Matthew and in standard English is as follows:

Gospel of Matthew

Our Father in heaven,
hallowed be your name.
Your kingdom come,

1988 ELLC – common text

Our Father in heaven,
hallowed be your name,
your kingdom come,

your will be done,
on earth, as it is in heaven.
Give us this day our daily bread,
and forgive us our debts,
as we also have forgiven our debtors.
And lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil.

your will be done,
on earth as in heaven.
Give us today our daily bread.
Forgive us our sins
as we forgive those who sin against us.
Save us from the time of trial and deliver us from evil.
For the kingdom, the power, and the glory are yours now and for ever. Amen.

The Greek and Latin versions are as follows:

2. Original text in Greek

Πάτερ ἡμῶν ὁ ἐν τοῖς οὐρανοῖς· ἁγιασθήτω τὸ ὄνομά σου· ἐλθέτω ἡ βασιλεία σου· γενηθήτω τὸ θέλημά σου·
ὥς ἐν οὐρανῷ καὶ ἐπὶ γῆς· τὸν ἄρτον ἡμῶν τὸν ἐπιούσιον δὸς ἡμῖν σήμερον·
καὶ ἄφες ἡμῖν τὰ ὀφειλήματα ἡμῶν, ὥς καὶ ἡμεῖς ἀφήκαμεν τοῖς ὀφειλέταις ἡμῶν· καὶ μὴ εἰσενέγκῃς ἡμᾶς εἰς πειρασμόν, ἀλλὰ ῥῦσαι ἡμᾶς ἀπὸ τοῦ πονηροῦ.

3. Latin liturgical version

Pater noster, qui es in caelis:
sanctificetur Nomen Tuum;
adveniat Regnum Tuum;
fiat voluntas Tua,
sicut in caelo, et in terra.
Panem nostrum cotidianum da nobis hodie;
et dimitte nobis debita nostra, sicut et nos dimittimus debitoribus nostris;
et ne nos inducas in tentationem;
sed libera nos a Malo.

4. AFRIKAANS, SOUTH AFRICA: Onse Vader wat in die hemele is, laat u Naam geheilig word. Laat u koninkryk kom. Laat u wil geskied, soos in die hemel net so ook op die aarde. Gee ons vandag ons daaglikse brood, En vergeef ons ons skulde, soos ons ook ons skuldenaars vergewe. En lei ons nie in versoeking nie, maar verlos ons van die Bose. Want aan U behoort die koninkryk en die krag en die heerlikheid tot in ewigheid. Amen

88. TAGALOG, PHILIPPINES: Ama namin na nasa langit ka, Sambahin nawa ang pangalan mo. Dumating nawa ang kaharian mo. Gawin nawa ang iyong kalooban, kung paano sa langit, gayon din naman sa lupa. Ibigay mo sa amin ngayon ang aming kakanin sa araw-araw. At ipatawad mo sa amin ang aming mga utang, gaya naman namin na nagpatawad sa mga may utang sa amin. At huwag mo kaming ihatid sa tukso, kundi iligtas mo kami sa masama. Sapagka't iyo ang kaharian, at ang kapangyarihan, at ang kaluwalhatian, magpakailan man. Siya nawa.

116. PORTUGUESE, PORTUGAL, BRAZIL:

João Ferreira de Almeida Atualizada Version

Pai nosso, que estás nos céus, santificado seja o teu nome.
Venha o teu Reino.
Seja feita a tua vontade, tanto na terra como no céu.
O pão nosso de cada dia dá-nos hoje.
Perdoa-nos as nossas dívidas, assim como nós perdoamos aos nossos devedores.
E não nos induzas à tentação,
mas livra-nos do mal;
porque teu é o Reino, e o poder, e a glória, para sempre.
Amém!

117. RUSSIAN, RUSSIA:

Отче наш, сущий на небесах!
 Да святится имя Твое;

We brought in this chapter 120 translations of Pater Noster, but this time we didn't confine ourself only to the languages that I learned and the related languages, mainly the Germanic, Romance and Slavic languages. In this chapter we brought first of all the main languages of Chritianity, French, English, Spanish, Portuguese, Swedish, Norwegian, Danish, German, Dutch, Polish, Ukrainian, Russian, Arabic..., as well as the earliest Christianity languages – Hebrew, Latin, Greek and Aramaic. Then we brought the important/interesting languages, at least according to me (we had to chose among 1,800+ languages) – Chinese, Hindi, Malay, Urdu, Persian, Indonesian, Tagalog, Japanese, Thai, Finnish, Hungarian, Zulu, Xhosa, Wolof, Hausa..., and finally chosen languages from all the six continents: Sioux, Eskimo, Nahuatl, Quechua, Maori, Samoan, Hawaian, Albanian, Latvian, Lithuanian, Estonian, Pidgins and Creoles, local languages in France, Germany, Italy, Spain, etc... Almost all the links have also details on the languages, different versions of the prayer in every language, and Hail Mary as well.

As in some languages we have only the Hail Mary version, we have in Wikisource 70+ translations/versions, we bring here the current English & Latin version as follows, with accents added to indicate how the prayer is said in the current ecclesiastical pronunciation of Latin:

Áve María, grátia pléna,
Dóminus técum.
Benedícta tu in muliéribus,
et benedíctus frúctus véntris túi, Iésus.
Sáncta María, Máter Déi, óra pro nóbis peccatóribus,
nunc et in hóra mórtis nóstrae. Ámen.

In English:

Hail Mary, full of grace,
 the Lord is with thee;
 blessed art thou amongst women,
 and blessed is the fruit of thy womb, Jesus.
 Holy Mary, Mother of God,
 pray for us sinners,
 now and at the hour of our death. Amen.

Turkish. 2. Chinese Mandarin, China. 3. Romani/Gypsy, Romania/Europe. 4. Ancient Egypt Hieroglyphs.

The total number of languages with special references in chapters of this book amounts to 36 – English, French, Ladino, Italian, Spanish, German, Romanian, Hebrew, Interlingua, Portuguese, Aramaic, Dutch, Latin, Russian, Haitian, Greek, Yiddish, Arabic, Provencal, Norwegian, Danish, Swedish, Icelandic, Catalan, Polish, Esperanto, Turkish, Chinese/Mandarin, Mozarabic, Bulgarian, Irish Gaelic, Rumantsch, Asturiano, Gascon, Friulian, Galego.

Languages with extracts in this book amounts to 200+ as follows: 120 languages of Pater Noster (above) from the links of 1817 languages of the prayers, out of the 120 languages of the Little Prince with reading capabilities from the links of 250+ languages of the book – 67 (in bold above) are not included in the languages of Pater Noster and the additional 4 without reading capabilities are included in the languages of Pater Noster, so in total of the two lists of 120 + 120 +4, we have 187 (120+67) languages. On top of that we have 3 additional languages in the 100+ languages of the Internationale – Kurdish in Iraq, Syria and Turkey, Lappish/Sami in northern Russia, Sweden, Norway and Finland, Welsh in western UK. We have 5 more languages in the 444+ languages of the UN Universal Declaration of Human Rights: Forro – Angolan Portuguese, Angola, Nigerian Pidgin English, Nigeria, Occitan Auvergnat – France, Pijin – Solomons Pidgin, Solomon Islands, Sammarinese, San Marino. Finally, 11 more languages from the 400+ languages of the Bible: Azeri – Azerbaijan, Malagasi – Madagascar, Uzbek – Uzbekistan, Cebuano – Philippines, Kabyle – Berber, Algeria, Georgian – Georgia, Chamorro – Guam, Fula/Fulani/Fulfulde – West and Central Africa, Manx Gaelic/Manx, Isle of Man, Uma – Indonesia, Armenian – Armenia. In total 200+ languages (120+67+3+5+11) out of about 2000 languages of the prayers Pater Noster, Hail Mary and others, the Bible, the UN Declaration, the Little Prince, and the Internationale. It is somewhat eclectic to take extracts in this book from various sources as: Pater Noster and the Internationale (they nie kagda meet except in my book, as I have respect and appreciate every cosmopolitan source – communist or religious). The Bible and the Little Prince, with all due respect to Antoine de Saint-Exupery and the hidden messages of his children book it is a miracle how his book was translated in hundreds of languages almost as much as the Bible, which is the best book ever written in human history. I give elsewhere in this book the list of the most translated books and The Little Prince is the most translated (with Pinocchio...), and they exceed by far the best books ever written as Shakespeare's plays, Hugo's and Zola's novels, Goethe's novels and plays, Dante's Divine Comedy, Homer's Odyssey...

I would prefer of course that the most translated books would be the classics, unless the world would adopt my recommendations to learn at least 5 languages at school and read the classics in the original language without losing their flavor. It is encouraging that the best children books are also the most translated – The Little Prince, Pinocchio, Alice's adventures in the wonderland, Andersen's fairy tales, and to a lesser extent Asterix and Tintin. To those we should add classic authors for the youth – Jules Verne, Mark Twain, Heidi, Harry Potter, and the Diary of Anne Frank. This list is in itself cosmopolitan, with authors from France, England, Denmark, Italy, Switzerland, US and Netherlands, but with a strong presence of French authors. There are of course adult cosmopolitan best sellers as Quo Vadis, the Da Vinci Code, and Sherlock Holmes. The classics were translated into 50-100 languages: 100+ for Shakespeare – German, Korean, French, Italian, Japanese, Polish, Finnish, Dutch, Estonian, Czech, Hebrew, Spanish, Ukrainian, Russian, Romanian, Arabic, Chinese, Hindi, Vietnamese, Portuguese, many others and even constructed languages as Esperanto and Interlingua. About 50 translations for Ibsen, Camus, Scott Fitzgerald, Cervantes, dozens of translations to the works by Victor Hugo, Emile Zola... What does it mean? Is it good or bad that the classics were not translated into as many languages as The Little Prince, since indoubtedly their intellectual value exceeds by far this book? As a matter of fact it doesn't matter, as most of the classics were translated into languages that encompass about 95% of the world's population. It is exotic to notice that The Little Prince was translated also in Bourguignon in France, Aragonese in Spain, Ladin in Italy and Saarlandisch in Germany, but all those who still speak those languages (including the Ancient Egyptians) speak currently French, Spanish, Italian, German and Arabic and can read Shakespeare in those languages even if it was not translated to regional languages, to Pidgin or to all the 100+ constructed that exist in the world and have translations of Pater Noster. This is not a race for the largest number of languages, it is a race for the largest number of readers, and I am very pleased to notice that the best authors reach the largest audiences, which increases the cosmopolitanism of the world, as most of the Indians, Chinese, Arabs, Europeans, Africans can read Shakespeare in their mother tongue, unless they live in Papua where there are hundreds of local languages...

You can find herebelow 170+ languages that have an entry on William Shakespeare on Wikipedia, and most of them – more than 100 – have also translations of at least one play of Shakespeare. I have read several plays of Shakespeare, Moliere, Pirandello, novels of Cervantes, Amado, Goethe, and other classics, on top of English, Spanish, Italian, Portuguese, German, and French, translations into those languages as well as into: Haitian, Esperanto, Rumantsch, Interlingua, Romanian, Ladino, Hebrew, Galego, Catalan, Asturiano, Dutch, Swedish, Norwegian, Danish, Afrikaans, Ido, Plattdeutsch, Greek, Arabic, Frysk, Yiddish, Papiamentu... As a matter of fact, when I have problems reading classics in a new language, I read either the classic with a translation in dual language books in German, Russian, Latin, etc. or I read a translation of a classic in the new language, as I have done with Arabic, Catalan, Frysk, etc., and all the translations of The Little Prince, the UN Declaration, the Bible, prayers, poems, songs... In the following list you can find the language with a link to the entry on Shakespeare in the Wikipedia, as well as the name of the language in the original language and in English. Thus, Shqip is Albanian, Hrvatski is Croatian, Suomi is Finnish, Ellinika is Greek, Deutsch is German, Espanol is Spanish, Ivrit is Hebrew, Magyar is Hungarian, Lietuviu is Lithuanian, Eesti is Estonian, Cymraeg is Welsh, Norsk is Norwegian, Cestina is Czech, Srpski with five consecutive consonants is Serbian, and the most difficult: Slovenčina is Slovak, & Slovenščina is Slovenian...

In case that somebody would wonder how I, who am a complete atheist, have devoted so many pages to the translations of Pater Noster, I want to reiterate that my reasons are completely linguistic and the reader who would be converted because of the texts, is doing so a ses risques et perils – at his own peril. I write with great admiration about the Jewish Bible, the New Testament and the Quran, but I refer to them as history, morality and sociological books and not as religious books. Without emitting any opinion on the content of the Pater Noster, I bring here an opposite poem by Jacques Prevert, my favorite poet, from his book Paroles, which I have in my library and read it many times with great admiration: Notre Pere qui êtes aux cieux Restez-y, Our Father who art in heaven Stay there – you have to be a great poet in order to transmit all your attitude towards religion in one line, if there is a God in heaven please stay there as we can manage our affairs much better than when you interfere in religious wars, in endless crimes committed on behalf of religion, on sanctifying the social order where the rich and the mighty control the world with the assistance of religion and its keepers, who participate in the plunder.

Prevert says that we have enough mysteries as good as that of the Trinity, and he juxtaposes the great and small mysteries - the little canal at Ourcq with the great wall of China, the Pacific Ocean with the two basins of the Tuileries Gardens. One should think that because of the simplicity of Prevert's poems it is easy to translate him, this may be true in most of the cases but sometimes there are innuendos that are to the point in French but lose their punch in the translation. Thus - Avec ses bons enfants et ses mauvais sujets - is translated by - With its good children and bad people – which is a literal translation that does not convey the true meaning of Prevert's words. We know too well Prevert to understand that he doesn't like the "good boys", or rather the good ol' boys – he doesn't mean good boys, he means the conformist people, the clique, those who go to church every Sunday but during the week they oppress their employees, their family, or the judges who condemn the poor. On the contrary Prevert admires the "bad people", the bad subjects, who are called bad because they don't pray the Pater Noster, but who are in fact the best people who assist the dejected, like L'Auvergnat, who kiss their sweethearts on the bancs publics, who are not bourgeois and think outside the social norms but in a positive sense, who are not hypocrites as all those whom my grandmother used to call them in Ladino "rovan pitas i besan mezuzot" – in Prevert's context steal from the poor and go to the church to get absolved, with a nice donation to the politicians, good jobs for the civil servants, donations to the church/synagogue, to a school, an hospital or a university, a donation which amounts only to a few percents of the money that they have robbed, in most cases legally from the state, the society or their fellow citizens. Those subtle nuances can never be translated accurately.

Prevert says that we don't need the mysteries of religion as the world is full of marvelous events but also outrageous misfortunes, as he places the priests in the same context of the masters, the traitors, the troops, reminding us also Tango Cambalache – the priests according to him who have betrayed their true calling to help the poors and not to assist the rich, as Jesus did in his times standing with the wretched and opposing the masters and the troops. It goes without saying that all the liars who accuse the Jews of crucifying Jesus have only one purpose – to divert the just rage of the oppressed population against the Jews and not against their masters. Jesus was a Jewish social activist opposing the rich and mighty who collaborated with the Romans, and that is why he was crucified by the rich and the Romans, which if I wanted to attribute the same fallacy of blaming the 20th century Jews of what did two thousand years ago the rich Jews against a Jewish social activist, I would say that the Italians are to blame of the crucification because the Romans were their ancestors, which is of course completely false, but why is it false against the Italians and it is true against the Jews? Jesus was crucified for his activism, for assisting the poors against the rich, but his followers according to Prevert have forgotten his teachings, and religion is in many cases a reactionary institution that receives donations from the rich and the mighty, and give the poors opium for the masses, with all the prayers, the statues, the paintings, the processions, the mysteries, the religious schools, while having forgotten God.

Pater Noster

Notre Père qui êtes aux cieux

Restez-y

Et nous nous resterons sur la terre

Qui est quelquefois si jolie

Avec ses mystères de New York

Et puis ses mystères de Paris

Qui valent bien celui de la Trinité

Avec son petit canal de l'Ourcq

Sa grande muraille de Chine

Sa rivière de Morlaix

Ses bêtises de Cambrai

Avec son Océan Pacifique

Et ses deux bassins aux Tuileries

Avec ses bons enfants et ses mauvais sujets

Avec toutes les merveilles du monde

Qui sont là

Simplement sur la terre

Offertes à tout le monde

Éparpillées

Émerveillées elles-même d'être de telles merveilles

Et qui n'osent se l'avouer

Comme une jolie fille nue qui n'ose se montrer

Avec les épouvantables malheurs du monde

Qui sont légion

Avec leurs légionnaires

Avec leur tortionnaires

Avec les maîtres de ce monde

Les maîtres avec leurs prêtres leurs traîtres et leurs reîtres

Avec les saisons

Avec les années

Avec les jolies filles et avec les vieux cons Avec la paille de la misère pourrissant dans l'acier des canons.

Pater noster
Our Father who art in heaven Stay there
And we'll stay here on earth
Which is sometimes so pretty
With its mysteries of New York And its mysteries of Paris
At least as good as that of the Trinity
With its little canal at Ourcq Its great wall of China
Its river at Morlaix Its candy canes
With its Pacific Ocean And its two basins in the Tuileries
With its good children and bad people
With all the wonders of the world
Which are here Simply on the earth Offered to everyone Strewn about Wondering at the wonder of themselves And daring not avow it
As a naked pretty girl dares not show herself
With the world's outrageous misfortunes
Which are legion With legionaries With torturers
With the masters of this world
The masters with their priests their traitors and their troops
With the seasons With the years With the pretty girls and with the old bastards
With the straw of misery rotting in the steel of cannons.

And finally, one of the most touching songs ever written: La Priere, The Prayer, Hail Mary, by Francis Jammes, with music of Georges Brassens, the song with French/English subtitles.

Par le petit garçon qui meurt près de sa mère	Par les gosses battus, par l'ivrogne qui rentre
Tandis que des enfants s'amuse au parterre	Par l'âne qui reçoit des coups de pied au ventre
Et par l'oiseau blessé qui ne sait pas comment	Et par l'humiliation de l'innocent châtié
Son aile tout à coup s'ensanglante et descend	Par la vierge vendue qu'on a déshabillée
Par la soif et la faim et le délire ardent	Par le fils dont la mère a été insultée
Je vous salue, Marie.	Je vous salue, Marie.

Par la vieille qui, trébuchant sous trop de poids
S'écrie : « Mon Dieu ! » par le malheureux dont les bras
Ne purent s'appuyer sur une amour humaine
Comme la Croix du Fils sur Simon de Cyrène
Par le cheval tombé sous le chariot qu'il traîne
Je vous salue, Marie.

Par les quatre horizons qui crucifient le monde
Par tous ceux dont la chair se déchire ou succombe
Par ceux qui sont sans pieds, par ceux qui sont sans mains
Par le malade que l'on opère et qui geint
Et par le juste mis au rang des assassins
Je vous salue, Marie.

Par la mère apprenant que son fils est guéri
Par l'oiseau rappelant l'oiseau tombé du nid
Par l'herbe qui a soif et recueille l'ondée
Par le baiser perdu par l'amour redonné
Et par le mendiant retrouvant sa monnaie
Je vous salue, Marie

18. UN'S UNIVERSAL DECLARATION OF HUMAN RIGHTS, DOCUMENT MOST TRANSLATED IN THE WORLD ~ 444 LANGUAGES, LINKS, LISTS, LADINO, FORRO, NIGERIAN PIDGIN, SOLOMONS PIDGIN, OCCITAN AUVERGNAT, SAMMARINESE...

UNITED NATIONS UNIVERSAL DECLARATION OF HUMAN RIGHTS – THE DOCUMENT MOST TRANSLATED IN THE WORLD TO ~ 444 LANGUAGES. AT CORY'S LIBRARY IN ~ 100 LANGUAGES, INCLUDING LADINO TRANSLATED BY CORY ET AL, READING CAPABILITIES: 70+.

The Universal Declaration of Human Rights is the Most Universal Document in the World

The Office of the High Commissioner for Human Rights has been awarded the Guinness World Record for having collected, translated and disseminated the Universal Declaration of Human Rights into more than 300 languages and dialects: from Abkhaz to Zulu. The Universal Declaration is thus the document most translated - indeed, the most "universal" - in the world.

In the words of the former High Commissioner for Human Rights, Mary Robinson: "This project bears a special symbolism. It immediately brings to us a sense of the world's diversity; it is a rich tapestry with so many different languages and peoples. But, at the same time, it shows that all of us, in our different forms of expression, can speak the "common language of humanity", the language of human rights, which is enshrined in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights."

This project, developed in the framework of the United Nations Decade for Human Rights Education (1995-2004), provides an example of what global partnership for human rights is about. It was made possible thanks to the cooperative efforts by many partners within and outside the United Nations system: OHCHR and its field presences; the UN Department of Public Information (DPI) and many of its Information Centres and Services (UNICs and UNISs) around the world; the International Telecommunication Union (ITU); the United Nations Development Programme and its field presences (UNDP); UNESCO with some of its National Commissions and Regional Office); various Governments and their Permanent Missions to the United Nations; selected universities and linguistic institutes; numerous international, regional and local non governmental organizations; and the Government of the Republic of San Marino, who generously sponsored the final phase of this project.

We have gathered in this book in one document (on the UN's website there are several documents) links to all the 444 translations of the UN Universal Declaration of Human Rights, but this number increases every year as there are much more languages throughout the world. Among the translations we can find Ladino, mother tongue of Jacques Cory, who initiated this translation, received the instructions and approvals of the UN, translated with Ladinokomunita the document, and edited it with Rachel Bortnick. Cory has reading capabilities of more than 70 languages, and has in his library more than 100 translations of the Declaration. We included the full translation into Ladino, translation of the first 7 articles in Forro – Angolan Portuguese, Nigerian Pidgin English, Occitan Auvergnat, Pijin – Solomon's Pidgin, Sammarinese – San Marino.

Text of the translation of the Declaration into Ladino, initiated by Jacques Cory, contacting the UN offices, getting the UN approvals, the translation was executed by Jacques Cory with Ladinokomunita, edited by Cory and Rachel Bortnick, the details on the Ladino language:

Profile
Native	Name	None
Total Speakers	120,000 (estimated)
Usage	By	Country
Estimated number of home speakers in 2010: Israel (60, 000), Turkey (6,000), and fewer in Greece, Bulgaria, France, Spain, United States, Latin America, and other countries throughout the world where Sephardic Jews live.
Background
Ladino is a Spanish-based language spoken by the Sephardic Jews of the former Ottoman Empire. "Sephardic" derives from Sepharad, the Hebrew word for Spain, and refers to the Iberic origin of these Jews who, having been expelled en masse from Spain in 1492 and from Portugal shortly thereafter, were dispersed throughout Europe and the Mediterranean basin. Ladino developed as a distinct Jewish language in the Ottoman Empire, where most of the Sephardic exiles (about 200,000) had settled. Though basically Medieval Castilian, with influence of other Medieval Iberic languages (such as Aragonese, Catalan, and Portuguese) it incorporates many words and phrases from Hebrew, Turkish, Greek, Italian, French, and other languages with which it came in contact. (A parallel Judeo-Spanish dialect, Haketia, developed in North Africa with much Arabic influence.) Its grammatical structure is close to that of Spanish, and the language can be understood by Spanish speakers if the foreign loan words are kept to a minimum.
Until the twentieth century Ladino was written in Hebrew letters, mostly in the Rashi type, both in print and in cursive writing. It has been written in Latin characters since the advent of Western education, and, in Turkey, since the alphabet reform of 1928 (which instituted the Latin alphabet for Turkish.) The spelling system preferred by most native speakers today, and used in this translation, was established 30 years ago by the Israeli all-Ladino cultural review "Aki Yerushalayim", and is, in essence, the phonetic transcription in Latin letters of the former writing in Hebraic letters.

Deklarasion Universal de Diritos Umano

Prefasio

Konsiderando ke la libertad, la djustisia i la paz en el mundo tienen por baza el rekonosimiento de la dinyidad propia esensiala i de los diritos iguales i no violavles de todos los miembros de la famiya umana,

Konsiderando ke el deskonosimiento i el despresio de los diritos umanos tienen kavzado aktos de barbaridad ke solevantan la konsensia de la umanidad; i ke fue proklamado komo la aspirasion mas alta del ombre, la yegada de un mundo en el kual los umanos, liberados del espanto i de la mizeria, gozaren de la libertad de la palavra i de la libertad de kreencias, Konsiderando ke es esensial ke los diritos umanos sean protejados por un rejimen de derecho, para ke el ombre no se veyga ovligado, komo ultimo remedio, de revoltarse kontra la tirania i la opresion,

Konsiderando tambien ke es esensial de favorizar la formasion de relaciones de amistad entre las nasiones,

Konsiderando ke los pueblos de las Naciones Unidas afirmaron de nuevo en la Karta sus fey en los diritos fundamentales del ombre, en la dinyidad i la valor de la persona umana i en la igualdad de diritos de ombres i mujeres; i se deklararon dechididos a favorizar el progreso sosial i a elevar el nivel de vida kon un konsepto mas ancho de la libertad,

Konsiderando ke los Estados Miembros prometieron de asigurar, en kooperasion kon la Organizasion de las Naciones Unidas, el respekto universal i efektivo a los diritos i libertades fundamentales del ombre, i

Konsiderando ke una konsepsion komuna de estos diritos i libertades es de la mas grande emportansa para kumplir kompletamente la dicha prometa,

III. SURVEY ON MODERN WORLD LITERATURE

1. LE MONDE'S LIST OF THE BEST 100 BOOKS OF 20TH CENTURY WITH LINKS AND CORY'S COMMENTS, AND LINKS TO OTHER LISTS OF BEST BOOKS, ETC.

The 100 Books of the Century (French: Les cent livres du siècle) is a list of the one hundred best books of the 20th century, according to a poll conducted in the spring of 1999 by the French retailer Fnac and the Paris newspaper Le Monde. Starting from a preliminary list of 200 titles created by bookshops and journalists, 17,000 French voters responded to the question, "Which books have stayed in your memory?" The list of acclaimed titles mixes great novels with poetry and theatre, as well as the comic strip. The list emphasizes French novels more, because of the demographics of the surveyed group. But for me it does not distort the results, as anyhow most of the books that I have ever read, and especially the classical/great books, were in French. The reader of my book can find in this list links to the Wikipedia on the books and the authors.

Before analyzing the list, which I find excellent in general, I must mention the lacunas of the list: first of all – it is unbelievable that in a French survey we do not find among the 100 best authors and books one of the best authors of the 20th century if not the best one, at least the one whom I like most – Marcel Pagnol. How the French people forgot Jean de Florette, Manon, Marius, Topaze, Cesar, Fanny, La femme du boulanger, Les marchands de gloire, La gloire de mon père, Le château de ma mere, some of the best novels, plays and films written and directed by Pagnol! The list introduces the mediocre Françoise Sagan but forgets the masterpieces of Marcel Pagnol.

I assume that the list includes the best authors and not the best sellers, but if Gone with the Wind by Margaret Mitchell is included I cannot see how excellent authors of best sellers such as the German Erich Maria Remarque and the Spanish Vicente Blasco-Ibanez are not included. Among the 100 best authors/books of the century we should find at least 10 authors who are not Europeans – as almost all the authors in the list are Europeans. Even if you are a Eurocentrist you cannot overlook the Indian Rabindranath Tagore, the Arab/Egyptian Naguib Mahfouz, the Chinese Mo Yan, the Yiddish writer Isaac Bashevis Singer, the Peruvian Mario Vargas Llosa, all of whom won the Nobel Prize for literature. Other prominent authors are not included as well – the Portuguese Jose Saramago, the Brazilian Jorge Amado, the Japanese Haruki Murakami, the Nigerian Chinua Achebe, the Germans Lion Feuchtwanger, Heinrich Mann, and Franz Werfel, the Americans Sinclair Lewis, Arthur Miller, Tennessee Williams, Eugene O'Neill, the Irish George Bernard Shaw, and the Israelis Shai Agnon, Moshe Shamir, Benjamin Tammuz, Amos Oz and Joshua Sobol. I have enjoyed reading books, plays and stories by all of them and they should be included in the list, as I intend to do subsequently in my own list of the best writers.

I intend to analyze the list and write about all the books from the list that I have read. I was pleased to learn that I have read most of the books in the list, in other cases I am reading them or I have read books by the same authors. I have read most of the books in the original language – French, English, Spanish, Italian, German. I have read several times most of the top 10 books: The Stranger by Albert Camus – by far one of the best novels ever written, modernism at its best. In Search of Lost Time (but not all the parts of the monumental books) by Marcel Proust – the books captivate you like a dream, you are carried away in a magnificent road. The Trial by Franz Kafka (it is indeed a masterpiece) – all Kafka's books are my favorites, you sense the horror, you are lost and don't understand what happens to you, many times in my life I felt like in The Trial. The Little Prince by Antoine de Saint-Exupéry in many languages and extracts in 120+ languages (see details in my book), a good book that doesn't deserve its immortal glory.

Man's Fate by Andre Malraux – this modern book brings you to China, I have read most of Malraux's books who are excellent. Journey to the End of the Night by Louis-Ferdinand Celine - interesting. The Grapes of Wrath by John Steinbeck (I have also seen the masterpiece film) – a captivating book with a social message so remote from the existing neoliberal regime. For Whom the Bell Tolls (I have also seen the film and other films based on the 100 books) by Ernest Hemingway – Hemingway is one of my favorite authors, I like particularly his style, and the different scenery of each book. Le Grand Meaulnes by Alain-Fournier - interesting, Froth on the Daydream by Boris Vian – it is funny, marvelous and fantastic, a precursor of modernism.

No. 11-20 – I have not read The Second Sex by Simone de Beauvoir but I have read other books by her – I respect very much her feminist struggle. I have read and seen several times the play Waiting for Godot by Samuel Beckett, and I still don't understand how do I like so much and understand perfectly modern and absurd plays like the ones by Beckett, Ionesco, and Pinter, but don't understand and like modern art? I have not read Being and Nothingness by Jean-Paul Sartre (I don't read often philosophy books as this book by Sartre and the previous book by his companion de Beauvoir), but I have read most of his books and seen most of his plays. The books I like most are L'age de raison, Le sursis, La mort dans l'ame, horrifying and actual.

I have not read The Name of the Rose by Umberto Eco, I have seen the film, and read other books by him in Italian. I have not read The Gulag Archipelago by Aleksandr Solzhenitsyn (I have it in my library but don't have the courage to read it, as it is too "dark", although I have read other "lighter" books by him). It is too difficult for me to read it in Russian, I read only the translation of The Trial from German, but read the other books in the original language – French or English. I have read several times Paroles by Jacques Prevert, who is my favorite poet. From all poetry I like most modern poetry, which I sense in my guts. Alcools by Guillaume Apollinaire – I read some of his poems and books. It is amazing how most of the books in this list are "difficult" books like the books by Kafka, Camus, Malraux, Vian, Sartre, Beckett...

The Blue Lotus by Herge, Tintin, are nice commics series, not exactly my cup of tea, although I read in my youth quite often Tintin. The Diary of a Young Girl by Anne Frank – the most tragic, comic and human diary ever written. I read it several times in many languages and now in Dutch, saw many times films and plays on the tragic fate of Anne Frank. Tristes tropiques by Claude Levi-Straus – I never read it and never heard of it, but if I had time I would read it with pleasure.

I have read and enjoyed most of the subsequent books, such as Brave New World by Aldous Huxley, Nineteen Eighty-Four by George Orwell (I have read his other books as Animal Farm, Homage to Catalonia..., seen films, plays, I sense myself so close to him). Asterix the Gaul by Rene Goscinny and Albert Uderzo, as said before commics are not exactly by cup of tea, but once in a while I read them. The Bald Soprano, by Eugene Ionesco – Ionesco is my favorite surrealist playwright – I teach Rhinoceros in my courses, read and seen most of his plays. I have not read Three Essays on the Theory of Sexuality by Sigmund Freud but read by him – Eine Kindheitserinnerung des Leonardo da Vinci in German/French and many books about him, as Marthe Robert's – From Oedipus to Moses: Freud's Jewish Identity. I have read other books by Marguerite Yourcenar and Vladimir Nabokov (although I have seen the film Lolita), I have read twice Ulysses by James Joyce (see dissertation on Joyce in the English chapter), I have never heard of Dino Buzzati who comes right after Joyce (nos. 28-29), which is quite strange as Joyce is perceived as the best author of the twentieth century and Buzzati is almost unknown!

I have read many books by Andre Gide, whom I like very much, including The Counterfeiters, Jean Giono is excellent, I have read all the books by Albert Cohen including Belle du Seigneur and saw films on his books – he is one of my favorite authors and I have many affinities to him, I have read One Hundred Years of Solitude by Gabriel Garcia Marquez but didn't like it, although

I acknowledge that he is a great writer. I have read The Sound and the Fury by William Faulkner – very modern, Therese Desqueyroux by Francois Mauriac who is one of my favorite writers (I saw also the film) – I read it and think of Emile Zola. I have read and enjoyed Zazie in the Metro by Raymond Queneau (no. 36), which is quite nice, but insignificant in comparison to the masterpieces of Marcel Pagnol who don't appear in this list. I have read other books and excellent biographies by Stefan Zweig, who is an excellent writer. I have read and seen several times the film Gone with the Wind by Margaret Mitchell, although if a best seller like this is included in the list, many other and even better best sellers should be included as stated above. I have read most of the books by D.H. Lawrence, including Lady Chatterley's Lover, and seen most of the films based on his books. I am still trying to finish The Magic Mountain by Thomas Mann in German, whose sentences catch half a page, but I have read many other books by him in translations as Buddenbrooks and he is indeed one of the best writers of the 20th century, as his brother Heinrich Mann, with masterpieces as Professor Unrat, who is not included in the list.

I have read most of the books by Françoise Sagan, including Bonjour Tristesse, but she is an insignificant writer, and until now I cannot understand what was the reason for her fame, including the many films based on her books, which I have seen as well. I have read her books in German when I wanted to learn German, as the translation was very easy to read. Her books are fit for reading on a plane during a couple of hours, if you are not too tired, and even if you are you can go to sleep and will not lose anything. The secret of her success maybe in the fact that although I don't appreciate her I have read her books and seen the films, so she writes probably in a lovely kitsch. Yet, she is on no. 41 and Marcel Pagnol is not in the list, unforgivable...

Le Silence de la mer by Vercors – a very good and captivating book. Life: a User's Manual by Georges Perec – at last a comic book which is delightful to read. The Hound of the Baskervilles by Arthur Conan Doyle, I have read many of Sherlock Holmes' books and seen films based on the book, they are by far the best detective stories that I have read. Under the Sun of Satan by Georges Bernanos – I had a problem with Bernanos, who was at least at the beginning of his career an anti-Semite. He is a fervent catholic, and writes many books on priests and catholicism, frankly, I have so many books to read that a book by an anti-Semite is not on top priority. I may read books, hear music or watch films by anti-Semites or anti-Israelis but only if their work does not permeate their anti-Semitism, like Wagner, Theodorakis, Saramago, or Ken Loach.

The Great Gatsby by F. Scott Fitzgerald, one of the best books ever written, that I have introduced in my business ethics courses. The author's style, social orientation, are exactly what I expect from good literature. The Joke by Milan Kundera (at last a Czech book, that is not French, Spanish, Italian, German, English or Russian, as almost all the other books in the list) – I have read other books by him and seen films based on his books, Kundera is an excellent author who understands so well the human nature, especially the anti-heroes. Contempt by Alberto Moravia, I have read many books by Moravia, most of them in Italian, and have seen many films based on his books. I think that Moravia is one of the best authors in the world, a very modern writer. The murder of Roger Ackroyd by Agatha Christie, I have read many books by this author and seen many films based on her books, she is one of the best detective writers. No. 50 -Nadja by Andre Breton, an interesting surrealist essay, a new form of novel – semi documentary, semi fantastic.

From the next 50 books/authors I would like to mention books that I have read by some of the best authors whom personally I would give a much higher rank, such as Bertolt Brecht – the most influential and prolific playwright of the 20th century who wrote masterpieces such as The Threepenny Opera, Mother Courage and the Resistible Rise of Arturo Ui. Luigi Pirandello who wrote Six Characters in Search of an Author, Each in His Own Way, Tonight We Improvise, The Late Mattia Pascal. Louis Aragon who is one of my favorite authors, the unforgettable The War of the Worlds by H. G. Wells, The Satin Slipper by Paul Claudel, most famous for his verse dramas, which often convey his devout Catholicism. I enjoyed very much reading this long play, which shows Catholicism at its best, as I am not prejudiced against any religion, and I can enjoy books or plays that are masterpieces even if I have different opinions. I understand that J. R. R. Tolkien was introduced in this list with The Lord of the Rings, although I don't enjoy at all high-fantasy novels and films. Colette is in this list and I have read most of her kitsch novels and seen many of the films based on her novels. One cannot restrict himself to read all day Shakespeare or Sartre, and it is fine if one reads from time to time kitsch novels by Colette or Sagan, watch kitsch films like many Indian films, detective novels/films by Christie, Connan Doyle, or Simenon, and best sellers as Tai-Pan by James Clavell, Exodus by Leon Uris, The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse by Vicente Blasco Ibanez, All Quiet on the Western Front by Erich Maria Remarque, Les Mysteres de Paris by Eugene Sue, Cuore by Edmondo de Amicis, etc.

Back to the list – I have read and enjoyed many poems by Paul Eluard, and I appreciate very much that the list includes many poets. Jack London is one of my favorites, Heinrich Boll is an excellent German modern writer, I am reading now Selma Lagerlof in Swedish and Knut Hamsun in Norwegian, although unfortunately the later is not in the list, Marguerite Duras is a fine author whose novels were filmed quite frequently. Virginia Woolf is undoubtedly one of the best authors of the 20th century and she has captivating style and stories. I enjoy reading Nathalie Sarraute, Jules Renard and Joseph Conrad. In a totally different sphere the list comprises the best of the best, the unforgettable John Dos Passos in Manhattan Transfer, but unfortunately it does not include Sinclair Lewis who is as good as Dos Passos. Jorge Luis Borges is excellent, and so are Blaise Cendrars, Ismail Kadare, and William Styron, with his mesmerizing Sophie's Choice. Federico Garcia Lorca is one of my favorite authors and I quote him often in my book – plays and poetry. Georges Simenon, one of the best authors of detective stories is in the list as well.

I have read and watched many plays by Jean Genet in Israel and France. Early in his life he was a vagabond and petty criminal, but later took to writing. Genet works to subvert the traditional set of moral values of his assumed readership. He celebrates a beauty in evil, emphasizes his singularity, raises violent criminals to icons, and enjoys the specificity of gay gesture and coding and the depiction of scenes of betrayal. Nevertheless, one can enjoy his writings even if you don't adhere to his philosophy. He may be perceived as the antithesis of Paul Claudel, but if you are open to experience different styles and topics of literature, you can enjoy both authors. One more example of an author who became famous by only one book, that is excellent, yet it is only one book is J. D. Salinger and his book The Catcher in the Rye, who did not write much after this book and let a very private life for more than a half century. James Hadley Chase was one of the best known thriller writers of all time. The canon of Chase, comprising 90 titles, earned him a reputation as the king of thriller writers in Europe. He was also one of the internationally best-selling authors, and, so far, 50 of his books have been made into films. I presume that every lover of books has read at least one of his books and seen at least one of the films based on them.

Rainer Maria Rilke is a very loved author, and so is Mikhail Bulgakov. Hannah Arendt's works deal with the nature of power, and the subjects of politics, direct democracy, authority, and totalitarianism. One of her books that I enjoy most is The Origins of Totalitarianism (1951), which traced the roots of Stalinism and Nazism in both anti-Semitism and imperialism. Another of her books is well-known is Eichmann in Jerusalem: a Report on the Banality of Evil. Arendt, a Jewish/German/American author, is a very controversial figure and I have seen films and plays based on her life. Henry Miller's books were prohibited but many youngsters found a way to read them anyhow. Raymond Chandler's crime stories and the films based on them have become classic. André Franquin (3 January 1924 – 5 January 1997) was an influential Belgian comics artist, whose best known comic strip creations are Gaston and Marsupilami, created while he worked on the Spirou et Fantasio comic strip from 1947 to 1969, during a period seen by many as the series' golden age. Spirou/Marsupilami was my favorite comic strip when I was a boy.

Finally, on no. 100 we find Salman Rushdie, a Muslim Indian. It is difficult for me to judge from his novel Midnight's Children, about the controversy that ensued the publication of The Satanic Verses, with a fatwā requiring Rushdie's execution that was proclaimed on Radio Tehran by Ayatollah Khomeini, the spiritual leader of Iran at the time, calling the book "blasphemous against Islam" (chapter IV of the book depicts the character of an Imam in exile who returns to incite revolt from the people of his country with no regard for their safety). A bounty was offered for Rushdie's death, and he was thus forced to live under police protection for several years. On 7 March 1989, the United Kingdom and Iran broke diplomatic relations over the Rushdie controversy. This fatwa reminds us of the burning of books by the Inquisition, the Nazis, and the most fanatic regimes in world's history. I personally have a great respect for the Quran, which I show all over my book, but I don't believe that books or people should be burned because of their ideas. Anyhow, if Jewish fatwas would be issued on every Satanic Verses written against the Jews and Israel in the last fifty years, including by Iran, Palestinians, and Muslims who are so touchy on their prophets but advocate Nazi propaganda against the Jews, thousands (or much more) of fanatic anti-Semites should go on hiding as Rushdie did. But fortunately, Jews and Israelis are democrats and liberals and don't threaten those who write horrible lies against them.

The list by Le Monde is excellent but undoubtedly biased, first of all towards French literature – half of the books – or 49 – are French, and it is also Eurocentrist as only in no. 100 we find an Indian and a Muslim, although writing in English, and there are no Chinese, Japanese, other Asians, Africans, Latin Americans (except Borges and Marquez), Arabs, Yiddish and Israeli writers. Even if we bear in mind that non-European authors are not so popular, and even if there are some who think that they are not as good as the Europeans (which sounds racist) although many of them were awarded the Literature Nobel Prize, I am quite sure that at least 10 or probably 20 non-Europeans and non-Americans should be inserted in such a list, taking into consideration at least Nobel Prize winners and non-Europeans best sellers as those of Murakami, Amado, Vargas Llosa, Amos Oz, Mahfouz. Right after the French authors, including also some Belgian – Yourcenar, Irish – Beckett, and Romanian – Ionesco, authors writing in French, come the English authors – 27, more than a quarter, who include English, Irish – James Joyce, French Canadian – Kerouac, Pole – Conrad, Russian – Nabokov, and Indian – Rushdie – authors, as well as 11 American authors – Henry Miller, Salinger, Chandler, Steinbeck, Hemingway, Faulkner, Mitchell, Scott-Fitzgerald, London, Bradbury, Styron, writing in English, in total 27 authors.

Then the authors writing in German – 9, including Austrian – Freud, Zweig, Musil, Rilke, German – Thomas Mann, Brecht, Boll, Arendt, and Czech – Kafka, authors. 6 Italian authors: Umberto Eco, Buzzati, Moravia, Pirandello, Primo Levi, Hugo Pratt. 3 authors writing in Spanish: the Colombian Gabriel Garcia Marquez, the Argentinian Jorge Luis Borges, and the Spanish Federico Garcia Lorca. 2 Russians: Solzhenitsyn, Bulgakov. 1 Albanian Muslim author – Ismail Kadare. 1 Swedish author – Selma Lagerlof. 1 Czech author – Milan Kundera. 1 Dutch author – Anne Frank. There are much more European authors, others than those writing in French and English, more than three quarter, who should be in the list if it was prepared objectively (but who is objective after all, I am not objective either) – such as the Pole Witold Gombrowicz, the Italians Curzio Malaparte (Kaputt), Elsa Morante (Mezzogna e sortilegio), Italo Svevo (La coscienza di Zeno), Pier Paolo Pasolini (poetry), Norwegian Knut Hamsun (Hunger), Greek Nikos Kazantzakis (Zorba the Greek), Dutch/Flemish – Hugo Claus (Het Verdriet van België), Simon Vestdijk (De koperen tuin), Brazil (Jorge Amado), other French, English...

The list comprises actually the best 100 authors of the 20th century as only one book by every author is included. Furthermore, I would prefer to prepare a list of the 100 best authors, as Le Monde's list comprises books by authors who have only written only one or a few good books, while there are other authors who were not included in the list who have written many excellent books, possibly not as good as the unique books by the authors who appear in the list. I have in mind for example Le Grand Meaulnes by Alain-Fournier which is good, but if we bear in mind that he almost didn't write anything valuable subsequently I wouldn't give him the very prestigious ranking no. 9 in the list, while authors who have written novels, plays and scenarios at least as good as Le Grand Meaulnes were not introduced in the list like Marcel Pagnol, Saramago, Vargas Llosa, Amado, Mahfouz, Agnon, Murakami, Feuchtwanger, Werfel, Oz, etc.

2. THE 100 BEST NOVELS IN ENGLISH BY THE MODERN LIBRARY

An alternative list is the list of the 100 Best Novels in English by the Modern Library, in two configurations: The Board's List and The Reader's List. I have read most of the books in those two lists, where the same author has several books, not like Le Monde's list where every author has only one book. The Board's List differs from the Reader's List by the popularity of the books as chosen by the readers, and I'll refer to the first two books in the Reader's List: Atlas Shrugged and The Fountainhead by Ayn Rand. As for many readers, Ayn Rand was one of my favorite authors when I was a youngster, but I changed completely my way of thinking subsequently and I view now Ayn Rand as one of the most dangerous authors, whose novels have influenced very important people and induced them to chose a neoliberal ideology disregarding completely the welfare of society and the feeble, and choosing to worship only the Übermensch, the most successful, the "best" people, the richest, most talented, while all the others get lost... Ayn Rand was a libertarian, supported rational and ethical egoism, and rejected altruism. In politics, she condemned the initiation of force as immoral and opposed collectivism and statism as well as anarchism, instead supporting laissez-faire capitalism, based on recognizing individual rights.

3. LIST OF THE 100 BEST AUTHORS OF THE 20TH CENTURY BY JACQUES CORY WITH COMMENTS

I chose my own list of the best authors of the 20th century, which I hope is more balanced than Le Monde's list, although it is biased to French and English authors. I think that those authors are the best, but I reckon that my list is subjective as all the others, including also primarily European languages, as well as Israeli authors and even Yiddish & Ladino authors. Yet, I reckon that about 20% of the list should be international. I include in the list books in the different languages but I don't rate the books within every language and of course I don't rate the languages. In case that an author from a different nationality writes a book in a different language I mention the nationality, for example Nabokov is a Russian author writing in English and he'll be in the list of English (the language) authors, unless in the case of Indian, Nigerian or Kenyan authors who write in English but primarily on local subjects – in this case those authors are comprised in the category of Nigerian, Indian or Kenyan. The authors are excellent and I don't think that it is possible to rate them within the category of 100 or 200 best authors – who is best Kafka or Sartre, both are excellent. Nevertheless, I put in Bold the best of the best, the crème de la crème, without rating the authors within the category of the best of the best. I put in Italics the authors who were awarded a Nobel Prize in Literature. Some of them are included in my lists, but some of them are not. Nevertheless, I mention also the Nobel Prize laureates who are not in my lists, as I try to be as objective as possible, and if I don't know them or have not read any of their books, it doesn't mean that they are not excellent, therefore I mention them without including them in my lists. I have also added another category for the three leading literatures – French, English and German – books in excess of the list of the best authors, as otherwise the proportion of those languages would be too great. I have read books by almost all those authors and of course I don't rate the books of every author as most of them are excellent – what is better Topaze or Marius by Marcel Pagnol? – so I include only the authors but not the books. The list of the books can be found in the list of "20th century in Literature" on Wikipedia.

THE LEADING LITERATURES – FRENCH, ENGLISH, GERMAN

1. French/Belgian – Marcel Proust, Marcel Pagnol, Jean-Paul Sartre (1964 – declined), Jacques Prevert, Jean Anouilh, Albert Camus (1957), Andre Malraux, Andre Gide (1947), Francois Mauriac (1952), Eugene Ionesco (Romanian), Samuel Beckett (1969, Irish), Albert Cohen (Swiss, born in Greece), Louis Aragon, Louis-Ferdinand Celine, Antoine de Saint-Exupery, Simone de Beauvoir, Jean Giraudoux, Jean Giono, Georges Duhamel, Paul Claudel, Colette, Paul Eluard, Jules Romains, Jean Genet, Andre Maurois. 25 authors, a quarter of the original list, among them 12 are the best authors of the list. My best authors, whom I read with pleasure most of their books, of course in French, are first of all Pagnol, Sartre (novels, plays, and an excellent biography), Prevert (his unique poetry), Anouilh (his excellent and modern plays), and Cohen (one of the best novelists of 20th century, his Jewish characters are unforgettable). But I enjoy reading also Gide, Camus, Maurois, Anouilh, Malraux, Mauriac, Ionesco, Duhamel and Colette. I have written at length in my book about Pagnol's plays and novels, Ionesco's Rhinoceros, etc. I could write long articles about every author in this list, on some of them I have written indeed in Hebrew, but this book is long enough anyway...

If we include other outstanding authors and authors of best sellers we add: Françoise Sagan, Jules Renard, Alain-Fournier, Guillaume Apollinaire, Hergé (Belgian), René Goscinny and Albert Uderzo, Raymond Queneau, Vercors, André Breton, Marguerite Duras, Nathalie Sarraute, Blaise Cendrars, Georges Simenon (Belgian), Georges Perec, Marguerite Yourcenar (Belgian), Jean Cocteau, whom I like very much, Marcel Aymé, François-Regis Bastide, Pierre Daninos, Maurice Barres, Georges Bernanos, Maurice Druon whom I like very much, Joseph Kessel...

I differ from the anti-Semitic writings of Maurice Barres and Georges Bernanos, still they are good writers worth to be included at least in the list of the authors on top of the 25. In the opposite spectrum we find two of my favorite authors – Maurice Druon, author of Les grandes familles that I read and saw the film, and his uncle Joseph Kessel, author of L'armée des ombres and many other books that were adapted to excellent films that I saw). In 1943 Joseph Kessel and his nephew Maurice Druon translated Anna Marly's song Chant des Partisans into French from its original Russian. The song became one of the anthems of the Free French Forces during the Second World War. The Chant des Partisans is one of the best songs ever written, with poignant lyrics (that can be watched in the link) and music. This is probably the ultimate answer to the anti-Semitic writers that two of the best French authors who wrote the most patriotic French song were Jewish, born. But this should not surprise us as the author (lyrics and music) of the most patriotic American song God Bless America – Irving Berlin – was Jewish too, born in Russia, named Israel, who changed his name from Ballin to Berlin... This is ironic as the three authors of the most patriotic songs were Jews from Russian origin and not French or American from many generations, but their songs symbolized the spirit of World War II for the allied French and American people, and were sung by millions then and today, after 9/11 by Celine Dion.

Back to the list - Roger Martin du Gard (1937), Romain Gary/Émile Ajar/Roman Kacew (Russian), Jacques Lanzmann, Pierre Loti, Raymond Radiguet (died at the age of 20), Christiane Rochefort, Romain Rolland (1915), Elsa Triolet (Russian), Michel Zévaco, Marek Halter (Pole) – I have read with pleasure many of his books, Charles Peguy, Francis Jammes, Émile Verhaeren (Belgian), Anna de Noailles, Max Jacob, Sacha Guitry (I have seen many of his plays), Paul Valéry, Henri Bergson (1927), Tristan Tzara (Romanian), Marcel Achard, Henri Troyat, who has written many excellent biographies. On top of the 25 authors we can find 45 more authors who were not included because I have decided to restrict arbitrarily the list of any literature in a language to 25 authors, or a quarter of the total list. So, we have three layers – 12 are the best of the best, 25 are in the list, 45 are in excess of the list, or 70 in total. We'll include those authors in the configurations of the list. Almost all the authors are French, some of them have a foreign origin. There are 4 Belgians, 2 Russians, 2 Romanians, 1 Pole, 1 Swiss and 1 Irish. I do not include Nobel Laureates in the lists beyond the 8 in the list of the 25 and the excess authors. However, there are more laureates who are not included at all in my lists but should be mentioned here: 1. Patrick Modiano (2014), 2. J. M. G. Le Clezio (2008), 3. Claude Simon (1985), 4. Saint-John Perse (1960), 5. Anatole France (1921) – an outstanding author whose main activities were in the 19th century. 6. Frédéric Mistral (1904) – who wrote in Provençal, and is mentioned and quoted in the Provençal chapter of this book. 7. Sully Prudhomme – 1901. In total 15 (8+7) French authors were Nobel Prize Laureates in Literature. To those authors we have to add a Belgian Nobel Prize winner author - 8. Maurice Maeterlinck (1911), so in total there are 16 (8+8) Nobel Prize laureates in French. If we add the 8 Nobel laureates not in my lists, we arrive to a total of 78 authors in French. To this number we have to add the French author who is in my cosmopolitan list (1), as well as the African authors who write in French, but write mainly about African subjects (4) amounting to 83, but we'll restrict to the original list of 70 authors, as we don't want to duplicate my lists with authors appearing in Cosmopolitan and African lists.

2. English/American/Irish – Ernest Hemingway (1954, US), D. H. Lawrence, Arthur Miller (US), Tennessee Williams (US), Sinclair Lewis (1930, US), F. Scott Fitzgerald (US), John Steinbeck (1962, US), James Joyce (Irish), William Faulkner (1949, US), George Bernard Shaw (1925, Irish), Virginia Woolfe, John Dos Passos (US), Eugene O'Neill (1936, US), T. S. Eliot (1948, US/UK), Graham Greene, Aldous Huxley, George Orwell, Vladimir Nabokov (Russian), Arthur Conan Doyle, H. G. Wells, J. R. R. Tolkien, Jack London (US), J. D. Salinger (US), Henry Miller (US), Salman Rushdie (Indian). 25 authors, a quarter of the original list, among them 13 are the best authors of the list. If we include also other outstanding authors and authors of best sellers we could add James Hadley Chase, Raymond Chandler (US), Leon Uris (US), James Clavell (Australia), Margaret Mitchell (US), Agatha Christie, Ayn Rand (born in Russia, US), Jack Kerouac (French Canadian), Joseph Conrad (Pole), William Styron (US), Theodor Dreiser (US), Saul Bellow (1976, US/Canada), Norman Mailer (US), Philip Roth (US), W. Somerset Maugham, Nelle Harper Lee (US), Richard Bach (US), Truman Capote (US), John Irving (US), Sean O'Casey (Irish), Clifford Odets (US), Robert Frost (US), Dylan Thomas, Noel Coward, Arthur Koestler (Hungarian), Alan Paton (South Africa), Bernard Malamud (US), Isaac Asimov (US), Iris Murdoch, Allen Ginsberg (US), Harold Pinter (2005), John Osborne, Anthony Burgess, Tom Stoppard, John Le Carre, Mario Puzo (US), William Butler Yeats (1923, Irish), William Saroyan (US), Pearl S. Buck (1938, US), A. J. Cronin, Ezra Pound (US), Winston Churchill (1953), Bertrand Russell (1950), John Galsworthy (1932), Rudyard Kipling (1907).

I like most French literature, it is my mother tongue, and I understand the language almost perfectly. However, trying to be objective, I have to admit that at least in the twentieth century the literature in English is probably much better and prolific, mainly the US literature, possibly because so many authors from all over the world wrote in English and resided in the US. I enjoy to read most, of course in English, the excellent books by Hemingway, Lewis, Lawrence. Plays by Arthur Miller and Tennessee Williams – I have read and seen most of their plays, Shaw, O'Neill and Pinter – who have written some of the best plays of the 20th century. I read less but enjoy nevertheless reading Woolfe, Faulkner, Steinbeck, Dos Passos, and Joyce. But I have read at least some of the books by the other authors of this glorious list, so varied, so good, so moving. I have written and quoted at length in this book about the books by Scott Fitzgerald, Sinclair Lewis, D. H. Lawrence, James Joyce, the plays by Arthur Miller, George Bernard Shaw, etc. I have read biographies of Arthur Miller, Tennessee Williams, Hemingway, G. B. Shaw, etc.

We have three layers: 13 are the best of the best, 25 are the best authors because I have decided arbitrarily that no more than a quarter of authors in the original list can come from any language. Authors in excess to the 25 amount here to 45, so if the list was larger it would have included 70 authors in English compared to 70 in French. In the original list of 25 we can find that half are from the US – 13, 2 are Irish, 1 Russian and 1 Indian. Thus only 8 authors are from the UK. The same proportions can be found in the list of the 45 authors in excess to the list of the 25 – 22 are from the US, 2 are Irish, 1 is Australian, 1 is Canadian, 1 South African, 1 Pole, 1 Hungarian, in total 29, and 16 are from the UK. Probably, the 70 authors writing in English have sold the largest numbers of books, which is not surprising as there are much more English speakers.

There is another category – Nobel Prize laureates who are not included in my lists (on top of the 15 who are included in my lists), but should be mentioned nevertheless, as their choice was quite objective: 1. Patrick White (1973) – Australian. 2. Alice Munro (2013) – Canadian. 3. V. S. Naipaul (2001) – UK/Trinidad and Tobago. 4. Derek Walcott – (1992) – Saint Lucia. 5. Seamus

Heaney (1995) – Ireland. 6. Doris Lessing (2007) – UK. 7. William Golding (1983) – UK, 8. Toni Morrison (1993) – US. This list is much more cosmopolitan than my list, including authors that were completely unknown to me, such as Walcott, White, Naipaul, coming from Saint Lucia, Australia and Trinidad. We should mention also 3 other African writers who were awarded the Nobel Prize but are not listed in the English lists, as most of their writings is about African topics: Nadine Gordimer (1991) – South Africa, J. M. Coetzee (2003) – South Africa, and Wole Soyinka (1986) – Nigeria. In total there are 23 Nobel Prize laureates authors who wrote in English (15 + 8, without the Africans), 77% more compared to the Nobel Prize laureates authors who wrote in German, and 44% more than the Nobelists in French. If we add the 8 additional Nobel authors to our lists we arrive to 78 authors in English. To this number we have to add the English author who is in my cosmopolitan list (1), as well as the African authors who write in English, but live, operate and write mainly about African subjects (6, 3 of them are Nobelists), and we reach a total number of 85 writers (78+1+6) writing worldwide in English. The total number of Nobelists writing in English amounts to 26 (23+3 Africans). But we'll restrict to the 70 authors of my original lists, in order not to duplicate the Cory's lists.

French and English authors comprise exactly half (50) of the total authors of the 20th century, and half of them (25) – a quarter of the 100 best authors – are the best of the best authors. My list is less biased than Le Monde's list, but is possibly biased as well, as it reckons that the French and English (mainly American) authors are the best in the world. However, I do believe that the 20th century was mainly the century of authors in English and French who influenced most the literature and the intelligentsia of the world with giants as Sartre, Proust, Camus, Pagnol, Ionesco, Prevert, Gide, Beckett, Arthur Miller, Tennessee Williams, Hemingway, Scott Fitzgerald, James Joyce, G. B. Shaw, Faulkner, Steinbeck, Virginia Woolfe, O'Neill, and others.

3. German/Austrian/Swiss – Franz Kafka (Czech), Thomas Mann (1929), Bertolt Brecht, Heinrich Mann, Sigmund Freud (Austria), Hans Fallada, Stefan Zweig (Austria), Friedrich Duerennmatt (Swiss), Heinrich Boell (1972), Hannah Arendt, Franz Werfel (Austrian), Arthur Schnitzler (Austrian), Robert Musil (Austrian), Rainer Maria Rilke (Austrian), Erich Maria Remarque, Erich Kaestner, Lion Feuchtwanger, Ephraim Kishon (born in Hungary, lived in Israel and Switzerland, wrote in Hebrew and German), Herman Hesse (Swiss 1946), Vicky Baum (Austrian), Guenter Grass (1999), Peter Weiss (German, Swedish), Hans Habe (lived in Hungary, Austria, France, Switzerland and the US), Max Frisch (Swiss), Johannes Mario Simmel (Austria). 25 authors, 12 of which are the best of the best. Out of the 25 – Germans – 11, Austrians – 9, Czech – 1, Hungarian – 1, Swiss – 3. I like very much German literature, and I try to read as much as possible in German, with dictionaries or translations. However, I read most of the German books in translation – Kafka, Freud, Fallada, Duerennmatt, Arendt, Werfel, Grass, Rilke, but I read also Thomas Mann, Heinrich Mann, Bertolt Brecht, Heinrich Boell, Lion Feuchtwanger in German with a translation, and I manage to read fluently without translations books in German by Remarque, Kishon, Stephan Zweig, and Arthur Schnitzler. The German literature in the 20th century is undoubtedly one of the best ever, including the unique Kafka, Brecht, Duerennmatt, Thomas Mann, Heinrich Mann, Fallada, and the excellent Stefan Zweig, Werfel, Schnitzler (I even saw La Ronde in Paris with the couple Emmanuelle Beart and Daniel Auteuil), Feuchtwanger, Werfel, my favorite novel writer Remarque and the best humorist writer in the 20th century Ephraim Kishon whom I read in Hebrew and German, saw his plays & films. I have quoted and written at length in this book about the plays by Bertolt Brecht, that I teach at my business ethics courses, and I have analyzed in my books the Freudian concepts of Business Ethics. I have read biographies on Thomas and Heinrich Mann, Brecht, Kishon, Freud, etc.

I tried to be objective, but it is amazing that in a century with the fiercest anti-Semitism in history instigated by the German and Austrian Nazi party, more than half of the best authors who wrote in German were Jewish, the highest percentage of Jewish authors in any of the languages, except Hebrew... Some of the wives of the Christian authors were Jewish as well (as Thomas Mann and Heinrich Mann's wives) and most of the German and Austrian authors had to flee their country when the Nazis took power. We bring hereafter an article on the Exile Literature.

German Exilliteratur (exile literature) is the name for a category of books in the German language written by writers of anti-nazi attitude who fled from Nazi Germany and its occupied territories between 1933 and 1945. These dissident authors, many of whom were of Jewish origin or with communist sympathies, fled abroad in 1933 after the Nazi Party came to power in Germany and after Nazi Germany annexed Austria by the Anschluss in 1938, abolished the freedom of press and started to prosecute the authors whose books were banned. Many of the European countries where they found refuge were later occupied by Nazi Germany as well, which caused them again to look for safety elsewhere, by emigrating to the United States or taking cover in the "underground". Between 1933 and 1939, prolific centers of German exile writers and publishers emerged in several European cities, like Paris, Amsterdam, Stockholm, Zürich, London, Prague, Moscow as well as across the Atlantic in New York, Los Angeles, and Mexico. Well known for their publications were the publishers Querido Verlag and Verlag Allert de Lange in Amsterdam and Oprecht in Zürich. They served the German community outside Germany with critical literature, and their books were also smuggled into Nazi Germany.

The best known exile writers include Theodor Adorno, Hannah Arendt, Bertolt Brecht, Hermann Broch (Austrian), Ernst Bloch, Alfred Döblin, Lion Feuchtwanger, Bruno Frank, Oskar Maria Graf, Hermann Hesse, Max Horkheimer, Heinrich Eduard Jacob, Hermann Kesten, Annette Kolb, Siegfried Kracauer, Else Lasker-Schüler, Emil Ludwig, Heinrich Mann, Klaus Mann, Erika Mann, Thomas Mann, Ludwig Marcuse, Robert Musil, Robert Neumann, Erich Maria Remarque, Ludwig Renn, Joseph Roth (Austrian), Alice Rühle-Gerstel and Otto Rühle, Nelly Sachs (1966), Felix Salten (Austrian), Anna Seghers, Franz Werfel, Bodo Uhse, Max Brod (Czech), and Arnold Zweig. The authors Walter Benjamin, Walter Hasenclever, Ernst Toller, Kurt Tucholsky, Ernst Weiss (Austrian), and Stefan Zweig committed suicide in exile. I have read books by many of those authors, and those who were not included in the list of the 25 best authors, could be added as well to the list, as Kurt Tucholsky, whose book Castle Gripsholm I have read in Interlingua... Max Brod was a German-speaking Czech Jewish, later Israeli, author, composer, and journalist. Although he was a prolific writer in his own right, he is most famous as the friend and biographer of Franz Kafka. As Kafka's literary executor, Brod refused to follow the writer's instructions to burn his life's work, and had them published instead. So, we owe him the publication of Kafka's books! Without him world literature would be quite different than what it is as Kafka had a major contribution to world literature. We could live well if Stefan Zweig would not have existed, but the world literature would be much poorer without Kafka!

Most of the exile writers cited above were probably the best German writers of their epoch, and if we have to draw up a list in excess of the 25 authors, we would include most of them if not all of them. I have not found any of them that does not deserve to be included in the list of the best German authors of the twentieth century. Some of the authors appear in the list of the 25 best authors, such as Thomas Mann, Heinrich Mann, Franz Werfel, Stefan Zweig and Lion Feuchtwanger. There are 32 authors in excess of those who were included in the list of 25 (4 of them are Austrians and 1 is Czech). What is amazing is that I have tried to find good authors who collaborated with the Nazis and I have not found any. Maybe I am biased or the researchers are biased. Anyhow, what I have found is that there is an additional category of Inner Emigration – German authors who did not emigrate but remained in Germany during the war without being Nazis, sometimes retiring from their occupations in order not to clash with the government. In this category we find German authors as Hans Fallada and Erich Kaestner included in the list of 25 and other authors who can be added to the authors in excess of the 25 – Frank Thiess, Gottfried Benn, Walter von Molo (Austrian) and Werner Finck, 4 in total, 1 of them is Austrian. Another category comprises German authors who wrote mainly after the war, some of them as Guenter Grass and Heinrich Boell were included in the list of the 25. Additional authors in this category are: Paul Celan (Romanian), Sarah Kirsch (worked in DDR), Johannes Becher (DDR), Guenter Kunert (DDR and West Germany), Ingeborg Bachmann (Austrian), Rainald Goetz (postmodern), Christoph Ransmayr (Austrian), and Hans Wollschlaeger (postmodern). Bertolt Brecht (worked before and after the war, after the war in DDR, is included in the list of 25), and the Swiss Friedrich Duerrenmatt and Max Frisch, both of them included in the list of 25. In excess of the 25 – 8 in this category, 2 of them Austrians, 1 Romanian, but so are many others...

A category of his own is the Austrian/British/Jewish/Catholic Ludwig Wittgenstein (1889-1951), a philosopher who worked primarily in logic, the philosophy of mathematics, the philosophy of mind, and the philosophy of language. From 1929 to 1947, Wittgenstein taught at the University of Cambridge. During his lifetime he published just one slim book, the 75-page Tractatus Logico-Philosophicus (1921), one article, one book review and a children's dictionary. His voluminous manuscripts were edited and published posthumously. Philosophical Investigations appeared as a book in 1953, and by the end of the century it was considered an important modern classic. His teacher Bertrand Russell described Wittgenstein as "the most perfect example I have ever known of genius as traditionally conceived; passionate, profound, intense, and dominating". Wittgenstein, born in Vienna into one of Europe's richest Jewish families, and Hitler were born just six days apart, though Hitler had been held back a year, while Wittgenstein was moved forward by one, so they ended up two grades apart at the Realschule. Monk estimates they were both at the school during the 1904–1905 school year, but says there is no evidence they had anything to do with each other. So, in all those categories we can find 45 additional authors on top of the 25 (32+4+8+1), 70 in total – Germans – 46, Austrians – 17, Swiss – 3, Czech – 2, Hungarian – 1, Romanian – 1. The amount of authors writing in German in excess of the 25 in my lists is 45, as in French and English, and the total number of authors in each of the three languages is 70. I want to reiterate that if I've limited the lists to 70 (as the Sanhedrin sages).

Nobel Prize laureates in my lists are mentioned in Italics. However, there are many laureates who are not included in my lists and are mentioned here: 1. Elfride Jelinek (2004) – Austrian. 2. Herta Mueller (2009) – Romanian. 3. Gerhart Hauptmann (1912). 4. Paul Johann Ludwig Heise (1910). 5. Rudolph Christoff Eucken (1908). 6. Theodor Mommsen (1902). And the 7. Swiss Carl Spitteler (1919). And Elias Canetti (1981), a Sephardic Jew, born in Bulgaria, who lived in England, Austria, Germany and Switzerland, and wrote in German. In my list he is categorized as Cosmopolitan. In total 13 Nobel Laureates who wrote in German (12 in my German lists) – 5 in the lists of the 25 and excess (1 of them is Swiss), 7 are not in any list (1 Austrian, 1 Romanian, 1 Swiss), and 1 in the Cosmopolitan list. All the others 4 Nobel laureates in the lists and 4 not in the lists or 8 are Germans. The three layers of German writers are 12 best of the best, 25 best authors in the list, 70 best authors if we include the 45 additional authors in the list of the exile writers and the other lists. If we add the other 7 Nobel Prize laureates who are not included in my German lists, we reach in total 77 authors in German, similar to the number of authors in English and French. Nevertheless, we'll restrict to 70 authors who wrote in German. With the cosmopolitan Canetti who wrote in German we arrive to a total of 78 German authors.

List of the Nobel Literature Prize authors who are not in my lists of the best authors:

French: France: 1. Patrick Modiano (2014), 2. J. M. G. Le Clezio (2008), 3. Claude Simon (1985), 4. Saint-John Perse (1960), 5. Anatole France (1921) – an outstanding author whose main activities were in the 19th century. 6. Frederic Mistral (1904) – who wrote in Provençal, and is mentioned and quoted in the Provençal chapter of this book. 7. Sully Prudhomme – 1901. To those authors we add a Belgian Nobel Prize winner author - 8. Maurice Maeterlink (1911). In total 8 authors in French – 7 from France and 1 from Belgium, all of them excellent authors.

English: 1. Patrick White (1973) – Australian. 2. Alice Munro (2013) – Canadian. 3. V. S. Naipaul (2001) – UK/Trinidad and Tobago. 4. Derek Walcott – (1992) – Saint Lucia. 5. Seamus Heaney (1995) – Ireland. 6. Doris Lessing (2007) – UK. 7. William Golding (1983) – UK, 8. Toni Morrison (1993) – US. In total 8 authors in English – 2 from the UK, 1 from the US, 1 Australian, 1 Canadian, 1 Ireland, 1 from Trinidad & Tobago (and also UK), 1 from Saint Lucia.

German: 1. Elfride Jelinek (2004) – Austrian. 2. Herta Mueller (2009) – Romanian. 3. Gerhart Hauptmann (1912). 4. Paul Johann Ludwig Heise (1910). 5. Rudolph Christoff Eucken (1908). 6. Theodor Mommsen (1902). 7. Swiss Carl Spitteler (1919). 7 authors in German: 4 Germans, 1 Austrian, 1 Romanian, 1 Swiss. All of them, as the French and English authors, are excellent.

In total 23 authors (8+8+7) who wrote in French (and Provençal), English and German and won the Nobel Literature prize are not included in my lists. To those we add two excellent authors who won the Nobel Peace Prize: 1. Muhammad Yunus from Bangladesh (2006), a social entrepreneur, banker, economist, civil society leader and author, who wrote in English books on his Grameen Bank, microcredit, social business... I taught social and economic justice with his books and videos, as well as books and videos from Naomi Klein, Joel Bakan and Joseph Stiglitz. The Norwegian Nobel Committee noted that "lasting peace cannot be achieved unless large population groups find ways in which to break out of poverty" and that "across cultures and civilizations, Yunus and Grameen Bank have shown that even the poorest of the poor can work to bring about their own development". 2. Elie Wiesel, a US citizen, born in Romania and lived also in France. He is a writer, professor, political activist, and Nobel Peace Prize Laureate (1986). Wiesel is the author of 57 books in English, French and Yiddish, mainly on the Holocaust/Shoah, including Night, a work based on his experiences as a Jewish prisoner in the Auschwitz, Buna, and Buchenwald concentration camps. The Norwegian Nobel Committee called him a "messenger to mankind," stating that through his struggle to come to terms with "his own personal experience of total humiliation and of the utter contempt for humanity shown in Hitler's death camps", as well as his "practical work in the cause of peace", Wiesel had delivered a powerful message "of peace, atonement and human dignity" to humanity. The total number of Nobel prize laureates who are not included in my lists amount therefore to 25 (23+2), and should be counted as a special important category contributing to the 20th century literature.

The twentieth century had many outstanding authors and we arrive in the three main literature languages of Europe to 75 authors, half of them – 37 are the best of the best. This leaves room to only 25 more authors if we want to restrict the list of the best authors to 100, as 75% of the authors come from the main language literatures in Europe (and in the world?) – English, French and German. Of course, this is not feasible and we would have to find a creative solution. We can divide the best authors of the twentieth century in 4 categories: 1. The Leading Literatures in French, English and German, divided almost equally between the three languages – 75 authors, 37 of them best of the best. If we add to them the 45 authors in excess of the 25 – 70 authors each, or 210 authors in total. The Nobelists in those languages wrote in: English – 23, French – 16, and German – 12. In total 51. If we add to the 210 - authors the Nobel Prize laureates who are not in my leading literature lists (8F+8E+7G = 23), the 2 Nobel Peace Prize laureates who wrote in English and French, and the Cosmopolitan authors who wrote in those languages (3, 1 of them Nobelists in German), and the African authors who wrote in English and French, but almost exclusively on African topics (4F+6E=10), we reach a total figure of about 250 (248) authors. But in order not to duplicate the findings, we'll restrict ourselves to the number of 70 authors for each of the languages, and deal separately with Cosmopolitan and African authors, without adding the 25 Nobelists who are not in my lists of the 70x3=210.

2. The Outstanding Literatures in Spanish, Italian, and Russian. 3. The Prominent Literatures – Dutch (Netherlands, Belgium Flemish), Czech, Portuguese, Greek, Polish, Scandinavian (Norwegian, Swedish, Danish, Finnish, Icelandic), Other European Literatures (Albanian, Bosnia/Serbian, Hungarian, Turkish, Icelandic), Cosmopolitan, Yiddish, Ladino. 4. The Non-European/American Literatures – Hebrew, Indian, Arabic, Japanese, Chinese, African, Other Asian/World Literatures. In the list of authors in the literatures that I am not an expert of, I have based my research on Nobel Prize winners (Greek, Finnish, Danish, Japanese, Chinese, etc.), articles, etc., and on my partial knowledge of those literatures – by reading one book or a few books in Chinese, Japanese, Arabic, etc. literatures. I have not added additional Nobel Prize winners on top of those that are in my lists in the main literatures as the lists are saturated enough with dozens of books that I have read most of them, but I have mentioned all the winners.

THE OUTSANDING LITERATURES – SPANISH, ITALIAN, RUSSIAN

4. Spanish/Latin American – Federico Garcia Lorca (Spain), Jorge Luis Borges (Argentina), Gabriel Garcia Marquez (1982, Colombia), Mario Vargas Llosa (2010, Peru), Carlos Fuentes Macias (Mexico), Camilo Jose Cela (1989, Spain), Juan Ramon Jimenez (1956, Spain), Pablo Neruda (Chile 1971), Salvador de Madariaga (Spain), Romulo Gallegos (Venezuela), Vicente Blasco Ibanez (Spain), Isabel Allende (Chile), Gabriela Mistral (Chile 1945), Vicente Aleixandre (1977, Spain), Jacinto Benavente (1922, Spain), Jose Echegaray (1904, Spain), Jose Ortega Y Gasset (Spain), Antonio Machado (Spain), Octavio Paz Lozano (1990, Mexico), Miguel Angel Asturias (1967, Guatemala). 20 authors, 10 of which are the best of the best, 11 of which are Nobel Prize laureates. Spanish literature is one of the best literatures in the world, especially because of its variety. In the list above we find excellent authors from Spain, Argentina, Colombia, Peru, Mexico, Chile, Venezuela, Guatemala – 8 countries from Latin America and Spain. The Nobel Prize laureates are also double than the Nobelists of Italian and Russian, and almost equal as the Nobelists of German. I have books of all the Spanish best of the best which I have read, and of course my favorite novelist – Vicente Blasco Ibanez. Lorca is one of my favorite playwrights and poets and I have written and quoted at length from his work in this book, as well as from Vargas Llosa and Jimenez, whom I like very much. The other authors whom I have read are good, but not as good as the best authors of French, English and German languages in the 20th century. Lorca wrote masterpieces, but it is hard to say that about the other authors of this list. Yet, I enjoy to read their books, I read them in Spanish fluently, but I have longings to Cervantes. Sartre, Pagnol, Prevert, and Proust are as good as the best French authors, poets, and playwrights of the past, except the 19th century. Arthur Miller, Eugene O'Neill, George Bernard Shaw, and Tennessee Williams are as good as Shakespeare. D. H. Lawrence, Sinclair Lewis, Scott Fitzgerald, James Joyce, and Hemingway, are as good as the best novelists of the past. Bertolt Brecht, Thomas and Heinrich Mann are as good as Goethe, and Kafka is far better than all the previous German authors. It is good to see that the twentieth century was the best century in literature, at least in the English and German literature. Only in French literature the 19th century surpassed the 20th with the best authors in world literature – Balzac, Hugo, Zola, Flaubert, Baudelaire, Vigny, Musset, Lamartine, and to a lesser extent George Sand, Alexandre Dumas pere and Jules Verne, the heroes of my youth. Yet, they are all My Sons (or My Fathers)

and I like to read Isabel Allende, Pablo Neruda and Blasco Ibanez not less than Proust, Brecht or Hemingway. Everyone in his context, his language, and his readers. At those levels of excellence it is presumptuous to compare between authors, it is like comparing between sons, so I retract what I wrote before, all the authors in my lists are excellent, should be read, and if I understand less Spanish or Russian authors, it is probably because I don't have the necessary affinities to appreciate them. Anyway, Spanish authors received almost the same number of Nobel Prizes than the Germans, and the Nobel Prize committees are probably more objective than me.

5. Italian – Alberto Moravia, Luigi Pirandello (1934), Umberto Eco, Primo Levi, Italo Svevo, Elsa Morante, Curzio Malaparte, Pier Paolo Pasolini, Hugo Pratt, Eduardo de Filippo, Dario Fo (1997), Eugenio Montale (1975), Salvatore Quasimodo (1959), Gracia Deledda (1926), Giosue Carducci (1906), Giuseppe Ungaretti. 16 authors, 8 of which are the best of the best, 6 of which are Nobel Prize laureates. Italian literature in the twentieth century is less known than the other five leading and outstanding literatures, but I like to read in Italian Pirandello, Moravia – one of the most modern and best authors of the 20th century, I also enjoyed reading his biography, Eco – a brilliant author, Levi – his moving novels, Svevo, Morante, Malaparte, Pasolini (films, poetry), and see plays by Pirandello, Dario Fo, Eduardo de Filippo.

6. Russian – Maxim Gorky, Alexander Solzhenitsyn (1970), Boris Pasternak (1958), Vladimir Mayakovsky, Isaac Babel, Mikhail Bulgakov, Mikhail Sholokhov (1965), Yevgeny Yevtushenko, Mikhail Kuzmin, Ivan Bunin (1933, France), Nikolai Ostrovsky, Anna Akhmatova, Joseph Brodsky (1987, US), Nikolai Bukharin, Osip Mandelstam, Svetlana Alexievich (2015, Belarus). Vladimir Nabokov wrote mainly in English – see writers in English. 16 authors, 8 of which are the best of the best. 6 authors in Russian are Nobel Prize laureates. The 20th century was incomparable to the 19th century of Russian literature. With all due respect to Gorky, Solzhenitsyn and Pasternak, they cannot compare to Tolstoy, Dostoevsky and Chekhov, Turgenev, Pushkin and Gogol. Maybe it was due to the Soviet regime, but the Tsars were not liberals either. I read a few books by contemporary Russian authors, in translations as it was not worth the effort to try to read in Russian, I have tried to read in Russian only the authors whom I like most - Tolstoy, Pushkin and Gogol. The contemporary Russian authors are good, but could not be compared not only to the 19th century Russian literature but also to 20th Century French, English, German literature and some of the others literature. My remark stated before applies also here, and probably if I could read the modern Russian authors in Russian and read more of them (actually, I read only a few books by those authors and my knowledge of Russian literature is mainly of the 19th century literature) I would probably appreciate them more.

Anyhow, there is an objective indicator of excellence – the Nobelists in Russian, Spanish and Italian amount to 23 as compared to the 51 Nobelists in French, English and German. So, if the Nobelists of the Outstanding Literatures are only 45% of the Nobelists of the Leading Literatures, it probably indicates that it is worthwhile to read them but after reading the Leading Literatures authors. In my lists, the Outstanding Literatures authors amount to 52, and the best of the best amount to 26, compared to 75 and 37 respectively in the lists of the Leading Literatures authors. But if we add the authors in excess to the 25 the proportions are far more significant – 210 authors of the Leading Literatures compared to 52 of the Outstanding – 4 times as much.

THE PROMINENT LITERATURES – DUTCH/FLEMISH, CZECH, GREEK, PORTUGUESE, POLISH, SCANDINAVIAN, OTHER EUROPEAN, COSMOPOLITAN, YIDDISH, LADINO

7. Dutch/Flemish – Hugo Claus, Simon Vestdijk, Anne Frank. 3 authors, 2 best of the best. It is amazing how the most cultivated people – the Dutch people – have not won even one Nobel Prize in Literature in more than a century. Furthermore, if someone (who is not Dutch) has ever heard about Dutch authors the first one that comes in mind is a small girl Anne Frank who wrote a diary like millions of other girls, but because of her tragic fate and good style she managed to be one of the best known authors of the world, of course after she died in 1944 in a concentration camp, as a result of a denunciation that has remained unknown until now. The first book that I read in Dutch was therefore Anne Frank (Het Achterhuis), I read also John Grisham's Het Testament, and only after I was more fluent in the language I have read some of the best authors in Dutch/Flemish – Hugo Claus and Simon Vestdijk. I have bought other books in Dutch, but it would take me years until I'll be able to read them. Nevertheless, I have great admiration to the Dutch culture (in spite of the rather mediocre film industry), its painters, its quality of life, ethics, economy, social and economic justice, ecology, and most of all its excellent people.

8. Czech – Milan Kundera, Jaroslav Hasek, Karel Capek, Jaroslav Seifert (1984). 4 authors, 2 best of the best, 1 Nobel Prize laureate. I have read and seen the film The Good Soldier Svejk by Hasek, which is one of the best humoristic books of the century. The Unbearable Lightness of Being by Kundera is a masterpiece, I have read it and saw the film. The Czech films are among the best in the world, in spite of the fact that Czech Republic is a rather small state, but the Swedish film industry, and recently the Danish one, have contributed also very much to the film industry. I have great admiration for the Czech people, and as a citizen of another small country, we compare in our literature achievements – only one Nobel Prize in literature. We could be in a worse situation, and after all literature is not the prism of everything. Small nations can excel in other fields (Israel in technology), be happy in what you have as You Can't Win Them All!

9. Greek – Nikos Kazantzakis, Odyseas Elytis (1979), Giorgos Seferis (1963). 3 authors, 1 best of the best, 2 Nobel Prize laureates. My favorite book is the Odyssey by Homer, I try very hard to read in Ancient Greek Homer and Sophocles, and I have more success with Nikos Kazantzakis' Zorba the Greek, and with the poems by Elytis and Seferis, which I have in my library. So, in spite of the thousands of years that have elapsed since Homer, I try to keep in touch with my Greek ancestors, I have learned the language and read modern novels and poetry.

10. Portuguese/Brazilian – Jose Saramago (1998, Portugal), Jorge Amado (Brazil), Paulo Coelho (Brazil). 3 authors, 2 best of the best, 1 Nobel Prize laureate. My roots are in Portugal and Spain, Greece and Turkey, Israel and Egypt. All those countries do not excel nowadays in their literature, although I think that we have excellent literatures maybe unknown internationally. Yet, in the past the literature of those nations and their cultures were the best in the world – the Jews gave to the world the Bible and the Talmud, the Greeks gave Homer and Euripides, all of them in ancient times. The Arabs gave much more than the Quran, they gave poetry, philosophy, mathematics, and their contribution to the world literature was very high in the Middle Ages. Portugal and Spain contributed very much throughout the centuries to world literature with the novels, poetry and plays which I have read from: Camoes, Usque, Eca de Queiros, Machado de Assis, Cervantes, Lope de Vega, Calderon de la Barca, Jose Maria de Pereda, Alarcon, etc. But I kept in touch with modern Portuguese, Spanish, Arab and Greek literature, reading extensively Spanish literature in Spanish, but also my beloved Portuguese and Brazilian authors – Jose Saramago (I've seen him at my hotel), Jorge Amado and Paulo Coelho.

11. Polish – Witold Gombrowicz, Henrik Sienkiewicz (1905) Wisława Szymborska (1996), Stanislaw Lem, Czesław Miłosz (1980), Władysław Reymont (1924). 6 authors, 3 best of the best, 4 Nobel Prize laureates. My knowledge of Polish literature is quite restrained. Polish is the last language that I have learned, and practically I can't read it. I try to read Pan Tadeusz by Adam Mickiewicz but I got stucked at page 15 although I read it with Polish and English text side by side. He is the neighbor in my library with Arthur Miller, whom I have read almost all his plays and writings, and I perceive him as one of the best authors in all times. Nevertheless, I read Quo Vadis (and of course saw the film) by Sienkiewicz, read a few poems by Szymborska, and saw plays by Polish authors. So, my knowledge of Polish literature is quite restrained and I have to rely mainly on the Nobel Prize committee, who has given 4 Nobel prizes to Polish authors, to make it a prominent literature. Nevertheless, I have seen dozens of Polish films and I am a great admirer of Polish films and of course their screenplays, which are among the best in the world.

12. Swedish – Ingmar Bergman, Selma Lagerlof (1909), Par Lagerkvist (1951), Verner von Heidenstam (1916), Tomas Transtromer (2011), Eyvind Johnson (1974), Harry Martinson (1974), Erik Axel Karlfeldt (1931). 8 authors, 4 best of the best, 7 Nobel Prize laureates. Swedish literature is known all over the world mainly because of August Strindberg, whose plays were written mostly in the 19th century. I write and quote Strindberg in Swedish, and I have learned Swedish in order to read his plays in Swedish, as well as other books with translation. I am also reading Lagerlof's books, but the best Swedish author in the 20th century is undoubtedly Ingmar Bergman. Bergman is my favorite director and script writer, and among his books one can find: The Magic Lantern (a masterpiece), Scenes from a Marriage (which I have read, seen on stage, watched the TV series, and seen the film several times – the best film ever produced, the most authentic story about marriage, the best script, best director, and best actress – my favorite Liv Ullmann). Bergmann also wrote the scripts of the following films which I have seen: The Seventh Seal, Fanny and Alexander (which I have read), The Best Intentions (which I have read), Wild Strawberries, Persona, Shame, Autumn Sonata, Through a Glass Darkly, Saraband... Today, Sweden is one of the most advanced countries in the world, most ethical, one of the richest, an example for us all, obtaining the best ratings in most parameters of quality of life.

13. Norwegian – Knut Hamsun (1920), Sigrid Undset (1928), Bjornstjerne Bjornson (1903). 3 authors, 1 best of the best, 3 Nobel Prize laureates. I have read several books and plays in Norwegian (with a translation), and I think that Knut Hamsun is a great author. What I admire less is his collaboration with Hitler and Goebbels. During World War II, Hamsun put his support behind the German war-effort. He courted and met with high-ranking Nazi officers, including Hitler. Nazi Minister of Propaganda Joseph Goebbels wrote a long and enthusiastic diary entry concerning a private meeting with Hamsun; according to Goebbels Hamsun's "faith in German victory is unshakable". In 1940 Hamsun wrote that "the Germans are fighting for us". After Hitler's death, he published a short obituary in which he described him as "a preacher of the gospel of justice for all nations." But, Norwegian literature has given us also one of the best playwrights of all times Henrik Ibsen (died in 1906), whose play En folkefiende – An Enemy of the People – is the cornerstone of my courses on business ethics, and I learned Norwegian only to be able to read it. I always wonder how my students, who have seldom read or seen plays, catch the gist of the play in its stage or films versions (a film with Steve McQueen as Dr. Thomas Stockmann and the Indian film Ganashatru – probably the only word that I know in Hindi meaning An Enemy of the People). The play relates most of the dilemmas of modern business and society ethics in a captivating way, although it tells the story of a small Norwegian town 150 years ago. This is the true test of a masterpiece – his relevance beyond the limits of time and geography. It applies to Ibsen, as well as to Shakespeare, Moliere, Sophocles, Homer, Cervantes, Zola, Hugo, Balzac, Dickens, Tennessee Williams, Dante, Brecht, and the Bible...

Ibsen is the father of modern theater, he is the most humane of playwrights, but unfortunately he had to live most of his life in exile, as he was ostracized in his own country. I have read quite all of Ibsen's plays, an excellent biography on Ibsen, and I write at length and quote in this book Ibsen and his plays. I have also seen most of his plays on the stage and in films. One should not judge of course Norwegian literature by the political ideology of one of its authors. In the 20th century Norwegian has dozens of excellent authors, one of them is Erik Fosnes Hansen, whose book published in 1990 : Salme ved reisens slutt (Psalm at Journey's End) that I am reading in Norwegian (I read also Hunger by Hamsun) with a translation. The book describes in separate but steadily interwoven stories how the individual musicians end their careers and lives on the Titanic. The book has been translated into more than twenty languages. Fosnes Hansen has also published poetry, and is a frequent contributor to contemporary public cultural debate. He is a member of the Norwegian Academy for Language and Literature. Fosnes Hansen was awarded the Riksmål Society Literature Prize in 1990. Another Norwegian author whom I admire is the actress Liv Ullmann, my favorite actress in the best film ever made Ingmar Bergman's Scenes from a Marriage. She wrote an excellent biography Changing that I have read, which recalls light-hearted moments from her life with Bergman, as also darker memories of life in Faro island. And most striking – showing us not to judge countries by individual conducts – Ullmann's grandfather was sent to the Dachau concentration camp during the Second World War for helping Jewish people escape from the town where he lived in Norway; he died in the camp. Today, Norway is one of the most advanced countries in the world, most ethical, one of the richest, an example for us all, obtaining the best ratings in most parameters of quality of life.

14. Danish – Johannes Vilhelm Jensen (1944), Karl Adolph Gjellerup (1917), Henrik Pontoppidan (1917). 3 authors, 1 best of the best, 3 Noble Prize laureates. The best Danish author Hans Christian Andersen lived in the 19th century. I manage to read him in Danish with translation, and I have read him in many more languages – French, English, Hebrew, Plattdeutsch, Icelandic... I am reading a historic book Fru Marie Grubbe by J. P. Jacobsen, but he lived a short life (38 years) in the 19th century. When I study a language as I did with Danish I start reading the writers in this language, but it was far easier for me to read Andersen in Danish than Jacobsen. Today, Denmark is one of the most advanced countries in the world, most ethical, one of the richest, an example for us all, with best ratings in most parameters of quality of life.

15. Finnish – Frans Eemil Sillanpää (1939), Eino Leino, Pavo Haavikko, Pentti Saarikoski, Mika Waltari. 5 authors, 3 best of the best, 1 Nobel Prize winner. I have not learned Finnish, it is too difficult for me, yet I admire the country and have visited it shortly. I am sure that there are excellent Finnish authors, but as the language is so difficult, the authors were not translated often. From my enquiries I have found a list of excellent authors whom I have never heard of, maybe because of the problem of the language barrier. I think that the 5 authors in this list can compare to many of the authors in German or Swedish literature, but I must confess that I have not read any of their writings, and my judgement is based unically on articles on those writers. Furthermore, only the best of the best of the authors are translated while all the others are read only in Finnish. Hebrew suffers from the same problem, and if the Israeli authors would have written in English or French, German or Spanish, they would probably be exposed much more to the world, but even so some of the best Israeli authors were translated into dozens of languages. I can write about this because I have read many books in translations, and after I have learned the language I have read them in the original language, sometimes with a translation.

Most of the flavor of the books is lost in translation – in German, Spanish, French, Hebrew, Yiddish, Ladino, Russian, Italian, Portuguese, etc. With one caveat, there are some translators who are excellent authors, who have translated difficult poetry or plays even in rhyme. But it makes months if not years to make a good translation and most of the translators have not the time, the talent, or the reward to make excellent translations. If you pay well to have a good translation of a best seller novel the translation can be good, but who would pay you to make a good translation of a poems book that would be sold in 200 copies... I refer to this problem at length in this book that describes languages and literatures and their interaction. This problem of exposure applies specially to difficult languages as Hungarian, Turkish, Arabic, Chinese, Albanian, Czech, Bulgarian, Greek, Hindi, Japanese, Finnish, etc. that have been translated.

If an author as Shai Agnon has a very special style it is almost impossible to translate it, the same applies to Sholom Aleichem whom I have read in Hebrew (boring) and Yiddish (extremely funny). It applies to Don Quijote that I have read in Hebrew and Spanish, but only in Spanish you can grasp Cervantes' peculiar style. It applies of course to German – you can translate Mack the knife's ballad to whatever language, but nothing compares to the acerbity of German (Und der Haifisch, der hat Zähne Und die trägt er im Gesicht Und Macheath, der hat ein Messer Doch das Messer sieht man nicht). I don't know if this problem affects also the Nobel Prize committee and explains why the difficult languages have got only one or two prizes, but also in Norwegian and Danish there were not many laureates. Is it because of the language, of the exposure, or because Hungarian authors (1 prize) are not as good as Swedish authors who received 7 prizes.

Today, Finland is one of the most advanced countries in the world, most ethical, one of the richest, an example for us all, with best ratings in most parameters of quality of life. I have made this remark to all the Scandinavian countries to emphasize that beyond literature you must appreciate a country by its quality of life. What is better to live in New York and be exposed to the best literature, plays, operas, concerts, or live in Helsinki or Oslo, with a much less known literature, far from the financial center, the cultural center, the academic center. We must therefore introduce the factor of the quality of life, ethics, ecology, peace, with much less crime, bribes, and pollution, and appreciate the country by the integral of all the parameters. I have dealt at length with this problem of excellence in all the parameters in my other book "Ethics Pays", but in that book I have almost not dealt with the cultural implications. Is it a coincidence that the 11 most ethical countries in the world: Denmark, New Zealand, Finland, Sweden, Norway, Switzerland, Singapore, Netherlands, Luxembourg, Canada and Australia, who have the best quality of life, least pollution, peaceful life with minimal crime and no wars, but that have also "less outstanding" literature, composers, playwrights, film industry (except Bergman who made his films in the tiny Swedish island of Faro), who have won barely one or two Nobel Prizes in literature (here again except Sweden), New Zealand, Singapore, Netherlands and Luxembourg have not won even one Nobel Prize in literature. It is obvious that the most corrupt countries have all the drawbacks and no one would want to live there. But maybe it is better to live in the second tier of ethical countries, who are not as ethical as the first 11, who have more pollution, less social and economic justice, but still have a reasonable quality of life and an excellent intellectual output in literature, films, music, theater, etc. I refer to Germany (no. 12 in the list of the most ethical countries), UK (no. 14), Japan (no. 15), US (no. 17), Austria (no. 23), France (no. 26), etc. If I was a European I would prefer to live in France rather than in Switzerland and Scandinavia, although those countries are the "perfect" countries, and France has many drawbacks. But France has also the best literature, film industry, music and theater. Those who opt for Germany, the UK, or the US, would prefer those countries. So, what is best?

16. Other European: Albanian – Ismail Kadare, 1 author. Bosnia and Herzegovina/Serbian – Ivo Andric (1961), 1 author, 1 Nobel Prize laureate. Turkish – Orhan Pamuk (2006), 1 author, 1 best of the best, 1 Nobel Prize laureate. Icelandish – Halldor Laxness (1955), 1 author, 1 Nobel Prize laureate. Hungarian – Imre Kertesz (2002), 1 author, 1 best of the best, 1 Nobel Prize laureate. In total – 5 authors, 5 countries with one author only, 2 best of the best authors, 4 Nobel Prize laureates. Possibly those countries have an excellent literature that remains unknown because of the difficult languages that are very hard to translate. I have books and dictionaries, texts and sagas in those languages, which I don't quite understand, in spite of my roots (I know many proverbs in Turkish), attempts to learn the language (it is very difficult for me to read books in Icelandic even with a translation), when I was in the Balkans I tried to understand Serbian/Croatian/Bosniak with my Russian background (which is also very poor), while Hungarian and Albanian are completely hopeless for me, as they don't resemble to anything.

17. Cosmopolitan – 3 authors, 2 best of the best, 1 Nobel Prize laureate: 1. Elias Canetti (1981), the ultimate cosmopolitan writer, was born in Bulgaria, from Sephardi (Spanish) Jewish ancestors, his mother tongue was Ladino. He lived most of his youth in Austria, England, Switzerland and Germany, and after the Anschluss in 1938 he left for the UK, and lived there (a citizen since 1952) and in Switzerland for the rest of his life. He wrote all his books in German, but he spoke also Bulgarian, English and French. His brother settled in France. Canetti's most famous book is Auto-da-Fe. He won the Nobel Prize in Literature in 1981. 2. Lawrence Durrell preferred to be considered cosmopolitan, as he lived in India (where he was born from English parents), in England, Corfu - Greece, Alexandria – Egypt, France, Rhodes, Argentina, Yugoslavia, Cyprus. His most famous books are The Alexandria Quartet, written in English. 2 out of his 4 wives were Alexandrian Jewish women. 3. Maurice Dekobra, was a French writer and wrote in French. His real name was Maurice Tessier. His books have been translated into 77 languages. At the age of 19, he started his career as a trilingual journalist – French, English, German. During the 1914–18 War he was attached as liaison officer/interpreter first to the Indian army, and later to the United States army. The contacts he made at this time ignited his passion for travel. He attributed the origin of his pen name to an episode in North Africa when he saw a snake charmer with two cobras. Allegedly he began thinking of the "deux cobras", which led him to De-kobra, then Dekobra. The term 'dekobrisme' was coined from his fiction, which used journalistic features in his novels. Dekobra traveled all over the world, he lived in England, Germany, China, and he chose to live in the United States from 1939 to 1946. He traveled also to India, Egypt, Italy, Balkans, Turkey, Ceylon/Sri Lanka, Nepal, Japan, Pakistan... Some of his novels were made into films. His books published between the two World Wars were immensely successful, with a true enterprise of literary marketing - with launching events, posters campaigns, bookshops open at midnight. He is known as the father of the cosmopolitan literature, and was the mostly read French author between the two world wars. He sold more than 90 million books and was an international star. Dekobra wrote as a rule two books about his travels – one a voyage book and one novel. He wrote his novels with a precise geographic location, finally my father Albert Cory admired Dekobra very much, maybe because in all his life he lived only in three countries of the Middle East – Turkey, Egypt and Israel, and travelled only for a few months to Italy and a week in France. With Dekobra he could discover exotic countries where he would never stay. It goes without saying that I have books by all the three cosmopolitan authors, and I visited or lived in most of the sites (except the Indian peninsula) where those three authors lived, and admire their cosmopolitan way of life, that is probably the most cosmopolitan of all the authors in this list.

18. Yiddish – 1. Isaac Bashevis Singer (1978), was a Polish-born Jewish-American author. He was a leading figure in the Yiddish literary movement, writing and publishing only in Yiddish, and was awarded the Nobel Prize in Literature in 1978. 2. S. Ansky was a Russian Jewish author, playwright, researcher of Jewish folklore, polemicist, and cultural and political activist. He is best known for his play The Dybbuk or Between Two Worlds, written in 1914. 3. Jacob Gordin was a Russian-born American playwright active in the early years of Yiddish theater. He is known for introducing realism and naturalism into Yiddish theater. 3 authors, 1 best of the best, 1 Nobel Prize laureate. Sholem Aleichem is the best Yiddish author ever, and I enjoyed reading his books in Yiddish. But he is also one of the best world authors, and I have not introduced his name in this list only because most of his novels and plays were written in the 19th century. Yet, this book refers extensively on Yiddish authors and quote them, in particular Sholom Aleichem.

19. Ladino – 1. Yitzhak Levy was an Israeli composer and hazzan (cantor), as well as a pioneer researcher into the long and rich history of the Ladino music and culture of Spanish Jewry and its diaspora, being the editor of the Ladino language magazine Aki Yerushalayim. He devoted his life to the collection and preservation of Sephardic Jewish songs, which had been passed orally from generation to generation for more than five hundred years. He published four books of Sephardic romances and ten volumes of liturgical songs, recording many of them for the national radio. Two other prominent writers on the Sephardic heritage are: 2. the former Israeli President and Minister for Education Yitzhak Navon (author of two musicals based on Sephardic folklore: Bustan Sephardi/Sephardic Garden – 1970, and Sephardic Romoncero - 1968), author of stories, a TV series on Jerusalem, articles on Ben Gurion, and 3. the Israeli actor and singer Yehoram Gaon (author of From Toledo to Jerusalem, where he traces his Sephardic roots in Ladino with songs and narration). 3 authors (2 best of the best), who have contributed most to the revival of the Ladino folklore. I have humbly contributed with the translation of the UN Universal Declaration of Human Rights with Ladinokomunita into Ladino - in this book.

The best authors of the lists of the Prominent Literatures amount to 52, with 26 as best of the best, exactly the same numbers of the Outstanding Literatures, but there are 16 additional languages in this category compared to only 3 in the outstanding literatures. The Nobelists of the prominent literatures amount to 28 (including 7 Swedes), compared to 23 of the outstanding.

THE NON-EUROPEAN/AMERICAN LITERATURES – HEBREW, INDIAN, ARABIC, JAPANESE, CHINESE, AFRICAN, OTHER ASIAN/WORLD LITERATURES

20. Hebrew – 1. Shai Agnon, Shmuel Yosef Agnon, S. Y. Agnon, was a Nobel Prize laureate (1966) writer and was one of the central figures of modern Hebrew fiction. Agnon was born in Galicia, Austro-Hungarian Empire (today Ukraine). He later immigrated to Mandatory Palestine, and died in Jerusalem, Israel. His works deal with the conflict between the traditional Jewish life and language and the modern world. They also attempt to recapture the fading traditions of the European shtetl (village). 2. Moshe Shamir, was an Israeli author, playwright, opinion writer, and public figure. He was a prolific author, publishing in the course of his life more than 25 books. Thus he is best recognized as a novelist and a playwright. He was elected to the Knesset in the legislative elections of 1977. He supported the settling of the West Bank after its capture. 3. Benjamin Tammuz was born in Soviet Russia. When he was five years old, he emigrated with his parents to Palestine. He was an Israeli writer and artist who contributed to Israeli culture in many disciplines, as a novelist, journalist, critic, painter, and sculptor. While growing up, he became a member of the Communist underground. As a youth he was a member of the Canaanite movement. 4. Amos Oz is an Israeli writer, novelist, journalist and intellectual. He is also a professor of literature at Ben-Gurion University in Beersheba. He is regarded as Israel's most famous living author. Oz's work has been published in 42 languages, including Arabic, in 43 countries. He has received many honours and awards, among them the Legion of Honour of France, the Goethe Prize, the Prince of Asturias Award in Literature, the Heinrich Heine Prize and the Israel Prize. In 2007, a selection from the Chinese translation of A Tale of Love and Darkness was the first work of modern Hebrew literature to appear in an official Chinese textbook. Since 1967, Oz has been a prominent advocate of a two-state solution to the Israeli–Palestinian conflict. 5. Joshua Sobol is an Israeli playwright, writer, and director. Joshua Sobol was born in Tel Mond, Israel, then Palestine. His mother's family fled the pogroms in Europe in 1922 and his father's family immigrated from Poland in 1934 to escape the Nazis. Sobol's first play was performed in 1971 by the Municipal Theatre in Haifa, where Sobol worked from 1984 to 1988 as a playwright and later assistant artistic director. The performance of his play The Jerusalem Syndrome, in January 1988, led to widespread protests, whereupon Sobol resigned from his post as artistic director. In 1983, after the Haifa production of his play Weininger's Night (The Soul of a Jew), he was invited to participate in the official part of the Edinburgh Festival. Between 1983 and 1989 Sobol wrote three related plays: Ghetto, Adam and Underground, which constitute together The Ghetto triptich. Ghetto became world famous shortly after its premiere in Haifa in May 1984. I was a member of the Board of Directors of the Haifa theater 15 years later. The play won the Israeli David's Harp award for best play. The Israeli opening was followed by Peter Zadek's much acclaimed German premiere of the play in July of the same year. The play and the production were chosen by Theater Heute as best production and best foreign play of the year. The play has been translated into more than 20 languages and performed by leading theatres in more than 25 countries throughout the world. Joshua Sobol wrote a very favorable review of my play "Nelly Doron/Nelly's Choice" (that can be read in this book), and he is a friend of mine. 6. Abraham B. Yehoshua - is an Israeli novelist, essayist, and playwright, published as A. B. Yehoshua. The New York Times called him the "Israeli Faulkner." Avraham ("Boolie") Yehoshua was born to a fifth-generation Jerusalem family of Sephardi origin. His father, Yaakov Yehoshua, was a scholar and author specializing in the history of Jerusalem. His mother, Malka Rosilio, immigrated from Morocco in 1932. Since 1972, he has taught Comparative and Hebrew Literature at the University of Haifa, where he holds the rank of Full Professor. In 1975 he was a writer-in-residence at St. Cross College, Oxford. He has also been a visiting professor at Harvard (1977) the University of Chicago (1988, 1997, 2000) and Princeton (1992). Yehoshua is the author of eleven novels, three books of short stories, four plays, and four collections of essays, most recently Ahizat Moledet (Homeland Lesson), a book of reflections on identity and literature. His most acclaimed novel, Mr Mani, is a multigenerational look at Jewish identity and Israel through five conversations that go backwards in time to cover over 200 years of Jewish life in Jerusalem and around the Mediterranean basin. It was adapted for television as a five-part multilingual series by director Ram Loevy. As do many of his works, his eighth novel, Friendly Fire, explores the nature of dysfunctional family relationships in a drama that here moves back and forth between Israel and Tanzania. His works have been published in translation in 28 countries, and many have been adapted for film, television, theatre, and opera. Yehoshua is an Israeli Peace Movement activist. He attended the signing of the Geneva Accord and freely airs his political views in essays and interviews. He is a long-standing critic of Israeli occupation but also of the Palestinians. He and other intellectuals mobilized on behalf of the dovish New Movement before 2009 elections in Israel. 6 Israeli authors, 3 best of the best, one of them is Sobol, my friend, so my judgement is subjective, 1 Nobelist. And with some sense of humor – I didn't have a dilemma whether to include me in the list, as my first book (out of 12 that I have written) was published in the 21st century, in 2001...

21. Indian – 11 authors, 6 best of the best, 1 Nobelist, writing in 5 languages - Bengali (1), Urdu (1), Hindi (5), English (3), Gujarati (1): Rabindranath Tagore (1913), wrote in Bengali, he was awarded the Nobel Prize in literature in 1913. Rajinder Singh Bedi wrote in Urdu. The authors in Hindi – Munshi Premchand, Maithili Sharan Gupta, Vishnu Prabhakar, Sarveshwar Dayal Saxena, Harivansh Rai Bachchan. Finally, R. K. Narayan, Mulk Raj Anand, Raja Rao – all three of them wrote in English, lived in India and wrote about India. A category of his own is Mahatma Gandhi who wrote extensively in Gujarati, as well as in Hindi and English. I have not read enough books by Indian authors, basically only Rabindranath Tagore and Mahatma Gandhi, so the list of the best authors could be different and longer, and could extend to dozens of excellent authors. The Indian/UK citizen Salman Rushdie is included in the English section.

22. Arabic – I have tried to remain politically correct, and although I differ strongly from the writings of some authors, I have included them in the list of the best authors. I have kept a balance between the authors in Hebrew, Yiddish and Ladino – 12, 6 best of the best, and the Arabic authors – 12, 6 best of the best. However, the Hebrew/Yiddish authors have 2 Nobelists and the Arabs only one, but I am not responsible for the Nobel Prize committee's judgement. The authors are from 5 countries: Egypt (3), Palestinians (3), Iraq (3), Lebanon (2), Sudan (1): Naguib Mahfouz (1988, Egyptian), Tawfik Al-Hakim (Egyptian), Elias Khoury (Lebanese), Mahmoud Darwish (Palestinian), Tayeb Salih (Sudanese), Khalil Gibran (Lebanese), Ibrahim Muhawi (Palestinian), Abd Al-Wahhab Al-Bayati (Iraqi), Badr Shakir Al-Sayyab (Iraqi),

Muhammad Husayn Haykal (Egyptian), Nazik Al-Malaika (Iraqi), Fadwa Tuqan (Palestinian). I have not read enough books by authors in Arabic, basically only Naguib Mahfouz, Elias Khoury and Tayeb Salah, as well as a few poems in Arabic, watched a few movies, and read translated texts into Arabic, so the list of the best authors could be different and longer, as it is based now primarily on reading articles on the topic of Arab literature in the twentieth century.

I do not quote texts of authors to whom I object, as I don't want that my book should be a platform to their writings that sometimes are causing hate and defamation. But just to illustrate the level of hate of their writings I give here a few lines from Mahmoud Darwish's poem who has a special predilection for Israelis' flesh that will be his food: Therefore ! Record on the top of the first page: I do not hate people Nor do I encroach But if I become hungry The usurper's flesh will be my food Beware.. Beware.. Of my hunger And my anger! (Fadwa Tuqan strongly advocates terror and prefers to eat the Israelis' liver). I do not recall such level of hate from any Israeli or Jewish author against Arabs or even against Nazis. Darwish continues with the same false mantra that Israelis have stolen Palestinian land and left for them nothing, that the country was theirs and Israelis are usurpers. While the truth is that there never was a Palestinian state before but Israel was always the Jewish homeland and was recognized by most of the nations in the 20th century. The lands that were Palestinian were bought at full price by the Jews, most of the Palestinians refugees left because they were asked to do so by their leaders who promised them to receive the lands of the Jews after they will be exterminated, and anyhow many more Jewish refugees left their homes in Iraq, Yemen, Libya, Lebanon, Egypt and Syria, and left much more assets there than the Palestinians refugees. They don't ask for a right of return to the countries where they were born, as all of the Jews were integrated in Israel and the other states where they emigrated within a few years, while the Palestinians are kept on purpose in the status of refugees, the only ones from all the refugees of the same epoch – Germans, Poles, Turks and Greeks, while billions of Arab dollars are spent on extravagant palaces in the sand, and for financing terror and wars against Israel instead of settling the refugees' problems once and for all. Israelis have settled in a land that was mostly a desert and transformed it to one of the richest, greenest, and most democratic states of the world, a high tech empire, with the combined effort of Jews and Arabs, who are in the best conditions from all their brothers in Arab states.

23. Japanese – 10 authors, 5 best of the best, 2 Noble Prize winners: Haruki Murakami, Yasunari Kawabata (1968), Junichiro Tanizaki, Takaaki Yoshimoto, Kobo Abe, Yukio Mishima, Ryunosuke Akutagawa, Kenzaburo Oe (1994), Takiji Kobayashi, Banana Yohsimoto. I have not read enough books by Japanese authors, basically only Haruki Murakami, so the list of the best authors could be different or longer. I based the lists of Asian and African authors on reading articles on literature, and I have included the two Japanese Nobel Prize Winners.

24. Chinese – Mo Yan (2012), Lin Yutang (wrote in Chinese and English), Mu Dan, Gao Xingjian (2000), Lu Xun, Han Shaogong, Yang Mo, Bei Dao, Wang Meng, Zhu Wen. 10 authors, 5 best of the best, 2 Nobel Prize winners. I have not read enough books by Chinese authors, basically only Mo Yan, so the list of the best authors could be different and longer. I based the lists of Asian and African authors on reading articles on literature, and I have included the two Chinese Nobel Prize Winners. I don't know also if all of them wrote in Mandarin or not.

25. African Writers – 12 authors from 9 countries – Nigeria – 2, Kenya – 1, Senegal – 1, South Africa – 3, Cote d'Ivoire – 1, Chad – 1, D. R. Congo – 1, Ethiopia – 1, Madagascar – 1. 6 best of the best – Nigeria – 1, Senegal – 1, South Africa – 3, D. R. Congo – 1. 3 Nobelists – 1 Nigeria, 2 South Africa. The best of the best authors are 6 as follows: Nigeria: 1 - Chinua Achebe. Senegal: 1 - Leopold Senghor. South Africa: 3 - Lewis Nkosi, J. M. Coetzee, Nadine Gordimer. The Democratic Republic of the Congo (former Kinshasa): 1 - Valentin-Yves Mudimbe. Most of the authors write in English (6 in Nigeria, Kenya, South Africa) and French (4 in Senegal, Cote d'Ivoire, Chad, D. R. Congo), the official languages in their countries. However, the Ethiopian writer writes in Amhari and the Madagascar writer writes in Malagasi. Nigeria – 1. Chinua Achebe, who wrote in English, but lived, operated and wrote about Nigeria. 2. "Wole" Soyinka (1986) is a Nigerian playwright and poet. He writes in English and was awarded the 1986 Nobel Prize in Literature, the first African to be honored in that category. 2 authors, 1 best of the best, 1 Nobelist. Kenya – 3. Ngũgĩ wa Thiong'o is a Kenyan writer, formerly working in English and now working in Gikuyu. 1 author. Senegal – 4. Leopold Senghor, president of Senegal, member of the Academie Francaise, renown poet who wrote in French. 1 author, 1 best of the best. South Africa – 5. Lewis Nkosi was a South African writer and essayist, who wrote in English. He was a multifaceted personality, and attempted every literary genre, literary criticism, poetry, drama, and novels. 6. J. M. Coetzee (2003) – South Africa. A novelist, essayist, linguist, translator and recipient of the 2003 Nobel Prize in Literature. He relocated to Australia in 2002 and lives in Adelaide. He became an Australian citizen in 2006. In 2013, Richard Poplak of the Daily Maverick described Coetzee as "inarguably the most celebrated and decorated living English-language author". 7. Nadine Gordimer (1991) was a South African writer, political activist and recipient of the 1991 Nobel Prize in Literature. She was recognized as a woman "who through her magnificent epic writing has – in the words of Alfred Nobel – been of very great benefit to humanity". Gordimer's writing dealt with moral and racial issues, particularly apartheid in South Africa. Under that regime, works such as Burger's Daughter and July's People were banned. She was active in the anti-apartheid movement, joining the African National Congress during the days when the organization was banned. She was also active in HIV/AIDS causes. She wrote in English. 3 authors, 3 best of the best, 2 Nobelists. Cote d'Ivoire – 8. Ahmadou Kourouma was an Ivorian novelist who wrote in French. 1 author. Chad – 9. Koulsy Lamko is a Chadian-born playwright, poet, novelist and university lecturer, who writes in French. Born in Dadouar, Lamko left his country for Burkina Faso in 1979 due to the beginning of the civil war. 1 author. The Democratic Republic of the Congo (former Kinshasa) – 10. Valentin-Yves Mudimbe is a philosopher, professor, and author of poems, novels, as well as books and articles on African culture and intellectual history, who writes in French. 1 author, 1 best of the best. Ethiopia – 11. Haddis Alemayehu was a Foreign Minister and novelist from Ethiopia. His Amharic novel Fəqār askä Mäqabər (Love to the Grave, 1968) is considered a classic of modern Ethiopian literature. 1 author. Madagascar – 12. Elie Rajaonarison was a poet, artist, professor and civil servant from Madagascar. Considered the standard-bearer for modern Malagasy poetry, Rajaonarison's published poetry anthologies earned him international recognition and have been translated into French and English. I have not read enough books by African authors, basically only a book from the Nigerian Chinua Achebe and poems by Leopold Senghor, so the list of the best authors could be different or longer, as I have based this entry primarily on articles that I have read about African literature and poetry. I have seen several African films, many on South Africa, and a unique film Hyenas from Senegal in French, the African version of The Visit of the Old Lady by Duerrenmatt, which is the best version of all, far better and authentic than the Hollywood version, to the delight of my business ethics students.

26. Other Asian/World Literature – It would be presumptuous by me to write about modern Korean literature, Persian literature, Philippine literature, Native American literature, Oceanic literature, Indonesian literature, Singaporean literature, Malaysian literature, Vietnamese literature, Thai literature, Burmese literature, Kazakh literature, etc. The reader who wants to read about those twelve literatures and many more literatures can find many entries on these subjects on Wikipedia, encyclopedias, Internet, etc. But as I have never read a book from those literatures (at least I have read some books from the Chinese, Japanese, African, Arabic, Indian literatures), some of them in the original language – Arabic, English, French - I will not include authors from those countries, and I am aware that I am biased, as there might be excellent authors who deserve to be included in the world literature of the 20th century, but the least that I can do is to give links to all those literatures and let the reader find for himself what suits him.

The best authors of the lists of the 18 Non European/American Countries/Literatures in 12 languages amount to 61, 31 of whom are the best of the best, compared to more than 300 European languages authors, 89 of them best of the best. There are only 10 Nobel Prize laureates (3 of them wrote in English), compared to more than a hundred European languages Nobelists. Does it mean anything? That those literatures are not as good as the European/American literatures? First of all we have to bear in mind that I have not included in my lists authors from at least 12 more countries/languages – Korean, Persian, Philippine, Native American, Oceanic, Indonesia, Singaporean, Malaysian, Vietnamese, Thai, Burmese, Kazakh. If we follow the links and try to find more about those languages, and if we study more about the countries/languages that have contributed their authors to my lists – Chinese, Japanese, Arabic, Indian, Hebrew, etc. we could possibly find hundreds of excellent authors. I can estimate from the language that I know most Hebrew that we could enlarge the list of 6 authors to at least 30 excellent authors who are as good as many of the European authors in my lists. Still, probably they wouldn't receive Nobel Prizes as we have the language barrier and the fact that non-European/American authors are always less known than European authors. The total number of authors in my lists amount to 240 (75+52+52+61), 120 (37+26+26+31) of them are the best of the best. If we add to them the authors in excess from the French, English and German languages (45 each) we would reach 375 authors, and if we add to them the additional 23 (8+8+7) Nobel Literature Prize laureates and 2 Nobel Peace Prize laureates who are not in my lists, we would reach 400 authors who are the best 20th century's authors, at least in my opinion, which is less biased than others.

However, as we have decided to limit the list of authors to about 100, and as the lists include also many authors who wrote masterpieces at the end of the 19th century and others who continued to write masterpieces in the first 15 years of the 21st century, we have found that the best of the best authors in this period amount to 120, so we have decided to limit our basic list to 120, thus Cory's list includes all the 120 best of the best authors of the 20th century. And those of us who believe in symbolism – the number 120 is a very important number in the Bible – this was the age of Moses when he died (Dt 34,7), it is the limit of age fixed by God for the man (Gn 6,3), and Jesus-Christ would have had 120 disciples, including the apostles. So, the number 120 marks a full lifetime, and when you want to wish somebody longevity you wish him to live until 120, as this is the ultimate blessing (well, to be healthy also). And what is curious/coincidence – I processed the writing of this survey on the best authors without knowing what will be the number of authors, I hoped it will be 100, but I noticed soon enough that if you want to include authors from all over the world and not only French and English only you have to enlarge the scope of this survey, and indeed I reached up to 400 authors. But when I tried to limit the scope to the best of the best, not only in French and English or the main European/American languages, but also in Chinese, Hindi, Japanese, Arabic and Hebrew, I thought that I would arrive to a number close to 100 and indeed I have reached exactly the number of 120...

In this list about 30% of the authors – 37 - write in the leading literature languages French, English and German, about 20% of the authors – 26 – write in the outstanding literature languages Spanish, Italian and Russian. So, about 50% of the authors come from the main 6 European languages, as compared to the list of Le Monde where 50% of the authors were French, thus making my list much less biased than Le Monde and other comparable lists. Furthermore, no country has more than 10% of the total list, not even the US (9 authors - 7.5%), and no language has more than 20% of the list, even English (17 authors – 14%). I was inspired by the regulations of the university where I learned Business Administration – Insead in France, which was a European Union, now International university with students from all over the world, and none of the countries could have more than 10% of the students. It was meant primarily for French students, as they wanted to differ from other French business schools. It may be unfair to excellent French students who got penalized by this numerus clausus, but it helped me to get a scholarship at Insead, coming from Israel, and having average grades, but if you are looking for diversity, this is the prize that you have to pay. In fact, it was a fantastic booster for Insead, as we studied in groups case studies with 7 students from 7 countries and the classes had students from dozens of countries, which was a unique experience which enhanced my cosmopolitan approach. I should say that this rule may apply to literature, but not for Physics or Medicine, as there what counts is primarily the excellence of the discoveries, and if most of the researchers are from the US, because they are the best, the US gets all the credit. But in literature and at business schools and even at business diversity counts a lot and is equivalent at least to excellence.

About 20% of the lists or 26 authors come from the 17 prominent European languages, so three quarters of the authors in the list come from the European languages in Europe and America, as compared to about 100% in Le Monde's list, less biased, although possibly biased because I am not familiar with non-European languages except Hebrew of course. My list has 31 authors or about 25% of the list coming from non-European/American languages and countries, which is to the best of my knowledge the highest percentage of non-European authors in any comparable list. The Nobel Prize laureates from 1901 to 2015 amount to 112, a similar number to the 120 of my list, however it differs in many respects – 23 of them are not included in my list, 31 of them in my list come from non-European/American languages as opposed to 10 in the Nobel list, 21 less. And of course the Nobel Prize laureates in my lists are not confined to the list of the best of the best amounting to 120, but are comprised also in the lists of the best authors and of the excess. The Nobel Prize laureates include 51 authors from the leading languages, 23 authors from the outstanding languages, 28 authors from the prominent languages, and 10 authors from the non-European/American languages, in total 112 laureates. In the following list we can find the 111 Nobel Prize laureates by country and language. In 2015 a Belarus winner received a Nobel Prize, she writes in Russian, and she is included in my lists, so the exact figure is 112.

One more word about diversity. Diversity has become nowadays a positive term, for me it was always positive, and me, my family, my friends, my town, and my country apply diversity. Diversity is multiculturalism, biodiversity, cosmopolitanism, cultural diversity, diversity politics. I am a strong supporter of all those terms in theory and in practice. I may be accused of Europocentrism, though the reader can assess that this book, my indexes, my Ethics Pays book, all my other books, show my endeavors to be as cosmopolitan as possible. Even if I like most European culture – I am not confined to French, English or Spanish culture, as most Europeans do, and I read the literature, write about the cultures, learn the languages, visit the countries, watch films, art and plays, and appreciate most of the European cultures – French, English, Spanish, Italian, Portuguese, German, Austrian, Irish, Dutch, Czech, Belgian, Swedish, Norwegian, Danish, Russian, Polish, Greek, Balkans, Catalan, Provencal, Galician, Frisian, Friulian, Hebrew (it is a European culture, basis of European religion, literature– the Bible), etc... If we examine the diversity considerations in the judgement of the Nobel Prize Literature committee, we find that out of the 112 laureates almost all of them were Europeans/Americans or from European cultures (including the Israeli Shai Agnon born in Ukraine, Nadine Gordimer's parents came from Lithuania and England, and the Afrikaner J. M. Coetzee). Actually the non-Europeans/Americans winners are: 1 Arab, 2 Chinese, 2 Japanese, 2 Indians, 2 Africans, 2 Afro-Americans, 11 – less than 10%, half of them writing in English, while in my list they are more than 20%. And I am not an expert in non-European/American literatures as the diversity minded Nobel Prize committee should be. But I cannot complain, as my in-law Dan Shechtman was awarded the Nobel Prize in Chemistry in 2011, and 22% of the Nobel Prize laureates over the years were Jews, many of them in Literature, too few of them in Peace, while Jews are only 0.2% of the world's population. So once thing is for sure, they are not anti-Semitic, bearing in mind that probably there are no Jews in the Swedish committee and almost no Jews in Sweden.

We bring here the list of the Nobel laureates in Literature by year of award with links to the entries on Encyclopaedia Britannica, the list by country and by language, as well as the list of the authors who received The Jerusalem Prize for the Freedom of the Individual in Society.

4. NOBEL PRIZE FOR LITERATURE WINNERS, LINKS TO ENCYCLOPEDIA BRITANNICA'S ENTRIES

The table provides a chronological list of recipients of the Nobel Prize for Literature.

5. THE JERUSALEM PRIZE FOR THE FREEDOM OF THE INDIVIDUAL IN SOCIETY

The Jerusalem Prize for the Freedom of the Individual in Society is a biennial literary award given to writers whose works have dealt with themes of human freedom in society. It is awarded at the Jerusalem International Book Fair, and the recipient usually delivers an address when accepting the award. The award is valued at $10,000, a modest amount that "reflects that it was never intended to be anything more than a symbolic sum." The prize's inaugural year was 1963, awarded to Bertrand Russell who had won the Nobel Prize in 1950. Octavio Paz, V. S. Naipaul, J. M. Coetzee and Mario Vargas Llosa all won the Jerusalem Prize prior to winning the Nobel. In the intervening even-numbered years there is also a National Jerusalem Prize to promote local Israeli authors. For example in 1994 the Jerusalem Prize was won by Naomi Gal. In Australia, the Jerusalem Prize is awarded annually by the Zionist Council of Victoria (ZCV), the Zionist Federation of Australia and the World Zionist Federation, to an outstanding individual who supports Israel and the Zionist movement.

There are in total 112 Nobelists (Leading – 51, Outstanding – 23, Prominent – 28, Non-European/American – 10) – 89 in my lists, and 23 who are not in my lists. The authors in my lists come from 54 countries (11 – Leading Literatures, 11 Outstanding Literatures, 14 Prominent Literatures, 18 Non-European and American Literatures), and wrote in 33 languages (3 – Leading Literatures, 3 – Outstanding Literatures, 16 Prominent Literatures, 11 Non-European/American Literatures). So, unlike the other lists that are on the Internet and the Le Monde lists my lists have much more diversity with more than 50 countries, more than 30 languages, and much less European/American centered. The lists are flexible, as they comprise 3 layers of excellence and also a Nobelists yardstick, so we can analyze all the literatures on the most concise format – the Best of the Best, the larger format – the Best, and the largest format, 120 authors, 240 authors, 400 authors, including all the Nobel Prize laureates of the 20th century and also 2 Nobel Peace Prize laureates.

7. CORY'S LIST OF THE BEST AUTHORS IN THE WORLD IN 1860-1899 (AND IN 2000-2015) WITH COMMENTS AND LISTS OF BOOKS

The list of the best authors in the 20th century is not the optimal list of the best modern authors. First of all, most of the best authors wrote their masterpieces in the first half of the century or latest in the 50's, only about 20% of the authors wrote most of their works in the second half of the century – Marguerite Duras, Alexander Solzhenitsyn, Mario Vargas Llosa, Saul Bellow, Primo Levi, Peter Weiss, Chinua Achebe, Truman Capote, Gabriel Garcia Marquez, Philip Roth, Milan Kundera, Nadine Gordimer, Heinrich Boell, Anthony Burgess, Georges Perec, Umberto Eco, Paulo Coelho... All of them are good authors, but in the first half of the century there were much better authors on the average, and in the second half of the 19th century we find the best authors of all times, on the average of course. Therefore, the best literature century is in my opinion the century of 1860-1959, where we can find on top of the authors that I mentioned in my lists, such gigantic authors as Victor Hugo, Emile Zola, Mark Twain, Lev Tolstoy, Fyodor Dostoyevsky, Henrik Ibsen, Anton Chekhov, Gustave Flaubert, August Strindberg, Guy de Maupassant, Oscar Wilde, Henry James, Gabriele d'Annunzio, Charles Dickens, George Eliot, Arthur Rimbaud, Emily Dickinson, Charles Baudelaire, Alexandre Dumas, Jules Verne, etc. However, there were also excellent authors in the first half of the 19th century, so we could of course chose 19th century as the best literature century ever: Balzac, Lord Byron, Jane Austen, the sisters Bronte, Chateaubriand, Johan Wolfgang von Goethe, Heinrich Heine, Nikolai Gogol, Washington Irving, John Keats, Percy Bysshe Shelley, Mikhail Lermontov, Alexander Pushkin...

Anyhow, I prefer the century of 1860-1959 as it gathers the authors whom I love and appreciate most, the most modern authors, in a century that was a breakthrough in all fields, in science, technology, democracy, independence of national entities, art – the impressionism, surrealism, expressionism, cubism, abstract – painting, sculpture, architecture, and the painters that I like most: Renoir, Monet, Manet, Degas, Cezanne, Van Gogh, Pissarro, Sisley, Morisot, Guillaumin, Caillebotte, Cassatt, Seurat, Gauguin, Toulouse-Lautrec, in the 19th century, and in the 20th – Dali, Chagall, Modigliani, Klimt, Magritte, Max Ernst, de Chirico, Munch, Tanguy, Soutine... and of course modern literature – poetry, novels, plays, biographies, philosophy. Finally, the music that I love most - Pyotr Ilyich Tchaikovsky, Antonín Dvořák, Gustav Mahler, Max Bruch, Igor Stravinsky, Georges Bizet, Hector Berlioz, Charles Gounod, Giuseppe Verdi, Giacomo Puccini, Jacques Offenbach, Claude Debussy, Maurice Ravel, Franz Liszt, Johan Strauss the son, Johannes Brahms, Anton Bruckner, Camille Saint-Saens, Nicolai Rimsky-Korsakov, Bedrich Smetana, Edvard Grieg Jan Sibelius, Aaron Copland, and composers that I love less but were nevertheless great: Richard Wagner, Bela Bartok, Alban Berg, Sergei Prokofiev, Dmitri Shostakovich. On top of that the best music that I love is the popular and folk music, jazz, and most of all Musicals by Rodgers and Hammerstein, Lorenz Hart, Kurt Weill, Irving Berlin, Cole Porter, George Gershwin, My Fair Lady, West Side Story by Leonard Bernstein, all of them composed prior to 1959... One more personal remark – I was born in this 'century' and when it ended I was already 15, an intellectual person (as proved by my diary), reading fluently in French, English, Hebrew and Ladino, the best authors of this century in the libraries of my father Albert, my brother Haiim and the local libraries – Zola, Hugo, Tolstoy, Dostoyevsky, Dumas, Verne, Dickens, writing in 1860-1899, as well as Sartre, Gide, Maurois, Arthur Miller, Pagnol, D. H. Lawrence, Remarque, Blasco Ibanez, Aragon, Colette, writing in the 20th century.

But this was also the century of the worst tragedies in humankind – the wars between Prussia with Austria and France, wars of independence, colonial wars, First World War, Second World War, the Holocaust, Hiroshima, Nagasaki, Korean war, the Great Depression, Imperialism, Colonialism, deaths of millions in Communist Soviet Union and China, Civil wars in the US, Russia, Germany, France, Spain, China, Nazism, Fascism, Communism, neoliberal Capitalism, famine, racism, anti-Semitism, epidemics, earthquakes, unbridled crime... So, what is preferable to live in the most intellectual century which was also the most tragic, or to live in our century – the post-modern century of 1960-2059, in a democratic and educated world, with the highest standard of living ever, but with a rather tedious and boring literature, music and art, yet a century that makes them accessible to most of mankind free of charge in state museums, subsidized concert halls, online books accessible at no cost in Gutenberg Project, communications and Internet practically free of charge, the best healthcare, the highest longevity, the most ethical century in spite of all the scandals and Recessions. A century with almost no wars - except of course the Israeli-Arab and Palestinians wars with thousands of casualties on both sides military and civilians, the Arab/Muslim fratricide civil wars between fundamentalists, seculars, Shiites, Sunnis, Christians, Daesh/ISIS, Hamas, Hizballah, Muslim Brothers, with hundreds of thousands of casualties in Algeria, Syria, Libya, Iraq, Afghanistan, Yemen, Sudan, Lebanon...(and yet all the hypocrites in the West, the UN, and the Muslim nations blame Israel only), the fratricide wars in Yugoslavia, the civil wars in Africa, the dictatorships in most of the developing countries, but not in such order of magnitude as the World Wars. Well, I fear that I am mistaken here, as it suffices that a terrorist organization, or a genocide regime takes hold of nuclear weapons thus killing in one war millions of people. A fundamentalist suicide bomber would prefer of course to kill hundreds of thousands than to kill only one person with a knife, ten persons with his gun, a hundred persons with his explosives...

In the 40 years that I am adding to my list (1860-1899) there were the most significant breakthroughs in human history: 1861-1865 – The American Civil War, a tragedy that changed the face of history and enabled the US to become the strongest nation in the world. 1863 – Formation of the International Red Cross, and also London Underground opens. 1866 – Successful transatlantic telegraph cable, and also Alfred Nobel invents dynamite. 1869 – First transcontinental railroad in the US, and also Dmitri Mendeleev created the Periodic Table. Finally, the Suez Canal opens. 1870-1871 – The Franco-Prussian War results in the unifications of Germany and Italy, the collapse of the Second French Empire, and the emergence of a New Imperialism. 1871-1914 – Second Industrial Revolution. 1872 – Yellowstone, the first National Park is created. 1873 – Maxwell's A Treatise of Electricity and Magnetism is published. 1876 – 1879 – 13 million Chinese die of famine in Northern China. 1876-1914 – The massive expansion in population, territory, industry and wealth in the US is referred to as the Gilded Age. 1877 – Great Railroad Strike in the US – the world's first nationwide labour strike. 1877 – Thomas Edison invents the phonograph. 1878 – First commercial telephone exchange in New Haven, Connecticut. 1879 – Thomas Edison tests his first light bulb. 1881 – Wave of pogroms begins in the Russian Empire. 1881 – First electrical power plant and grid in Godalming Britain. 1881-1882 – France establishes free secular education. 1885 – Louis Pasteur creates the first successful vaccine against rabies. 1885 – Singer begins production of the most popular model of sewing machine. 1886 – Karl Benz sells the first commercial automobile. 188 – Louis le Prince records the Roudhey Garden Scene, the earliest surviving film. 1889 – Eiffel Tower is inaugurated in Paris, and also – Aspirin patented. 1890 – Clement Ader attempted a flight of the Eole, that took off, reaching a height of 20 cm and flew uncontrolled for 50 m. 1892 – John Froelich develops and constructs the first gasoline-petrol-powered tractor. 1893 – New Zealand becomes the first country to enact women's suffrage. 1894 – First commercial film released by Jean Aime Le Roy. 1894 – First gramophone record. 1894-1906 – Dreyfus Affair in France. 1895 – Wilhelm Roentgen identifies x-rays. 1896 – Olympic Games rewind in Athens. 1896 – Henri Becquerel discovers radioactivity, and also – J. J. Thomson identifies the electron. 1899-1900 – Indian famine kills over one million people. Those are therefore the most salient events.

The list of the authors in the last 40 years of the 19th century 1860-1899, comprises first of all the authors who wrote most of their works in this period, but also a few authors who wrote only some of their works in this period, a few authors who were born in this period and finally very exceptional cases of authors who were born in the 20th century but that for various reasons are included in this list and not in the list of the authors of the 20th century. We include also at the end of this list 20 authors who wrote mainly in the years 2000-2015, but many authors in my list of the 20th century wrote also in 2000-2015. The list of 20 authors is not indicative, as in this period hundreds of authors from all over the world wrote excellent books, but it is too early to judge their achievements, so I just mentioned the 20 authors in order to complement the list of the authors who wrote in the best epoch of world literature 1860-2015, a period of 156 years, not a century, not two centuries, not even 1.5 century, but this period encompasses in my opinion the best, most versatile & cosmopolitan literature that mankind has ever produced in human history.

CORY'S LIST OF THE BEST AUTHORS IN THE WORLD IN 1860-1899

The order in the lists of the authors in the last 40 years of the 19th century 1860-1899, in the following languages is not according to importance.

1. FRENCH: Emile Zola, Victor Hugo, Guy de Maupassant, Gustave Flaubert, Alexandre Dumas pere, Theophile Gautier, Stephane Mallarme, George Sand, Edmond Rostand, Alexandre Dumas fils, Arthur Rimbaud, Georges Courteline, Georges Feydeau, Paul Verlaine, Charles Baudelaire, Jules Verne, Eugene Labiche, Emile Augier, Henri Meilhac, Ludovic Halevy, Theodore de Banville, Leconte de Lisle, Henri de Reigner, Alfred Jarry, Joris-Karl Huysmans, Anatole France (Nobel), Alphonse Daudet, La comtesse de Segur (children books), Paul Feval, Jules Valles, Prosper Merimee, Jules Barbey d'Aurevilly, Les Freres de Goncourt (Edmond et Jules), Sully Prudhomme (Nobel), Maurice Maeterlink (Nobel, Belgium), Frederic Mistral (Nobel, wrote in Provençal), Victor Cherbuliez (Switzerland), Louis-Honore Frechette (French Canada), Oswald Durand (Haiti, wrote in Haitian), Edouard David (wrote in Picard).

In total 40 authors who wrote in 4 languages: French (37), Provençal (1), Haitian (1), Picard (1), the last three are in the French languages family. They come from 5 countries: France (36), Belgium (1), Switzerland (1), Canada (1), Haiti (1). As I know much more French literature from France and in French, the literature in the other languages and countries is merely indicative, and does not encompass the whole literature of Canada, Haiti or Belgium. However, I have studied the other languages of the French family, I read books in those languages, and in other French family languages, as Gascon, and I try at least to mention the literature in those languages and in other French speaking countries. The 40 last years of the 19th century was maybe the best period ever of the French literature with Giant Novelists as Emile Zola, Victor Hugo, Gustave Flaubert, Alexandre Dumas, Guy de Maupassant, George Sand, Anatole France, Alphonse Daudet, Jules Verne, Giant Poets as Victor Hugo, Arthur Rimbaud, Paul Verlaine, Charles Baudelaire, Stephane Mallarme, Theophile Gautier, Frederic Mistral, and Giant Playwrights as Victor Hugo, Edmond Rostand, Georges Courteline, Georges Feydeau, Eugene Labiche, Maurice Maeterlink. I prefer this epoch in French literature, painting & music over the whole period of the 20th century.

The 4 authors who received the Nobel Literature Prize were not included in the lists of the 20th century authors, as most of their works was written in the 19th century. However, when we compare the enlarged lists of the 20th century authors with all the categories including the Nobel Literature Prize laureates who were not included in my lists (400 in total), we'll subtract the 19th century authors from the list. Finally, I have limited the list of the authors in French and English – the two main languages of the literature in the 19th century (German was less prominent in the 19th century than in the 20th century) – to 40 authors in 40 years of activity: 1860-1899.

2. ENGLISH: Henry James (US), Charles Dickens, Oscar Wilde (Irish), Mark Twain (US), Alfred Lord Tennyson, Emily Dickinson (US), George Eliot, Samuel Butler, Thomas Hardy, Elizabeth Gaskell, Walt Whitman (US), Robert Browning, W.S. Gilbert, Robert Louis Stevenson, Howard Pyle (US), Henry Rider Haggard, Lew Wallace (US), Frances Hodgson Burnett (US), Jerome K. Jerome, Louisa May Alcott (US), Anthony Trollope, Israel Zangwill, Anthony Hope, Nathaniel Hawthorne (US), Harriet Beecher Stowe (US), Henry David Thoreau (US), Lewis Carroll, George Meredith, Herman Melville (US), William Dean Howells (US), Sheridan Le Fanu (Irish), Dante Gabriel Rossetti, B. C. Stephenson, Elizabeth Barrett Browning, John Millington Synge (Irish), Augusta Lady Gregory (Irish), Charles G. D. Roberts (Canada), Miles Franklin (Australia), Katherine Mansfield (New Zealand), Samuel Selvon (in Creolized English, Trinidad). In total 40 authors, 4 of them: James, Dickens, Wilde and Twain, were among the best authors of the English literature, and among the best world authors in all times.

The 40 authors wrote in 2 languages: English (39), Creolized English (1). They come from 6 countries: UK (19), US (13), Irish (4), Canada (1), Australia (1), New Zealand (1), Trinidad (1). As I know much more English, Irish, and American literature the literature from the other countries is merely indicative, and does not encompass the whole literature of Canada, Australia, New Zealand and the Caribbeans. I try at least to mention the literature in other English speaking countries. In the last 40 years of the 19th century the authors from England were better and more numerous, but in the 20th century the American authors took the lead. Some would say that the 20th century authors (English, Irish and American) are much better than the whole 19th century authors, but this is arguable as authors in English excel in modern style. I personally prefer by far the 20th century literature in English, and especially from the US. Finally, I have limited the list of the authors in French and English – the two main languages of the literature in the 19th century, (German was less prominent in the 19th century), to 40 authors in 40 years of activity.

3. GERMAN: Gerhard Hauptmann (Nobel), Theodor Mommsen (Nobel), Friedrich Nietzsche, Theodor Storm, Theodor Fontane, Gottfried Keller (Switzerland), Conrad Ferdinand Meyer (Switzerland), Detlev von Liliencron, Gustav Freitag, Wilhelm Raabe, Wilhelm Busch, Adalbert Stifter (Austria), Carl Spitteler (Nobel, Switzerland), Paul Johann Ludwig Heise (Nobel), Rudolf Christoff Eucken (Nobel), Leopold von Sacher-Masoch (Austrian), Bertha von Suttner (Nobel Peace Prize, Austrian), Marie von Ebner-Eschenbach (Austrian), Ferdinand von Saar (Austria), Peter Rosegger (Austria), Klaus Groth (in Plattdeutsch, Germany), Michel Rodange (in Luxembourgish, Luxembourg), Auguste Lustig (in Alsatian, France), Auguste Corrodi (in Schwyzerdutsch, Switzerland). The German authors in the 20th century were by far more numerous and better than the authors in the last 40 years of the 19th century, however, if we compare the whole 19th century to the 20th century, some would say that 19th century was better.

In total 24 authors who wrote in 5 languages: German (20), Plattdeutsch (1), Luxembourgish (1), Alsatian (1), Schwyzerdutsch (1). They come from 5 countries: Germany (12), Austria (6), Switzerland (4), France (1), Luxembourg (1). As I know more German and Austrian literature in German, the literature in the other languages and countries is merely indicative, and does not encompass the whole literature in Plattdeutsch/Alsatian/Luxembourgish/Schwyzerdutsch in Switzerland, France, Germany, and Luxembourg. However, I have studied the other languages of the German family, I read books in those languages and in other Germanic languages, as Bavarian, and I try at least to mention the literature in those languages and in other Germanic languages countries. The 5 authors who received the Nobel Literature Prize were not in the lists of the 20th century authors, as most of their works was written in the 19th century. However, when we compare the enlarged lists of the 20th century authors with all the categories including the Nobel Literature Prize laureates who were not included in my lists (400 in total), we'll subtract the 19th century authors from the list (9 authors overall – 4 in French and 5 in German).

4. SPANISH: Jose Maria de Pereda, Jose Zorilla, Miguel de Unamuno, Gustavo Adolfo Becquer, Ramon de Campoamor, Gaspar Nunez de Arce, Juan Valera, Benito Perez Galdos, Leopoldo Alas "Clarín", Armando Palacio Valdes, Marcelino Menendez Y Pelayo, Jose Marti (Cuba), Ruben Dario (Nicaragua), Manuel Gonzalez Prada (Peru), Rosalia de Castro (Galego), Angel Guimera (Catalan), Pachin de Melas (Asturianu), Nikolas Ormaetxea/Orixe (Basque). In total 18 authors in 5 languages: Spanish (14), Galego (1), Catalan (1), Asturianu (1), Basque (1) and in 4 countries: Spain (15), Nicaragua (1), Cuba (1), Peru (1). As I know more Spanish literature, the literature in the other languages is merely indicative, and does not encompass the whole literature in Catalan/Galego/Asturianu/Basque. However, I have studied the other languages of the Spanish family (except Basque which is not in the Spanish family), I read books in those languages and in other Spanish languages, as Aragonese, and I try at least to mention the literature in those languages. I prefer by far the Spanish and Latin American literature of the 20th century compared to the 19th. I know also much less Latin American literature in the 19th century (and much more in the 20th century), although all of us have heard about the famous Jose Marti.

A Cuban/Latin American hero, who was killed in battle against the Spaniards, wrote: "No me entierren en lo oscuro/ A morir como un traidor/ Yo soy bueno y como bueno/ Moriré de cara al sol." ("Do not bury me in darkness / to die like a traitor / I am good, and as a good man / I will die facing the sun.") His belief in the inseparability of Cuban and Latin American sovereignty and the expression thereof in his writings have contributed to the shape of the modern Latin American Identity. His works are a cornerstone of Latin American and political literature and his prolific contributions to the fields of journalism, poetry, and prose are highly acclaimed.

5. ITALIAN: Gabriele d'Annunzio, Giovanni Verga, Antonio Fogazzaro, Edmondo de Amicis, Carlo Collodi, Luigi Capuana, Giovanni Pascoli, Matilde Serao, Giuseppe Giacosa, Salvatore Farina, Carlo Favetti (Friulian, Italy), Peider Lansel (Rumantsch, Switzerland), Rinatu Coti (Corsican, France), Gavino Contini (Sardinian, Italy), Nino Martoglio (Sicilian, Italy). In total 15 authors in 6 languages: Italian (10), Friulian (1), Rumantsch (1), Corsican (1), Sardinian (1), Sicilian (1). From 3 countries: Italy (13), Switzerland (1), France (1). I prefer by far the Italian literature of the 20th century, and I know it better, as compared to the 19th century. As I know more Italian literature, the literature in the other languages is merely indicative, and does not encompass the whole literature in Friulian/Rumantsch/Corsican/Sardinian/Sicilian. However, I have studied the other languages of the Italian family, I read books in those languages and in other Italian languages, as Veneto, and I try at least to mention the literature in those languages.

6. RUSSIAN: Lev Tolstoy, Fyodor Dostoyevsky, Anton Chekhov, Ivan Turgenev, Nikolay Leskov, Nikolay Nekrasov, Alexei Konstantinovich Tolstoy, Alexander Ostrovsky, Valery Bryusov, Konstantin Balmont. In total 10 authors, 4 of them: Tolstoy, Dostoyevsky, Chekhov and Turgenev, were the best authors ever of the Russian literature, and among the best world authors in all times. It goes without saying that I prefer by far this period with its leading authors.

7. DUTCH: Piet Paaltjens, Marcellus Emants, Willem Kloos, Louis Couperus, Frederik van Eeden, Hendrik Conscience (in Flemish, Belgium), Jan van Beers (in Flemish, Belgium), Fedde Schurer (in Frisian, Netherlands), N. P. van Wyk Louw (in Afrikaans, South Africa), Guillermo Rosario (in Papiamentu, Curacao). In total 10 authors in 5 languages: Dutch – 5, Flemish – 2, Frisian – 1, Afrikaans – 1, Papiamentu – 1. From 4 countries: Netherlands – 6, Belgium – 2, South Africa – 1, Curacao – 1. I must confess that I have not read any of those authors except trying to read Guillermo Rosario in Papiamentu. The authors whom I read in those languages are from the 20th century, but I have arrived to this list from researching the subject and finding that the Dutch/Flemish/Afrikaans/Frisian literature in the 19th century was very good indeed. However, I have not picked the names of the authors whom I have not read at random. I have read material on all of them from the Wikipedia and other sources, sometimes reading extracts.

8. CZECH: Otokar Brezina, Alois Jirasek, Karel Vaclav Rais. 3 authors writing in Czech, apparently good as I have not read them, but a worthy survey of the world literature in the 19th and 20th centuries cannot overlook the Czech literature, and we must not forget that one of the best authors in history was a Czech - Franz Kafka who wrote in German in the 20th century.

9. GREEK: Kostis Palamas, Aristotelis Valaoritis, Emmanuel Rhoides. In total 3 authors. I heard of those two poets and novelist from articles on Greek literature, biographies on the Wikipedia, and poems of Palamas and Valaoritis in my book The Penguin Book of Greek Verse in Greek and English. This book brings Homer's poetry from the Iliad and the Odyssey, Hesiod, Archilochus, Alcaeus, Sappho, Ibycus, Simonides, and many other ancient poets, as well as extracts from the works of the playwrights Aeschylus, Sophocles and Euripides, and the philosophers Plato and Aristotle. This excellent anthology encompasses also poets from the Hellenistic World, the Byzantine Empire, Turkish rule, Modern Greece - 19th and 20th centuries,

10. PORTUGUESE: Jose Maria de Eca de Queiroz, Fernando Pessoa, Joao de Deus, Antero de Quental, Teofilo Braga, Guerra Junqueiro, Machado de Assis (Brazil), Jose de Alencar (Brazil), Euclides da Cunha (Brazil), Aluisio Azevedo (Brazil), Raul Pompeia (Brazil), Joaquim Manuel de Macedo (Brazil). 12 authors – 6 from Portugal, 6 from Brazil. I have read some of those authors from both countries, who wrote excellent novels and poetry. It is quite sad that the excellent works by Portuguese and Brazilian authors is unknown to the world readers, and only in the 2nd half of 20th century two authors have become famous – Jorge Amado and Saramago.

11. POLISH: Jozef Ignacy Kraszewski, Michal Balucki, Eliza Orzeszkowa, Maria Konopnicka, Boleslaw Prus, Gabriela Zapolska. In total 6 authors, whom I have not read but researched.

12. SWEDISH: August Strindberg, Gustaf Froeding, Johan Ludvig Runeberg, who was a Finn writing in Swedish, but also the national poet of Finland. In total 3 authors, with a giant author August Strindberg, one of the world's (and mine) greatest playwrights of all times.

13. NORWEGIAN: Henrik Ibsen, Alexander Kielland, Jonas Lie. In total 3 authors, with the giant Henrik Ibsen, the best playwright ever (in my opinion), and perceived as the best modern playwright. I taught Ibsen in my courses, especially An Enemy of the People & A Doll's House.

14. DANISH: Hans Christian Andersen, Georg Brandes, Jens Peter Jacobsen. In total 3 authors, with the giant Hans Christian Andersen. I read Andersen and Jacobsen, and the stories by Andersen are perceived as the best children stories ever. However I enjoyed reading them as an adult and read them in many languages, as Andersen is one of the most translated authors.

15. FINNISH: Aleksis Kivi, Minna Canth, Elias Loennrot - who compiled Kalevala, the national epic of Finland. 3 authors whom I have not read but made research on their works and activities.

16. CROATIAN: Eugen Kumicic, Ksaver Sandor Gjalski, Vjenceslav Novak. 3 authors whom I have not read but made research on their works and activities. In the literature of the 20th century I wrote about an Albanian author and a Bosniak author who wrote in Serbian, and here I write about Croatian authors. But I am aware that there are excellent Balkans/Slavic authors in the 19th and 20th centuries from Croatia, Serbia, Bosnia, Montenegro, Slovenia, Slovakia, Macedonia, Belarus, Moldova, and Albania whom I have not researched for lack of knowledge and space. Nevertheless, I wrote about authors from Russia, Poland, Ukraine, Bulgaria, Romania and Greece in the 19th century, and authors from some of those countries also in the 20th century.

17. HUNGARIAN: Geza Gardonyi, Mor Jokai, Imre Madach. 3 authors whom I have not read but made research on their works and activities. In the 20th century I wrote about one author.

18. YIDDISH: Sholem Aleichem (Russian and American), Isaac Mayer Dick (Russian), Abraham Goldfaden (Russian born, Romanian), Mendele Mocher Sforim (Russian), I. L. Peretz (Poland). In total 5 authors from Russia (3), Romania (1), Poland (1). One of them Sholem Aleichem is a giant author, one of the best authors of modern times, whom I like very much to read him in Yiddish. I have read in Yiddish, English and Hebrew some of the works by these authors and seen plays by some of them. Solomon Naumovich Rabinovich, better known under his pen name Sholem Aleichem was a leading Yiddish author and playwright. The musical Fiddler on the Roof, based on his stories about Tevye the Dairyman, was the first commercially successful English-language stage production about Jewish life in Eastern Europe. Isaac Mayer Dick's fame rests on his Yiddish novels, a field in which he was the first professional and the founder of a school. As he himself asserted many times, he wrote only for the purpose of spreading knowledge and morality among his readers, and in many cases he permitted this purpose to overshadow the story. Abraham Goldfaden was a Russian-born Jewish poet, playwright, stage director and actor in the languages Yiddish and Hebrew, author of some 40 plays. Goldfaden is considered the father of the Jewish modern theatre. In 1876 he founded in Romania what is generally credited as the world's first professional Yiddish-language theater troupe. He was also responsible for the first Hebrew-language play performed in the United States. Mendele Mocher Sforim, originally Sholem Yankev Abramovich, was a Jewish author and one of the founders of modern Yiddish and Hebrew literature. The Little Man" and the unstaged drama Di Takse ("The Tax") both condemned the corruption by which religious taxes This satiric tendency continued in Die Klatshes (The nag). His later work became more humane and less satiric, starting with Fishke and continuing with the unfinished Masoes Benjamin Hashlishi (The Travels of Benjamin III), something of a Jewish Don Quixote. Isaac Leib, best known as I. L. Peretz, was a Yiddish language author and playwright from Poland. He is perceived together with Mendele Mokher Seforim and Sholem Aleichem as one of the three great classical Yiddish writers. Peretz rejected cultural universalism, seeing the world as composed of different nations, each with its own character. He greatly respected the Hasidic Jews for their mode of being in the world; at the same time, he understood that there was a need to make allowances for human frailty. His short stories such as "If Not Higher", "The Treasure", and "Beside the Dying" emphasize the importance of sincere piety rather than empty religiosity.

19. LADINO: Elia Carmona (Turkey), David Fresco (Turkey), Alexander Ben Guiat (Turkey), Moshe David Gaon (Bosnia, Israel), Moshe Attias (Greece, Israel). 5 authors, 3 of them from Turkey, 1 from Israel, and 1 from Greece. Elia Carmona, native of Constantinople, was the most prolific known author of original Judeo-Spanish novels (romansos). Carmona also founded and edited, El Gugeton, longest surviving of the satirical Judeo-Spanish newspapers inaugurated after the 1908 Young Turks' revolution. Carmona was one of the greatest Ladino authors and journalists in Ladino. He wrote dozens of novels that were very popular among the Sephardis. His works are perceived as one of the highlights in the Golden Age of Ladino in modern times. David Fresco is known mostly as the editor for almost fifty years of the Ladino newspaper in Turkey El Tiempo. David Fresco aligned with prominent anti-Zionist Rabbi Chaim Nahum. Fresco argued in favour of assimilation of the Ottoman Jews into Turkish society and the promotion of the use of Turkish language. He wrote many novels and books in Ladino – El bezero de oro, La ermoza Judia de Espania... & in French - Le Sionisme. Alexander Ben Guiat was a Ladino journalist, author, translator, poet, playwright and publisher in Turkey and he is perceived as one of the most prominent authors in Ladino in modern times. He wrote many novels – Los suvenires del melder, Mis tres kaveyos blankos, El jurnal de un resien kasado, La istoria de mi senior padre, Salvado por su ija, La ermosa viuda, El muerto ke esta vivo, Banios de sangre, La maldision del djidio, La kavesa del brigante, Fuego! Moshe David Gaon was an historian, researcher of the history of the Oriental Jews, a Bibliograph, educator, journalist and poet. He was born in Bosnia and settled in Israel/Palestine as a young man. He is the father of the Israeli actor and singer Yehoram Gaon. Gaon published many research books on the Sephardi and Oriental Jews, including the well-known "Oriental Jews in Eretz Israel in the Past and Present". He wrote in many newspapers in Ladino and other languages. He wrote poetry "Poesias" in Ladino, and the largest bibliography of newspapers in Ladino. Moshe Attias was born in Greece and came as a young man to Israel/Palestine. He wrote articles in many newspapers in Ladino and other languages. His most well-known books are Romansero Sephardi and Cansoniero Sephardi, giving a rich and vivid picture of songs and poems of the Sephardis. I have read novels, plays and poetry in Ladino (Rashi and Latin) from the 19th and 20th century.

20. ROMANIAN: Mihai Eminescu, Vasile Alecsandri, Ion Luca Caragiale, Ion Creanga, Barbu Stefanescu Delavrancea. In total 5 authors from Romania, some of them I read in Romanian and enjoyed. Mihai Eminescu was born in Botosan, hometown of my wife Ruthy and her mother.

21. TURKISH: Namik Kemal, Tevfik Fikret, Halid Ziya Usakligil, Ahmet Hasim, Yakup Kadri Karaosmanoglu. In total 5 authors from Turkey, that I have not read but researched them.

22. IRISH GAELIC: Peadar Ua Laoghaire, Patrick Padraic Pearse, Mairtin O Cadhain. In total 3 authors from Ireland writing in Irish Gaelic. Padraic Pearse I have read in English and enjoyed.

23. UKRAINIAN: Ivan Franko, Mikhailo Kotsiubynsky, Lesya Ukrainka, Mykhailo Starytsky, Nikolay Kostomarov (Russian who wrote in Ukrainian and Russian). In total 5 authors from Ukraine (4) and Russia (1), writing in Ukrainian. Some of them I read in Ukrainian and enjoyed.

24. BULGARIAN: Ivan Vazov, Pencho Slaveykov, Aleko Konstantinov, Dimcho Debelyanov, Peyo Yavorov. In total 5 authors from Bulgaria, whom I have not read but researched.

25. HEBREW: Yehuda Burla (Israel), Hayim Nahman Bialik (Ukraine/Palestine), Shaul Tchernichovsky (Russia/Palestine), Abraham Mapu (Lithuania), Judah Leib Gordon (Lithuania/Palestine), Eliezer Ben Yehuda (Lithuania/Palestine), Rachel Bluwstein Sela/Rachel (Russia/Palestine), Avraham Shlonsky (Russia/Israel), Samuel David Luzzatto/Shadal (Italy), Moshe Smilansky (Ukraine/Israel). In total 10 authors who wrote in Hebrew, from 5 countries, but only one of them was born in Palestine (after 1948 – Israel) and lived there all his life – Yehuda Burla. Some of them never lived in Palestine (Mapu and Luzzatto), all the others were born outside Palestine and emigrated to Palestine, only two of them lived long enough to live in Israel after 1948 (Shlonsky and Smilansky). 3 of the authors were born in Lithuania, 3 in Russia, 2 in Ukraine, 1 was born in Italy and only 1 - a Sabra born in Israel. 8 of them were Ashkenazi Jews and 2 were Sephardi Jews. All of them were born in the 19th century, some of them lived only in the 19th century and some of them lived part or most of their lives in the 20th century. I studied about all of them, and read for pleasure only some of them, as I prefer by far the 20th century Israeli authors, and the 19th century authors sound archaic. I love very much literature, also Hebrew literature of course, and I am a fervent Zionist (see next paragraph on the Zionist authors), and that's why I lived in Tel Aviv (named after the book Altneuland by Herzl) near streets named after most of the Hebrew/Zionist/Yiddish authors in the 19th and 20th centuries mentioned in this book. I lived in Gordon (J. L.) street corner of Ben Yehuda street, 1 minute walk from Mapu street, 2 minutes walk from Frischman, Ben Gurion, A. D. Gordon, Sholom Aleichem, Mendelei streets, 5 minutes walk from Tchernichovsky, Bialik, Jabotinsky and Usishkin streets, 10 minutes walk from Herzl, I. L. Peretz streets, and not far away from Dick, Ansky, Shlonsky, Rachel, Alterman, Shadal, Ehad Haam, Klausner, Bashevis Singer, Shai Agnon (twice one Shay and one Agnon), Shamir, Burla, Goldfaden, Begin, Rothschild, Montefiore, Grinberg streets (and parks...), and of course those are streets named after authors who died as you don't name streets after authors who are still alive. Furthermore, I lived just around the corner from the street named after the author I like most – the French Emile Zola!

26. ZIONISM/HISTORY/POLITICAL LITERATURE: Theodor Herzl (Austria, in German), all the others wrote in Hebrew – Ahad Haam/Asher Ginsberg (Ukraine/UK/Palestine), Nathan Alterman (Israel), Yosef Haim Brenner (Russia/Palestine), David Frischmann (Poland), Aharon

David Gordon (Ukraine/Palestine), Joseph Klausner (Lithuania/Israel), Uri Zvi Greenberg (Ukraine/Israel), Menahem Begin (Belarus/Israel), Amnon Shamosh (Syria/Israel), Yaakov Yehoshua (Israel), Yitzhaq Shami (Israel), Zeev Jabotinsky (Russia, Palestine), Menachem Usishkin (Russia/Palestine), David Ben Gurion (Poland/Israel). In total 15 authors, but if we could add also philanthropists who contributed to Education, Science and Literature in Palestine, we would add Sir Moses Montefiore (Italy/UK), Baron Edmond Benjamin James de Rothschild (France), and many oriental Jews originating from Iraq and other countries, such as Sir Ellis Kadoorie (Iraq/China), but we stick to the 15 authors. The authors originate from 8 countries: Israel (3), Ukraine (3), Russia (3), Poland (2), Austria (1), Belarus (1), Lithuania (1), Syria (1). 12 are Ashkenazis, 3 are Sephardis. Most of them were born in the 19th century and operated in Palestine prior to the establishment of Israel. Herzl founded Zionism, Ben Gurion and Begin were prime ministers of Israel, some of them wrote poetry, novels, academic researches. I have learned about all of those leaders/authors, read biographies on Herzl and Ben Gurion, read books by Herzl and anthologies on Shami, Yehoshua and Shamosh, poetry by Grinberg, Alterman, and Jabotinsky, I was exposed to the works/speeches by Ben Gurion & Begin, but I am not an expert in Zionist literature. However, I hope that youngsters know at least what I and others from my generation know about Zionism and that those founders of the state and ethos of Israel are not for them just names of streets, parks and schools in Tel Aviv, Jerusalem, and other cities of Israel... Finally, I can understand if some readers would object to include Zionist authors in a survey of world literature, but the only reason I did it is because of the wave of anti-Semitism, anti-Zionism and anti-Israeli in the world, and before someone attacks us they are invited to read the Zionist literature, read the Bible, read Hebrew literature, Yiddish and Ladino literature, and also read the large number of Jewish authors who are part of the world literature in the US, France, UK, Germany, Italy..., who won the Nobel Literature Prize, and then decide what to believe.

27. ARABIC: Rifaa al-Tahtawi (Egypt), Francis Marrash (Syria), Taha Hussein (Egypt), Ahmed Shawqi (Egypt), Hafez Ibrahim (Egypt), Khalil Mutran (born in Lebanon, from Palestinian parents, lived in Egypt), Jurji Zaydan (Lebanon), Zaynab Fawwaz (Lebanon/Egypt), Mikhail Naima (Lebanon/US), May Ziade (Lebanon/Palestine/Egypt). In total – 10 authors: 5 Egyptians, 3 Lebanese, 1 Syrian and 1 Palestinian. I have not read any of those authors, unlike the Arab authors of the 20th century, but I've researched this topic, like I did for the Hungarian literature.

28. INDIAN: Assamese: Lakshminath Bezbaroa, Bengali: Sarat Chandra Chattopadhyay, Hindi: Jaishankar Prasad and Suryakant Tripathi 'Nirala', Gujarati: Kanaiyalal Maneklal Munshi and Govardhanram Tripathi, Kannada: D. R. Bendre, Marathi: Krushnaji Prabhakar Khadilkar, Urdu: Qurratulain Hyder, Bengali/English: Michael Madhusudan Dutt, Nissim Ezekiel – a Jewish poet from Mumbai writing in English, English: Jawaharlal Nehru, the first prime minister of Indian. In total: 12 authors who wrote in 8 languages: 2 wrote in Hindi, 2 in Gujarati, 1 in Assamese, 1 in Bengali, 1 in Kannada, 1 in Marathi, 1 in Urdu and 3 in English. I was exposed only to the works/speeches by Nehru, but researched about all the other Indian authors in this list.

29. CHINESE: Wu Jianren/Wu Woyao, Li Baojia/Li Boyuan/ Nanting Tingzhang, Liu E/Liu O/Tieyun, Zeng Pu, Hu Shi, Chen Duxiu, Chen Sanli, Dai Wangshu, Wen Yiduo, Yan Fu. I was not exposed to any of those authors, and I decided on the list after researching this topic.

30. JAPANESE: Natsume Soseki, Naoya Shiga, Mori Ogai, Ozaki Koyo, Kyoka Izumi, Ichiyo Higuchi, Fukuzawa Yukichi, Tsubouchi Shoyo, Futabatei Shimei, Koda Rohan. I was not exposed to any of those authors, and I decided on the list after researching this topic.

31. AFRICAN LITERATURE: Ghana – Joseph Ephraim Casely Hayford, wrote in English. South Africa – Herbert Isaac Ernest Dhlomo, wrote in English. Nigeria - Christopher Okigbo, wrote in English. Kenya – Ali Mazrui, wrote in English. Senegal – Mariama Ba, wrote in French. Cameroon – Mongo Beti, wrote in French. Cote d'Ivoire – Veronique Tadjo, wrote in French. Cape Verde - Germano Almeida, wrote in Portuguese. Ethiopia - Birhanu Zerihun, wrote in Amhari. Madagascar – Dox/Jean Verdi Salomon Razakandrainy, wrote in Malagasi. In total – 10 authors who wrote in 5 languages: English (4), French (3), 1 in Portuguese, 1 in Malagasi, 1 in Amhari. From 10 countries: Ghana, South Africa, Nigeria, Kenya, Senegal, Cameroon, Cote d'Ivoire, Cape Verde, Ethiopia, Madagascar. I made research on all those African authors.

THE LIST OF THE BEST AUTHORS OF THE TWENTY FIRST CENTURY (2000-2015)

As indicated above, the list of the 20 best authors in the years 2000-2015 of the 21st century is just indicative as there are already hundreds of good authors in this century and it is quite early to decide who are the best authors. We must bear in mind that a large number of the 20th century best authors continue to write and have published masterpieces also in the first years of the 21st century. My list of the best authors of the 20th century includes also all the Nobel Literature Prize laureates in the years 2000-2015. Anyhow, I have chosen 20 authors, some of them I've read.

ENGLISH

1. UK – J. K. Rowling.
2. US – Jonathan Franzen.
3. US – Laura Hillenbrand.
4. Canada – Yann Martel.
5. US/Afghanistan – Khaled Hosseini.
6. UK – Hilary Mantel.
7. US – John Grisham.
8. US – Cormac Mc Carthy.
9. US – Thomas Pynchon.
10. UK – Philip Pullman.

FRENCH

11. France – Valerie Toranian.
12. France – Claude Vigee.

GERMAN

13. Germany/UK – Charlotte Roche.

SPANISH

14. Chile – Roberto Bolano.

CHINESE

15. China – Liu Xiabo.

HEBREW

16. MEIR SHALEV

17. DAVID GROSSMAN

18. SAMI MICHAEL

19. EREZ BITON

COSMOPOLITAN

20. JACQUES CORY

To conclude my list of the best authors of modern times, I have taken the liberty to add 4 Israeli authors, who can compare with the other international authors, disregarding the proportion to the population and popularity. This addition is purely subjective, as it includes Israeli authors whom I like – Meir Shalev, David Grossman, Sami Michael and Erez Biton. Finally I have added my name as a cosmopolitan author, not because I can compare in any way to the other authors, but because it is my way to be part, if only the least and last, of the honorable list of the best authors in modern times. As I have written books (academic/novel/play/dissertation/autobiography) in three languages – Hebrew, English, French, articles/essays/poetry in those languages, as well as in Ladino and Spanish, correspondence/translations in those languages as well as in German and Italian, and various materials/translations in Romanian, Yiddish, and other languages as well, I would say that I have a contribution, even if very small, to the variety of modern cosmopolitan literature in forms of writing/languages, that was appreciated by thousands of students/readers.

In total – 20 authors, who wrote in 6 languages: English (10), French (2), German (1), Spanish (1), Chinese (1), Hebrew (5). From 8 countries: US (6), UK (3), France (2), Canada (1), Germany (1), Chile (1), China (1), Israel (5). This list is quite diversified, although most of the authors wrote in English. I have not made of course a research as on the literatures in all the languages from all the countries that I have brought up in my lists of the 19th and 20th centuries, but rather from general knowledge on the 21st century I know only about such well known authors whom I have read as Rowling, Grisham and Franzen. I have read Hebrew contemporary authors as Meir Shalev, Zeruya Shalev, Aharon Appelfeld, David Grossman, Sami Michael, Erez Biton, Ronny Someck, and of course authors whom I've mentioned in my 20th century list as A. B. Yehoshua, Amos Oz, and Yehoshua Sobol. I have read Ladino contemporary authors who continue to publish in the 21st century: Matilda Koen-Sarano, Margalit Matitiah, Avner Perez, Moshe Ha-Elion, Yosef Avraam Papo, Pilar Romeu Ferre, Tamar Alexander, Rachel Amado Bortnick, and Jacques Cory. I can bring here also my humble contribution to Ladino publishing in the 21st century, including the initiation, translation (with Ladinokomunita), and editing (with Bortnick) of the UN Universal Declaration of Human Rights, article that I wrote in Ladino, Spanish, French, English, and Hebrew, on How I discovered the Synagogue of Coria (origin of our name Cory) in Spain, poems, satires, articles about my Ladino activities, correspondence including on Ladinokomunita, lectures and speeches, and other literary activities stated above.

Different Languages	Different Countries	Different Authors
19th century (1860-1899) – 58	57	300 (309-9)
20th century – 33	54	400
21st century – 6	8	20
In the period 1860-2015 – 60+	70+	720 (300+400+20)

In the 40 last years of the 19th century – 1860-1899 – we have in our lists 300 authors. Actually, it is 309 but we deduct the 9 authors (4 French and 5 Germans) who are also in the enlarged list of the 20th century (400) with the Nobel Prize laureates who were not part of our basic lists there but 9 of them are part of our lists in the 19th century. In the 20th century we have in the enlarged lists with all the Nobel Prize laureates 400 authors. In the 21st century we have an indicative amount of 20 authors, thus amounting to a total of 720 authors, perceived in Hebrew as a lucky number, being י"ח 18 – alive, multiplied by 40, as it could be of course just a coincidence. This number could increase to 77, 80 or 100 if we would have applied all the methodology that we have done for the lists of the 40 last years of the 19th century and all the 20th century. So, if we would add all the authors in the link to the literature of the first years of the 21st century (above), we would arrive to a total amount of authors for the period of 1860-2015 – 156 years, which I perceive as modern literature in the world, of about 780 (300+400+80) or 800 (300+400+100) authors for all this period, or about 5 authors for every year of this period. Actually, we have in this survey links and details, on any number of authors, between 700-720-777-800-888-900-999-1000-1001-even more, depending on which number you want to reach, all of them are relevant.

We bring here a sample list of some of the authors in the 21st century (novels, poetry, drama and non-fiction) with more than a hundred authors. A full list of the authors in the 21st century can be found subsequently in the Wikipedia List of authors, by clicking on every year of the survey:

Actually, if we add the number of authors for each year in the Wikipedia link of the 21st century literature we would arrive to about a thousand authors, but many of them appear also in the 20th century lists or have published several books in this period. Anyhow, to be on the safe side, we should stick to our methodology and deal with the 700+ authors of the modern literature, while bearing in mind that some of them are still active in the 21st century and it is too early to judge the merits of the new authors of the 21st century. I would add with a sense of humor - including me who started to publish my books in 2001, have published until now in different formats, languages and styles 10 books in English, French and Hebrew, and have published/will publish in the near future 10 more ebooks, as specified in this book, and including of course this book – in ethics social and economic justice, geography, literature criticism, linguistics, children books, plays, philosophy, history, travel, music criticism, political sciences, economics, statistics, drama, business administration, films, innovation, and humor. Another remark, there is quite a confusion if 2000 belongs to the 20th century or the 21st century. I have decided that in this book we'll refer to 1900 as the first year of the 20th century and 2000 as the first year of the 21st century. It doesn't matter so much, as we analyze in this survey the whole period of 1860-2015.

I have made a list of all the important books of the authors who appear in my lists of 1860-1899, but as we deal with 309 of them, it is quite bulky and it would add too many pages to this book which is bulky anyway. This would compel me to do the same for the 20th century as well. I will give in the next part of this survey a sample of the best books of leading authors in my lists of the last 40 years of the 19th century. Anyhow, almost all the authors and most of their books can be found on entries of the Wikipedia, like I have made links in this survey to some of the authors. It goes without saying that we can find plenty of material on those authors also in Encyclopaedia Britannica and other encyclopaedias and of course in hundreds of entries on the Internet about most of the authors and their books. The reader is invited to read more about the authors and their work on Wikipedia in the language of their choice. It has helped me a lot to know many languages as I could gather information on the authors in my lists from the Wikipedia and other sources in English, French, Hebrew, German, Spanish, Italian, Romanian, Portuguese, Yiddish, Ladino, Dutch, Swedish, Russian, Catalan, Haitian, Provencal, and many other languages. Links to the best authors and best books in 20th century, 19th century, and the first years of 21st century can be found in this chapter in the lists from Wikipedia, the lists from Encyclopaedia Britannica, Le Monde's list of best books and authors, 100 best novels in English by the Modern Library – the Board's list and the Reader's list, links in Cory's lists, links to the Jerusalem Prize – the authors' laureates, the list of the best selling books – authors and books, Books and Authors by the number of translations, Nobel Prize for Literature lists with links to authors and books.

One should not be confused by the fact that there are 58 different languages in my lists of the 40 last years of the 19th century and 33 different languages in my lists of the 20th century, and overall there are only 60+ different languages for the whole period of 1860-2015. The reason is that I have surveyed different languages especially in the 19th century, regional languages of regions as Galego, Picard, Sicilian, Creoles, or Frisian, and literatures in the languages of less known countries as Croatian, Irish Gaelic or Bulgarian. I have decided to add at least one author for those languages and in some cases a few authors. I write at length in my book on those languages and I thought that I have to include them in my survey at least for the period of the 19th century. As most of the languages of the 20th century appear also in the 19th century where my survey was much more wide, there are only a few languages that appear in the lists of the 20th century and do not appear in the lists of the 19th century, and so the total number of different languages is 60+. The number of countries in the 19th century is 57 and in the 20th century is 54, quite similar, as all the regional languages do not add new countries but are part of the country, as Galego, Basque, Catalan and Asturian are part of Spain, there are many languages but fewer countries. On the other side, there are many countries that speak the same language but have distinct literature, thus I have tried to include in the 19th century many such countries: Canada,

Australia, New Zealand and Trinidad for English, but also in the 20th century there were many countries with Spanish literature in South America, much more than in the 19th century, where the literature in South America was less developed. Anyhow, in the case of countries the total number of countries in the whole period is therefore 70+, as there are more countries in the 20th century that are not in my lists of the 19th century (from South America, etc.).

Overall, the lists in my survey include 700+ authors for the period of modern literature (novels, dramas, non-fiction, and poetry), from more than 70 countries in more than 60 languages, while about 25% of the authors write in non-European/American languages – mainly Chinese, Japanese, Arabic, Hebrew, Indian languages, and African languages. Those lists are probably still biased as I am not an expert of non-European/American languages literatures, except Hebrew of course, but I have made research and included in my lists the best authors in those languages. My lists are to the best of my knowledge the most balanced and diversified, and even if there are excessive numbers of European/American authors (75% is still very much, although they write excellent books), I have chosen many authors from less known languages, as Ukrainian, Hungarian, Croatian, Rumantsch, Galego, Picard, Greek, Frisian, Danish & Creoles. Readers who are broad minded and want to enjoy authors who are not the most popular and known, including many authors with a social and humanitarian message, are invited to read my lists and find details on the authors on Wikipedia, Encyclopaedias, and on the Internet. The lists are based on authors that I know and books that I have read in most of the cases, and in most of the languages, but I have managed to include also authors and languages whom I don't know. The lists and the chapters of this book include a survey on the best authors of modern times as Tolstoy, Hugo, Zola, Chekhov, Pirandello, Shaw, Arthur Miller, Sartre, Ibsen, Camus, D. H. Lawrence, Hemingway, Vargas Llosa, Kafka, Thomas and Heinrich Mann, Saramago, Shai Agnon, Joshua Sobol, Mahfouz and Murakami, but also less known authors/literature but still excellent such as Pachin de Melas, Mistral, Haitian poets, Ladino romances, Eminescu, Jarry.

CORY'S LIST OF THE BEST BOOKS IN WORLD LITERATURE IN 1860-1899

If some readers would change their habits of reading posts and sending Twitter messages, by learning a new language and read an author whom they have not known, this book will accomplish its mission, and as a bonus they would be exposed to thousands of songs, arias, interesting links, ethical cases, plays and films with the best actors, music, art and philosophy. We bring now a list of the best works of some authors whom I like most in the late 19th century:

BERTHA VON SUTTNER (AUSTRIAN): Suttner, born Countess Kinsky in 1843, was awarded the Nobel Peace Prize in 1905. In 1876 Suttner was the secretary and house keeper to Alfred Nobel in Paris, and Nobel may have made romantic overtures. However, Suttner remained committed to Arthur von Suttner and returned to Vienna to marry him in secrecy. Her works: Inventory of the Soul in 1883 takes a pro-disarmament progressive stand for a world peace due to technological advancement, a possibility also considered by her friend Nobel due to the increasingly deterrent effect of more powerful weapons. In 1889 she published the pacifist novel: Die Waffen nieder! Lay down your arms! Published in 32 editions and translated into 12 languages. She took part in the organization of the First Hague conventions in 1899, she attended a universal peace congress in Boston, organized petitions, funded the German Peace Society, met Emperor Franz Joseph of Austria and President Theodor Roosevelt. Suttner corresponded with Nobel until his death in 1896 and was a major influence in his decision to include a peace prize among the Nobel Prizes. She received the prize in 1905. She died in June 1914 a few weeks before war broke out. Other books by Suttner: Memoirs, When thoughts will soar, Ein schlechter Mensch, Daniel Dormes, High Life, Das Maschinenzeitalter, Vor den Gewitter, Einsam und arm, Schah der Qual, Marthus Kinder, Franzl und Mirzl, Eva Siebeck, Rand glossen zur Zeitgeschichte, die Barbarisierung der Luft.

PAUL JOHANN LUDWIG HEISE: He was awarded the Nobel Prize for Literature. His works: Die Einsamen, Die Witwe von Pisa, Der Letzte Zentaur, L'Arrabiata, Andrea Delfin, Gedichte, Beatrice, Barbarossa, Das Madchen von Treppi, Der Weinhuter, Ein Ring, The dead lake, In Paradise. One of the Nobel Prize judges said that Germany has not had a greater literary genius since Goethe.

RUDOLF CHRISTOFF EUCKEN: He was awarded the Nobel Prize for Literature. A philosopher whose best-known works are: The problem of human life, The struggle for a spiritual content of life, The truth of religion, Life's basis and life's ideal, The fundamentals of a new philosophy of life, The meaning and value of life, Main currents of modern thought, Socialism: an analysis.

LEOPOLD VON SACHER-MASOCH (AUSTRIAN): The term masochism is derived from his name, maybe because he was a utopian thinker, who espoused socialist and humanist ideals... Venus in Furs, Gottesmutter, Legacy of Cain, The last king of Hungary, The Divorcee, Faux Ermine, Jewish stories, The republic of Women's enemies, Eternal youth, Stories from Polish Ghetto, Polish stories, The serpent in paradise. Venus in Furs (1869) is the most famous of his stories, expressing Sacher-Masoch's fantasies and fetishes (for fur...). He did his best to live out his fantasies with his wives and mistresses. Maybe because of his masochism he also worked against local anti-Semitism and for the emancipation of women with articles on women's education and suffrage...

Alecsandri was an openly anti-Semite, stating that citizenship should be refused to the Jews, as it would be "a suicide by our people". Well, the Jews emigrated to Israel, France and the US and contributed much to those countries and possibly Romania could have been as prosperous as those countries if the Jews were not exterminated in the Holocaust like most of the family of my wife's father David Popliker, that was murdered in Romania by Romanians, and he never returned even for a visit. Anyhow, as in many cases, Alecsandri's anti-Semitism originated from the fact that his grandfather was a Jew from Botoshan (where my wife Ruthy was born), who became very rich, married a Christian and took his wife's name. According to Nazi's law that made Vasile Alecsandri a Jew who would have been murdered. And according to Israeli law he could have received the Israeli citizenship. Plays – Farmazomil din Harlan, Modista si cinovnicul, Iorgu de la Sadagura, Creditorii, Iasii in carnaval, Un ramasag, Piatra din casa, Nunta tarameasca, Chirita in provincie, Cetatea neamtului, Sgarbitul risipitor, Lipitorile satelor, Chirita in voiagiu, Boieri si ciocoi, Chirita in balon, Despot voda, Fantana blanduziei. Poetry – Poezii populare, Balade cautice batranesti, Pasteluri. Prose – Istoria um galben, Suvenire din Italia, Iasi in 1844, Un salon din Iasi, Romanii si poezia lor, O primblare la muti, Borsec, Balta-clta, Calatorie in Africa, Satir, Melodile romanesti, Prietenii romanilor, Lamartine, Alecu Russo, Dridri, Vasile Porojan, Margarita, Din album unui bibliofil.

MIHAI EMINESCU: Manuscripts, Luce afarnul – The Vesper, Oda in metru antic, Five Letters/Epistles/Satires. Eminescu was born in Botosan, like my wife Ruthy and Alecsandri's grandfather – so Botosan can be proud of those three (I'm kidding of course...) glorious poets, and how Ruthy fits in? Well, she is "poetry in motion!". Eminescu's most notable poems are: Dorina lacul, Floare albastra, Dorinta – Desire, Seara pe deal – evening on the hill, O, ramai – Oh, linger on, Epigonii, Si daca – And if... Ode in ancient meter, Mai am un singur dor – I have yet one desire, La steama – At star, Fat frumos din lacrima – the tear drop prince, Geniu pustiu – empty genius, Sarmamil Dionis – wretched Dionis, Cezara, Imparat si proletar – Emperor and proletarian. Eminescu demanded strong anti-Jewish legislature on the German model, saying that "The Jew does not deserve any rights anywhere in Europe because he is not working." Well, in the first half of the 20th century most of the best authors in German were Jews – Werfel, Feuchtwanger, Zweig, Kafka... - as well as many of the best composers (Mahler...), best businessmen (Rathenau, Oppenheimer, Warburg, Rothschild...), best scientists (Einstein...), best psychologists (Freud), Nobel Prize Winners (Von Baeyer, Wallach, Willstatter, Haber, Ehrlich, Meyerhof, Landsteiner, Warburg, Loewi, Einstein, Franck, Hertz...). Well, my dear Mihai, how come that so many Jews excelled in whatever they worked if they were not working, and how many hard-working Romanians got the international fame of those Jews, were awarded the Nobel Prize? When you say psychology you think of Freud, when you say science you think of Einstein, and saying poetry – you think probably of Eminescu, who worked so hard on his poetry!

Ben-Yehuda was the author of the first modern Hebrew dictionary and the driving spirit behind the revival of the Hebrew language. His was the first family to speak Hebrew at home. It took more than 20 years before there were ten more families in Jerusalem who spoke only Hebrew at home. Ben-Yehuda was the editor of several Hebrew language newspapers and became the driving spirit behind the establishment of the Committee of the Hebrew Language, later called the Academy of the Hebrew Language. In 1919 Ben-Yehuda convinced Herbert Samuel, the High Commissioner of Palestine, that Hebrew should be one of the three official languages in Palestine, together with Arabic and English. He encouraged to use Hebrew as the sole language in schools. Other works: Essays and Articles, Ad eimatay dibru Ivrit?, Divrei hayamim livnei Israel beshivatam el admatam, Children's Mikraot.

NATHAN ALTERMAN (ISRAEL): Alterman wrote a weekly column Hatur Hashvuyi in the Labour Movement "Davar" newspaper in which he dealt on political issues and that is why I've included him in the category of Zionist authors, as his prose and poetry was mostly political. Nathan Alterman was strongly supportive of workers' struggle. After the 1967 war he was one of the founders of the Movement for Greater Israel, with Aharon Amir, Haim Gouri, Rachel Yanait Ben-Zvi, Yitzhak Tabenkin, Icchak Cukierman, Zivia Lubetkin, Eliezer Livneh, Moshe Shamir, Shmuel Katz, Zev Vilnay, Uri Zvi Greenberg, Shmuel Yosef Agnon, Isser Harel, Israel Eldad, Dan Tolkovsky and Avraham Yoffe - most of them prominent Israeli authors and personalities. I have chosen to include in my list of great authors 15 Zionist authors. Out of 300 authors writing or being born in the 19th century, or more accurately out of 700 authors in modern literature it is only about 2% of the modern authors. You can call it my bias, although I have kept a balance between authors writing in Hebrew and Arabic, but Le Monde has included 50% French authors in a list of 100 authors, so it is quite more biased. If I'll not introduce Zionist authors who will do it in a period where Israel, Jews and Zionism is vilified by so many Palestinians, Arabs, Muslims, and anti-Semitic so-called peacelovings in the West. I do believe that Zionism was one of the most important nationalist movements in the 20th century, at least as important as the Irish, Czech, Polish, Arab, Indian, Vietnamese, African and Asian movements.

He was born in Mombasa, Kenya. He was an Albert Schweitzer Professor in the Humanities and the Director of the Institute of Global Cultural Studies at Binghamton University in Binghamton, New York.. Upon completing his education at Oxford University, Mazrui joined Makerere University (Kampala, Uganda), where he served as head of the Department of Political Science and Dean of the Faculty of Social Sciences. He served at Makerere University until 1973, when he was forced into exile by Idi Amin. In 1974, he joined the faculty of the University of Michigan as professor and later was appointed the Director of the Center for Afroamerican and African Studies (1978–81). In 1989, he was appointed to the faculty of Binghamton University, State University of New York as the Albert Schweitzer Professor in the Humanities and the Director of the Institute of Global Cultural Studies (IGCS). Mazrui was a prominent critic of the current world order. He believed the current capitalist system was deeply exploitative of Africa, and that the West rarely if ever lived up to their liberal ideals and could be described as global apartheid. He has opposed Western interventions in the developing world, such as the Iraq War. He has also long been opposed to many of the policies of Israel, being one of the first to try to link the treatment of Palestinians with South Africa's apartheid. Especially in recent years, Mazrui has also become a well known commentator on Islam and Islamism. While rejecting violence and terrorism Mazrui has praised some of the anti-imperialist sentiment that plays an important role in modern Islamic fundamentalism. He has also argued, controversially, that sharia law is not incompatible with democracy. Yet, he preferred to live in the US for more than half of his life, writing against the Western policy in Africa, while not living in Africa but in the West, and for the Muslim sharia law while not living in a Muslim state but in the secular US.

In order to complete the survey on the authors, books and literature of the period 1860-1899, we should set them in the context of the literature in the 19th century from 1800 to 1859. I have read most of those authors and admire them, as they are the precursors of modern literature, and some of them could be called modern. From the following list of authors who operated in the 19th century and the list of the authors who operated in 1800-1859 (click on each year to see the whole gamut of authors and literature in this year), I want to mention the best authors whom I like most and have read and enjoyed their works and are not included in my lists as they operated prior to 1860 – the date that I have set arbitrarily as the start of modern literature: Balzac, Chateaubrian, Schiller, Heine, Byron, Keats, Shelley, Jane Austen, Goethe, Wordsworth, Pushkin, Manzoni, Gogol, Musset, Poe, Stendhal, Lermontov, the Sisters Bronte, Thackeray.

Literature in the 19th century - Wikipedia

Main articles: Romantic poetry and 19th century in literature

Charles Dickens, Fyodor Dostoyevsky, Mark Twain, Jane Austen, Edgar Allan Poe, Arthur Rimbaud, Anton Chekhov, Ralph Waldo Emerson, Émile Zola.

On the literary front the new century opens with romanticism, a movement that spread throughout Europe in reaction to 18th-century rationalism, and it develops more or less along the lines of the Industrial Revolution, with a design to react against the dramatic changes wrought on nature by the steam engine and the railway. William Wordsworth and Samuel Taylor Coleridge are considered the initiators of the new school in England, while in the continent the German Sturm und Drang spreads its influence as far as Italy and Spain. French arts had been hampered by the Napoleonic Wars but subsequently developed rapidly. Modernism began.

The Goncourts and Émile Zola in France and Giovanni Verga in Italy produce some of the finest naturalist novels. Italian naturalist novels are especially important in that they give a social map of the new unified Italy to a people that until then had been scarcely aware of its ethnic and cultural diversity. On 21 February 1848, Karl Marx and Friedrich Engels published the Communist Manifesto. There was a huge literary output during the 19th century. Some of the most famous writers included the Russians Alexander Pushkin, Nikolai Gogol, Leo Tolstoy, Anton Chekhov and Fyodor Dostoyevsky; the English Charles Dickens, John Keats, Alfred, Lord Tennyson and Jane Austen; the Scottish Sir Walter Scott; the Irish Oscar Wilde; the Americans Edgar Allan Poe, Ralph Waldo Emerson, and Mark Twain; and the French Victor Hugo, Honoré de Balzac, Jules Verne, Alexandre Dumas and Charles Baudelaire. Some other important writers of note included: Leopoldo Alas, Louisa May Alcott, Hans Christian Andersen, Machado de Assis, Jane Austen, Gertrudis Gómez de Avellaneda, Gustavo Adolfo Bécquer, Elizabeth Barrett Browning, Anne Brontë, Charlotte Brontë, Emily Brontë, Georg Büchner, Ivan Bunin, Lord Byron, Lewis Carroll, Rosalía de Castro, François-René de Chateaubriand, Anton Chekhov, Kate Chopin, Samuel Taylor Coleridge, James Fenimore Cooper, Stephen Crane, Eduard Douwes Dekker, Emily Dickinson, Charles Dickens, Arthur Conan Doyle, Alexandre Dumas, père, José Maria Eça de Queirós, José Echegaray, George Eliot, Ralph Waldo Emerson, Gustave Flaubert, Margaret Fuller, Elizabeth Gaskell, Johann Wolfgang von Goethe, Nikolai Gogol, Manuel González Prada, Juana Manuela Gorriti, Brothers Grimm, Henry Rider Haggard, Ida Gräfin Hahn-Hahn, Thomas Hardy, Francis Bret Harte, Nathaniel Hawthorne, Friedrich Hölderlin, Heinrich Heine, Henrik Ibsen, Washington Irving, Henry James, John Keats, Caroline Kirkland, Jules Laforgue, Giacomo Leopardi, Mikhail Lermontov, Stéphane Mallarmé, Alessandro Manzoni, José Martí, Clorinda Matto de Turner, Herman Melville, Friedrich Nietzsche, José María de Pereda, Benito Pérez Galdós, Marcel Proust, Aleksandr Pushkin, Fritz Reuter, Arthur Rimbaud, John Ruskin, George Sand (Amandine-Aurore-Lucile Dupin), Mary Shelley, Percy Shelley, Stendhal (Marie-Henri Beyle), Robert Louis Stevenson, Bram Stoker, Harriet Beecher Stowe, Alfred, Lord Tennyson, Henry David Thoreau, Leo Tolstoy, Ivan Turgenev, Mark Twain, Juan Valera y Alcalá-Galiano, Paul Verlaine, Jules Verne, Lew Wallace, [H. 9. MODERNIST LITERATURE – WIKIPEDIA'S ARTICLE, LISTS AND LINKS

My survey focuses on modern literature and modernist literature. The Wikipedia defines modernism and modernist authors as follows: Literary modernism, or modernist literature, has its origins in the late 19th and early 20th centuries, mainly in Europe and North America. Some philosophers, like Georg Lukacs, theorized that literary modernism had its origins in the philosophy of Walter Benjamin. Modernism is characterized by a self-conscious break with traditional styles of poetry and verse. Modernists experimented with literary form and expression, adhering to Ezra Pound's maxim to "Make it new". The modernist literary movement was driven by a conscious desire to overturn traditional modes of representation and express the new sensibilities of their time. The horrors of the First World War saw the prevailing assumptions about society reassessed. Thinkers such as Sigmund Freud and Karl Marx questioned the rationality of mankind. major precursor of modernism was Friedrich Nietzsche, especially his idea that psychological drives, specifically the "will to power", were more important than facts, or things. Henri Bergson (1859–1941), on the other hand, emphasized the difference between scientific clock time and the direct, subjective, human experience of time^[5] His work on time and consciousness "had a great influence on twentieth-century novelists," especially those modernists who used the stream of consciousness technique, such as Dorothy Richardson for the book Pointed Roofs (1915), James Joyce for Ulysses (1922) and Virginia Woolf (1882–1941) for Mrs Dalloway (1925) and To the Lighthouse (1927). Also important in Bergson's philosophy was the idea of élan vital, the life force, which "brings about the creative evolution of everything" His philosophy also placed a high value on intuition, though without rejecting the importance of the intellect. These various thinkers were united by a distrust of Victorian positivism and certainty. Modernism as a literary movement can be seen also, as a reaction to industrialization, urbanization and new technologies.

Important literary precursors of Modernism were: Fyodor Dostoyevsky (1821–81) (Crime and Punishment (1866), The Brothers Karamazov (1880)); Walt Whitman (1819–92) (Leaves of Grass) (1855–91); Charles Baudelaire (1821–67) (Les Fleurs du mal), Rimbaud (1854–91) (Illuminations, 1874); August Strindberg (1849–1912), especially his later plays, including, the trilogy To Damascus 1898–1901, A Dream Play (1902), The Ghost Sonata (1907). Modernism was already stirring by 1902, with works such as Joseph Conrad's (1857–1924) Heart of Darkness, while Alfred Jarry's (1873–1907) absurdist play, Ubu Roi appeared even earlier, in 1896. Among early modernist non-literary landmarks is Arnold Schoenberg's atonal ending of Second String Quartet in 1908, the Expressionist paintings of Wassily Kandinsky starting in 1903 and culminating with his first abstract painting and the founding of the Expressionist Blue Rider group in Munich in 1911, the rise of fauvism, and the introduction of cubism from the studios of Henri Matisse, Pablo Picasso, Georges Braque and others between 1900 and 1910. Sherwood Anderson's Winesburg, Ohio is known as an early work of modernism for its plain-spoken prose style and emphasis on psychological insight into characters. Other early modernist writers, most of them I have read and admired their work, and selected works include:

- Luigi Pirandello (1867–1936): The Late Mattia Pascal (1904), Six Characters in Search of an Author (1921);
- Rainer Maria Rilke (1875–1926): The Notebooks of Malte Laurids Brigge (1910), Sonnets to Orpheus (1922), Duino Elegies (1922);
- W. B. Yeats (1865–1939): The Green Helmet (1910), Wild Swans at Coole (1917);
- Gottfried Benn (1886–1956): Morgue and other Poems (1912);
- Ezra Pound (1885–1972): Ripostes (1912), The Cantos, published variously over the period 1917–64, Hugh Selwyn Mauberley (1920);
- Guillaume Apollinaire (1880–1918): Alcools (1913);
- Andrei Bely (1880–1934): Petersburg (1913);
- D. H. Lawrence (1885–1930): Sons and Lovers (1913), The Rainbow (1915);
- Marcel Proust (1871–1922): Du côté de chez Swann (1913), the first volume of Remembrance of Things Past (1913–27);
- Georg Trakl (1887–1914): Poems (1913);
- Franz Kafka (1883–1924): The Metamorphosis (1915), The Trial (1925), The Castle (1926);
- Grigol Robakidze (1880–1962): The Snake's Skin (1926);
- Dorothy Richardson (1873–1957): Pointed Roofs (1915), the first volume of Pilgrimage (1915–38; post. 1967);
- T. S. Eliot (1888–1965): The Love Song of J. Alfred Prufrock (1916), The Waste Land (1922), Four Quartets (1935–42);
- James Joyce (1882–1941), A Portrait of the Artist as a Young Man (1916), Ulysses (1922), Finnegans Wake (1939);
- Miroslav Krleža (1893–1981), Kristofor Kolumbo (1918), Michelangelo Buonarroti (1919), Povratak Filipa Latinovicza (1932);
- Wyndham Lewis (1882–1957): Tarr (1918);
- Eugene O'Neill (1888–1953): Anna Christie (1920), The Emperor Jones (1920);
- Karel Čapek (1890–1938): R.U.R. (1920);

- Italo Svevo (1861–1928): Zeno's Conscience (1923);

James Joyce was a major modernist writer whose strategies employed in his novel Ulysses (1922) for depicting the events during a twenty-four hour period in the life of his protagonist, Leopold Bloom, have come to epitomize modernism's approach to fiction. The term late modernism is sometimes applied to modernist works published after 1930. Among modernists (or late modernists) still publishing after 1945 were Wallace Stevens, Gottfried Benn, T. S. Eliot, Anna Akhmatova, William Faulkner, Dorothy Richardson, John Cowper Powys, and Ezra Pound. Basil Bunting, born in 1901, published his most important modernist poem Briggflatts in 1965. In addition Hermann Broch's The Death of Virgil was published in 1945 and Thomas Mann's Doctor Faustus in 1947. Samuel Beckett, who died in 1989, has been described as a "later modernist". Beckett is a writer with roots in the expressionist tradition of modernism, who produced works from the 1930s until the 1980s, including Molloy (1951), En attendant Godot (1953), Happy Days (1961) and Rockaby (1981). The terms minimalist and post-modernist have also been applied to his later works. The poets Charles Olson (1910–1970) and J. H. Prynne (b. 1936) have been described as late modernists. More recently the term late modernism has been redefined by at least one critic and used to refer to works written after 1945, rather than 1930. With this usage goes the idea that the ideology of modernism was significantly re-shaped by the events of World War II, especially the Holocaust and the dropping of the atom bomb.

The term Theatre of the Absurd is applied to plays written by primarily European playwrights, that express the belief that human existence has no meaning or purpose and therefore all communication breaks down. Logical construction and argument gives way to irrational and illogical speech and to its ultimate conclusion, silence. While there are significant precursors, including Alfred Jarry (1873–1907), the Theatre of the Absurd is generally seen as beginning in the 1950s with the plays of Samuel Beckett. Critic Martin Esslin coined the term in his 1960 essay, "Theatre of the Absurd." He related these plays based on a broad theme of the Absurd, similar to the way Albert Camus uses the term in his 1942 essay, "The Myth of Sisyphus". The Absurd in these plays takes the form of man's reaction to a world apparently without meaning, and/or man as a puppet controlled or menaced by invisible outside forces. Though the term is applied to a wide range of plays, some characteristics coincide in many of the plays: broad comedy, often similar to Vaudeville, mixed with horrific or tragic images; characters caught in hopeless situations forced to do repetitive or meaningless actions; dialogue full of clichés, wordplay, and nonsense; plots that are cyclical or absurdly expansive; either a parody or dismissal of realism and the concept of the "well-made play". Playwrights commonly associated with the Theatre of the Absurd include Samuel Beckett (1906–1989), Eugène Ionesco (1909–1994), Jean Genet (1910–1986), Harold Pinter (1930–2008), Tom Stoppard (b. 1937), Friedrich Dürrenmatt (1921–1990), Alejandro Jodorowsky (b. 1929), Fernando Arrabal (b. 1932), Václav Havel (1936–2011) and Edward Albee (b. 1928). Among those authors I admire most and have also taught their works in my courses on business ethics are: Ionesco (Rhinoceros), Durrenmatt (The Visit of the Old Lady), but I also admire and see often their plays: Albee, Beckett, Pinter and Genet. I often wonder how I can enjoy such various styles of playwrights, including modernist playwrights, as in music and art I enjoy mostly only the 19th century (Beethoven, Mahler, Brahms, Chopin, Mendelssohn, Verdi, Offenbach, Bizet, Impressionism and to a lesser extent Romanticism). In drama I enjoy almost equally to read and see Sophocles, Euripides, Aristophanes, Goldoni, Racine, Corneille, Moliere, Shakespeare, Lorca, Pinter, Beckett, Albee, Durrenmatt, Rostand, Hugo, Jarry, Sobol, Pirandello, Brecht, Anouilh, Chekhov, and Goethe. In literature I enjoy most modern books, novels and poetry, as explained at length in this chapter, but I enjoy very much also Homer, the Bible, Cicero, Vergil, Cervantes, Balzac, Wordsworth, Byron, Goethe, Dante, Thackeray, Jane Austen, Choderlos de Laclos, L'Abbe Prevost, Heine...

The list of modern writers according to Wikipedia includes the following authors:

10. THE LIST OF THE BEST SELLING BOOKS OF ALL TIMES

This essay on the best books of the 19th and 20th centuries would not be complete without two lists – the list of the best selling book of all times and the list of the most translated books. Those lists do not indicate that those were the best books ever written or published in modern times. However, vox populi vox dei, and we cannot overlook the best selling books and the most translated books. We'll start with the best selling books, that shows that I am swimming against the stream, as I have not many of those books, while I have read most of the best books in modern times. "Best selling" refers to the estimated number of copies sold of each book, rather than the number of books printed or currently owned. Comics and textbooks are not included in this list. The books are listed according to the highest sales estimate as reported in reliable, independent sources. This list is incomplete because there are many books, such as Don Quixote, A Tale of Two Cities, The Three Musketeers, Les Misérables, Pride and Prejudice, The Adventures of Pinocchio, Alice's Adventures in Wonderland and the Odyssey that are commonly cited as "best-selling books" (and I have read all of them), yet have no reliable sales figures. I have read only one Harry Potter (the Philosopher's Stone) to practice my Galego and have seen some fantasy films, the Da Vinci Code, Black Beauty, The Name of the Rose, The Bridges of Madison County, To Kill a Mockingbird, etc. in this list, but my grandchildren have read all the Harry Potters and most of the best selling fantasy films, so it stays in the family. Together we have read most of the books, but they have not read or even seen the films of The Three Musketeers, A Tale of Two Cities, Les Misérables, Pride and Prejudice, and the Odyssey, so who is better off I don't know, but they are more up-to-date with the current trends of literature.

The Bible is the best-selling book of all-time, with Guinness World Records estimating that over 5 billion copies have been sold. Quotations from Chairman Mao Tse-tung and the Qur'an are also widely reported to be some of the most printed and also some of the most distributed books worldwide, with billions of copies of each of them believed to be in existence (and I have read large part of them, especially the Bible which I learned at school for 8 years and I read it occasionally since then. The Bible is by far the best book ever written, as it comprises everything – history, literature, poetry, religion, ethics and morals, economics, sociology, political sciences, psychology, geography, biology, anthropology, love/hate, war/peace, social & economic justice. But I have read also the "red" book of Mao and the Quran, as part of my studies for the PhD and the preparation of my business ethics courses. I liked both of them, but it does not mean that I agree with their contents. Exact print figures for these and other books may also be missing or unreliable since these kinds of books may be produced by many different and unrelated publishers, in some cases over many centuries. All books of religious, ideological, philosophical or political nature have been excluded from this list of best-selling books for these reasons.

12. JEWISH AUTHORS IN MODERN LITERATURE, AND JEWISH PERSONALITIES – AND THEIR CONTRIBUTION TO THE WORLD'S WELFARE IN CONTEXT OF THE RESURGENT ANTI-SEMITISM IN EUROPE, IN ARAB AND MUSLIM COUNTRIES

INTRODUCTION

King Solomon, the wisest man in history, said "Don't be right often". And indeed, I hesitated to introduce this chapter in my book. Many wise men have argued that a main reason of anti-Semitism is Jewish boast. Don't speak too much about Judaism, God forbid that the "gentiles" would think that the Jews excel in all what they do, they believe anyhow that the world is run by Jewish money, and that Jews are everywhere – in law, in economics, in literature, in arts, in music, in business, they are at the forefront of capitalism and communism, they own the press, the theaters, the film industry, and they prevent the Christians and Muslims to thrive. Jews have won 22% of Nobel Prizes (see link). Nobel Prizes have been awarded to over 850 individuals, of whom at least 22%, almost 200, (without peace prize over 24%) were Jews, although Jews comprise less than 0.2% of the world's population (or 1 in every 500 people). Overall, Jews have won a total of 41% of all the Nobel Prizes in economics, 28% in medicine, 26% in Physics, 19% in Chemistry (including my in-law Dan Shechtman in 2011), 13% in Literature and 9% of all peace awards. This book comprises many chapters on literary criticism, and if we examine the contribution of Jews to world literature, we find that they have won 13% of Nobel Prizes in Literature and are only 0.2% of the world population, or 1% of the Western world. The West has won 90% of the prizes, which is also out of proportions in comparison to the world population. The Jews should have won out of the 112 laureates 1 prize and not 14, which is 1 of 8, or 12.5% of all the laureates: Paul Heyse (Germany, 1910), Henri Bergson (France, 1927), Boris Pasternak (USSR, 1958), Shai Agnon (Israel, 1966), Nelly Sachs (Sweden, 1966, wrote in German), Saul Bellow (US, 1976), Isaac Bashevis Singer (US, 1978, wrote in Yiddish), Elias Canetti (UK/born in Bulgaria, 1981, lived also in Germany, Austria and Switzerland, wrote in German), Joseph Brodsky (US, 1987, wrote in Russian), Nadine Gordimer (South Africa, 1991, wrote in English), Imre Kertesz (Hungary, 2002), Elfriede Jelinek (Austria, 2004), Harold Pinter (UK, 2005), Patrick Modiano (France, 2014), about one quarter of the laureates in the last years. In this survey I showed how about half of the most prominent German language authors in the 20th century were Jewish, and they operated mainly in the first half of the century, as they left Germany when Hitler came into power. We'll see in this chapter the important contribution of American, British, French, and Russian Jewish authors to the literature of their countries. And this is only literature, but Jews contribute also in Economics with more than 40% of the prizes won by Jews, or Sciences with more than 25%, these achievements may cause envy.

So, why brag? Why speak about topics that are taboos? Why not be politically correct and play down/conceal the origin of the authors/economists/scientists, like the French Jews excel so well? This book is open-hearted, breaking taboos, and is not politically correct if it means to be hypocrite. I would not write about those topics if there was not now all over the Muslim and Western world a tsunami of anti-Semitism that we have not encountered since the first half of the 20th century. Palestinians and Arab leaders, and some Muslim leaders in the world and in Europe, have lost all inhibitions and have launched in the press and schools an anti-Semitic campaign demonizing the Jews like in the worst days of Nazi's propaganda. Right wing and left wing intellectuals, academics, and just common people old-school anti-Semites, have joined the plunder, the "Alayhum", reviving the Hep-Hep Riots of the 19th and 20th centuries, reminding us of the worst times of the Middle Ages and the hatred of Jews in Spain, Portugal and other European countries from this epoch until "yesterday". Their aim is to kill Jews, boycott them, delegitimize Israel and the Jews, and large segments of the public sympathize the aggressors, the terrorists, the killers and not the victims. In this extreme situation, it is of the utmost importance to emphasize the huge contribution of the Jews and Israel to the world, to the economy, business, to the culture in literature, music, philosophy, psychology, economics, social sciences, art, etc.

Europe has to decide with whom they ally, with the progressive forces of Israel and the Jews, with the moderate Arabs and Muslims, or with the retrograde forces of ISIS, nuclear Iran, and the extreme Muslim fundamentalism. As anti-Semitism stems from two main reasons in the Middle Ages, in the time of the Inquisition, in the riots in Germany, Syria, Russia and Iraq, in Nazi Germany and in the boycott/kill the Jews campaign of today: envy from the huge achievements of the Jews and Israel in comparison to the poor achievements of the anti-Semites, but also choosing a scapegoat in order to rally the "believers" to the fundamentalist/Nazi cause. Hitler wanted to plunder the riches of the Jews and to rally the masses with the hatred of the Jews who caused World War I/hiper inflation/all the troubles of the defeated Germany, he rallied all the Germans who envied the tremendous achievements of the German Jews in business and culture, and who had the opportunity to steal all their business, their works of art, their houses.

The Arabs/Palestinian/Muslim fundamentalist leaders envy the success of Israel as compared to the economic situation in their states, the civil wars, the poverty, and rally the masses with the new Hep-Hep – al-Aqsa is in danger. It worked in the riots of 1921, it worked with the Nazi propaganda of Haj Amin Al Huseini, and it works with the defamatory propaganda of the Palestinian leaders in Israel, the leaders in some of the Arab countries, in Iran, and in fundamentalist Muslim states. Never mind that there are no more Jews and Europeans in the Arab world as they were all expelled without their properties, they are still guilty of our situation, not us, not our corruption, not our wars, not our laws that descriminate women, not our breaches of human rights. If there are no more Jews in Arab countries there are too much in Israel - half of the Jewish population in the world, and they have to return to their homeland – to Poland (that has now only a few thousand Jews), to Russia, to France and to England, but Auzu billahi/God forbids not to the Arab lands that are now Judenrein like in Nazi Germany. And one of the Palestinian leaders who was asked by Yehoram Gaon on TV where will the Sabras born here return he said to Gehenom – to Hell, which means that my sons and grandchildren will go to hell as they were born in Israel, my wife will return to Romania, that has not found yet her birth certificate, and I will not return to Egypt as the Egyptian parliament has declined to give the right of return to the Jews who would want to return to Egypt when Israel will break up (a few thousands who are still alive in comparison to a population 80 million Muslims and Copts). But the French Jews will return to France and would have to suffer the harrassment by the Muslim extremists who kill them, beat them, and make huge demonstrations in Paris and Marseille against the Jews and the Israelis, although the French Jews have not done any harm to Muslims..

Palestinian leaders would never agree to recognize Israel as a Jewish homeland, as they believe that the Jews have no rights to Israel (listen to their Arabic speeches not to their interviews on BBC), the Holocaust is an exaggeration of the Jews, and the Jews have no rights to the holy places, as probably we never lived there in the past, when actually there never was a Palestinian state and throughout a thousand years there was a Jewish state and a majority presence in Israel. In this extremely pervasive, perverse, and defamatory situation we have to compare what is the contribution of the Jews and Israel to humanity and to their homelands in all the fields of culture and economy and the contribution of all the anti-Semites who want to boycott us and exterminate the Jews or the Jewish state, either directly or by allowing the Palestinians the right of return. We have to compare one by one the achievements of the anti-Semites individuals and nations and the achievements of the Jews and Israel – in literature, economy, business, art, theater, films, music, philosophy, psychology, technology, sciences, innovation, high tech, agriculture, even sports..., peace..., as opposed to the contribution of our defamators in terror, breaches of human rights, gender inequality, GDP, ethics, corruption, participation of the population in the riches of the countries – oil..., household income, income inequality, poverty, civil wars, external debt. Who contributed more: Jews/Christians/Japanese – the Western World, including third world countries that became first world without immense oil riches used to finance wars, terrorism and golden palaces, the 40 more ethical countries, as opposed to retrograde and corrupt countries: in human development, sustainability, health, education, social welfare, quality of life, economic dynamism, political environment, democracy, freedom, press freedom, economic freedom, social progress, productivity, competitiveness, financial development, credit rating, universities rating, distribution of wealth, globalization. When we compare those parameters we would get the answer on what are the causes of anti-Semitism/Europe – most of all envy and complexes.

I am aware that Israel is far from perfect, and I deal with it at length in this book and in my other books. The Jews are not perfect either, but in comparison to most of the other countries and people we are among the best, and I let the reader find what ranks have those who blame us. The highest level of hypocrisy is at the UN when Israel is the only country to be blamed on breaches of human rights and it is voted by countries that infringe human rights ten times more than Israel. We have to compare the achievements of the demonstrators against the Jews and Israel in Europe with those of the Jews and Israel in order to understand why they demonstrate, but they are brainwashed by their leaders and by a monstrous propaganda similar to the Nazi propaganda. But when there is one journal who writes satires and caricatures against Islam, but also against Judaism and Christianity, they are executed by terrorists, as the anti-Semites can make caricatures against Jews and Israel worse than those of Der Stürmer (and no one will murder them for that as we live in democracies), but God forbids/Auzu billahi if someone makes a caricature against Islam. The tragic side of it is that I personally, and most of the Jews and leaders of Israel have a profound respect for Islam, Muslims, Arabs, and to most of the intellectuals who defame Israel. Jews and Arabs are both Semites, we look alike, share a very similar language, and indeed without the interference of the extremists Jews can live in peace with Arabs, and also as was the vision of Herzl in Altneuland. Jews and Arabs can prosper together, making the Middle East an exemplary region, joining the European Union, we complement each other, there is no genetic difference between us, just a question of attitude and brainwash by the leaders. But as long as we live in a jungle of civil wars and extreme fundamentalism, we believe that we are the stronghold of Europe, America and progress against ISIS and the Middle Ages, as what happens today in the Middle East will happen tomorrow in Europe/America if they let the fundamentalists brainwash the millions of Muslims living there.

But instead of rallying forces with the moderate Europeans and Americans, the extremists are winning in the battle on propaganda, and Israel is losing ground. This book shall deal at length with those issues, but of course those who don't agree with what I write are invited to skip to the other segments of the book. But those who are curious to read the opinion of an Israeli intellectual are invited to read those chapters and to decide who is right and who is wrong. Therefore, in order to refute all the allegations against the Jews and Israel by anti-Semites and by other critics, I have decided to emphasize in some chapters of this book the contribution of the Jews and Israel and I am sure that it will diminish at least somewhat the pathological hate of the Jews, as I am not trying to brag, just to show the facts on our contribution, and the next time that my readers see a demonstration in Unter den Linden or the Champs Elysees, in London or in Scandinavia, or at the universities, they would remember that the Jews and Israelis are not the monsters depicted by the Palestinian/Arab/Muslim Fundamentalist propaganda, but they are the 22% of the Nobel Prize winners who have contributed a tremendous contribution to medicine, physics, chemistry, economics, literature, and also peace (our defamers have never won any prize, except the arch-terrorist Yasser Arafat...), but not only Nobel laureates, throughout the history of the Jewish people they have contributed a tremendous contribution to humanity.

How would the world look like without (link to List of Jews) the German scientist Einstein, the Austrian psychiatrist Freud, the authors: French Andre Maurois, Marcel Proust, Joseph Kessel, American Arthur Miller, David Mamet, Clifford Odets, Russian Boris Pasternak, British Pinter, Czech Kafka, German Heine, Israeli Agnon, the Italian painter Modigliani and Russian painter Marc Chagall, the composers Mendelssohn, Offenbach, Mahler, Meyerbeer, Kreisler, Darius Milhaud, Gershwin, Irving Berlin, Kurt Weill, Schoenberg, Leonard Bernstein, Elmer Bernstein, Aaron Copland, Stephen Sondheim, Jerome Kern, Bob Dylan, Oscar Hammerstein, Serge Gainsbourg, Joseph Kosma, Marvin Hamlisch, Francis Lemarque, the jazz musicians Burt Bacharach, Benny Goodman, Artie Shaw, the singers Joe Dassin, Sacha Distel, Georges Moustaki, Enrico Macias, Billy Joel, Simon & Garfunkel, Neil Diamond, Barbra Streisand, Carole King, the Barry Sisters, Neil Sedaka, Paula Abdul, Dinah Shore, Eddie Fisher, Dario Moreno, Barbara, Theodore Bikel, Mike Brant, Leonard Cohen, Al Jolson, Jan Peerce, Mireille.

The actors Sarah Bernhardt, Rachel, Danny Kaye, Groucho Marx, Jake Gyllenhaal, Scarlet Johansson, Barbra Streisand, Natalie Portman, Adrien Brody, Gwyneth Paltrow, Joaquin Phoenix, Rachel Weisz, Mathieu Amalric, Lisa Bonet, Helena Bonham Carter, Sean Penn, Live

Schreiber, Kyra Sedgwick, Ayelet Zurer, Jamie Lee Curtis, Jeff Goldblum, Jane Seymour, Debra Winger, James Caan, Peter Coyote, Neil Diamond, Michael Douglas, Richard Dreyfuss, Harrison Ford, Goldie Hawn, Barbara Hershey, Miriam Margolyes, Rob Reiner, Anouk Aimee, Alan Arkin, Richard Benjamin, Steven Berkoff, Claire Bloom, May Britt, Dyan Cannon, Sammi Frey, Elliott Gould, Judd Hirsch, Dustin Hoffman, Harvey Keitel, Martin Landau, Piper Laurie, Jackie Mason, George Segal, Susan Strasberg, Chaim Topol, Gene Wilder, Lauren Bacall, Shelley Winters, Theodor Bikel, Mel Brooks, Tony Curtis, Peter Falk, Eddie Fisher, Laurence Harvey, Judy Holliday, Jack Klugman, Jerry Lewis, Walther Matthau, Paul Newman, Tony Randell, Simone Signoret, Mel Torme, Jean-Pierre Aumont, Martin Balsam, Jeff Chandler, Lee J. Cobb, Harry Baur, Pierre Arditi, Yvan Attal, Jean-Pierre Bacri, Patrick Bruel, Gad Elmaleh, Roger Hanin, Agnes Jaoui, Regine, Elsa Zylberstein, Emmanuelle Beart, Charlotte Gainsbourg, Kirk Douglas, Zsa Zsa Gabor, John Garfield, Hedy Lamarr, Zero Mostel, Dinah Shore, Eli Wallach, Melvyn Douglas, Peter Lorre, Fanny Brice, Eddie Cantor, Leslie Howard, Sam Jaffe, Paul Muni, Edward G. Robinson, Theda Bara, Al Jolson, Sophie Tucker, Eric von Stroheim.

The filmmakers Steven Spielberg, Woody Allen, Paul Mazursky, Carl Reiner, Billy Wilder, Peter Brook, Roland Joffe, Alexander Korda, Mike Leigh, Sam Mendes, Sidney Lumet, Stanley Kubrick, Michael Curtiz, Milos Forman, Ernst Lubitsch, Fritz Lang, Joseph Mankiewicz, Joel and Ethan Coen, Jules Dassin, Roman Polanski, David Cronenberg, Otto Preminger, Arthur Penn, George Cukor, William Wyler, Michael Mann, Rob Reiner, Josef von Sternberg, Eric von Stroheim, Oliver Stone, Stanley Donen, Don Siegel, Jean-Pierre Melville, Fred Zinnemann, Mike Nichols, Barry Levinson, Istvan Szabo, John Frankenheimer, William Friedkin, Stanley Kramer, Marcel Ophüls, Claude Berri, Gérard Oury, Alan J. Pakula, Anatole Litvak, John Schlesinger, Joel Schumacher, Michel Hazanavicius, Ralph Bakshi, Philip Kaufman, Peter Bogdanovich, Richard Brooks, Sydney Pollack, Cedric Kahn, Claude Lanzmann, Moshe Mizrahi, Ephraim Kishon, Irvin Kershner, Claude Lelouch, François Truffaut, Robert Hossein.

How would the world of medicine look like without Jonas Salk who developed the polio vaccine – thus saving the lives of millions, Karl Landsteiner who discovered the human blood groups, the polio virus, and is the father of transfusion of blood – thus saving the lives of millions, Ernst Boris Chain who discovered penicillin's therapeutic action – thus saving the lives of millions, Selman Waksman who discovered Streptomycin and several other antibiotics – thus saving the lives of millions, Waldemar Haffkine who developed vaccines against cholera and bubonic plague – thus saving the lives of millions, Bernard Kouchner founder of Doctors Without Border, and so many others. A world without Rene Cassin – president of the European Court for Human Rights, the most famous economists – David Ricardo, Paul Samuelson, Simon Kuznets, Kenneth Arrow, Milton Friedman, Lawrence Klein, Franco Modigliani, Robert Solow, Joseph Stiglitz, Paul Krugman. How would history be without the contribution of King David, King Solomon, Moses, Jesus (who was a social activist Jew crucified by "neoliberal" Romans), Rambam/Maimonides, Rashi, Spinoza, Disraeli, Rabin, & many researchers say that even Cervantes & Columbus were Jewish. Jews were among the most prominent entrepreneurs and business moguls in France – Andre Citroen, founder of Citroen car factories, Marcel Dassault, founder of the Dassault Aircraft factories, Daniel Carasso, founder of the Danone food factories, Pierre Wertheimer, co-founder (investing in the late 1920s) of the couture and parfumerie company Chanel, and the financiers – the Rothschild family, the Dreyfus family, and the Lazard family. Some well-known French politicians were also Jewish: Leon Blum, Adolphe Cremieux, Pierre Mendes-France, Michel Debre, Laurent Fabius, Jack Lang, Simone Veil, and others. We can of course cite here the names of the prominent Jewish businessmen and politicians in the US, UK, Germany, Italy, Russia, etc., but they can be found in the politicians List of Jews, including Lenin (with a Jewish grandfather), the well known businessmen in the UK – including my Egyptian born compatriot Sir Ronald Cohen, known as the father of British venture-capital/founder of Apax Partners and of social investment – founder of Bridges Ventures.

The list of the Jewish American businessmen List of Jews, is really impressive. We find there the financiers who founded Warburg, Goldman Sachs, Blackstone, Soros, the founders of Starbucks, Levi Straus, Calvin Klein, Home Depot, Mattel, Max Factor, Estee Lauder, The Gap, the owners of The New York Times (that maybe explains the pro-Israeli articles of the newspaper... I'm just kidding), New England Patriots, Las Vegas Venetian and Sands Casinos, real estate, hotels, Hyatt, Carnival, and the founders/CEOs in the film/TV industry: Miramax, Paramount, Columbia, 20th Century Fox, Fox Film, Warner, Time Warner, Disney, Dreamworks, ABC, Universal, MGM, CBS, Viacom, NBC, RCA. Jews and Israelis are among the most famous technology wizards who innovated so much at Intel, Google, Facebook, cellular phones, Waze, computers, space, irrigation, agriculture, physics, chemistry, and some of the most important breakthroughs in medicine & biotechnology. The most renowned are: Sergey Brin and Larry Page founders of Google, Mark Zuckerberg founder of Facebook, Andrew Grove founder of Intel, Michael Dell founder of Dell, Steve Ballmer who was CEO of Microsoft and had 8% of its shares, Lawrence Ellison founder of Oracle, Sandy Lerner founder of Cisco, Irwin Jacobs founder of Qualcomm, Benjamin Rosen Chairman of Compaq, Beny Alagem founder and CEO of Packard Bell, Rob Glaser CEO of Real Networks, Jerry Greenberg founder of Sapient. Theodor Maiman successfully fired the first working laser in 1960, there were other important inventions in genetic engineering, Materials, pacemakers and defibrillators... More than half of Jewish adults (55%) in the US received college degree and 25% earned a graduate degree. More than 60% of all employed Jews in the US are in one of the three highest status job categories: business/finance, professional/technical, management/executives. Israeli talent invented Intel's Pentium, Checkpoint's FireWall Internet Security, the cell phone developed at Motorola Israel, the voice mail technology, the Disk on Key, the highest level of scientific papers per capita, startups per capita, the world's second highest supply of new books per capita, technology protecting airlines from missile attacks, Drip Irrigation causing a revolution in agriculture, Quicktionary, the sun-heated water tank, etc., while Jews were not involved in terror. I must restrict this statement – there were individual Jews who murdered Arabs – tens of victims in some cases, but they were always condemned by the authorities and almost all the Israeli population, they were caught and sent to prison, and at Israeli schools Jewish kids are not taught defamatory allegations against the Arabs and the Muslims. The situation is completely opposite with the Palestinian Authority which glorifies terrorists, finances their families, defames Jews inciting young kids of 13 to kill Jewish children, women to stab civilians, rich Arab countries finance terror and wars, while their religion promises the Shahids 72 virgins in heaven.

Danny Lewin founder of Akamai, was killed in the 9/11 attacks in American Flight 11, proving that 9/11 was not a Jewish/Zionist conspiracy, although the anti-Semites accuse the Jews to have planned and executed the 9/11 attacks. In 2003, the Anti-Defamation League (ADL) published a report attacking "hateful conspiracy theories" that the 9/11 attacks were carried about by Israelis and Jews, saying they had the potential to "rationalize and fuel global anti-Semitism." It found that such theories were widely accepted in the Arab and Muslim world, as well as in Europe and the United States. Many Muslims live in a virtual reality, including notorious Egyptians which defame Israel and the Jews, after Israel has made peace with Egypt and withdrawn from all its territories. The Anti-Defamation League lists Zionist conspiracies including spreading poisons (Jan 1995, Al-Ahram), spreading AIDS (Al-Shaab), blood rituals (June 1995, Al-Ahram), leading an international conspiracy against Islam (March 1995, Al-Ahram), and creating the myth of the Holocaust (Dec 1995 – Feb 1996, Egyptian Gazette). But the Palestinian president Abu Mazen excels in that as well after writing his PhD dissertation on this subject. Again, virtual reality.

Conspiracy theories holds the Jews responsible for killing American Presidents Abraham Lincoln and John F. Kennedy, and causing the French and Russian revolutions. Zionists are seen as a threat to the world. A widespread conspiracy theory after the September 11 attacks blamed Israel and Mossad for the attacks. Protocols of the Elders of Zion, an infamous hoax document purporting to be a Jewish plan for world domination, is commonly read and promoted in the Muslim world. Conspiracy theorists in the Arab world have claimed that ISIL leader Abu Bakr al-Baghdadi is in fact an Israeli Mossad agent and actor called Simon Elliot. Just a moment, this is fantastic, at last the anti-Semites have a strong evidence of the evils of the Jews and Israelis. There is a huge conspiracy of the Jews/Israelis to conquer the world with ISIL/ISIS/Daesh, and after the world will be conquered al-Baghdadi, alias Simon Elliot, will force all the Christians and Muslims to convert to Judaism, in the Jewish Caliphate, building the Temple in Oxford. I contribute here another evidence to the conspiracy theory – Gamal Abdel Nasser, the President of Egypt, was a Mossad agent called Gamliel Oved Netzer, otherwise how can you explain the huge defeats of the Egyptian army in 1956 and 1967. He did it on purpose to let the Israelis win!

The rumors claim that NSA documents leaked by Edward Snowden reveal this connection. Snowden's lawyer has called the story "a hoax." The ADL's report found that "The Big Lie has united American far-right extremists and white supremacists and elements within the Arab and Muslim world". It asserted that many of the theories were modern manifestation of the 19th century Protocols of the Elders of Zion, which purported to map out a Jewish conspiracy for world domination. The ADL has characterized the Jeff Rense website as carrying anti-Semitic materials, such as "American Jews staged the 9/11 terrorist attacks for their own financial gain and to induce the American people to endorse wars of aggression and genocide on the nations of the Middle East and the theft of their resources for the benefit of Israel". Pedro A. Sanjuan, a former United Nations diplomat, alleged that antisemitic 9/11 conspiracy theories were common at high levels of the UN following 9/11. There are therefore some Muslim/Arab people and organizations who live in a virtual reality and spread false anti-Semitic lies against the Jews and Israel that unfortunately thousands Europeans and millions Muslims believe, one of the worst is the allegation that the CIA and the Mossad have planned and executed the 9/11 attacks. They are so worried that the world will think that Arabs and Muslims did it that like lunatics who live in a virtual reality they have invented a story that Muslims and Arabs did not do it, but Jews, Israelis and Americans. You have to read the stories that they invent in order to understand in what state of illusion they live, and it is a sheer tragedy that millions believe them including important people as seen in those articles. Roger Cohen theorizes that the popularity of conspiracy theories in the Arab world is "the ultimate refuge of the powerless", and Al-Mumin Said noted the danger of such theories in that they "keep us not only from the truth but also from confronting our faults and problems..." But they are not alone, important Europeans and Americans have found a link between the Palestinian conflict and the mass murder of Parisians in Black Friday 13/11 attacks.

And if we started with poor Danny Lewin who was killed by Muslim Arab terrorists in the 9/11 attacks, we bring here the hallucinatory accusation that he was responsible for the attack and he still lives, and that is what those anti-Semites write: "Daniel Lewin: Lewin, an Israeli Jew, was confirmed to be a member of the special Israeli commando unit, the Sayeret Matkal, which specializes in "anti-hijack" takeovers and assassinations. The official narrative has it that Lewin got involved in a struggle with one of the alleged hijackers and ended up getting shot, which was later revised to being stabbed. The suggestion here is not that Lewin was on a suicide mission and flew into the towers; rather that he landed the plane at Stewart Airport where it was swapped for a remote control drone. Stewart Airport was the "privatized" airport where the flight-paths of the alleged planes that hit the twin towers, oddly converged." We, the fundamentalist Muslims and Arabs are OK, we are not responsible for the 9/11 New York/Washington attacks, the Black Friday 13/11 Paris attacks, all the attacks against innocent civilians in London, Madrid, Brussels, Buenos Aires, Iraq, Syria, Afghanistan. The Jews and the Israelis are responsible for all the attacks and the evil in the world, and the peacelovings at the British, Swedish, French, Irish, and American universities will believe us and justify the Hamas, the Hizballah, ISIS, Iranian attacks, as they were either executed by Arab/Muslim victims oppressed by the Jews and the Israelis in a justified war of independence (where hundreds of thousands of Syrian, Iraqis, Algerians, Yemenites and Sudanese were murdered by the Jews or because of the Jews), or by a Jewish conspiracy. And if you don't believe us ask Herr Hitler, Herr Goebbels, Herr Himmler, Sayyid bin Laden, Sayyid Haj Amin al-Husseini, Sayyid Arafat... Lie again and again, until all the fools will believe you! And anyhow, the British academic peacelovings boycotting Israelis are probably the grandsons of those who worshiped the defeatist policy of Mr. (he refused any title) Neville Chamberlain, or the pro-Nazi attitude of king Edward VIII, who worshiped Lawrence of Arabia, or were the blind admirers of the arch-butcher tovarish Stalin, together with other foolish admirers in France, Italy, Spain, Greece, Germany, Poland, and Moscow.

CULTURAL ACTIVITIES

IV. CLASSIC LITERATURE IN 50+ LANGUAGES, FOCUSING ON MOST FLUENT, TEXTS IN GERMAN, ROMANIAN, LADINO, INTERLINGUA, ITALIAN, PORTUGUESE, SPANISH, ENGLISH, FRENCH, HEBREW, ETC.

The reader can find details on the following books and authors on Wikipedia and Encyclopaedias, on Amazon/Local books websites, on Cory's/books/authors websites

A full list of the books read in the near past or in the process of being read can be found at the Cultural Activities Document on Cory's website in About Jacques Cory. The books read in the new languages were analyzed extensively in the Linguistics part above, and we would like to mention in particular books as Bab al-Shams by Elias Khoury in Arabic, Pan Tadeusz by Adam Mickiewicz in Polish, Het verdriet van België by Hugo Claus in Flemish, De koperen tuin by Simon Vestdijk in Dutch. Purgatori by Joan Mira in Catalan, O lapis do carpinteiro by Manuel Rivas, and Follas novas by Rosalia de Castro in Galego, and in Asturian: Obra Completa by Pachín de Melas, and Falanxista!!! by Nel Amaro. Stempeniú by Sholom-Aleichem in Yiddish, books in Icelandic, Plattdeutsch, Ukrainian, Afrikaans, Luxemburgish, Rumantsch, Ido, Occitan, Friulian, Corsican, etc., and translated books in Frisian as Alice yn Wunderlan by Lewis Carroll, in Esperanto - La firmao de la kato kiu pilkludas by Honoré de Balzac, The Ballad of Reading Gaol by Oscar Wilde, in Papiamentu - Sept manifestoj Dada by Tristan Tzara, and so on.

I am not only passive in literature, reading hundreds of books. I also wrote more than 10 books, and am writing new books as well, in diverse forms of literature – academic, business, economics, geography, novels, plays, poetry, biographies, articles, children... in many languages – English, French, Hebrew, Spanish, Ladino, and other languages. My best known novel is Beware of Greeks' Presents, which is part of my courses, and was learned and analyzed, with its essay on business ethics, by thousands of Israeli students. In the ten languages with the best reading capabilities we can find the poetry and novels that are being read in parallel. Those are the languages that I am most fluent in them, having studied them first – my two mother tongues French and Ladino, Hebrew - the language I know most as I grew up with it since the age of 9 and made all my studies in it up to the BA. English is the language that I'm most fluent in it in business and academics, although I understand much better the novels, plays and poetry that I read in French, Hebrew and Ladino. The languages that I learned in my early youth and were the easiest to learn, close as they are to French and Ladino, are Spanish and Italian, but I know much better Spanish than Italian, as when I speak this language I mix French and Spanish words. German was very difficult for me to learn as it is only vaguely similar to English, but I needed to know the language for studying Business Administration at Insead, so I put a strong emphasis in learning German. Portuguese was easy to learn, as it is so close to Spanish and Ladino, although I can barely speak it as I didn't have the opportunity to visit Brazil and Portugal for long periods as I have done with the countries where Hebrew, French, English, Spanish, German and Ladino are spoken. I heard Romanian spoken during 44 years, as the parents of Ruthy spoke with her this language, and as it is quite close to Italian and French - I understood it quite well. Finally, Interlingua is a constructed language based on Romance languages that I master quite well.

1. GERMAN, WHY GERMAN? – CONSCIOUS AND SUBCONSCIOUS, GOETHE – GOETZ VON BERLICHINGEN AND THE SORROWS OF YOUNG WERTHER, HEINE, FOLK SONG, VISITS TO GERMANY, SWITZERLAND, VIENNA, SCHILLER - HOPE

Reading in German - with or without translation: Der Zauberberg by Thomas Mann, Ansichten eines Clowns by Heinrich Boll, Die Wahlverwandtschaften by Goethe, Die Jugend des Königs Henri Quatre by Heinrich Mann, Der schwarze Obelisk by Erich Maria Remarque, Kein Öl, Moses? by Ephraim Kishon, and the books read recently – Die Judin von Toledo by Lion Feuchtwanger, and Great German Poems of the Romantic Area: Heine, Goethe, Schiller, Holderlin..., Schachnovelle by Stephan Zweig, Die Leiden des Jungen Werther by Goethe, etc.

The main languages spoken in Germany are German (95%), regional languages: Low Rhenish; Limburgish; Luxembourgish; Alemannic; Bavarian; Danish; Upper Sorbian, Lower Sorbian; North Frisian, Saterland Frisian; Romani, Low German, immigrant languages: Turkish, Arabic, Russian, Polish, Serbo-Croatian, Dutch, Greek, Spanish, Kurdish, Igbo, Italian, and others.

The first book read in German in 1963 was Goetz von Berlichingen by Goethe in Fraktur alphabet. Goethe's plot treats events freely: while the historical Götz died an octogenarian, Goethe's hero is a free spirit, a maverick, intended to be a pillar of national integrity against a deceitful and over-refined society, and the way in which he tragically succumbs to the abstract concepts of law and justice shows the submission of the individual in that society. We'll bring here part of Scene 1 of the play in English, in German and also in Fraktur alphabet, and the end.

SCENE I.—: An Inn at Schwarzenberg in Franconia.

[METZLER and SIEVERS, two Swabian PEASANTS, are seated at a table—At the fire, at some distance from them, two TROOPERS from Bamberg—The INNKEEPER.

Sievers.

Hänsel! Another cup of brandy—and Christian measure.

Innkeeper.

Thou art a Never-enough.

Metzler.

(Apart to SIEVERS.) Repeat that again about Berlichingen.—The Bambergers there are so angry they are almost black in the face.

Sievers.

Bambergers!—What are they about here?

Metzler.

Weislingen has been two days up yonder at the castle with the Earl—they are his attendants—they came with him, I know not whence; they are waiting for him—he is going back to Bamberg.

Sievers.

Who is that Weislingen?

Metzler.

The Bishop of Bamberg's right hand! a powerful lord, who is lying in wait to play Goetz some trick.

Sievers.

He had better take care of himself.

Schwarzenberg in Franken. Herberge.

Metzler, Sievers am Tische. Zwei Reitersknechte bei'm Feuer. Wirth.

Sievers. Hänsel, noch ein Glas Brantwein, und meß christlich.

Wirth. Du bist der Nimmersatt.

Metzler (leise zu Sievers). Erzähl das noch einmal vom Berlichingen! Die Bamberger dort ärgern sich, sie möchten schwarz werden.

Sievers. Bamberger? Was thun die hier?

Metzler. Der Weislingen ist oben auf'm Schloß bei'm Herrn Grafen schon zwei Tage; dem haben sie das Gleit geben. Ich weiß nicht wo er herkommt; sie warten auf ihn; er geht zurück nach Bamberg.

Sievers. Wer ist der Weislingen?

Metzler. Des Bischofs rechte Hand, ein gewaltiger Herr, der dem Götz auch auf'n Dienst lauert.

Sievers. Er mag sich in Acht nehmen.

Erster Act.

Schwarzenberg in Franken.
Herberge.

Metzler, Sievers am Tische. Zwei Reiters-
5 knechte bei'm Feuer. Wirth.

Sievers. Hänsel, noch ein Glas Brantwein, und meß christlich.

Wirth. Du bist der Nimmerfatt.

Metzler (leise zu Sievers). Erzähl das noch ein-10 mal vom Berlichingen! Die Bamberger dort ärgern sich, sie möchten schwarz werden.

Sievers. Bamberger? Was thun die hier?

Metzler. Der Weislingen ist oben auf'm Schloß bei'm Herrn Grafen schon zwei Tage; dem haben sie 15 das Gleit geben. Ich weiß nicht wo er herkommt; sie warten auf ihn; er geht zurück nach Bamberg.

Sievers. Wer ist der Weislingen?

Metzler. Des Bischofs rechte Hand, ein gewaltiger Herr, der dem Götz auch auf'n Dienst lauert.

20 Sievers. Er mag sich in Acht nehmen.

And the famous last lines of the play: Heavenly air! Freedom! Freedom! Freedom is above!
above - with thee! The world is a prison-house. Noble man! Woe to this age that rejected thee!
And in German: Himmlische Luft – Freiheit! Freiheit! Nur droben, droben bei dir. Die Welt ist ein Gefängniß. Edler Mann! Edler Mann! Wehe dem Jahrhundert, das dich von sich stieß!

Goetz.

God be praised! He was the kindest youth under the sun, and one of the bravest.—Now release my soul. My poor wife! I leave thee in a wicked world. Lerse, forsake her not! Look your hearts more carefully than your doors. The age of fraud is at hand, treachery will reign unchecked. The worthless will gain the ascendancy by cunning, and the noble will fall into their net. Maria, may God restore thy husband to thee! may he not fall the deeper for having risen so high! Selbitz is dead, and the good emperor, and my George—give me a draught of water!— Heavenly air! Freedom! freedom!

[He dies.

Elizabeth.

Freedom is above! above—with thee! The world is a prison-house.

Maria.

Noble man! Woe to this age that rejected thee!

Lerse.

And woe to the future, that shall misjudge thee.

Götz. Gott sei Dank! – Er war der beste Junge unter der Sonne und tapfer. – Löse meine Seele nun. – Arme Frau! Ich lasse dich in einer verderbten Welt. Lerse, verlaß sie nicht. – Schließt eure Herzen sorgfältiger als eure Thore. Es kommen die Zeiten des Betrugs, es ist ihm Freiheit gegeben. Die Nichtswürdigen werden regieren mit List, und der Edle wird in ihre Netze fallen. Maria, gebe dir Gott deinen Mann wieder. Möge er nicht so tief fallen, als er hoch gestiegen ist! Selbitz starb, und der gute Kaiser, und mein Georg. – Gebt mir einen Trunk Wasser. – Himmlische Luft – Freiheit! Freiheit! (Er stirbt.)

Elisabeth. Nur droben, droben bei dir. Die Welt ist ein Gefängniß.

Maria. Edler Mann! Edler Mann! Wehe dem Jahrhundert, das dich von sich stieß!

Lerse. Wehe der Nachkommenschaft, die dich verkennt!

From my early childhood I read translated German novels and one of my favorite authors was Erich Maria Remarque, who wrote some of the most interesting books that I have read: All Quiet on the Western Front, Spark of Life, The Black Obelisk, Arch of Triumph... I have read other books and plays by Goethe as Faust (saw it on stage and in Gounod's Opera), Die Leiden des Jungen Werther (but I did not commit suicide subsequently), Die Wahlverwandtschaften, Poems. Books by Thomas and Heinrich Mann, Die Judin von Toledo by Lion Feuchtwanger, Schachnovelle, biographies of Balzac, Fouché, by Stephan Zweig, plays by Schiller, poetry... I am not a romantic, yet I was moved profoundly by the Sorrows of Young Werther, although I fully disapprove with suicide. But I understood very well Werther, and as I read the book in a dual language edition in German and English I understood every word and the novel's subtlety. I even discussed the book and its message with Ruthy in our correspondence before we were married.

The Sorrows of Young Werther (German: Die Leiden des jungen Werthers) is an epistolary and loosely autobiographical novel by Johann Wolfgang von Goethe, first published in 1774; a revised edition of the novel was published in 1787. Werther was an important novel of the Sturm und Drang period in German literature, and influenced the later Romantic literary movement. Finished in six weeks of intensive writing during January–March 1774, its publication instantly made the 24-year-old Goethe one of the first international literary celebrities. Of all his works, this book was the most known to the general public. Towards the end of Goethe's life, a personal visit to Weimar became crucial to any young man's tour of Europe. The majority of The Sorrows of Young Werther is presented as a collection of letters written by Werther, a young artist of highly sensitive and passionate temperament, and sent to his friend Wilhelm. In these letters, Werther gives a very intimate account of his stay in the fictional village of Wahlheim (based on the town of Garbenheim, near Wetzlar). He is enchanted by the simple ways of the peasants there. He meets Lotte, a beautiful young girl who is taking care of her siblings following the death of their mother. Despite knowing beforehand that Lotte is already engaged to a man named Albert who is 11 years her senior, Werther falls in love with her.

Although this causes Werther great pain, he spends the next few months cultivating a close friendship with both of them. His pain eventually becomes so great that he is forced to leave and go to Weimar. While he is away, he makes the acquaintance of Fräulein von B. He suffers a great embarrassment when he forgetfully visits a friend and has to face the normal weekly gathering of the entire aristocratic set. He returns to Wahlheim after this, where he suffers more than he did before, partially because Lotte and Albert are now married. Every day serves as a torturous reminder that Lotte will never be able to requite his love. Out of pity for her friend and respect for her husband, Lotte comes to the decision that Werther must not visit her so frequently. He visits her one final time, and they are both overcome with emotion after Werther's recitation of a portion of "Ossian". Werther had realized even before this incident that one member of their love triangle — Lotte, Albert or Werther himself — had to die in order to resolve the situation. Unable to hurt anyone else or seriously consider committing murder, Werther sees no other choice but to take his own life. After composing a farewell letter to be found after his suicide, he writes to Albert asking for his two pistols, under a pretence that he is going "on a journey". Lotte receives the request with great emotion and sends the pistols. Werther then shoots himself in the head, but does not die until 12 hours after he has shot himself. He is buried under a linden tree, a tree he talks about frequently in his letters, and the funeral is not attended by clergymen, Albert or his beloved Lotte. I chose to quote here the final pages of the book, which are so chilling that you have the impression that you are present there.

Der Knabe kam mit den Pistolen zu Werthern, der sie ihm mit Entzücken abnahm, als er hörte, Lotte habe sie ihm gegeben. Er ließ sich Brot und Wein bringen, hieß den Knaben zu Tische gehen und setzte sich nieder, zu schreiben.

»Sie sind durch deine Hände gegangen, du hast den Staub davon geputzt, ich küsse sie tausendmal, du hast sie berührt! Und du, Geist des Himmels, begünstigst meinen Entschluß, und du, Lotte, reichst mir das Werkzeug, du, von deren Händen ich den Tod zu empfangen wünschte, und ach! Nun empfange. O ich habe meinen Jungen ausgefragt. Du zittertest, als du sie ihm reichtest, du sagtest kein Lebewohl! – wehe! Wehe! Kein Lebewohl! – solltest du dein Herz für mich verschlossen haben, um des Augenblicks willen, der mich ewig an dich befestigte? Lotte, kein Jahrtausend vermag den Eindruck auszulöschen! Und ich fühle es, du kannst den nicht hassen, der so für dich glüht«.

Nach Tische hieß er den Knaben alles vollends einpacken, zerriß viele Papiere, ging aus und brachte noch kleine Schulden in Ordnung. Er kam wieder nach Hause, ging wieder aus vors Tor, ungeachtet des Regens, in den gräflichen Garten, schweifte weiter in der Gegend umher und kam mit anbrechender Nacht zurück und schrieb.

»Wilhelm, ich habe zum letzten Male Feld und Wald und den Himmel gesehen. Leb wohl auch du! Liebe Mutter, verzeiht mir! Tröste sie, Wilhelm! Gott segne euch! Meine Sachen sind alle in Ordnung. Lebt wohl! Wir sehen uns wieder und freudiger«.

»Ich habe dir übel gelohnt, Albert, und du vergibst mir. Ich habe den Frieden deines Hauses gestört, ich habe Mißtrauen zwischen euch gebracht. Lebe wohl! Ich will es enden. O daß ihr glücklich wäret durch meinen Tod! Albert! Albert! Mache den Engel glücklich! Und so wohne Gottes Segen über dir!«

Er kannte den Abend noch viel in seinen Papieren, zerriß vieles und warf es in den Ofen, versiegelte einige Päckchen mit den Adressen an Wilhelm. Sie enthielten kleine Aufsätze, abgerissene Gedanken, deren ich verschiedene gesehen habe; und nachdem er um zehn Uhr Feuer hatte nachlegen und sich eine Flasche Wein geben lassen, schickte er den Bedienten, dessen Kammer wie auch die Schlafzimmer der Hausleute weit hinten hinaus waren, zu Bette, der sich dann in seinen Kleidern niederlegte, um frühe bei der Hand zu sein; denn sein Herr hatte gesagt, die Postpferde würden vor sechs vor Haus kommen.

Nach Eilfe

»Alles ist so still um mich her, und so ruhig meine Seele. Ich danke dir, Gott, der du diesen letzten Augenblicken diese Wärme, diese Kraft schenkest.

Ich trete an das Fenster, meine Beste, und sehe, und sehe noch durch die stürmenden, vorüberfliehenden Wolken einzelne Sterne des ewigen Himmels! Nein, ihr werdet nicht fallen! Der Ewige trägt euch an seinem Herzen, und mich. Ich sehe die Deichselsterne des Wagens, des liebsten unter allen Gestirnen. Wenn ich nachts von dir ging, wie ich aus deinem Tore trat, stand er gegen mir über. Mit welcher Trunkenheit habe ich ihn oft angesehen, oft mit aufgehobenen Händen ihn zum Zeichen, zum heiligen Merksteine meiner gegenwärtigen Seligkeit gemacht! Und noch – o Lotte, was erinnert mich nicht an dich! Umgibst du mich nicht! Und habe ich nicht, gleich einem Kinde, ungenügsam allerlei Kleinigkeiten zu mir gerissen, die du Heilige berührt hattest!

Liebes Schattenbild! Ich vermache dir es zurück, Lotte, und bitte dich, es zu ehren. Tausend, tausend Küsse habe ich darauf gedrückt, tausend Grüße ihm zugewinkt, wenn ich ausging oder nach Hause kam. Ich habe deinen Vater in einem Zettelchen gebeten, meine Leiche zu schützen. Auf dem Kirchhofe sind zwei Lindenbäume, hinten in der Ecke nach dem Felde zu; dort wünsche ich zu ruhen. Er kann, er wird das für seinen Freund tun. Bitte ihn auch. Ich will frommen Christen nicht zumuten, ihren Körper neben einen armen Unglücklichen zu legen. Ach, ich wollte, ihr begräbt mich am Wege, oder im einsamen Tale, daß Priester und Levit vor dem bezeichneten Steine sich segnend vorübergingen und der Samariter eine Träne weinte.

Hier, Lotte! Ich schaudre nicht, den kalten, schrecklichen Kelch zu fassen, aus dem ich den Taumel des Todes trinken soll! Du reichtest mir ihn, und zage nicht. All! All! So sind alle die Wünsche und Hoffnungen meines Lebens erfüllt! So kalt, so starr an der ehernen Pforte des Todes anzuklopfen.

Daß ich des Glückes hätte theilhaftig werden können, für dich zu sterben! Lotte, für dich mich hinzugeben! Ich wollte mutig, ich wollte freudig sterben, wenn ich dir die Ruhe, die Wonne deines Lebens wiederschaffen könnte. Aber ach! Das ward nur wenigen Edeln gegeben, ihr Blut für die Ihrigen zu vergießen und durch ihren Tod ein neues, hundertfältiges Leben ihren Freunden anzufachen.

In diesen Kleidern, Lotte, will ich begraben sein, du hast sie berührt, geheiligt; ich habe auch deinen Vater darum gebeten. Meine Seele schwebt über dem Sarge. Man soll meine Taschen nicht aussuchen. Diese blaßrote Schleife, die du am Busen hattest, als ich dich zum ersten Male unter deinen Kindern fand – o küsse sie tausendmal und erzähle ihnen das Schicksal ihres unglücklichen Freundes. Die Lieben! Sie wimmeln um mich. Ach wie ich mich an dich schloß! Seit dem ersten Augenblicke dich nicht lassen konnte! – diese Schleife soll mit mir begraben werden. An meinem Geburtstage schenktest du sie mir! Wie ich das alles verschlang! – ach, ich dachte nicht, daß mich der Weg hierher führen sollte! – sei ruhig! Ich bitte dich, sei ruhig!

– Sie sind geladen – es schlägt zwölf! So sei es denn! – Lotte! Lotte, lebe wohl! Lebe wohl!«

Ein Nachbar sah den Blick vom Pulver und hörte den Schuß fallen; da aber alles stille blieb, achtete er nicht weiter drauf.

Morgens um sechs tritt der Bediente herein mit dem Lichte. Er findet seinen Herrn an der Erde, die Pistole und Blut. Er ruft, er faßt ihn an; keine Antwort, er röchelt nur noch. Er läuft nach den Ärzten, nach Alberten. Lotte hört die Schelle ziehen, ein Zittern ergreift alle ihre Glieder. Sie weckt ihren Mann, sie stehen auf, der Bediente bringt heulend und stotternd die Nachricht, Lotte sinkt ohnmächtig vor Alberten nieder.

Als der Medikus zu dem Unglücklichen kam, fand er ihn an der Erde ohne Rettung, der Puls schlug, die Glieder waren alle gelähmt. Über dem rechten Auge hatte er sich durch den Kopf geschossen, das Gehirn war herausgetrieben. Man ließ ihm zum Überfluß eine Ader am Arme, das Blut lief, er holte noch immer Atem.

Aus dem Blut auf der Lehne des Sessels konnte man schließen, er habe sitzend vor dem Schreibtische die Tat vollbracht, dann ist er heruntergesunken, hat sich konvulsivisch um den Stuhl herumgewälzt. Er lag gegen das Fenster entkräftet auf dem Rücken, war in völliger Kleidung, gestiefelt, im blauen Frack mit gelber Weste.

Das Haus, die Nachbarschaft, die Stadt kam in Aufruhr. Albert trat herein. Werther hatte man auf das Bett gelegt, die Stirn verbunden, sein Gesicht schon wie eines Toten, er rührte kein Glied. Die Lunge röchelte noch fürchterlich, bald schwach, bald stärker; man erwartete sein Ende.

Von dem Weine hatte er nur ein Glas getrunken. »Emilia Galotti« lag auf dem Pulte aufgeschlagen.

Von Alberts Bestürzung, von Lottens Jammer laßt mich nichts sagen.

Der alte Amtmann kam auf die Nachricht hereingesprengt, er küßte den Sterbenden unter den heißesten Tränen. Seine ältesten Söhne kamen bald nach ihm zu Fuße, sie fielen neben dem Bette nieder im Ausdrücke des unbändigsten Schmerzens, küßten ihm die Hände und den Mund, und der älteste, den er immer am meisten geliebt, hing an seinen Lippen, bis er verschieden war und man den Knaben mit Gewalt wegriß. Um zwölf mittags starb er. Die Gegenwart des Amtmannes und seine Anstalten tuschten einen Auflauf. Nachts gegen elf ließ er ihn an die Stätte begraben, die er sich erwählt hatte. Der Alte folgte der Leiche und die Söhne, Albert vermocht's nicht. Man fürchtete für Lottens Leben. Handwerker trugen ihn. Kein Geistlicher hat ihn begleitet.

When the servant brought the pistols to Werther, the latter received them with transports of delight upon hearing that Charlotte had given them to him with her own hand. He ate some bread, drank some wine, sent his servant to dinner, and then sat down to write as follows:

"They have been in your hands you wiped the dust from them. I kiss them a thousand times—you have touched them. Yes, Heaven favours my design, and you, Charlotte, provide me with the fatal instruments. It was my desire to receive my death from your hands, and my wish is gratified. I have made inquiries of my servant. You trembled when you gave him the pistols, but you bade me no adieu. Wretched, wretched that I am—not one farewell! How could you shut your heart against me in that hour which makes you mine for ever? Charlotte, ages cannot efface the impression—I feel you cannot hate the man who so passionately loves you!"

After dinner he called his servant, desired him to finish the packing up, destroyed many papers, and then went out to pay some trifling debts. He soon returned home, then went out again, notwithstanding the rain, walked for some time in the count's garden, and afterward proceeded farther into the country. Toward evening he came back once more, and resumed his writing.

"Wilhelm, I have for the last time beheld the mountains, the forests, and the sky. Farewell! And you, my dearest mother, forgive me! Console her, Wilhelm. God bless you! I have settled all my affairs! Farewell! We shall meet again, and be happier than ever."

"I have requited you badly, Albert; but you will forgive me. I have disturbed the peace of your home. I have sowed distrust between you. Farewell! I will end all this wretchedness. And oh, that my death may render you happy! Albert, Albert! make that angel happy, and the blessing of Heaven be upon you!"

He spent the rest of the evening in arranging his papers: he tore and burned a great many; others he sealed up, and directed to Wilhelm. They contained some detached thoughts and maxims, some of which I have perused. At ten o'clock he ordered his fire to be made up, and a bottle of wine to be brought to him. He then dismissed his servant, whose room, as well as the apartments of the rest of the family, was situated in another part of the house. The servant lay down without undressing, that he might be the sooner ready for his journey in the morning, his master having informed him that the post-horses would be at the door before six o'clock.

"Past eleven o'clock! All is silent around me, and my soul is calm. I thank thee, O God, that thou bestowest strength and courage upon me in these last moments! I approach the window, my dearest of friends; and through the clouds, which are at this moment driven rapidly along by the impetuous winds, I behold the stars which illumine the eternal heavens. No, you will not fall, celestial bodies: the hand of the Almighty supports both you and me! I have looked for the last time upon the constellation of the Greater Bear: it is my favourite star; for when I bade you farewell at night, Charlotte, and turned my steps from your door, it always shone upon me. With what rapture have I at times beheld it! How often have I implored it with uplifted hands to witness my felicity! and even still—But what object is there, Charlotte, which fails to summon up your image before me? Do you not surround me on all sides? and have I not, like a child, treasured up every trifle which you have consecrated by your touch?

"Your profile, which was so dear to me, I return to you; and I pray you to preserve it. Thousands of kisses have I imprinted upon it, and a thousand times has it gladdened my heart on departing from and returning to my home.

"I have implored your father to protect my remains. At the corner of the churchyard, looking toward the fields, there are two lime-trees—there I wish to lie. Your father can, and doubtless will, do this much for his friend. Implore it of him. But perhaps pious Christians will not choose that their bodies should be buried near the corpse of a poor, unhappy wretch like me. Then let me be laid in some remote valley, or near the highway, where the priest and Levite may bless themselves as they pass by my tomb, whilst the Samaritan will shed a tear for my fate.

"See, Charlotte, I do not shudder to take the cold and fatal cup, from which I shall drink the draught of death. Your hand presents it to me, and I do not tremble. All, all is now concluded: the wishes and the hopes of my existence are fulfilled. With cold, unflinching hand I knock at the brazen portals of Death. Oh, that I had enjoyed the bliss of dying for you! how gladly would I have sacrificed myself for you; Charlotte! And could I but restore peace and joy to your bosom, with what resolution, with what joy, would I not meet my fate! But it is the lot of only a chosen few to shed their blood for their friends, and by their death to augment, a thousand times, the happiness of those by whom they are beloved.

"I wish, Charlotte, to be buried in the dress I wear at present: it has been rendered sacred by your touch. I have begged this favour of your father. My spirit soars above my sepulchre. I do not wish my pockets to be searched. The knot of pink ribbon which you wore on your bosom the first time I saw you, surrounded by the children—Oh, kiss them a thousand times for me, and tell them the fate of their unhappy friend! I think I see them playing around me. The dear children! How warmly have I been attached to you, Charlotte! Since the first hour I saw you, how impossible have I found it to leave you. This ribbon must be buried with me: it was a present from you on my birthday. How confused it all appears! Little did I then think that I should journey this road. But peace! I pray you, peace!

"They are loaded—the clock strikes twelve. I say amen. Charlotte, Charlotte! farewell, farewell!"

A neighbour saw the flash, and heard the report of the pistol; but, as everything remained quiet, he thought no more of it. In the morning, at six o'clock, the servant went into Werther's room with a candle. He found his master stretched upon the floor, weltering in his blood, and the pistols at his side. He called, he took him in his arms, but received no answer. Life was not yet quite extinct. The servant ran for a surgeon, and then went to fetch Albert. Charlotte heard the ringing of the bell: a cold shudder seized her. She wakened her husband, and they both rose. The servant, bathed in tears faltered forth the dreadful news. Charlotte fell senseless at Albert's feet.

When the surgeon came to the unfortunate Werther, he was still lying on the floor; and his pulse beat, but his limbs were cold. The bullet, entering the forehead, over the right eye, had penetrated the skull. A vein was opened in his right arm: the blood came, and he still continued to breathe. From the blood which flowed from the chair, it could be inferred that he had committed the rash act sitting at his bureau, and that he afterward fell upon the floor. He was found lying on his back near the window. He was in full-dress costume.

The house, the neighbourhood, and the whole town were immediately in commotion. Albert arrived. They had laid Werther on the bed: his head was bound up, and the paleness of death was upon his face. His limbs were motionless; but he still breathed, at one time strongly, then weaker—his death was momentarily expected. He had drunk only one glass of the wine. "Emilia Galotti" lay open upon his bureau. I shall say nothing of Albert's distress, or of Charlotte's grief.

The old steward hastened to the house immediately upon hearing the news: he embraced his dying friend amid a flood of tears. His eldest boys soon followed him on foot. In speechless sorrow they threw themselves on their knees by the bedside, and kissed his hands and face. The eldest, who was his favourite, hung over him till he expired; and even then he was removed by force. At twelve o'clock Werther breathed his last. The presence of the steward, and the precautions he had adopted, prevented a disturbance; and that night, at the hour of eleven, he caused the body to be interred in the place which Werther had selected for himself.

The steward and his sons followed the corpse to the grave. Albert was unable to accompany them. Charlotte's life was despaired of. The body was carried by labourers. No priest attended.

When I started to learn German, I did it primarily in order to read the classics. But, soon enough I understood that it had also very positive implications for my business career, as I studied Economics. When I was an Israeli candidate at Insead in 1967, I had the unique advantage to be fluent in all the three languages of Insead – German, French and English. If I would not have learned German I probably would not have been admitted to Insead, surely not with a full scholarship as I received. I read Goetz, but after a 5 weeks seminar at the Goethe Institute in West Berlin (with visits to East Berlin, which made me relinquish all my socialist ideologies), I was also fluent in Business German and understood quite well the courses in German at Insead, speaking with my German friends in German. Later, in my business career, I continued to take advantage of the language, while reading from time to time the classics in German. After I left business in order to teach business ethics, I started to forget the language, as a language is not like riding a bicycle – if you don't practice it you forget it. But, nevertheless, when I was in Berlin in 2010 for 10 days, I went every night to the theater, and I enjoyed most seeing one of my favorite plays - Die Dreigroschenoper by Brecht and Weill, which I used as background for my lecture the day after at the headquarters of Transparency International (see description of the event with German Text of Mack the Knife's Ballad in Plays). Die Dreigroschenoper is an excellent example of how you can lose most of the flavor of the play by translating it, Lotte Lenya singing in German cannot be compared to any other performance, even Louis Armstrong.

Well, this is how I remember what the reasons for learning German were. But thanks to Freud we can analyze also how the subconscious works, and reading once again my diary I found the "true?" reason of why I decided to learn German, and I inserted this paragraph in my unpublished Diary: "Today Benny told me once again why I shouldn't chose to study Economics. He said that I will never have a career as a diplomat because I am "black" (oriental, born in Egypt). Many new immigrants came as grownups to Israel and couldn't assimilate in the Israeli environment. I think that I have succeeded to assimilate. The day that I'll be convinced that Benny and the others were right and I would not be able to succeed because I am "black" would be an awful day for me. Nevertheless, I have to study German at the university. I am determined! I am afraid only of one thing – from racism. It is possible that because I am Sephardic I would be exposed to obstacles. It is bad. I can change everything, but I cannot change my place of birth. My motto is: persevere with obstinacy and diligence and you will succeed!! This is almost the only instance in the four years of the diary and towards its end that the issue of my origins comes out. I didn't choose a diplomatic career and that's why it is impossible to confirm the prejudice, but German helped me a lot in my work and studies." So, what is true and false?

Have I decided to study German because "if you can't beat them join them"? Have I forsaken my origins in order to become or at least behave like an Ashkenazi Jew? Was that the reason why I almost never had a Sephardic or Oriental girlfriend? Was that the reason why almost all my friends are from European origin? Is that the reason why I try so hard to be called a European, with a Europocentrist orientation? That I don't like Arabic music and like only a few Israeli oriental songs? But, I never concealed the fact that I am Sephardic and proud of my origins, but to be true almost all my Sephardic activities started at the age of 50 or more, and Sephardic Jews are from Spanish or Portuguese, i.e. European origins anyhow. I do not think that I have anything in common with the Egyptians, although I was born there, but always felt there a stranger, a European, and that's why the Egyptians treated us badly as well... Yet, I support warmly the struggle for the recognition of oriental culture in Israel, I read with great interest the three books of the Oriental Prose and Poetry Anthology, I abhor racism in all its facets – against Orientals, Ethiopians, Arabs, Sephardim, Russian new immigrants in Israel, but here again – all these happened at the age of 50 or more, as part of my ethical activities, after I had my ethical "illumination" in the late nineties. I heard many racial comments and jokes in my career but reacted to them only at an advanced age, and wrote a case study on the topic of racism in business only in my book published in 2008 at the age of 64 (when I'm 64 – the Beatles...). This book's purpose is to tell the truth – conscious or unconscious, and I try to do it at my best!

I still remember some poems that I learned in my German courses, one of them by Heinrich Heine. I recited it by heart at a dinner in the Reichstag to the Berliner host of the Insead group who visited Berlin for the annual reunion in 2010. This humorous poem deals with the sadness of sunset, a young woman cries, but she is told that the sun comes back from the other side.

Das Fräulein stand am Meere

Und seufzte lang und bang,
Es rührte sie so sehre
Der Sonnenuntergang.

Mein Fräulein! sein Sie munter,
Das ist ein altes Stück;
Hier vorne geht sie unter
Und kehrt von hinten zurück.

A mistress stood by the sea sighing long and anxiously.
She was so deeply stirred
By the setting sun

My Fräulein!, be gay,
This is an old play;
ahead of you it sets
And from behind it returns.

I am fascinated by Heine's life and achievement and especially by his Jewish background that although he converted did not cease the anti-Semitic attacks on him until he had to spend the second half of his life in Paris as an expatriate. Christian Johann Heinrich Heine (13 December 1797 – 17 February 1856) was a German poet, journalist, essayist, and literary critic. He is best known outside Germany for his early lyric poetry, which was set to music in the form of Lieder (art songs) by composers such as Robert Schumann and Franz Schubert. Heine's later verse and prose are distinguished by their satirical wit and irony. He is considered part of the Young Germany movement. His radical political views led to many of his works being banned by German authorities. Heine spent the last 25 years of his life as an expatriate in Paris. Heine's writings were abhorred by the Nazis and one of its political mouthpieces, the Völkischer Beobachter made noteworthy efforts to attack him in their periodical. Within the pantheon of the "Jewish cultural intelligentsia" chosen for "anti-Semitic demonization," perhaps nobody was the recipient of more National Socialist vitriol than Heinrich Heine. When a memorial to Heine was completed in 1926, the paper lamented that Hamburg had erected a "Jewish Monument to Heine and Damascus...one in which Alljuda ruled!". Editors for the Völkischer Beobachter referred to Heine's writing as degenerate on multiple occasions as did the infamous Nazi Alfred Rosenberg. Correspondingly, during the rise of the Third Reich, Heine's writings were banned and burned. Among the thousands of books burned on Berlin's Opernplatz in 1933, following the Nazi raid on the Institut für Sexualwissenschaft, were works by Heinrich Heine. To commemorate the terrible event, one of the most famous lines of Heine's 1821 play Almansor was engraved in the ground at the site: "Das war ein Vorspiel nur, dort wo man Bücher verbrennt, verbrennt man auch am Ende Menschen." ("That was but a prelude; where they burn books, they will ultimately burn people as well."). And everybody knows what happened subsequently in the Third Reich.

In 1834, 99 years before Adolf Hitler and the Nazi Party seized power in Germany, Heine wrote in his work "The History of Religion and Philosophy in Germany": "Christianity – and that is its greatest merit – has somewhat mitigated that brutal Germanic love of war, but it could not destroy it. Should that subduing talisman, the cross, be shattered, the frenzied madness of the ancient warriors, that insane Berserk rage of which Nordic bards have spoken and sung so often, will once more burst into flame. This talisman is fragile, and the day will come when it will collapse miserably. Then the ancient stony gods will rise from the forgotten debris and rub the dust of a thousand years from their eyes, and finally Thor with his giant hammer will jump up and smash the Gothic cathedrals. (...) "Do not smile at my advice – the advice of a dreamer who warns you against Kantians, Fichteans, and philosophers of nature. Do not smile at the visionary who anticipates the same revolution in the realm of the visible as has taken place in the spiritual. Thought precedes action as lightning precedes thunder. German thunder is of true Germanic character; it is not very nimble, but rumbles along ponderously. Yet, it will come and when you hear a crashing such as never before has been heard in the world's history, then you know that the German thunderbolt has fallen at last. At that uproar the eagles of the air will drop dead, and lions in the remotest deserts of Africa will hide in their royal dens. A play will be performed in Germany which will make the French Revolution look like an innocent idyll."

Many composers have set Heine's works to music. They include Robert Schumann (especially his Lieder cycle Dichterliebe), Friedrich Silcher (who wrote a popular setting of "Die Lorelei", one of Heine's best known poems), Franz Schubert, Felix Mendelssohn, Fanny Mendelssohn, Johannes Brahms, Hugo Wolf, Richard Strauss, Pyotr Ilyich Tchaikovsky, Edward MacDowell, Clara Schumann and Richard Wagner; and in the 20th century Nikolai Medtner, Hans Werner Henze, Carl Orff, Lord Berners, Paul Lincke, Yehezkel Braun, Marcel Tyberg^[69] and Friedrich Baumfelder (who wrote another setting of "Die Lorelei", as well as "Die blauen Frühlingsaugen" and "Wir wuchsen in demselben Thal" in his Zwei Lieder). We bring here Heine's famous poem Die Lorelei (on the site which I visited in Germany), translated into Latin and English.

| 1. Ich weiß nicht, was soll es bedeuten,
Daß ich so traurig bin,
Ein Märchen aus uralten Zeiten,
Das kommt mir nicht aus dem Sinn.
Die Luft ist kühl und es dunkelt,
Und ruhig fließt der Rhein;
Der Gipfel des Berges funkelt,
Im Abendsonnenschein. | 1. Ignoro, quid id sibi velit,
A fable of old, through it streaming,
Antiqui aevi fabellam Allows my mind no rest.
Cur saepe volverim. The air is cool in the gloaming Vesperascit et frigescit, And gently flows the Rhine.
Et Rhenus leniter it, The crest of the mountain is Cacumen montis gleaming

Muss i denn, muss i denn zum Stadtele hinaus, Stadtele hinaus, Und du mein Schatz bleibst hier?

1. Muß i' denn, muß i' denn	1. Got to go, got to go,
Zum Städtele hinaus,	Got to leave this town,
Städtele hinaus	Leave this town
Und du mein Schatz bleibst hier	And you, my dear, stay here.
Wenn i' komm', wenn i' komm',	When I'm back, when I'm back
Wenn i' wiederum, wiederum komm',	When I'm back again, back again,
Kehr i' ei' mei' Schatz bei dir	On your doorstep I'll appear.
: Kann i' glei' net allweil bei dir sei'	: Tho' I can't be with you all the time
Han' i' doch mei' Freud' an dir	My thoughts are with you, my dear
Wenn i' komm', wenn i' komm',	When I'm back, when I'm back
Wenn i' wiederum, wiederum komm',	When I'm back again, back again,
Kehr' i' ei' mei' Schatz bei dir.	On your doorstep I'll appear.

I visited most of Germany, besides residing in Berlin twice in aggregate a couple of months – one of the most beautiful cities in the world, the scenery, the gardens, the architecture, the museums, the theaters. I visited several times on business Frankfurt and Munich, and visited Koeln, Schwarzwald, Baden Baden, Heidelberg, Hamburg, Dresden, Freiburg, Luebeck, etc. I visited Switzerland several times, alone for attending two excellent seminars of a fortnight each in International Finance and International Marketing at IMD, and also with my wife and my daughter, visiting Geneve, Lausanne, Zurich, Lugano, Zermatt, Mont Blanc, Bern, Basel, Lucerne... In Basel, I saw graffiti with an anti-Semite content. I went to the police and complained demanding that the graffiti should be removed instantly. The policeman probably thought that I was crazy, but he wrote down the complaint. When we hired a cottage in Grindelwald, by far the most beautiful site that I have ever seen, we went often to the supermarket, but we made once a terrible mistake and haven't returned the shopping cart to the exact location where we took it. We were almost linched, and probably that it is the sole drawback of the Swiss, that they are so perfect that they don't have any patience for people who are not so perfect as they are. When I was in Grindelwald on vacation, I received a phone call from Uri Levit, a friend and CEO of Poalim Investments, one of the largest investments companies in Israel. He asked me if I could come for a day to Paris for negotiations with a French company on a joint venture. I answered that I am with my wife and daughter on vacation, but if they would come to Bern, nearby, I could spare a day for the negotiations. So, the French managers had to travel all the way from Paris to Bern for the negotiations, don't knowing probably what the reason was for this ordeal. But, I kept my principles not to spoil my vacations with business, and Ruthy and Shirly were grateful for it as they barely saw me in Israel.

I had also business in Switzerland, and was asked by an American high tech company and owner, with whom I worked also in Italy, England, Germany, France, US, and Israel, to negotiate and sign a joint venture agreement with a Swiss company from Lugano. When I started to inquire about the company and its owner – es schmeckt nicht – I smelled a rat, and I asked a large American firm to check on this CEO. I found that he has indeed conned the previous company with whom he worked. Many businessmen in my situation wouldn't have any scruples, would not have investigated the Swiss company, as I was not asked to do so by the American company. I had a lot to lose, as I was supposed to travel every month for a week and manage the joint venture, earning a substantial amount of money for months or years. But I preferred to divulge my findings, albeit the American owner was not pleased by it as he wanted very much to make the joint venture, but as his company was public he couldn't afford to disregard my findings that were given to him in writing with the report on the firm. So, unethical conduct happens with the best families, even with the perfect and ethical Swiss people.

Nevertheless, I bring here a story of a visit to the Rhone Glacier of Ruthy, Shirley and me. Inside the Glacier we found a couple of men who were disguised to bears, they told us that if we want to take a photo with them it would cost us a substantial amount and it will be sent by mail to our Israeli address. Ruthy asked me: "How can we be sure that they'll send the picture to Israel after we pay them now", and the bear answered her in Hebrew (he was an Israeli student): "Madam, this is Switzerland not Israel"... I made also with Ruthy a visit of ten days to Vienna, Prague and Budapest. We enjoyed visiting those beautiful cities, went to the theater in Prague and Budapest, not understanding a word, but in order to enjoy the theater you have to enjoy the ambience. 20 years later we also visited Tallinn, capital of Estonia, on a Baltic cruise, and enjoyed the visit. In Vienna we had an Insead reunion, where we had a rehearsal of Waltz dancing before the ball that was held at a sumptuous hall. It didn't improve much my dancing, as I sing and dance so well that I was asked several times to appear on Broadway... We visited Schoenbrunn, and I thought all the time about L'Aiglon, Napoleon II, who died at this palace in 1832, and of Edmond Rostand's play that was the earliest memory I had as a child. So, from Cairo where I saw the play L'Aiglon, via Insead that was located initially at Fontainebleau's Napoleon palace, to the Schoenbrunn palace in Vienna where Napoleon's son died, a loop was closed – who thought that the poor kid Cory would have made such a voyage on the footsteps of Napoleon and his son...

We end this chapter with a poem on Hope, hope of the elderly, or as my grandmother used to say in Ladino: Lo ke la vieja keria en el suenio se lo via – what the old lady wanted she saw it in her dreams. Or in the more sophisticated language of Friedrich von Schiller in his poem Hoffnung:

Es reden und träumen die Menschen viel
 Von bessern künftigen Tagen,
 Nach einem glücklichen goldenen Ziel
 Sieht man sie rennen und jagen.
 Die Welt wird alt und wird wieder jung,
 Doch der Mensch hofft immer Verbesserung!

People speak and dream a great deal
 About better days in the future,
 You see them running and chasing
 After a happy, golden goal;
 The world grows old and grows young again
 But man always hopes for betterment.

Die Hoffnung führt ihn ins Leben ein,
 Sie umflattert den fröhlichen Knaben,
 Den Jüngling begeistert ihr Zauberschein,
 Sie wird mit dem Greis nicht begraben,
 Denn beschließt er im Grabe den müden Lauf,
 Noch am Grabe pflanzt er - die Hoffnung auf.

Hope introduces him to life,
 It hovers around the merry boy,
 Ist magical glow tempts the youth,
 It is not buried with the old man;
 For, if he ends his weary course in the grave,
 Even at the grave he plants – hope.

Es ist kein leerer schmeichelnder Wahn,
 Erzeugt im Gehirne des Toren;
 Im Herzen kündet es laut sich an,
 Zu was Besserm sind wir geboren!
 Und was die innere Stimme spricht,
 Das täuscht die hoffende Seele nicht.

This is no empty, flattering delusion
 Generated in a fool's brain,
 It manifests itself loudly in our heart:
 We were born for something better.
 And what the inner voice says
 Does not deceive the soul that hopes.

2. ROMANIAN, GREETING TO MOTHER-IN-LAW, THE POET EMINESCU

Reading in Romanian - with or without translation: Imagini frumoase by Simone de Beauvoir, Fratia by John Grisham, Poetry (Mihai Eminescu...), Frumoasele Garnizoanei by Eugen Teodoru, and the books read recently - Miinile Miraculoase by Joseph Kessel, Adio, arme by Ernest Hemingway, Mary Poppins by P.L. Travers, and others.

Romanian is very similar to the other Romance languages, mainly to Italian. However, it has many Russian words. I had the advantage to hear my wife and in-laws speaking Romanian, and I soon bought a book and learned the language which I could understand quite well. There are hundreds of thousands Israeli immigrants who speak Romanian, and you can practice the language also by reading newspapers and journals in the language. When I was in Taiwan, I was informed that the Taiwanese have in their negotiating team a person who spoke Hebrew. So, me and my Israeli Romanian colleague volunteered misinformation in Hebrew, while communicating in Romanian. Is it ethical or not? God knows! But, I was very much disappointed when I discovered after watching the Romanian television that I understand less than half of the language. When I analyzed the reasons I noticed that the Romanian spoken by my wife and her parents comprised a large percentage of words in Hebrew that were added over the years, as they left Romania decades ago. Unlike Yiddish and Ladino where it is legitimate to add words in Hebrew, in Romanian nobody will understand you if you say that you stayed at home cu haluku – which means in Hebrew with a gown, but with Romanian endings, but when I spoke Romanian in Israel with the Hebrew words heard at Ruthy's home everybody understood me. So, I had to learn once again the language, with my teach yourself book, in order to understand Romanian TV and books, but even then they spoke so fast that it was almost an impossible mission.

At the 80th birthday of my wife's mother Fany, I wrote and read a one-page greeting in Romanian which delighted her so much that she started crying. In this greeting I said that I love her as a son, as she is the mother of all of us, she may be aged 80 but she has the spirit of a young woman of 20, her dishes are delicious, she does not speak Hebrew so well, but she speaks Romanian, Yiddish and German perfectly, although she retired a long time ago she continues to work like a youngster, I wished her health and happiness with all her family. And indeed she lived long enough to witness the birth and growth of not less than 12 great grandchildren, 6 grandchildren and her daughters, the twins. She also convinced in extremis her last bachelor grandson to marry his sweetheart, and having achieved her goals she died peacefully. She used to come to my study and talk to me in Romanian, or read for me the newspaper, the sicker she was – the more she preferred to speak Romanian. David her husband who died at the age of 80, after ten long years of fatal strokes, could speak ultimately only Yiddish. So, knowing a language has many advantages, but the best one is probably to keep good relations with your mother-in-law...

Draga Fany,

Te iubesc ca bayatu tou/Tu iestes mama nuastra/Alu Ruty si Heli/Alui Eitan si a mea

A nepot si strenepot/La versta ta de optzeci/Cu inima si suflet de douazeci

Mancarea ta deliciuase/Si stinta ta ca o doctoreasa/Nu vorbest asa bini ivrit

Dar vorbest Romaneste, Germana si Yiddish perfect/Esti la pensia de cinciprozeci ani

Si lucrezi mai greu ca orcand/Todeuna ai asuka ca o domnisuara de treizeci de ani

Vreu sa ti orez multi shanim tovim/Safi sanatuasa si vesela/Cu tuata familia ta /Inca multi ani fericit

Well, unfortunately, I cannot be compared yet to the well-known poet Mihai Eminescu, but both Romanian poets use the word optzeci – eighty – in their poems. Furthermore, Eminescu was born in Botosani, the same town where my wife Ruthy and her mother Fany were born!

DEPARTE SUNT DE TINE - 1878

Departe sunt de tine si singur lângă foc,
 Petrec în minte viața-mi lipsită de noroc,
 Optzeci de ani îmi pare în lume c-am trait,
 Ca sunt bătrân ca iarna, ca tu vei fi murit.
 Aducerile-aminte pe suflet cad în picuri,
 Redesteptind în fața-mi trecutele nimicuri;
 Cu degetele-i vîntul lovește în ferestă,
 Se-toarce-n gîndu-mi firul duioaselor povesti,
 S-atuncea dinainte-mi prin ceața parca treci,
 Cu ochii mari în lacrimi, cu mini subțiri și reci;
 Cu bratele-amîndouă de gîtul meu te-anini
 Și parca-ai vrea a-mi spune ceva... apoi suspini...
 Eu te string la piept aversea-mi de-amor și frumuseți,
 În sărutări unim noi sărmanele vieți...
 O! glasul amintirii ramiie pururi mut,
 Să uit pe veci norocul ce-o clipă l-am avut,
 Să uit cum după-o clipă din bratele-mi te-ai smuls...
 Voi fi bătrân și singur, vei fi murit de mult!

NOW FAR I AM FROM YOU

Now far I am from you, before my fire alone,
 And read again the hours that so silently have gone,
 And it seems that eighty years beneath my feet did glide,
 That I am old as winter, that maybe you have died.
 The shadows of the past swift stream across life's floor
 The tale of all times, nothings that now exist no more;
 While the wind with clumsy fingers softly fumbles at the blind
 And sadly spins the fibre of the story in my mind...
 I see you stand before me in a mist that does enfold,
 Your eyes are full of tears and your fingers long and cold;
 About my neck caressing your arms you gently ply
 And it seems you want to speak to me, yet only sigh.
 And thus I clasp entranced my all, my world of grace,
 And both our lives are joined in that supreme embrace. .
 Oh, let the voice of memory remain for ever dumb,
 Forget the joy that was, but that nevermore will come,
 Forget how after an instant you thrust my arms aside,
 For now I'm old and lonely, and maybe you have died.

3. INTERLINGUA, CHEKHOV/MI VITA, ANDERSEN'S/LITTLE MATCH GIRL/DANISH

Reading in Interlingua – Le ovo de Columbo e le lingua universal by Marco Waterman, Le petit prince by Antoine de Saint-Exupéry. Read recently – Le defuncte Mattia Pascal by Luigi Pirandello, Mi vita by Anton Tchekhov, Le palatio Gripsholm by Kurt Tucholsky, Cinque aventuras de Sherlock Holmes by A.C. Doyle.

Constructed languages could be a fantastic answer for the nightmare of translating 20+ languages for the European Union members, and Interlingua is probably the easiest language in the world with a one-page grammar, well, easy at least for those who are fluent in Romance languages. Esperanto, which I also learned, is an a priori failure because it is so difficult to learn. Zamenhof tried to be politically correct and the language is based on Romance, Germanic and Slavic languages. Today he would probably have added some Chinese, Japanese and Swahili as well. There are hundreds of thousands who speak Esperanto, while there are only a thousand who speak Interlingua. Yet, Interlingua is the easiest language of the world and Esperanto one of the most difficult. There is no justice in the world anyhow, where India with a population of more than a billion has the same vote in the UN as Nauru with a few thousand people. But to those who prefer Interlingua – you can be fluent in the language in a day if you have a Romance language background. And you can read now also the classics in Interlingua, and participate in low-cost seminars that gather every summer many Interlingua speakers who enjoy speaking it.

Just to illustrate how Interlingua is so simple and similar to Romance languages, and can be understood easily, we bring here from the translation of Anton Chekhov Mi Vita My Life, Moya Zhizn, the cover page of the book: "Anton Tchekhov (1860-1904) es un del grande autore russe le plus appreciate. Ille se educava a medico, ma jam durante su studios ille scribeva chronicas e historietas, e tosto ille lassava su mestiero pro dedicar se toto al autorato. Su contos se developpava a studios penetrante del vita human, contate con humor astute e con un certe tendencia moral. Le stilo litterari es intuitive, impressionistic, sovente melancholic, sempre elegante. Aunque su dramas, le quales le ha rendite un rango prominente in le dramaturgia mundial, son plen de melancholia. Illos illustra la vita de un Russia in transformation, e ille designa con sympathia lor personages sin prospectos futur. "Mi Vita" era scribe qualque annos post que Tchekhov e su familia habeva movite a un ferma in le campania. Illo es un narration critic, ma emovente, del vita in le Russia pre-revolutioanri. Ben que non autobiographic, le intriga reflecte experientias e conflictos del autor, qui sape fascinar per su clarividencia e per su reguardo psychologic misericorde." Societate Svedese Pro Interlingua, Servicio de Libros UMI.

Unfortunately, there are not many original texts in Interlingua, with one to two thousand speakers all over the world it is quite difficult to find some, but there are a lot of books, poems and stories that have been translated into Interlingua. I have learned many languages by reading stories of Hans Christian Andersen, who were translated into a large number of the world's languages. We bring in this book one of the best stories translated into Interlingua. As a tribute to Andersen we give also a link to the original text in Danish: Den Lille Pige med Svovlstikkerne, first published in 1846, and to the English translation: The Little Match girl.

Le pueretta con le flammiferos

Il faceva un tremende frigido; il nivava e comenciava annoctar, il era etiam le ultime vespere del anno, le vigilia del anno nove. In iste frigido e in iste tenebras iva in le strata un pueretta paupere con capite discoperte e pedes nude; es ver que illa portava pantoflas quando illa partiva del domo, sed a que bono? Le pantoflas era multo grande, su matre los habeva usate, si grande illos era e le parva los perdeva, precipitante se a transverso le strata al momento ubi duo vehiculos passava velocemente, un del pantoflas non era retrovabile, e un puero escampava con le altere; ille diceva que illo poterea servir de cuna quando ille ipse haberea infantes.

In Danish: Det var saa grueligt koldt; det sneede og det begyndte at blive mørk Aften; det var ogsaa den sidste Aften i Aaret, Nytaarsaften. I denne Kulde og i dette Mørke gik paa Gaden en lille, fattig Pige med bart Hoved og nøgne Fødder; ja hun havde jo rigtignok havt Tøfler paa, da hun kom hjemme fra; men hvad kunde det hjælpe! det var meget store Tøfler, hendes Moder havde sidst brugt dem, saa store vare de, og dem tabte den Lille, da hun skyndte sig over Gaden, i det to Vogne foer saa grueligt stærkt forbi; den ene Tøffel var ikke at finde og den anden løb en Dreng med; han sagde, at den kunde han bruge til Vugge, naar han selv fik Børn.

Ibi le pueretta iva a nude parve pedes que era rubie e blau de frigido; in un vetere avantal illa teneva un quantitate de flammiiferos e un fasce illa portava in le mano; nullo habeva comprate de illa tote le die; nullo la habeva donate un soldo;
affamate e refrigide illa iva e pareva si opprimite, le povretta!
Le floccos de nive cadeva in su longe capillos jalne con le belle buclas circum le nuca, sed a iste ornamento illa non pensava. Per omne fenestras brillava le lumines, e in le strata il habeva un odor deliciose de oca rostite; como dicite, il era le vigilia del anno nove, e a isto illa pensava.

In Danish: Der gik nu den lille Pige paa de nøgne smaa Fødder, der vare røde og blaa af Kulde; i et gammelt Forklæde holdt hun en Mængde Svovlstikker og eet Bundt gik hun med i Haanden; Ingen havde den hele Dag kjøbt af hende; Ingen havde givet hende en lille Skilling; sulten og forfrossen gik hun og saae saa forkuet ud, den lille Stakkel! Sneefnökkene faldt i hendes lange gule Haar, der krøllede saa smukt om Nakken, men den Stads tænkte hun rigtignok ikke paa. Ud fra alle Vinduer skinnede Lysene og saa lugtede der i Gaden saa deiligt af Gaasesteg; det var jo Nytaarsaften, ja det tænkte hun paa.

In un angulo inter duo domos, le un saliva in le strata un pauco plus que le altere, ibi illa sedeva e quattava; sed illa habeva ancora plus frigido, e illa non osava ir a domo post que illa non habeva vendite ulle flammiiferos, non recipite un sol soldo, su patre la batterea, e etiam a domo il faceva frigido, illes habeva solmente le tecto directemente super se, e ibi le vento penetrava ben que palea e pannellos era mittite in le plus grande fissuras. Su parve manos era quasi torpide de frigor. Oh, un parve flammifero facerea ben. Si illa solmente osava tirar un ex le fasce, incender lo al muro e tepidar le digitos. Illa extraheva un, “ritch!” como illo vomitava scintillas, como illo ardeva! Le flamma era calide e clar como un parve candela quando illa teneva le mano circum illo; illo era un lumine estranie; il pareva al pueretta que illa sedeva ante un grande estufa de ferro con bollas e cylindro de laton; le foco ardeva si agradabile, calefaceva si ben; oh no, que era illo?) Le parva extendeva jam le pedes pro etiam calefacer se istos, ... tunc le flamma se extingueva. Le estufa desapareva, illa sedeva con un pecietta del flammifero consumite in le mano.

Un altere era incendite, illo ardeva, illo brillava, e ubi le luce illuminava le muro, isto deveniva transparente como un velo; illa reguardava directemente ad in le camera ubi le tabula stava ponite, con un blanchissime copertura de tabula, con porcellana fin, e deliciosamente fumava le oca rostite, reimplite de prunas sic e pomos; e lo que era ancora plus splendide: le oca saltava ex le platto, titubava, con furchetta e cultello in le dorso, per le solo; directemente verso le paupere puer a illo veniva; tunc le flammifero se extingueva, e solmente le compacte muro frigide era visibile.

Illa incendeva ancora un. Tunc illa sedeva sub le plus belle arbore de Natal; illo era ancora plus grande e plus adornate que illo que illa per le porta vitree habeva vidite a presso del ric negoziante le Natal passate; mille candelas flagrava super le verde brancas, e imagines multicolor, como illos que imbelliva le vitrinas, la reguardava. Le parva extendeva ambe manos in alto) tunc le flammifero se extingueva; le multe candelas de Natal ascendeva semper plus in alto, illa videva que illos nunc era le stellas clar, un de illos cadeva e faceva un longe stria de foco super le celo.

“Nunc alicuno mori!” diceva le parva, post que le vetule granmatre, le sol qui habeva essite bon con illa, habeva dicite: Quando un stella cade, un anima ascende a Deo.

Illa incendeva de novo un flammifero al muro, illo splendeva a omne partes, e in le splendor stava le vetule granmatre, si clar, si lucente, si clemente e benedicta.

“Granmatre!” clamava le parva, “oh, prende me con te! Io sape que tu va disparer quando le flammifero se extinguerà, disparer como le calide estufa, le deliciose oca rostite, e le grande benedicta arbore de Natal!” e illa incendeva in haste tote le flammiferos restante in le fasce; illa voleva retener granmatre; e le flammiferos luceva con un tal splendor que il era plus clar que al luce diurne. Granmatre habeva nunquam essite si belle, si grande; illa levava le pueretta a in su bracio, e illas volava in splendor e jubilo si altemente, si altemente; e ibi il habeva nulle frigido, nulle fame, nulle pavor) illas era a presso de Deo.

Sed in le angulo al domo sedeva in le frigide matinata le pueretta con genas rubie, con un sorriso al bucca morte de frigido le ultime vespere del anno passate. Le matino del anno nove nasceva super le parve cadavere que sedeva con le flammiferos del quales un fasce era quasi consumite per foco. Illa ha volite calefacer se, diceva gente; nullo sapeva le belle que illa habeva vidite, in qual gloria illa con le vetule granmatre habeva entrate al jubilo del anno nove.

Judaeo-Spanish (also Judeo-Spanish and Judæo-Spanish: Judeo-Español, Hebrew script: גֵּוֹדִיאוֹ-אַיִספּאַניִיול, Cyrillic: Ёудео-Еспањол), commonly referred to as Ladino, is a Romance language derived from Old Spanish. Originally spoken in the former territories of the Ottoman Empire (the Balkans, Turkey, the Middle East, and North Africa) as well as in France, Italy, Netherlands, Morocco, and the UK, today it is spoken mainly by Sephardic minorities in more than 30 countries, most of the speakers residing in Israel. Although it has no official status in any country, it has been acknowledged as a minority language in Israel, Turkey and France. The core vocabulary of Judaeo-Spanish is Old Spanish and it has numerous elements from all the old Romance languages of the Iberian Peninsula, such as Old Aragonese, Astur-Leonese, Old Catalan, Old Portuguese and Mozarabic. The language has been further enriched by Ottoman Turkish and Semitic vocabulary, such as Hebrew, Aramaic, and Arabic, especially in the domains of religion, law and spirituality and most of the vocabulary for new and modern concepts has been adopted through French and Italian. Furthermore, the language is influenced to a lesser degree by other local languages of the Balkans - Greek, Bulgarian and Serbo-Croatian.

Historically, the Rashi script and its cursive form Solitreo have been the main orthographies for writing Judaeo-Spanish. However today, it is mainly written with the Latin alphabet, though some other alphabets such as Hebrew and Cyrillic are still in use. Judaeo-Spanish is also locally known by many different names, major ones being: Español/Espanyol, Judió/Djudyo (or Jidió/Djidyo), Judesmo/Djudezmo, Sefaradhi/Sefaradi and Haketilla/Haketia. In Israel, the language is called (E)spanyolit and Ladino. In Turkey and formerly in the Ottoman Empire, the language has been traditionally called Yahudice, meaning the Jewish language. Judaeo-Spanish, once the trade language of the Adriatic Sea, the Balkans and the Middle-East and renowned for its rich literature especially in Thessaloniki, today is under serious threat of extinction. Most native speakers are elderly and the language is not transmitted to their children or grandchildren for various reasons. In some expatriate communities in Latin America and elsewhere, there is a threat of dialect levelling resulting in extinction by assimilation into modern Spanish. However, it is experiencing a minor revival among Sephardic communities, especially in music.

The first book I read in Ladino in 1962 was Romeo i Julieta in an old translation in Rashi letters. I speak many languages, but I enjoy most speaking my mother tongue Ladino. What is special in Ladino, is that you can speak it with a high percentage of Turkish words, French words or Hebrew words, or speak it almost exclusively in old Spanish, the language that the Jews took with them when they were expelled from Spain in 1492. Unlike Yiddish, that has a high percentage of Hebrew words, Ladino is a versatile language with many similar words in Turkish, French, Hebrew, Greek, Spanish. When I decided to translate (with Ladinokomunita) and edit the UN Universal Declaration of Human Rights, I chose to take the Spanish version as the basis of my translation because I didn't want that Ladino speakers who don't speak Turkish or Hebrew would not understand the translation. To illustrate how versatile Ladino is, I bring here a saying that my mother, Pauline, used to tell me in Ladino that: Nosotros los povres no tenemos mazal, ma los rikos tienen shans, mazal i ventura. We, the poor people, don't have "mazal" (luck in Hebrew and Ladino), but the rich people have "shans/chance, mazal i ventura" (in Turkish, French, Hebrew and Spanish). All those words are legitimate in Ladino, as anything goes.

To illustrate the different versions of the Declaration we compare the first 7 articles in Ladino, Spanish, and Turkish, showing how the Ladino version was primarily based on Spanish:

I initiated to give as a present a computer manufactured by the high tech company, where I was VP Sales, to the Israeli President, Itzhak Navon, the first Sephardic president of Israel. This computer could type simulteneously in two languages (which was unique in those times), and I chose the Ladino Romance En el vergel de la reina/In the Queen's Orchard, one of the most renowned romances. Navon was delighted, I was interviewed also on the Ladino radio station on computers, the first high tech interview in this language, and I became a Ladino "celebrity":

- En el vergel de la reina, hay crecido un bel rozal.
 2 La raíz tiene de oro y la cimiente de un bel cristal.
 En la ramica más alta, un ruxibón sentí cantar.
 4 El cantar que va diziendo, gloria es de lo escuchar.
 La reina estaba labrando y la hija durmiendo está.
 6 —Alevantéx, la mi hija, del vuestro dulce folgar.
 Venid, veréx como canta la serenica de la mar.
 8 —No es serena, mi madre, sino es el conde Alimar, que con mí quijo reire y que con mí quijo burlar.
 10 —Si es esto, la mi hija, yo lo mandaré matar.
 —No lo matéx, la mi madre, ni lo quijerex matar.
 12 El conde es niño y muchacho, el mundo quiere gozar.
 Desterrarlo de estas tierras, de aquí no coma pan.—
 14 La reina, que de mal tenga, presto los manda a matar.
 Matólos y degoyólos y los mandó a enterrar.
 16 El se hizo una graviyina; eya se hizo una conjá.
 La reina, desde que lo supo, presto los mandó arancar.
 18 Arancólos y deshojólos y los mandó echar a volar.
 Eya se hizo un[a] paloma y él se hizo un gavilán.
 20 La reina, desde que lo supo, presto los mandó aferrar.
 Aferrólos y degoyólos y los mandó echar a la mar.
 22 Eya se hizo una perquia y él se hizo una cara sazán.
 La reina, desde que lo supo, presto los mandó a pexcar.
 24 Pexcólos y degoyólos y los metió a cozinar.
 Al fin de la mediodía, los quitó por almorzar.
 26 Las espinas que salieron, las enterró en su portal.
 Eya se hizo una culebra y él se hizo un alacrán.
 28 En el cueyo de la reina, se le hue asarrear.

A prayer in Rashi letters – Ombre mortal porke duermes: Mortal man, why are you sleeping?:

אומצרי מורטאל פורקי דואירמאס? אים טיימפו קי רוגיס אי טי קונייזרים
 אז אוראקייין, אימפגורה איל פארוון דיל סינייור די זוק סינייזרים!
 אנטיס קי טוס דיאס סי טירמינין, קוריזאטי די טוס אוראפ פיאוריס
 איל דייו דיל קייטו טי אגיווארה, סי אונדי איל קון פריקה קוררים
 פוילי די ריזיליוס אי מאלקסיאס, פינסה קי איי קאסטיגו אי דולוריס
 דיין! קודייה די טו פואיזלו ישראל טוס פידיליס אי טוס קירצידוריס.

In Latin letters: Ombre mortal porke duermes? Es tiempo ke rogues i te koniores. Az orasion, implora el pardon del Sinior de los Sinoiores! Antes ke tus dias se terminen, korijate de tos ovras peores. El Dio del Sielo te aliudara, si onde el kon prisa kores. Fuie de revilijs i malisias, pensa ke ay kastigo i dolores. Dio! Kudia de tu puevlo Israel, tus fideles i tus servidores.

In English (translated by the "repentant" Jacques Cory): Mortal man why are you sleeping? It is time to pray and complain. Make a prayer, implore the pardon of the Master of all Masters! Before you end your days, mend your worst actions. God of Heaven will assist you, if you run fast towards him. Avoid offences and misdeeds, think that there are punishment and pain. God! Take care of your people Israel, your believers and servants.

HEBREW - אדם בן תמותה מדוע הנך ישן? הגיע הזמן שתתפלל ותתאונן. תן תפילה, תתחנן על מנת שהאל אדון האדונים יסלח לך. לפני בוא יומך תקן את מעשיך הנלוזים. אלוהים בשמים יבוא לעזרך, אם תרוץ מהר לקראתו. ברח מעבירות ומעשים רעים. חשוב שיש עונש וכאבים. אלוהים! דאג נא לעמך ישראל הנאמן לך והמשרת אותך. (תרגום מלאדינו בכתב רש"י – יעקב קורי המתחזק)

The Ladino lullabies are the sweetest of all, but this is of course subjective, although I heard as a baby lullabies in many languages – French, Italian and Ladino. Durme, durme mi angelico, is probably the best lullaby, and its words accompanied me throughout my life – Ah, cortaron las mis alas y mi voz amudicio – My wings were cut and my voice died away. That is what I felt when my friends betrayed me and I lost almost all my savings in one of the worst scams in Israel, when all the minority shareholders were wronged, and nothing could be done, in spite of all my endeavors. I enclosed this lullaby in my play "Nelly's Choice", with other references to Ladino, as the protagonist of my Odyssey – Uly/Ulysses Doron was from a Sephardic/Greek descent. But I recovered from the ashes and started a completely new career in Business Ethics, in order to prevent such unethical scams in the future, and I succeeded to fly once again.

Durme, Durme mi angelico	Sleep, sleep
Hijico chico de tu nacion	Little child of your nation –
Criatura de Sion	Child of Zion
Por que nombre, ah me demandas,	Without knowing pain
Por que no canto yo?	You ask me why do I not sing –
Ah, cortaron las mis alas y mi voz amudicio.	My wings were cut and my voice died away
Ah, el mundo de dolor.	Ah, what a world of pain ...

Sephardi Jews originate from the Iberian Peninsula – Spain (Sepharad in Hebrew) and Portugal. They were expelled from their countries or forced to convert to Catholicism towards the end of the fifteenth century. They spoke Ladino, deriving from Old Spanish with Hebrew words, as well as Turkish, Greek, French, Italian, Bulgarian, etc. words. North African Sephardim consist of the descendants of the expellees from Spain who also left in 1492, but since the nineteenth century they ceased to speak Ladino and Haketia (influenced by Maghrebi Arabic). There are today about a hundred thousand Ladino speakers. The Sephardim settled throughout the years in North Africa, Italy, all over America, the Netherlands, France, England, Poland, Israel, Egypt, Syria, some of them even returned to Spain and Portugal, but most of them settled in Turkey, Greece and the Balkans. They reside today mainly in Israel, France, the United States, Argentina, Turkey, Colombia, Morocco, Greece, Tunisia, Bosnia, and most of the Balkans countries.

Well known 12 distinguished Sephardi Jews are – Maimonides, Solomon Ibn Gabirol, Judah Halevi, Baruch Spinoza, Camille Pissarro, Jacques Derrida, Emma Lazarus, David Ricardo, Moses Montefiore, Benjamin Disraeli, Amedeo Modigliani, Israeli president Itzhak Navon, and 12 Nobel Laureates – Tobias Asser (1911, Peace, Netherlands, formation of the Permanent Court of Arbitration at the First Hague Conference), Boris Pasternak (1958, Literature, Russia, Doctor Zhivago), Emilio Segre (1959, Physics, Italy/US, group leader for the Manhattan Project), Rene Cassin (1968, Peace, France, drafting the UN Universal Declaration of Human Rights), Salvador Luria (1969, Medicine, Italy/US, replication mechanism and genetic structure of viruses), Baruj Benacerraf (1980, Medicine, Venezuela/US, discovery of the major histocompatibility complex genes), Elias Canetti (1981, Literature, Bulgaria/Austria/UK, modernist novelist and playwright, books – Auto-da-Fe, Crowds and Power), Franco Modigliani (1985, Economics, Italy/US, originator of the life-cycle hypothesis, which attempts to explain the level of saving in the economy), Rita Levi-Modigliani (1986, Medicine, Italy, nerve growth factor), Claude Cohen-Tannoudji (1997, Physics, France, research in methods of laser cooling and trapping atoms), Serge Haroche (2012, Physics, France, experimental methods that enable measuring and manipulation of individual quantum systems), Patrick Modiano (2014, Literature, France, books – les boulevards de ceinture, rue des boutiques obscures). Taking into consideration the very low number of Sephardi Jews (speaking Ladino or originating from Spain and Portugal) the Sephardim had an important cultural impact throughout history in Spain, France, Europe, Israel, and America – with eminent personalities such as Maimonides, Pissarro, Modigliani, Spinoza, Lazarus, Ricardo, Montefiore, Disraeli, Itzhak Navon, Cassin, Canetti, and other Nobel laureates, etc. Speaking of Nobel laureates, we should mention also two Cori who received the Medicine prize in 1947 for their discovery of how glycogen is broken down and resynthesized in the body for use as a store and source of energy: Carl Ferdinand Cori, a Czech/American biochemist, and his wife Gerty Cori who was born into a Jewish family in Prague (her mother was a friend of Franz Kafka, who was also a Jew). Gerty converted to Catholicism, enabling her and Carl to marry in the Roman Catholic Church, but did Carl Cori have a Jewish ancestry?

I visited most of the countries of the Sephardic diaspora, including Turkey, Greece, France, US, Netherlands, and the Balkans countries, enjoying very much beautiful Croatia and Slovenia, as well as Bosnia and Herzegovina, Republika Srpska, Serbia, Montenegro, Macedonia, Albania, Bulgaria and Romania. I was moved when my cousin Jak Kori took me early in the morning of Saturday to an Istanbul synagogue with Sephardic ritual in Hebrew and Ladino. The same ritual is practiced in Istanbul synagogues since 1492 and it is probably the original ritual. I do not go to synagogues as I am not religious and didn't have a Bar Mitzvah (but my sons had it at the request of my wife and her parents), so I was quite curious to discover the rituals. All went well until when the Rabbi asked the honorable guest from Israel Jacques Cory to an aliyah (calling him for a segment of reading from the Torah). I did not know what to do and whispered to the Rabbi that it is my first time, but the Rabbi told me that as I read Hebrew it should not be a problem and I have just to read a few lines of the Torah. I did that with pleasure, but this was my first and probably last time, since I did not go to a synagogue since then, except in my visits abroad.

You can read below a translation of my most beloved book- the Odyssey by Homer, as translated by Moshe Ha-Elion from Greek, my mother's father tongue, into Ladino, my mother tongue:

Kante IX

En respondiend estonses, le disho el astuto Odises:

“Rey Alkinoos, el mas renomado entre todos los ombres, es, en verdad, una koza muy buena d'oyir un poeta komo es este, k'a la de los diozes su boz asemeja.

I non existe, yo digo, un mas grande alkanso de gozo, ke kuando la alegría aferra a los sivdadininos.

I los ke pransan adientro la kaza oyen al poeta, stando asentados en orden, i mezas delante de eyos, yenas de karne i pan, i kon vino, un moso un djarro inche, i va, i a todos, al torno, les inche los kopos.

Esta, de todas las kozas, es la mas mijor, me parese;
ma el korason te pusho, sovre mis dolorozos apretos,
de preguntarme, afin ke yo, stando yorando, sospire.
Ke te dire en primero, i ke vo kontarte al kavo?
Muchas dolores me dieron los diozes ke biven al sielo.
Antes de todo, afin ke sepash, vo dizirvos mi nombre,
i vo después, kuando me salvare del dia sentensiado,
ser vuestro amigo, aunke yo moro en tierra leshana.

Yo se Odises, fijo de Laertes, ke se konosido por mi astusia por todos, i arriva al sielo mi fama.
Es en Itaka ke moro, ke se ve de leshos; i tiene una montanya, Neriton, ke ruiyen sus sharas del aire;
i muchas izlas a su derredor, una serka la otra,
Sami, Dulihion, i Zakintos k'esta kon sharas kuvrida.
Ama Itaka es yana i sta en la mar al Oeste, londje de todas – ke stan de la parte del sol i del Este – tierra penyoza, ma bravos mansevos grandese, i dulce mas de mi tierra no puedo yo ver en el mundo entero.

Ma me detuvo ayi Kalipso, la linda de las diozas, dientro de su grotta gueka, su espozozon kijendo ke sea;
Kirke, la grande ramaya, de mizmo me detenia en su palasio, en Eea, kijendo ke sea su espozozon.
Ma el korason no pudieron las dos konvenser en mi pecho.
Porke mas dulce non ay de la tierra natala d'un ombre,
i sus parientes, i mizmo si mora en kaza muy rika,
en tierra ajena aleshada, i de sus parientes muy londje.
Ma, ven, i vo a kontarte de mi dolorozo retorno, ke Zeus me lo takso desde el dia ke me hue de Troya.

D'Ilios, tomándome el aire, me trusho ende los Kikonos, a Ismaros; la sivdad estruyi, i mati a los ombres.
De la sivdad, las mujeres i muchos trezoros tomando, los despartimos en partes iguales, ayi, entre todos.
I stuve a todos pushando d'ayi de fuyirmos prestozos, ma eyos – ke kriaturas! – del todo no me eskucharon.
Vino bevia sin kuento, i ovejas muchas degoyavan
a la oriya, i bueyes k'arrestan los pies en sus yida.
Ma los Kikonos, en mientres, yamaron a otros Kikonos, k'al interior de la izla moravan, i eran sus vizinos,
i d'eyos mas numerozos i bravos, i eran kapaches de gerrear kon karrosas, i a pie, menester si avia.
la madrugada vinieron muchos, komo flores i fojas en primavera; i a nos, desgrasiados, mos vino estonses

la mala suerte ke Zeus takso, para muy apenarmos.
 Serka las naves lijeras para gerrear se pararon,
 i estos a estos rojaván las lansas kon puntas de bronzó.
 En tanto k'era la alba i k'el santo día kresia, nos rezistimos, malgrado ke eran akeyos mas muchos.
 Ma a l'abashada del sol, kuando el yugo kitan de los bueyes, los Kikonos prevalieron, i a los Ahayos empu Sharon.
 De kada nave, sesh de mis kompanyos kon las guadra-piernas, muertos kayeron, i el resto salvimos de muerte i de suerte.

Kon korasones muy tristes partimos d'ayi, ma alegres ke mos salvimos de muerte, aunke piedrimos kompanyos muy muy keridos. I yo no deshi ke s'alondjen las naves kurvas asta ke nombrimos tres vezes a kada kompanyo povre, ke por los Kikonos batido, murió en la yanura.
 I trusho Zeus, k'akoje las nuves, estonses la bora kontra las naves, tempesta terrivle, i tapo kon las nuves tierra i mar, i del sielo, prestoza abasho la nochada.
 I kon las proas abasho, eyas navegavan, i del huerte aire, en tres i en kuarto se despedasaron sus velas.
 Las abashimos anestas, d'espanto de topar la muerte,
 i en remando, bushkimos enverso la tierra de yirmos.
 Mientras dos noches i días areo, ayi mos kedimos,
 i mos komiamos el korason de kanseria i fuga.
 Ma al treser, kuando vino Eos, de los bukles ermozos, nos, los mástiles alsimos, i en eyos spandimos las velas blankas; i el aire i los timoneros giavan las naves.
 I sano iya yegar yo agora a mi tierra natala;
 ma arrodeando a Malia, el korriente i la onda i la bora me desviaron, i londje de Kitera m'arrempu Sharon.

Aires danyozos d'ayi me yevaron por nueve djornadas en la mar yena de peshes, i al día de diez arrivimos ende los Lotofagos, ke kon flores solo se mantienen.

We bring here the lyrics of 3 famous romances in Ladino – Adio Kerida – Goodbye My Beloved

Adio,
 Adio kerida,
 No kero la vida,
 Me l'amargates tu

Goodbye,
 goodbye beloved,
 I don't want to live,
 you made my life miserable.

Tu madre kuando te pario
 Y te kito al mundo
 Korason eya no te dio
 Para amar segundo

When your mother delivered you and brought you to the world she did not give you a heart to love another one.

Adio,
 Adio kerida,
 No kero la vida,
 Me l'amargates tu

Goodbye,
 goodbye beloved,
 I don't want to live,
 you made my life miserable.

Va, bushkate otro amor,
Aharva otras puertas,
Aspera otro ardor,
Ke para mi sos muerta

Go, look for another love, knock on other ports
in hope to find another passion, because for me you are dead.

The second romance is – Los Bilbilikos Kantan – The Nightingales Sing

La rosa enflorese
En el mes de mai
Mi alma s'eskurese
Sufriendo del amor.

The rose blooms
In the month of May,
My soul darkens,
Suffering from love.

El bilbiliko kanta,
Suspira del amor,
Y la pasion me mata,
Muchigua mi dolor.

The nightingale sings,
It sighs with love,
Passion kills me,
It increases my pain.

Los bilbilikos kantan
En los arvoles de la flor
Debasho se asentan
Los ke sufren del amor.

The nightingales sing
In the flowering trees
Beneath them sit
Those who suffer from love.

Mas presto ven, palomba,
Mas presto ven con mi,
Mas presto ven, kerida,
Korre y salvame.

Come more quickly, dove,
Come faster with me,
Come more quickly, my dear,
Run and save me.

From the third romances, Arvoles Yoran – Trees are weeping – one strophe

*Blanka sos, blanka vistes, blanka la tu figura,
Blankas flores kayen de ti,
De la tu hermosura.*

White you are, white you wear,
White your shape,
White flowers fall from you
From your beauty.

Most of the Sephardim were zionists, settled in Palestine, mainly in Jerusalem, Hebron, Safed, Tiberias, and even tried to found a Jewish entity in Palestine. In the middle of the 16th century Dona Gracia Mendes Nasi and her nephew Joseph Nasi, with the support of the Ottoman Empire, tried to gather the Portuguese Jews, first to Cyprus, then owned by the Republic of Venice, and later to Tiberias. This was the only practical attempt to establish some sort of Jewish political center in Palestine between the fourth and 19th centuries. In the 17th century Sabbatai Zevi (1626–1676) announced himself as the Messiah and gained over many Jews to his side, forming a base in Salonica. He first tried to establish a settlement in Gaza, but moved later to Smyrna.

After deposing the old rabbi Aaron Lapapa even the Jewish community of Avignon prepared to emigrate to the new kingdom in the spring of 1666. The readiness of the Jews of the time to believe the messianic claims of Sabbatai Zevi may be largely explained by the desperate state of European Jewry in the mid-17th century. The bloody pogroms of Bohdan Khmelnytsky had wiped out one-third of the Jewish population and destroyed many centers of Jewish learning and communal life. Finally, Joseph Nasi was forced by the Ottoman Sultan Mehmed IV to visit him and, to the surprise of his followers, in the presence of the Sultan he converted to Islam.

Sir Moses Montefiore, famous for his intervention in favor of Jews around the world, including the attempt to rescue Edgardo Mortara, established a colony for Jews in Palestine. In 1854, his friend Judah Touro bequeathed money to fund Jewish residential settlement in Palestine. Montefiore was appointed executor of his will, and used the funds for a variety of projects, including building in 1860 the first Jewish residential settlement and almshouse outside of the old walled city of Jerusalem—today known as Mishkenot Sha'ananim. Laurence Oliphant failed in a like attempt to bring to Palestine the Jewish proletariat of Poland, Lithuania, Romania, and the Turkish Empire (1879 and 1882). In the 1890s, Theodor Herzl infused Zionism with a new ideology and practical urgency, leading to the First Zionist Congress at Basel in 1897, which created the World Zionist Organization (WZO). Herzl's aim was to initiate necessary preparatory steps for the attainment of a Jewish state. Herzl's attempts to reach a political agreement with the Ottoman rulers of Palestine were unsuccessful and other governmental support was sought. The WZO supported small-scale settlement in Palestine and focused on strengthening Jewish feeling and consciousness and on building a worldwide federation.

We can find in the Jewish Virtual Library a short biography of Herzl. As Herzl wrote extensively on social and economic justice issues, mainly in Altneuland, I introduced this book in my courses on this subject, and I view Herzl as the precursor not only of Israel but also of the Third Way between capitalism and socialism, that today is very popular among some scholars as Joseph Stiglitz. Theodor (Binyamin Ze'ev) Herzl was the visionary behind modern Zionism and the reinstitution of a Jewish homeland. Herzl (born May 2, 1860; died July 3, 1904) was born in Budapest in 1860. He was educated in the spirit of the German-Jewish Enlightenment, and learned to appreciate secular culture. In 1878 the family moved to Vienna, and in 1884 Herzl was awarded a doctorate of law from the University of Vienna. He became a writer, playwright and journalist. The Paris correspondent of the influential liberal Vienna newspaper Neue Freie Presse was none other than Theodor Herzl. Herzl first encountered the anti-Semitism that would shape his life and the fate of the Jews in the twentieth century while studying at the University of Vienna (1882). Later, during his stay in Paris as a journalist, he was brought face-to-face with the problem. At the time, he regarded the Jewish problem as a social issue and wrote a drama, The Ghetto (1894), in which assimilation and conversion are rejected as solutions. He hoped that The Ghetto would lead to debate and ultimately to a solution, based on mutual tolerance and respect between Christians and Jews. In 1894, Captain Alfred Dreyfus, a Jewish officer in the French army, was unjustly accused of treason, mainly because of the prevailing anti-Semitic atmosphere. Herzl witnessed mobs shouting “Death to the Jews” in France, the home of the French Revolution, and resolved that there was only one solution: the mass immigration of Jews to a land of their own. Thus, the Dreyfus Case became one of the determinants in the genesis of Political Zionism. So, as the Chinese say – every crisis can lead to new opportunities.

Herzl concluded that anti-Semitism was a stable and immutable factor in human society, which assimilation did not solve. He mulled over the idea of Jewish sovereignty, and, despite ridicule from Jewish leaders, published Der Judenstaat \(The Jewish State, 1896\). Herzl argued that the essence of the Jewish problem was not individual but national. He declared that the Jews could gain acceptance in the world only if they ceased being a national anomaly. The Jews are one people, he said, and their plight could be transformed into a positive force by the establishment of a Jewish state with the consent of the great powers. He saw the Jewish question as an international political question to be dealt with in the arena of international politics. Herzl proposed a practical program for collecting funds from Jews around the world by a company to be owned by stockholders, which would work toward the practical realization of this goal. (This organization, when it was eventually formed, was called the Zionist Organization.) He saw the future state as a model social state, basing his ideas on the European model of the time, of a modern enlightened society. It would be neutral and peace-seeking, and of a secular nature.

In his Zionist novel, Altneuland (Old New Land, 1902), Herzl pictured the future Jewish state as a socialist utopia. He envisioned a new society that was to rise in the Land of Israel on a cooperative basis utilizing science and technology in the development of the Land. He included detailed ideas about how he saw the future state's political structure, immigration, fundraising, diplomatic relations, social laws and relations between religion and the state. In Altneuland, the Jewish state was foreseen as a pluralist, advanced society, a "light unto the nations." This book had a great impact on the Jews of the time and became a symbol of the Zionist vision in the Land of Israel. Herzl's ideas were met with enthusiasm by the Jewish masses in Eastern Europe, although Jewish leaders were less ardent. Herzl appealed to wealthy Jews such as Baron Hirsch and Baron Rothschild, to join the national Zionist movement, but in vain. He then appealed to the people, and the result was the convening of the First Zionist Congress in Basle, Switzerland, on August 29, 1897. What is less known is that the Zionist movement was received warmly also among Sephardic Jews, and Altneuland was translated very soon into Ladino.

The Congress was the first interterritorial gathering of Jews on a national and secular basis. Here the delegates adopted the Basle Program, the program of the Zionist movement, and declared, "Zionism seeks to establish a home for the Jewish people in Palestine secured under public law." At the Congress the World Zionist Organization was established as the political arm of the Jewish people, and Herzl was elected its first president. Herzl convened six Zionist Congresses between 1897 and 1902. It was here that the tools for Zionist activism were forged: Otzar Hityashvut Hayehudim, the Jewish National Fund and the movement's newspaper Die Welt. After the First Zionist Congress, the movement met yearly at an international Zionist Congress. In 1936, the center of the Zionist movement was transferred to Jerusalem.

Herzl saw the need for encouragement by the great powers of the aims of the Jewish people in the Land. Thus, he traveled to the Land of Israel and Istanbul in 1898 to meet with Kaiser Wilhelm II of Germany and the Sultan of the Ottoman Empire. The meeting with Wilhelm was a failure - the monarch dismissed Herzl's political entreaties with snide anti-Semitic remarks. When these efforts proved fruitless, he turned to Great Britain, and met with Joseph Chamberlain, the British colonial secretary and others. The only concrete offer he received from the British was the proposal of a Jewish autonomous region in east Africa, in Uganda. In 1899, in an essay entitled "The Family Affliction" written for The American Hebrew, Herzl wrote, "Anyone who wants to work in behalf of the Jews needs - to use a popular phrase - a strong stomach." The 1903 Kishinev pogrom and the difficult state of Russian Jewry, witnessed firsthand by Herzl during a visit to Russia, had a profound effect on him. He requested that the Russian government assist the Zionist Movement to transfer Jews from Russia to Eretz Yisrael.

At the Sixth Zionist Congress (1903), Herzl proposed the British Uganda Program as a temporary refuge for Jews in Russia in immediate danger. While Herzl made it clear that this program would not affect the ultimate aim of Zionism, a Jewish entity in the Land of Israel, the proposal aroused a storm at the Congress and nearly led to a split in the Zionist movement. The Uganda Program was finally rejected by the Zionist movement at the Seventh Zionist Congress in 1905. Herzl died in Vienna in 1904, of pneumonia and a weak heart overworked by his incessant efforts on behalf of Zionism. By then the movement had found its place on the world political map. In 1949, Herzl's remains were brought to Israel and reinterred on Mount Herzl in Jerusalem. Herzl's books Der Judenstaat ("The Jewish State") and Altneuland ("Old New Land"), his plays and articles have been published frequently and translated into many languages. His name has been commemorated in the Herzl Forests at Ben Shemen and Hulda, the world's first Hebrew gymnasium — "Herzliya" — which was established in Tel Aviv, the town of Herzliya in the Sharon and neighborhoods and streets in many Israeli towns and cities. Herzl coined the phrase "If you will, it is no fairytale," which became the motto of the Zionist movement. Although at the time no one could have imagined it, Zionism led, only fifty years later, to the establishment of the independent State of Israel. Herzl was 44-years-old when he died in the summer of 1904, on the 20th of Tammuz in the Jewish calendar.

I wanted to read once again Altneuland (The Old New Land) by Theodor Herzl, the book that our founding father wrote with his vision about the old new land of the Jews. I have read several times Der Judenstaat – the Jewish State, but I wanted to enjoy once more the Utopia of Altneuland. I could read it in German as it was written initially in this language, in Hebrew as it has become a classic in Israel, in English, French, Spanish or in many of the other languages of the Jewish diaspora. But I chose to read it in Ladino from a rare book written a hundred years ago in Rashi letters in Saloniki, Greece. My father Albert and many of the Sephardic Jews read Herzl's books and were converted to Zionism, settling in Palestine and since 1948 in Israel.

Herzl's last literary work, Altneuland (in English: The Old New Land, 1902), is a novel (full text in English translation) devoted to Zionism. Herzl occupied his free time for three years in writing what he believed might be accomplished by 1923. Though the form is that of a romance, It is less a novel than a serious forecast of what could be done within one generation. The keynotes of the story are love of Zion and insistence upon the fact that the suggested changes in life are not utopian but to be brought about simply by grouping all the best efforts and ideals of every race and nation. Each such effort is quoted and referred to in such a manner as to show that Altneuland, though blossoming through the skill of the Jew, will in reality be the product of the benevolent efforts of all the members of the human family. Herzl envisioned a Jewish state that combined modern Jewish culture with the best of the European heritage. Thus a "Palace of Peace" would be built in Jerusalem to arbitrate international disputes, and at the same time the Temple would be rebuilt on modern principles. Herzl did not envision the Jewish inhabitants of the state as being religious, but there was respect for religion in the public sphere. He also assumed that many languages would be spoken, and that Hebrew would not be the main tongue. Proponents of a Jewish cultural rebirth, such as Ahad Ha'am, were critical of Altneuland.

In Altneuland, Herzl did not foresee any conflict between Jews and Arabs. One of the main characters in Altneuland is a Haifa engineer, Reshid Bey, who is one of the leaders of the "New Society". He is very grateful to his Jewish neighbors for improving the economic condition of Israel and sees no cause for conflict. All non-Jews have equal rights, and an attempt by a fanatical rabbi to disenfranchise the non-Jewish citizens of their rights fails in the election which is the center of the main political plot of the novel. Herzl saw clearly what the Palestinians and Arabs fail to see until now, that the Jews contributed to the welfare of Israel much more than any other Arab state contributed to their welfare. The Israeli Arabs/Palestinians thrive in Israel in spite of all the problems much more than in any other Arab state, economically and politically.

Herzl also envisioned the future Jewish state to be a "third way" between capitalism and socialism, with a developed welfare program and public ownership of the main natural resources. Industry, agriculture and trade were organized on a cooperative basis. Along with many other progressive Jews of the day, such as Emma Lazarus, Louis Brandeis, Albert Einstein, and Franz Oppenheimer, Herzl desired to enact the land reforms proposed by the American political economist Henry George. Specifically, they called for a land value tax. He called his mixed economic model "Mutualism", a term derived from French utopian socialist thinking. Women would have equal voting rights—as they had in the Zionist movement from the Second Zionist Congress onwards. In fact Israel adopted many mutualist precepts – the Kibbutz, cooperatives... In Altneuland, Herzl outlined his vision for a new Jewish state in the Land of Israel. He summed up his vision of an open society: "It is founded on the ideas which are a common product of all civilized nations. ... It would be immoral if we would exclude anyone, whatever his origin, his descent, or his religion, from participating in our achievements. For we stand on the shoulders of other civilized peoples. ... What we own we owe to the preparatory work of other peoples. Therefore, we have to repay our debt. There is only one way to do it, the highest tolerance. Our motto must therefore be, now and ever: 'Man, you are my brother.'"

In his novel, Herzl wrote about an electoral campaign in the new state. He directed his wrath against the nationalist party, which wished to make the Jews a privileged class in Israel. Herzl regarded that as a betrayal of Zion, for Zion was identical to him with humanitarianism and tolerance—and that this was true in politics as well as religion. Herzl wrote: "Matters of faith were once and for all excluded from public influence. ... Whether anyone sought religious devotion in the synagogue, in the church, in the mosque, in the art museum, or in a philharmonic concert, did not concern society. That was his [own] private affair." Altneuland was written both for Jews and non-Jews: Herzl wanted to win over non-Jewish opinion for Zionism. When he was still thinking of Argentina as a possible venue for massive Jewish immigration, he wrote in his diary: "When we occupy the land, we shall bring immediate benefits to the state that receives us. We must expropriate gently the private property on the estates assigned to us. We shall try to spirit the penniless population across the border by procuring employment for it in the transit countries, while denying it any employment in our country. The property owners will come over to our side. Both the process of expropriation and the removal of the poor must be carried out discretely and circumspectly ... It goes without saying that we shall respectfully tolerate persons of other faiths and protect their property, their honor, and their freedom with the harshest means of coercion. This is another area in which we shall set the entire world a wonderful example ... Should there be many such immovable owners in individual areas [who would not sell their property to us], we shall simply leave them there and develop our commerce in the direction of other areas which belong to us". Do we have in Israel a "third way society" or a neoliberal capitalistic regime? Are we a wonderful example to the entire world or a society that is boycotted by more and more states and peoples? Are we a country with the highest tolerance to others or a quasi-theocratic state ruled by ultra-orthodox and ultra-right parties? Where have the mutualists precepts vanished, the welfare state disappeared, most of Herzl's vision sunk into oblivion? I leave to the reader to answer those questions by himself, as sic transit gloria mundi?

Altneuland tells the story of Friedrich Löwenberg, a young Jewish Viennese intellectual, who, tired with European decadence, joins an Americanized Prussian aristocrat named Kingscourt as they retire to a remote Pacific island (it is specifically mentioned as being part of the Cook Islands, near Raratonga, which may explain why this country and other Pacific tiny states support vehemently Israel...). Stopping in Jaffa on their way to the Pacific, they find Palestine a backward, destitute and sparsely populated land, as it appeared to Herzl on his visit in 1898. Löwenberg and Kingscourt spend the following twenty years on the island, cut off from civilization. As they pass through Palestine on their way back to Europe, they discover a land drastically transformed, showcasing a free, open and cosmopolitan modern society, and boasting a thriving cooperative industry based on state-of-the-art technology. In the two decades that have passed, European Jews have rediscovered and re-inhabited their Altneuland, reclaiming their own destiny in the Land of Israel. Herzl's novel depicts his blueprint for the realization of Jewish national emancipation, as put forward in his book Der Judenstaat (The Jewish State) published in 1896. Both ideological and utopian, it presents a model society which was to adopt a liberal and egalitarian social model, resembling a modern welfare state. Herzl called his model "Mutualism" and it is based on a mixed economy, with public ownership of the land and natural resources, agricultural cooperatives, state welfare, while at the same time encouraging private entrepreneurship. A true modernist, Herzl rejected the European class system, yet remained loyal to Europe's cultural heritage. Rather than imagining the Jews in Altneuland speaking exclusively Hebrew, the society is multi-lingual – with German, Hebrew and Yiddish being the main languages and reproducing European customs, going to the opera and enjoying the theatre. I share of course Herzl's vision, as I think that Israel has to be a cosmopolitan multi-lingual very cultural 'third way' society, quite opposite to the present situation. While Jerusalem is the capital, with the seat of parliament ("Congress") and the Jewish Academy, the country's industrial center is the modern city of Haifa. In the actual Israel, this role was to be taken by Tel Aviv, a city which did not yet exist at the time of writing and whose name was inspired by the book itself.

Herzl saw the potential of Haifa Bay for constructing a modern deep-water port. However, in reality it would be the British Empire rather than the Zionists which would realise that potential and make considerable strategic use of it during the Second World War. Though Israel would eventually inherit the Haifa port and city, by 1948 the central role of Tel Aviv (Altneuland in Hebrew) was established, with Haifa – though a major Israeli city – relegated to a secondary position. As envisioned by Herzl, "All the way from Acco to Mount Carmel stretched what seemed to be one great park". In the actual Israel the very same area became a giant industrial zone, reckoned the most heavily polluted part of the country, and Haifa where I live has the highest rate of cancers in Israel. The final sentences of Altneuland emphasize what was the basis of this old new state, according to the main protagonists of the novel. We bring it here in English and in Ladino in Hebrew/Rashi letters as it was written about a hundred years ago in the Feuilleton El Tiempo of Saloniki, Greece, and translated into Ladino (from which language?) by Jean Florian. My humble contribution was in transcribing the Rashi writing into Latin writing:

And the Feuilleton El Tiempo invites the readers of Altneuland – Vieja Nueva Tiera – at the end of the novel, to read on next Sunday the new novel – La Mujer ke Mata... – The woman who kills – el mas sensasonial de los romansos – the most sensational novel.

Finally, I would like to end this chapter with a personal note, emphasizing more than anything else how Ladino is a sentimental link to tradition for all the Sephardic Jews. I had a friend, one of the most ethical and best men that I have ever met – Harry Recanati. He came from a very wealthy family, the Recanatis, originating from the Italian town Recanati, moving to Saloniki in the Ottoman Empire/Greece, and then to Israel. His father Leon Recanati founded the Discount Bank in Israel, one of the three largest banks, with Bank Hapoalim (Bank of the Workers) and Bank Leumi (National Bank). Discount bank hired mostly Sephardic Jews and its clientele was mainly Sephardic. Harry, as the eldest son, managed the Bank after his father died quite young. He told me and wrote in his book "Recanati, father and son" that he had to leave the management in view of an ethical conflict with his brothers on how to run the bank. The Israel Discount Bank added the international merchant banks of Ralli Brothers to its portfolio of private banks, and Harry Recanati left when the other Directors chose to list the banking group publicly on the Tel Aviv Stock Exchange, in 1970. The Israel Discount Bank became insolvent in 1983 and was controversially nationalised by the Treasury of the Government of Israel. Harry Recanati had retained ownership of the Swiss private bank of Ralli Brothers (Bankers) S.A. which he later sold to Security Pacific Bank of California, using the proceeds to found a number of public museums. These Ralli Museums are free, non-profit galleries, of contemporary Latin-American art. We used to meet in his apartment in the Caesarea Ralli Museum whenever he came to Israel (he lived in the Ralli Museums all over the world), and to mourn for the lack of ethics in Israel. He read my ethical academic books and novel (which had many Sephardic motives) and I read his book, the first book on ethics in banking that was written in Israel. Both of us spoke Ladino.

When Harry was almost ninety he had a stroke and he was brought to his apartment in the Rally Museum of Caesarea, where nurses took care of him day and night. The manager of the Museum, a remarkable and very talented woman, told me that Harry cannot communicate and does not understand what is told to him. I told her that nevertheless I want to visit him with my wife (he also met before my son Yossi who is an architect, as he was very interested in architecture). We came one morning, and noticed that indeed he could not communicate with any of the persons who were there, nurses, the manager and friends. I started to talk to him in Ladino, like we used to before. I told him: "Kerido Harry, saves ke otrun poko avemos Pesah i vamos a meldar la Agada kon toda nuestra familia. Te akodras komo kantavas en Ladino kuando estavas chiko kon tu papa i tu mama i toda tu familia? Es pekado ke no puedes estar kon nosotros, ma vamos a pensar a ti kuando vamos a kantar (i kanti): "Este es el pan de la afriision ke komieron nuestros padres en tierra de Ayifto. Todo el ken tiene ambre venga i koma. Todo el ken tiene de menester venga i paskue. Este anyo aki, a el anyo ke viene en tierra de Yisrael. Este anyo aki, siervos, a el anyo ke viene en tierra de Yisrael ijos fo-o-o-ros..." When Harry heard me singing the famous Pesah song "ha lahma anyaa" in Ladino, as he used to sing when he was a kid, he burst out crying and large drops of tears came down his cheeks...

In English: "Dear Harry, you know that in a short while we'll have Pesah/Passover and we'll read the Agada with all our family. You remember how you used to sing in Ladino when you were a kid with your father and your mother and all your family? It is unfortunate that you'll not be able to be with us but we'll think about you when we'll sing (and I sang): This is the bread of affliction which our ancestors ate in Egypt. Let all who are hungry come and eat of it; all in need come and celebrate Passover. This year we observe it here; next year may we be in the Land of Israel. This year we are slaves in exile; next year may we be free men in the Land of Israel." In Aramaic: "A lakhma anya di ahalu avatana beara demitsrayim, kol dikhfin yeteh veyehol, kol ditsrikh yeteh veyifsakh, ashata aha leshana abaa beara deyisrael, ashata avdeh, leshana abaa beara deyisrael beneh horin." Written in Aramaic alphabet and translated into Hebrew:

ARAMAIC - "הא לחמא עניא די אכלו אבהתנא בארעא דמצרים. כל דכפין ייתי ויכול. כל דצריך ייתי ויפסח. השתא הכא. לשנה הבאה בארעא דישראל. השתא עבדי לשנה הבאה בני חורין." - HEBREW - "זהו לחם העוני שאכלו אבותינו בארץ מצרים. כל הרעב יבוא ויאכל, כל הצריך יבוא ויפסח (מלשון קורבן פסח). השנה (אנו) כאן, לשנה הבאה בארץ ישראל, השנה (אנו) עבדים, לשנה הבאה בני חורין."

5. PORTUGUESE, JORGE AMADO, ANTECEDENTS, VISIT, UMA CASA PORTUGUESA, SAMUEL USQUE, RIO CARNIVAL, A FELICIDADE – ON HAPPINESS INDEX

Reading in Portuguese – Consolacem as tribulacoes de Israel by Samuel Usque, O guarani by Jose de Alencar, Viagens na minha terra by Almeida Garrett, A reliquia by Eca de Queiroz, Dom Casmurro by Machado de Assis, Os Lusíadas by Luis de Camoes. Read recently - Jubiaba by Jorge Amado, O crime do padre Amaro by Eca de Queiroz, A aventura Portuguesa by Augusto Pereira Brandao, Mensagem by Fernando Pessoa.

The first book read in Portuguese was: Dona flor e seus dois maridos by Jorge Amado. When you study a new language you are carried on the wings of the muses to a new country, and reading a book, a play or a poem, you feel submerged by the new atmosphere. With Portuguese you benefit from two atmospheres – from Brazil and Portugal. And indeed, you cannot find two greater opposites than the Brazilian and Portuguese literature. Dona Flor or Jubiaba are completely opposite to O crime do padre Amaro, but we shouldn't be surprised as Samba and Fado are also opposites, as we can see from the links in the Music chapter of this book. Dona Flor is first of all extremely funny to read, but there is much more than humor, you can get in a nutshell the gist of Brazilian's ambience and carnival right away from the first page as brought here. Vadinho, Dona Flor's first husband, died (on page 1 of the book...) one Sunday of Carnival, in the morning, when dressed like a Bahian woman, he was dancing the samba, with the greatest enthusiasm, in the Dois de Julho Square, not far from his home... When Vadinho, the liveliest of the lot, saw the group coming he chose a partner a heavily rouged Romanian, a big one for she was a mass of golden sequins, and announced: "Here I come, my Russian from Tororo". The English translation is accurate but it is incomparable to the Brazilian original – as "fantasiado de baiana" is definitely not equivalent to "when dressed like a Bahian woman"...

Vadinho o primeiro marido de Dona Flor, morreu num domingo de carnaval, pela manhã, quando, fantasiado de baiana, sambava num bloco, na maior animação, no Largo Dois de Julho, não longe de sua casa. Não pertencia ao bloco, acabara de nele misturar-se, em companhia de mais quatro amigos, todos com traje de baiana, e vinham de um bar no Cabeça onde o uísque corra farto à custa de um certo Moysés Alves, fazendeiro de cacau, rico e perdulário. O bloco conduzia uma pequena e afinada orquestra de violões e flautas; ao cavaquinho, Carlinhos Mascarenhas, magricela celebrado nos castelos, Ah! um cavaquinho divino. Vestiam-se os rapazes de ciganos e as moças de camponesas Húngaras ou romenas; jamais, porém, húngara ou romena ou mesmo búlgara ou eslovaca reboiou como reboiavam elas, cabrochas na flor da idade e da faceirice. Vadinho, o mais animado de todos, ao ver o bloco despontar na esquina e ao ouvir o ponteador do esquelético Mascarenhas no cavaquinho sublime, adiantou-se rápido, postou-se ante a romena carregada na cor, uma grandona, monumental como uma igreja - e era a Igreja de São Francisco, pois se cobria com um desparrame de lantejoulas douradas -, anunciou:
- Lá vou eu, minha russa do Tororó...

I didn't know until recently that I had Portuguese ancestry. I knew that probably my family came from Coria in Spain, but only when I visited the town and assisted the town's archeologist to discover the ancient synagogue, I learned that as Coria is very near Portugal, the Jews from Coria when they were expelled from Spain in 1492 opted to go to Portugal, which received the Jews willingly. Only five years later, in 1497, the Portuguese king decided to convert by force all the Jews to Christianity, without giving them the choice to leave the country. So, probably, my ancestors were Marranos/Conversos/Anusim and left Portugal only dozens of years later, with the help of Dona Gracia Mendes who assisted them in fleeing to Italy, Greece and Turkey, where my ancestors settled. Apparently, my antecedents are Spanish (Coria), Portuguese (Marranos), Italian (uncles/part of my family), Greek (mother), Turkish (father), and Israelis (country of residence and of course of my Jewish ancestors). I was born in Egypt, my culture was primarily French, my business environment is American, my wife is Romanian, her father was born in a town now in Ukraine, my professional mentality is German, my socioeconomic ideals are Scandinavian, and my grandchildren have also antecedents from Iraq, Argentina, Lithuania, Russia, Poland, etc. In short, quite a cosmopolitan mix, making me a man of the world!

My wife and me enjoyed very much a tour of a couple of weeks in Portugal, we had a fantastic guide, a descendant of the family of Jeanne d'Arc, and we visited all Portugal from north to south. What a fantastic country, so interesting, so beautiful, the people were very nice, and I noticed for the first time that I can understand Portuguese quite well. The tourists were French, American, Italian, Argentinian and Brazilian, so – the guide who spoke perfectly all those languages started to explain about every site in English, then in French, afterwards in Italian, in Spanish, and finally... in Portuguese for the Brazilians. By the end of the explanations in the first four languages that I knew also very well I knew by heart all the descriptions of the site, and when the guide spoke at last in Portuguese I noticed that I understand perfectly what she was telling. I couldn't speak Portuguese of course, because for a Spanish/Italian speaker it is quite difficult to pronounce the words in the right accent, but I could understand. Before that, I have visited Brazil only for a few days in Rio and visited my family in Sao Paulo (my aunts, uncles, and cousins) with whom I spoke of course in French as they came from Egypt (it sounds funny, but it is true), and was not exposed to Portuguese, as the tours in Rio were in English. I enjoyed Rio, as one of the most beautiful cities that I have ever seen, the scenery looked exotic and sensual, the Brazilians seemed happy, but I didn't feel there at home as I felt in Portugal, where the only thing missing in my visit there was perhaps to find like in Coria – uma casa portuguesa - a Portuguese home, maybe the home of my ancestors in the beautiful town of Castelo de Vide, which is opposite to Coria and has a synagogue very similar to the synagogue of Coria.

Uma Casa Portuguesa

Numa casa portuguesa fica bem, pão e vinho sobre a mesa.
E se à porta humildemente bate alguém,
senta-se à mesa co'a gente.
Fica bem esta franqueza, fica bem, que o povo nunca desmente.
A alegria da pobreza está nesta grande riqueza de dar, e ficar contente.

Quatro paredes caiadas,
um cheirinho à alecrim,
um cacho de uvas doiradas,
duas rosas num jardim,
um São José de azulejo, mais o sol da primavera...
uma promessa de beijos...
dois braços à minha espera...
É uma casa portuguesa, com certeza!
É, com certeza, uma casa portuguesa!

A Portuguese house

In a Portuguese home, it looks good to have bread and wine on the table.
And if someone humbly knocks at the door
we invite them to sit at the table with us.
This frankness looks good, so good,
the frankness which people never deny.
The joy of poverty is this great richness of being generous and feeling happy.

Four whitewashed walls,
a sweet smell of rosemary,
a bunch of golden grapes
two roses in a garden,
a statue of St. Joseph in ceramics, and the sun of the spring in addiction ...
a promise of finding kisses...
two open arms waiting for me...
This is a Portuguese home, certainly!
This is, surely, a Portuguese home!

Samuel Usque, the author of the most well-known Portuguese book about the sorrows of the Portuguese Jews – Consolation for the Tribulations of Israel, published his book in Ferrara, in 1553, with the assistance of Dona Gracia Mendes, the richest woman in the world at this time, and he dedicated it to this Lady, who probably assisted also my ancestors to flee Portugal and settle in Italy, Greece and Turkey. Usque was born in Lisbon in 1500, was a Portuguese marrano, as my ancestors. Usque wrote in prose inspired by the Bible's text, the holy literature and the classics, in order to tell the story of the Jewish people, persecuted and tortured by the Inquisition in Portugal and Spain, and expressed the hope to return to the Holiland, which was practically unknown. The book is perceived as a masterpiece of the Portuguese and Jewish literature.

que todos os q cria em si cada hũa e hũa

At my birthday, a friend who liked very much Brazilian music, sang to me in Portuguese one of the songs I like the most – A Felicidade, about the sadness of quarta-feira, the day after the Carnival, which is probably the sadest day in Brazil. I joined her, as I knew by heart the words, this was filmed, but as I am not yet Vinicius de Moraes, Tom Jobim, or Gal Costa, I decided not to put this outstanding performance on YouTube, unless the public requests it explicitly. The Carnival in Rio de Janeiro is the most famous festival in the world, held before Lent every year, considered the biggest carnival with two million people per day on the streets. The first festivals of Rio date back to 1723. The typical Rio carnival parade is filled with revelers, floats and adornments from numerous samba schools which are located in Rio (more than 200 approximately, divided into 5 leagues/ divisions). A samba school is composed of a collaboration of local neighbours that want to attend carnival together, with some kind of regional, geographical common background. There is a special order that every school has to follow with their parade entries. Each school begins with the "comissão de frente" ("Front Commission" in English), that is the group of people from the school that appear first. Made of ten to fifteen people, the "comissão de frente" introduces the school and sets the mood and style of their presentation. These people have choreographed dances in fancy costumes that usually tell a short story. Following the "comissão de frente" is the first float of the samba school, called 'abre-alas'. Incorporated into every aspect of the Rio carnival are dancing and music. The most famous dance is carnival samba, a Brazilian dance with African influences. The samba remains a popular dance not only in carnival but in the ghettos outside of the main cities. These villages keep alive the historical aspect of the dance without the influence of the western cultures.

A Felicidade /Happiness/Vinicius de Moraes

Tristeza não tem fim
Felicidade sim

Sadness has no end
Happiness yes

A felicidade é como a gota
De orvalho numa pétala de flor
Brilha tranquila
Depois de leve oscila
E cai como uma lágrima de amor

Happiness is like a drop
Of dew on a flower petal
Shines quietly
After light oscillates
And falls like a tear of love

A felicidade do pobre parece
A grande ilusão do carnaval
A gente trabalha o ano inteiro
Por um momento de sonho
Pra fazer a fantasia
De rei ou de pirata ou jardineira
Pra tudo se acabar na quarta-feira

Happiness of the poor seems
The great illusion of Carnival
We work all year
For a dream moment
To make the fantasy
Of king or pirate or gardener
For everything was finished in Wednesday

Tristeza não tem fim
Felicidade sim

Sadness has no end
Happiness yes

A felicidade é como a pluma
Que o vento vai levando pelo ar
Voa tão leve
Mas tem a vida breve
Precisa que haja vento sem parar

Happiness is like a feather
That the wind lifts into the air
Flying so light
But life is short
It needs to have the wind without stopping

A minha felicidade está sonhando
Nos olhos da minha namorada
É como esta noite, passando, passando
Em busca da madrugada
Falem baixo, por favor
Pra que ela acorde alegre com o dia
Oferecendo beijos de amor

My happiness is dreaming
In the eyes of my lover
It is like tonight, passing, passing
In search of the dawn
Keep it down, please
For her to wake up happy as the day
Offering kisses of love

Tristeza não tem fim
Felicidade sim

Sadness has no end
Happiness yes

And happiness is a subject that I refer to it very often in my book. I knew once a woman who was Brazilian and all her life pursued happiness, enjoying life, always optimistic, never complaining. That woman, let's call her Gabriela, had plenty of friends, every night went out, played cards, went to nightclubs, danced and lived fully. She had a relative with the same name Gabriela in Israel. She admonished her often for her lavish life, as she had no friends, almost never went out, and lived a very frugal life. The Brazilian used to answer her "we live only once" and indeed she died quite young at the age of 60. Her husband married again shortly after and lived happily for another 20 years. The Israeli died at the age of 86. Well, you can ask what is better, to live in a carnival for 3 days or to live in quarta-feira much longer, but this is another question. Happiness and joy is a question of attitude. I know a man, let's call him Naguib, who lives in Beirut and he is very happy, always telling his friends "Carpe Diem". As he comes from the Middle East he probably knows what is malocchio/mauvais oeil/ain ara/the evil eye. I appreciate his good humor especially because he lives in Beirut, the Hell on Earth (like Syria, Yemen, Iraq and Afghanistan...) and he is still happy, while I would be afraid from the malocchio. If Naguib lives in hell we in Israel live in purgatorium (Paradise is Switzerland and New Zealand), and the funny thing is that the Israelis are no. 11 in the world in the survey on happiness. Freud would say that we are masochists, but honestly I believe that it is because an Israeli can never admit that he has made a wrong choice. If he has a car, it is the best in the world. If he works somewhere it is better than Google. His wife is Sophia Loren (today?) and his country is the best in the world. I, personally, because of my mother's upbringing, believe in malocchio and never admit that I am happy, always complaining about something: money, health, tycoons, or politics. It is called in Ladino - viven los yoradores - but the Ashkenazis have excelled in that to perfection, always complain and you'll live happily but never enjoy it. So, I would say Lacrimo/Deploro Diem. I would refer now to the Happiness Index and analyze it.

Happiness Index (rank) – 2010-2012. The World Happiness Report is a measure of happiness published by the UN Sustainable Development Solutions Network. The report outlined the state of world happiness, causes of happiness and misery, and policy implications. The index is based on economics, psychology, survey analysis, national statistics, progress, mental illness, objective benefits of happiness, the importance of ethics, policy implications, subjective well-being and the Human Development Report. Six key variables explain three-quarters of the variation in annual national average scores over time and among countries: real GDP per capita, healthy life expectancy, having someone to count on, perceived freedom to make life choices, freedom from corruption, and generosity. The scale runs from 0 to 10, while 10 is perfect happiness, and the highest ratio ranks no. 1. I don't fully agree with it, but that's what we have, so we'll stick to it.

The term "gross national happiness" was coined in 1972 by Bhutan's king who opened Bhutan to the age of modernization. He used this phrase to signal his commitment to building an economy that would serve Bhutan's unique culture based on Buddhist spiritual values. The message originally was that happiness is more important than economic development. Through the contribution of many western and eastern scholars the concept developed into a full socioeconomic development framework. Bhutan is the only country in the world that has a "GNH", Gross National Happiness. It measures people's quality of life and makes sure that material and spiritual development happen together. Bhutan has done an amazing job of finding this balance. Bhutan is ranked as the happiest country in all of Asia and the eighth happiest country in the world according to Business Week. In the following paragraphs we analyze the World Happiness Report, measuring happiness and published by the UN. The index is based on economics, psychology, national statistics, progress, ethics, subjective well-being and the Human Development Report. And who is missing from this report? Surprise, surprise - Bhutan!

But, long before the king of Bhutan, Aristotle wrote in his book "Ethics" that "man aspires to be happy in the sense of eudaimonia, happiness, as the summum bonum of his existence. Happiness is not identical to pleasure, and the ethical man will aspire to live a happy life but not necessarily a pleasurable life. Happiness is not the end of each action, but it is nevertheless the supreme goal of life." (Cory Jacques, Activist Business Ethics, p. 63, Springer, 2005). So, if happiness is the sense of life, one would think that the happiest countries in the world are the best countries, even if in the other parameters they don't perform so well. But, in our case, the most ethical countries manage to be the happiest, and the most democratic, and the richest, and the most peaceful, and the most equal and ethical! Quite an achievement, proving once again that Ethics Pays.

The 13 happiest countries in the world include 9 of the 11 most ethical countries – Denmark, Norway, Switzerland, Netherlands, Sweden, Canada, Finland, Australia and New Zealand. And who are the additional 4 happy countries? Austria, ranking 23 in Transparency International/TI's index and one of the richest countries, Iceland – the fifth Scandinavian country (all the 5 Scandinavian countries are comprised in the 9 most happy countries) and no. 12 in TI's index. Israel, ranking 37 in TI's index, and among the last countries in the Global Peace Index, but one of the most advanced countries in the world. Costa Rica, ranking 47 in TI's index and having an average GDP PPP per capita of $13,000. If we analyze the 30 happiest countries down to no. 30 – Singapore (TI – 7) – we find as a rule that the most ethical countries are also the happiest – 22 out of the 26 most ethical countries - are part of the 30 happiest countries of the world.

But, in addition to Israel and Costa Rica which are quite ethical, we find in the list of the 30 happiest countries - corrupt countries like Mexico (TI – 103), Panama (TI – 94), Venezuela (TI – 161!), Argentina (TI – 107), Oman (TI – 64) and Brazil (TI – 69). All of them, except Oman, are Latin American countries, and we wonder if it has something to do with the happy mentality of those states, living in a "Carnival". Speaking of mentality, is this the reason that 3 of the most ethical countries - the Far Eastern states of Singapore, Hong Kong and Japan, rank rather low in the happiness index: no. 30, 64 and 43 respectively? Or maybe there are other reasons as well?

In this index we notice, as in most of the other indices, that the least happy countries are also the most corrupt: Togo, Central African Republic, Burundi, Tanzania, Guinea, Syria, Madagascar, Afghanistan, Yemen, Chad, Cambodia, Sri Lanka, Niger, Nepal, Liberia, Mali., but we find also among the least happy countries states that are ethical like Botswana (TI – 31) or quite unethical as Rwanda (TI – 55), Bulgaria and Senegal (TI – 69), Georgia (TI – 50). So, in most of the cases ethics and a good conscience bring also happiness and wealth, while corruption brings misery and poverty, or as Marcel Pagnol's Topaze taught his young students: L'argent ne fait pas le bonheur – Money doesn't bring happiness. But, because of your state of mind, you can reach happiness without being rich, as we see in the Buddhist Bhutan and the happy Latin American countries, and you can be quite unhappy even if you live in a rich country as Japan. In those cases ethics doesn't influence too much happiness, but as a rule - ethics causes also happiness.

It is not a sheer coincidence that the poorest countries and most corrupt Latin American countries rank very high in the happiness index. In the list of the 100 most unhappy states we find only four Latin American countries: Haiti (80% poverty), Dominican Republic (34%), Honduras (65%) and Nicaragua (46%) – one would tend to conclude that with such high rates of poverty you cannot be happy regardless of your state of mind. But if we examine the 55 happiest countries we find there most of the very poor, unequal and unethical Latin American countries – Peru (31%), Paraguay (35%), Bolivia (51%), El Salvador (36%), Ecuador (29%), Guatemala (54%), Suriname (70%, how can you be happy with such a huge level of poverty, squeezed in the happiness rank of 40 between the rich South Korea and Czech Republic?), Colombia (32%), Argentina (30%), Brazil (I can't understand how it is only 21%, but it is still perceived as one of the countries with the highest number of poor people), Venezuela (32%) and Mexico (48%).

In the same bracket of about $7,000 GDP PPP per capita we find Guatemala (TI – 115, poverty – 54%), El Salvador (TI – 80, poverty – 36%) and Bhutan (TI – 30, poverty – 23%) that are ranking among the 55 happiest countries in the world, while Swaziland (TI – 69, poverty – 69%) ranks 100, Morocco (TI – 80, poverty – 15%) ranks 99, Armenia (TI – 94, poverty – 34%) ranks 128 and Georgia (TI – 50, poverty – 10%) ranks 134, in the list of the most unhappy countries of the world. So, is it a question of mentality or of ethics after all, can we find a clear correlation?

We found in this book that at the extremes – the happiest countries are also the most ethical and the richest, while the most unhappy countries are also the most corrupt and the poorest. But between the extremes we find cases that are not as clearcut as in the extremes. It is worthwhile to mention that China ranks 93 in the happiness index compared to 111 for India, as the poverty overcomes probably the mentality, and the theocratic state of Iran ranks 115 even below the much poorer India, as religion doesn't make the Iranians so happy after all, and I will not consider what is promised to all the Shahids when they reach paradise after killing the foes... Poverty affects very much happiness – Egypt (130), Liberia (133), Congo Brazaville (129) and Sudan (124) - most of the 40 least happy countries are very poor African states, while most of the European and Anglo-Saxon states are very happy, except Bulgaria (144), Hungary and the former Yugoslavian states, maybe because they still live in the trauma of communism or war.

We refer to Bhutan in the analysis of World Happiness, but many people should ask themselves what do they prefer – to live in a country like Bhutan, one of the happiest countries in the world, ranked by TI as no. 30 in the corruption perception index (close to France – 26), with a GDP per capita of only $7,000 (but with a GDP growth rate of 6%), and an Internet penetration rate of only 30%, or to live in a modern country like South Korea, one of the richest countries in the world, with a GDP PPP per capita of $35K, with an Internet penetration rate of 85%, ranked 41 in the world happiness report and 43 in TI's ethical report? What is better, a high degree of happiness or a high degree of development? Can we combine both of them? We saw above that the answer is absolutely – Yes! The 11 most ethical countries in the world are also the most modern and the happiest as well, especially the Scandinavian countries who win all the trophies. Like the Swedish Abba song "the winner takes it all", Sweden, Norway, Denmark and Finland – the Scandinavian countries are the best in almost all parameters: they are not only the most ethical, happiest, richest, most democratic, with the highest equality in income and gender, but they are also the most modern, most competitive and with the highest efficiency records.

And we'll finish this chapter on happiness with some proverbs I liked most on this subject:

“Happiness is when what you think, what you say, and what you do are in harmony.”

— Mahatma Gandhi

“For every minute you are angry you lose sixty seconds of happiness.”

— Ralph Waldo Emerson

“Love is that condition in which the happiness of another person is essential to your own.”

— Robert A. Heinlein, Stranger in a Strange Land

“Folks are usually about as happy as they make their minds up to be.”

— Abraham Lincoln

“Happiness in intelligent people is the rarest thing I know.”

— Ernest Hemingway, The Garden of Eden

“They say a person needs just three things to be truly happy in this world: someone to love, something to do, and something to hope for.”

Reading in Italian – Piccolo mondo antico by Antonio Fogazzaro, La coscienza di Zeno by Italo Svevo, Cronache della galassia by Isaac Asimov, Menzogna e sortilegio by Elsa Morante, Se non ora, quando? by Primo Levi, Kaputt by Curzio Malaparte, L'isola del giorno prima by Umberto Eco, Famous Italian Opera Arias by Da Ponte, Boito, Giacosa, Illica, Piave... Read recently – Il conformista, La vita interiore by Alberto Moravia, I promessi sposi by Alessandro Manzoni, La storia by Elsa Morante.

The first book read in Italian in 1965 was Sei personaggi in cerca d'autore by Luigi Pirandello. La Forza del Destino, The Power of Fate, by Verdi, my favorite composer, could be the leitmotif of my affinities with Italy. My father, Albert, was born in Izmir, Smyrna, which was a cosmopolitan city, with most of its population non-Turkish: Greeks, Armenians and Jews. The Turks had welcomed warmly the Sephardic Jews and Marranos after 1492, and the Jews have kept their Spanish language and customs, not assimilating with the Turks. In 1922, my father, Albert aged 16, left Smyrna for Milano, where a large part of his family resided. For six months he sold in the streets Corriere della Sera, on one night singing with his Fascist friends:

Giovinezza, giovinezza
primavera di bellezza, nel fascismo è la salvezza della nostra libertà.

Youth, youth
Spring of beauty,
In fascism, salvation
Of our freedom.

Freedom and fascism don't go so well together, as we know, except in the song. And, on the other night Albert joined his Communist friends (at the age of 16 all looked similar), singing:

First verse:
Avanti o popolo, alla riscossa,
Bandiera rossa, Bandiera rossa.
Avanti o popolo, alla riscossa,
Bandiera rossa trionferà.
Refrain:
Bandiera rossa la trionferà
Bandiera rossa la trionferà
Bandiera rossa la trionferà
Evviva il comunismo e la libertà.

Literal Translation:
Forward people, to the rescue,
the Red Flag, the Red Flag.
Forward people, to the rescue,
the Red Flag will triumph.

The Red Flag will triumph,
the Red Flag will triumph,
the Red Flag will triumph,
Long live communism and freedom.

Freedom and communism don't go so well together, as we know, except in the song. Why fascists, communists, and neoliberals like Milton Friedman (in his famous book: Capitalism and Freedom), preach so much about freedom, while in practice they do exactly the opposite? (more on neoliberal totalitarian approach - read Naomi Klein's The Shock Doctrine). Anyhow, at the age of 16 Albert didn't mind so much about freedom, which did not exist in the Ottoman Empire either. Unfortunately or fortunately, after six months, the police arrested him and he was told: Ritorna a tu paese straniero... Go back to your country, stranger! He left for Cairo, where he met my mother Pauline, they married, and that is how I was born, in another cosmopolitan city - Cairo, where there were hundreds of thousands of Europeans – Italians, Greeks, Armenians, Jews, English and French. So, Jacques and Albert, could sympathize with the old gypsy in the French song of Dalida, another Egyptian/Italian/French: Je viens d'un pays qui n'existe plus, I come from a country that doesn't exist anymore, as Turkey is now 99% Moslem, and Egypt doesn't have foreigners anymore. La Forza del Destino, Albert could have been killed in Smyrna if he would have stayed there during the war between Greece and Turkey in 1922, or in Milano, staying there through World War II, like all his uncles who died in the Holocaust. Dozens of my relatives died in the Holocaust, mostly Italians, but also Greeks from Rhodes and other places.

We encounter in our life set-backs or even tragedies and we think that it is the end of the world, how unlucky we are. That is what my father probably thought when he was deported from "paradise – Italy". He wanted so much to be an European, being born in a European city Smyrna with a majority of Europeans, educated in English at the Scots Mission School, speaking at home French and Ladino – two European languages, longing for Spain the lost fatherland. If he could have stayed in the modern Milano in Italy it would have been the peak of his wishes, but he was expelled from paradise, and had to compromise in living in another Middle Eastern country. But God or fate were smiling to him, as this move changed his life, he was saved from a certain death by the German Nazis and their collaborators the Italian Fascists, and when he left the Egyptian "purgatorium" in 1953 it was almost at the last moment, emigrating at last to the country of his dreams, being such a fervent Zionist – Israel. So, I thank God/chance for this sequence of events as I had the luck to be born to the sweetest woman on earth – Pauline my mother, and the luck to live in Israel, which is my fatherland and which I prefer to all the other countries in the world.

So, I was born in Cairo, after my father made the right decisions or had the right intuition or luck, but my father made another cardinal decision in 1953 when he decided to leave Cairo for Israel. All the Jews who remained in Cairo were expelled a few years later. While leaving Egypt, the authorities stamped in our laissez-passer – with no right to return, and I read recently that in a debate at the Egyptian Parliament (nowadays, after the peace agreement) some MPs offered the Jewish born in Egypt the right of return, if and when Israel would collapse, the Palestinian refugees will return to their homeland, and the Jews would be expelled to their native countries – Ruthy to Romania, Jacques to Egypt, and their Israeli born children to "hell" as one of the Palestinian leaders has suggested in an interview in 2015. But, after a long discussion, the Egyptian Parliament has decided that even then the Jews born in Egypt, a few thousands still living as almost all the Jews were expelled in 1956, would not have the right to return...

I enjoyed most Italian opera, and especially Rigoletto by Piave and Verdi, my favorite composer. But, during my military service in Tel Aviv, I couldn't afford to go to the opera, so I borrowed the records of the opera from the library of the US Embassy, near the flat where I lived. They told me that I can keep them indefinitely as no one ever asked for them. I borrowed also books from the British Institute, the Centre Culturel Francais, etc., as I couldn't afford to buy books in foreign languages as well. So, I heard Rigoletto every free moment with the libretto until I knew the opera by heart. After that, I invited my dates to hear Rigoletto in my flat, as I couldn't afford to go to concerts, and women were delighted (not all of them, of course, but just the intellectual) to have a cultural evening hearing opera with my explanations. We'll stop here, Si non e vero e ben trovato... Anyhow, from those evenings I remembered the most famous arias – Questa o quella, Pari siamo, Caro nome, Parmi veder le lagrime, Cortigiani, and of course La donna e mobile. The last aria was especially effective, as my dates tried very hard to convince me that la donna no e mobile, the woman is not fickle. So, here it is, in Italian and English:

Qual piuma al vento,
Muta d'accento

Woman is flighty

Like a feather in the wind,
She changes her voice

E di pensiero.

And her mind.

Sempre un amabile,
Leggiadro viso,
In pianto o in riso,
È menzognero.

Always sweet,
Pretty face,
In tears or in laughter,
She is always lying.

È sempre misero
Chi a lei s'affida,
Chi le confida
Mal cauto il cuore!

Always miserable
Is he who trusts her,
He who confides in her
His unwary heart!

Pur mai non sentesi
Felice appieno
Chi su quel seno
Non liba amore!

Yet one never feels Fully happy
Who on that bosom
Does not drink love!

And from such tragic themes, we come back to my early childhood, when my mother Pauline used to sing me nursery rhymes in Italian: clap your little hands/your father is arriving soon/he'll bring you biscuits/and you (name of the baby) will eat them. I continued the tradition, that possibly started with my grandmother singing the rhymes to my mother after learning them from their Italian neighbours in Cairo, sang it to my children and then to my grandchildren. But I taught my children also whole Arias from Rigoletto, so they were "fluent" in Italian anyhow. Anyhow, when Shirly my daughter travelled with her family to Sicily, she sang the rhymes to her baby and a young mother who sat by her side started talking to her in Italian being sure that she was an Italian (she also looks Italian). She was moved to tears when Shirly told her the story of how she learned the rhymes. After 100 years the rhymes have returned finally to Italy.

Batti, batti le manine

che adesso arriva papà

e (Paula/Jakito/Yossika/Amirush/Shushki/Tomeriko/Doroni/Ofifi/Nogush/Itaiush/Noam-Dudi-Budi/Idodo/Yaeli) li mangerà!

Apologies that the lullabies that I heard in Cairo were not in Arabic, but surfing on the Internet, I found a little bit late at the age of 70 a quite sad Arabic lullaby, Yalla Tnam – Let's go to sleep, sung by the famous Christian Lebanese singer Fairuz. It sounds very nice and it reminded me of the rendition by Season 2 winner of the Israeli version of "The Voice," Lina Makhoul, of a Fairuz song, in Arabic, that thrilled most of the audience as well as the judges of the TV talent show. Well, an Arab singer winning an Israeli talent show, fits quite well an Apartheid country...

I visited Italy several times – on business, tourism and lecturing. I visited and enjoyed Roma, Napoli, Sorrento, Capri, Milano, Firenze, Venezia, Vatican, Stresa and the Lakes, the paintings, sculptures, architecture, churches, cathedrals, scenery, fountains, the people and language. I bought many Italian books and read the best Italian novels and plays. I like Italian films, old and new, I gave lectures in Stresa, I have many Italian friends as we share many things in common. When I flew to Milan in 2001 to participate in an Israeli-EU symposium in Stresa, an Italian friend came to the airport specially to give me the keys to his apartment in Milano, urging me to spend a week there after the symposium. I thought whom of my good friends would do such a gesture? Well, my Greek friend invited me also for Christmas to stay a week with his family, I also enjoyed the hospitality of the Spanish in Coria and elsewhere, the trip to Portugal was the best ever due mainly to the fantastic ambience and excellent guide, so something is quite good with the Southern Europeans, although they don't obtain high scores in Transparency International's ethical ranking, that they are called pejoratively PIGS (Portugal, Italy, Greece, Spain) because of their credit deficiencies, and that the only time that we were robbed was in Rome when a motorcyclist snatched Ruthy's handbag, with all our money, passports and credit cards. Ruthy was dejected, but I insisted that we proceed with our plans as scheduled, going an hour later to the theater seeing Little Shop of Horrors in Italian, and the day after to an organized tour to the beautiful Capri, Napoli and Sorrento. There is another strong point in favor of the so-called PIGS countries – my family comes from those states: Spain (Coria), Portugal (after 1492), Italy (part of my family until the Holocaust), Greece (my grandfather from Larissa), and as much as my ethical aspirations are North European, I should not forget that my roots are from the more corrupt Southern countries and Israel. And as Jesus said in John 8:7 - "Let any one of you who is without sin be the first to throw a stone at her." Don't be too righteous, nobody is perfect...

We have to beware from succumbing to generalizations as society is much more complex than its prejudices. It is true that my friends from southern countries behaved hospitably but so did my French friends inviting me to reside in their homes in Paris, sending me plenty of articles and books that assisted me so much in writing my PhD dissertation, the friendly and generous conduct of the Frenchman Professor de Bettignies and Dutch Professor Van Luijk, assistance from my British, Scandinavian, German, Swiss and Belgian friends. So, was I lucky that I had such good friends, without any relevance to the nationality of my friends? As, ultimately, there are good people, ethical people throughout the world, and I behaved as a true friend towards my friends as well and towards most of the people with whom I was in contact – my subordinates whom I promoted and encouraged and most of them became Vice Presidents or CEOs, the hospitality that I showed to my friends inviting a German friend and his Spanish wife to the Seder with all my family, singing in Ladino/Spanish and Yiddish/German the Haggadah, assisting my students in Israel and abroad and treating them kindly as my own family...

I believe that you have to take life as a package deal – the honey and the sting, good and bad, and even when you think that the situation is desperate (when we were conned by our best Israeli and American – not Italian and Greek – friends, making us lose most of our savings), or when you fall and break your shoulder, you lose your hearing, eyes and orthopedic surgery are unsuccessful, and you get on your savings interests of 0.1 percent, although you planned your pension with a rate of 5% – you should look at the bright side of things, and find a new direction – in business, in ethics, in teaching, as a self-employed businessman, in community working, or writing this book... Actually, many friends boast that they always succeeded in their surgical procedures, their investments, in their jobs, with women, they are very lucky in whatever they do. I have always apprehension about the evil eye/malocchio (everybody knows that I am not superstitious, hamsa hamsa), so I don't boast about my successes, but once when it was too much, I answered that I used 99% of my luck allotment when Ruthy and me fell in love and married, so I don't have any luck left for the other events. But, as a matter of fact, I feel myself very lucky with my family – wife, children and grandchildren. I was quite lucky as well with my career when I achieved more than I have ever planned as an executive, consultant, in academics, and also in achievements that I have not planned as writing more than ten books that were purchased by thousands of the best universities' libraries, teaching and educating thousands of students, lecturing to audiences of hundreds with a great success, writing important articles and essays, and being perceived as one of the most influential ethical persons in Israel.

I may be unlucky in my investments, but still I earned much more money than I ever dreamed of, living in a beautiful house (I don't desire a better one), and I never lacked money for any wishes that I (and Ruthy) had. I was not so successful with my friends, but after I've learned my lessons, I have now excellent friends that wish us well and share our ethical views. I received recently the highest ethical prize in Israel and I invited some friends. Almost all of them came to the ceremony (36, or the Lamed Vav – 36 in Hebrew numerology – Justs, while those who couldn't come had excellent reasons – meeting with the Israeli President, traveling abroad, etc.). Even with health problems – I may have broken my shoulder, but it was the first time, at the age of 69, that I ever broke something. And if I can't hear well and had to resign from my teaching career – I still lectured during ten years from the age of 60 (!) to 70. Many people whom I know are multi millionaires, but they are very unsuccessful with their wives and children, or have very serious health problems, or don't have true friends. However, some of them are very ethical and lucky in all their endeavors – esteemed professors, successful businessmen, with fantastic families, plenty of friends, and very rich on top of that – while others are ethical crooks causing damages of hundreds of millions to shareholders, making the lives of their employees miserable, and above the law, and still are very rich, with a reasonable family life, successful in business, and appreciated by society as benefactors, even perceived wrongly as being very ethical... You have to be content in your fate and in your life - lucky and unlucky (I live in a terror/war zone, but still I could be born in Syria, Yemen, Sudan, or remained in Egypt, and anyhow after 9/11 in New York/Washington and 13/11 in Paris – who is safe anyhow?), look at the bright side of things, think positive, be ethical with a clean conscience, and be moderate in whatever you do!

Italy has contributed to the world invaluable presents – first of all one of the happiest, most intelligent, hearty, hospitable people in the world, the best paintings and sculptures, some of the best novels, films, and plays, the best songs, operas, and music, one of the most beautiful sceneries in the world, a remarkable history – ancient and modern, a thriving economy, the most melodious language, a religion that in its finest moments was humane and contributed to society so much, a healthy attitude to life looking at the bright side of things... In my worst moments I did not resort to Zola, Beethoven, Shakespeare, Tolstoy or Brecht. I was moved to tears when hearing the aria of Rigoletto: Cortigiani, vil razza dannata,/per qual prezzo vendeste il mio benne?/A voi nulla per l'oro sconviene! – Courtiers, you damned vile race,/ for how much did you sell what is mine?/There is much you wouldn't do for gold! All the lackeys of the big bosses and tycoons that would sell their mother for a few bucks did not hesitate to take from their friend what I owned, as Gordon Gekko says in "Wall Street" – If you need a friend get a dog! But, all the time I had hope that things would sort out, and here again I was moved to tears from another aria - Vincerò (Nessun Dorma) from Puccini's Turandot (also seen at the Sydney Opera House). Yes, I'll win in spite of all the hardships, in spite of all the mighty evil-minded that I fought, at dawn I'll win, as the darkest hours are just before dawn, night will vanish, "stars" will fade and indeed many of them faded, and in my terminology I've won ultimately. The best opera singers have sung this aria, one of the best is Pavarotti, but also great are the three tenors: Pavarotti, Carreras and Domingo, Aretha Franklin, Beniamino Gigli, Franco Corelli, and many others.

Dilegua, o notte!
Tramontate, stelle!
Tramontate, stelle!
All'alba vincerò!
Vincerò! Vincerò!

Vanish, o night!
Fade, you stars!
Fade, you stars!
At dawn, I will win!
I will win! I will win!

My secret weapon was the love that we shared Ruthy and me, that only got stronger when the hardships continued. Most of my "dear" (they cost me a lot) friends had a ruined family life, and I was moved by Domenico Modugno's song Dio, come ti amo, which depicted my love to Ruthy:

Dio, come ti amo

Nel cielo passano le nuvole
 Che vanno verso il mare
 Sembrano fazzoletti bianchi
 Che salutano il nostro amore

Dio, come ti amo
 Non è possibile
 Avere tra le braccia tanta felicità
 Baciare le tue labbra che odorano di vento
 Noi due innamorati, come nessuno al mondo

Dio, come ti amo
 Mi vien da piangere
 In tutta la mia vita, non ho provato mai

Un bene così caro, un bene così vero
 Chi può fermare il fiume che corre verso il mare?
 Le rondini nel cielo, che vanno verso il sole?
 Chi può cambiare l'amore, l'amore mio per te?

Dio, come ti amo

My God, I love you so much

In the sky the clouds pass by They're going towards the sea
 Looking like white handkerchiefs
 That greet our love

My God, I love you so much
 It's not possible
 To have so much happiness between your arms
 Kissing your lips that smell like the wind
 We're two lovers, like nobody in the world

My God, I love you so much
 I feel like crying
 In my whole life, I've never felt

Such a valuable happiness, such a true happiness
 Who can stop the river that flows towards the sea?
 The swallows in the sky that go towards the sun?
 Who can change my love, my love for you?

My God, I love you so much

One of the first "modern" writers (as opposed to ancient Greeks and Romans) and surely one of the best was undoubtedly Dante Alighieri (1265-1321). His Divine Comedy is considered the greatest literary work composed in the Italian language and a masterpiece of world literature. There are very few books that leave you out of breath when you read them and make you think that life with all its hardships is worthwhile to live if you read such books – Shakespeare, Pagnol, Zola, Homer, the Bible, Sobol, Agnon, Balzac, Brecht, Goethe, Moliere, Racine, and Dante... I read the Divine Comedy as you read a detective story wondering every moment what will be next. It comprises everything, it is modern as the most modern literature, yet it is so beautiful, a masterpiece. No wonder that I found in Dante analogies that fit into my business ethics books. We are educated since our childhood that it is prohibited to tell on your friends. The pejorative names for the telltales or tattletales are countless – whistle-blowers, stool pigeons, squealers, etc. Dante writes in the last verses of the Inferno, how the traitors and informers are punished in the lowest place of hell. Dante and Virgil enter Judecca, the lowest zone of Cocytus, where the souls of the traitors who betrayed their legitimate superiors and benefactors are totally immersed in the frozen waste. At the central and lowest point lies Satan, who devours Judas, Brutus and Cassius in his three mouths:

<<Quell'anima la` su` c'ha maggior pena>>, disse 'l maestro, <<e` Giuda Scariotto, che 'l capo ha dentro e fuor le gambe mena.

De li altri due c'hanno il capo di sotto, quel che pende dal nero ceffo e` Bruto:
 vedi come si storce, e non fa motto!;

e l'altro e` Cassio che par si` membruto.

“That soul there, which has the worst punishment,
Is Judas Iscariot, my master said,
With his head inside, and kicking his legs.
Of the two others, who hang upside-down,
The one who hangs from the black face is Brutus;
See how he twists and says not a word;
And the other is Cassius, whose body looks so heavy.”
(Dante, The Divine Comedy, Inferno XXXIV, 61-67, p.192-3)

It is incredible that out of all the criminals - those who have committed atrocious murders, genocides, rapes - the ones who receive the worst punishment are the traitors. It is not Pontius Pilate, who gave the order to crucify Jesus, it is not Julius Caesar who was an unscrupulous tyrant, it would not be Hitler if Dante would have lived in our times, but it would rather be Rommel, who ‘betrayed’ his fuhrer in order to save Germany. We enter here into a very problematic domain of the fidelity toward a company where we are employed, as the majority of the whistle-blowers would probably be employees of the companies concerned. Would the denunciations be anonymous like on the Internet? How could we distribute the rewards? And who will distribute them – the activist associations or another organization? Is it ethical to encourage the whistle-blowers? Would it be possible to employ this vehicle to get revenge from companies or executives who have not committed any fraud? How could we verify if the information is correct and make sure that the denunciations do not resemble precedent cases from totalitarian regimes?

The conviction that to denounce is an atrocious crime is inculcated in all peoples and religions. The Jews ostracized in the Diaspora the ‘mousser’, or the squealer, the person who denounced his brethren to the authorities, even if that brother was a thief or murderer. Everybody knows the awful fate of the squealers who denounce Mafia chiefs to the police. But the American and Italian police would have never succeeded in arresting Mafia leaders without the aid of the squealers of the Cosa Nostra. Is it moral to denounce a crime committed by the Mafia to the police, in spite of the law of Omerta, which advocates a complete silence? Is it ethical to denounce an immoral act committed toward a customer or shareholder of a company by one of the company’s employees? If he does not denounce his chiefs, the employee knows that truth will never be disclosed, and the company will continue to sell airplanes with damaged components, endangering the lives of the pilots, as was the case in many recent cases. Is the employee a squealer? If he believes in God and the Inferno, will he find himself in hell after his death in the vicinity of Judas and Brutus? If he is an agnostic, can he risk his career, the well-being of his family, respect of his colleagues, for saving the life of a pilot he doesn't know or avoid losses of a minority shareholder?

The employee will never denounce his superiors if society continues to treat him as a whistle-blower (pejorative connotation in the business world), a tattletale or sneak (pejorative connotation at school), an informer (pejorative connotation from the German Occupation), a stool pigeon (pejorative connotation in the Soviet Union), or a squealer (pejorative connotation from the criminal world). Maybe he would have the courage to denounce immoral acts, if he would be treated as a 'discloser', a neutral term meaning somebody discloses a fact, without a pejorative connotation. In this book the term whistle-blower is used, because otherwise the meaning would not be understood, but the meaning that I propose is that of a discloser, and if it does not exist in the dictionary it is high time that it should be invented. This discloser will not be ostracized but will be appreciated by the society in which he lives, as he will assist it to be cleaner and just. Many of the readers of this book will think of McCarthy who meant exactly the same thing when he urged intellectuals to denounce the 'communists' in order to have a cleaner society with no fear of the rising communism that endangered the existence of the free world. In most cases, nobody forced the people to denounce friends, but those who didn't cooperate didn't get jobs and were ostracized.

What is therefore the difference between the proposals of this book and McCarthyism? McCarthy represented the authorities, he acted against the weak. Here is a completely opposite situation where the weak become organized against the powerful. It could be that in the future minority shareholders could become the strongest party, and activist associations would become too powerful. We have seen such inversions in the past in the Soviet Union, where the wronged proletariat became much worse and committed more atrocious crimes than the Tsarist regime that oppressed them. I believe in democracy and checks and balances, and hope that the majority and minority shareholders will have a similar power without any one of them subjugating the other, exactly like the minorities are not subjugated nowadays in the United States like they were in the past, yet they do not subjugate the majority as well. But we are aware that this argument will be raised, similarly to what the Jews in Russia called the 'wronged Kozak', meaning the Kozaks who organized pogroms against the Jews and pretended to be wronged by the persecuted Jews. Those who condemn Brutus, the rebel, the traitor, the squealer, to the pit of hell would have condemned as well the French Revolution which was against the legitimate power of the Bourbons, the American revolution which was against the legitimate power of the British, or the terrorists attacks of the Haganah, Etsel or Lehi in Palestine which were against the legitimate power of the British mandate. Those who condemn the whistle-blowers are in favor of the multitude of the immoral acts that are performed in companies against their stakeholders. The companies should be transparent ethically, without fearing anything from squealers, because when you have a clear conscience you do not need to be afraid to be discovered. Crime likes darkness, and the companies that do not conduct themselves ethically are looking for anonymity. We find it in business as we find it in Brecht's Threepenny Opera.

And finally, getting back to Dante, this time the last verses of Paradiso, here again we can find consolation to our sorrows, to our sicknesses, even at our age to approaching death by those divine words:

tal era io a quella vista nova:
veder voleva come si convenne l'imago al cerchio e come vi s'indova;

So was I faced with this new vision:
I wanted to see how the image could fit the circle
And how it could be that that was where it was;

ma non eran da cio` le proprie penne:
se non che la mia mente fu percossa da un fulgore in che sua voglia venne.

But that was not a flight for my wings:
Except that my mind was struck by a flash
In which what it desire came to it.

A l'alta fantasia qui manco` possa; At this point high imagination failed; ma gia` volgeva il mio disio e 'l velle, But already my desire and my will sì come rota ch'igualmente e` mossa, Were being turned like a wheel all at one speed, l'amor che move il sole e l'altre stelle. By the love which moves the sun and the other stars.

There are a variety of regional languages spoken to varying degrees in Italy, most of which belong to various branches of the Romance languages and are hence descendants of Vulgar Latin. The official and most widely spoken language is Italian, a descendant of Tuscan. There are several minority languages that belong to other Indo-European branches, such as Cimbrian (Germanic), Arbëresh (Albanian), the Slavomolisano dialect of Serbo-Croatian (Slavic), and Griko (Hellenic). Other non-indigenous languages are spoken widely in Italy due to immigration – Albanian, Romanian, Romani and Arabic. Law number 482 of 15 December 1999, recognises the following minority languages: Albanian, Catalan, German, Greek, Slovene, Croatian, French, Franco-Provençal, Friulian, Ladin, Occitan, Sardinian. The law also makes a distinction between those who are considered minority groups (Albanians, Catalans, Germanic peoples indigenous to Italy, Greeks, Slovenes and Croats) and those who are not (all the other citizens of Italy).¹

Recognition by the regions:

- Aosta Valley: French is co-official (enjoying the same dignity and standing of Italian) in the whole region. German is unofficial but recognised in the Lys Valley (Lystal).
- Campania: Neapolitan is "promoted", but not recognised, by the region.
- Friuli-Venezia Giulia: Friulian, Slovene are promoted, but not recognised, by the region.
- Piedmont: Piedmontese is unofficial but recognised as the regional language. The region "promotes", without recognising, the Occitan, Franco-Provençal and Walser languages.
- Sardinia: Sardinian, Sassarese and Gallurese are unofficial but recognised and promoted "enjoying the same dignity and standing of Italian" in their respective territories, as well as Catalan in the city of Alghero and Tabarchino in the islands of Sulcis.
- Trentino-Alto Adige/Südtirol: German is co-official (enjoying the same dignity and standing of Italian) in the province of South Tyrol. Ladin, Cimbrian and Mòcheno are unofficial but recognised in their respective territories.
- Veneto: Venetian is unofficial but recognised.

We could of course bring texts in most of those languages, and we have indeed done it with extracts and links in this book. I have in my library plays by Goldoni in Veneto, songs and poems in Neapolitan, Sardinian, texts in Ladin, Catalan, Franco-Provençal, Occitan and Slovene. But I have chosen to bring poems by Pier Paolo Pasolini in Friulian with an Italian translation: La Nuova Gioventù, Poesie Friulane 1941-1974. Pier Paolo Pasolini; 5 March 1922 – 2 November 1975, was an Italian film director, poet, writer and intellectual. Pasolini distinguished himself as a poet, journalist, philosopher, novelist, playwright, filmmaker, newspaper and magazine columnist, actor, painter and political figure. He demonstrated a unique and extraordinary cultural versatility, becoming a highly controversial figure in the process. While his work remains controversial to this day, in the years since his death Pasolini has come to be valued by many as a visionary thinker and a major figure in Italian literature and art.

Friulian or Friulan furlan or affectionately marilenghe in Friulian, friulano in Italian, Furlanisch in German, furlanščina in Slovene; also Friulian, is a Romance language belonging to the Rhaeto-Romance family, spoken in the Friuli region of northeastern Italy. Friulian has around 300,000 speakers, the vast majority of whom also speak Italian. It is sometimes called Eastern Ladin, since it shares the same roots as Ladin, although over the centuries it has diverged under the influence of surrounding languages, including German, Italian, Venetian, and Slovene. Documents in Friulian are attested from the 11th century, and poetry and literature dating as far back as 1300. By the 20th century, there was a revival of interest in the language, which has continued to this day. Pasolini has done much for the revival of the language.

A ROSARIO. Nella terra la carne è greve, nel cielo si fa di luce. Non abbassare gli occhi, povero giovane, se nel grembo l'ombra pesa. Ridi tu, giovane leggero, sentendo nel tuo corpo la terra calda e scura e il fresco, chiaro cielo. In mezzo alla povera chiesa è pieno di peccato il tuo buio, ma nella tua luce leggera ride il destino di un puro. (da Suite furlana)

DANZA DI NARCISO. Io sono nero di amore, né fanciullo né usignolo, tutto intero come un fiore, desidero senza desiderio. Mi sono alzato tra le viole, mentre albeggiava, cantando un canto dimenticato nella notte uguale. Mi sono detto: «Narciso!», e uno spirito col mio viso oscurava l'erba al chiarore dei suoi ricci. CANZONE. Lasciato nella memoria a logorarti, e nella lontananza a splendere, io mi ricordo di te, senza pena, senza speranza. (Si fa sempre più silenzioso e alto il mare degli anni; e i tuoi prati pieni di tempo ormai arso, i tuoi poveri venchi rossi di un morto riposo, sono sull'orlo di quel mare: perduti e non piantati). Lasciati là sconosciuti, in campi stranieri dopo che tanto intorno ad essi ho spasimato di amore per capirli, per capire il povero, lucente e duro loro essere, si sono chiusi con te i tuoi uomini sotto un cielo annuvolato. My favorite Italian writer is Alberto Moravia and my favorite Italian book – Il Conformista, The Conformist. The film based on the novel was part of my business ethics course, as conformism is a prime cause for unethical conduct (see also Rhinoceros by Ionesco which I also taught). Alberto Moravia; November 28, 1907 – September 26, 1990), born Alberto Pincherle, was an Italian novelist and journalist. His novels explored matters of modern sexuality, social alienation, and existentialism. Moravia is best known for his debut novel Gli indifferenti (published in 1929), and for the anti-fascist novel Il Conformista (The Conformist), the basis for the film The Conformist (1970) by Bernardo Bertolucci. It is interesting to learn that I figured the commonalities between the two books by Moravia and Ionesco, in the same way that according to the political philosopher Takis Fotopoulos, The Conformist (as well as Rhinoceros by Ionesco) is "a beautiful portrait of this psychological need to conform and be 'normal' at the social level, in general, and the political level, in particular." I only add to this statement Babbitt by Lewis.

Other novels of his translated to the cinema are Agostino, filmed with the same title by Mauro Bolognini in 1962; Il Disprezzo (A Ghost at Noon or Contempt), filmed by Jean-Luc Godard as Le Mépris (Contempt) (1963); La Noia (Boredom), filmed with that title by Damiano Damiani in 1963 and released in the US as The Empty Canvas in 1964; and La Ciociara, filmed by Vittorio de Sica as Two Women (1960). Cedric Kahn's L'Ennui (1998) is another version of La Noia. Moravia was an atheist. Alberto Pincherle (the pen-name "Moravia" was the surname of his paternal grandmother) was born in Via Sgambati in Rome, Italy, to a wealthy middle-class family. His Jewish Venetian father, Carlo, was an architect and a painter. His Catholic Anconitan mother, Teresa Iginia de Marsanich, was of Dalmatian origin. The family he was born in had interesting twists and a complex cultural and political climate. On one hand the brothers Carlo and Nello Rosselli, founders of the anti-fascist resistance movement Giustizia e Libertà, murdered in France by Benito Mussolini's order in 1937, his cousins on father side, and, on the other hand, his uncle on mother side, Augusto De Marsanich, who was an undersecretary in the National Fascist Party cabinet. I figured often what could happen if a fascist dictatorship was to be instituted in Israel, whom of my friends would comply and even denounce me? I discussed it with my friend the well-known playwright Joshua Sobol and suggested that he will be arrested in the first round and I would be arrested in the second round, but none of us would cooperate.

Moravia once remarked that the most important facts of his life had been his illness, a tubercular infection of the bones that confined him to a bed for five years, and Fascism, because they both caused him to suffer and do things he otherwise would not have done. "It is what we are forced to do that forms our character, not what we do of our own free will." His writing was marked by its factual, cold, precise style, often depicting the malaise of the bourgeoisie, and was rooted in the tradition of nineteenth-century narrative, underpinned by high social and cultural awareness. In his world, where inherited social, religious and moral beliefs are no longer acceptable, he considered sex and money the only basic criteria for judging social and human reality. Moravia believed that writers must, if they were to be successful in representing reality, "assume a moral position, a clearly conceived political, social, and philosophical attitude" but also that, ultimately, – "A writer survives in spite of his beliefs." I fully adhere to the first part of this sentence and I have assumed a moral position in all my academic and personal writings and activities – novel, play, academic books, articles, courses and lectures. Between 1959 and 1962 Moravia was President of the worldwide association of writers, PEN International.

The Conformist (Il conformista) is a novel by Alberto Moravia published in 1951, which details the life and desire for normalcy of a government official during Italy's fascist period. It is also known for the 1970 film adaptation by Bernardo Bertolucci. Marcello, is a state employee of the Fascist government. A colleague of Marcello's named Orlando asks Marcello to participate in a mission to Paris. A former professor of Marcello's, named Quadri, is now an anti-fascist agitator, and the Italian government would like to infiltrate his organization. Marcello is also due to be married shortly to a woman named Giulia, and offers to take his honeymoon in Paris so that his presence there would not be suspicious to Quadri. Orlando tells Marcello that the new plan is to kill Quadri. Marcello needs simply to confirm Quadri's identity to Orlando to fulfill his duties. Lina, Quadri's companion, tells Marcello that she and Quadri are aware that he is a spy there in service of the Italian government. Marcello does confirm Quadri's identity to Orlando, and on a trip to Savoy, Quadri, as well as Lina, are killed by Orlando and his men, as planned.

The epilogue briefly explores Marcello's conflicted responses to his role in the murders of Quadri and Lina, including his attempts to rationalize away his culpability. The epilogue takes place years later, on the night that Mussolini falls from power. Giulia reveals that she has long suspected that Marcello was involved in the murders, but her sorrow is more for their own safety than for Marcello's victims or his duplicity. Marcello spends the entire novel in a search for what he perceives to be a normal life - normal activities, a normal appearance, normal emotions, and so on. However, he confuses normality with conformity, and in his quest to conform, subjugates his already-repressed emotions. When the natural course of his life presents him with ethical dilemmas - the assignment to betray Professor Quadri, his attraction to women other than his wife - he is ill-prepared to deal with them. I have encountered in my life hundreds of ethical dilemmas and I think that in all of them I behaved ethically and according to my conscience.

Marcello believes after the fall of the Fascist regime that "Non mi faranno nulla... non ci sono prove... e poi non ho fatto che eseguire gli ordini." Esito un momento, per una specie di pudore mischiato di ripugnanza per il luogo comune; quindi finì con sforzo: "Non ho fatto che il mio dovere, come un soldato." Giulia si attaccò subito a questa frase logora che, a suo tempo, non era bastata a tranquillizzare neppure l'agente Orlando. "Sì, anch'io l'ho pensato", disse levando il capo, afferrandogli la mano e baciandola freneticamente, "mi sono sempre detta: Marcello in fondo non è che un soldato... anche i soldati ammazzano perché sono comandati... lui non ha colpa se gli fanno fare certe cose... ma non credi che ti verranno a prendere?... Sono sicura che quelli che ti davano gli ordini, scapperanno... e che tu invece che non c'entri e non hai fatto che il tuo dovere ci andrai di mezzo..." Ella voltò la mano dopo averla baciata sul dorso e prese a baciarla, sempre con la stessa furia, sulla palma. "Calmati," disse Marcello carezzandola, "per adesso hanno altro da fare che cercare me." "Ma la gente è così cattiva... basta uno che ti voglia male... ti denunceranno... e poi è sempre così: i grossi, quelli che comandano e hanno fatto i milioni, si salvano; e i piccoli come te che hanno fatto il loro dovere e non hanno un soldo da parte, ci vanno di mezzo... ah, Marcello, ho tanta paura." "Non aver paura, tutto si aggiusterà."

I tried to find an English translation to the book The Conformist but could not find one. So, I decided to translate it myself, although it is the first time that I try to do so. After all, why not? I have already written books, dissertations, courses, essays, and articles in English, Hebrew and French, articles in Spanish and Ladino as on the discovery of Coria's synagogue, as well as translations from all those languages, compositions and translation from German into Hebrew as of the article on Zvi Aviel, I have written a speech to my mother-in-law in Rumanian, sung in all those languages as also in Portuguese, Russian, Polish, Italian, Yiddish..., letters in 21 languages, quoted proverbs in Chinese and Turkish, I even wrote a love poem to Ruthy in Arabic, why not translate Moravia who is very easy to understand from Italian into English? So,

Marcello believes after the fall of the Fascist regime that "They won't do nothing to me... there are no proofs... and besides I have only executed the orders." He hesitated for a moment, because of a kind of modesty mixed with reluctance for the common place; after that he ended with an effort: "I have only done my duty, like a soldier." Giulia suddenly attacked this used sentence that, at that time, didn't suffice to appease even the agent Orlando. "Yes, I have also thought that", she said raising her head, grabbing his hand and kissing it with frenzy, "I have always said to myself: Marcello ultimately is only a soldier... also the soldiers kill because they are ordered to... he is not to blame if he is forced to do certain things... but you don't think that they will come to fetch you?... I am sure that those who gave you the orders will escape... and that you on the other hand who was not involved and have only done your duty you'll be entangled..." She turned the hand after kissing it on its back and continued to kiss it, always with the same furor, on the palm. "Calm down," said Marcello caressing her, "presently they have other things to do than look for me." "But people are so bad... it is enough that just one would want to harm you... he will denounce you... and it is always the same: the big ones, those who command and have earned millions, save themselves; and the small ones like you that have done their duty and don't have money at all, are entangled... ah, Marcello, I am so afraid." "Don't be afraid, all will work out." It was not difficult after all, although translations have no added value!

As a final remark – the worse crimes were committed by conformists who obeyed orders, in Nazi Germany (we all remember Eichmann), during the Inquisition in Spain and Portugal, etc.

The first book read in Spanish in 1964 was: Don Quijote de la Mancha by Miguel de Cervantes. I read the book twice in Spanish and prior to then also in Hebrew, when I was a teenager. Just for curiosity I looked at a famous book's website on 500 Great Books for Teens and I saw there books as Life of Pi by Yann Martel, Homecoming by Cynthia Voigt, The Da Vinci Code by Dan Brown, but I didn't find my favorite authors when I was a teenager – Cervantes, Hugo, Zola, Shakespeare (except Romeo and Juliet paired with West Side Story...), not even less "difficult" books by Charles Dickens, Mark Twain, Jules Verne, Alexandre Dumas. So, at least my book will honor the immortal Cervantes (and other great authors throughout the book) with one of the most brilliant extract on morals and virtue – the dialogue between Sancho Panza and Don Quijote. And this reminds me of a funny story – one of my book was edited about ten times, whatever one editor did the other undid until the final edition was much inferior than the original one, but one of the editor excelled, when she told me that the name of Sancho Panza is Sancho Poncho. Well, she found to whom to say that, I thought, and I answered her that Sancho's name was indeed Panza, but she complained that I am not cooperative, I argued on every thing, and anyhow it was her responsibility as an editor to make corrections. After a lengthy discussion I had to fax a photocopy of the Spanish original, which of course I have at home in order to convince her that I was right. But, I think that she still maintains (e pur si muove) that Cervantes was mistaken, as Poncho is so Spanish... (actually, Indian from South America), while the truth is that Sancho was called Panza (belly in Spanish) because he was fat... Long live ignorance!

As psychology is at the basis of ethical conduct in business, we cannot understand the conduct of the businessmen without analyzing in depth their character and motives. But is it practical to base the ethical principles on philosophical, religious or literary bases? Do we not incur the risk to be treated as Don Quixote, who was completely subjugated by his ideals? Can we be practical, succeed in business and retain however the ideological and literary bases? Would the environment of the businessmen treat us with respect, commiseration, alienation or envy? This is the basic dilemma of many businessmen who try to reconcile the ideal and the reality without becoming a Don Quixote.

“Cervantes condemns the books of chivalry, as embodied in his character Don Quixote, as both fantastical and dangerous. The chivalric hero may seduce people into believing that the improbable can be achieved with ease. Cervantes’ character, Don Quixote, shows that this is not the case. Here is a hero possessed of fine qualities of both character and intellect who sallies forth in the name of justice and human betterment. Nonetheless, while being inspired by high ideals, his efforts are futile because he pays little or no attention to the means necessary for achieving these ends, and he fails to gain requisite knowledge of the circumstance and conditions necessary to properly understand human actions. Cervantes seems to be saying that when idealistic theory is divorced from practice, however noble the theory and good the intentions, requisite skill, judgment, and discretion will be lacking and the human good will not be advanced. (Business Ethics Quarterly, January 1998, Klein, Don Quixote and the Problem of Idealism and Realism in Business Ethics, p. 44)

“So far our Don Quixote scenario could provide a cautionary tale for business ethics. Some businesspeople with a good deal of practical experience have looked askance at the sallies of philosophical bookish knights armed with their (e.g. deontological and/or utilitarian) moral theories which they learned ‘living in the books’. They might argue that there is something comic in some philosophers’ attempts to solve the morally complex problems of business by applying moral theories to overly simplified ‘case studies’. (Business Ethics Quarterly, January 1998, Klein, Don Quixote and the Problem of Idealism and Realism in Business Ethics, p. 45)

The environment of the ethical businessmen or people in general can treat them as courageous, crazy or impertinent, as is maintained by Sancho Panza or as virtuous but calumniated as maintained by Don Quixote:

“En lo que toca – prosiguió Sancho – a la valentia, cortesía, hazanías y asunto de vuestra merced, hay diferentes opiniones: unos dicen: ‘Loco, pero gracioso’; otros, ‘Valiente, pero desgraciado’; otros, ‘Cortes, pero impertinente’; y por aquí van discurrendo en tantas cosas, que ni a vuestras merced ni a mi nos dejan hueso sano.

Mira, Sancho – dijo don Quijote – donde quiera que esta la virtud en eminente grado, es perseguida. Pocos o ninguno de los famosos varones que pasaron dejó de ser calumniado de la malicia.” (Cervantes, Don Quijote de la Mancha II, p. 43)

“In what pertains, continued Sancho, to courage, courtesy, exploits, and business of your grace, there are diverging opinions: the ones say: ‘Crazy, but gracious’; the others, ‘Courageous, but unhappy’, others, ‘Courteous, but impertinent’ and from there they discuss so many things, that neither to your grace neither to me they leave a whole bone.

- Look there, Sancho – said don Quijote – in the place where virtue exists at a large degree, it is persecuted. A few or none of the respectable and famous men who have existed have escaped from the calumny of malice.”

And Peters and Waterman reinforce the importance of the moral element in our life by affirming: “We desperately need meaning in our lives and will sacrifice a great deal to institutions that will provide meaning for us.” (Peters and Waterman, In Search of Excellence, p. 56) And they continue: “an effective leader must be the master of two ends of the spectrum: ideas at the highest level of abstraction and actions at the most mundane level of details.” (same, p. 287) And thus, like Don Quixote, the leader has to possess a vision: “Attention to ideas – pathfinding and soaring visions – would seem to suggest rare, imposing men writing on stone tablets.” (same, p.287)

"This story can be read on a realistic or a surrealistic level. Some people will say "if it is not true it is a good fairy tale", others will read it with scepticism, wonder or incredulity. I am not an archeologist, an historian or a medium. I am a businessman, with a doctorate in business ethics. I teach courses in various universities, wrote academic books, articles, a website, but also a novel, a play and some poems. Every one according to his inclinations...

On August 10th 1998, I wrote a letter to the mayor of Coria in Spain, notifying him that I intended to visit his town, as it is a tradition that my family name originates probably from the town of Coria. I wrote him that my mother tongue was Ladino, but that I had also studied Spanish. I added that I live in Israel, was born in Egypt, from parents and grandparents originating from Greece and Turkey, and that I had visited Spain many times on business.

On August 20th 1998, the mayor of Coria wrote me: "Greetings to Don Jacobo Cory, and being aware of the interest that he has in our town I am pleased to invite and welcome him, in view of the importance of the enterprise that brings him to visit our country. Jose Maria Alvarez Pereira takes this opportunity to express him his personal respect." The same day, I received an email from Juan Pedro Moreno, the archeologist responsible of the Service of Historic and Cultural Consultancy for the town council of Coria, who wrote me: "The motive of his visit seems to me very interesting and exciting. Mr. Mayor has transmitted to me his intention to visit us. Coria, keeps in its historic memory the name of the Synagogue street, and there are two possible locations. We hope to see him soon in our/his town, he will be well received." On the 24th of August 1998 I wrote him that: "I would like very much to visit with him his town and see the locations of the synagogue and the Jewish quarter. Who knows, it might be that with my DNA I would be able after 500 years to assist him in finding the exact location where my ancestors lived. It is very important for the tourism of his town... He sees that I am already a local patriot and I hope to contribute something to the economy of our town..."

On the 8th of October I visited the old synagogue of Castelo de Vide on the Portuguese side of border. I noticed there how the synagogue was built, and on the 9th of October I traveled with my wife Ruthy to Coria where we were received by Juan Pedro Moreno. Moreno showed me three possible sites of the synagogue but I discarded the first two ones (DNA, intuition or luck?) When we arrived to the third site, Moreno told me that there is here a problem as the old lady who lives there, is unwilling to open for anybody. Suddenly, the old lady (Mrs. Castaniera), who resembled exactly to my mother, opened the door and came to us. I introduced myself, told her that I come from Israel, my name is Cory, and the origin of our family is from Coria. We are trying to find out where the synagogue is and we would like her to let us visit her house. She smiled and invited us to get in. Moreno was astonished. When we entered the house, I saw that the house was built exactly like the synagogue of Castelo de Vide. But the porch was square and not in arch as with the synagogue of Vide. When I asked her why, she told me that she heard from her family, who lived in the same house for centuries, that the original porch was in arch but it was destroyed during the earthquake of 1755. We went down to the basement and she showed us ancient books, but the oldest one was from 1500, after the Jews were expelled from Spain in 1492. She told Moreno that she agreed that excavations would be made in her house to discover the traces of the synagogue.

Moreno gave me a book "Coria and the Sierra de Gata" and wrote: "For our Jewish friends, let this book be another step for the encounter of two cultures that never should have been separated." In 1999 the house of Mrs. Castaniera was sold to a private owner and until 2011 no excavations have been made, but Moreno told me in 2011 that looking into the archives of Coria he proved a few years ago that this house was effectively the site of the synagogue. It is impossible to visit the synagogue as private people live there. I read on the Internet that the Jewish community of Coria dated back to the XIIth century. In the Jewish quarter lived approximately 46 families with the professions of turner, tailor, goldsmith, tax collectors, etc. When the Jews were expelled from Spain, some of them settled in Portugal where they were converted later to Christianity, as Yuda de Alba. Truly, those are the facts.

I presume that the Jews from Coria (with my ancestors probably) fled to Portugal in 1492, as Coria was near the border of Portugal that received Jews until 1497. They thought that they will return soon to Spain and left the synagogue to the care of one of the families, who changed her name, as many Marranos, with names of trees – Castaniera, the chestnut tree, the ancestors of the lady who still lived there in 1998. They took with them all the books in Hebrew and because of that there were not any book in the house anterior to 1500. The Jews of Portugal were forced to convert to Christianity, but many of them fled later on with the assistance of Dona Gracia Mendes and others to Turkey, Greece and Italy, where my family lived until they emigrated to Egypt, Israel, France or Brazil. Mrs. Castaniera, who knew probably that her house was the synagogue, being a Marrana, decided on her old age to enable excavations and transform the house to its initial function of a synagogue. Her likeness to my mother was not an optical illusion as we have pictures with her, but many Sephardic Jewish women resemble until nowadays to Spanish women, as they married with Sephardic men for 500 years. The sympathy that the lady showed us, opening her house to a Jewish Israeli while she did not want to open it to her fellow town's people, proved probably that she knew something of her Jewish ancestry. But who knows how things happen, why have I decided to visit Coria, why the archeologist asked me to assist him to find the synagogue, why the old lady decided to open her house to us, how a descendant from Coria coming from Israel discovered the synagogue after 500 years? Is it a witchcraft, a negligible incident, a logic story? Who can know it?

Como me siguen

En fila interminable

Todos los yos que he sido!

Como se abre el ante mi

En infinita fila

Para todos los yos que voy a ser!

Y que poco, que nada soy yo

Este yo, de hoy

Que casi es de ayer,

Que va a ser todo de mañana!

One of the poems I love most is Federico Garcia Lorca's Llanto por (Lament for) Ignacio Sanchez Mejias/La cogida y la muerte (the goring and the death)/A las cinco de la tarde – At five in the afternoon. Federico García Lorca (5 June 1898 – 19 August 1936) was a Spanish poet, playwright, and theatre director. García Lorca achieved international recognition as an emblematic member of the Generation of '27. He was executed by Nationalist forces at the beginning of the Spanish Civil War. His body has never been found. The affinities I have with Lorca go beyond the fact that both of us were born on the same day – 5 June. At the Residencia de Estudiantes in Madrid García Lorca befriended Luis Buñuel and Salvador Dalí, whom I like very much, and many other creative artists who were, or would become, influential across Spain. He was taken under the wing of the poet Juan Ramón Jiménez, cited earlier. Growing estrangement between García Lorca and his closest friends reached its climax when surrealists Dalí and Luis Buñuel collaborated on their 1929 film Un Chien Andalou (An Andalusian Dog). García Lorca interpreted it, perhaps erroneously, as a vicious attack upon himself. García Lorca wrote three of the best-known plays, which I like most, the Rural Trilogy of Bodas de Sangre (Blood Wedding), Yerma and La Casa de Bernarda Alba (The House of Bernarda Alba), which all rebelled against the norms of bourgeois Spanish society. I read Ian Gibson's The Assassination of Federico Garcia Lorca, which is one of the best biographies that I have ever read. The poem La cogida y la muerte was inspired by the death of the bullfighter Ignacio Sanchez Mejias. I appreciate poetry not by the rhymes, the sophistication or the subject, but by the emotion that it arouses in you. And by this criterion, At five in the afternoon grasps you, making you feel that you were present at the event, although I am reluctant to bullfights. To the best of my knowledge there are no precedents to images that sound so right especially in Spanish as: Lo demás era muerte y sólo muerte, Ya luchan la paloma y el leopardo, Las campanas de arsénico y el humo, la muerte puso huevos en la herida, El cuarto se irisaba de agonía, Las heridas quemaban como soles... And of course the repetition of 30 times a las cinco de la tarde!

LA COGIDA Y LA MUERTE

A las cinco de la tarde.
Eran las cinco en punto de la tarde.
Un niño trajo la blanca sábana
a las cinco de la tarde.
Una espuerta de cal ya prevenida
a las cinco de la tarde.
Lo demás era muerte y sólo muerte
a las cinco de la tarde.

El viento se llevó los algodones
a las cinco de la tarde.
Y el óxido sembró cristal y níquel
a las cinco de la tarde.
Ya luchan la paloma y el leopardo
a las cinco de la tarde.
Y un muslo con un asta desolada
a las cinco de la tarde.
Comenzaron los sonos de bordón

THE GORING AND THE DEATH

At five in the afternoon.
It was exactly five in the afternoon.
A boy brought the white sheet
at five in the afternoon.
A frail of lime ready prepared
at five in the afternoon.
The rest was death, and death alone.
at five in the afternoon.

The wind carried away the cottonwool
at five in the afternoon.
And the oxide scattered crystal and nickel
at five in the afternoon.
Now the dove and the leopard wrestle
at five in the afternoon.
And a thigh with a desolated horn
at five in the afternoon.
The bass-string struck up

a las cinco de la tarde.
 Las campanas de arsénico y el humo
a las cinco de la tarde.
 En las esquinas grupos de silencio
a las cinco de la tarde.
 ¡Y el toro solo corazón arriba!
a las cinco de la tarde.
 Cuando el sudor de nieve fue llegando
a las cinco de la tarde cuando la plaza se cubrió de yodo
a las cinco de la tarde, la muerte puso huevos en la herida
a las cinco de la tarde.
A las cinco de la tarde.
A las cinco en Punto de la tarde.

Un ataúd con ruedas es la cama
a las cinco de la tarde.
 Huesos y flautas suenan en su oído
a las cinco de la tarde.
 El toro ya mugía por su frente
a las cinco de la tarde.
 El cuarto se irisaba de agonía
a las cinco de la tarde.
 A lo lejos ya viene la gangrena
a las cinco de la tarde.
 Trompa de lirio por las verdes ingles
a las cinco de la tarde.
 Las heridas quemaban como soles
a las cinco de la tarde,
 y el gentío rompía las ventanas
a las cinco de la tarde.
 A las cinco de la tarde.
 ¡Ay, qué terribles cinco de la tarde!
 ¡Eran las cinco en todos los relojes!
 ¡Eran las cinco en sombra de la tarde!

at five in the afternoon.
 Arsenic bells and smoke
at five in the afternoon.
 Groups of silence in the corners
at five in the afternoon.
 And the bull alone with a high heart!
at five in the afternoon.
 When the sweat of snow was coming
at five in the afternoon when the bull ring was covered with iodine
at five in the afternoon,
 death laid eggs in the wound
at five in the afternoon.
At five in the afternoon.
 At five o'clock in the afternoon.

A coffin on wheels is his bed
at five in the afternoon.
 Bones and flutes resound in his ears
at five in the afternoon.
 Now the bull was bellowing through his forehead
at five in the afternoon.
 The room was iridescent with agony
at five in the afternoon.
 In the distance the gangrene now comes
at five in the afternoon.
 Horn of the lily through green groins
at five in the afternoon.
 The wounds were burning like suns
at five in the afternoon,
 and the people smashing windows
at five in the afternoon.
 At five in the afternoon.
 Ah, that fatal five in the afternoon!
 It was five by all the clocks!
 It was five in the shade of the afternoon!

You probably need a lot of Chutzpah in order to introduce in a business ethics academic book published by Kluwer and Springer – two of the largest academic publishers - a tango by the Argentinian Discepolo – Cambalache – The Junk Shop, relating to the corruption in the XXth century (I was not aware of course that in the XXth century it will be much worse...). But, probably this made the book so popular that it is held by more than a thousand universities and national libraries all over the world, and is quoted many times in the entry Business Ethics of Wikipedia, and in many other websites. Probably, this is the only example in the academic history that a tango was introduced, but Cory's academic books were also the first ones in history to deal with business ethics to minority shareholders, who are being wronged by the billions!

"Que el mundo fue y sera una porqueria, ya lo se...
 (En el quiniento seis y en el dos mil tambien.)
 Que siempre ha habido chorros, maquiavelos y estafaos,

Contentos y amargaos, valores y doble...
 Pero que el siglo veinte es un despliegue
 De maldad insolente, ya no hay quien lo niegue.
 Vivimos revolcaos en un merengue
 Y en un mismos lodo todos manoseaos...

Hoy resulta que es lo mismo ser derecho que traidor...!
 Ignorante, sabio o chorro, generoso o estafador!...
 Todo es igual. Nada es mejor.
 Lo mismo un burro que un gran profesor.
 No hay aplazaos ni escalafon,
 Los inmorales nos han igualao.
 Si uno vive en la impostura y otro roba en su ambicion,
 Da lo mismo que si es cura,
 Colchonero, rey de bastos, caradura o polizon..."

(Enrique Santos Discepolo, Tango, Cambalache/The Junk Shop)

"The world was and will be a filthy place, I know it...
 (It was in 506 as it will be in the year 2000.)
 As there have always been diabolical villains and crooks,
 The contented and the disgruntled, honorable men and swindlers...
 Because the twentieth century is a display
 Of insolent wickedness, nobody can deny it.
 We live wallowed in debauchery
 All floundering in the same mud..."

Nowadays there is no difference in being honest or a traitor...!
 Ignorant, wise, tramp, generous or crook.
 All is the same. No-one is better.
 No difference, dolts as great professors.
 No putting it off, no getting on with it either;
 We are on the same footing with the corrupt.
 Some men may be living out a lie, others are ripping off everyone;
 We are all in the same boat; the priest,
 The mattress-maker, the card-shark, the cheeky, the good-for-nothing..."

Doing business in Spain is always a pleasure, and touring the country is even better. My wife and me toured Spain with a car from north to south, starting with a week in Catalonia, Barcelona, Figueres, Bessalu, the fantastic architecture, scenery, museums, paintings and sculptures, hearing for the first time Catalan, and after finding the similarities with Spanish, learning the language and reading books. Visit of Jewish and Catholic sites, palaces and museums, in Madrid, Toledo, Sevilla, Granada, Cordoba, Malaga, and other cities and towns. The tour was from Parador to Parador, and the best hotel that we resided in was Granada's Parador at the Alhambra Palace. I thought that I was already there in the past, everything seemed familiar, and the people so similar to the Sephardic people I knew. We visited Spain also after the trip to Provence, visiting the Spanish Pyrenees, Andorra, Barcelona and Montserrat, and before that – we visited Coria and Caceres, during our trip to Portugal and Spain. Spain is probably the country which is the most minded to tourism, doing their utmost to make your stay pleasant, in Spain, as in Palma de Mallorca, where we received the best service from a moderate price hotel. What a difference from other countries where they do their utmost to make an extra buck at the expense of the tourist while giving him the minimum service, the smallest room, the worst food. If you are allergic to lactose, the Spanish would find ways to offer you an excellent meal with this constraint, while in New York for example they will tell you that there is no lactose while effectively it has, not caring what will happen to your health after you leave the restaurant. Every country has its pros and cons, and I enjoy visiting all over Europe – France, England, Netherlands, Scandinavia, Greece, the Balkans, Italy, Portugal, Germany, Switzerland, but most of all I enjoy visiting Spain (but as a city nothing compares to Paris), where I feel at home.

Tango is fine, but one could get the impression from reading this chapter that this was the sole contribution of South America to humanity. Actually, this continent has a fantastic literature that I enjoy reading, not always liking the obvious. I didn't enjoy at all reading Cien años de soledad by Gabriel García Márquez. As I read fluently Spanish I enjoy also reading best sellers as Isabel Allende's Hija de la fortuna and Novia que te vea by Rosa Nisan, but most of all I enjoyed reading Elogio de la madrastra, La tía Julia y el escribidor, Pantaleón y las visitadoras by Mario Vargas Llosa. He is one of the most hilarious authors that I have ever read, now that I think about it the authors in Spanish that I like the most are masters of humor as Cervantes and Vargas Llosa. I bring here the beginning of the first chapter of La tía Julia y el escribidor in Spanish, where the author tells that he was very young, living in Miraflores with his grandparents, studying Law and dreaming of becoming an author. He worked as the manager of informations of Radio Panamericana, that consisted only of reading the interesting news in the press for the radio: "En ese tiempo remoto, yo era muy joven y vivía con mis abuelos en una quinta de paredes blancas de la calle Ocharán, en Miraflores. Estudiaba en San Marcos, Derecho, creo, resignado a ganarme más tarde la vida con una profesión liberal, aunque, en el fondo, me hubiera gustado más llegar a ser un escritor. Tenía un trabajo de título pomposo, sueldo modesto, apropiaciones ilícitas y horario elástico: director de Informaciones de Radio Panamericana. Consistía en recortar las noticias interesantes que aparecían en los diarios y maquillarlas un poco para que se leyeran en los boletines. La redacción a mis órdenes era un muchacho de pelos engomados y amante de las catástrofes llamado Pascual. Había boletines cada hora, de un minuto, salvo los de mediodía y de las nueve, que eran de quince, pero nosotros preparábamos varios a la vez, de modo que yo andaba mucho en la calle, tomando cafecitos en la Colmena, alguna vez en clases, o en las oficinas de Radio Central, más animadas que las de mi trabajo."

The languages of Spain are the languages spoken or once spoken in Spain. Romance languages are the most widely spoken in Spain; of which Spanish, or Castilian, is the only language which has official status for the whole country. Various other languages have co-official or recognised status in specific territories, and a number of unofficial languages and dialects are spoken in certain localities. In terms of number of speakers and dominance, the most prominent of the languages of Spain is Spanish, spoken by about 99% of Spaniards. Spanish is the country's official national language, and spoken throughout the entire country. Nearly everyone in Spain can speak Spanish as either a first or a second language. In 2005, 89% of Spaniards spoke Spanish as their mother tongue, followed by Catalan/Valencian with 9%. Galician is spoken by 5%, and Basque by 0.9%. Three percent claimed another native language. (Percentages add up to 104%, as these figures include people brought up bilingually.) There are also robust regional languages figuring prominently in a number of territories:

- Aranese, co-official in Catalonia. It is spoken mainly in the Pyrenean comarca of the Aran Valley (Val d'Aran), in north-western Catalonia. It is a variety of Gascon, which in turn is a variety of the Occitan language.

- Basque, co-official in the Basque Country and northern Navarre (see Basque-speaking zone). Basque is the only non-Romance language with an official status in mainland Spain.
- Catalan, co-official in Catalonia, the Balearic Islands and, as a distinct variant (Valencian), in the Valencian Community. It is recognised—but not official—in Aragon (La Franja). Furthermore, it is also spoken without official recognition in the municipality of Carche, Murcia.
- Galician, co-official in Galicia. It is also spoken without official recognition in the adjacent western parts of the Principality of Asturias and Castile and León.

Spanish is official throughout the country; the rest of these languages have co-official status in their respective communities, and (except Aranese) are widespread enough to have daily newspapers and significant book publishing and media presence in those communities. In the cases of Catalan and Galician, they are the main languages used by the Catalan and Galician regional governments and local administrations. A number of citizens in these areas consider their regional language as their primary language and Spanish as secondary. The vernacular languages of Spain are: Spanish, official, spoken all over the country. Catalan/Valencian, co-official. Basque, co-official. Galician, co-official. Aranese, co-official – dialect of Occitan, Asturian and Leonese, recognised. Aragonese, recognised. Extremaduran and Fala, unofficial.

Spanish itself also has distinct dialects around the country; for example, the Andalusian or Canarian dialects, each of these with their own subvarieties, some of them being partially closer to the Spanish of the Americas, which they heavily influenced at different degrees, depending on the regions or periods, and according to different and non-homogeneous migrating or colonisation processes. Five very localised dialects are of difficult filiation: Fala, a nearly extinct variety of its own mostly ascribed to the Galician-Portuguese group; Cantabrian and Extremaduran, two Astur-Leonese dialects also regarded as Spanish dialects; Eonavian, a dialect between Asturian and Galician, closer to the latter according to several linguists; and Benasquese, a Ribagorçan dialect that was formerly classified as Catalan, later as Aragonese, and which is now often regarded as a transitional language of its own. Asturian and Leonese are closely related to the local Mirandese which is spoken on an adjacent territory but over the border into Portugal. Mirandese is recognised and has some local official status. With the exception of Basque, which appears to be a language isolate, all of the languages present in mainland Spain are Indo-European languages, specifically Romance languages. Afro-Asiatic languages, such as Arabic (including Ceuta Darija) or Berber (mainly Riffian), are spoken by the Muslim population of Ceuta, Melilla and by recent immigrants (mainly from Morocco, Algeria) elsewhere. The main immigrant languages are: Spanish (Latin American Spanish), Portuguese, Arabic, Romanian, English, German, French, Italian, Chinese, Bulgarian, Ukrainian, Russian. I have chosen to present in this book texts in most of Spain's languages, with special reference to Catalan, Asturian, and Galician, which I have learned, but can understand most of others.

Galician is an Indo-European language of the Western Ibero-Romance branch. It is spoken by some 2.4 million people, mainly in Galicia, an autonomous community located in northwestern Spain, where it is official along with Spanish. The language is also spoken in some border zones of the neighbouring Spanish regions of Asturias and Castile and León, as well as by Galician migrant communities in the rest of Spain, in Latin America, the United States, Switzerland and elsewhere in Europe. My favorite poet in Galego is Rosalía de Castro (1837-1885), who is today the unquestioned poet laureate of Galicia \(Spain\). Highly educated, expected to speak and write Spanish only, she took the bold, unconventional step of writing her early poems in the Galician language. Her defiance earned her the contempt and spite of that segment of the population for whom Galician was a dialect fit only for the illiterate and the churlish; but Rosalía's gallant gesture won her the love and admiration of the rest. We bring here from her famous poetry book Cantares Gallegos the first poem that she wrote in Galego: Adios Rios, Adios Fontes, an ode to the beloved country of Galicia that has to leave his country, Adios, por sempre, quizais...!

Adiós ríos, adiós fontes

Adiós ríos, adiós fontes
adiós, regatos pequenos;
adiós, vista dos meus ollos,
non sei cando nos veremos.

Miña terra, miña terra,
terra donde m'eu criei, hortiña que quero tant figueiriñas que prantei.

Prados, ríos, arboredas, pinares que move o vento, paxariños piadores,
casiña d'o meu contento.

Muiño dos castañares, noites craras do luar, campaniñas timbradoiras
da igrexiña do lugar.

Amoriñas das silveiras que eu lle daba ó meu amor, camiñoños antre o millo,
¡adiós para sempre adiós!

¡Adiós, gloria! ¡Adiós, contento!
¡Deixo a casa onde nacín, deixo a aldea que conoso,
por un mundo que non vin!

Deixo amigos por extraños, deixo a veiga polo mar;
deixo, en fin, canto ben quero...
¡quén puidera non deixar! [...]

Adiós, adiós, que me vou, herbiñas do camposanto,
donde meu pai se enterrou,
herbiñas que biquei tanto,
terriña que nos criou. [...]

Goodbye rivers, goodbye springs

Goodbye, rivers, goodbye, springs,
Goodbye, trickling streams;
Goodbye, all I see before me:
Who knows when we'll meet again?

Oh my home, my homeland,
Soil where I was raised,
Little garden that I cherish,
Fig trees I grew from seed.

Meadows, rivers, woodlands,
Pine groves bent by wind,
All the chirping little songbirds,
Home I cherish without end.

Mill nestled between the chestnuts,
Nights lit brightly by the moon,
Tremor of the little bells,
My parish chapel's tune.

Blackberries from the wild vines
I picked to give my love,
Narrow trails between the corn-rows,
Goodbye, forever goodbye!

Goodbye, glory! Goodbye, gladness!
I leave the house where I was born,
Leave my village so familiar
For a world I've never seen.

I'm leaving friends for strangers,
Leaving prairies for the sea,
Leaving all that I love dearly...
Oh, if I didn't have to leave!... [...]

Goodbye, goodbye, I'm going,
All you grasses over the graves,
Where my father lies deep buried,
Grass I've often leaned to kiss,
Sweet soil where we were raised. [...]

Xa se oien lonxe, moi lonxe, as campanas do pomar;
para min, ¡ai!, coitadiño,
nunca máis han de tocar. [...]

¡Adiós tamén, queridíña...
Adiós por sempre quizáis!...
Dígoche este adiós chorando desde a beiriña do mar.

Non me olvides, queridíña, si morro de soidás...
tantas légoas mar adentro...
¡Miña casiña!, ¡meu lar!

Far off I hear them, far away,
The bells over in Pomar,
That ring for me, oh, heartache,
They'll ring for me no more! [...]

Goodbye too, my beloved...
Goodbye forever it may be!...
I cry as I bid you farewell
From the shoreline of the sea.

Don't forget me, home beloved,
Though I die of loneliness...
So many leagues across the sea...
My sweet abode! My hearth!

And from her second book of verse Follas Novas, we bring here the fifth poem of Vaguedas/Vaguedades – Follas Novas – New Leaves – Hojas Nuevas in the Spanish translation.

¡Follas novas!, risa dame ese nome que levás cal si a unha mouroa ben mouroa branca lle oíse chamar.

Non Follas novas, ramallo de silvas e toxos sós, hirtas coma as miñas penas,
fi feras, coma a miña dor.

Sin olido nin frescura, bravas magoás e ferís...
¡Si na gándara brotades, cómo non serés así!

¡Hojas nuevas!, me da risa ese nombre que lleváis cual si a una negra bien negra blanca le oyese llamar.

No Hojas nuevas, ramillete de aliagas y zarzas sois, yertas como mis penas,
eras como mi dolor.

Sin olor ni lozanía,
bravas dañáis y herís...
¡Si en la gándara brotáis, cómo no vais a ser así!

How can I finish this chapter on Spanish if not with an Ode to my beloved Spain written by one of Spain's best authors Miguel de Unamuno, glorifying the land of Castile in his poem Castilla:

Tu me levantas, tierra de Castilla, en la rugosa palma de tu mano,
al cielo que te enciende y te refresca,
al cielo, tu amo.

Tierra nervuda, enjuta, despejada, madre de corazones y de brazos, toma el presente en ti viejos colores
del noble antano. [...]

Ara gigante, tierra castellana a ese tu aire soltare mis cantos, si te son dignos bajaran al mundo desde lo alto!

You lift me up, oh land of Castile,
in the rough palm of your hand,
to the sky that kindles you and refreshes you,
the sky, your master.

Oh strong-sinewed, lean, clear land,
mother of hearts and arms,
in you the present takes on old colors,
from the noble past. [...]

Gigantic altar, land of Castile, into your air I will send forth my songs;
if they are worthy of you, they will come back to earth down from on high!

In 1962, one of the youngest students at the Hebrew University of Jerusalem - not yet 18, I read almost all the plays by Shakespeare bought with my meager budget, while my student friends went to parties and head fun. Other Economics students friends - the nerds - learned Economics day and night receiving the highest grades, but I preferred to attend classes in the humanities – English Poetry and Shakespeare Plays (Richard the Second), Comedies (Aristophanes, Gogol and Moliere), Art (Italian Renaissance), Philosophy (Logics), Spanish (Cervantes), German (Goethe), and reading one by one all the classics of world literature according to a detailed list.

I like all American and English literature, modern and classic, medieval and romantic: Virginia Woolf and Jane Austen, George Eliot and Henry James. Scott Fitzgerald's The Great Gatsby is probably the best modern novel, and an integral part of Cory's courses on business ethics. I enjoy most reading Lawrence (I couldn't stop reading Sons and Lovers and Women in Love, not counting Lady Chatterley's Lover that was one of the first books read as a teenager), Hemingway (A Farewell to Arms and For Whom the Bell Tolls are my favorites), Sinclair Lewis (Babbitt and Main Street were a revelation). I enjoy reading John Dos Passos (The 42nd Parallel), but also Charles Dickens, and good best sellers as Tai Pan, Exodus, Advise and Consent, etc. See also a chapter describing the ethical dilemmas of All My Sons with the English Text in Plays.

We cannot discuss English literature without referring to Shakespeare, who is one of my favorite playwrights. At the age of 18 when most of my friends dated girls I spent my nights as a true intellectual nerd reading almost all the plays by Shakespeare and attending courses on his plays and English poetry at the University of Jerusalem. We bring here from one of my favorite plays Julius Caesar, the most dramatic scene where Brutus which I like most and have read also a biography on him, explains why he, Cassius, and others made a revolution against Julius Caesar.

(Brutus) "If then that friend demand why Brutus rose against Caesar,
This is my answer: Not that I loved Caesar less, but that I loved Rome more.
Had you rather Caesar were living, and die all slaves,
Than that Caesar were dead, to live all free men?
As Caesar loved me, I weep for him;
As he was fortunate, I rejoice at it;
As he was valiant, I honour him;
But, as he was ambitious, I slew him.
There is tears for his love; joy for his fortune;
Honour for his valour; and death for his ambition.
Who is here so base that would be a bondman?
If any, speak; for him I have offended."
(Shakespeare, Julius Caesar, Act III, Scene II, p.834)

I deal at length in this book about anti-Semitism and I chose to teach The Merchant of Venice in most of my business ethics courses. Many say that the play and Shakespeare were anti-Semitic, but I think the opposite, they relate to anti-Semitism and those who truly understand the play perceive Shylock as the true hero of the play, while most of the others are the true rascals. One of the best known cases that illustrates anti-Semitism is the controversial case of Shylock, the Jew of Venice, who insisted on preferring justice over mercy, by getting the pound of flesh that he asked for as a collateral. This is the case of an individual who feels persecuted by the community and wants to avenge himself. This is the case of a person who knows that if he is satisfied in the short term he is going to lose in the long term. This is the case of the businessman who has his own truth, which is opposed to the loyalty that he owes to the Duke of Venice. And Shylock exposes his point of view in the well-known dialogue with Salarino, that has become a 'classic':

"I am a Jew. Hath not a Jew eyes? hath not a Jew hands, organs, dimensions, senses, affections, passions? fed with the same food, hurt with the same weapons, subject to the same diseases, healed by the same means, warmed and cooled by the same winter and summer, as a Christian is? If you prick us, do we not bleed? if you tickle us do we not laugh? if you poison us, do we not die? and if you wrong us, shall we not revenge?"

(Shakespeare, The Merchant of Venice, Act III, Scene I, p. 203-4)

Shakespeare's plays are the most sophisticated plays as they raise fundamental issues about the conduct of men and women, not giving always answers, letting the reader or viewer to decide by himself what is the right answer, creating protagonists who are multi faceted and not black and white as in most of the melodramas. I have analyzed at length the Merchant of Venice in my courses and books and I bring here some of my thoughts on the play which I share with my readers. The play conveys the dilemma between law and ethics, what is more important? Obedience to an immoral law: slavery laws, racial discrimination, apartheid, totalitarian laws - communist, Nazi, aristocratic laws of Louis XVI, French occupation laws in 1940, British laws in the American colonies prior to the revolution, etc. It raises the issues: Is The Merchant of Venice an anti-Semitic play? Can it be played by geniuses like Laurence Olivier who shows Shylock as a tragic hero, similar to Oedipus, more aristocratic than the Duke of Venice, Antonio and Bassanio? Does the play still perpetuate the pejorative ideas about Jews in business?

Bassanio, a young Venetian and close friend to Antonio, the Merchant of Venice, needs money in order to woo a beautiful and wealthy heiress Portia. Antonio wants to give him 3,000 ducats but cannot do it as all of his ships are tied at sea. They approach Shylock, a moneylender Jew, for a loan. Shylock hates Antonio because he lends money without interests thus ruining his business, he mocks and despises him and spat on him, but he proposes that if Antonio is unable to repay the loan at the specified date he can take a pound of Antonio's flesh from wherever he pleases. Antonio is surprised by the generosity of Shylock and signs the agreement. Bassanio succeeds to woo Portia, but Antonio's ships are reported lost at sea. As he is unable to repay the loan, Shylock asks at the court of the Duke of Venice to exercise the bond. Bassanio, married to the rich Portia, offers Shylock 6,000 ducats but he refuses and asks for justice. The Duke refers the case to Balthazar (the disguised Portia), supposedly a young doctor of the law. Portia asks Shylock to show Christian mercy but he still refuses. At the moment that Shylock is about to cut Antonio with his knife, Portia points out a flaw in the contract - the bond only allows Shylock to remove the flesh, not blood of Antonio. If Shylock were to shed Christian blood, his lands and goods will be forfeited under Venetian laws. The Duke pardons Shylock's life, who is forced to convert to Christianity, half of his wealth is given to the government and half of it is to be bequeathed to Jessica, Shylock's daughter who ran away and married a Christian - Lorenzo.

The main dilemmas of the play: Are Bassanio and Antonio more ethical than Shylock? Are their motives to take the loan ethical? The "close" connection between the motives of the protagonists of the play and the invisible hand of Adam Smith. Is the economy driven uniquely by rational forces, or by sentiments? Sentimental motives in the business world: hate, envy, racism, love, compassion, friendship. The pound of flesh as a parable of deals that you shouldn't do in any case: transactions with doubtful people, with the Mafia, with people you don't trust, with unethical people... Did Antonio take all the necessary precautions before taking the loan? Unnecessary risks, "it won't happen to me!", unfounded overconfidence? What kind of businessman is Shylock: sensible, balanced, wants to liquidate competition (Antonio), racist, tragic, comic, lunatic, obsessed, rational, irrational, "typically Jewish", vindictive, shark, street fighter, unethical, ethical, respectful of laws? What lessons can we draw from the play: go in the golden mean as advocated by Aristotle, don't do business with Jews as still advocated by certain Christian textbooks (in bibliography), don't take unnecessary risks, don't be a guarantor for reckless friends, don't take loans. Why does society see the reckless Bassanio and the careless Antonio as positive figures and the industrious Shylock as negative? What would happen if Bassanio and Antonio were Jews and Shylock Christian? Who prospers more in the business world: Shylock the ant or Bassanio the grasshopper? Who is the winner who takes it all?

Is Shylock right in not belonging to the elites and not mingling socially with his business partners? What is the importance in business to belong to the same milieus, going to the same parties, operas and dinners, playing golf together? Is it ethical to honor commitments only towards "old buddies", our people, our kind? Antonio and Shylock quote frequently the Bible, but who is more attached to biblical principles (an eye for an eye), or should we differentiate between the new and the old testament? Antonio thinks of Shylock as Satan but doesn't hesitate to do business with him. Is it possible to deal with Satan, what happens to those who do so (figuratively)? Maybe he does it because he feels secured that if worse comes to worse his friend the duke of Venice and his buddies will rescue him and he will not need to reimburse the loan. Antonio asks Shylock not to do business with him as a friend but as an enemy. What happens today in the business world, is business made friendly, based on trust or not? Why does Antonio perceive the bond of a pound of flesh as a generous offer made by a Jew? Who outsmarts whom with the pound of flesh: Antonio or Shylock? Is it ethical? Ethics is very ambiguous in this play.

What are the ethical considerations in Jessica's theft of Shylock's jewels and in giving the money to Lorenzo who is willing to forgive her Judaism in return to her money? How does Shylock behave towards the stakeholders: Jessica his daughter, his servant, his clients, his colleagues, the authorities? What are the ethics of the whistleblower (Jessica) who discloses to her father's enemies Shylock's intentions? What do we think of Jessica? Does Shylock change his decision on requesting the pound of flesh after Jessica runs away with Antonio's friend Lorenzo? What is the meaning of Shylock's famous words: "I am a Jew. Hath not a Jew eyes?..." Does it reinforce the belief that all businessmen behave in the same manner or on the contrary that business conduct varies according to temperament, religion, country, gender? What is the impact of shaky health conditions, personal catastrophes, childhood traumas etc. on business conduct? Does it make people tougher or softer, how does it affect Shylock? What is the real reason of the inflexibility of Shylock towards Antonio: his Christianity, the insults he received, his friendship with Lorenzo, insolvency, or a cool business consideration? Does Shylock apply Milton Friedman's theories of maximizing profits without making other considerations, including ethical ones? Why does he decline Bassanio's generous offers of reimbursement of the loan and he insists on observing the contractual terms with the bond? Is the Duke of Venice objective and impartial towards Shylock in the trial? When are the rulers and judges truly impartial today?

Shylock who dared to sue Antonio, who belongs to the elites, not only didn't receive his money back but had to pay half of his wealth to Antonio as fine and become a Christian. Can we cite other examples that the underdogs or minority shareholders or poor stakeholders had to pay fines for daring to sue the mighty tycoons and how the judge treated their pleas as nuisance? Is there a universal ethics? Or ethics specific to Jews, Christians, Muslims, Venetians, Americans, British, French or Israelis? The issue of Ethics towards the weak parties, the minorities, the underdogs. If they don't participate as consenting victims with their aggressors those say of them that they have a harsh Jewish heart. Shylock justifies his harshness by saying that the Venetians are harsh also to their slaves. Is it a justified excuse? Everybody does it, so can I? Is Shylock the strong or the weak party in the play? What are the pros and cons. Bending of the law on behalf of the strong parties and to the detriment of the weak ones in the play (Portia in the trial), with the legalistic hair-splitting of lawyers who can convince consenting judges that the criminals are benefactor to the victims. Are the judges in the modern business world really impartial as they are supposed to be? Are they impressed with the first rate lawyers representing the tycoons and despising towards the third rate lawyers representing the weak parties? The issue of double standards towards the Jews or the weak parties who are asked to show Christian mercy toward the strong parties. What would happen if the situation was opposite, would the Duke of Venice ask Antonio to show mercy towards Shylock if he was not able to reimburse his loan?

Shakespeare unties the drama in a manner that favors ethics as being stronger than law, morals being stronger than a given promise. But Shakespeare's ethics is quite equivocal, as it is applied against a Jew, who is treated by the Duke as a stranger. Would the same ethics be implemented if the situation was opposite, and Shylock was a poor Jew who owed money to Antonio, the Merchant of Venice, a Christian originating from an ancient Venetian family? Would we ask Antonio to conduct himself ethically toward a poor Jew in order to prove Christian mercy toward him? The issue of double standards is emphasized here in the most acerbic manner, because in order to conduct ourselves ethically we should apply our ethics first of all toward the weak, the poor, the strangers, the minority shareholders, who do not have in most cases the possibility to confront the mighty in court, as justice and law are unfortunately apart in too many cases.

True ethics is revealed only when you do not have a sympathizing Duke of Venice and a collaborating population on your side... Clemency toward the mighty at the expense of the weak is the height of hypocrisy, and unfortunately this is what is practiced in many cases where the mighty and rich are brought to justice. If a poor thief steals a few hundred dollars he is sentenced to jail for many years, but if an Israeli financial tycoon is found guilty of manipulating the price of the shares of his bank, causing the Israeli minority shareholders and the state of Israel billions of dollars in losses, he is not even sent to jail, as we have learned from recent history. So, we should inlay in golden characters the speech of Portia, who appears at the court disguised as a jurist doctor, and hang it on the walls of all the board rooms in modern companies to be applied for stakeholders and minority shareholders, on the walls of all the government ministries, as it has to be applied first of all towards the poor, the underprivileged, as mercy only towards the mighty when they are caught is unforgivable and is the peak of hypocrisy, as Portia was in fact.

“But mercy is above this sceptred sway,
It is enthroned in the hearts of kings,
It is an attribute to God himself,
And earthly power doth then show likest God's
When mercy seasons justice. Therefore, Jew,
Though justice be thy plea, consider this,
That in the course of justice none of us
Should see salvation: we do pray for mercy,
And that same prayer doth teach us all to render
The deeds of mercy.”

(Shakespeare, The Merchant of Venice, Act IV, Scene I, p. 211)

We have learned that one of the richest men in the world, whose company was sued for monopolistic behavior, is a fervent admirer of one of the most important books of the 20th century ‘The Great Gatsby’. His admiration is so acute that his wedding was designed in the roaring 20s-style described in the novel and his very expensive home is decorated with citations of the novel. It would be interesting to learn if the following citation, which is practically the conclusion of the novel and its main moral, appears also on his walls. Tom Buchanan, the capitalist tycoon who comes from a very rich American family, perceives Gatsby as a nouveau riche, a newcomer, who on top of this was the lover of his wife Daisy. He causes the death of Gatsby and after that washes his hands and his conscience, without any scruples, as those inferior creatures who do not belong to our clan do not matter. The author concludes: “I couldn't forgive him or like him, but I saw that what he had done was, to him, entirely justified. It was all very careless and confused. They were careless people, Tom and Daisy – they smashed up things and creatures and then retreated into their money or their vast carelessness, or whatever it was that kept them together, and let other people clean up the mess they had made... I shook hands with him; it seemed silly not to for I felt suddenly as though I were talking to a child. Then he went into the jewelry store to buy a pearl necklace – or perhaps only a pair of cuff buttons – rid of my provincial squeamishness forever... Gatsby believed in the green light, the orgiastic future that year by year recedes before us. It eluded us then, but that's no matter – to-morrow we will run faster, stretch out our arms farther... And one fine morning - So we beat on, boats against the current, borne back ceaselessly into the past.” (Scott Fitzgerald, The Great Gatsby, p.107)

As long as the world will continue to treat the Buchanans as spoiled children who are not responsible for their actions, it will be impossible to change fundamentally the situation. But we should blame those who forgive them - usually because of cowardice. We hesitate to condemn the mighty. And we continue to shout at the donkey, as we are too afraid to confront the lion, the wolf or the fox. We cannot hope that the Buchanans of this world will all of a sudden be overcome by remorse. They will always continue to retreat in their wealth and appease their conscience by buying a pearl necklace. Therefore, it is necessary to fight and not condescend their immoral conduct, exactly as we condemn crimes performed by highway robbers. There is no difference between a bank robbery and a stakeholder or minority shareholder wrongdoing. And we have to define as theft every unethical act, even if the law cannot punish it. We could always sanction ethical crimes publicly, as this book and my other books advocate.

It is difficult for me to say what English literature I like most – American, British or Irish – it is like asking me to chose what child I like most – Joseph, Amir or Shirly. Furthermore, as I like very much most of European literature – French, Spanish, Russian, German, Italian... - and to a lesser extent world literature, the question is completely superfluous as the good authors are "All My Sons", as much as the theater fans that I encounter in New York, Paris or London are "All My Brothers". We are all members of the same family – the intellectuals, who has no boundaries as we live in the same nation, the same people, we share the same values, we don't look alike, we speak different languages, we may be white, black, or yellow, but we belong all to the same community, and above all we love each other. But, still I feel closer to Sinclair Lewis when I read Babbitt or Main Street, to Joshua Sobol when I see his plays, to Emile Zola when I read his novels. I try to find the right balance between the classics and the moderns, literature in the ten languages I read fluently, in the languages which I have learned recently. And now that I have retired finding the right balance between writing books, reading books, watching films and plays, visiting foreign countries, and of course spending precious time with my wife, children and grandchildren. I have my priorities – when I worked work was the first priority, now writing books is the first priority, but even when I don't write or work, I divide my time proportionately between all the languages, literatures, festivals, theater, films, music and art. It was much simpler in my youth when I read one book at a time, studied one language at a time. Anyhow, I like most literature about the middle class which is my class, about non conformism which is my motto, although I live as a bourgeois with a standard family, in a wealthy neighborhood, with normal friends (almost all of them live with their same wife/husband for almost 50 years...), much like the French "communistes de salon", who had communist ideas but would never liked to live in a communist country like the Soviet Union. So, am I a "nonconformist" if I live like a conformist but think as a nonconformist? I think that the answer is affirmative, as thru all my life I acted in the important issues as a nonconformist: At the age of 11 I rebelled against my teachers, headmaster and the ministry of education when I decided not to study metalworking and for two years I didn't attend school. At the age of 15 I became an intellectual reading classical books and hearing classical music instead of going to parties, where I was not invited. At the university I read classics, learned languages, and attended courses of Shakespeare, philosophy, drama, art... instead of focusing my studies on Economics and Political Sciences, where I was a mediocre student. In my business career I worked in high tech when nobody did, raised money at a Nasdaq IPO – one of the first Israeli company to do so, having alegiance first of all to my employees and not to my management, which was completely unorthodox. I always found the right path of success in the middle way between business and ethics, which "cost" me a lot. I chose to make an academic career when all my friends continued to make a lot of money in business, reducing my income by more than 90%, writing a dissertation on ethics to minority shareholders, the first in the world to write a dissertation, write academic books, and teach this subject at universities. Even now, when I write this book, I could be like all my friends who play golf and go to the beach, and instead I am staying at home for months writing a book who will be read only by a few if at all. So, am I a nonconformist or not? Anyhow, I read with great pleasure the books about this issue, the middle class, and ethical values, by Sinclair Lewis, Alberto Moravia (Il conformista), and Emile Zola (Les Rougon-Macquart), Balzac, Sobol, Lawrence, Cervantes...

Babbitt, first published in 1922, is a novel by Sinclair Lewis. Largely a satire of American culture, society, and behavior, it critiques the vacuity of middle-class American life and its pressure toward conformity. An immediate and controversial bestseller, Babbitt was influential in the decision to award Lewis the Nobel Prize in literature in 1930. The word "Babbitt" entered the English language as a "person and especially a business or professional man who conforms unthinkingly to prevailing middle-class standards". Babbitt, the conformist, feels lonely and finds the cure for his loneliness in an attractive new client, Tanis Judique. He opens up to her about everything that happened with Paul and Zilla, and Tanis proves to be a sympathetic listener. In time, Babbitt begins to rebel against all of the standards he formerly held: he jumps into liberal politics with famous socialist litigator Seneca Doane; conducts an extramarital affair with Tanis; goes on various vacations; and cavorts around Zenith with would-be Bohemians and flappers. But each effort ends up disillusioning him to the concept of rebellion. On his excursions with Tanis and her group of friends, "the Bunch," he learns that even the Bohemians have rigid standards for their subculture. When Virgil Gunch and others discover Babbitt's activities with Seneca Doane and Tanis Judique, Virgil tries to convince Babbitt to return to conformity and join their newly founded "Good Citizens' League." Babbitt refuses. His former friends then ostracize him, boycotting Babbitt's real estate ventures and shunning him publicly in clubs.

Babbitt slowly becomes aware that his forays into nonconformity are not only futile but also destructive of the life and the friends he once loved. Yet he continues with them – even after Myra suspects Babbitt's affair, though she has no proof or specific knowledge. Unrelated to these events, Myra falls seriously ill with acute appendicitis. Babbitt, in a near-epiphany, rushes home and relinquishes all rebellion in order to care for his wife. During her long recovery, they spend a lot of time together, rekindling their intimacy. In short time, his old friends and colleagues welcome Babbitt back into the fold. The consequence of his disgruntled philosophical wanderings being met with practical events of life, he reverts into dispassionate conformity by the end; however, Babbitt never quite loses hold of the sentimentality, empathy, and hope for a meaningful life that he had developed. In the final scene, all has been righted in his life and he is back on a traditional track. He is awakened in the night to find that his son Ted and Eunice, the daughter of his neighbor, have not returned from a party. In the morning his wife informs him that the two have been discovered in the house, having been married that night. While an assemblage of friends and family gather to denounce this development, Babbitt excuses himself and Ted to be alone. He offers his approval of the marriage stating that though he does not agree he admires the fact that Ted has chosen to lead his life by his own terms and not that of conformity. We bring here extracts from the memorable last chapter of the novel Babbitt.

THE Good Citizens' League had spread through the country, but nowhere was it so effective and well esteemed as in cities of the type of Zenith, commercial cities of a few hundred thousand inhabitants, most of which—though not all—lay inland, against a background of cornfields and mines and of small towns which depended upon them for mortgage-loans, table-manners, art, social philosophy and millinery.

To the League belonged most of the prosperous citizens of Zenith. They were not all of the kind who called themselves "Regular Guys." Besides these hearty fellows, these salesmen of prosperity, there were the aristocrats, that is, the men who were richer or had been rich for more generations: the presidents of banks and of factories, the land-owners, the corporation lawyers, the fashionable doctors, and the few young-old men who worked not at all but, reluctantly remaining in Zenith, collected luster-ware and first editions as though they were back in Paris. All of them agreed that the working-classes must be kept in their place; and all of them perceived that American Democracy did not imply any equality of wealth, but did demand a wholesome sameness of thought, dress, painting, morals, and vocabulary.

In this they were like the ruling-class of any other country, particularly of Great Britain, but they differed in being more vigorous and in actually trying to produce the accepted standards which all classes, everywhere, desire, but usually despair of realizing.

The longest struggle of the Good Citizens' League was against the Open Shop—which was secretly a struggle against all union labor. Accompanying it was an Americanization Movement, with evening classes in English and history and economics, and daily articles in the newspapers, so that newly arrived foreigners might learn that the true-blue and one hundred per cent. American way of settling labor-troubles was for workmen to trust and love their employers.

The League was more than generous in approving other organizations which agreed with its aims. It helped the Y.M. C.A. to raise a two-hundred-thousand-dollar fund for a new building. Babbitt, Vergil Gunch, Sidney Finkelstein, and even Charles McKelvey told the spectators at movie theaters how great an influence for manly Christianity the "good old Y." had been in their own lives; and the hoar and mighty Colonel Rutherford Snow, owner of the Advocate-Times, was photographed clasping the hand of Sheldon Smeeth of the Y.M.C.A. It is true that afterward, when Smeeth lisped, "You must come to one of our prayer-meetings," the ferocious Colonel bellowed, "What the hell would I do that for? I've got a bar of my own," but this did not appear in the public prints.

The League was of value to the American Legion at a time when certain of the lesser and looser newspapers were criticizing that organization of veterans of the Great War. One evening a number of young men raided the Zenith Socialist Headquarters, burned its records, beat the office staff, and agreeably dumped desks out of the window. All of the newspapers save the Advocate-Times and the Evening Advocate attributed this valuable but perhaps hasty direct-action to the American Legion. Then a flying squadron from the Good Citizens' League called on the unfair papers and explained that no ex-soldier could possibly do such a thing, and the editors saw the light, and retained their advertising. When Zenith's lone Conscientious Objector came home from prison and was righteously run out of town, the newspapers referred to the perpetrators as an "unidentified mob."

II

In all the activities and triumphs of the Good Citizens' League Babbitt took part, and completely won back to self-respect, placidity, and the affection of his friends. But he began to protest, "Gosh, I've done my share in cleaning up the city. I want to tend to business. Think I'll just kind of slacken up on this G.C.L. stuff now."

He had returned to the church as he had returned to the Boosters' Club. He had even endured the lavish greeting which Sheldon Smeeth gave him. He was worried lest during his late discontent he had imperiled his salvation. He was not quite sure there was a Heaven to be attained, but Dr. John Jennison Drew said there was, and Babbitt was not going to take a chance.

"Dad, I can't stand it any more. Maybe it's all right for some fellows. Maybe I'll want to go back some day. But me, I want to get into mechanics. I think I'd get to be a good inventor. There's a fellow that would give me twenty dollars a week in a factory right now."

"Well—" Babbitt crossed the floor, slowly, ponderously, seeming a little old. "I've always wanted you to have a college degree." He meditatively stamped across the floor again. "But I've never—Now, for heaven's sake, don't repeat this to your mother, or she'd remove what little hair I've got left, but practically, I've never done a single thing I've wanted to in my whole life! I don't know 's I've accomplished anything except just get along. I figure out I've made about a quarter of an inch out of a possible hundred rods. Well, maybe you'll carry things on further. I don't know. But I do get a kind of sneaking pleasure out of the fact that you knew what you wanted to do and did it. Well, those folks in there will try to bully you, and tame you down. Tell 'em to go to the devil! I'll back you. Take your factory job, if you want to. Don't be scared of the family. No, nor all of Zenith. Nor of yourself, the way I've been. Go ahead, old man! The world is yours!"

Arms about each other's shoulders, the Babbitt men marched into the living-room and faced the swooping family.

From Shakespeare and American literature back to English literature to two of my favorite authors – Lawrence and Henry James. Women in Love is a novel by British author D. H. Lawrence published in 1920. It is a sequel to his earlier novel The Rainbow (1915), and follows the continuing loves and lives of the Brangwen sisters, Gudrun and Ursula. Gudrun Brangwen, an artist, pursues a destructive relationship with Gerald Crich, an industrialist. Lawrence contrasts this pair with the love that develops between Ursula and Rupert Birkin, an alienated intellectual who articulates many opinions associated with the author. The emotional relationships thus established are given further depth and tension by an intense psychological and physical attraction between Gerald and Rupert. The novel ranges over the whole of British society before the time of the First World War and eventually ends high up in the snows of the Tyrolean Alps. We bring here an extract from the book with its sombre scenery and plot.

They were passing between blocks of miners' dwellings. In the back yards of several dwellings, a miner could be seen washing himself in the open on this hot evening, naked down to the loins, his great trousers of moleskin slipping almost away. Miners already cleaned were sitting on their heels, with their backs near the walls, talking and silent in pure physical well-being, tired, and taking physical rest. Their voices sounded out with strong intonation, and the broad dialect was curiously caressing to the blood. It seemed to envelop Gudrun in a labourer's caress, there was in the whole atmosphere a resonance of physical men, a glamorous thickness of labour and maleness, surcharged in the air. But it was universal in the district, and therefore unnoticed by the inhabitants. To Gudrun, however, it was potent and half-repulsive. She could never tell why Beldover was so utterly different from London and the south, why one's whole feelings were different, why one seemed to live in another sphere. Now she realised that this was the world of powerful, underworld men who spent most of their time in the darkness. In their voices she could hear the voluptuous resonance of darkness, the strong, dangerous underworld, mindless, inhuman. They sounded also like strange machines, heavy, oiled. The voluptuousness was like that of machinery, cold and iron. It was the same every evening when she came home, she seemed to move through a wave of disruptive force, that was given off from the presence of thousands of vigorous, underworld, half-automatised colliers, and which went to the brain and the heart, awaking a fatal desire, and a fatal callousness.

There came over her a nostalgia for the place. She hated it, she knew how utterly cut off it was, how hideous and how sickeningly mindless. Sometimes she beat her wings like a new Daphne, turning not into a tree but a machine. And yet, she was overcome by the nostalgia. She struggled to get more and more into accord with the atmosphere of the place, she craved to get her satisfaction of it. She felt herself drawn out at evening into the main street of the town, that was uncreated and ugly, and yet surcharged with this same potent atmosphere of intense, dark callousness. There were always miners about. They moved with their strange, distorted dignity, a certain beauty, and unnatural stillness in their bearing, a look of abstraction and half resignation in their pale, often gaunt faces. They belonged to another world, they had a strange glamour, their voices were full of an intolerable deep resonance, like a machine's burring, a music more maddening than the siren's long ago. She found herself, with the rest of the common women, drawn out on Friday evenings to the little market. Friday was pay-day for the colliers, and Friday night was market night. Every woman was abroad, every man was out, shopping with his wife, or gathering with his pals. The pavements were dark for miles around with people coming in, the little market-place on the crown of the hill, and the main street of Beldover were black with thickly-crowded men and women.

It was dark, the market-place was hot with kerosene flares, which threw a ruddy light on the grave faces of the purchasing wives, and on the pale abstract faces of the men. The air was full of the sound of criers and of people talking, thick streams of people moved on the pavements towards the solid crowd of the market. The shops were blazing and packed with women, in the streets were men, mostly men, miners of all ages. Money was spent with almost lavish freedom. The carts that came could not pass through. They had to wait, the driver calling and shouting, till the dense crowd would make way. Everywhere, young fellows from the outlying districts were making conversation with the girls, standing in the road and at the corners. The doors of the public-houses were open and full of light, men passed in and out in a continual stream, everywhere men were calling out to one another, or crossing to meet one another, or standing in little gangs and circles, discussing, endlessly discussing. The sense of talk, buzzing, jarring, half-secret, the endless mining and political wrangling, vibrated in the air like discordant machinery. And it was their voices which affected Gudrun almost to swooning. They aroused a strange, nostalgic ache of desire, something almost demoniacal, never to be fulfilled.

The Portrait of a Lady is a novel by Henry James, the American/British author, whose books I have read with great delight. This novel is one of James's most popular long novels, and is regarded by critics as one of his finest. The Portrait of a Lady is the story of a spirited young American woman, Isabel Archer, who in "affronting her destiny", finds it overwhelming. She inherits a large amount of money and subsequently becomes the victim of Machiavellian scheming by two American expatriates. Like many of James's novels, it is set in Europe, mostly England and Italy. Generally regarded as the masterpiece of James's early period, this novel reflects James's continuing interest in the differences between the New World and the Old, often to the detriment of the former. It also treats in a profound way the themes of personal freedom, responsibility, and betrayal. From this book I bring an extract of Chapter 42, one of the finest.

Such a resolution, however, brought her this evening but little peace, for her soul was haunted with terrors which crowded to the foreground of thought as quickly as a place was made for them. What had suddenly set them into livelier motion she hardly knew, unless it were the strange impression she had received in the afternoon of her husband's being in more direct communication with Madame Merle than she suspected. That impression came back to her from time to time, and now she wondered it had never come before. Besides this, her short interview with Osmond half an hour ago was a striking example of his faculty for making everything wither that he touched, spoiling everything for her that he looked at. It was very well to undertake to give him a proof of loyalty; the real fact was that the knowledge of his expecting a thing raised a presumption against it. It was as if he had had the evil eye; as if his presence were a blight and his favour a misfortune. Was the fault in himself, or only in the deep mistrust she had conceived for him? This mistrust was now the clearest result of their short married life; a gulf had opened between them over which they looked at each other with eyes that were on either side a declaration of the deception suffered. It was a strange opposition, of the like of which she had never dreamed—an opposition in which the vital principle of the one was a thing of contempt to the other. It was not her fault—she had practised no deception; she had only admired and believed. She had taken all the first steps in the purest confidence, and then she had suddenly found the infinite vista of a multiplied life to be a dark, narrow alley with a dead wall at the end. Instead of leading to the high places of happiness, from which the world would seem to lie below one, so that one could look down with a sense of exaltation and advantage, and judge and choose and pity, it led rather downward and earthward, into realms of restriction and depression where the sound of other lives, easier and freer, was heard as from above, and where it served to deepen the feeling of failure. It was her deep distrust of her husband—this was what darkened the world. That is a sentiment easily indicated, but not so easily explained, and so composite in its character that much time and still more suffering had been needed to bring it to its actual perfection. Suffering, with Isabel, was an active condition; it was not a chill, a stupor, a despair; it was a passion of thought, of speculation, of response to every pressure. She flattered herself that she had kept her failing faith to herself, however,—that no one suspected it but Osmond. Oh, he knew it, and there were times when she thought he enjoyed it. It had come gradually—it was not till the first year of their life together, so admirably intimate at first, had closed that she had taken the alarm. Then the shadows had begun to gather; it was as if Osmond deliberately, almost malignantly, had put the lights out one by one. The dusk at first was vague and thin, and she could still see her way in it. But it steadily deepened, and if now and again it had occasionally lifted there were certain corners of her prospect that were impenetrably black. These shadows were not an emanation from her own mind: she was very sure of that; she had done her best to be just and temperate, to see only the truth. They were a part, they were a kind of creation and consequence, of her husband's very presence. They were not his misdeeds, his turpitudes; she accused him of nothing—that is but of one thing, which was not a crime. She knew of no wrong he had done; he was not violent, he was not cruel: she simply believed he hated her. That was all she accused him of, and the miserable part of it was precisely that it was not a crime, for against a crime she might have found redress. He had discovered that she was so different, that she was not what he had believed she would prove to be. He had thought at first he could change her, and she had done her best to be what he would like. But she was, after all, herself—she couldn't help that; and now there was no use pretending, wearing a mask or a dress, for he knew her and had made up his mind. She was not afraid of him; she had no apprehension he would hurt her; for the ill-will he bore her was not of that sort. He would if possible never give her a pretext, never put himself in the wrong. Isabel, scanning the future with dry, fixed eyes, saw that he would have the better of her there. She would give him many pretexts, she would often put herself in the wrong. There were times when she almost pitied him; for if she had not deceived him in intention she understood how completely she must have done so in fact. She had effaced herself when he first knew her; she had made herself small, pretending there was less of her than there really was. It was because she had been under the extraordinary charm that he, on his side, had taken pains to put forth. He was not changed; he had not disguised himself, during the year of his courtship, any more than she. But she had seen only half his nature then, as one saw the disk of the moon when it was partly masked by the shadow of the earth. She saw the full moon now—she saw the whole man. She had kept still, as it were, so that he should have a free field, and yet in spite of this she had mistaken a part for the whole.

And finally, Charles Dickens, whom I have read mainly in my youth and who probably gave me together with Emile Zola my social consciousness. One of Dickens' finest books is A Tale of Two Cities (1859), a cosmopolitan novel by Charles Dickens, set in London and Paris before and during the French Revolution. The novel depicts the plight of the French peasantry demoralised by the French aristocracy in the years leading up to the revolution, the corresponding brutality demonstrated by the revolutionaries toward the former aristocrats in the early years of the revolution, and many unflattering social parallels with life in London during the same period. It follows the lives of several characters through these events. A Tale of Two Cities was published in weekly installments from April 1859 to November 1859 in Dickens's new literary periodical titled All the Year Round. With sales of about 200 million copies, A Tale of Two Cities is the biggest selling novel in history. Everyone knows the first chapter which has become a classic:

*It was the best of times,
it was the worst of times,
it was the age of wisdom,
it was the age of foolishness,
it was the epoch of belief,
it was the epoch of incredulity,
it was the season of Light,
it was the season of Darkness,
it was the spring of hope,
it was the winter of despair,*

we had everything before us, we had nothing before us, we were all going direct to Heaven, we were all going direct the other way—in short, the period was so far like the present period, that some of its noisiest authorities insisted on its being received, for good or for evil, in the superlative degree of comparison only.

There were a king with a large jaw and a queen with a plain face, on the throne of England; there were a king with a large jaw and a queen with a fair face, on the throne of France. In both countries it was clearer than crystal to the lords of the State preserves of loaves and fishes, that things in general were settled for ever.

It was the year of Our Lord one thousand seven hundred and seventy-five. Spiritual revelations were conceded to England at that favoured period, as at this. Mrs. Southcott had recently attained her five-and-twentieth blessed birthday, of whom a prophetic private in the Life Guards had heralded the sublime appearance by announcing that arrangements were made for the swallowing up of London and Westminster. Even the Cock-lane ghost had been laid only a round dozen of years, after rapping out its messages, as the spirits of this very year last past (supernaturally deficient in originality) rapped out theirs. Mere messages in the earthly order of events had lately come to the English Crown and People, from a congress of British subjects in America: which, strange to relate, have proved more important to the human race than any communications yet received through any of the chickens of the Cock-lane brood.

France, less favoured on the whole as to matters spiritual than her sister of the shield and trident, rolled with exceeding smoothness down hill, making paper money and spending it. Under the guidance of her Christian pastors, she entertained herself, besides, with such humane achievements as sentencing a youth to have his hands cut off, his tongue torn out with pincers, and his body burned alive, because he had not kneeled down in the rain to do honour to a dirty procession of monks which passed within his view, at a distance of some fifty or sixty yards. It is likely enough that, rooted in the woods of France and Norway, there were growing trees, when that sufferer was put to death, already marked by the Woodman, Fate, to come down and be sawn into boards, to make a certain movable framework with a sack and a knife in it, terrible in history. It is likely enough that in the rough outhouses of some tillers of the heavy lands adjacent to Paris, there were sheltered from the weather that very day, rude carts, bespattered with rustic mire, snuffed about by pigs, and roosted in by poultry, which the Farmer, Death, had already set apart to be his tumbrils of the Revolution. But that Woodman and that Farmer, though they work unceasingly, work silently, and no one heard them as they went about with muffled tread: the rather, forasmuch as to entertain any suspicion that they were awake, was to be atheistical and traitorous.

In England, there was scarcely an amount of order and protection to justify much national boasting. Daring burglaries by armed men, and highway robberies, took place in the capital itself every night; families were publicly cautioned not to go out of town without removing their furniture to upholsterers' warehouses for security; the highwayman in the dark was a City tradesman in the light, and, being recognised and challenged by his fellow-tradesman whom he stopped in his character of "the Captain," gallantly shot him through the head and rode away; the mail was waylaid by seven robbers, and the guard shot three dead, and then got shot dead himself by the other four, "in consequence of the failure of his ammunition:" after which the mail was robbed in peace; that magnificent potentate, the Lord Mayor of London, was made to stand and deliver on Turnham Green, by one highwayman, who despoiled the illustrious creature in sight of all his retinue; prisoners in London gaols fought battles with their turnkeys, and the majesty of the law fired blunderbusses in among them, loaded with rounds of shot and ball; thieves snipped off diamond crosses from the necks of noble lords at Court drawing-rooms; musketeers went into St. Giles's, to search for contraband goods, and the mob fired on the musketeers, and the musketeers fired on the mob, and nobody thought any of these occurrences much out of the common way. In the midst of them, the hangman, ever busy and ever worse than useless, was in constant requisition; now, stringing up long rows of miscellaneous criminals; now, hanging a housebreaker on Saturday who had been taken on Tuesday; now, burning people in the hand at Newgate by the dozen, and now burning pamphlets at the door of Westminster Hall; to-day, taking the life of an atrocious murderer, and to-morrow of a wretched pilferer who had robbed a farmer's boy of sixpence.

All these things, and a thousand like them, came to pass in and close upon the dear old year one thousand seven hundred and seventy-five. Environed by them, while the Woodman and the Farmer worked unheeded, those two of the large jaws, and those other two of the plain and the fair faces, trod with stir enough, and carried their divine rights with a high hand. Thus did the year one thousand seven hundred and seventy-five conduct their Greatnesses, and myriads of small creatures—the creatures of this chronicle among the rest—along the roads that lay before them.

Ulysses by James Joyce is still an enigma for me, having read it twice, I still don't understand it, although I like very much books written with stream of consciousness, like Proust's and Sartre's books. Possibly, it is because you must be extremely fluent in the language in order to enjoy the book, and I am almost 100% fluent only in French and Hebrew. Ulysses chronicles the peripatetic appointments and encounters of Leopold Bloom in Dublin in the course of an ordinary day, 16 June 1904. I was born exactly 40 years later. Ulysses is the Latinised name of Odysseus, the hero of Homer's epic poem Odyssey, and the novel establishes a series of parallels between its characters and events and those of the poem (e.g., the correspondence of Leopold Bloom to Odysseus, Molly Bloom to Penelope, and Stephen Dedalus to Telemachus). In Finnegans Wake Joyce invented a unique polyglot-language or idioglossia solely for the purpose of this work. This language is composed of composite words from some sixty to seventy world languages, combined to form puns, or portmanteau words and phrases intended to convey several layers of meaning at once. This is probably the most difficult book in English literature.

We bring here a "short" description by Joyce of... water, that no one else ever wrote similarly:

"What in water did Bloom, waterlover, drawer of water, watercarrier, returning to the range, admire?

Its universality: its democratic equality and constancy to its nature in seeking its own level: its vastness in the ocean of Mercator's projection: its unplumbed profundity in the Sundam trench of the Pacific exceeding 8000 fathoms: the restlessness of its waves and surface particles visiting in turn all points of its seaboard: the independence of its units: the variability of states of sea: its hydrostatic quiescence in calm: its hydrokinetic turgidity in neap and spring tides: its subsidence after devastation: its sterility in the circumpolar icecaps, arctic and antarctic: its climatic and commercial significance: its preponderance of 3 to 1 over the dry land of the globe: its indisputable hegemony extending in square leagues over all the region below the subequatorial tropic of Capricorn: the multiseular stability of its primeval basin: its luteofulvous bed: its capacity to dissolve and hold in solution all soluble substances including millions of tons of the most precious metals: its slow erosions of peninsulas and islands, its persistent formation of homothetic islands, peninsulas and downwardtending promontories: its alluvial deposits: its weight and volume and density: its imperturbability in lagoons and highland tarns: its gradation of colours in the torrid and temperate and frigid zones: its vehicular ramifications in continental lakecontained streams and confluent oceanflowing rivers with their tributaries and transoceanic currents, gulfstream, north and south equatorial courses: its violence in seaquakes, waterspouts, Artesian wells, eruptions, torrents, eddies, freshets, spates, groundswells, watersheds, waterpartings, geysers, cataracts, whirlpools, maelstroms, inundations, deluges, cloudbursts: its vast circumterrestrial ahorizontal curve: its secrecy in springs and latent humidity, revealed by rhabdomantic or hygrometric instruments and exemplified by the well by the hole in the wall at Ashtown gate, saturation of air, distillation of dew: the simplicity of its composition, two constituent parts of hydrogen with one constituent part of oxygen: its healing virtues: its buoyancy in the waters of the Dead Sea: its persevering penetrativeness in runnels, gullies, inadequate dams, leaks on shipboard: its properties for cleansing, quenching thirst and fire, nourishing vegetation: its infallibility as paradigm and paragon: its metamorphoses as vapour, mist, cloud, rain, sleet, snow, hail: its strength in rigid hydrants: its variety of forms in loughs and bays and gulfs and bights and guts and lagoons and atolls and archipelagos and sounds and fjords and minches and tidal estuaries and arms of sea: its solidity in glaciers, icebergs, icefloes: its docility in working hydraulic millwheels, turbines, dynamos, electric power stations, bleachworks, tanneries, scutchmills: its utility in canals, rivers, if navigable, floating and graving docks: its potentiality derivable from harnessed tides or watercourses falling from level to level: its submarine fauna and flora (anacoustic, photophobe), numerically, if not literally, the inhabitants of the globe: its ubiquity as constituting 90 percent of the human body: the noxiousness of its effluvia in lacustrine marshes, pestilential fens, faded flowerwater, stagnant pools in the waning moon." James Joyce, Ulysses, 1922, written with stream of consciousness.

After describing water, Joyce describes sand, also very "shortly" in another of his masterpieces.

"What must it be, then, to bear the manifold tortures of hell forever? Forever! For all eternity! Not for a year or an age but forever. Try to imagine the awful meaning of this. You have often seen the sand on the seashore. How fine are its tiny grains! And how many of those tiny grains go to make up the small handful which a child grasps in its play. Now imagine a mountain of that sand, a million miles high, reaching from the earth to the farthest heavens, and a million miles broad, extending to remotest space, and a million miles in thickness, and imagine such an enormous mass of countless particles of sand multiplied as often as there are leaves in the forest, drops of water in the mighty ocean, feathers on birds, scales on fish, hairs on animals, atoms in the vast expanse of air. And imagine that at the end of every million years a little bird came to that mountain and carried away in its beak a tiny grain of that sand. How many millions upon millions of centuries would pass before that bird had carried away even a square foot of that mountain, how many eons upon eons of ages before it had carried away all. Yet at the end of that immense stretch time not even one instant of eternity could be said to have ended. At the end of all those billions and trillions of years eternity would have scarcely begun. And if that mountain rose again after it had been carried all away again grain by grain, and if it so rose and sank as many times as there are stars in the sky, atoms in the air, drops of water in the sea, leaves on the trees, feathers upon birds, scales upon fish, hairs upon animals – at the end of all those innumerable risings and sinkings of that immeasurably vast mountain not even one single instant of eternity could be said to have ended; even then, at the end of such a period, after that eon of time, there mere thought of which makes our very brain reel dizzily, eternity would have scarcely begun." James Joyce, A Portrait of the Artist as a Young Man, 1916.

Finally, water again, in another masterpiece, this time almost incomprehensible, yet moving.

"Anna was, Livia is, Plurabelle's to be. Northmen's thing made southfolk's place but how multy plurators made each one in per-son? Latin me that, my trinity scholard, out of eure sanscreed into oure erylant! Hircus Civis Eblanensis! He had buckgoat paps on him, soft ones for orphans. Ho, Lord! Twins of his bosom. Lord save us! And ho! Hey? What all men. Hot? His tittering daughters of. Whawk? Can't hear with the waters of. The chittering waters of. Flitter-ing bats, fieldmice bawk talk. Ho! Are you not gone ahome? What Thom Malone? Can't hear with bawk of bats, all thim liffe-y-ing waters of. Ho, talk save us! My foos won't moos. I feel as old as yonder elm. A tale told of Shaun or Shem? All Livia's daughter- sons. Dark hawks hear us. Night! Night! My ho head halls. I feel as heavy as yonder stone. Tell me of John or Shaun? Who were Shem and Shaun the living sons or daughters of? Night now! Tell me, tell me, tell me, elm! Night night! Telmetale of stem or stone. Beside the rivering waters of, hitherandthithering waters of. Night!" James Joyce, Finnegans Wake, 1939, his last book finished shortly before his death.

Sarcastically, I maintain that there are many affinities between me and James Joyce, who is perceived as the best author of the XXth Century. First of all, both books on Ulysses were written with stream of consciousness, as I have written the synopsis of my play/novel in 24 hours on 60 pages, while the protagonists dictated me what they wanted to do and what to write, in a stream of consciousness, with all the dialogues already present in the synopsis. In the next 18 days I only made final touches to my work and typed it. Both authors base their novels on the Odyssey – Ulysses – Leopold Bloom – is the modern counterpart of Ulysses, like Uly Doron (the Israeli Ulysses) is. Both are tolerant, humanistic, detest violence, and live through an Odyssey in Dublin/Tel Aviv. Furthermore, both are even Jewish. Molly Bloom is Penelope and so is the Israeli Nelly. While Penelope is eternally faithful, Molly is not, having an affair with her manager, after ten years of her celibacy within the marriage. And so is Nelly, who after being faithful to her husband for 20 years, is having an affair with Uly's former manager. Both women are also Jewish, as Molly was born in Gibraltar, the daughter of Lunita Laredo, a Gibraltarian of Spanish Jewish descent, and of course Nelly is also Sephardic, but was born in Larissa, Greece.

Finally, I chose the name of my Diary – A portrait of the idealist as a young man, after Joyce's "diary" – A portrait of the artist as a young man. And if this not enough, Joyce invented a unique polyglot-language for his final book Finnegans Wake composed of composite words from some sixty to seventy languages, in a similar way that I use in this book texts from more than 120 languages (Anything you can do I can do better... Annie Get Your Gun), as both are polyglots and use the following languages in their texts – English, French, German, Romansh, Serbian, Croatian, Spanish, Russian, Danish, Dutch, Swedish, Icelandic, Norwegian, Italian of course as Joyce lived in Italy, Greek, Latin, Hebrew. As a matter of fact, the only language that I don't use in my book and Joyce uses is Irish Gaelic, but this is because Joyce was Irish. Well, after all, it maybe incorrect to state that I read twice Ulysses and did not understand it, as subconsciously it probably affected my writing in my novel, play, diary, as well as in this book.

But, as a matter of fact you can find in my library many books, plays and dictionaries in all the languages that I have learned, but also in languages that I haven't learned. And so, I once bought a long time ago a dual language book of stories by the Irish writer Padraic Pearse. I thought that I would understand the language but was completely mistaken as it is totally different from the languages that I know or want to learn. I wish to pay tribute to Irish literature that most of it was written in English – to Padraic Pearse, William Butler Yeats, John Millington Synge, but especially to some of my preferred writers who write in English – George Bernard Shaw, Oscar Wilde, Samuel Beckett, Sean O'Casey, and of course James Joyce. My favorite plays by Samuel Beckett are Waiting for Godot, Endgame, Happy Days. Sean O'Casey: Juno and the Paycock, Within the Gates, Red Roses for Me, Cock-a-Doodle-Andy, The Shadow of a Gunman, The Plough and the Stars, The Silver Tassie, Purple Dust, Hall of Healing. Oscar Wilde – A Woman of No Importance, Lady Windermere's Fan, An Ideal Husband, The Importance of Being Earnest, Salome. George Bernard Shaw – Man and Superman, Arms and the Man, Candida, The Man of Destiny, You Never Can Tell. All my preferred Irish playwrights wrote about social issues, siding the underprivileged, telling the truth about the rich and mighty, hypocrisy, aristocrats and working class. I have seen on stage most of Oscar Wilde's plays, some of George Bernard Shaw's plays, and as far as I recall none of Sean O'Casey's plays although those are the plays that I enjoyed most reading as they dealt with the most important issues that I care about.

One of my favorite playwrights is Samuel Beckett. Samuel Barclay Beckett (13 April 1906 – 22 December 1989) was an Irish avant-garde novelist, playwright, theatre director, and poet, who lived in Paris for most of his adult life and wrote in both English and French. His work offers a bleak, tragicomic outlook on human existence, often coupled with black comedy and gallows humour. Beckett is widely regarded as among the most influential writers of the 20th century. He is considered one of the last modernists. As an inspiration to many later writers, he is also sometimes considered one of the first postmodernists. He is one of the key writers in what Martin Esslin called the "Theatre of the Absurd". His work became increasingly minimalist in his later career. Beckett was awarded the 1969 Nobel Prize in Literature "for his writing, which—in new forms for the novel and drama—in the destitution of modern man acquires its elevation". Beckett is a true cosmopolitan, born in Ireland, living in Paris, writing in French and translating his plays into English. Beckett remained in Paris following the outbreak of World War II in 1939, preferring, in his own words, "France at war to Ireland at peace". His was soon a known face in and around Left Bank cafés, where he strengthened his allegiance with Joyce and forged new ones with artists Alberto Giacometti and Marcel Duchamp, with whom he regularly played chess. Sometime around December 1937, Beckett had a brief affair with Peggy Guggenheim, who nicknamed him "Oblomov" (after the character in Ivan Goncharov's novel).

Beckett joined the French Resistance after the 1940 occupation by Germany, in which he worked as a courier. On several occasions over the next two years he was nearly caught by the Gestapo. In August 1942, his unit was betrayed and he and Suzanne fled south on foot to the safety of the small village of Roussillon, in the Vaucluse département in Provence-Alpes-Côte d'Azur. There he continued to assist the Resistance by storing armaments in the back yard of his home. During the two years that Beckett stayed in Roussillon he indirectly helped the Maquis sabotage the German army in the Vaucluse mountains, though he rarely spoke about his wartime work in later life. Beckett was awarded the Croix de guerre and the Médaille de la Résistance by the French government for his efforts in fighting the German occupation; to the end of his life, however, Beckett would refer to his work with the French Resistance as "boy scout stuff". While in hiding in Roussillon, he continued work on the novel Watt (begun in 1941 and completed in 1945, but not published until 1953, though an extract had appeared in the Dublin periodical Envoy).

Beckett is most famous for his play En attendant Godot (1953) (Waiting for Godot). In a much-quoted article, the critic Vivian Mercier wrote that Beckett "has achieved a theoretical impossibility—a play in which nothing happens, that yet keeps audiences glued to their seats. What's more, since the second act is a subtly different reprise of the first, he has written a play in which nothing happens, twice." Like most of his works after 1947, the play was first written in French with the title En attendant Godot. Beckett worked on the play between October 1948 and January 1949. He published it in 1952 and it premièred in 1953; an English translation appeared two years later. Directed by Roger Blin, the play was a critical, popular, and controversial success in Paris. It opened in London in 1955 to mainly negative reviews, but the tide turned with positive reactions from Harold Hobson in The Sunday Times and, later, Kenneth Tynan. In the United States, it flopped in Miami and had a qualified success in New York City. After this, the play became extremely popular, with highly successful performances in the US and Germany. It is frequently performed today. Beckett translated all of his works into English himself, with the exception of Molloy, for which he collaborated with Patrick Bowles. The success of Waiting for Godot opened up a career in theatre for its author. Beckett went on to write successful full-length plays, including Fin de partie (Endgame) (1957), Krapp's Last Tape (1958, written in English), Happy Days (1961, also written in English), and Play (1963).

Don Juan in Hell by George Bernard Shaw is probably the best philosophical discourse in a play, which exceeds by far all attempts of Goethe in Faust. I don't need action in a play or in a film, and of course not in a book. And as such Man and Superman with its third act Don Juan in Hell is a masterpiece. Don Juan in Hell lasts an hour and a half on stage and with the other three acts of Man and Superman it lasts like an opera by Wagner. Unfortunately I have only read several times the play, although I noticed that there were many performances of the two parts of the play, that I did not see. That is why I'll bring here only a few lines on the play from Wikipedia and an extract of the play. Man and Superman is a four-act drama written by George Bernard Shaw in 1903. The series was written in response to calls for Shaw to write a play based on the Don Juan theme. Man and Superman opened at The Royal Court Theatre in London on 23 May 1905, but omitted the third act. A part of the act, Don Juan in Hell (Act 3, Scene 2), was performed when the drama was staged on 4 June 1907 at the Royal Court. The play was not performed in its entirety until 1915, when the Travelling Repertory Company played it at the Lyceum Theatre, Edinburgh. The plot of the play is as follows: Mr. Whitefield has recently died, and his will indicates that his daughter Ann should be left in the care of two men, Roebuck Ramsden and Jack Tanner. Ramsden, a venerable old man, distrusts Jack Tanner, an eloquent youth with revolutionary ideas, saying "He is prodigiously fluent of speech, restless, excitable (mark the snorting nostril and the restless blue eye, just the thirty-secondth of an inch too wide open), possibly a little mad". In spite of what Ramsden says, Ann accepts Tanner as her guardian, though Tanner doesn't want the position at all. She also challenges Tanner's revolutionary beliefs with her own ideas. Despite Tanner's professed dedication to anarchy, he is unable to disarm Ann's charm, and she ultimately persuades him to marry her, choosing him over her more persistent suitor, a young man named Octavius Robinson. Don Juan in Hell consists of a philosophical debate between Don Juan (played by the same actor who plays Jack Tanner), and the Devil, with Doña Ana (Ann) and the Statue of Don Gonzalo, Ana's father (Roebuck Ramsden) looking on. This third act is often performed separately as a play in its own right, most famously during the 1950s in a concert version, featuring Charles Boyer as Don Juan, Charles Laughton as the Devil, Cedric Hardwicke as the Commander and Agnes Moorehead as Doña Ana. This version was also released as a spoken word album on LP, the complete performance recording is now available on the internet. In 1974–75, Kurt Kasznar, Myrna Loy, Edward Mulhare and Ricardo Montalban toured nationwide in John Houseman's reprise of the production, playing 158 cities in six months.

Although Man and Superman can be performed as a light comedy of manners, Shaw intended the drama to be something much deeper, as suggested by the title, which comes from Friedrich Nietzsche's philosophical ideas about the "Übermensch". The plot centres on John Tanner, author of "The Revolutionist's Handbook and Pocket Companion", which is published with the play as a 58-page appendix. Both in the play and in the "Handbook" Shaw takes Nietzsche's theme that mankind is evolving, through natural selection, towards "superman" and develops the argument to suggest that the prime mover in selection is the woman — Tanner is a confirmed bachelor despite the pursuits of Ann Whitefield and her persistent efforts to entice him to marry her. Ann is referred to as "the Life Force" and represents Shaw's view that in every culture, it is the women who force the men to marry them rather than the men who take the initiative. We bring here an extract from Don Juan in Hell, in the third act of Shaw's Man and Superman.

THE DEVIL. [nettled] Well, you've no capacity for enjoyment. Will that satisfy you?

DON JUAN. It is a somewhat less insufferable form of cant than the other. But if you'll allow me, I'll take refuge, as usual, in solitude.

THE DEVIL. Why not take refuge in Heaven? That's the proper place for you. [To Ana] Come, Senora! could you not persuade him for his own good to try a change of air?

ANA. But can he go to Heaven if he wants to?

THE DEVIL. What's to prevent him?

ANA. Can anybody—can I go to Heaven if I want to?

THE DEVIL. [rather contemptuously] Certainly, if your taste lies that way.

ANA. But why doesn't everybody go to Heaven, then?

THE STATUE. [chuckling] I can tell you that, my dear. It's because heaven is the most angelically dull place in all creation: that's why.

THE DEVIL. His excellency the Commander puts it with military bluntness; but the strain of living in Heaven is intolerable. There is a notion that I was turned out of it; but as a matter of fact nothing could have induced me to stay there. I simply left it and organized this place.

THE STATUE. I don't wonder at it. Nobody could stand an eternity of heaven.

THE DEVIL. Oh, it suits some people. Let us be just, Commander: it is a question of temperament. I don't admire the heavenly temperament: I don't understand it: I don't know that I particularly want to understand it; but it takes all sorts to make a universe. There is no accounting for tastes: there are people who like it. I think Don Juan would like it.

DON JUAN. But—pardon my frankness—could you really go back there if you desired to; or are the grapes sour?

THE DEVIL. Back there! I often go back there. Have you never read the book of Job? Have you any canonical authority for assuming that there is any barrier between our circle and the other one?

ANA. But surely there is a great gulf fixed.

THE DEVIL. Dear lady: a parable must not be taken literally. The gulf is the difference between the angelic and the diabolic temperament. What more impassable gulf could you have? Think of what you have seen on earth. There is no physical gulf between the philosopher's class room and the bull ring; but the bull fighters do not come to the class room for all that. Have you ever been in the country where I have the largest following—England? There they have great racecourses, and also concert rooms where they play the classical compositions of his Excellency's friend Mozart. Those who go to the racecourses can stay away from them and go to the classical concerts instead if they like: there is no law against it; for Englishmen never will be slaves: they are free to do whatever the Government and public opinion allows them to do. And the classical concert is admitted to be a higher, more cultivated, poetic, intellectual, ennobling place than the racecourse. But do the lovers of racing desert their sport and flock to the concert room? Not they. They would suffer there all the weariness the Commander has suffered in heaven. There is the great gulf of the parable between the two places. A mere physical gulf they could bridge; or at least I could bridge it for them (the earth is full of Devil's Bridges); but the gulf of dislike is impassable and eternal. And that is the only gulf that separates my friends here from those who are invidiously called the blest.

ANA. I shall go to heaven at once.

THE STATUE. My child; one word of warning first. Let me complete my friend Lucifer's similitude of the classical concert. At every one of those concerts in England you will find rows of weary people who are there, not because they really like classical music, but because they think they ought to like it. Well, there is the same thing in heaven. A number of people sit there in glory, not because they are happy, but because they think they owe it to their position to be in heaven. They are almost all English.

THE DEVIL. Yes: the Southerners give it up and join me just as you have done. But the English really do not seem to know when they are thoroughly miserable. An Englishman thinks he is moral when he is only uncomfortable.

THE STATUE. In short, my daughter, if you go to Heaven without being naturally qualified for it, you will not enjoy yourself there.

ANA. And who dares say that I am not naturally qualified for it? The most distinguished princes of the Church have never questioned it. I owe it to myself to leave this place at once.

THE DEVIL. [offended] As you please, Senora. I should have expected better taste from you.

ANA. Father: I shall expect you to come with me. You cannot stay here. What will people say?

THE STATUE. People! Why, the best people are here—princes of the church and all. So few go to Heaven, and so many come here, that the blest, once called a heavenly host, are a continually dwindling minority. The saints, the fathers, the elect of long ago are the cranks, the faddists, the outsiders of to-day.

THE DEVIL. It is true. From the beginning of my career I knew that I should win in the long run by sheer weight of public opinion, in spite of the long campaign of misrepresentation and calumny against me. At bottom the universe is a constitutional one; and with such a majority as mine I cannot be kept permanently out of office.

DON JUAN. I think, Ana, you had better stay here.

ANA. [jealously] You do not want me to go with you.

DON JUAN. Surely you do not want to enter Heaven in the company of a reprobate like me.

ANA. All souls are equally precious. You repent, do you not?

DON JUAN. My dear Ana, you are silly. Do you suppose heaven is like earth, where people persuade themselves that what is done can be undone by repentance; that what is spoken can be unspoken by withdrawing it; that what is true can be annihilated by a general agreement to give it the lie? No: heaven is the home of the masters of reality: that is why I am going thither.

ANA. Thank you: I am going to heaven for happiness. I have had quite enough of reality on earth.

DON JUAN. Then you must stay here; for hell is the home of the unreal and of the seekers for happiness. It is the only refuge from heaven, which is, as I tell you, the home of the masters of reality, and from earth, which is the home of the slaves of reality. The earth is a nursery in which men and women play at being heroes and heroines, saints and sinners; but they are dragged down from their fool's paradise by their bodies: hunger and cold and thirst, age and decay and disease, death above all, make them slaves of reality: thrice a day meals must be eaten and digested: thrice a century a new generation must be engendered: ages of faith, of romance, and of science are all driven at last to have but one prayer, "Make me a healthy animal." But here you escape the tyranny of the flesh; for here you are not an animal at all: you are a ghost, an appearance, an illusion, a convention, deathless, ageless: in a word, bodiless. There are no social questions here, no political questions, no religious questions, best of all, perhaps, no sanitary questions. Here you call your appearance beauty, your emotions love, your sentiments heroism, your aspirations virtue, just as you did on earth; but here there are no hard facts to contradict you, no ironic contrast of your needs with your pretensions, no human comedy, nothing but a perpetual romance, a universal melodrama. As our German friend put it in his poem, "the poetically nonsensical here is good sense; and the Eternal Feminine draws us ever upward and on"—without getting us a step farther. And yet you want to leave this paradise!

ANA. But if Hell be so beautiful as this, how glorious must heaven be!

The Devil, the Statue, and Don Juan all begin to speak at once in violent protest; then stop, abashed.

DON JUAN. I beg your pardon.

THE DEVIL. Not at all. I interrupted you.

THE STATUE. You were going to say something.

DON JUAN. After you, gentlemen.

THE DEVIL. [to Don Juan] You have been so eloquent on the advantages of my dominions that I leave you to do equal justice to the drawbacks of the alternative establishment.

DON JUAN. In Heaven, as I picture it, dear lady, you live and work instead of playing and pretending. You face things as they are; you escape nothing but glamor; and your steadfastness and your peril are your glory. If the play still goes on here and on earth, and all the world is a stage, Heaven is at least behind the scenes. But Heaven cannot be described by metaphor. Thither I shall go presently, because there I hope to escape at last from lies and from the tedious, vulgar pursuit of happiness, to spend my eons in contemplation—

We give here from the Internet an excellent review on the Irish Sean O'Casey's life and plays:

Sean O'Casey, a child of the Dublin slums, was born in 1880 to a Protestant family. He had a grim childhood of poverty, poor eyesight, and ill health. Sean O'Casey was an idealist with a strong sense of justice that marked his life and work. Early in his adult life he was caught up in the fervour of the Gaelic League and in the amateur theatre movement. O'Casey claimed he found his "faith" in the socialist ideals of Jim Larkin's crusade for the Irish working class. (The general strike of 1913 began the first demands for Irish liberation.) In his early forties, while continuing to support himself as a labourer, he wrote, in quick succession three realistic plays about the slums of Dublin. The Shadow of a Gunman, Juno and the Paycock, and The Plough and the Stars were performed at the Abbey Theatre in 1923, 1924, and 1926 respectively. The first takes up the terrors of the Black and Tans in Dublin. The second has a Civil War theme, and the last is focused on the Irish Citizen Army and the Easter Rising. These plays provoked public outrage mainly because of O'Casey's consistent refusal to glorify the violence of the nationalist movement, instead mocking the heroics of war and presenting the theme that dead heroes were far outnumbered by dead innocent people. Frank O'Connor, in A Short History of Irish Literature: A Backward Look, says that what unifies these plays and sets them apart from O'Casey's later works is "the bitter recognition that while the men dream, drink, drivel, dress up and go play-acting, some woman with as much brains and far more industry sacrifices herself to keep the little spark of human life from going out altogether." O'Casey followed these plays of realism with The Silver Tassie, which was submitted to the Abbey Theatre in 1927. It was a play considered more symbolic and expressionistic than the previous Abbey plays. While three acts were in typical lively O'Casey style, the second act included chants and dance movement.

Most of his plays which followed, filled with symbolism and fantasy, were infused with the evangelical view that became the theme of the rest of O'Casey's life. These plays include Within the Gates, The Star Turns Red, Purple Dust, Red Roses for Me, Oak Leaves and Lavender, and Cock A Doodle Dandy. With the exception of Within the Gates, none of the later plays had the critical acclaim or success that were given his earlier work. O'Casey's alleged communism represents another aspect of his life and work which calls for interpretation. Brooks Atkinson, in his Introduction to The Sean O'Casey Reader, presents a balanced view of O'Casey's professed allegiance. Like other aspects of O'Casey's creativity, Atkinson saw him as an original in his thinking, for O'Casey saw Keats, Shelley, Dickens, Whitman, even Jesus Christ as Communists. "Any man who is honest and gives all he can to the community is a Communist," O'Casey said. His only humourless play, The Star Turns Red, put on by a leftist group in London in 1940, was his salute to Communism. As Atkinson points out, despite O'Casey's public comments, his play, and his articles for "The London Daily Worker," the author's "Communism had a flamboyant style. But it must have perplexed orthodox Communists. As usual, he made his own rules and preserved his personal independence." O'Casey's finest writing after his self-imposed exile from Ireland in 1926 is considered to be his six volumes of autobiography: I Knock at the Door, Pictures in the Hallway, Drums Under the Window, Inishfallen Fare Thee Well, Rose and Crown, and Sunset and Evening Star. They were written as stream of consciousness works and in a brilliantly subjective style and voice of the third person named Johnny Casside.

David Krause, author of Sean O'Casey and His World, says of the autobiography: "Like the voluble characters in his plays, O'Casey can be profligate and exuberant with words, playing with their sounds and meanings, indulging in the Joycean game of puns, parodies, malapropisms and comic invective." Brooks Atkinson remarks that Sean O'Casey "wrote the most glorious English of his era - the English nearest in colour and strength to the Elizabethan. . .He had the moral courage of an idealist. I think God had reason to be proud of Sean O'Casey." - <http://www.irish-society.org/home/hedgemaster-archives-2/people/o-casey-sean>

Most of the Irish writers didn't write in Irish Gaelic, a Goidelic language spoken only by 140,000 native speakers but by one million as a second language. Irish (Gaeilge), sometimes referred to as Gaelic or Irish Gaelic, is a Goidelic language of the Indo-European languages family, originating in Ireland and historically spoken by the Irish people. Irish is spoken as a first language by a small minority of Irish people, and as a second language by a rather larger group. Irish enjoys constitutional status as the national and first official language of the Republic of Ireland, and is an officially recognised minority language in Northern Ireland. It is also among official languages of the European Union. The public body Foras na Gaeilge is responsible for the promotion of the language throughout the island of Ireland. Irish was the predominant language of the Irish people for most of their recorded history, and they brought it with them to other regions, notably Scotland and the Isle of Man, where through earlier branching from Middle Irish it gave rise to Scottish Gaelic and Manx respectively. It has the oldest vernacular literature – the speech of the common people - in Western Europe, dating from the 4th century.

The fate of the language was influenced by the increasing power of the English state in Ireland. Elizabethan officials viewed the use of Irish unfavourably, as being a threat to all things English in Ireland. Its decline began under English rule in the 17th century. In the latter part of the 19th century, there was a dramatic decrease in the number of speakers, beginning after the Great Famine of 1845–52 (when Ireland lost 20–25% of its population either to emigration or death). Irish-speaking areas were hit especially hard. By the end of British rule, the language was spoken by less than 15% of the national population. Since then, Irish speakers have been in the minority. This is now the case even in areas officially designated as the Gaeltacht. Efforts have been made by the state, individuals and organisations to preserve, promote and revive the language, but with mixed results. I'll quote here the last lines of Pearse's beautiful and captivating short story An Bhean Chaointe – The Keening Woman in Irish people's "mother tongue", and by that I comply completely to James Joyce writings, as I have now in my book on top of the other 200 languages Irish Gaelic as well. It goes without saying that James Joyce wouldn't boycott Jews or Israelis, as some of his compatriots do unfortunately, as for sure he loved and appreciated Jews, maybe because he met them and did not emit an opinion biased by a Nazi anti-Semitic propaganda as the BDS pile of lies does, and unaware people in Ireland, the UK and Scandinavia believe it.

'An rugadh riamh ar an bhfear dubh?' arsa mo dheirfiur.

'Was the stranger ever caught?'

'Ni rugadh, muis', arsa m'athair. 'Is beag an baol a bhi air.'

'No, he was in no danger.'

'Ciarbh e an fear dubh, meas tu a dheaide?' arsa mise.

'Who do you think the stranger was?'

'Creidim i lathair De,' arsa m'athair, 'gur pilear o Chaislean Bhaile Atha Cliath a bhi ann. Chonaic Cuimin O Niadh fear an-chosuil leis at tabhairt fianaise in aghaidh buachalla eile i dTuaim bliain ina dhiaidh sin.'

'I believe before God', my father said, 'that he was a peeler from Dublin Castle. Cuimin O Niadh saw a man very like him giving evidence against another boy in Tuam a year afterwards.'

'A dheaide', arsa Seainin go hobann, 'nuair a bheas mise im fhear, maroidh me an fea dubh sin.'

'Daddy,' Sean said suddenly, when I'm a man, I'll kill that stranger.'

'Sabhala Dia sinn', adeir mo mhathair.

Leag m'athair a lamh ar chloigeann Sheainin.

My father laid his hand on Sean's head.

'B'fheidir, a mhaicin,' ar seisean, 'go mbeadh muid uilig ag baint 'teaili-ho' as an arm dubh sul rachas cre orainn!'

'Maybe we'll all be taking 'tally-ho' out of the black soldiers, before we die!' he said.

'Ta se in am Paidrin,' adeir mo mhathair.

'It's time for the Rosary,' said my mother.

After typing the original text and the translation, we observe that Irish is not so stranger to other languages and that we can understand some of the text. We'll start with the omission. The translator has forgotten to translate the sentence: 'Sabhala Dia sinn', adeir mo mhathair. First of all, it's a sentence said by the mother, as in the last sentence we find "adeir mo mhathair", exactly like in the omitted sentence. So, this sentence ends with "said my mother". She said to her son Sean who wants to kill the stranger: God save us/Que Dieu nous garde/ישמור/Auzubillah. How do I know it? First of all – intuition and then context. Sabhala must be "save", Dia is God, sinn is us. Why Dia is God, first of all because it is written in capital letter and also because in other sentences De is God. And we must not confuse sin with one n and sinn with two n... So, this is a short course in Irish Gaelic, which today is the first time that I read it carefully.

Poetry delivers the most salient facets of a people, especially a suffering people like the Irish, the Haitians, poems in Ladino and Yiddish... Therefore, we have chosen to bring here a poem in Irish Gaelic from an anonymous poet. The end of old ways, a feature of the bardic laments of the 18th century, is also to be found in the early 19th century poem Caoine Cill Chais (The Lament for Kilcash). In this verse the anonymous poet laments that the castle of Cill Chais stands empty, its woods are cut down and its old splendours departed. (Flood and Flood 1999:85-93):

Cad a dhéanfaimid feasta gan adhmaid, tá deireadh na gcoillte ar lár;
 níl trácht ar Chill Chais ná a teaghlach, is ní bainfear a cling go bráth;
 an áit úd ina gcónaíodh an deighbhean
 a fuair gradam is meidhir thar mná, bhíodh iarlaí ag tarraing thar toinn ann,
 is an tAifreann binn á rá.

*What shall we do from now on without timber?
 The last of the woods is gone.
 No more of Kilcash and its household
 And its bells will not ring again.
 The place where that great lady lived
 Who received esteem and love above all others
 Earls came from overseas to visit there
 And Mass was sweetly read.*

Antoine O Raifteiri (1779-1835) was an Irish language poet who is often called the last of the wandering bards. We bring here three of his most renowned poems, out of admiration for the Irish people, its poets, authors and especially its playwrights. I am sure that the respect is mutual... Ó Raifteirí's most enduring poems include Eanach Dhuin and Cill Aodain which are still learned by Irish schoolchildren. Another well-known poem of O Raifteiri is Mise Raifteirí an File.

 trácht

If my health is spared I'll be long relating

Ar an méid a bádh as Eanach Cuain.

'S mo thrua 'márach gach athair 's máthair

Bean is páiste 'tá á sileadh súl!

A Rí na nGrást a cheap neamh is párthas,

Nar bheag an tábhacht dúinn beirt no triúr,

Ach lá chomh breá leis gan gaoth ná báisteach

Lán a bháid acu scuab ar shiúl.

Nár mhór an t-íonadh ós comhair na ndaoine

Á bhfeicáil sínte ar chúl a gcinn,

Screadadh 'gus caoineadh a scanródh daoine,

Gruaig á cíoradh 's an chreach á roinnt.

Bhí buachaillí óg ann tíocht an fhómhair,

Á síneadh chrochar, is a dtabhairt go cill.

'S gurb é gléas a bpósta a bhí dá dtoramh

'S a Rí na Glóire nár mhór an feall.

Of the number who drowned from Anach Cuain.

And the keening after of mother and father

And child by the harbour, the mournful croon!

King of Graces, who died to save us,

T'were a small affair but for one or two,

But a boat-load bravely in calm day sailing

Without storm or rain to be swept to doom.

What wild despair was on all the faces

To see them there in the light of day,

In every place there was lamentation,

And tearing of hair as the wreck was shared.

And boys there lying when crops were ripening,

From the strength of life they were borne to clay

In their wedding clothes for their wake they robed them

O King of Glory, man's hope is in vain.

English translation

Anois teacht an earraigh

Now coming of the Spring

beidh an lá ag dul chun síneadh,

the day will be lengthening,

Is tar éis na féil Bríde and after St. Bridget's Day

ardóidh mé mo sheol.

I shall raise my sail.

Ó chuir mé i mo cheann é

Since I put it into my head

ní chónóidh mé choíche

I shall never stay put

Go seasfaidh mé síos

until I shall stand down

After paying tribute to the English people, the Irish people, I'll bring here a short poem in Welsh language, Cymraeg, spoken fluently by only 320,000 Welsh. It was written by Tomos Prys (1564-1634), a Welsh poet. Many details survive about Tomos's life, recorded in his poems, of which more than two hundred are extant. A poem written by Tomos at Plas Iolyn in his later life:

*Traetha fy mod, lle nodant
I'm plwy gyda'm gwraig a'm plant
Ag a'm bryd, dros ennyd aeth
Is mynydd ar ysmonaeth*

Now I live quietly
With my dear wife and family
And for a while at least I till
My fields below the neighbouring hill.

Finally, a few words about the Scots, not about their language as brought out in extracts and links in this book, but about my visit to Scotland, and the excellent education that my father Albert received at the Boy School of the Church of Scotland Mission in Smyrna. On 28th June, 1921, he received at the end of Session 1920-1921 (he was 15.5 years old) a prize – the book The Voyage of the Blue Vega by W. Gordon Stables awarded to Albert Cori (all the Cori family had an i ending, like in Coria, like the Italian segment of the family and even like his brother and parents, but Albert decided to Anglicize his family name with a y ending changing his name to Cory). His grades were: 2nd in Scripture History and Geography, 1st in English, Grammar, Calligraphy, Composition, French and Hebrew, with a Perfect Attendance. And this reminds me of a story that he told me about this school: when he was a younger, the pupils were required to pray every morning with closed eyes – every one to his God, as in this school studied pupils from many religions. But, as my father had a competitor for the first grades – this pupil reported him to the headmaster that he didn't close his eyes during the prayer. The headmaster punished my father but he punished the tell-tale twice as much – first of all for informing out of spite, but even more because he kept his eyes opened during the prayer, otherwise how could he have seen the event? There were once excellent educators, fair, dedicated, wise, strict, erudite, even in the cosmopolitan Smyrna, they were Scots in the case of my father, French in the case of my mother, both of them received their education at Church schools, where have those teachers vanished?

I visited extensively England – London, Oxford, Cambridge, Windsor, Stonehenge, Windermere, but also made short visits to Wales and planned a long trip to Scotland with my family. This was the first time (1978) that my wife Ruthy and the two kids Yossi aged 7 and Amir aged 4 went abroad and after staying a week in London, we took a train to Edinburgh, well, we thought we did. I read that the train to Edinburgh departs from platform 3 at 8.30 in the morning, so we came with all the suitcases early enough to take good seats. We arrived at 8.15 and found good places, but the train left at 8.20. That is strange, I thought, we know that the English are punctual (Phileas Fogg), but how come that the train leaves ten minutes before time? I went to the conductor who told me that the train is an express train headed south. I was astonished, all my plans were shattered, what will I do with my family who traveled for the first time abroad, how will we catch the organized tour to Scotland? Man tracht und Gott lacht, l'homme propose et Dieu dispose – man plans and God laughs... Everything was planned so meticulously... This was one of my worst days, but we finally got to Edinburgh and took the tour of the day after, but alas we traveled in a bus full of smoking people, the children got sick, we saw a loch and then another loch and all the lochs seemed alike, it was raining, it was cold, it was hell, so ultimately we left the tour after one day, lost the money, and traveled south to Windermere, which was one of our best decisions. So, il faut faire contre mauvaise fortune bon coeur, you should adapt to the circumstances and always have a fallback plan. Thanks to the Internet wonders, we found a Scottish folk group named "The Corries", probably from Cory's Scottish relatives, who sing for their Israeli cousins "The Corys" melodious Scottish folk songs, to compensate them for their initial bad impression on their beautiful country. My visits to other English speaking countries, Canada, US, Australia, Singapore, New Zealand, South Africa, Africa... appear also in this book.

We finish by quoting one of my beloved poems: I wandered lonely as a cloud, by William Wordsworth, which I learned at school. When I visited with my family the Lake District, we fell in love with Windermere, stayed there for a few days, and all the while, I thought of this poem:

I WANDERED lonely as a cloud

That floats on high o'er vales and hills,
When all at once I saw a crowd,
A host, of golden daffodils;
Beside the lake, beneath the trees,
Fluttering and dancing in the breeze.

Continuous as the stars that shine

And twinkle on the milky way,
They stretched in never-ending line
Along the margin of a bay:
Ten thousand saw I at a glance,
Tossing their heads in sprightly dance.

10

The waves beside them danced; but they

Out-did the sparkling waves in glee:
A poet could not but be gay,
In such a jocund company:
I gazed--and gazed--but little thought
What wealth the show to me had brought:

For oft, when on my couch I lie

In vacant or in pensive mood,
They flash upon that inward eye
Which is the bliss of solitude;
And then my heart with pleasure fills,
And dances with the daffodils

And as a Postscript for a true cosmopolitan book, we bring here the final verses of Oscar Wilde's The Ballad of Reading Gaol in English and in... Esperanto – La Balado de Prizono Reding:

In Reading gaol by Reading town

There is a pit of shame,
And in it lies a wretched man
Eaten by teeth of flame,
In a burning winding-sheet he lies,
And his grave has got no name.

Ce Reding, en Prizono Reding,

Pri honto kav' atestas;
Mizera homo en gi kusas,
Flamdentoj lin digestas;
Lin volvas brula tuko, tombe
Neniu nomo estas.

And there, till Christ call forth the dead,
In silence let him lie:

No need to waste the foolish tear,
Or have the windy sigh:
The man had killed the thing he loved,

Gis Krist' mortintojn vekos, pace

Atendu li la tagon:
Malsagan larmon ne malsparu,
same suspirosvagon;
l' amajon murdis li kaj donis

And so he had to die.

Per sia viv' la pagon.

And all men kill the thing they love,
By all let this be heard,
Some do it with a bitter look,
Some with a flattering word,
The coward does it with a kiss,
The brave man with a sword!

L' amajon murdas ciu homo;
Auskultu! Per okulo
Amara kelkaj, kelkay dume
Per flato kaj simulo;
Perkise faras gin poltrono,
Perglave kuraglo.

And also the final lines of The Picture of Dorian Gray by Oscar Wilde, one of my favorite books, that I have read, seen on screen, on stage, and that I always find new layers when reading it.

It was an unjust mirror, this mirror of his soul that he was looking at. Vanity? Curiosity? Hypocrisy? Had there been nothing more in his renunciation than that? There had been something more. At least he thought so. But who could tell? And this murder,--was it to dog him all his life? Was he never to get rid of the past? Was he really to confess? No. There was only one bit of evidence left against him. The picture itself,--that was evidence.

He would destroy it. Why had he kept it so long? It had given him pleasure once to watch it changing and growing old. Of late he had felt no such pleasure. It had kept him awake at night. When he had been away, he had been filled with terror lest other eyes should look upon it. It had brought melancholy across his passions. Its mere memory had marred many moments of joy. It had been like conscience to him. Yes, it had been conscience. He would destroy it. He looked round, and saw the knife that had stabbed Basil Hallward. He had cleaned it many times, till there was no stain left upon it. It was bright, and glistened. As it had killed the painter, so it would kill the painter's work, and all that that meant. It would kill the past, and when that was dead he would be free. He seized it, and stabbed the canvas with it, ripping the thing right up from top to bottom. There was a cry heard, and a crash. The cry was so horrible in its agony that the frightened servants woke, and crept out of their rooms. Two gentlemen, who were passing in the Square below, stopped, and looked up at the great house. They walked on till they met a policeman, and brought him back. The man rang the bell several times, but there was no answer. The house was all dark, except for a light in one of the top windows. After a time, he went away, and stood in the portico of the next house and watched.

"Whose house is that, constable?" asked the elder of the two gentlemen.

"Mr. Dorian Gray's, sir," answered the policeman.

They looked at each other, as they walked away, and sneered. One of them was Sir Henry Ashton's uncle. Inside, in the servants' part of the house, the half-clad domestics were talking in low whispers to each other. Old Mrs. Leaf was crying, and wringing her hands. Francis was as pale as death. After about a quarter of an hour, he got the coachman and one of the footmen and crept up-stairs. They knocked, but there was no reply. They called out. Everything was still. Finally, after vainly trying to force the door, they got on the roof, and dropped down on to the balcony. The windows yielded easily: the bolts were old.

When they entered, they found hanging upon the wall a splendid portrait of their master as they had last seen him, in all the wonder of his exquisite youth and beauty. Lying on the floor was a dead man, in evening dress, with a knife in his heart. He was withered, wrinkled, and loathsome of visage. It was not till they had examined the rings that they recognized who it was.

The official language of the French Republic is French and the French government is, by law, compelled to communicate primarily in French. The government, furthermore, mandates that commercial advertising be available in French (though it can also use other languages). The French government, however, does not mandate the use of French by private individuals or corporations or in any other media. A revision of the French constitution creating official recognition of regional languages was implemented by the Parliament in Congress at Versailles in July 2008. The 1999 Report written for the government by Bernard Cerquiglini identified 75 languages that would qualify for recognition under the government's proposed ratification of the European Charter for Regional or Minority Languages. 24 of those languages are indigenous to the European territory of the state while all the others are from overseas areas of the French Republic (in the Caribbean, Indian Ocean, Pacific Ocean and South America).

The regional languages of France are sometimes called patois, but this term (roughly meaning "dialect") is often considered derogatory. Patois is used to refer to supposedly purely oral languages, but this does not, for instance, take into account that Occitan was already being written at a time when French was not and its literature has continued to thrive, with a Nobel Prize for Frédéric Mistral in 1904. At the time of the French revolution in 1789 it is estimated that only half of the population of France could speak any French, and as late as 1871 only a quarter spoke French as their native language. Some of the languages of France are also cross-border languages (for example, Basque, Catalan, Corsican, Dutch, Franc-Comtois, Franco-Provençal, Norman, Picard, Occitan and others), some of which enjoy a recognised or official status in the respective neighbouring state or territory. French itself is also a cross-border language, being spoken in neighbouring Andorra, Belgium, Italy, Luxembourg, Monaco, and Switzerland. Geographical distribution of regional languages and dialects. (Note that French is spoken all over the country, including both Metropolitan France and DOMs-TOMs.

Emile Zola is by far the best author in world's literature, but I am completely biased, having read all his books several times, and he wrote more than 20. Zola encompasses all fields of literature, he is of course a naturalist author, but his books are very different in style and content. Zola was primarily the most humane writer, not only defending the cause of Alfred Dreyfus, but describing all types of women and men and all strata of society with love and compassion. Victor Hugo and Alexandre Dumas are also among the most humane writers, and I was moved to tears when visiting the Pantheon in Paris I discovered that my three most favorite authors are buried in the same room. My love for French literature, art, films, plays, music, language, (but not cuisine and wine), and for the city of Paris, is physical and intellectual, emotional and rational.

My mother tongue was French, but I visited Paris only at the age of 23. I learned with my friends – Armenians, French, Jews, Copts, Greeks and Italians – at the French Lycee in Cairo, about my "ancestors" the Gauls, with exactly the same curriculum as all the French children in France, with the same children songs, books and fairy tales. I lived in the east, but my heart was in the west, in France, the beloved "motherland", although our family didn't have a French passport. As my father was a Zionist, it became very dangerous for him to remain in Egypt after the nationalist revolution in 1952 that was aimed primarily against the Europeans, the French and the British, and of course the Jews, who were perceived as a fifth column. In January 1952, most of the European Cairo was burned by the Shabab rioters who almost burned alive my family, as they killed and wounded hundreds of Europeans. The smell of burning continued to haunt me, then aged 7. I didn't play the lyre but read when Cairo was burning Alice in the Wonderland, and every time that the queen said "coupez lui la tete", another building was being burned. Well, actually, it is quite too much to ask this child to study Arabic and love his Egyptian motherland.

This book is an ode to a cosmopolitan world, the world of my childhood in Cairo, where my school friends, all of them dressed in white aprons, were: Yves Roger Machart, Gilbert Boudot (who once in a while gave me a "tape amicale"), Joseph Vidal, Edwin Nathan, Albert Ancona, Gilbert Misrahi, Benjamin Ruben, Tony Sevy, Vivian Moreno, Jojo Harari, Claude Hayat, Fayez Biktache, Willy Molho, Hamouda Osam, Roland Goldenberg, Andre Palacci, Maxie Bernard, Icham Badraoui, Andre Guigui, Andre Levy, Samy Chame, Chawki Said, Jean Somekh, Isaac Moreno, Hussein Chaaoui. Jews, Arabs, French, Italians, and a French teacher – Mlle. Croquelois (eater of laws...). A world, that I thought is harmonious and secure, where all were friends - Jews and Arabs, but that existed only due to the English bayonets and a corrupt king.

At the age of 11, I had to fight the Israeli ministry of education, my school headmaster, teachers and pupils, who decided that the new immigrants had to cease their studies and become metalworkers. All the pupils learned for the remaining years of their primary education metalwork, but I rebelled with the backing of my parents, as I wanted to be a diplomat and not a worker. I was ostracized, hated, beaten, ridiculed, but I didn't give up, practically not going to school for two years, and studying on my own the curriculum. My consolation was in reading the French classics – Racine, Corneille, Moliere, Hugo, Dumas, Maupassant, Gide, Flaubert, Sand, Maurois, Mauriac, Aragon, Verne, Romain Rolland, Voltaire, Malraux, Balzac, Proust, Sartre, and especially Zola, at the age of 11 to 13... from the huge library of my family. I dreamed that one day I'll visit Paris and study there. This was my solace, those books gave me the moral justification to fight back the system, to feel superior to my "oppressors". This was my bibliotherapy, long before it became an academic term, those were the roots of my intellectual personality, of my love to France and French culture, and also of my cosmopolitan background. See the story of my earliest memory at a performance of L'Aiglon by the Comedie Francaise in Cairo, with a detailed description of the event, and extract of the French text of the play in Plays.

My recollections as a child are primarily of the children songs that my mother taught me, first of all Frere Jacques – Brother Jack/John (as I was myself Jacques), but also – ainsi font font font, sur le pont d'Avignon and many others. When I visited Avignon and stayed there for five days seeing every night a play at the festival in French, Spanish & German, I took my group, who was visiting with me for a couple of weeks Provence and the Pyrenees, to the Avignon bridge, and all my friends danced with me and repeated the gestures of how the men, women, etc. danced.

Frere Jacques, Frere Jacques,
Dormez-vous? Dormez-vous?
Sonnez les matines, sonnez les matines
Ding dang dong, ding dang dong.

English version

Are you sleeping, are you sleeping?
Brother John, Brother John?
Morning bells are ringing, morning bells are ringing
Ding dang dong, ding dang dong.

Ainsi font, font, font,
Les petites marionnettes,
Ainsi font, font, font,
Trois p'tits tours et puis s'en vont.

(Refrain :)

Sur le pont d'Avignon,
L'on y danse, l'on y danse,
Sur le pont d'Avignon
L'on y danse tous en rond.

Les belles dames font comme ça
Et puis encore comme ça.

(Au refrain)

2.

Les messieurs font comme ça

Et puis encore comme ça.

(Au refrain)

It is indeed a marvelous story – how the Jews from the Balkan, Turkey and Israel had so many roots in so many cultures – they sang and spoke Ladino that they took with them from Spain in 1492, the men spoke sometimes the local language - Bulgarian, Greek, Turkish or Arabic, but French at the end of the 19th century became the lingua franca of all the Eastern Jews, children studied at French schools – secular as the Lycee or religious as Saint Vincent de Paul, where my mother Pauline studied. She received an excellent education from the nuns who didn't try to convert her, and school was free as she came from a very poor family. When I was visiting Jerusalem I saw a school of Saint Vincent de Paul, I entered the school and asked to see the Mere Superieure. She didn't understand at first what this Israeli student is looking for in a convent where Arab pupils were studying. But I told her that I came to thank the Order of Saint Vincent de Paul personally for the excellent education that my mother received. If my mother wouldn't be educated by you, I would never have succeeded to be such a good student, I said. The nun was much moved and took me for a visit to the classes, and I imagined my mother sitting on one of the chairs learning French poetry or history. Pauline, my mother, was the most estranged woman in the world – living in her 86 years – 43 in Egypt without knowing Arabic except for a few words needed to buy groceries, and 43 years in Israel, with a very limited knowledge of Hebrew just enough to speak with her grandchildren. But she was fluent in Italian (from her friends), Greek (from her father born in Larissa), English from school, and of course French and Ladino – her mother tongues. Pauline has never visited the countries where those languages were spoken – Spain, France (except for a week on the way to Israel), Italy, Greece or England, she was the ultimate cosmopolitan and her homeland was the cosmos – more exactly the European cosmos, and even not Israel that became the homeland of her children and of her Zionist husband Albert, the country of her Jewish ancestors, whose descendants have at last come back home.

I visited Paris dozens of times: For business – working for Elbit as VP Sales where we had a subsidiary there, as a free lancer working for an American company and many other companies, promoting business of my own during a couple of years in 1994-1996, visiting Paris every month or so. For studies - I stayed a year at the nearby Fontainebleau for my MBA studies at Insead, with frequent visits to Paris, inter alia in May 1968 to participate in the Students Revolution, and I made many trips to Paris for my PhD dissertation, first at Universite de Paris and then at CNAM. For tourism - with my wife, my son, my daughter, in Paris, Bretagne, Normandie, les chateaux de la Loire, Provence, Lyon, Cote d'Azur, Monaco, Pyrenees, Grenoble, Marseille, etc. I feel in Paris and France at home, loving the city, going for long walks – guided or by myself, visiting many times most of the museums, going every night to the theater, sometimes to three plays in a row, to cinema, loving so much to walk on the Champs Elysees and the nearby, at Christmas, not going ever on shopping, almost not going to coffee shops, fancy restaurants, pubs, night clubs, discotheques (only once to Regine), not drinking wine or alcoholic beverages, fruits de mer, fish. I adhered only to the cultural France although I am aware of its other facets. And as Josephine Baker sings, I have two loves – my country and Paris: J'ai deux amours mon pays et Paris, I like to be sous le ciel de Paris – under Paris' sky like Juliette Greco, and I love Paris a sensual love – Paris je t'aime d'amour, as Maurice Chevalier does.

I was an habitue de la maison, staying frequently at the same small hotel for twenty years – on business, studies or tourism, bringing there my family, my colleagues, my friends, staying there in aggregate months – I knew the owner, manager, all the employees at the front desk, kitchen, cleaning – and paying a modest sum of a hundred dollars or euros per night for most of the years. It was very convenient for me, as the hotel was located in the 8th arrondissement, near all the places I attended by foot, metro or taxi. All of a sudden the owner decided that he is no more a small family hotel of 20 rooms, but a boutique hotel, he made some minor changes, and charged 400 euros – and the more he charged the more tourists came, until I decided that I can no more afford staying at the same hotel. This is how you can succumb to the maximization of profits, positioning yourself as a boutique hotel, and finding "suckers" who buy it and are willing to pay any price for a room that normally cost a hundred euros at most. You can be sure that the owner did not increase accordingly the salaries of the employees. But no matter which hotel I resided, I love Paris and am never tired from staying there, as it is the most beautiful, interesting, cultural city in the world, and I am content that I spent so much time there. While I had mixed feelings with most of other countries, France and Paris were always good and hospitable for me.

I referred at length to the literature of Emile Zola and Marcel Pagnol in the Provence chapter. Here, I would like to quote from the Wikipedia a few lines on Marcel Pagnol and Emile Zola. Marcel Pagnol; 28 February 1895 – 18 April 1974) was a French novelist, playwright, and filmmaker. In 1946, he became the first filmmaker elected to the Académie française. Pagnol is generally regarded as one of France's greatest 20th-century writers and is notable for the fact that he excelled and was popular in almost every medium--memoir, novel, drama and film.

Marcel Pagnol was born on 28 February 1895 in Aubagne, Bouches-du-Rhône département, in southern France near Marseille, the eldest son of schoolteacher Joseph Pagnol and seamstress Augustine Lansot. Marcel Pagnol grew up in Marseille with his younger brothers Paul and René, and younger sister Germaine. In July 1904, the family rented the Bastide Neuve, – a house in the sleepy Provençal village of La Treille – for the summer holidays, the first of many spent in the hilly countryside between Aubagne and Marseille. About the same time, Augustine's health, which had never been robust, began to noticeably decline and on 16 June 1910 she succumbed to a chest infection ("mal de poitrine") and died, aged 36. Joseph remarried in 1912.¹ In 1913, at the age of 18, Marcel passed his baccalaureate in philosophy and started studying literature at the University in Aix-en-Provence. When World War I broke out, he was called up into the infantry at Nice but in January 1915 he was discharged because of his poor constitution ("faiblesse de constitution"). In 1916, he married Simone Colin in Marseille and in November graduated in English. He became an English teacher, teaching in local colleges and at a lycée in Marseille.

In 1922, he moved to Paris, where he taught English until 1927, when he decided instead to devote his life to playwriting. During this time, he belonged to a group of young writers, in collaboration with one of whom, Paul Nivoix, he wrote the play, Merchants of Glory, which was produced in 1924. This was followed, in 1928, by Topaze, a satire based on ambition. Exiled in Paris, he returned nostalgically to his Provençal roots, taking this as his setting for his play, Marius, which later became the first of his works to be adapted into a film in 1931. Separated from Simone Collin since 1926 (though not divorced until 1941), he formed a relationship with the young English dancer Kitty Murphy: their son, Jacques Pagnol, was born in 1930.

In 1926, on a visit to London, Pagnol attended a screening of one of the first talking films and he was so impressed that he decided to devote his efforts to cinema. He contacted Paramount Picture studios and suggested adapting his play Marius for cinema. This was directed by Alexander Korda and released on 10 October 1931. It became one of the first successful French-language talking films. In 1932 Pagnol founded his own film production studios in the countryside near Marseille. Over the next decade Pagnol produced his own films, taking many different roles in the production – financier, director, script writer, studio head, and foreign-language script translator – and employing the greatest French actors of the period. On 4 April 1946, Pagnol was elected to the Académie française, taking his seat in March 1947, the first filmmaker to receive this honour. In his films, Pagnol transfers his playwriting talents onto the big screen. His editing style is somberly reserved, placing emphasis on the content of an image. As a pictorial naturalist, Pagnol relies on film as art to convey a deeper meaning rather than solely as a tool to tell a story. Pagnol also took great care in the type of actors he employed, hiring local actors to appear in his films to highlight their unique accents and culture. Like his plays, Pagnol's films emphasize dialogue and musicality. The themes of many of Pagnol's films revolve around the acute observation of social rituals. Using interchangeable symbols and recurring character roles, such as proud fathers and rebellious children, Pagnol illuminates the provincial life of the lower class. Notably, Pagnol also frequently compares women and land, showing both can be barren or fertile. Above all, Pagnol uses all this to illustrate the importance of human bonds and their renewal.

In 1945, Pagnol remarried, to actress Jacqueline Pagnol. They had two children together, Frédéric (born 1946) and Estelle (born 1949). Estelle died at the age of two. Pagnol was so devastated that he fled the south and returned to live in Paris. He went back to writing plays, but after his next piece was badly received he decided to change his job once more and began writing a series of autobiographical novels – Souvenirs d'enfance – based on his childhood experiences. In 1957, the first two novels in the series, La Gloire de mon père and Le château de ma mère were published to instant acclaim. The third Le Temps des secrets was published in 1959; though the fourth Le Temps des Amours was to remain unfinished and was not published until 1977, after his death. In the meantime, Pagnol turned to a second series, L'Eau des Collines – Jean de Florette and Manon des Sources – which focused on the machinations of Provençal peasant life at the turn of the twentieth century and were published in 1962. Pagnol adapted his own film Manon des Sources, with his wife, Jacqueline, in the title role, into two novels, Jean de Florette and Manon des Sources, collectively titled L'Eau des Collines. Marcel Pagnol died in Paris on 18 April 1974. He is buried in Marseille at the cemetery La Treille, along with his mother, father, brothers, and wife. In the Provençal chapter and in the Appendix one can find as well an analysis and quotes on Pagnol's works.

Émile Édouard Charles Antoine Zola; 2 April 1840 – 29 September 1902) was a French writer, the most well-known practitioner of the literary school of naturalism and an important contributor to the development of theatrical naturalism. He was a major figure in the political liberalization of France and in the exoneration of the falsely accused and convicted army officer Alfred Dreyfus, which is encapsulated in the renowned newspaper headline J'accuse. Zola was nominated for the first and second Nobel Prize in Literature in 1901 and 1902. Zola was born in Paris in 1840. His father, François Zola (originally Francesco Zola), was an Italian engineer, born in Venice in 1795, and his mother, Émilie Aubert, was French. The family moved to Aix-en-Provence in the southeast when Émile was three years old. Four years later, in 1847, his father died, leaving his mother on a meager pension. In 1858, the Zolas moved to Paris, where Émile's childhood friend Paul Cézanne soon joined him. Zola started to write in the romantic style. His widowed mother had planned a law career for Émile, but he failed his Baccalauréat examination.

Before his breakthrough as a writer, Zola worked as a clerk in a shipping firm and then in the sales department for a publisher (Hachette). He also wrote literary and art reviews for newspapers. As a political journalist, Zola did not hide his dislike of Napoleon III, who had successfully run for the office of President under the constitution of the French Second Republic, only to misuse this position as a springboard for the coup d'état that made him emperor. In 1862

Zola was naturalized as a French citizen. In 1864 he met Éléonore-Alexandrine Meley, who called herself Gabrielle, a seamstress, who may have also worked as a prostitute. He married her on the 31 May 1870. She stayed with him all his life and was instrumental in promoting his work. The marriage remained childless. Alexandrine Zola did have a child before she met Zola that she gave up, because she was unable to take care of it. When she confessed of this to Zola after their marriage, they went looking for the girl, but she had died a short time after birth. In 1888 she hired Jeanne Rozerot, a seamstress who was to live with them in their home in Medan. Zola fell in love with Jeanne and fathered two children with her, Denise in 1889 and Jacques in 1891. After Jeanne left Medan for Paris, Zola continued to support and visit her and their children. In November 1891 Alexandrine discovered the affair, bringing the marriage to the brink of divorce however after the conflict had been somewhat resolved Zola was able to take an increasingly active role in the lives of the children. After his death, the children were given his name as their lawful surname. In 1888 he took up photography and obtained a near professional level of expertise.

During his early years, Zola wrote numerous short stories and essays, four plays and three novels. Among his early books was Contes à Ninon, published in 1864. With the publication of his sordid autobiographical novel La Confession de Claude (1865) attracting police attention, Hachette fired him. His novel Les Mystères de Marseille appeared as a serial in 1867. After his first major novel, Thérèse Raquin (1867), Zola started the series called Les Rougon Macquart, about a family under the Second Empire. In Paris Zola maintained his friendship with Cézanne who painted a portrait of him with another friend from Aix-en-Provence, writer Paul Alexis, entitled Paul Alexis reading to Zola. More than half of Zola's novels were part of this set of 20 collectively known as Les Rougon-Macquart. Unlike Balzac who in the midst of his literary career resynthesized his work into La Comédie Humaine, Zola from the start at the age of 28 had thought of the complete layout of the series. Set in France's Second Empire, the series traces the "environmental" influences of violence, alcohol and prostitution which became more prevalent during the second wave of the Industrial Revolution. The series examines two branches of a family: the respectable (that is, legitimate) Rougons and the disreputable (illegitimate) Macquarts for five generations.

As he described his plans for the series, "I want to portray, at the outset of a century of liberty and truth, a family that cannot restrain itself in its rush to possess all the good things that progress is making available and is derailed by its own momentum, the fatal convulsions that accompany the birth of a new world." Although Zola and Cézanne were friends from childhood, they experienced a falling out later in life over Zola's fictionalized depiction of Cézanne and the Bohemian life of painters in his novel L'Œuvre (The Masterpiece, 1886). From 1877 with the publication of l'Assommoir, Émile Zola became wealthy; he was better paid than Victor Hugo, for example. He became a figurehead among the literary bourgeoisie and organized cultural dinners with Guy de Maupassant, Joris-Karl Huysmans and other writers at his luxurious villa (worth 300,000 francs) in Medan near Paris after 1880. Germinal in 1885, then the three 'cities', Lourdes in 1894, Rome in 1896 and Paris in 1897, established Zola as a successful author. The self-proclaimed leader of French naturalism, Zola's works inspired operas such as those of Gustave Charpentier, notably Louise in the 1890s. His works, inspired by the concepts of heredity (Claude Bernard), social Manicheanism and idealistic socialism, resonate with those of Nadar, Manet and subsequently Flaubert. In the chapter on Provencal I write at length on Zola's role in the Dreyfus affair as well as on his premature death and what ensued subsequently. In this chapter and in the Appendix one can find as well an analysis and quotes on Zola's works.

I would like to quote here five (out of 50) most beloved authors – Victor Hugo, Alexandre Dumas, Honore de Balzac, Jean-Paul Sartre, Marcel Proust. I'll start with Les Misérables by Victor Hugo, which I read several times, saw the films and even the musical.

Victor Marie Hugo; 26 February 1802 – 22 May 1885) was a French poet, novelist, and dramatist of the Romantic movement. He is considered one of the greatest and best known French writers. In France, Hugo's literary fame comes first from his poetry but also rests upon his novels and his dramatic achievements. Among many volumes of poetry, Les Contemplations and La Légende des siècles stand particularly high in critical esteem. Outside France, his best-known works are the acclaimed novels Les Misérables, 1862, and Notre-Dame de Paris, 1831 (known in English as The Hunchback of Notre-Dame). He also produced more than 4,000 drawings, which have since been admired for their beauty, and earned widespread respect as a campaigner for social causes such as the abolition of the death penalty. Though a committed royalist when he was young, Hugo's views changed as the decades passed, and he became a passionate supporter of republicanism; his work touches upon most of the political and social issues and artistic trends of his time. He was buried in the Panthéon. His legacy has been honored in many ways, including his portrait being placed on francs.

Victor Hugo's first mature work of fiction appeared in 1829, and reflected the acute social conscience that would infuse his later work. Le Dernier jour d'un condamné (The Last Day of a Condemned Man) would have a profound influence on later writers such as Albert Camus, Charles Dickens, and Fyodor Dostoevsky. Claude Gueux, a documentary short story about a real-life murderer who had been executed in France, appeared in 1834, and was later considered by Hugo himself to be a precursor to his great work on social injustice, Les Misérables. Hugo became the figurehead of the romantic literary movement with the plays Cromwell (1827) and Hernani (1830). Hugo's novel Notre-Dame de Paris (The Hunchback of Notre-Dame) was published in 1831 and quickly translated into other languages across Europe. One of the effects of the novel was to shame the City of Paris into restoring the much-neglected Cathedral of Notre Dame, which was attracting thousands of tourists who had read the popular novel. The book also inspired a renewed appreciation for pre-Renaissance buildings, which thereafter began to be actively preserved.

Hugo began planning a major novel about social misery and injustice as early as the 1830s, but it would take a full 17 years for Les Misérables to be realized and finally published in 1862. Hugo was acutely aware of the quality of the novel and publication of the work went to the highest bidder. The Belgian publishing house Lacroix and Verboeckhoven undertook a marketing campaign unusual for the time, issuing press releases about the work a full six months before the launch. It also initially published only the first part of the novel ("Fantine"), which was launched simultaneously in major cities. Installments of the book sold out within hours, and had enormous impact on French society. Beginning in 1815 and culminating in the 1832 June Rebellion in Paris, the novel follows the lives and interactions of several characters, particularly the struggles of ex-convict Jean Valjean and his experience of redemption. Examining the nature of law and grace, the novel elaborates upon the history of France, the architecture and urban design of Paris, politics, moral philosophy, antimonarchism, justice, religion, and the types and nature of romantic and familial love. Les Misérables has been popularized through numerous adaptations for the stage, television, and film, including a musical and a film adaptation of that musical. The appearance of the novel was highly anticipated and advertised. Critical reactions were diverse, but most of them were negative. Commercially, the work was a great success globally. We bring here an extract of Les Misérables. We chose to bring here Tome 5, livre premier, chapitre 6 in French and English, on the Paris barricades in 1848.

Chapitre VI Marius hagard, Javert laconique

Disons ce qui se passait dans la pensée de Marius. Qu'on se souvienne de sa situation d'âme. Nous venons de le rappeler, tout n'était plus pour lui que vision. Son appréciation était trouble. Marius, insistons-y, était sous l'ombre des grandes ailes ténébreuses ouvertes sur les agonisants. Il se sentait entré dans le tombeau, il lui semblait qu'il était déjà de l'autre côté de la muraille, et il ne voyait plus les faces des vivants qu'avec les yeux d'un mort. Comment M. Fauchelevant était-il là? Pourquoi y était-il? Qu'y venait-il faire? Marius ne s'adressa point toutes ces questions. D'ailleurs, notre désespoir ayant cela de particulier qu'il enveloppe autrui comme nous-mêmes, il lui semblait logique que tout le monde vînt mourir.

Seulement il songea à Cosette avec un serrement de cœur. Du reste M. Fauchelevant ne lui parla pas, ne le regarda pas, et n'eut pas même l'air d'entendre lorsque Marius éleva la voix pour dire: Je le connais. Quant à Marius, cette attitude de M. Fauchelevant le soulageait, et si l'on pouvait employer un tel mot pour de telles impressions, nous dirions, lui plaisait. Il s'était toujours senti une impossibilité absolue d'adresser la parole à cet homme énigmatique qui était à la fois pour lui équivoque et imposant. Il y avait en outre très longtemps qu'il ne l'avait vu; ce qui, pour la nature timide et réservée de Marius, augmentait encore l'impossibilité.

Les cinq hommes désignés sortirent de la barricade par la ruelle Mondétour; ils ressemblaient parfaitement à des gardes nationaux. Un d'eux s'en alla en pleurant. Avant de partir, ils embrassèrent ceux qui restaient. Quand les cinq hommes renvoyés à la vie furent partis, Enjolras pensa au condamné à mort. Il entra dans la salle basse. Javert, lié au pilier, songeait. —Te faut-il quelque chose? lui demanda Enjolras. Javert répondit:

—Quand me tuerez-vous?

—Attends. Nous avons besoin de toutes nos cartouches en ce moment.

—Alors, donnez-moi à boire, dit Javert.

Enjolras lui présenta lui-même un verre d'eau, et, comme Javert était garrotté, il l'aida à boire.

—Est-ce là tout? reprit Enjolras.

—Je suis mal à ce poteau, répondit Javert. Vous n'êtes pas tendres de m'avoir laissé passer la nuit là. Liez-moi comme il vous plaira, mais vous pouvez bien me coucher sur une table comme l'autre. Et d'un mouvement de tête il désignait le cadavre de M. Mabeuf. Il y avait, on s'en souvient, au fond de la salle une grande et longue table sur laquelle on avait fondu des balles et fait des cartouches. Toutes les cartouches étant faites et toute la poudre étant employée, cette table était libre.

Sur l'ordre d'Enjolras, quatre insurgés délièrent Javert du poteau. Tandis qu'on le déliait, un cinquième lui tenait une bayonnette appuyée sur la poitrine. On lui laissa les mains attachées derrière le dos, on lui mit aux pieds une corde à fouet mince et solide qui lui permettait de faire des pas de quinze pouces comme à ceux qui vont monter à l'échafaud, et on le fit marcher jusqu'à la table au fond de la salle où on l'étendit, étroitement lié par le milieu du corps. Pour plus de sûreté, au moyen d'une corde fixée au cou, on ajouta au système de ligatures qui lui rendaient toute évasion impossible cette espèce de lien, appelé dans les prisons martingale, qui part de la nuque, se bifurque sur l'estomac, et vient rejoindre les mains après avoir passé entre les jambes.

Pendant qu'on garrottait Javert, un homme, sur le seuil de la porte, le considérait avec une attention singulière. L'ombre que faisait cet homme fit tourner la tête à Javert. Il leva les yeux et reconnut Jean Valjean. Il ne tressaillit même pas, abaissa fièrement la paupière, et se borna à dire: C'est tout simple.

CHAPTER VI—MARIUS HAGGARD, JAVERT LACONIC

Let us narrate what was passing in Marius' thoughts.

Let the reader recall the state of his soul. We have just recalled it, everything was a vision to him now. His judgment was disturbed. Marius, let us insist on this point, was under the shadow of the great, dark wings which are spread over those in the death agony. He felt that he had entered the tomb, it seemed to him that he was already on the other side of the wall, and he no longer beheld the faces of the living except with the eyes of one dead. How did M. Fauchelevent come there? Why was he there? What had he come there to do? Marius did not address all these questions to himself. Besides, since our despair has this peculiarity, that it envelops others as well as ourselves, it seemed logical to him that all the world should come thither to die.

Only, he thought of Cosette with a pang at his heart. However, M. Fauchelevent did not speak to him, did not look at him, and had not even the air of hearing him, when Marius raised his voice to say: "I know him." As far as Marius was concerned, this attitude of M. Fauchelevent was comforting, and, if such a word can be used for such impressions, we should say that it pleased him. He had always felt the absolute impossibility of addressing that enigmatical man, who was, in his eyes, both equivocal and imposing. Moreover, it had been a long time since he had seen him; and this still further augmented the impossibility for Marius' timid and reserved nature.

The five chosen men left the barricade by way of Mondetour lane; they bore a perfect resemblance to members of the National Guard. One of them wept as he took his leave. Before setting out, they embraced those who remained. When the five men sent back to life had taken their departure, Enjolras thought of the man who had been condemned to death. He entered the tap-room. Javert, still bound to the post, was engaged in meditation.

"Do you want anything?" Enjolras asked him.

Javert replied: "When are you going to kill me?"

"Wait. We need all our cartridges just at present."

"Then give me a drink," said Javert.

Enjolras himself offered him a glass of water, and, as Javert was pinioned, he helped him to drink.

"Is that all?" inquired Enjolras.

"I am uncomfortable against this post," replied Javert. "You are not tender to have left me to pass the night here. Bind me as you please, but you surely might lay me out on a table like that other man." And with a motion of the head, he indicated the body of M. Mabeuf.

There was, as the reader will remember, a long, broad table at the end of the room, on which they had been running bullets and making cartridges. All the cartridges having been made, and all the powder used, this table was free. At Enjolras' command, four insurgents unbound Javert from the post. While they were loosing him, a fifth held a bayonet against his breast. Leaving his arms tied behind his back, they placed about his feet a slender but stout whip-cord, as is done to men on the point of mounting the scaffold, which allowed him to take steps about fifteen inches in length, and made him walk to the table at the end of the room, where they laid him down, closely bound about the middle of the body. By way of further security, and by means of a rope fastened to his neck, they added to the system of ligatures which rendered every attempt at escape impossible, that sort of bond which is called in prisons a martingale, which, starting at the neck, forks on the stomach, and meets the hands, after passing between the legs.

While they were binding Javert, a man standing on the threshold was surveying him with singular attention. The shadow cast by this man made Javert turn his head. He raised his eyes, and recognized Jean Valjean. He did not even start, but dropped his lids proudly and confined himself to the remark: "It is perfectly simple."

Alexandre Dumas was one of the most loved authors, undoubtedly the author of my childhood. I read many of his books several times and above all I liked Les trois mousquetaires - The Three Musketeers, followed by Twenty Years After, and finally by The Vicomte de Bragelonne – ten volumes that I knew almost by heart. His novels have been translated into nearly 100 languages. In addition, they have inspired more than 200 motion pictures. Dumas is therefore very cosmopolitan, one of the most cosmopolitan authors. Prolific in several genres, Dumas began his career by writing plays, which were successfully produced from the first. He also wrote numerous magazine articles and travel books; his published works totaled 100,000 pages. In the 1840s, Dumas founded the Théâtre Historique in Paris.

Dumas' father (general Thomas-Alexandre Davy de la Pailleterie) was born in Saint-Domingue (present-day Haiti) to a French nobleman and an enslaved African woman. At age 14, Thomas-Alexandre was taken by his father to France, where he was educated in a military academy and entered the military for what he made as an illustrious career. His father's aristocratic rank helped young Alexandre acquire work with Louis-Philippe, Duke of Orléans. He later began working as a writer, finding early success. Decades later, in the election of Louis-Napoléon Bonaparte in 1851, Dumas fell from favor, and left France for Belgium, where he stayed for several years. Upon leaving Belgium, Dumas moved to Russia for a few years, before going to Italy. In 1861 he founded and published the newspaper, L'Indipendente, which supported the Italian unification effort. In 1864 he returned to Paris.

Though married, in the tradition of Frenchmen of higher social class, Dumas had numerous affairs (allegedly as many as forty). He was known to have at least four illegitimate or "natural" children, including a boy named Alexandre Dumas after him. This son became a successful novelist and playwright, and was known as Alexandre Dumas, fils (son), while the elder Dumas became conventionally known in French as Alexandre Dumas, père (father). Among his affairs, in 1866 Dumas had one with Adah Isaacs Menken, an American actress then less than half his age and at the height of her career. Twentieth-century scholars have found that Dumas fathered another three "natural" children.

With all due respect to the Three Musketeers, the novel I like most is The Count of Monte Cristo, as it encompasses social, historical and moral issues that are relevant even today. The Count of Monte Cristo (French: Le Comte de Monte-Cristo) is an adventure novel by French author Alexandre Dumas \(père\) completed in 1844. It is one of the author's most popular and translated works, along with The Three Musketeers. Like many of his novels, it is expanded from plot outlines suggested by his collaborating ghostwriter Auguste Maquet. The story takes place in France, Italy, and islands in the Mediterranean during the historical events of 1815–1839: the era of the Bourbon Restoration through the reign of Louis-Philippe of France. It begins just before the Hundred Days period (when Napoleon returned to power after his exile). The historical setting is a fundamental element of the book, an adventure story primarily concerned with themes of hope, justice, vengeance, mercy, and forgiveness. It centres around a man who is wrongfully imprisoned, escapes from jail, acquires a fortune, and sets about getting revenge on those responsible for his imprisonment. However, his plans have devastating consequences for the innocent as well as the guilty. It is also a story that involves romance, loyalty, betrayal, and selfishness, shown throughout the story as characters slowly reveal their true inner nature.

The book is considered a literary classic today. According to Luc Sante, "The Count of Monte Cristo has become a fixture of Western civilization's literature, as inescapable and immediately identifiable as Mickey Mouse, Noah's flood, and the story of Little Red Riding Hood." George Saintsbury stated: "Monte Cristo is said to have been at its first appearance, and for some time subsequently, the most popular book in Europe. Perhaps no novel within a given number of years had so many readers and penetrated into so many different countries." This popularity has extended into modern times as well. The book was "translated into virtually all modern languages and has never been out of print in most of them. There have been at least twenty-nine motion pictures based on it ... as well as several television series, and many movies [have] worked the name 'Monte Cristo' into their titles." The title Monte Cristo lives on in a "famous gold mine, a line of luxury Cuban cigars, a sandwich, and any number of bars and casinos—it even lurks in the name of the street-corner hustle three-card monte."

The issue that fascinates me most in this book is condensed in one sentence: « Et maintenant, dit l'homme inconnu, adieu bonté, humanité, reconnaissance... Adieu à tous les sentiments qui épanouissent le coeur !... Je me suis substitué à la Providence pour récompenser les bons... que le Dieu vengeur me cède sa place pour punir les méchants ! » Monte Cristo sums up his motives by saying in the middle of this monumental book: "And now, said the unknown, farewell kindness, humanity, gratitude... Farewell to all the feelings that expand the heart!... I have been Heaven's substitute to recompense the good ... now the God of vengeance yields to me his power to punish the wicked!" I think that I have recompensed by far all the good people, all those who helped me, all those who deserved to be recompensed as they were rightly motivated, my friends, my family, acquaintances, my employees, financially, praising them, showing them my gratitude. However, I was not rewarded in most of the cases for my good deeds, neither I expected any rewards, as ingratitude rules the world. But, Providence or coincidence, worked on my behalf and I was rewarded by people to whom I have never done any good actions, as the Baron Edmond de Rothschild, Henri-Claude de Bettignies, Henk Van Luijk (true noble men).

I almost never punished the wicked, not by cowardice, sometimes because it was impossible, always never prayed for vengeance. I prayed for success, to overcome the wrongdoings done to me, but I've never prayed or acted in a vengeance mode. I tried my best to disclose the wrongdoings and point the finger to the wicked, more in order to avoid the perpetuation of wickedness to others than out of vengeance. Sometimes it cost my opponents a very high price of millions (don't worry, they gained much more from their schemes), or they lost a client or did not get a job, but in general all the crooks were compensated much more than what they lost, in jobs, goodwill or money. Often, awful things occurred to them or their relatives, death, diseases, but it was not a result of my prayers as I never prayed for their destruction and I don't believe in God anyhow, and awful things occurred also to friends who were kind hearted and never wronged anybody – so, one can attribute to coincidence what happened to some of my opponents, rather than Providence, and the most wicked were not even touched and they continue to prosper rich from their schemes, healthy as ever, with longevity.

Neither have I forgiven those who wronged me – I am not Jesus and don't have an obligation or an inclination for forgiveness. I can forgive the people that I love and have wronged me and I expect them to forgive me as well. A family is an institution based on love and forgiveness. But in business, academics, or politics it is a different story. To the best of my knowledge I've never wronged substantially or deliberately anybody, I have fired employees rarely and always because they deserved so (but maybe they think otherwise), in litigation I sued or was sued very few times and here again the issues could have been not so clearcut (except in one case when I defended the company's wrongdoing to a client although my responsibility was minimal, but as all the "rats" ran away from the sinking boat, I remained alone to defend my company and we lost rightly so the case). I cannot say that I never thought of vengeance, but I declined to consider it seriously for several reasons: first of all as I saw what were the ramifications of the revenge of Monte Cristo on those responsible for his imprisonment, as his plans had devastating consequences for the innocent as well as the guilty. The intellectual man who reads a lot draws lessons for the future from all the classics that he reads or watches – novels, plays, films, philosophy, history – and he avoids making the same mistakes as Monte Cristo, Julius Caesar, King Lear, Jean de Florette or Dr. Stockmann. But also from a deliberate choice to act only ethically and it is very difficult to get revenge ethically from unethical people backed by the richest tycoons, the most powerful politicians, with the lenience of the judges towards the rich.

And if you resort to the same methods as the crooks, as Topaz did, it ruins your character and you become a wolf in a country of wolves. Furthermore, the wicked will always win in an unethical contest as they are much more fluent in all the unethical techniques, so it is a lose lose situation anyhow. It goes without saying that it cost a lot in money, attention, efforts (even heart attacks as in Wall Street), you don't think positive and you cannot get over it, you remain embittered, unsocial, revengeful, ostracized, you have to think positive and move to your next position in life rather than getting stuck with your thoughts of revenge, whether in business, in marriage, in friendship or politics. Finally, I made once a list how many people wronged me substantially. In one of the cases – when I lost because of a scheme most of my savings I started with two, but then I thought what about the lawyers who gave them bad counsels as it is always good to collaborate with the rich and wrong than with the poor and right, the employees who participated in the plunder as they were afraid to lose their jobs or just enjoyed wronging their best friend, the government officials who backed the crooks and got rewarded, the banks, the auditors, in short I arrived to a list of 20 and this was only on one of the cases – so is it feasible to get revenge from 20 instead of 2, are they truly wrong although they did not instigate the scheme, could they not cooperate in the scheme and retain their job or their client? So, instead of seeking revenge I decided to cleanse myself by studying business ethics, writing the first dissertation and academic books on ethics to minority shareholders, and warn the others not to make the same mistakes as I did and discern schemes from their earliest stages.

So, instead of seeking revenge and ask the God of vengeance to yield to me his power, I decided to adopt the last couple of words of the book – Attendre et esperer – wait and hope, wait and hope for social and economic justice, for business ethics prevailing in business, for the just being rewarded and the wicked being ostracized instead of the other way round as it is now. That is why, we bring here the final pages of the novel in English and the last page in French too.

Valentine seized the count's hand, and in her irresistible impulse of joy carried it to her lips.

"Oh, thank me again!" said the count; "tell me till you are weary, that I have restored you to happiness; you do not know how much I require this assurance."

"Oh, yes, yes, I thank you with all my heart," said Valentine; "and if you doubt the sincerity of my gratitude, oh, then, ask Haidee! ask my beloved sister Haidee, who ever since our departure from France, has caused me to wait patiently for this happy day, while talking to me of you."

"You then love Haidee?" asked Monte Cristo with an emotion he in vain endeavored to dissimulate.

"Oh, yes, with all my soul."

"Well, then, listen, Valentine," said the count; "I have a favor to ask of you."

"Of me? Oh, am I happy enough for that?"

"Yes; you have called Haidee your sister,—let her become so indeed, Valentine; render her all the gratitude you fancy that you owe to me; protect her, for" (the count's voice was thick with emotion) "henceforth she will be alone in the world."

"Alone in the world!" repeated a voice behind the count, "and why?"

Monte Cristo turned around; Haidee was standing pale, motionless, looking at the count with an expression of fearful amazement.

"Because to-morrow, Haidee, you will be free; you will then assume your proper position in society, for I will not allow my destiny to overshadow yours. Daughter of a prince, I restore to you the riches and name of your father."

Haidee became pale, and lifting her transparent hands to heaven, exclaimed in a voice stifled with tears, "Then you leave me, my lord?"

"Haidee, Haidee, you are young and beautiful; forget even my name, and be happy."

"It is well," said Haidee; "your order shall be executed, my lord; I will forget even your name, and be happy." And she stepped back to retire.

"Oh, heavens," exclaimed Valentine, who was supporting the head of Morrel on her shoulder, "do you not see how pale she is? Do you not see how she suffers?"

Haidee answered with a heartrending expression, "Why should he understand this, my sister? He is my master, and I am his slave; he has the right to notice nothing."

The count shuddered at the tones of a voice which penetrated the inmost recesses of his heart; his eyes met those of the young girl and he could not bear their brilliancy. "Oh, heavens," exclaimed Monte Cristo, "can my suspicions be correct? Haidee, would it please you not to leave me?"

"I am young," gently replied Haidee; "I love the life you have made so sweet to me, and I should be sorry to die."

"You mean, then, that if I leave you, Haidee"—

"I should die; yes, my lord."

"Do you then love me?"

"Oh, Valentine, he asks if I love him. Valentine, tell him if you love Maximilian." The count felt his heart dilate and throb; he opened his arms, and Haidee, uttering a cry, sprang into them. "Oh, yes," she cried, "I do love you! I love you as one loves a father, brother, husband! I love you as my life, for you are the best, the noblest of created beings!"

"Let it be, then, as you wish, sweet angel; God has sustained me in my struggle with my enemies, and has given me this reward; he will not let me end my triumph in suffering; I wished to punish myself, but he has pardoned me. Love me then, Haidee! Who knows? perhaps your love will make me forget all that I do not wish to remember."

"What do you mean, my lord?"

"I mean that one word from you has enlightened me more than twenty years of slow experience; I have but you in the world, Haidee; through you I again take hold on life, through you I shall suffer, through you rejoice."

"Do you hear him, Valentine?" exclaimed Haidee; "he says that through me he will suffer—through me, who would yield my life for his." The count withdrew for a moment. "Have I discovered the truth?" he said; "but whether it be for recompense or punishment, I accept my fate. Come, Haidee, come!" and throwing his arm around the young girl's waist, he pressed the hand of Valentine, and disappeared.

An hour had nearly passed, during which Valentine, breathless and motionless, watched steadfastly over Morrel. At length she felt his heart beat, a faint breath played upon his lips, a slight shudder, announcing the return of life, passed through the young man's frame. At length his eyes opened, but they were at first fixed and expressionless; then sight returned, and with it feeling and grief. "Oh," he cried, in an accent of despair, "the count has deceived me; I am yet living;" and extending his hand towards the table, he seized a knife.

"Dearest," exclaimed Valentine, with her adorable smile, "awake, and look at me!" Morrel uttered a loud exclamation, and frantic, doubtful, dazzled, as though by a celestial vision, he fell upon his knees.

The next morning at daybreak, Valentine and Morrel were walking arm-in-arm on the sea-shore, Valentine relating how Monte Cristo had appeared in her room, explained everything, revealed the crime, and, finally, how he had saved her life by enabling her to simulate death. They had found the door of the grotto opened, and gone forth; on the azure dome of heaven still glittered a few remaining stars. Morrel soon perceived a man standing among the rocks, apparently awaiting a sign from them to advance, and pointed him out to Valentine. "Ah, it is Jacopo," she said, "the captain of the yacht;" and she beckoned him towards them.

"Do you wish to speak to us?" asked Morrel.

"I have a letter to give you from the count."

"From the count!" murmured the two young people.

"Yes; read it." Morrel opened the letter, and read:—

"My Dear Maximilian,—

"There is a felucca for you at anchor. Jacopo will carry you to Leghorn, where Monsieur Noirtier awaits his granddaughter, whom he wishes to bless before you lead her to the altar. All that is in this grotto, my friend, my house in the Champs Elysees, and my chateau at Treport, are the marriage gifts bestowed by Edmond Dantes upon the son of his old master, Morrel. Mademoiselle de Villefort will share them with you; for I entreat her to give to the poor the immense fortune reverting to her from her father, now a madman, and her brother who died last September with his mother. Tell the angel who will watch over your future destiny, Morrel, to pray sometimes for a man, who like Satan thought himself for an instant equal to God, but who now acknowledges with Christian humility that God alone possesses supreme power and infinite wisdom. Perhaps those prayers may soften the remorse he feels in his heart. As for you, Morrel, this is the secret of my conduct towards you. There is neither happiness nor misery in the world; there is only the comparison of one state with another, nothing more. He who has felt the deepest grief is best able to experience supreme happiness. We must have felt what it is to die, Morrel, that we may appreciate the enjoyments of living.

"Live, then, and be happy, beloved children of my heart, and never forget that until the day when God shall deign to reveal the future to man, all human wisdom is summed up in these two words,—'Wait and hope.'—Your friend,

"Edmond Dantes, Count of Monte Cristo."

During the perusal of this letter, which informed Valentine for the first time of the madness of her father and the death of her brother, she became pale, a heavy sigh escaped from her bosom, and tears, not the less painful because they were silent, ran down her cheeks; her happiness cost her very dear. Morrel looked around uneasily. "But," he said, "the count's generosity is too overwhelming; Valentine will be satisfied with my humble fortune. Where is the count, friend? Lead me to him." Jacopo pointed towards the horizon. "What do you mean?" asked Valentine. "Where is the count?—where is Haidee?"

"Look!" said Jacopo.

The eyes of both were fixed upon the spot indicated by the sailor, and on the blue line separating the sky from the Mediterranean Sea, they perceived a large white sail. "Gone," said Morrel; "gone!—adieu, my friend—adieu, my father!"

"Gone," murmured Valentine; "adieu, my sweet Haidee—adieu, my sister!"

"Who can say whether we shall ever see them again?" said Morrel with tearful eyes.

"Darling," replied Valentine, "has not the count just told us that all human wisdom is summed up in two words?—'Wait and hope (Fac et spera).'"

And in French, the last page of the novel:

Morrel ouvrit la lettre et lut :

« Mon cher Maximilien,

« Il y a une felouque pour vous à l'ancre. Jacopo vous conduira à Livourne, où monsieur Noirtier attend sa petite-fille, qu'il veut bénir avant qu'elle vous suive à l'autel. Tout ce qui est dans cette grotte, mon ami, ma maison des Champs-Élysées et mon petit château du Tréport sont le présent de nocces que fait Edmond Dantès au fils de son patron Morrel. Mademoiselle de Villefort voudra bien en prendre la moitié, car je la supplie de donner aux pauvres de Paris toute la fortune qui lui revient du côté de son père, devenu fou, et du côté de son frère, décédé en septembre dernier avec sa belle-mère.

« Dites à l'ange qui va veiller sur votre vie, Morrel, de prier quelquefois pour un homme qui, pareil à Satan, s'est cru un instant l'égal de Dieu, et qui a reconnu, avec toute l'humilité d'un chrétien, qu'aux mains de Dieu seul sont la suprême puissance et la sagesse infinie. Ces prières adouciront peut-être le remords qu'il emporte au fond de son cœur.

« Quant à vous, Morrel, voici tout le secret de ma conduite envers vous : il n'y a ni bonheur ni malheur en ce monde, il y a la comparaison d'un état à un autre, voilà tout. Celui-là seul qui a éprouvé l'extrême infortune est apte à ressentir l'extrême félicité. Il faut avoir voulu mourir, Maximilien, pour savoir combien il est bon de vivre.

« Vivez donc et soyez heureux, enfants chéris de mon cœur, et n'oubliez jamais que, jusqu'au jour où Dieu daignera dévoiler l'avenir à l'homme, toute la sagesse humaine sera dans ces deux mots :

« Attendre et espérer !

« Votre ami,
« EDMOND DANTÈS,
« Comte de Monte-Cristo. »

Pendant la lecture de cette lettre, qui lui apprenait la folie de son père et la mort de son frère, mort et folie qu'elle ignorait, Valentine pâlit, un douloureux soupir s'échappa de sa poitrine, et des larmes, qui n'en étaient pas moins poignantes pour être silencieuses, roulèrent sur ses joues ; son bonheur lui coûtait bien cher.

Morrel regarda autour de lui avec inquiétude.

— Mais, dit-il, en vérité le comte exagère sa générosité ; Valentine se contentera de ma modeste fortune. Où est le comte, mon ami ? conduisez-moi vers lui.

Jacopo étendit la main vers l'horizon.

— Quoi ! que voulez-vous dire ? demanda Valentine : Où est le comte ? où est Haydée ?

— Regardez, dit Jacopo.

Les yeux des deux jeunes gens se fixèrent sur la ligne indiquée par le marin, et, sur la ligne d'un bleu foncé qui séparait à l'horizon le ciel de la Méditerranée, ils aperçurent une voile blanche, grande comme l'aile d'un goéland.

— Parti ! s'écria Morrel ; parti ! Adieu, mon ami, mon père !

— Partie ! murmura Valentine. Adieu, mon amie ! adieu, ma sœur !

— Qui sait si nous les reverrons jamais ? fit Morrel en essuyant une larme.

— Mon ami, dit Valentine, le comte ne vient-il pas de nous dire que l'humaine sagesse était tout entière dans ces deux mots :

— Attendre et espérer !

We dealt at length of Zola's involvement in the Dreyfus affair and everybody knows of his contribution towards the elimination of anti-Semitism in France. What is less known is Alexandre Dumas' Jewish involvement. He had an affair with Adah Isaacs Menken considered somewhat scandalous as he was more than twice her age. Adah Isaacs Menken (June 15, 1835 – August 10, 1868), was an American actress, painter and poet, the highest earning actress of her time. She was best known for her performance in the melodrama Mazeppa, with a climax that featured her apparently nude and riding a horse on stage. After great success for a few years with the play in New York and San Francisco, she appeared in a production in London and Paris, from 1864-66. In 1865 she wrote that her birth name was Dolores Adios Los Fierres, and that she was the daughter of a French woman from New Orleans and a Jewish man from Spain. She met and in 1856 married the man more generally considered her first husband, Alexander Isaac Menken, a musician who was from a prominent Reform Jewish family in Cincinnati, Ohio. By most accounts, the actress converted to Judaism after marrying her first husband, Alexander Isaac Menken, in 1856 in Livingston, Texas. He was a theatrical musician, whose father was a businessman in Cincinnati, Ohio. He managed her bookings as an actress for a few years. When they moved to Cincinnati and Ada met his family, she seriously studied and converted to Judaism. Alex Menken separated from and later divorced Adah; she remained committed to Judaism the rest of her life.

But, Dumas has also a Jewish great-grandson Alexandre Lippmann. Alexandre Lippmann (11 June 1881 – 23 February 1960) was a French épée fencer. He won five medals, including two gold medals, at three different Olympic Games: a team gold and an individual silver in 1908, a team bronze and individual silver in 1920, and a team gold in 1924. Lippmann was Jewish and was inducted into the International Jewish Sports Hall of Fame in 1984. Lippmann was also a genre painter. Through his mother, Marie-Alexandrine-Henriette Dumas, he was the great-grandson of French writer Alexandre Dumas. In Hebrew we write about the predilection of finding a Jewish connection to every event and celebrity. Thus, Christopher Columbus, Cervantes, and many others are of Jewish descent and if not - have a Jewish connection. My father even thought that Charlie Chaplin and Yves Montand were Jews, as well as dozens others. I didn't know about the Jewish connection of Alexandre Dumas and I was curious to learn about it, but I'll refer no more to such curiosities in this book, and try to maintain a universal approach.

Honore de Balzac is one of my favorite authors and I have read most of his novels. I have learned about life much more from Balzac's novels than from my own experience. If I am a good person and have a humane approach on society and economics, it is due primarily to the reading of Balzac, Hugo and Zola's novels. Balzac probably understood in the most perfect way human nature which has not changed since Homer. Le pere Goriot is one of the best novels that I have ever read, I have seen it on stage, in films... and in life with too many examples of parents who loved too much their children who became monsters of ingratitude and selfishness. Baba, Rosalia Cohen, my wife Ruthy's grandmother used to say in Yiddish that too much honey stinks, and Ruthy and me raised our children with love, care, but also discipline. We saw how friends belittled themselves with their relations to their husband, wife, children, bosses and employees. I learned from Goriot that you have to love your wife, children and grandchildren more than yourself, yet you must love yourself enough as not to belittle yourself. I feel that Goriot, Jean Valjean, Monte Cristo, Aristide Saccard, Jean de Florette, Gervaise, Rastignac, Topaze, King Lear, Hamlet are real persons, not less historic and alive than most of the historical personalities. Furthermore, I feel that I experience the joy of creation of Balzac, Proust, Zola, D. H. Lawrence, Agnon, Moravia, Cervantes, Tolstoy, or Sinclair Lewis, as if it was me who wrote their masterpieces. Even more in plays, where we can see their protagonists coming alive on stage and films – Arthur Miller's The Crucible, Death of a Salesman, All My Sons, Ionesco's Beranger and Jean, Pagnol's Marius, Cesar and Fanny, his mother, his father, and Le Papet. I am a friend of Hugo, Dumas and Balzac, of Goriot, d'Artagnan, and Esmeralda. They are All My Sons/Fathers.

Honoré de Balzac: 20 May 1799 – 18 August 1850, who died at the age of 51, was a French novelist and playwright. His magnum opus was a sequence of short stories and novels collectively entitled La Comédie Humaine, which presents a panorama of French life in the years after the 1815 Fall of Napoleon Bonaparte. Owing to his keen observation of detail and unfiltered representation of society, Balzac is regarded as one of the founders of realism in European literature. He is renowned for his multifaceted characters, who are morally ambiguous.

His writing influenced many subsequent novelists such as Marcel Proust, Émile Zola, Charles Dickens, Anthony Trollope, Edgar Allan Poe, Eça de Queirós, Fyodor Dostoyevsky, Oscar Wilde, Gustave Flaubert, Benito Pérez Galdós, Marie Corelli, Henry James, William Faulkner, Jack Kerouac, and Italo Calvino, most of the authors I read and liked very much, and philosophers such as Karl Marx. Many of Balzac's works have been made into or have inspired films, and they are a continuing source of inspiration for writers, filmmakers and critics.

Before and during his career as a writer, Balzac attempted to be a publisher, printer, businessman, critic, and politician; he failed in all of these efforts. La Comédie Humaine reflects his real-life difficulties, and includes scenes from his own experience. Balzac had health problems throughout his life, possibly brought on by scant attention to proper nutrition, strict nightly rest, or daily heart-healthy exercise. His relationship with his family was often strained by financial and personal difficulties, and he ended several friendships over critical reviews. In 1850 Balzac married Ewelina Hańska, a Polish aristocrat and his longtime love; he died in Paris five months later. In 1833 Balzac released Eugénie Grandet, his first best-seller. The tale of a young lady who inherits her father's miserliness, it also became the most critically acclaimed book of his career. The writing is simple, yet the individuals are dynamic and complex.

Le Père Goriot (Old Father Goriot, 1835) was his next success, in which Balzac transposes the story of King Lear to 1820s Paris in order to rage at a society bereft of all love save the love of money. The centrality of a father in this novel matches Balzac's own position—not only as mentor to his troubled young secretary, Jules Sandeau, but also the fact that he had fathered a child, Marie-Caroline Du Fresnay, with his otherwise-married lover, Maria Du Fresnay, who had been his source of inspiration for Eugénie Grandet. In 1836 Balzac took the helm of the Chronique de Paris, a weekly magazine of society and politics. He tried to enforce strict impartiality in its pages and a reasoned assessment of various ideologies. As Rogers notes, "Balzac was interested in any social, political, or economic theory, whether from the right or the left." The magazine failed, but in 1840 he founded the Revue Parisienne. It produced 3 issues.

These dismal business efforts—and his misadventures in Sardinia—provided an appropriate milieu in which to set the two-volume Illusions perdues (Lost Illusions, 1843). The novel concerns Lucien de Rubempré, a young poet trying to make a name for himself, who becomes trapped in the morass of society's darkest contradictions. Lucien's journalistic work is informed by Balzac's own failed ventures in the field. Splendeurs et misères des courtisanes (The Harlot High and Low, 1847) continues Lucien's story. He is trapped by the Abbé Herrera (Vautrin) in a convoluted and disastrous plan to regain social status. The book undergoes a massive temporal rift; the first part (of four) covers a span of six years, while the final two sections focus on just three days. Le Cousin Pons (1847) and La Cousine Bette (1848) tell the story of Les Parents Pauvres (The Poor Relations). The conniving and wrangling over wills and inheritances reflect the expertise gained by the author as a young law clerk. Balzac's health was deteriorating by this point, making the completion of this pair of books a significant accomplishment.

Many of his novels were initially serialized, like those of Dickens. Their length was not predetermined. Illusions Perdues extends to a thousand pages after starting inauspiciously in a small-town print shop, whereas La Fille aux yeux d'or (The Girl with the Golden Eyes, 1835) opens with a broad panorama of Paris but becomes a closely plotted novella of only fifty pages. Balzac's work habits are legendary—he did not work quickly, but toiled with an incredible focus and dedication. His preferred method was to eat a light meal at five or six in the afternoon, then sleep until midnight. He then rose and wrote for many hours, fueled by innumerable cups of black coffee. He would often work for fifteen hours or more at a stretch; he claimed to have once worked for 48 hours with only three hours of rest in the middle. When I see students who can focus only 8 minutes, I think – sic transit gloria mundi – where have vanished the working habits of Balzac and Zola who wrote dozens of masterpieces. I can say humbly that even I come to my desk at 8 in the morning and work consecutively until 8 in the evening and nothing can disturb me, least of all my cellular phone, unless of course my mother in law comes to read me the latest news in the Romanian newspaper, my wife misses me and comes to chat or just lie on the sofa looking at me working when I am very busy, and my son who is living in Palo Alto phones me in the afternoon almost every day for half an hour on his way to work. Now, that I have retired, I have relaxed my discipline and find time to play with my grandchildren, but yet I can achieve much more than most of my friends who have a divided attention, while I can focus at best.

Le Père Goriot, Old Goriot or Father Goriot, is an 1835 novel by French novelist and playwright Honoré de Balzac, included in the Scènes de la vie privée section of his novel sequence La Comédie humaine. Set in Paris in 1819, it follows the intertwined lives of three characters: the elderly doting Goriot; a mysterious criminal-in-hiding named Vautrin; and a naive law student named Eugène de Rastignac. Originally published in serial form during the winter of 1834/35, Le Père Goriot is widely considered Balzac's most important novel. It marks the first serious use by the author of characters who had appeared in other books, a technique that distinguishes Balzac's fiction. The novel is also noted as an example of his realist style, using minute details to create character and subtext. The novel takes place during the Bourbon Restoration, which brought profound changes to French society; the struggle by individuals to secure a higher social status is a major theme in the book. The city of Paris also impresses itself on the characters – especially young Rastignac, who grew up in the provinces of southern France. Balzac analyzes, through Goriot and others, the nature of family and marriage, providing a pessimistic view of these institutions. The novel was released to mixed reviews. Some critics praised the author for his complex characters and attention to detail; others condemned him for his many depictions of corruption and greed. A favorite of Balzac's, the book quickly won widespread popularity and has often been adapted for film and the stage. It gave rise to the French expression "Rastignac", a social climber willing to use any means to better his situation.

French society two hundred years ago is almost identical to Israel society of today, to the European and American society in the second half of the 20th century, as we say in Aramic – סדנא דארעהא חד הוא – it is the same everywhere. I know too many people who are social climbers, wanting to achieve a higher social status, without any scruples, too many Rastignacs, Goriot and Vautrins, and of course too many women who behave as the daughters of Goriot. From the masterpiece of Le Pere Goriot, we bring here the last pages in English and French.

Bianchon made a sign to his friend to follow his example, knelt down and pressed his arms under the sick man, and Rastignac on the other side did the same, so that Sylvie, standing in readiness, might draw the sheet from beneath and replace it with the one that she had brought. Those tears, no doubt, had misled Goriot; for he gathered up all his remaining strength in a last effort, stretched out his hands, groped for the students' heads, and as his fingers caught convulsively at their hair, they heard a faint whisper:

"Ah! my angels!"

Two words, two inarticulate murmurs, shaped into words by the soul which fled forth with them as they left his lips.

"Poor dear!" cried Sylvie, melted by that exclamation; the expression of the great love raised for the last time to a sublime height by that most ghastly and involuntary of lies.

The father's last breath must have been a sigh of joy, and in that sigh his whole life was summed up; he was cheated even at the last. They laid Father Goriot upon his wretched bed with reverent hands. Thenceforward there was no expression on his face, only the painful traces of the struggle between life and death that was going on in the machine; for that kind of cerebral consciousness that distinguishes between pleasure and pain in a human being was extinguished; it was only a question of time—and the mechanism itself would be destroyed.

"He will lie like this for several hours, and die so quietly at last, that we shall not know when he goes; there will be no rattle in the throat. The brain must be completely suffused."

As he spoke there was a footstep on the staircase, and a young woman hastened up, panting for breath.

"She has come too late," said Rastignac.

But it was not Delphine; it was Therese, her waiting-woman, who stood in the doorway.

"Monsieur Eugene," she said, "monsieur and madame have had a terrible scene about some money that Madame (poor thing!) wanted for her father. She fainted, and the doctor came, and she had to be bled, calling out all the while, 'My father is dying; I want to see papa!' It was heartbreaking to hear her——"

"That will do, Therese. If she came now, it would be trouble thrown away. M. Goriot cannot recognize any one now."

"Poor, dear gentleman, is he as bad at that?" said Therese.

"You don't want me now, I must go and look after my dinner; it is half-past four," remarked Sylvie. The next instant she all but collided with Mme. de Restaud on the landing outside.

There was something awful and appalling in the sudden apparition of the Countess. She saw the bed of death by the dim light of the single candle, and her tears flowed at the sight of her father's passive features, from which the life had almost ebbed. Bianchon with thoughtful tact left the room.

"I could not escape soon enough," she said to Rastignac.

The student bowed sadly in reply. Mme. de Restaud took her father's hand and kissed it.

"Forgive me, father! You used to say that my voice would call you back from the grave; ah! come back for one moment to bless your penitent daughter. Do you hear me? Oh! this is fearful! No one on earth will ever bless me henceforth; every one hates me; no one loves me but you in all the world. My own children will hate me. Take me with you, father; I will love you, I will take care of you. He does not hear me ... I am mad..."

She fell on her knees, and gazed wildly at the human wreck before her.

"My cup of misery is full," she said, turning her eyes upon Eugene. "M. de Trailles has fled, leaving enormous debts behind him, and I have found out that he was deceiving me. My husband will never forgive me, and I have left my fortune in his hands. I have lost all my illusions. Alas! I have forsaken the one heart that loved me (she pointed to her father as she spoke), and for whom? I have held his kindness cheap, and slighted his affection; many and many a time I have given him pain, ungrateful wretch that I am!"

"He knew it," said Rastignac.

Just then Goriot's eyelids unclosed; it was only a muscular contraction, but the Countess' sudden start of reviving hope was no less dreadful than the dying eyes.

"Is it possible that he can hear me?" cried the Countess. "No," she answered herself, and sat down beside the bed. As Mme. de Restaud seemed to wish to sit by her father, Eugene went down to take a little food. The boarders were already assembled.

"Well," remarked the painter, as he joined them, "it seems that there is to be a death-orama upstairs."

"Charles, I think you might find something less painful to joke about," said Eugene.

"So we may not laugh here?" returned the painter. "What harm does it do? Bianchon said that the old man was quite insensible."

"Well, then," said the employe from the Museum, "he will die as he has lived."

"My father is dead!" shrieked the Countess.

The terrible cry brought Sylvie, Rastignac, and Bianchon; Mme. de Restaud had fainted away. When she recovered they carried her downstairs, and put her into the cab that stood waiting at the door. Eugene sent Therese with her, and bade the maid take the Countess to Mme. de Nucingen.

Bianchon came down to them.

"Yes, he is dead," he said.

"Come, sit down to dinner, gentlemen," said Mme. Vauquer, "or the soup will be cold."

The two students sat down together.

"What is the next thing to be done?" Eugene asked of Bianchon.

"I have closed his eyes and composed his limbs," said Bianchon. "When the certificate has been officially registered at the Mayor's office, we will sew him in his winding sheet and bury him somewhere. What do you think we ought to do?"

"He will not smell at his bread like this any more," said the painter, mimicking the old man's little trick.

"Oh, hang it all!" cried the tutor, "let Father Goriot drop, and let us have something else for a change. He is a standing dish, and we have had him with every sauce this hour or more. It is one of the privileges of the good city of Paris that anybody may be born, or live, or die there without attracting any attention whatsoever. Let us profit by the advantages of civilization. There are fifty or sixty deaths every day; if you have a mind to do it, you can sit down at any time and wail over whole hecatombs of dead in Paris. Father Goriot has gone off the hooks, has he? So much the better for him. If you venerate his memory, keep it to yourselves, and let the rest of us feed in peace."

"Oh, to be sure," said the widow, "it is all the better for him that he is dead. It looks as though he had had trouble enough, poor soul, while he was alive."

And this was all the funeral oration delivered over him who had been for Eugene the type and embodiment of Fatherhood.

The fifteen lodgers began to talk as usual. When Bianchon and Eugene had satisfied their hunger, the rattle of spoons and forks, the boisterous conversation, the expressions on the faces that bespoke various degrees of want of feeling, gluttony, or indifference, everything about them made them shiver with loathing. They went out to find a priest to watch that night with the dead. It was necessary to measure their last pious cares by the scanty sum of money that remained. Before nine o'clock that evening the body was laid out on the bare sacking of the bedstead in the desolate room; a lighted candle stood on either side, and the priest watched at the foot. Rastignac made inquiries of this latter as to the expenses of the funeral, and wrote to the Baron de Nucingen and the Comte de Restaud, entreating both gentlemen to authorize their man of business to defray the charges of laying their father-in-law in the grave. He sent Christophe with the letters; then he went to bed, tired out, and slept.

Next day Bianchon and Rastignac were obliged to take the certificate to the registrar themselves, and by twelve o'clock the formalities were completed. Two hours went by, no word came from the Count nor from the Baron; nobody appeared to act for them, and Rastignac had already been obliged to pay the priest. Sylvie asked ten francs for sewing the old man in his winding-sheet and making him ready for the grave, and Eugene and Bianchon calculated that they had scarcely sufficient to pay for the funeral, if nothing was forthcoming from the dead man's family. So it was the medical student who laid him in a pauper's coffin, despatched from Bianchon's hospital, whence he obtained it at a cheaper rate.

"Let us play those wretches a trick," said he. "Go to the cemetery, buy a grave for five years at Pere-Lachaise, and arrange with the Church and the undertaker to have a third-class funeral. If the daughters and their husbands decline to repay you, you can carve this on the headstone—'Here lies M. Goriot, father of the Comtesse de Restaud and the Baronne de Nucingen, interred at the expense of two students.'"

Eugene took part of his friend's advice, but only after he had gone in person first to M. and Mme. de Nucingen, and then to M. and Mme. de Restaud—a fruitless errand. He went no further than the doorstep in either house. The servants had received strict orders to admit no one.

"Monsieur and Madame can see no visitors. They have just lost their father, and are in deep grief over their loss."

Eugene's Parisian experience told him that it was idle to press the point. Something clutched strangely at his heart when he saw that it was impossible to reach Delphine.

"Sell some of your ornaments," he wrote hastily in the porter's room, "so that your father may be decently laid in his last resting-place."

He sealed the note, and begged the porter to give it to Therese for her mistress; but the man took it to the Baron de Nucingen, who flung the note into the fire. Eugene, having finished his errands, returned to the lodging-house about three o'clock. In spite of himself, the tears came into his eyes. The coffin, in its scanty covering of black cloth, was standing there on the pavement before the gate, on two chairs. A withered sprig of hyssop was soaking in the holy water bowl of silver-plated copper; there was not a soul in the street, not a passer-by had stopped to sprinkle the coffin; there was not even an attempt at a black drapery over the wicket. It was a pauper who lay there; no one made a pretence of mourning for him; he had neither friends nor kindred—there was no one to follow him to the grave.

Bianchon's duties compelled him to be at the hospital, but he had left a few lines for Eugene, telling his friend about the arrangements he had made for the burial service. The house student's note told Rastignac that a mass was beyond their means, that the ordinary office for the dead was cheaper, and must suffice, and that he had sent word to the undertaker by Christophe. Eugene had scarcely finished reading Bianchon's scrawl, when he looked up and saw the little circular gold locket that contained the hair of Goriot's two daughters in Mme. Vauquer's hands.

"How dared you take it?" he asked.

"Good Lord! is that to be buried along with him?" retorted Sylvie. "It is gold."

"Of course it shall!" Eugene answered indignantly; "he shall at any rate take one thing that may represent his daughters into the grave with him."

When the hearse came, Eugene had the coffin carried into the house again, unscrewed the lid, and reverently laid on the old man's breast the token that recalled the days when Delphine and Anastasie were innocent little maidens, before they began "to think for themselves," as he had moaned out in his agony.

Rastignac and Christophe and the two undertaker's men were the only followers of the funeral. The Church of Saint-Etienne du Mont was only a little distance from the Rue Nueve-Sainte-Genevieve. When the coffin had been deposited in a low, dark, little chapel, the law student looked round in vain for Goriot's two daughters or their husbands. Christophe was his only fellow-mourner; Christophe, who appeared to think it was his duty to attend the funeral of the man who had put him in the way of such handsome tips. As they waited there in the chapel for the two priests, the chorister, and the beadle, Rastignac grasped Christophe's hand. He could not utter a word just then.

"Yes, Monsieur Eugene," said Christophe, "he was a good and worthy man, who never said one word louder than another; he never did any one any harm, and gave nobody any trouble."

The two priests, the chorister, and the beadle came, and said and did as much as could be expected for seventy francs in an age when religion cannot afford to say prayers for nothing.

The ecclesiastics chanted a psalm, the Libera nos and the De profundis. The whole service lasted about twenty minutes. There was but one mourning coach, which the priest and chorister agreed to share with Eugene and Christophe.

"There is no one else to follow us," remarked the priest, "so we may as well go quickly, and so save time; it is half-past five."

But just as the coffin was put in the hearse, two empty carriages, with the armorial bearings of the Comte de Restaud and the Baron de Nucingen, arrived and followed in the procession to Pere-Lachaise. At six o'clock Goriot's coffin was lowered into the grave, his daughters' servants standing round the while. The ecclesiastic recited the short prayer that the students could afford to pay for, and then both priest and lackeys disappeared at once. The two grave diggers flung in several spadefuls of earth, and then stopped and asked Rastignac for their fee. Eugene felt in vain in his pocket, and was obliged to borrow five francs of Christophe. This thing, so trifling in itself, gave Rastignac a terrible pang of distress. It was growing dusk, the damp twilight fretted his nerves; he gazed down into the grave and the tears he shed were drawn from him by the sacred emotion, a single-hearted sorrow. When such tears fall on earth, their radiance reaches heaven. And with that tear that fell on Father Goriot's grave, Eugene Rastignac's youth ended. He folded his arms and gazed at the clouded sky; and Christophe, after a glance at him, turned and went—Rastignac was left alone.

He went a few paces further, to the highest point of the cemetery, and looked out over Paris and the windings of the Seine; the lamps were beginning to shine on either side of the river. His eyes turned almost eagerly to the space between the column of the Place Vendome and the cupola of the Invalides; there lay the shining world that he had wished to reach. He glanced over that humming hive, seeming to draw a foretaste of its honey, and said magniloquently:

"Henceforth there is war between us."

And by way of throwing down the glove to Society, Rastignac went to dine with Mme. de Nucingen.

Les deux prêtres, l'enfant de chœur et le bedeau vinrent et donnèrent tout ce qu'on peut avoir pour soixante-dix francs dans une époque où la religion n'est pas assez riche pour prier gratis. Les gens du clergé chantèrent un psaume, le Libera, le De profundis. Le service dura vingt minutes. Il n'y avait qu'une seule voiture de deuil pour un prêtre et un enfant de chœur, qui consentirent à recevoir avec eux Eugène et Christophe.

- Il n'y a point de suite, dit le prêtre, nous pourrions aller vite, afin de ne pas nous attarder, il est cinq heures et demie.

Cependant, au moment où le corps fut placé dans le corbillard, deux voitures armoriées, mais vides, celle du comte de Restaud et celle du baron de Nucingen, se présentèrent et suivirent le convoi jusqu'au Père-Lachaise. A six heures, le corps du père Goriot fut descendu dans sa fosse, autour de laquelle étaient les gens de ses filles, qui disparurent avec le clergé aussitôt que fut dite la courte prière due au bonhomme pour l'argent de l'étudiant. Quand les deux fossoyeurs eurent jeté quelques pelletées de terre sur la bière pour la cacher, ils se relevèrent, et l'un d'eux, s'adressant à Rastignac, lui demanda leur pourboire. Eugène fouilla dans sa poche et n'y trouva rien, il fut forcé d'emprunter vingt sous à Christophe. Ce fait, si léger en lui-même, détermina chez Rastignac un accès d'horrible tristesse. Le jour tombait, un humide crépuscule agaçait les nerfs, il regarda la tombe et y ensevelit sa dernière larme de jeune homme, cette larme arrachée par les saintes émotions d'un cœur pur, une de ces larmes qui, de la terre où elles tombent, rejaillissent jusque dans les cieux. Il se croisa les bras, contempla les nuages, et, le voyant ainsi, Christophe le quitta.

Rastignac, resté seul, fit quelques pas vers le haut du cimetière et vit Paris tortueusement couché le long des deux rives de la Seine où commençaient à briller les lumières. Ses yeux s'attachèrent presque avidement entre la colonne de la place Vendôme et le dôme des Invalides, là où vivait ce beau monde dans lequel il avait voulu pénétrer. Il lança sur cette ruche bourdonnante un regard qui semblait par avance en pomper le miel, et dit ces mots grandioses: "A nous deux maintenant!"

Et pour premier acte du défi qu'il portait à la Société, Rastignac alla dîner chez madame de Nucingen.

Jean-Paul Sartre: 21 June 1905 – 15 April 1980) was a French philosopher, playwright, novelist, political activist, biographer, and literary critic. He was one of the key figures in the philosophy of existentialism and phenomenology, and one of the leading figures in 20th-century French philosophy and Marxism. His work has also influenced sociology, critical theory, post-colonial theory, and literary studies, and continues to influence these disciplines. Sartre has also been noted for his open relationship with the prominent feminist theorist Simone de Beauvoir. He was awarded the 1964 Nobel Prize in Literature but refused it, saying that he always declined official honours and that "a writer should not allow himself to be turned into an institution". Sartre wrote successfully in a number of literary modes and made major contributions to literary criticism and literary biography. His plays are richly symbolic and serve as a means of conveying his philosophy. The best-known, Huis-clos (No Exit), contains the famous line "L'enfer, c'est les autres", usually translated as "Hell is other people." Aside from the impact of Nausea, Sartre's major work of fiction was The Roads to Freedom trilogy which charts the progression of how World War II affected Sartre's ideas. In this way, Roads to Freedom presents a less theoretical and more practical approach to existentialism. Despite their similarities as polemicists, novelists, adapters, and playwrights, Sartre's literary work has been counterposed, often pejoratively, to that of Camus in the popular imagination. In 1948 the Roman Catholic Church placed Sartre's oeuvre on the Index Librorum Prohibitorum \(List of Prohibited Books\).

The Age of Reason (French: L'âge de raison) is a 1945 novel by Jean-Paul Sartre. It is the first part of the trilogy The Roads to Freedom. The novel, set in the bohemian Paris of the late 1930s, focuses on three days in the life of a philosophy teacher named Mathieu who is seeking money to pay for an abortion for his mistress, Marcelle. Sartre analyses the motives of various characters and their actions and takes into account the perceptions of others to give the reader a comprehensive picture of the main character. The Age of Reason is concerned with Sartre's conception of freedom as the ultimate aim of human existence. This work seeks to illustrate the existentialist notion of ultimate freedom through presenting a detailed account of the characters' psychologies as they are forced to make significant decisions in their lives. As the novel progresses, character narratives espouse Sartre's view of what it means to be free and how one operates within the framework of society with this philosophy. This novel is a fictional reprise of some of the main themes in his major philosophical study Being and Nothingness. One of the notions is that ultimately a person's freedom is unassailable as it is fundamentally part of the nothingness that is the imagination and so cannot be taken away or destroyed.

The Reprieve (French: Le sursis) is a 1945 novel by Jean-Paul Sartre. It is the second part in the trilogy The Roads to Freedom. It concerns life in France during the eight days before the signing of the Munich Agreement and the subsequent takeover of Czechoslovakia in September 1938. Written in a stream of consciousness style it is probably one of the best books that I have ever read, the most modern undoubtedly, which captivates you and leaves you A bout de souffle/Breathless. If I would have to choose what were the defining moments that fashioned my hawkish attitude to life it would be probably three moments: 1. January 1952 when at the age of 7 the Egyptian shabab/so called nationalists almost burned us alive in Cairo, 2. June 1967 when the Arab nations declared an extermination war against Israel after Israel withdrew from Sinai ten years before and without having any so-called occupied territories, 3. Reading Le sursis/The reprieve by Sartre depicting in the most vivid way what is the result of the defeatist policy of Chamberlain and Daladier. But they had the opposite effect on others who became pacifists.

Troubled Sleep (French: La mort dans l'âme) is a 1949 novel by Jean-Paul Sartre. The book was originally translated as Iron in the Soul. It is the third part in the trilogy Les chemins de la liberté (The Roads to Freedom). "The third novel in Sartre's monumental Roads to Freedom series, Troubled Sleep powerfully depicts the fall of France in 1940, and the anguished feelings of a group of Frenchmen whose pre-war apathy gives way to a consciousness of the dignity of individual resistance - to the German occupation and to fate in general - and solidarity with people similarly oppressed." The trilogy is one of the best books that I have ever read, but you need to be in an excellent mood to read it, as otherwise you might get a Nausea, feel that there is No Exit in your depression, and think that your life is more Nothingness than Being. However, it transposes you to France of the late thirties, and you feel the despair not in your brain but in your guts. Unlike Balzac & Zola who appeal to your brains, Sartre & Camus appeal to your entrails.

I have translated this extract as I couldn't find on Internet an extract of the English translation of Le Sursis, and it summarizes my attitude towards liberty which is the value I need most, maybe because in my early childhood I was a Dhimmi – a second rate citizen in a Muslim state subject to humiliation, persecution, and fear. "At the middle of Pont-Neuf, he stopped, and started laughing: this freedom, I have searched it very far; but it was so near that I could not see it, that I cannot touch it, this was only me. I am my freedom. He had hoped that one day he would be overcome by joy, pierced all the way by the lightning. But there was no lightning nor joy: only this destitution, this emptiness full of vertigo in front of him, this agony that his own transparency unabled him forever to see himself... I am nothing, I have nothing. As inseparable from the world as light and yet exiled, as light, surfing on the surface of the stones and the water, when nothing ever would catch me or burry me. Outside. Outside. Outside the world, outside the past, outside myself: freedom is exile and I am condemned to be free."

Au milieu du Pont-Neuf, il s'arrêta, il se mit à rire : cette liberté, je l'ai cherché bien loin ; elle était si proche que je ne pouvais la voir, que je ne peux pas la toucher, elle n'était que moi. Je suis ma liberté. Il avait espéré qu'un jour il serait comblé de joie, percé de part en part par la foudre. Mais il n'y avait ni foudre ni joie : seulement ce dénuement, ce vide saisi de vertige devant lui-même, cette angoisse que sa propre transparence empêchait à tout jamais de se voir. (...) Je ne suis rien, je n'ai rien. Aussi inséparable du monde que la lumière et pourtant exilé, comme la lumière, glissant à la surface des pierres et de l'eau, sans que rien, jamais ne m'accroche ou ne m'ensable. Dehors. Dehors. Hors du monde, hors du passé, hors de moi-même : la liberté c'est l'exil et je suis condamné à être libre.

This is what I answer to my European friends who are astonished how can I live with my family in a war and terror stricken country and offer me to live as a free man in Europe (well, I don't envy my Jewish friends in France or England today, and who is more afraid the Christians or the Muslims of France is another story). This is why I have chosen my Ethical mission and before that my free-lancer career, being free from the tycoons in comparison to most of my friends who are "slave" to their organizations. I feel sometimes as an exile in my own country, living out of the world, out of the past and the present, out of myself even, as I am condemned to be free and I cannot behave differently. This is also what I teach to my students from the final lines of Ionesco's Rhinoceros, the unforgettable monologue, when Berenger declares that he will "put up a fight against the lot of them. I'm the last man left, and I'm staying that way until the end. I'm not capitulating!" Berenger decides to abide only to humanism and not becoming a rhinoceros.

This is what I recommend to all the politically-correct Europeans who find justifications to terrorism and condemn Israel, while receiving millions of refugees from countries where there was never freedom, refusing to assimilate into the European way of life, giving equal rights to women, letting them dress however they want, being totally loyal to their new country, and whenever there is a contradiction between the country's law and their religion they should obey the law of the country that was generous enough to receive them. As Jesus said (Matthew 22:20-21): " ²⁰ And he saith unto them, Whose is this image and superscription? ²¹ They say unto him, Caesar's. Then saith he unto them, Render therefore unto Caesar the things which are Caesar's; and unto God the things that are God's." And the Jewish faith says: דינא דמלכותא דינא – the law of the land is the binding law. Dina d'malkhuta dina (alternative spelling: Dina de-malkhuta dina) (Aramaic: דינא דמלכותא דינא, "the law of the land is the law"), is the halakhic rule that the law of the country is binding, and, in certain cases, is to be preferred to Jewish law. The concept of dina de-malkhuta dina is similar to the concept of conflict of laws in other legal systems. It appears in at least twenty-five places in the Shulkhan Arukh. This is what the Jews did, what the Polish, Spanish, Portuguese, and most of the African and Arab refugees did, and none of those peace-loving refugees has ever become a terrorist. And whoever disagrees may return to his homeland where he can practice his religion freely, but also being murdered as hundreds of thousands in Syria, Algeria, Yemen, Lebanon, Iraq and Afghanistan, or living in extreme poverty without work, or living in an Islamic state as in Iran, fearing for their lives and welfare.

Marcel Proust is also a completely different story and author. In this short survey of the most loved French authors, we can see how every one is completely different from the others, yet I love them all, as they are All My Friends – Hugo, Zola, Dumas, Balzac, Sartre, Proust. Proust brings us to a new reality or dream – to our subconscious, to times past, which are similar to times present. While Hugo, Zola and Balzac painted huge frescoes like Michelangelo, Proust is like Vermeer the painter of miniatures, of feelings, of sotto voce, soft tones. In this style, he was quite unique. I enjoy most the last book of A la recherche du temps perdu – Le temps retrouve.

Marcel Proust; 10 July 1871 – 18 November 1922) was a French novelist, critic, and essayist best known for his monumental novel À la recherche du temps perdu (In Search of Lost Time; earlier translated as Remembrance of Things Past), published in seven parts between 1913 and 1927. He is considered by many to be one of the greatest authors of all time. Begun in 1909, À la recherche du temps perdu consists of seven volumes totaling around 3,200 pages (about 4,300 in The Modern Library's translation) and featuring more than 2,000 characters. Graham Greene called Proust the "greatest novelist of the 20th century", and W. Somerset Maugham called the novel the "greatest fiction to date". Proust died before he was able to complete his revision of the drafts and proofs of the final volumes, the last three of which were published posthumously and edited by his brother, Robert. Proust died at the age of 51, exactly like Balzac, another giant.

The novel began to take shape in 1909. Proust continued to work on it until his final illness in the autumn of 1922 forced him to break off. Proust established the structure early on, but even after volumes were initially finished he kept adding new material and edited one volume after another for publication. The last three of the seven volumes contain oversights and fragmentary or unpolished passages, as they existed only in draft form at the death of the author; the publication of these parts was overseen by his brother Robert. The work was published in France between 1913 and 1927. Proust paid for the publication of the first volume (by the Grasset publishing house) after it had been turned down by leading editors who had been offered the manuscript in longhand. Many of its ideas, motifs and scenes are foreshadowed in Proust's unfinished novel, Jean Santeuil (1896–99), though the perspective and treatment there are different, and in his unfinished hybrid of philosophical essay and story, Contre Sainte-Beuve (1908–09). The novel had great influence on twentieth-century literature; some writers have sought to emulate it, others to parody it. In the centenary year of Du côté de chez Swann, Edmund White pronounced À la recherche du temps perdu "the most respected novel of the twentieth century."

Volume 7 – Time Regained

The Narrator is staying with Gilberte at her home near Combray. They go for walks, on one of which he is stunned to learn the Méséglise way and the Guermantes way are actually linked. Gilberte also tells him she was attracted to him when young, and had made a suggestive gesture to him as he watched her. Also, it was Lea she was walking with the evening he had planned to reconcile with her. He considers Saint-Loup's nature and reads an account of the Verdurins' salon, deciding he has no talent for writing. The scene shifts to a night in 1916, during World War I, when the Narrator has returned to Paris from a stay in a sanatorium and is walking the streets during a blackout. He reflects on the changed norms of art and society, with the Verdurins now highly esteemed. He recounts a 1914 visit from Saint-Loup, who was trying to enlist secretly. He recalls descriptions of the fighting he subsequently received from Saint-Loup and Gilberte, whose home was threatened. He describes a call paid on him a few days previously by Saint-Loup; they discussed military strategy. Now on the dark street, the Narrator encounters Charlus, who has completely surrendered to his impulses. Charlus reviews Morel's betrayals and his own temptation to seek vengeance; critiques Brichot's new fame as a writer, which has ostracized him from the Verdurins; and admits his general sympathy with Germany. The last part of the conversation draws a crowd of suspicious onlookers. After parting the Narrator seeks refuge in what appears to be hotel, where he sees someone who looks familiar leaving. Inside, he discovers it to be a male brothel, and spies Charlus using the services. The proprietor turns out to be Jupien, who expresses a perverse pride in his business. A few days later, news comes that Saint-Loup has been killed in combat. The Narrator pieces together that Saint-Loup had visited Jupien's brothel, and ponders what might have been had he lived.

Years later, again in Paris, the Narrator goes to a party at the house of the Prince de Guermantes. On the way he sees Charlus, now a mere shell of his former self, being helped by Jupien. The paving stones at the Guermantes house inspire another incident of involuntary memory for the Narrator, quickly followed by two more. Inside, while waiting in the library, he discerns their meaning: by putting him in contact with both the past and present, the impressions allow him to gain a vantage point outside time, affording a glimpse of the true nature of things. He realizes his whole life has prepared him for the mission of describing events as fully revealed, and (finally) resolves to begin writing. Entering the party, he is shocked at the disguises old age has given to the people he knew, and at the changes in society. Legrandin is now an invert, but is no longer a snob. Bloch is a respected writer and vital figure in society. Morel has reformed and become a respected citizen. Mme de Forcheville is the mistress of M. de Guermantes. Mme Verdurin has married the Prince de Guermantes after both their spouses died. Rachel is the star of the party, abetted by Mme de Guermantes, whose social position has been eroded by her affinity for theater. Gilberte introduces her daughter to the Narrator; he is struck by the way the daughter encapsulates both the Méséglise and Guermantes ways within herself. He is spurred to writing, with help from Françoise and despite signs of approaching death. He realizes that every person carries within them the accumulated baggage of their past, and concludes that to be accurate he must describe how everyone occupies an immense range "in Time". At my advanced age, I often feel as the narrator going to a party at the house of the Prince de Guermantes, shocked at the disguises old age has given to the people I knew, and at the changes in society. I no longer recognize my friends who have become so old, while I remained so young, but when I look at myself in the mirror I notice that I am as old as my friends, but I refuse to admit it, as I still feel young and what counts after all is your feeling, your stamina, your ambition to move mountains.

We bring here the last pages of Le temps retrouve/Time regained in English and in French. As with most of the authors whom I love, I feel that they wrote what I intended to write. As Proust's narrator I am indifferent to criticisms of my work, those who pronounce upon my work after my death could think what they please of it. But I differ from him in his conception of death and illness – I don't hate death, I look at it as an inevitable event that will come when it will come, sooner or later, with or without disease – or death ease. Until death I intend to work at full speed, enjoying life, my family, culture – active and passive, writing, reading, watching as much as I can, even if my hearing is impaired, I have other senses that I can use, hoping that they at least will not be affected. I had a friend Zvi Aviel who was blind, yet he enjoyed life and counted on his marvelous wife Dalia, who was his eyes, his heart and his soul until he passed away. What a fantastic palette those 6 giant French authors are: Hugo, Zola, Dumas, Sartre, Pagnol, Proust – one can read them and reread them during a lifetime, they have written so many masterpieces, given so much joy, they are so interesting, so educating, they were translated to most languages of the world, and have become the pillars of the Western civilization. At the end of the French literature chapter, I just want to thank them for rendering my life much better, for being there when I felt depressed, being for me bibliotherapy, influencing my whole life– to be a better man!

The organisation of my memory, of my preoccupations, was linked to my work perhaps because, while the letters I received were forgotten an instant later, the idea of my work was continuously in my mind, in a state of perpetual becoming. But it too had become importunate. My work was like a son whose dying mother must still unceasingly labour in the intervals of inoculations and cuppings. She may love him still but she only realises it through the excess of her care of him. And my powers as a writer were no longer equal to the egoistical exactions of the work. Since the day on the staircase, nothing in the world, no happiness, whether it came from friendships, from the progress of my work or from hope of fame, reached me except as pale sunlight that had lost its power to warm me, to give me life or any desire whatever and yet was too brilliant in its paleness for my weary eyes which closed as I turned towards the wall. As much as I could tell from the movement of my lips, I might have had a very slight smile in the corner of my mouth when a lady wrote me: "I was surprised not to get an answer to my letter," Nevertheless, that reminded me and I answered it. I wanted to try, so as not to be thought ungrateful, to be as considerate to others as they to me. And I was crushed by imposing these super-human fatigue's on my dying body.

This idea of death installed itself in me definitively as love does. Not that I loved death, I hated it. But I dare say I had thought of it from time to time as one does of a woman one does not yet love and now the thought of it adhered to the deepest layer of my brain so thoroughly that I could not think of anything without its first traversing the death zone and even if I thought of nothing and remained quite still, the idea of death kept me company as incessantly as the idea of myself. I do not think that the day when I became moribund, it was the accompanying factors such as the impossibility of going downstairs, of remembering a name, of getting up, which had by unconscious reasoning given me the idea that I was already all but dead, but rather that it had all come together, that the great mirror of the spirit reflected a new reality. And yet I did not see how I could pass straight from my present ills to death without some warning. But then I thought of others and how people die every day without it seeming strange to us that there should be no hiatus between their illness and their death. I thought even that it was only because I saw them from the inside (far more than through deceitful hope) that certain ailments did not seem to me necessarily fatal, taken one at a time, although I thought I was going to die, just like those who certain that their time has come, are nevertheless easily persuaded that their not being able to pronounce certain words has nothing to do with apoplexy or heart failure but is due to the tongue being tired, to a nerve condition akin to stammering, owing to the exhaustion consequent on indigestion.

In my case it was not the farewell of a dying man to his wife that I had to write, it was something longer and addressed to more than one person. Long to write! At best I might attempt to sleep during the day-time. If I worked it would only be at night but it would need many nights perhaps a hundred, perhaps a thousand. And I should be harassed by the anxiety of not knowing whether the Master of my destiny, less indulgent than the Sultan Sheriar, would, some morning when I stopped work, grant a reprieve until the next evening. Not that I had the ambition to reproduce in any fashion the Thousand and One Nights, anymore than the Mémoires of Saint-Simon, they too written by night, nor any of the books I had so much loved and which superstitiously attached to them in my childish simplicity as I was to my later loves, I could not, without horror, imagine different from what they were. As Elstir said of Chardin, one can only recreate what one loves by repudiating it. Doubtless my books, like my fleshly being, would, some day, die. But one must resign oneself to death. One accepts the thought that one will die in ten years and one's books in a hundred. Eternal duration is no more promised to works than to men. It might perhaps be a book as long as the Thousand and One Nights but very different. It is true that when one loves a work one would like to do something like it but one must sacrifice one's temporal love and not think of one's taste but of a truth which does not ask what our preferences are and forbids us to think of them. And it is only by obeying truth that one may some day encounter what one has abandoned and having forgotten the Arabian Nights or the Mémoires of Saint-Simon_ have written their counterpart in another period. But had I still time? Was it not too late?

In any case, if I had still the strength to accomplish my work, the circumstances, which had to-day in the course of the Princesse de Guermantes' reception simultaneously given me the idea of it and the fear of not being able to carry it out, would specifically indicate its form of which I had a presentiment formerly in Combray church during a period which had so much influence upon me, a form which, normally, is invisible, the form of Time. I should endeavour to render that Time-dimension by transcribing life in a way very different from that conveyed by our lying senses. Certainly, our senses lead us into other errors, many episodes in this narrative had proved to me that they falsify the real aspect of life. But I might, if it were needful, to secure the more accurate interpretation I proposed, be able to leave the locality of sounds unchanged, to refrain from detaching them from the source the intelligence assigns to them, although making the rain patter in one's room or fall in torrents into the cup from which we are drinking is, in itself, no more disconcerting than when as they often have, artists paint a sail or a peak near to or far away from us, according as the laws of perspective, variation in colour and ocular illusion make them appear, while our reason tells us that these objects are situated at enormous distances from us.

I might, although the error would be more serious, continue the fashion of putting features into the face of a passing woman, when instead of nose and cheeks and chin there was nothing there but an empty space in which our desire was reflected. And, a far more important matter, if I had not the leisure to prepare the hundred masks suitable to a single face, were it only as the eyes see it and in the sense in which they read its features, according as those eyes hope or fear or, on the other hand, as love and habit which conceal changes of age for many years, see them, indeed, even if I did not undertake, in spite of my liaison with Albertine proving that without it everything is fictitious and false, to represent people not from outside but from within ourselves where their smallest acts may entail fatal consequences, and to vary the moral atmosphere according to the different impressions on our sensibility or according to our serene sureness that an object is insignificant whereas the mere shadow of danger multiplies its size in a moment, if I could not introduce these changes and many others (the need for which, if one means to portray the truth has constantly been shown in the course of this narrative) into the transcription of a universe which had to be completely redesigned, at all events I should not fail to depict therein man, as having the extension, not of his body but of his years, as being forced to the cumulatively heavy task which finally crushes him, of dragging them with him wherever he goes. Moreover, everybody feels that we are occupying an unceasingly increasing place in Time, and this universality could only rejoice me since it is the truth, a truth suspected by each one of us which it was my business to try to elucidate. Not only does everyone feel that we occupy a place in Time but the most simple person measures that place approximately as he might measure the place we occupy in space. Doubtless we often make mistakes in this measurement but that one should believe it possible to do it proves that one conceives of age as something measurable.

And often I asked myself not only whether there was still time but whether I was in a condition to accomplish my work. Illness which had rendered me a service by making me die to the world (for if the grain does not die when it is sown, it remains barren but if it dies it will bear much fruit), was now perhaps going to save me from idleness as idleness had preserved me from facility. Illness had undermined my strength and, as I had long noticed, had sapped the power of my memory when I ceased to love Albertine. And was not the recreation of the memory of impressions it was afterwards necessary to fathom, to illuminate, to transform into intellectual equivalents, one of the conditions, almost the essential condition, of a work of art such as I had conceived just now in the library? Ah, if I only still had the powers that were intact on the evening I had evoked when I happened to notice François le Champi. My grandmother's lingering death and the decline of my will and of my health dated from that evening of my mother's abdication. It was all settled at the moment when, unable to await the morning to press my lips upon my mother's face, I had taken my resolution, I had jumped out of bed and had stood in my nightshirt by the window through which the moonlight shone, until I heard M. Swann go away. My parents had accompanied him, I had heard the door open, the sound of bell and closing door. At that very moment, in the Prince de Guermantes' mansion, I heard the sound of my parents' footsteps and the metallic, shrill, fresh echo of the little bell which announced M. Swann's departure and the coming of my mother up the stairs; I heard it now, its very self, though its peal rang out in the far distant past. Then thinking of all the events which intervened between the instant when I had heard it and the Guermantes' reception I was terrified to think that it was indeed that bell which rang within me still, without my being able to abate its shrill sound, since, no longer remembering how the clanging used to stop, in order to learn, I had to listen to it and I was compelled to close my ears to the conversations of the masks around me. To get to hear it close I had again to plunge into myself. So that ringing must always be there and with it, between it and the present, all that indefinable past unrolled itself which I did not know I had within me. When it rang I already existed and since, in order that I should hear it still, there could be no discontinuity, I could have had no instant of repose or of non-existence, of non-thinking, of non-consciousness, since that former instant clung to me, for I could recover it, return to it, merely by plunging more deeply into myself. It was that notion of the embodiment of Time, the inseparableness from us of the past that I now had the intention of bringing strongly into relief in my work. And it is because they thus contain the past that human bodies can so much hurt those who love them, because they contain so many memories, so many joys and desires effaced within them but so cruel for him who contemplates and prolongs in the order of time the beloved body of which he is jealous, jealous to the point of wishing its destruction. For after death Time leaves the body and memories—indifferent and pale—are obliterated in her who exists no longer and soon will be in him they still torture, memories which perish with the desire of the living body. I had a feeling of intense fatigue when I realised that all this span of time had not only been lived, thought, secreted by me uninterruptedly, that it was my life, that it was myself, but more still because I had at every moment to keep it attached to myself, that it bore me up, that I was poised on its dizzy summit, that I could not move without taking it with me.

The day on which I heard the distant, far-away sound of the bell in the Combray garden was a land-mark in that enormous dimension which I did not know I possessed. I was giddy at seeing so many years below and in me as though I were leagues high.

I now understood why the Duc de Guermantes, whom I admired when he was seated because he had aged so little although he had so many more years under him than I, had tottered when he got up and wanted to stand erect—like those old Archbishops surrounded by acolytes, whose only solid part is their metal cross—and had moved, trembling like a leaf on the hardly approachable summit of his eighty-three years, as though men were perched upon living stilts which keep on growing, reaching the height of church-towers, until walking becomes difficult and dangerous and, at last, they fall. I was terrified that my own were already so high beneath me and I did not think I was strong enough to retain for long a past that went back so far and that I bore within me so painfully. If at least, time enough were allotted to me to accomplish my work, I would not fail to mark it with the seal of Time, the idea of which imposed itself upon me with so much force to-day, and I would therein describe men, if need be, as monsters occupying a place in Time infinitely more important than the restricted one reserved for them in space, a place, on the contrary, prolonged immeasurably since, simultaneously touching widely separated years and the distant periods they have lived through—between which so many days have ranged themselves—they stand like giants immersed in Time.

Je venais de comprendre pourquoi le duc de Guermantes, dont j'avais admiré, en le regardant assis sur une chaise, combien il avait peu vieilli bien qu'il eût tellement plus d'années que moi au-dessous de lui, dès qu'il s'était levé et avait voulu se tenir debout avait vacillé sur des jambes flageolantes comme celles de ces vieux archevêques sur lesquels il n'y a de solide que leur croix métallique et vers lesquels s'empressent les jeunes séminaristes, et ne s'était avancé qu'en tremblant comme une feuille, sur le sommet peu praticable de quatre-vingt-trois années, comme si les hommes étaient juchés sur de vivantes échasses grandissant sans cesse, parfois plus hautes que des clochers, finissant par leur rendre la marche difficile et périlleuse, et d'où tout d'un coup ils tombent. Je m'effrayais que les miennes fussent déjà si hautes sous mes pas, il ne me semblait pas que j'aurais encore la force de maintenir longtemps attaché à moi ce passé qui descendait déjà si loin, et que je portais si douloureusement en moi! Si du moins il m'était laissé assez de temps pour accomplir mon œuvre, je ne manquerais pas de la marquer au sceau de ce Temps dont l'idée s'imposait à moi avec tant de force aujourd'hui, et j'y décrirais les hommes, cela dût-il les faire ressembler à des êtres monstrueux, comme occupant dans le Temps une place autrement considérable que celle si restreinte qui leur est réservée dans l'espace, une place, au contraire, prolongée sans mesure, puisqu'ils touchent simultanément, comme des géants, plongés dans les années, à des époques vécues par eux, si distantes, - entre lesquelles tant de jours sont venus se placer - dans le Temps.

One could get the false impression that I, Jacques Cory, Yaakov Cory in Hebrew, am a citizen of the world, a cosmopolitan, with no roots in Israel, loving France, being a Europocentrist, wanting to assimilate in Europe and to forget my Jewish roots. But, I fell in love with Israel, when I settled there, if not at the age of 9, surely at the age of 13, when at last I was among Sabra friends born in Israel, who admired my intellect and were not jealous of my scholar achievements as during my primary school education, in an environment that despised culture, when Cowboys books were the most sophisticated intellectual achievements of the kids. I went at the age of 13 to a youth movement (socialist, of learning and working kids...) and felt there an integral part of society. The army was also a very important melting pot, but the most important decision of my life was taken on June 5, 1967, on my 23rd birthday. I terminated my BA studies in Economics and Political Sciences in 1964/5 at the age of 20, when I started to work as an Economist officer at the Israeli army until February 1967. By then, Israel was in the middle of a recession, and having found no work, although I earned a lot in temporary works, I applied for work to Omega in Bienne, Switzerland, where I was received (Israel didn't offer me work but Switzerland did...). I was frustrated that after my military service and BA, I had no work in Israel.

I had to start my work in mid June and had purchased a ticket for a ship sailing from Haifa on June 5, 1967, my birthday. A few days before this date, started the tension between Egypt and Israel, after the Egyptian broke all the agreements, leading to the Six-Day War, starting on June 5, 1967. I phoned my reserve unit and they told me that I can leave Israel, as I am not needed. So, I had to decide, am I going to leave Israel, maybe forever, when the country is being attacked by the Egyptians, Syrians and Jordans, or am I staying in my homeland, although I was not needed and could leave. If I would have leaved, I could have become a Swiss citizen, as I had many affinities with French Swiss. But I decided to remain in my country that maybe didn't need me right away but they would need me in the near future.

And, indeed, I was called to duty, right after the war for a month, and in the meantime I received a notification that I was admitted to the MBA studies at Insead with a full scholarship. In August I left for Berlin and later for Paris, visiting for the first time Paris. In France, I encountered for the first time anti-Semitism, which shocked me, as I had the impression that the French had all the qualities and no drawbacks. At a Rotary meeting right after I came to France, I was asked how the Jews dared to conquer East Jerusalem, which is holy to the Christians and Muslims (they forgot to mention that the Jews were there first, and built the Temple, but who remembers David and Salomon?). I answered them that the Arabs started the war as they did also in 1948, but when they lose they call the Israelis aggressors, and the situation now is far better for the Christians than it was before. Ultimately, they befriended me, as they were not accustomed to receive blunt answers by the French Jews who were too "apologetic"...

I dated at Fontainebleau a young woman aged 18 who studied at a Catholic school in her last year of high school. One evening when we were in my room she said that she has to return home to prepare a composition on the superiority of Christianity over Judaism. I told her that I will write for her the composition as I am an expert on the matter. I dictated her all the "usual" lies about the Jews, we killed Jesus, we refuse to recognise the Messiah, we like too much money, we are presumptuous, misers, we have a double allegiance to France and Israel, in short all the lies that I have heard in the past few months. I didn't go too far as to say that we drink the blood of young Christian boys in Passover, as I wanted the composition to sound genuine. My girlfriend was hilarious, she laughed a lot, as she of course was pro-Semite, otherwise she wouldn't have dated me. Well, she received the first prize! It became the joke of all her class to whom she told the truth that the composition was written by her Jewish boyfriend. The nuns of course didn't know about that and praised her for the excellent "balanced and objective" composition. Her composition was submitted to the Paris contest where all the religious schools contested. The first prize was a scholarship and the second prize was a week of a religious seminar in a convent. Guess what? She received the second prize, the Catholic management found that the composition was too old-school Catholic and didn't match the new doctrines of the Pope. She wanted to kill me, as because of me she had to attend the religious seminar, and told me that this was the problem with the Jews – they excel too much even when they write an anti-Semitic composition!

After encountering many more revelations of anti-Semitism, I came to the conclusion that I had only one homeland and I decided to return to Israel right after graduation and not find a lucrative job there, as others did. But, once again, fate intervened at the crossroads between cosmopolitanism and nationalism. Cosmopolitan is derived from the Greek κοσμοπολίτης, or kosmopolitês, formed from "κόσμος", kosmos, i.e. "world", "universe", or "cosmos", and πολίτης, "politês", i.e. "citizen" or "[one] of a city". Contemporary usage defines the term as "citizen of the world". In April 1969, I worked at IAI, Israel Aircraft Industries, when the company decided to purchase two aerospace companies in Belgium - Sabca and Cobelda. As I worked for the VP who was responsible of the purchasing it was decided that I will relocate to Belgium and supervise the merger. Afterall, this is what I learned at Insead, Belgium was part of the Common Market, French was my mother tongue, I was the perfect candidate for the job. The departure was imminent, I said goodbye to my parents and friends (I didn't have at the moment a girlfriend), I wrote to my Belgian friends that I was coming; the suitcases were ready, the flight ticket, the passport... But, at the last moment, a couple of days before my departure, the deal was cancelled because of the embargo, and I remained in Israel. A week later I met at a party a young woman Ruthy, we fell in love immediately, le coup de foudre, and three months later we were married. Only then, I felt at last fully assimilated in the Israeli culture, Ruthy was the opposite of a cosmopolitan, she was not a Sabra, but having come to Israel at the age of three, she was 100% Israeli, she had never left Israel (only in 1978 she travelled abroad for the first time), and I at last felt completely Israeli. Ruthy was convinced that Israel is the only answer for the Jews who want to avoid anti-Semitism, her Romanian parents were almost murdered in the holocaust, as most of her family were, and I came to the same conclusion. I started to read, for my pleasure (not for my literature courses), Israeli literature, liking most Agnon, Shamir and Tammuz, going to the theater to see Israeli plays, still feeling a bit cosmopolitan but with Israeli roots, as there is no contradiction between the two, that complement each other in harmony.

And of course, there is the Bible. I have studied the Bible in Ancient Hebrew and understand it almost perfectly. I am an atheist but have a great respect and admiration for religion, much less for ultra-orthodox religious people of all faiths. I read many books, wrote and taught extensively, on business ethics in Christianity, Judaism, Islam, Buddhism, and other religions, based on the Golden Rule: Do unto others as you would have them do unto you. In the Hebrew original in the Bible – (ויקרא י"ט:י"ח) וְאָהַבְתָּ לְרֵעֶךָ כָּמוֹךָ – love your friend as yourself. Or in Chinese/Mandarin: chi so pu yu wu shih yu jen 己所不欲, 勿施于人. Alternatively, One should not treat others in ways that one would not like to be treated. In the original, in Aramaic: dealeikha sani lehaverha lo taavid (שבת לא א – הלל) . As I am Aristotelian in my belief – advocate of the middle way, the mean between extremes, the "golden mean", nothing in excess, harmony, in short – I believe in moderation and not on extreme conduct. If you substitute Ethics/Justice/Middle Way/Harmony/Humanism instead of God, you found the gist of the Bible, happiness and peace. Actually, God was probably invented by the prophets in order to convince men and women to conduct righteously, as most of the people have to fear the wrath of God in order to be ethical, and even so, they "buy" forgiveness by donating to the church, mosque or synagogue, in order to be forgiven by God. Today, the unethical tycoons, even if they are not religious, donate to charity, to universities, hospitals, public buildings, culture, or sports activities, and society forgives them that they got rich by unethical means. Well, not all of them donate, and not all of those who donate are unethical, like Warren Buffett, one of the most ethical businessmen, who donates back to society almost all what he has.

I like to read from time to time the Bible, and the chapter I like the most is Psalm 92, that summarizes my belief that people should live with a clean conscience, based on a humanistic approach to life, faith in Ethics, harmonious and holistic conduct, admiration of a moderate and wise existence, justice for the righteous and the wicked – the righteous flourish like the palm tree, they still bear fruit in old age, and though the wicked sprout like grass, evildoers shall be scattered. To declare that Lord/ethics/justice is upright, he is my rock, with no unrighteousness. Those who want to hear this psalm in Hebrew can hear it on this Hebrew link: האזנה לפרק זה

◀ Psalm 92 ▶

English Standard Version - How Great Are Your Works

A Psalm. A Song for the Sabbath.

1It is good to give thanks to the Lord, to sing praises to your name, O Most High;
2to declare your steadfast love in the morning, and your faithfulness by night, 3to the music of the lute and the harp,
to the melody of the lyre.
4For you, O Lord, have made me glad by your work;
at the works of your hands I sing for joy.

5How great are your works, O Lord!
Your thoughts are very deep!
6The stupid man cannot know;
the fool cannot understand this:
7that though the wicked sprout like grass and all evildoers flourish,
they are doomed to destruction forever;
8 but you, O Lord, are on high forever.
9For behold, your enemies, O Lord, for behold, your enemies shall perish;

all evildoers shall be scattered.

10 But you have exalted my horn like that of the wild ox;
you have poured over me fresh oil.

11 My eyes have seen the downfall of my enemies;
my ears have heard the doom of my evil assailants.

12 The righteous flourish like the palm tree and grow like a cedar in Lebanon.

13 They are planted in the house of the Lord;
they flourish in the courts of our God.

14 They still bear fruit in old age;
they are ever full of sap and green,

15 to declare that the Lord is upright;
he is my rock, and there is no unrighteousness in him.

תהילים פרק צב

א מְזִמּוֹר שִׁיר, לַיּוֹם הַשַּׁבָּת.
ב טוֹב, לְהַדוֹת לַיהוָה; וּלְזַמֵּר לְשִׁמְךָ עָלֵינוּ.

טז לְהַגִּיד, כִּי-יֵשֶׁר יְהוָה; צוּרִי, וְלֹא-עֲלָתָה (עֲוֹלָתָה) בּוֹ.

I visited most of Israel – I studied for three years at the Hebrew University of Jerusalem, I worked for nine years in Tel Aviv, but most of the time I lived in Haifa, where I prefer to live, with my family, my parents lived there, and Ruthy's parents lived in the nearby town of Nahariya. I live on Mount Carmel in a cottage with a fantastic view of Mount Carmel, the woods and the sea. I stayed several times at Eilat, visiting a few times Beer Sheba, Nazareth, Tiberias, Safed, the Golan Heights, and only once the touristic sites of the West Bank. Some people say that I visit more foreign countries than my own country, but this is common to many of my friends, who are cosmopolitan as I am. When you study so many languages, read so many literatures, visit so many countries, you are bound to read less Hebrew books and tour less your own country. When walking on the walls of Carcassonne I was criticized that I have not walked yet on the walls of Jerusalem, and I really don't want to divulge if I have ever visited the Knesset, Israeli parliament, while I visited the American Congress, the British Parliament, the French Assemblée Nationale, the Romanian Parliament, and the German Reichstag, where I dined with the group of INSEAD alumnis. Yet, I feel a 100% Israeli, as can be seen in this book, I support the Israeli government attitude in the Palestinian conflict although I differ sometimes with the tactics, but I never criticize Israel when visiting abroad. I feel that I have found the right balance and harmony between my cosmopolitan and Israeli identities, as the Golden Rule and Aristotelian middle way were always and still are the motto of my life.

One of the criteriae of the essence of being an Israeli is probably the community singing, or the folklore dances. I participated every month during 14 years in a community singing organized by Effi Netzer who sang accompanied with his accordion, with me, my wife and friends, and with 400 more people, Israeli songs, and in the second part of the evening we heard Israeli singers singing Israeli songs and cosmopolitan songs – French chansons of Edith Piaff, Yves Montand, Gilbert Becaud, Jacques Brel, Beatle songs, South American – Peruvian Indian, Brazilian sambas, Mexican mariachis, Argentinian tangos, Cuban salsa, American Country songs, Spirituals, Italian songs – Napolitan, San Remo, Eurovision songs, Irish songs (Israelis don't boycott Irish music...), Abba songs, Frank Sinatra and oldies songs, Greek songs, Musical songs, and even Opera arias and Oriental songs. The Israeli songs were songs of the repertoires of the best Israeli singers, poets, and composers: Chava Alberstein, Naomi Shemer, Nurit Hirsh, Ehud Manor, Yehudit Ravitz, Arik Einstein, Nathan Alterman, Ofra Haza, Uzi Hitman, Effi Netzer, Ilanit, Rita, and links to more Israeli singers and performers in other parts of this book.

So, am I a good citizen? Should a good citizen support all what the government does, or should he criticize what he thinks is wrong, while strictly obeying the law even if he differs to many of the laws? I have remained in Israel throughout all my life, except for ten years – 9 when I was a kid in Cairo, but even then my allegiance as my father's was to Israel and not to Egypt, and one at Fontainebleau, France, where I studied for my MBA, and although I could have settled before and after Insead outside Israel I remained in the country and gave my children an uninterrupted Israeli education of 12 years at the Reali School of Haifa, one of the best schools in Israel. I also served as an economist at the Army in the reserves (as a Major) until I was 50.

Who is a true Israeli? A citizen who lives all his life in Israel, without traveling abroad and speaks only Hebrew? Or a citizen who comes to live in Israel at the age of 80 only because it is one of the few countries in the world who don't have inheritance taxes? A settler who settles in Judea and Samaria returning to the sites where his forefathers lived? Or a human rights watch member who denounces every move where the army and settlers oppress the Arab population? A high tech engineer who lives in Los Angeles, receives the American nationality, but all his friends are also from the Israeli diaspora? Or an army officer who was wounded by the Palestinians in one of the retaliations campaigns against the launching of thousands of rockets from mosques and schools aimed to kill thousands of innocent civilians in synagogues and kindergartens? The answer is very ambiguous and much more complex than defining who is a true Frenchman, Italian or German. Israel is a unique country where the main common denominator of the population is the ethnic/religious roots, and even that applies only to less than 80% of the population. There are wide gaps between religious/ultraorthodox/secular, Jews and Arabs, Sephardic/Oriental/Ashkenazis, left/center/right/religious/Arab parties, rich/middle class/poor, doves/hawks, Sabras (born in Israel)/immigrants, new immigrants from Russia/Ethiopia/western countries, and the gaps in many cases are increasing (especially in social classes). My activities focus in narrowing the gaps and reaching an harmonious balance.

Israel is the land of the Jewish people, the Israeli Declaration of Independence identifies Israel as a "Jewish State". Paragraph 13 of the Declaration provides that the State of Israel would be based on freedom, justice and peace as envisaged by the prophets of Israel; it will ensure complete equality of social and political rights to all its inhabitants irrespective of religion, race or sex. I believe that the right definition of the state should be: the land of the Jewish people and of all its citizens. "Jewish people" as opposed to only all its citizens (like the US or Australia), because the purpose of the foundation of the state was and is to give a homeland to all the Jews. "and of all its citizens" because we have in Israel minorities of Arabs, Druzes, Russian Christians, African refugees, etc., who are not Jewish yet Israel is their land also. According to the law, Israel is also a democracy, with equal rights to all. But the definition of a democracy according to me is a system that achieves the maximum welfare to all the population.

I fully adhere to the Israeli Declaration of Independence, and to most of the ensuing laws although I differ but obey to some of the laws, especially on religious matters - I think that the country should be secular and should not finance religious schools, economic matters - the taxation laws which are antisocial and neoliberal, and welfare laws that have privatized most of the government responsibilities to society. I criticize in my books and articles, on my website and in my courses and lectures, many of the social and economic, political and ethical foundations of Israel and I have issued a platform of a Movement of the Second Republic of Israel, aimed to restart most of the Israeli foundations based on the Declaration of Independence.

The movement operates outside the political system focusing on social, economic and governmental justice, integrity, equality, sustainability, and the quality of life of all the citizens. The movement unites all the segments of the population – hawks and doves, settlers/pioneers and "peace now" adherents, Jews and Arabs, religious and seculars, men and women, rich/middle class/poor, Israelis living in the periphery and the center, businessmen, academics, intelligentsia/workers. Israel should increase the percentage of the middle class from 27% to 50% like in Sweden, should reduce the percentage of poors by more than half to less than 10% like in Canada, Norway and Switzerland, should eliminate the gaps between the segments of the population and especially Jews and Arabs, Ultraorthodox and seculars, focusing on ethics and integrity, eradication of corruption and bribes, abolishing the neoliberal system, with a humane capitalist system operating for the welfare of all the stakeholders of society, with a presidential government system and a government of experts, abolishing the illicit ties between business and government and banning the employment of government officials in the private sector and in parallel increasing substantially (like in Singapore) the salaries of the public sector employees, separation of religion and government (like in France), free education at all levels, decreasing substantially crime (including white collar crime), returning to basics – an equal society condemning wrongdoing and advocating modesty, cooperation instead of cut-throat competition, involvement in the community, finding the Middle Way in all activities including the economic regime, with adequate regulation, striving to increase the intellectual level of the youth as opposed to decadent reality programs. In short, through this holistic approach Israel and all societies would find the adequate budgets to implement all these reforms, returning the power to the people as opposed to the tycoons and oligarchy who rule de facto the economy, with a progressive taxing system, strong penalties to haircuts and ethical wrongdoing, heavy sentences to all those who ruin the environment, and strong incentives to an ethical conduct of the people.

And now, we bring a short survey on Hebrew literature of the authors I like most – Shai Agnon, Moshe Shamir, Amos Oz, Benjamin Tammuz and Haim Nahman Bialik. First – Shai Agnon. Shmuel Yosef Agnon (Hebrew: שמואל יוסף עגנון) (July 17, 1888 – February 17, 1970) was a Nobel Prize laureate writer and was one of the central figures of modern Hebrew fiction. In Hebrew, he is known by the acronym Shai Agnon (ש"י עגנון). In English, his works are published under the name S. Y. Agnon. Agnon was born in Galicia, Austro-Hungarian Empire (today Ukraine). He later immigrated to Mandatory Palestine, and died in Jerusalem, Israel.

His works deal with the conflict between the traditional Jewish life and language and the modern world. They also attempt to recapture the fading traditions of the European shtetl (village). In a wider context, he also contributed to broadening the characteristic conception of the narrator's role in literature. Agnon shared the Nobel Prize with the poet Nelly Sachs in 1966. The communities he passed through in his life are reflected in his works:

- Galicia: in the books The Bridal Canopy, A City and the Fullness Thereof and A Guest for the Night.
- Germany: in the stories "Fernheim", "Thus Far" and "Between Two Cities".
- Jaffa: in the stories "Oath of Allegiance", "Tmol Shilshom" and "The Dune".
- Jerusalem: "Tehilla", "Tmol Shilshom", "Ido ve-Inam" and "Shira".

Nitza Ben-Dov writes about Agnon's use of allusiveness, free-association and imaginative dream-sequences, and discusses how seemingly inconsequential events and thoughts determine the lives of his characters. Some of Agnon's works, such as The Bridal Canopy, And the Crooked Shall Be Made Straight, and The Doctor's Divorce, have been adapted for theatre. A play based on Agnon's letters to his wife, "Esterlein Yakirati", was performed at the Khan Theater in Jerusalem. Agnon wrote many short stories, but I like most his novels and novellas:

- The Bridal Canopy (1931), translated from Hakhnāsāt kallāh. An epic describing Galician Judaism at the start of the 19th century. The story of a poor but devout Galician Jew, Reb Yudel, who wanders the countryside with his companion, Nuta, during the early 19th century, in search of bridegrooms for his three daughters.
- In the Heart of the Seas, a story of a journey to the land of Israel (1933), translated from Bi-levav yamim. A short novel about a group of ten men who travel from Eastern Europe to Jerusalem.
- A Simple Story (1935), translated from Sipur pashut. A short novel about a young man, his search for a bride, and the lessons of marriage.
- A Guest for the Night (1938), translated from Ore'ah Noteh Lalun. A novel about the decline of eastern European Jewry. The narrator visits his old hometown and discovers that great changes have occurred since World War I.
- Betrothed (1943), translated from Shevuat Emunim. A short novel.
- Only Yesterday (1945), translated from Temol shilshom. An epic novel set in the Second Aliyah period. It follows the story of the narrator from Galicia to Jaffa to Jerusalem.
- Edo and Enam (1950). A short novel.
- To This Day (1952), translated from Ad henah. A tale of a young writer stranded in Berlin during World War I.
- Shira (1971). A novel set in Jerusalem in the 1930s and 1940s. Manfred Herbst, a middle-aged professor suffering from boredom, spends his days prowling the streets searching for Shira, the beguiling nurse he met when his wife was giving birth to their third child. Against the background of 1930s Jerusalem, Herbst wages war against the encroachment of age.

ONLY YESTERDAY: Seduced by Zionist slogans, young Isaac Kumer imagines the Land of Israel filled with the financial, social, and erotic opportunities that were denied him, the son of an impoverished shopkeeper, in Poland. Once there, he cannot find the agricultural work he anticipated. Instead Isaac happens upon house-painting jobs as he moves from secular, Zionist Jaffa, where the ideological fervor and sexual freedom are alien to him, to ultra-orthodox, anti-Zionist Jerusalem. While some of his Zionist friends turn capitalist, becoming successful merchants, his own life remains adrift and impoverished in a land torn between idealism and practicality, a place that is at once homeland and diaspora. Eventually he marries a religious woman in Jerusalem, after his worldly girlfriend in Jaffa rejects him. Led astray by circumstances, Isaac always ends up in the place opposite of where he wants to be, but why? The text soars to Surrealist-Kafkaesque dimensions when, in a playful mode, Isaac drips paint on a stray dog, writing "Crazy Dog" on his back. Causing panic wherever he roams, the dog takes over the story, until, after enduring persecution for so long without "understanding" why, he really does go mad and bites Isaac. The dog has been interpreted as everything from the embodiment of Exile to a daemonic force, and becomes an unforgettable character in a book about the death of God, the deception of discourse, the power of suppressed eroticism, and the destiny of a people depicted in all its darkness and promise.

AND FROM SHIRA: When Henrietta realized she was alone with her husband, she took his hand and said, "Don't be annoyed that I'm troubling you to take Shira to dinner. You don't know what a wonderful woman she is. . . . Now, my darling, get ready for the nurse. Don't you want to see Sarah?" "Sarah? Who's Sarah?" Henrietta said, "Didn't we agree to call our new daughter Sarah?" . . . The nurse Shira was back. . . . She wore a midlength gray dress and a silver filigree necklace, which set off her face. . . . One more striking thing: on her lovely, small feet she wore shoes made by a skilled craftsman, which lent special elegance to her bearing. . . . When they were outside, Shira said, "Actually, I would rather not go to a restaurant. . . . Let's walk a little, so I can clear my head." . . . Herbst lowered his eyes. . . . He saw her small feet in the slippers she had waved at him the night before. He remembered the night's events, how he had slipped them off and exposed her feet, how she had put the slippers back on and he had slipped them off again, how her feet had wriggled, stockingless, bare, lovelier than any feet in the world.

Another quote from Shira, where Agnon explains as Herbst what he thinks about politicians:

"...החכמים מושכים ידיהם מהנהגת העולם, מפני שהם יודעים שיש חכמים מהם ורוצים שיתנהג העולם על ידי חכמים גמורים, בתוך כך קופצים הטפשים והרשעים ובאים ונוטלים את העולם לידיהם ומנהגים את העולם לפי זדונם וכפי טפשותם. מעתה היאך נותנים החכמים לעולם שיאבד על ידי השוטים והרשעים, אלא שמתוך שהחכמים חכמים ומוסיפים חכמה, כל שנראה להם אתמול כחכמה שלמה רואים אותו היום שאינו חכמה ואינם עומדים על דעתם ואינם תוקעים עצמם לשום דבר מפני החכמה שמוליכה את החכמים ממעלה למעלה. לא כן הטפשים. כל דבר שנתנו בו עיניהם הרי הם מחזיקים בו ואינם מניחים ממנו, שאם יניחו ידיהם ממנו אין להם מה יעשו בעולם. לפיכך כל ימיהם תחבולות ובלבד שיחזיקו את העולם בידיהם."

I'll try to translate this quote from Agnon's Shira: "The wise people are not inclined to rule the world as they know that there are people who are wiser and they want that the world will be ruled by totally wise people. In this gap jump the fools and the wicked who come and grasp the world in their hands and rule the world wickedly and foolishly. Now how can the wise people allow the world to be lost by the fools and wicked, because the wise become wiser, and what they thought yesterday was a complete wisdom they see today that it is not wisdom and they do not insist on their opinions and they don't push themselves into anything as the wisdom leads the wise people higher and higher. Not so the foolish. Everything that they want they hold it and do not let it go, because if they do so they'll not know what to do in this world. Therefore, all their lives are ruse enabling them to hold the world in their hands."

Moshe Shamir is from another generation, born in Israel, fighting in 1948, and writing many masterpieces of the young nation Israel. Moshe Shamir (Hebrew: משה שמיר; September 15, 1921 – August 20, 2004) was an Israeli author, playwright, opinion writer, and public figure. Shamir was born in Safed. He went to the Tel Nordau School and graduated from the Herzliya Hebrew High School in Tel Aviv. In the Israeli War of Independence he served in Palmach. He began his political career as a member of the movement Hashomer Hatzair, in which he filled a leadership role. He was one of the editors of their official newspaper Al Ha-Homa from 1939 to 1941. From 1944 to 1946 he was a member of kibbutz Mishmar HaEmek. He was founder and editor of the Israel Defense Forces official newspaper Bamahane ("In the Camp") from 1947 to 1950. During the 1950s he was a member of the editorial board of the newspaper Maariv and the editor of its literature section. Shamir began writing stories at a young age. They immediately attracted attention, and not only for his literary ability. He was always engaged with political problems, always arousing opposition. The first opposition came from Meir Yairi, leader of the left-wing movement to which Shamir belonged, concerning what was perceived as "ideological aberration" in his stories. In hindsight it is difficult to understand what the fuss was about. The stories seem completely innocent and certainly are not hostile or injurious to the kibbutz movement. However, the anger that was aroused against Shamir was so strong that he decided to leave his kibbutz in 1947 for ideological reasons. Shamir's first story, in 1940, dealt with Abraham and the binding of Isaac. The story was published in the youth movement newspaper Al Ha-Homa.

In his 1947 novel He Walked Through the Fields, which became the first play performed in the established State of Israel, the hero is a native-born Israeli, a "Sabra". The book won the Ussishkin Prize. It was adapted as a movie directed by Yosef Milo, who also directed its theatrical debut. In 1947, he became the chief editor of the Haganah (later Israel Defense Forces) newspaper Bamahane. He edited it until he was dismissed at the request of David Ben-Gurion for publishing an article about a celebration of the disbanding of Palmach. Thereafter he continually aroused scandals, more than any other Hebrew author of our time. The hero of With His Own Hands: Elik's Story (1951) is his brother Elik who fell in the War of Independence. The book became an icon of that war. Elik's Story was translated into English, adapted into radio plays, and even merited an adaptation for television. It is one of the greatest Israeli bestsellers of all time, selling to date over 150,000 copies. It became part of the program of study in schools.

Under the Sun (1950) and That You Are Naked (1959) are autobiographical pieces based on his life in the thirties and forties. Shamir wrote additional books about the members of his family: With His Own Heart about his father, and Not Far From the Tree about his family history. Besides The King of Flesh and Blood, his most translated book was a children's book, The Fifth Wheel (1961). It is about the adventures of a kibbutznik, dispatched to bring a tractor from the port, who at every step meets various and sundry obstacles and adventures.

Joseph Klausner was critical of The King of Flesh and Blood, whose central character is the Hasmonean king Alexander Jannæus. Menachem Begin recalled Klausner's words in a later day when Moshe Shamir, as a member of the Knesset, crossed the political lines from left to right to oppose the Israel-Egypt Peace Treaty. As the prime minister at the time, Begin spoke out against Shamir in the Knesset, indicating that Shamir's objections showed a lack of awareness of the historic moves taking place. He said to Shamir (in Hebrew): Certainly you recall that, in his day, the late Prof. Joseph Klausner wrote, when you published your book The King of Flesh and Blood, these words: "There may sometimes be a writer who is not a historian, but to such an extent?" And now I say: "There may sometimes be a politician who does not recognize the rustling wings of history, but to such an extent?" Moshe Shamir also wrote poetry. However, most of his trade was in prose. He was a prolific author, publishing in the course of his life more than 25 books. Thus he is best recognized as a novelist and playwright. He died at the age of 83.

We bring here an extract in Hebrew from the book: The king of flesh and blood:

משבא ינאי להוליך את שלומית לסעודה עטוי היה בסדין של בוץ לבן, ואין עליו דבר זולת חרב החבויה בין קפליו. לעומתו היתה שלומית מפוארת בשיראים של מלכות ומעוטרת בחפצי חן. הוליכה ואמר לה:

"כיון ששמעו שמעה של סעודה טובה – נתלקטו גרגרניה של ירושלים ובאו, ברוב עם הדרת מלך." נכנסה לטרקלין וראתה שדחה סעודתה מפני סעודתו. שולחנות היו ערוכים, ועליהם כנוסים בני אדם רבים. הללו נתרוממו עכשיו באחת וקמו על רגליהם, לתת כבוד למלך וכוהן גדול. עמדו ולא זזו כל אימת שהוליך את שלומית על פניהם, והוסיפו לעמוד בשעה שבא עמה למקומה והושיבה. כיון שישב ישבו, ונשתררה דממה כבדה בחללו של טרקלין. אף על פי שהיו עיניה תקועות לפנים בלא ניע, ואף על פי שקצת הקשיבה לברכתו של כוהן גדול, נתונה היתה דעתה למנות מי בבאים. חידה הוא לה אותו מלך שאין כוחו לבני אדם וסופו כונס עם רב. אפשר שלא כנס את הרבים אלא בשביל להימלט מן המעטים. הנה ישב אבשלום אחיו לשמאלו. כמדומה לא נראו פנים זה ג' ירחים, ואף על פי כן אין הוא מפנה עליו את מבטו, אבשלום ציפיתו אמורה בפניו. ביקשה בעיניה את בן שטח אחיה ומצאתהו שהוא דחוק ליד אחד השולחנות, אף כי נראה מרווח ביו דוחקיו.

ינאי, כמדומה, ביקש לעשות פומבי ליומו החדש, וכנגד תפארת בני אדם שעשויה ירושלים לכנוס למקום אחד העמיד תפארת כליו ומשמשיו ומזונותיו שהוא עשוי לכנוס לשעה אחת. ניכר שלא גמר בלבו על דבר כל אותה תכונה אלא בשעה שיצא מעליה. בני אדם עוד היו מתכנסים ובאים, והעבדים היו חוזרים ומשפיעים על כל שולחן משוב בי מבשלו של מלך. ככל שרבו הבאים מעטו בתוכם שהיו ידועים לשלומית. כמה וכמה מהם ניכרו בקלסתר עכו"ם שלהם, וכמסתבר: משרי צבאו החדשים של ינאי. כשם שמיהר לאבד כן מיהר לקנות. בריות שארמון החשמונאים לא היה מורגל בשכמותם סבבו על השולחנות – סוחרים, מוכסנים וסתם בני נכר, בעלי שיירות ובעלי שליחויות.

נתן מבטו בשלומית, וידעה כי אליה הוא מכוון. ביקשה לכבוש פניה ולא נשמעו לה. באה לה גאוותה ונשאה סנטרה כנגדו. ראתהו מלוא עמידתו, שעה שהוסיף ואמר בה שאר דבריו: "על דבר בני יוחנן אשר ילדה לי, תינתן למלכה לשלומית בית שאן העיר, והכפרים, וכל נחלאות המלך אשר בגבולה, וכל המסים והמכסים הבאים ממנה – מתנת המלך לנחלת עולם, לה לפשה, להנאתה ולשמחת לבה." קסם על שפתי מלך, וראתה שלומית שהיא נקסמת ונכבשת שוב לשגיונותיו של זה, כאילו אפשר לו ללבה שמתנות יקנוהו. אכן, לא מתנתו קנתה אלא שכרון רוחו להפליא. בדומה לה נכבשו כל האחרים. ניכרה חכמתו של מלך, שהניח לעמו שימתין לו; בשביל שלא יבוא לפניו ניצוח אלא יבוא לפניו נוצח. היתה מנענעת ראשה לכאן ולכאן ואינה רואה מי הם שמשלחים בה ברכותיהם ושאונו. פתאום נדמו ושוב היה ינאי מדבר.

I think that The King of Flesh and Blood is the best book of Moshe Shamir, whose central character is the Hasmonean king Alexander Jannæus. The historic accuracy of the book may be disputed by our best historian Joseph Klausner, but it really does not matter as Shamir has succeeded in transposing us to the times of the Hashmonean Dynasty. Alexander Jannai/Yannai; Hebrew: (אלכסנדר ינאי) was king of Judea from 103 BC to 76 BC. The son of John Hyrcanus, he inherited the throne from his brother Aristobulus I, and appears to have married his brother's widow, Shlomit or "Shelomit", also known as Salome Alexandra, according to the Biblical law of Yibbum ("levirate marriage"), although Josephus is inexplicit on that point. Since Alexander Jannæus was a high priest, he was technically breaking Jewish law according to the laws in Leviticus. The laws in Leviticus state that a Jewish high priest is forbidden to marry a widow. I'll translate the last page of the extract from Shamir's book:

"Yannai stood up and said: "In this time of joys," he started looking around once and again, "In this time of good news, it is becoming to add a happy occasion to another one". He looked at Shlomit, and she knew that he meant her. She tried to look aside but her face did not obey her.

She looked at him with pride, noticed his stature, while he continued saying to her: "As a tribute for my son Yohanan that she gave me, the queen Shlomit will receive the town of Beit Shean, the villages, and all the lands belonging to the king in the vicinity, and all the taxes and duties received will be a present of the king forever, to her, to her pleasure and joyful heart." Charm was on the king's lips, and Shlomit noticed that she was charmed and captivated once again by his follies, as if her heart could be won by presents. Indeed, not his present captivated her but his wonderful spirit. In the same token all the others were captivated. The king's wisdom was blatant, while he let his people wait for him; not coming to them vanquished but coming to them victorious. She moved her head here and there and she did not notice who were those who conveyed to her their blessings and noises. Suddenly there was quiet and Yannai spoke again."

Amos Oz is from the third generation. Amos Oz (Hebrew: עמוס עוז; born May 4, 1939, birth name Amos Klausner) is an Israeli writer, novelist, journalist and intellectual. He is also a professor of literature at Ben-Gurion University in Beersheba. He is regarded as Israel's most famous living author. Oz's work has been published in 42 languages, including Arabic, in 43 countries. He has received many honours and awards, among them the Legion of Honour of France, the Goethe Prize, the Prince of Asturias Award in Literature, the Heinrich Heine Prize and the Israel Prize. In 2007, a selection from the Chinese translation of A Tale of Love and Darkness was the first work of modern Hebrew literature to appear in an official Chinese textbook. Since 1967, Oz has been a prominent advocate of a two-state solution to the Israeli–Palestinian conflict. In his political views on the Palestinian conflict he was completely opposite to Moshe Shamir, who wanted to keep Judea, Samaria, Gaza, the Golan heights, and Sinai. Many of Oz's family members were right-wing Revisionist Zionists. His great uncle Joseph Klausner (of whom we write extensively in this book) was the Herut party candidate for the presidency against Chaim Weizmann and was chair of the Hebrew literature department at the Hebrew University of Jerusalem. Oz and his family were not religious, considering it irrational. Oz, however, attended the community religious school Tachkemoni since the only alternative was a socialist school affiliated with the labour movement, to which his family was even more opposed. The noted poet Zelda was one of his teachers. After Tachkemoni he attended Gymnasia Rehavia. His mother, who suffered from depression, committed suicide when he was 12. He would later explore the repercussions of this event in his memoir A Tale of Love and Darkness.

Oz has published 38 books, among them 13 novels, four collections of stories and novellas, children's books, and nine books of articles and essays (as well as six selections of essays that appeared in various languages), and about 450 articles and essays. His works have been translated into some 42 languages, including Arabic. Oz's political commentary and literary criticism have been published in the Histadrut newspaper Davar and Yedioth Ahronoth. Translations of his essays have appeared in the New York Review of Books. The Ben-Gurion University of the Negev maintains an archive of his work. Oz tends to present protagonists in a realistic light with an ironic touch while his treatment of the life in the kibbutz is accompanied by a somewhat critical tone. Oz credits a 1959 translation of American writer Sherwood Anderson's short story collection Winesburg, Ohio with his decision to "write about what was around me." In A Tale of Love and Darkness, his memoir of coming of age in the midst of Israel's violent birth pangs, Oz credits Anderson's "modest book" with his own realization that "the written world ... always revolves around the hand that is writing, wherever it happens to be writing: where you are is the center of the universe." In his 2004 essay "How to Cure a Fanatic" (later the title essay of a 2006 collection), Oz argues that the Israeli-Palestinian conflict is not a war of religion or cultures or traditions, but rather a real estate dispute — one that will be resolved not by greater understanding, but by painful compromise. I often wonder how mistaken can a genius be, and quoting what his great uncle Joseph Klausner said on Shamir's historical novel, I say: "There may sometimes be a writer who is not a historian, but to such an extent?"

How marvelous it could be if the Israeli-Palestinian conflict was a real estate dispute like our conflict with Egypt, where we evacuated all the territories to the last meter for a peace treaty. Unfortunately the conflict with the Palestinians leaders is only a conflict of religion (al-Aqsa is in danger), culture and traditions. A tradition that glorifies death as a Shahid, where children are called Jihad by the hundreds, where mothers are proud to send their children to be shahids as long as they kill as many Jews as they can, a culture that is based on insurmountable hate to the Jews, with a propaganda of incitement, allies in World War II with the Nazis and wanting to adopt their mass murders of Jews when the Germans would have conquered Palestine (Haj Amin al-Huseini was Hitler's ally). The Palestinian leaders are completely opposed to the Western culture of Israel, maintaining a culture which is undemocratic (there is no democracy in Gaza and the West Bank), fundamentalist (Hamas), with oppression of women, minorities, Christians, with no respect to foreigners and their beliefs (Jews have no rights in Jerusalem and the Wailing Wall/Western Wall/Kotel), teaching their children at school monstrous lies on the Jews, etc. Furthermore, even when Israel withdrew from all the Gaza strip, the Gaza/Hamas launched thousands of rockets into Israel, killing civilians, When we withdrew from most of the West Bank, Arafat's terrorists killed more than a thousand civilians. When we withdrew completely from Lebanon, the Lebanon/Hizballah launched thousands of rockets into Israel, killing civilians, and proving once more that the conflict with the Palestinians and Fundamentalist Islam is not a real estate dispute, but only a conflict of religion, culture, norms, and traditions.

But unfortunately, the peacelovings in Israel, Europe and all over the world, continue to believe in this false mantra. I do not use in my book disparagingly terms unless I think that the terms are justified (actually, all those who use such terms think them justified). When I call Islamic fundamentalist regimes and organizations backing terrorism and hating Jews and Israelis – Nazis, retrograde, Middle Ages, I do it because they use Nazi tactics and terminology, they want to annihilate Israel and the Jews like the Nazis, and really intend to bring us back to the Middle Ages. I never use those terms for those who back them, and occasionally call them anti-Semites or anti-Israelis, because I believe that those are their motivations, and today anti-Semite has become in many places an honorable term and not a pejorative one. Yet, I use the term of peacelovings for all those who are seeking peace unrealistically, although they think that they are realistic. I don't use the pejorative term peacemonger, although quite often they back terrorist and retrograde regimes and organizations such as the Hamas or Hezbollah, seeking to bring us back to the Middle Ages, when they advocate a "Free" Palestine, oppose the "blockade" of Gaza, condemn Israel for using too much force, accusing us of indiscriminate children killing, when they are in favor of the right of return to five million Palestinians to Israel, when they are boycotting Israel in the sake of justice, they are seeking peace unrealistically as a "Free" Palestine cannot exist as it does not exist in Gaza nor in the West Bank, in fact none of the Arab states are democratic and their population is far from being free. The "blockade" of Gaza has only one purpose – to prevent the Hamas for receiving thousands of rockets from our enemies, and Israel is not preventing food, electricity nor any basic necessities to the people in Gaza.

Israel uses the least excessive force and kill civilians only in cases where rockets are launched from populated neighborhoods or to prevent terrorism. So, if this is peace seeking for them – I believe that it is not realistic. Otherwise, I would call them "peacemakers" who are according to Webster: "one that makes or seeks to make peace esp. by reconciling parties or persons at variance". We have in history thousands of examples of peacemakers as Sadat, Begin, and all those who assisted them. We have also in history thousands of examples of peacelovings as Chamberlain and Daladier and all those who tried to prevent World War II at all cost, bringing a much worse outcome than if the German aggression would have been prevented from the start. The danger with peacelovings is that they are living in an unrealistic world (I would not call it hallucinatory in order not to be pejorative) and are willing to back the worst regimes on earth – the Nazis in the past and the Muslim fundamentalist and terrorists nowadays, including the Palestinian leaders and Iran. This is dangerous as the outcome of their ideology would be disastrous for the world peace. They do not perceive that Israel is the bastion of democracy and Western norms in the Middle East and they back Israelis enemies - dictatures, without human rights, hating Europeans, Jews, Americans. I oppose them but I do not oppose their right to express themselves, as I am a democrat, in favor of free speech for my opponent as for myself.

But what if they back terrorism? Well, we have a judicial system who will discern free speech from incitement, verbal opposition from terrorism. But what if they do it "at the expense of honor" – this is touchy, because it is exactly what the French government and army accused Zola when he backed Dreyfus and accused them. Were Chamberlain and Daladier traitors who acted at the expense of honor of France and the UK? I don't believe so, as I don't believe that Rabin and Peres were acting at the expense of honor when they signed the Oslo agreements. I also don't call Rabin and Peres peacelovings as they really thought that they are bringing peace to Israel, while the outcome of the agreements was war and terror by the terrorists whom we allowed to come back to Palestine. They took a calculated risk, as Begin and Sadat, but history proved that the peace with Egypt persisted, while the peace with the Palestinians collapsed because of the Palestinian (Hamas, Arafat, Abu Mazen) advocacy of war, terrorism, Nazi incitement, and not recognizing Israel's right to exist as a Jewish state. And what about the Israelis organizations and personalities who are today peacelovings, who even advocate boycott to Israel and an imposed solution to the conflict, are they doing it at the expense of honor? When they receive contributions from foreign countries and organizations who oppose Israel and back our enemies, are they honorable? When they call Israelis who oppose them fascists, warmongers, Nazis, are they honorable? I let the reader decide if they are honorable or not, if Brutus and Cassius are all honorable men, and if backing the enemies of Israel is honorable or not. So, is peaceloving a pejorative term or not? I'll say that when I write peaceloving I do not mean to use the term disparagingly but just descriptively for the lack of another neutral term defining them. I don't despise peacelovings nor advocate a ban on them, and I refrain from calling them peacemongers.

Yet, I love very much Amos Oz, his writings, his humanity, I respect his views, and he is entitled to his views no less than Theodorakis or Ken Loach. The book that I like most is a Tale of Love and Darkness which captivated me and made me cry, something that almost never happens to me in reading books, watching films, or in life in general. A Tale of Love and Darkness (Hebrew: סיפור על אהבה וחושך) is an autobiographical novel by Israeli author Amos Oz, first published in Hebrew in 2002. The book has been translated into 28 languages and over a million copies have been sold worldwide. In 2011, a bootleg Kurdish translation was found in a bookstore in northern Iraq. Oz was reportedly delighted. Probably Oz is less delighted by the fact that Kurdistan is almost fully conquered in a Jihad war by ISIS, the same ISIS, allies of the Palestinian's Hamas and heroes of many West Bank's leaders and population, ISIS that would conquer the West Bank a couple of months after the state of Palestine will be established, as Hamas conquered Gaza and killed thousands of Fatah's activists. There is no difference between Hamas (Gaza), Fatah/PLO (West Bank) and ISIS leadership, as far as religion, culture and tradition are concerned, terror is terror is terror, and today in the West and Israel terror is only Muslim fundamentalist - sorry, American and European peacelovings, I have learned from Victor Hugo to tell the truth only, even if it is not convenient to some politically correct people, and many anti-Semites pro-boycott fanatics, and I respect Islam, Palestinians, Arabs and Muslims, acknowledging that most of their population is against terror and not fundamentalists as their leaders. But as they don't oppose and condemn their fundamentalist leaders in the Middle East, Europe, Asia, and America, they should not be surprised of the anti-Muslim feelings of many extreme right leaders and their followers in those countries. Muslims in this fundamentalist war, as Germans in the Nazi area, are the first victims of fundamentalism and most of their casualties. And in their case, they keep them poor, ignorant, with terror, war, without progress...

In March 2011, Oz sent imprisoned former Tanzim leader Marwan Barghouti a copy of his book A Tale of Love and Darkness in Arabic translation with his personal dedication in Hebrew: "This story is our story, I hope you read it and understand us as we understand you, hoping to see you outside and in peace, yours, Amos Oz". The gesture was criticized by members of rightist political parties, among them Likud MK Tzipi Hotovely. Assaf Harofeh Hospital canceled Oz's invitation to give the keynote speech at an awards ceremony for outstanding physicians in the wake of this incident. Oz chronicles his childhood in Jerusalem at the end of the British Mandate for Palestine and the early years of the State of Israel, and his teenage years on Kibbutz Hulda. As a child, he crossed paths with prominent figures in Israeli society, among them Shmuel Yosef Agnon, Shaul Tchernichovsky, and David Ben-Gurion. One of his teachers was the Israeli poet Zelda. Joseph Klausner was his great-uncle. Told in a non-linear fashion, Oz's story is interwoven with tales of his family's Eastern European roots. The family's name was Klausner. By changing the name to a Hebrew one, Oz rebelled against that European background while affirming loyalty to the land of his birth. The epic tragedy of the book is in the suicide of the boy's mother, while the anguish builds in crescendo throughout the book until we read the last page when the mother kills herself. It is read like a detective story where you find only at the end who was the murderer – here we find only at the end how the young boy's mother committed suicide, muddering his youth, murdering his father's hopes, making you cry as you feel that you are the little boy, forcing you to read five times this chapter in order to understand it as you cried in the first time, were so emotioned in the second time, remembered tragic events that you encountered in your life in the third time, starting to grasp the horror of the situation but not yet all its scope in the fourth time. The novel is one of the best books that I have ever read and the best book in Hebrew literature to my opinion. When I decided to write my book, I hesitated between a standard or non standard autobiography, like Charlie Chaplin's, Lee Kuan Yew's, Charles de Gaulle's, or Amos Oz's autobiography – all of them excellent autobiographies written in different styles and formats. But then I understood that I have not the stature of any of them, and have not achieved even 1% of what they have achieved. I knew that I could not interest and move my readers as the other biographers, and in no way arrive even to a fraction of the emotions of Oz's book, the admiration of Chaplin's book, the historical scope of De Gaulle's book, and the personal story of Lee Kuan Yew. So, I opted for an authobiography that would bring small stories from my life appearing in the relevant chapters of linguistics, literature, history, plays, business ethics, and so on. So, it is not a standard biography in a chronological order but rather on the basis of stream of consciousness in the relevant context, as my life is not so interesting as Charlie Chaplin's, not so tragic as les gens heureux n'ont pas d'histoire, or as in the first sentence of Tolstoy's Anna Karenina – Happy people don't have a history, which is all alike, while unhappy people's history is very interesting and differs from each other. But what I have to say on all the topics of my autobiography can interest very much the reader or at least the intellectual reader, as it deals with universal subjects as literature, drama, linguistics, with thousands of links to books, plays, classical music, songs, paintings, biographies, conflicts, etc.

When Amos Oz starts his autobiography I thought that he was writing mine. "I was born and bred in a tiny, low-ceilinged ground-floor apartment. My parents slept on a sofa bed that filled their room almost from wall to wall when it was opened up each evening. Early every morning they used to shut away this bed into itself, hide the bedclothes in the chest underneath, turn the mattress over, then scatter a few embroidered oriental cushions on top, so that all evidence of their night's sleep disappeared. In this way their bedroom also served as a study, library, dining room, and living room. Opposite this room was my little green room, half taken up with a big-bellied wardrobe. A narrow, low passage, dark and slightly curved, like an escape tunnel from a prison, linked the little kitchenette and toilet to these two small rooms. A lightbulb imprisoned in an iron cage cast a gloomy half-light on this passage even during the daytime." Well, this is almost exactly our apartment, which I described in my diary almost word by word. The same tiny apartment but not on a ground-floor, on the fourth floor without elevator. My parents slept on a small sofa, with a few oriental cushions on top. Their bedroom served also as a study, library (my father had a huge library, much larger than their tiny sofa), dining room, and living room. I made my homeworks on the table which served of course also as a dining table, and the study table. I describe in my diary in a couple of pages the shabby tablecloth of the unstable table. The same narrow, dark, and low passage. The same room where I could only sleep (with my brother) as it was half taken up with a big-bellied wardrobe, and on top of it – the huge suitcases, that were useless as we never travelled anywhere. Books filled his home – books filled our home, but also a collection of thousands bounded newspapers on shelves all over the tiny two-room apartment, rendering the rooms and passage even narrower. His parents spoke many languages, my parents also. Oz writes: "On my parents' scale of values, the more Western something was, the more cultural it was considered. Europe for them was a forbidden promise land." This sentence applies also to my parents, but what is worse – my parents worshipped European culture and values while they almost never lived or even visited them, living all their lives in Turkey (my father, although at the age of 16 he sold for six months newspapers in Milano, Italy), in Egypt (except for a week stopover in Marseilles in our trip from Egypt to Israel), and in Israel.

נולדתי וגדלתי בדירת־קרקע קטנה מאוד, נמוכת תקרה, כשלושים מטרים רבועים: הורי ישנו על ספת־מגירה שהיתה ממלאה את חדרם כמעט מקיר לקיר כאשר נפתחה מדי ערב. השכם בבוקר היו מדחיקים את הספה הזאת עמוק אל תוך עצמה, מעלימים את כלי המיטה בחשכת הארגז התחתון, הופכים את המזון, סוגרים, מהדקים, פורשים על הכול כיסוי אפור בהיר, מפזרים כמה כריות מזרחיות רקומות, מעלימים כל ראייה לשנת הלילה שלהם. כך שימש חדרם גם חדר שינה גם חדר עבודה גם ספרייה גם חדר אוכל וגם חדר אורחים.

מול החדר הזה היה החדרון שלי, הירקרק, שאת חצי שטחו מילא ארון בגדים עב־כרס. פרוזדור אפל צר ונמוך, מפותל קצת, דומה למנהרת בורחי כלא, חיבר את המטבחון ואת כוך השירותים אל שני החדרים הקטנים. נורה קלושה שנכלאה בתוך כלוב ברזל שפכה על הפרוזדור הזה גם בשעות היום אור־לא־אור עכרורי. מלפנים היה רק חלון אחד לחדר הורי וחלון אחד לחדרי, שניהם מוגנים בתריסי ברזל, שניהם מתאמצים במצמוץ תריסים להשקיף מזרחה אך רואים רק ברוש מאובק וגדר של אבנים לא מסותתות. דרך אשנב מסורג הציצו המטבח והשירותים שלנו אל חצר אסירים קטנה מוקפת קירות גבוהים ומרוצפת בטון, חצר שבה הלך וגסס באין אף קרן שמש גרניום חיוור שנשתל בתוך פח זיתים חלוד. על אדני האשנבים עמדו אצלנו תמיד צנצנות חתומות ובהן מלפפונים נכבשים וכן קקטוס קשה־יום מחופר לו באדמת אגרטל שנסדק והוסב לשרת בתפקיד עציץ.

היתה זו דירה מרתפית: קומת־הקרקע של הבניין נחצבה אל תוך צלע הר. ההר הזה היה השכן שלנו שמעבר לקיר - שכן כבד, מופנם וחרישי, הר קשיש ומלנכולי בעל הרגלי רווק קבועים, תמיד הקפיד על שקט גמור, הר מנומנם כזה, חורפי, אף פעם לא גרר רהיטים לא קיבל אורחים לא הרעיש ולא הטריד, אבל דרך שני הקירות המשותפים לו ולנו היו מחלחלים אלינו תמיד, כמו ריח־עובש קל ועקשן, הקור החושך הדומייה והלחות של השכן העגמומי הזה.

כך יצא שלכל אורך הקיץ היה נשמר אצלנו קצת חורף.

אורחים היו אומרים: כלי־כך נעים אצלכם ביום שרב, כלי־כך קריר ורוגע, ממש צונן, אבל איך אתם מסתדרים כאן בחורף? מה, הקירות לא מעבירים טחב? לא קצת מדכא כאן בחורף?

שני החדרים, כוך המטבחון, השירותים ובייחוד הפרוזדור שביניהם היו חשוכים. הספרים מילאו אצלנו את כל הבית: אבי ידע לקרוא בשש-עשרה או בשבע-עשרה לשונות ולדבר באחת-עשרה (כולן במבטא רוסי). אמי דיברה בארבע או חמש שפות וקראה בשבע או שמונה. הם היו משוחחים ביניהם ברוסית ובפולנית כשרצו שלא אבין (רוב הזמן רצו שלא אבין). כשאמא טעתה פעם ואמרה בנוכחותי סוס הרבעה בעברית במקום בלועזית, גער בה אבא ברוסית זועפת: נְטוּ סְ טְבוּי? ויָדָשׁ מְלָצִיק רִיאָדוּם סְ נָאמִי!). מתוך שיקולי תרבות הם קראו ספרים בעיקר בגרמנית ובאנגלית, את חלומותיהם בלילה ודאי חלמו ביידיש. אבל אותי לימדו אך ורק עברית: אולי חששו שידעת שפות תחשוף גם אותי לפיתוייה של אירופה הנהדרת והקטלנית.

בסולם-הערך של הורי, כל מה שהיה מערבי יותר נחשב לתרבותי יותר: טולסטוי ודוסטויבסקי היו קרובים לנפשם הרוסית, ובכל זאת נדמה לי שגרמניה - למרות היטלר - נראתה להם תרבותית יותר מאשר רוסיה ופולין! צרפת - יותר מאשר גרמניה. אנגליה עמדה בעיניהם אף למעלה מצרפת. אשר לאמריקה - שוב לא היו כה בטוחים: שם הלוא יורים באינדיאנים, שודדים רכבות דואר, גורפים זהב וצדים בחורות.

אירופה היתה להם ארץ מובטחת אסורה, מחוץ-כיסופים של מגדלי פעמונים ושל כיכרות מרוצפות באריחי אבן עתיקים, של חשמליות רחוב ושל גשרים וצריחי כנסיות, כפרים נידחים, מעיינות מרפא, יערות, שלגים ואחו. המילים "בקתה", "אחו", "רועת אווזים", פיתו וריגשו אותי כל ימי ילדותי. היה בהן ניחוח חושני של עולם אמיתי, שאנן, רחוק מגגות הפח המאובקים, ממגרשי הגרוטאות והקוצים ומן המדרונות הצחיחים של ירושלים הנחנקת תחת עול הקיץ המלוכלך. די היה ללחוש לעצמי "אחו" - וכבר הייתי שומע את געיית הפרות שפעמונים קטנים קשורים לצוואריהן ואת פכפוך הפלגים. בעיניים עצומות הייתי מביט ברועת האווזים היחפה, שהיתה לי סקסית עד דמעות עוד לפני שידעתי כלום.

And a few excellent quotes from the book, that I concur with them fully, as if I've written them:

"Once, when I was seven or eight, my mother said to me, as we sat on the last seat but one on the bus to the clinic, or the shoe shop, that while it was true that books could change with the years just as much as people could, the difference was that whereas people would always drop you when they could no longer get any advantage or pleasure or interest or at least a good feeling from you, a book would never abandon you. Naturally you sometimes dropped them, maybe for several years, or even forever. But they, even if you betrayed them, would never turn their backs on you: they would go on waiting for you silently and humbly on their shelf. They would wait for ten years. They wouldn't complain. One night, when you suddenly needed a bookeven at three in the morning, even if it was a book you had abandoned and erased from your heart for years and years, it would never disappoint you, it would come down from its shelf and keep you company in your moment of need. It would not try to get its own back or make excuses or ask itself if it was worth its while or if you deserved it or if you still suited each other, it would come at once as soon as you asked. A book would never let you down." How true, All My Friends...

"There are lots of women who are attracted to tyrannical men. Like moths to a flame. And there are some women who do not need a hero or even a stormy lover but a friend. Just remember that when you grow up. Steer clear of the tyrant lovers, and try to locate the ones who are looking for a man as a friend, not because they are feeling empty themselves but because they enjoy making you full too. And remember that friendship between a woman and a man is something much more precious and rare than love: love is actually something quite gross and even clumsy compared to friendship. Friendship includes a measure of sensitivity, attentiveness, generosity, and a finely tuned sense of moderation." And what happens if you are lucky enough to find in a wife or a husband – love, affection, friendship, kindness, common grounds, chemistry...

"If you steal from one book you are condemned as a plagiarist, but if you steal from ten books you are considered a scholar, and if you steal from thirty or forty books, a distinguished scholar." When I read the academic tedious articles quoting from 30 or 40 books, he is so right...

Benjamin Tammuz (Hebrew: בנימין תמוז) (July 11, 1919 – July 19, 1989) was an Israeli writer and artist who contributed to Israeli culture in many disciplines, as a novelist, journalist, critic, painter, and sculptor. Benjamin Tammuz was born in Soviet Russia. When he was five years old, he emigrated with his parents to Palestine, where he subsequently attended the Tachkemoni school and the Herzliya Hebrew High School in Tel Aviv. From an early age, he engaged in writing, sculpture, and painting. He also took an avid interest in art history, going on to study that subject at the Sorbonne in Paris. While growing up, he became a member of the Communist underground. As a youth he was a member of the Canaanite movement. More than his teachers and friends, the artist Yitzhak Danziger was an influence on him. In 1948, Tammuz joined the editorial board of Haaretz. At first he wrote the popular column "Uzi & Co." Later he edited the children's newspaper Haaretz Shelanu. From 1965, he edited Haaretz's literary and cultural supplement, serving as the art critic there. From 1971 to 1975, he served as cultural attaché at the Israeli embassy in London. From 1979 to 1984, he was invited as a writer-in-residence at Oxford University. Benjamin Tammuz died in 1989 in Tel Aviv. I like Tammuz so much because he is a most modern author, I have read and reread all his books, and each time I enjoy them more.

- A Castle in Spain (1973), translation of Be-Sof Ma'arav (1966)
- A Rare Cure (stories, 1981), translation of Angioxyl, Terufah Nedirah (1973)
- Minotaur (1981), translation of the Hebrew-language novel of the same title (1980)
- Requiem for Na'aman (1982), translation of Requiem Le-Na'aman (1978)
- The Orchard (novella, 1984), translation of Ha-Pardes (1972)
- Minotaur was a novel by Benjamin Tammuz first published in English translation in 1981. The novel is a story of love and obsession with tragic consequences. Graham Greene declared that it was the "novel of the year" following its publication. The novel was made into a film of the same name in 1997 with director Jonathan Tammuz.

We bring here a review on "Minotaur" by Dan Coxon. I am really astonished how Israeli authors have become so popular all over the world and were translated in dozens of languages. How people who know nothing about Israel can identify themselves with the Israeli content of the books. The Israeli books and films have become the best ambassadors of Israel in the world.

Given its reissue as part of Europa's World Noir series, you'd be forgiven for dismissing Minotaur as a genre mystery story, or an overworked Police procedural. Even its cover blurb, with its talk of secret agents and John le Carré, encourages us to see it as a mainstream thriller. Nothing could be further from the truth. In his second novel, originally published in Hebrew in 1980, Tammuz instead attempts to map out a fragmentary love story. Along the way it also asks how much we truly know about the people we meet, and questions the false narratives that we build around them. The novel opens with an unnamed protagonist – "A man, who was a secret agent" – watching two girls on a bus. They are seventeen, he is forty-one. In an instant he falls in love with one of the girls, Thea. So begins one of the most unlikely wooings in modern fiction. Our protagonist cannot reveal himself, so he writes to Thea and sends her records to play in the privacy of her room. He manipulates her even as he overwhelms her with his expressions of love. There are undertones of obsession, of sexual predation. His love seems too unreasonable to be genuine. Then something strange happens. Tammuz races abruptly through Thea's story, ending with what appears to be the secret agent's death – and then he rewinds. The story resets to the beginning. This time it's told from the point of view of another of Thea's suitors, a privileged fellow student known as G.R. And just when you're getting to grips with that, he does it again, pulling the rug from beneath us as he switches to yet another of her lovers, the Greek lecturer Nikos. With each telling of the story more of the details are revealed. The narrative peels back layer after layer, revealing a complex tangle of motives and actions. As we come to understand each character more fully, so we review and decode earlier scenes. With repeat readings comes an appreciation of the multi-dimensional nature of Minotaur's labyrinth.

If this seems a lot to achieve in a mere 192 pages, then Tammuz's ongoing themes will also come as a surprise. He attaches the narrative to the history of Israel itself, making his secret agent a cipher for all the troubles the Middle East has endured over the last seventy years. The character acknowledges this: "Who am I? ...What was once my private experience has now become collective experience. Formerly I was the only one out of all the children of Israel to wrestle with the Arab at his own private ford Jabok and emerge a sort of Pyrrhic victor. Now all the children of Israel are partners in this folly". The question of identity, and how it is formed, recurs through each of the narratives. The secret agent repeatedly asks "Who am I?" or "Do I really love her?". His questions and uncertainty make James Bond look like a Nietzschean superman. In many ways Minotaur reads as a collection of interconnected stories. Each occupies a world of international intrigue and sudden, explosive violence. To read it in this way is to miss the overarching narrative, however, and its uniquely fractured view of one girl's life and loves. Tammuz does more than simply tell a story. He questions the very nature of storytelling, exposing the lies we tell ourselves as we imagine narratives for the people who surround us. Rather than le Carré, his debt is to Kafka, and Fowles, and Faulkner. He makes us rethink the way we view literature, and compels us to read and re-read his work in an attempt to navigate the complex maze he has created. Ignore the secret agent at its core, and the sequence of car crashes and gunshots that punctuate it – this is no genre thriller. Minotaur is a minor modern classic, and a bold exploration of what it means to be a storyteller. Maybe that's the greatest mystery of all.

We bring here the first chapter of Minotaur in English and in Hebrew. One of the main problems of an author is how to start his book, how to captivate the reader, convincing him to read more of the book – all the book. I deal on this issue at length in my book, when I bring in many instances the first chapter, page, or sentence of a book. I imagine that this subject preoccupies every author, Benjamin Tammuz does it perfectly in his book Minotaur, as we'll see right away. Tolstoy does it perfectly in his novel Anna Karenina – his first sentence has become a classic, and I write about it in my Russian chapter. Jorge Amado kills his protagonist in the first sentence of the book, breaking one implicit law that you can't do that, but don't worry he remains alive at least in the mind of Dona Flor, as I explain in my Portuguese chapter. Emile Zola is a professional, captivating you in each one of his books with the first chapter. With me, it came in a stream of consciousness, when the protagonists of my play/novel dictated to me what do write – and I did in a synopsis of 60 pages written in 24 hours, when developing it to a five acts play was very easy – typing it in 18 days without changing almost anything from the synopsis. So, let us see how Tammuz does it, in a short chapter, when all the plot is brought forward in a nutshell.

"A man, who was a secret agent, parked his hired car in a rain-drenched square and took a bus into town. That day he had turned forty-one, and as he dropped into the first seat he came across, he closed his eyes and fell into bleak contemplation of his birthday. The bus pulled up at the next stop, jerking him back to consciousness, and he watched as two girls sat down on the empty seat in front of him. The girl on the left had hair the color of copper – dark copper with a glint of gold. It was sleek and gathered at the nape of her neck with a black velvet ribbon, tied in a cross-shaped bow. This ribbon, like her hair, radiated a crisp freshness, a pristine freshness to be found in things as yet untouched by a fingering hand. Whoever tied that ribbon with such meticulous care? Wondered the man of forty-one. Then he waited for the moment when she would turn her profile to her friend, and when she turned to her friend and he saw her features, his mouth fell open in a stifled cry. Or did it perhaps escape from his mouth? Anyway, the passengers did not react."

"איש אחד, שהיה סוכן חשאי, החנה את מכוניתו השכורה בכיכר רטובה מגשם ונכנס לאוטובוס הנוסע אל העיר.

באותו יום מלאו לו ארבעים ואחת שנים, ובצנחו אל המושב הראשון שנזדמן לו עצם את עיניו ושקע בהרהורים שוממים על טיבו של יום ההולדת שלו. עצירת האוטובוס בתחנה הבאה העירה אותו מנמנומו והוא ראה שתי נערות מתיישבות בספסל הפנוי שלפניו. לנערה שמשמאל היו שערות שצבען כעין הנחושת: נחושת כהה, נוצצת בברק זהב. שערותיה היו חלקות ואסופות על עורפה בתוך סרט-קטיפה שחור, שנקשר בעניבה מצולבת. הסרט, כמו השערות, התנכר בנקיון רענן, אותו סוג נקיון ראשוני המצוי בדברים שהיד הממששת עדיין לא נגעה בהם. מי קשר את הסרט בקפידה כזאת לעורפה, חשב האיש בן הארבעים ואחת. אחר כך חיכה לרגע שבו תפנה אל חברתה את צדודית פניה; וכשפנתה אל חברתה והוא ראה את תווי הפנים, נפער פיו לצעקה, שהוחנקה באבה. ואולי אפילו נמלטה מפיו. הנוסעים, מכ מקום, לא הגיבו."

And what have literary agents to say about the opening chapter of a novel, let us see it also:

"I don't like it when the main character dies at the end of Chapter One. Why did I just spend all this time with this character? I feel cheated."

– Cricket Freeman, The August Agency

"I dislike opening scenes that you think are real, then the protagonist wakes up. It makes me feel cheated."

– Laurie McLean, Foreword Literary

"I'm not a fan of prologues, preferring to find myself in the midst of a moving plot on page one rather than being kept outside of it, or eased into it."

– Michelle Andelman, Regal Literary

"Prologues are usually a lazy way to give back-story chunks to the reader and can be handled with more finesse throughout the story. Damn the prologue, full speed ahead!"

– Laurie McLean, Foreword Literary

"Perhaps my biggest pet peeve with an opening chapter is when an author features too much exposition – when they go beyond what is necessary for simply 'setting the scene.' I want to feel as if I'm in the hands of a master storyteller, and starting a story with long, flowery, overly-descriptive sentences (kind of like this one) makes the writer seem amateurish and the story contrived. Of course, an equally jarring beginning can be nearly as off-putting, and I hesitate to read on if I'm feeling disoriented by the fifth page. I enjoy when writers can find a good balance between exposition and mystery. Too much accounting always ruins the mystery of a novel, and the unknown is what propels us to read further."

– Peter Miller, PMA Literary and Film Management

"I dislike endless 'laundry list' character descriptions. For example: 'She had eyes the color of a summer sky and long blonde hair that fell in ringlets past her shoulders. Her petite nose was the perfect size for her heart-shaped face. Her azure dress — with the empire waist and long, tight sleeves — sported tiny pearl buttons down the bodice. Ivory lace peeked out of the hem in front, blah, blah.' Who cares! Work it into the story."

– Laurie McLean, Foreword Literary

"Characters that are moving around doing little things, but essentially nothing. Washing dishes & thinking, staring out the window & thinking, tying shoes, thinking."

– Dan Lazar, Writers House

“I don’t really like ‘first day of school’ beginnings, ‘from the beginning of time,’ or ‘once upon a time.’ Specifically, I dislike a Chapter One in which nothing happens.”

– Jessica Regel, Foundry Literary + Media

“Someone squinting into the sunlight with a hangover in a crime novel. Good grief — been done a million times.”

– Chip MacGregor, MacGregor Literary

“Cliché openings in fantasy can include an opening scene set in a battle (and my peeve is that I don’t know any of the characters yet so why should I care about this battle) or with a pastoral scene where the protagonist is gathering herbs (I didn’t realize how common this is).”

– Kristin Nelson, Nelson Literary

“I know this may sound obvious, but too much ‘telling’ vs. ‘showing’ in the first chapter is a definite warning sign for me. The first chapter should present a compelling scene, not a road map for the rest of the book. The goal is to make the reader curious about your characters, fill their heads with questions that must be answered, not fill them in on exactly where, when, who and how.”

– Emily Sylvan Kim, Prospect Agency

“I hate reading purple prose – describing something so beautifully that has nothing to do with the actual story.”

– Cherry Weiner, Cherry Weiner Literary

“A cheesy hook drives me nuts. They say ‘Open with a hook!’ to grab the reader. That’s true, but there’s a fine line between an intriguing hook and one that’s just silly. An example of a silly hook would be opening with a line of overtly sexual dialogue.”

– Daniel Lazar, Writers House

“I don’t like an opening line that’s ‘My name is...,’ introducing the narrator to the reader so blatantly. There are far better ways in Chapter One to establish an instant connection between narrator and reader.”

– Michelle Andelman, Regal Literary

“Sometimes a reasonably good writer will create an interesting character and describe him in a compelling way, but then he’ll turn out to be some unimportant bit player.”

– Ellen Pepus, Signature Literary Agency

“In romance, I can’t stand this scenario: A woman is awakened to find a strange man in her bedroom — and then automatically finds him attractive. I’m sorry, but if I awoke to a strange man in my bedroom, I’d be reaching for a weapon — not admiring the view.”

– Kristin Nelson, Nelson Literary Agency

Hayim Nahman Bialik (Hebrew: חיים נחמן ביאליק; January 9, 1873 – July 4, 1934), also Chaim or Haim, was a Jewish poet who wrote primarily in Hebrew but also in Yiddish. Bialik was one of the pioneers of modern Hebrew poetry. He was part of the vanguard of Jewish thinkers who gave voice to the breath of new life in Jewish life. Bialik ultimately came to be recognized as Israel's national poet. In 1903 Bialik was sent by the Jewish Historical Commission in Odessa to interview survivors of the Kishinev pogroms and prepare a report. In response to his findings Bialik wrote his epic poem In the City of Slaughter, a powerful statement of anguish at the situation of the Jews. Bialik's condemnation of passivity against anti-Semitic violence is said to have influenced the founding Jewish self-defense groups in the Russian Empire, and eventually the Haganah in Palestine. Bialik visited Palestine in 1909. In the early 20th century, Bialik founded with Ravnitzky, Simcha Ben Zion and Elhanan Levinsky, a Hebrew publishing house, Moriah, which issued Hebrew classics and school texts. He translated into Hebrew various European works, such as Shakespeare's Julius Caesar, Schiller's Wilhelm Tell, Cervantes' Don Quixote, and Heine's poems; and from Yiddish S. Ansky's The Dybbuk.

Bialik wrote several different modes of poetry. He is perhaps most famous for his long, nationalistic poems, which call for a reawakening of the Jewish people. However no less effective are his passionate love poems, his personal verse or his nature poems. Last but not least, Bialik's songs for children are a staple of Israeli nursery life. From 1908 onwards, he wrote mostly prose. By writing his works in Hebrew, Bialik contributed significantly to the revival of the Hebrew language, which before his days existed primarily as an ancient, scholarly tongue. His influence is felt deeply in all modern Hebrew literature. The generation of Hebrew language poets who followed in Bialik's footsteps, including Jacob Steinberg and Jacob Fichman, are called "the Bialik generation". To this day, Bialik is recognized as Israel's national poet. Bialik's poems have been translated into at least 30 languages, and set to music as popular songs. These poems, and the songs based on them, have become an essential part of the education and culture of modern Israel. Bialik wrote most of his poems using "Ashkenazi" pronunciation, while modern Israeli Hebrew uses the Sephardi pronunciation. Consequently, Bialik's poems are rarely recited in the meter in which they were written. In many poems Bialik depicted the suffering of his people, but he also could ridicule the weakness and passivity of his fellow intellectuals.

You have not changed, you're antic old,
There's nothing new I think;
Friends, let me join your club, well rot
Together till we stink.
(from 'On My Return')

With his call for a reawakening and modernization of language Bialik deeply influenced the Renaissance period of Hebrew literature on its way from Europe to Palestine. We bring here the first part of H.N. Bialik, "The City of Slaughter" in Complete Poetic Works of Hayyim Nahman Bialik, Israel Efros, ed. (New York, 1948): 129-43 (Vol. I)

ARISE and go now to the city of slaughter;
Into its courtyard wind thy way;
There with thine own hand touch, and with the eyes of thine head,
Behold on tree, on stone, on fence, on mural clay,
The spattered blood and dried brains of the dead.
Proceed thence to the ruins, the split walls reach,
Where wider grows the hollow, and greater grows the breach;
Pass over the shattered hearth, attain the broken wall
Whose burnt and barren brick, whose charred stones reveal
The open mouths of such wounds, that no mending
Shall ever mend, nor healing ever heal.
There will thy feet in feathers sink, and stumble
On wreckage doubly wrecked, scroll heaped on manuscript,
Fragments again fragmented—
Pause not upon this havoc; go thy way.
The perfumes will be wafted from the acacia bud

And half its blossoms will be feathers,
 Whose smell is the smell of blood!
 And, spiting thee, strange incense they will bring—
 Banish thy loathing—all the beauty of the spring,
 The thousand golden arrows of the sun,
 Will flash upon thy malison;
 The sevenfold rays of broken glass
 Over thy sorrow joyously will pass,
 For God called up the slaughter and the spring together,—
 The slayer slew, the blossom burst, and it was sunny weather!

A few words on translation. I deal extensively in my book on translation issues, because it is almost impossible to find a good translator, least of all a translation of poetry. I'll give here some remarks that illustrate the complexity of the matter, distorting completely the meaning. Let us start from the end. The last line is translated by: "The slayer slew, the blossom burst, and it was sunny weather!" I understand why he did it, because of the rhyme, but I prefer that the translation would not be in rhymes and would not distort the meaning of the poet. Because the poet says here a completely different thing, that since my high school days, a long long time ago, I still remember as the summit of poetry. Bialik juxtaposes the lyrical pastoral description of the blossom burst and the sunny weather with the horror of the slayer slew, and this should be the sequence of the translation, as Bialik wrote in Hebrew: "The sun was shining, the acacia was blooming, and the slayer slew." This is poetry at its best, and the translation is only a bleak transcription. But even more, when you read the Hebrew original you are shocked, you feel the anguish, the suspense rises in crescendo, you sense the horror, you see the dead, you watch the atrocity, you pity the victims. But when you read the English translation, it is like reading a grocery list, a Waze itinerary, all in verse, in perfect English, but with no soul, no emotion!

11. COSMOPOLITAN SOCIETY, BASED ON WESTERN AND EASTERN CULTURES, MOST TRANSLATED BOOKS, COSMOPOLITAN LITERATURE, PLAYS AND FILMS, TV AND PROPAGANDA, TRAVEL ALL OVER THE WORLD, GANDHI'S PHILOSOPHY

This book advocates a cosmopolitan attitude, I believe that I am cosmopolitan, a World Citizen, one who embraces a multicultural approach, believing that all humanity belongs to a single ethical and moral community. My vision is that the world should become a Cosmopolitan/International/Global Society, where people of many ethnicities, religions and cultures meet, live in close proximity, and above all share the same humane ideals. In the past this term often received a pejorative connotation, as "rootless cosmopolitan", a Soviet derogatory epithet during Joseph Stalin's anti-Semitic campaign of 1949-1953. Many times anti-Semites in France, Germany and Poland accused the Jews to be cosmopolitans, rootless, as they don't have allegiance to their country, but to humanity in general. In my case I feel 100% Israeli, and my cosmopolitan attitude don't contradict but complements my Israeli/Jewish/humane identity. I have analyzed in this book many cosmopolitan pillars, I may be iconoclast on many world issues but I advocate most of the cosmopolitan cornerstones. First of all, the Bible, although I am not religious and am totally atheist, I believe that the Bible (old and new testament) is the most important book ever written, with the most influence in world history – good or bad, but the book is not to be blamed for the false interpretations that it has received over the years, exactly as the language is not to be blamed for the mischievous conduct of the people who speaks the language. The Bible has been translated into hundreds of languages – 469 complete and 2,527 partial – according to the United Bible Societies in October 2011. In my book I give links to more than 400 complete translations and to more than 1,800 partial translations or prayers. The bad news is that there are thousands more languages that have not any translation, the good news is that the Bible has been translated to 95% of the world's population, practically all the world.

Another important cosmopolitan pillar is the United Nations Universal Declaration of Human Rights that has been translated into 444 languages, including Ladino (initiated and executed by me with the collaboration of Ladinokomunita). I believe that this document is the cornerstone of the humanist facet of the world, all nations have agreed to it, many don't implement parts of it... Every time I learn a new language I try to read the Declaration in this language, with translation but with enough knowledge to follow the text, I have reached a record of 70 languages in which I can understand partially at least the Declaration, and more than 250 languages and dialects in which the Bible and the prayers were translated. After the Bible and the Declaration the book that was translated into most languages (not counting a multitude of Jehova's Witnesses books) is The Little Prince by Antoine de Saint Exupery – that was translated from the French into 253 languages, although some of the sources write that it is Pinocchio by Carlo Goldoni which was translated from Italian into more than 260 languages, but the figures are so close and cannot be so exact, that it doesn't matter. This book has devoted several chapters to analyze those four documents/books with links to most of their hundreds/thousands translations, giving texts in more than 120 languages of the Little Prince in the languages that I can understand, and links to at least 120 more languages that I can't understand, as Egyptian Hieroglyphs and Romani/Gypsy. I don't see how and why I should learn Romani, unless one of my grandchildren would marry a Gypsy, as I have learned Romanian – not to confuse with Romani – because I have married a Romanian. I almost studied Hieroglyphs, and could have become a world specialist in this language (there are probably no more than ten, almost like business ethics professors...).

When I started my studies at the Hebrew University of Jerusalem in 1961 I asked to receive a scholarship as I had very good grades and the means of my family were very restrained. The University answered me that for Economics with hundreds of students every year I didn't have a chance, but if I wanted to learn Egyptology I could receive a full scholarship, as there were only two students starting their studies in 1961 and the University rules require at least 3 students to keep this "faculty" alive. I answered them that I didn't know Arabic although I was born in Egypt and lived there 9 years, and I don't see how I could learn a more ancient Egyptian language, unless I thought that the mummies would resuscitate as in the horror films. Maybe I made the mistake of my life as I didn't enjoy my Economics studies, but the Pharaohs behaved so badly to my people, who built for them the Pyramids as slaves, that I had to punish at least their language for their despicable conduct. In case that some of my readers don't share my peculiar sense of humor, I won't specify that it was meant as a joke, as on the contrary I believe that a language cannot be punished for the crimes of their speakers. Furthermore, I strongly oppose any kind of cultural boycott, as masterpieces of Wagner should not be banned because Wagner was an anti-Semite, and I deplore the despicable conduct of those who boycott Israeli films, authors and academics, just because they are Israelis, namely Jews, because of the alleged and completely false "war crimes" committed by the Israelis against Hamasland in Gaza, when the Israelis bombard the rockets bases, from where the Hamas send thousands of rockets against innocent Israeli civilians, and because those bases are situated in residential areas innocent Arab civilians are killed. Those boycotts are applied only towards Israelis, as other nations where hundreds of thousands people are slaughtered are not boycotted or even condemned by the United Nations.

The most translated books include also: Alice's Adventures in Wonderland by the English Lewis Carroll translated into 174 languages (I read it in Frisian), Andersen's Fairy Tales by the Danish Hans Christian Andersen translated into 153 languages (I read it in Danish, French, English, Plattdeutsch, Interlingua, Icelandic, etc.), 20,000 Leagues under the Sea by the French Jules Verne – 148, Unbelievable but the comics of The Adventures of Asterix by the French Rene Goscinny and Albert Uderzo were translated into 112 languages and The Adventures of Tintin by Belgian cartoonist Herge – 96 languages, are the most translated books after Jules Verne, what an experience to have read all those books and comics when I was a boy in French. Among the other books we find Harry Potter by the English J.K. Rowling translated into 67 languages – I am not interested at all in fantasy books, but in order to learn Galego I read one of her books. The Adventures of Huckleberry Finn by Mark Twain – 65 languages, I read it in French, Hebrew and English. The Diary of the Dutch Anne Frank – 60 languages, I read it in French and Dutch. Sherlock Holmes by the English Arthur Conan Doyle – 60 languages, I read it in English, French, Hebrew, Interlingua, Rumantsch. The Good Soldier Svejk by the Czech Jaroslav Hasek – 58 languages, I read it in Hebrew (and also saw the play and the film). A Doll's House by the Norwegian Henrik Ibsen – 56 languages, I read it in Hebrew, English and Norwegian, and saw the play and films several times, also on TV and videos. I read also Quo Vadis by the Polish Henrik Sienkiewicz – 50 languages in Hebrew and saw the film several times. Heidi by the German Johanna Spyri – 50 languages, I read the book and saw many films. The Quran – I read it partially in English and Arabic – 50 complete translations, 114 partial translations. My favorite El Ingenioso Hidalgo Don Quijote de la Mancha by the Spanish Miguel de Cervantes Saavedra – 48 languages – I read it twice in Hebrew and twice in Spanish, saw many films and a musical. The stranger by the French Albert Camus – 45 languages, I read it twice in French. The Great Gatsby by the American F. Scott Fitzgerald – 42 languages, I read it several times in English, saw several film adaptations, and it is part of my main Business Ethics course. I was pleased to learn that I have read almost all the books that were translated into more than 40 languages, and read at least partially the most translated books/documents in tens to hundreds of languages.

Back to cosmopolitan – we have seen how this book refers to the most important issues of the cosmopolitan pillars – the Bible, the Prayers, the UN Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the most important books that were translated into tens to hundreds of languages – from children books as The Little Prince, Andersen's Fairy Tales, Alice, Huckleberry Finn, Heidi, Jules Verne, Harry Potter, best sellers as Quo Vadis, Sherlock Holmes, Anne Frank's Diary, to classics as Don Quijote, A Doll's House, Svejk, The Stranger, The Great Gatsby. I am amazed what excellent taste has the world that translates the most important books/documents as the Bible, Prayers, UN Declaration, the best children books with the best literary taste, and some of the best classics, including my favorite authors Cervantes, Ibsen, Scott Fitzgerald. But other world classics were also translated to tens of languages – Shakespeare's, Brecht's and Moliere's plays, Goethe's, Zola's, Hugo's, Balzac's, Dickens', Dumas' novels, not counting poems by the best poets, some philosophy, academic and non-fiction books. I have referred extensively to all those in this book. Those are the pillars of a cosmopolitan environment, as every intellectual throughout the world has read and can talk about all those books, plays, and documents, being the key for a true global/international/cosmopolitan world, speaking the same language, even if the intellectual has read a translated book, thus losing part or most of its flavor. I can say for sure that the Bible in Hebrew is far better than its translations, the same applies to Don Quijote, Goethe, or The Great Gatsby. While we can read the children masterpieces in translations and not lose most of their flavor, we can read the best sellers in translations and enjoy almost as in the original, it is quite impossible to translate perfectly Zola, Pagnol, Proust, Sholem Aleichem, Shai Agnon, Hugo, Balzac, Dickens, and even more – Shakespeare Brecht or Moliere. Very few are the classic authors who can be translated by a good translator and transmit the gist of the original – possibly Dumas, Steinbeck, Kafka, Lawrence, Shaw, Wilde, James, Hemingway, Sartre or Moravia.

If the Bible, the prayers, the UN Declaration, classic children books, plays and novels have contributed a lot towards the cosmopolitan world, I would like to mention more pillars that are brought in this book, namely the languages learned by hundreds of millions of non-native speakers, mainly English, French and Spanish, and to a lesser extent German, Italian, Russian, and Portuguese, and in the past Latin and Greek. Not so long ago intellectuals shared a common heritage consisting not only of the Bible, Hugo, Balzac, Shakespeare, Dante, Goethe, Cervantes, or Moliere, they spoke French in Russia, England, Poland, Spain and Italy, Greece and the Levant, in all the diplomatic service, in the academy, in the literary and painters circles. The philosophers and scientists spoke German, the musicians and artists spoke Italian, all the intellectuals spoke well Latin and Greek and shared the heritage of Homer, Cicero, Sophocles and Plautus. In the business world since the nineteenth century most of businessmen spoke English, in the countries ruled by the Germans and Austrians most of the intelligentsia spoke German, in the countries ruled by the French they spoke French, and so with English, Italian, Spanish, Russian, Arabic, Turkish, and Portuguese. Therefore it was not a rarity that people – diplomats, businessmen, intellectuals, scientists, academics spoke perfectly well 5 - 7 languages. It goes without saying that in countries of immigration people also spoke many languages, as in Egypt, Lebanon, Israel, France, US, Australia, Canada, South Africa, Argentina, Brazil.

Another cosmopolitan facet that enhances the multicultural attitude is the films. In the last century we were exposed like never before to foreign cultures in films – first of all the American culture which was predominant in films, but also the English, French, Italian, Spanish, German, Russian, Chinese, Japanese, Indian, Brazilian, Argentinian, Mexican, Canadian, Australian, Czech, Romanian, Turkish, Arabic, Polish, Swedish, Korean, Israeli, Greek, Hungarian, etc. I have just mentioned the most influential countries in the film industry that every intellectual all over the Western world at least has seen some films from all those countries. And I am not speaking of lesser prominent countries as the Netherlands, Belgium, Portugal, Denmark, etc. Who has not seen at least the classic films of the Italian Vittorio De Sica, Federico Fellini, Michelangelo Antonioni, Bernardo Bertolucci, Franco Zeffirelli (and even Sergio Leone...), Swedish Ingmar Bergman, Bollywood but also Satyajit Ray's Indian films, the Poles Roman Polanski and Krzysztof Kieslowski, the Russians Sergei Eisenstein, Andrei Tarkovsky, the Germans Fritz Lang, Josef von Sternberg, F.W. Murnau, Werner Herzog, the Czech Milos Forman, the Spanish Luis Bunuel, the English Alfred Hitchcock, Charlie Chaplin, David Lean,

Ken Loach, the French Jean Renoir, Francois Truffaut, Jean-Luc Godard, Max Ophuls, Louis Malle, Jacques Tati, the Japanese Akira Kurosawa, and finally the Americans – Elia Kazan, Oliver Stone, David Lynch, Otto Preminger, Clint Eastwood, Spike Lee, Francis Coppola, Billy Wilder, Sidney Lumet, Orson Welles, John Ford, Joel Cohen, Martin Scorsese, Buster Keaton, Frank Capra, Steven Spielberg, John Huston, Ernst Lubitsch, George Cukor, Woody Allen...

The film industry, unlike the plays by worldwide known playwrights, is a popular industry with many stratas, every one sees the genre of films he likes most – westerns, comedies, classic, drama, detective, wars, crimes, horror, but all of the viewers are exposed to a cosmopolitan industry showing us the people, scenery and culture of Japan, Taiwan, China, Egypt, Israel, India, Argentina, Brazil, Romania, Turkey, Greece, Sweden, Korea, Portugal, Poland, Hungary, cultures that without seeing their films most people would never be exposed to them. Even if you read novels or poetry from Japan or Brazil, assuming that you have never visited those countries, it cannot compare to seeing a film from those countries, hearing the specific sound of the language, learning the customs of the people, family problems, social problems, poverty, riches. You hear the music, are exposed to the folklore, the religion, the work environment, dozens of facets that seem to us selbstverstaendlich/obvious now after watching for decades films from those countries, but without the film industry we would never be exposed to those countries.

And when you say films you say also TV, even soap operas from Brazil or Mexico, the US or France, and of course documentaries, popular series, TV films, songs, musicals, plays and classic music from dozens of countries that you can see now on TV, if you have cables and are willing to pay for foreign TV stations in Spain, Lebanon, Italy, Germany, France, Turkey, Romania, Hungary or Russia. I watch sometimes those stations, even if I don't know their languages, or can't understand them as they speak so fast, but you are flown on a magic carpet to another country, and feel yourself as if you lived there. You can also learn the languages if you watch for long hours those TV stations, I have met many Israelis who learned Spanish by watching soap operas in this language. When Israel had only one TV station, half of the country watched on Friday evening the Arab film with Hebrew subtitles, and this helped much more the comprehension between the two people, avoiding misconceptions and prejudices. Unfortunately, this does not happen in the opposite way and the Israelis and the Jews are shown on Arab stations and especially Palestinian as in the most anti-Semite Nazi films, the worst crimes are attributed to us, and when Israel occupied the West Bank and Gaza the population was astonished to see that we are not the ferocious beasts depicted in their propaganda films. It goes without saying that films are very efficient for propaganda, as was proved by the Nazis films on Jews, the Soviet films on capitalism, and so on, and only the Israeli film industry is based on white doves film makers who depict all the wrongs of the Israelis, and when people see them in the world they believe the defamatory propaganda against Israel, because it is legitimized by the Israeli film makers. But Israel is a democracy, there is a free press, no censorship, and the films sometimes even receive a generous Israeli government contribution. The absurdity has reached such extremities when the director of a Norwegian film festival rejected the film of an Israeli film maker, as it did not depict the "atrocities" of the Israeli occupation. No one of course cares about the atrocities of terrorism killing thousands of innocent Israeli civilians, as we don't have a propaganda ministry who finances such films, but in the opposite direction Anything Goes...

So, a cosmopolitan World Citizen is exposed to many languages, classic and children books translated in dozens of languages, films from dozens of countries (in every Haifa film festival I see films from twenty to thirty countries in the 50+ films which I see during the ten days of the festival), songs from many countries, and last but not least – visits to foreign countries. I am old enough to remember the times when you never visited a foreign country in your life. My mother lived until the age of 43 in Egypt and never visited another country, living in Cairo and going on vacations to Alexandria for a month every year. A generation earlier my family lived all their lives in Turkey, in Izmir, and only after the 1922 war they decided to leave Izmir and come to Egypt. We would probably never leave Egypt if there was not a revolution in 1952 that forced us to leave Egypt and immigrate to Israel. Until the age of 23 I never left Israel and so did most of my friends. I would have not travelled to France in 1967 if I was not unemployed for a few months and looked for a solution to this impasse by studying for my MBA at Insead. My wife Ruthy has never left Israel until the age of 31 and so did most of her friends. This was then – but today in Israel and in most European countries you travel at least once a year, even as a child, often you are relocated for a few years to the US, if you have a business or academic career you travel often 5 to 10 times a year abroad, sometimes for a day and sometimes for six weeks. When you retire, people go abroad often 3-5 times a year, even if you don't have much money as the "deals" are so attractive that you can go for a week to Prague, Crete, Antalia, Warsaw or Rome for $500, and to Paris, London or Amsterdam for a little bit more. Most of the Israelis travel at least one time a year, sometimes in a short cruise to Cyprus, more often to the US or Thailand. Most of the youngsters travel for a year to Asia or South America to the exotic countries - India, Nepal, China, Vietnam, Thailand, Peru, Chile, Argentina, Brazil, Ecuador, Bolivia, as the cost of living there is so low that they can afford to live there for a year with a few thousand dollars that they have saved in the army or working just after that. Sometimes they travel for a year to more expensive countries as Japan, Australia, New Zealand, the US, Europe, Canada, but then they have to work there in order to finance their trip, not always in "legitimate" jobs as they don't have a work permit. The most adventurous travel to Africa, Indonesia, Mexico, Russia or Papua, and are exposed (more than in traditional exotic nations) to crime, accidents, illness, corruption.

What I have described above for the Israelis apply even more for the Europeans and Americans who travel more, the distances are shorter (you go for a weekend from London to Paris by train or by a short one hour flight), they have more money, and they have less problems to travel to some countries than the Israelis have. The cosmopolitan edifice is now complete – the visits to foreign countries (I have visited 60 countries but many friends have visited twice as much) do perhaps the most in order to make us cosmopolitan, as we are exposed directly and not through books, films or TV to foreign cultures, food, folklore, men and women, flesh and blood. This is real life, especially if you travel for months and not visit as many tourists in a cruise every port or country for half a day. The young people don't speak many languages as we speak, they don't read as many books as we read, but they travel much more and are exposed more to a cosmopolitan environment. However, as they don't have much money they don't visit the Western world but exotic countries in the east and south, so instead of being exposed to Paris, Rome, London or New York, they are exposed to Mumbai, Delhi, Bangkok, Beijing, Quito, Bahia, Bogota, Lima or Katmandu. I leave to the reader to decide if it is good or bad, what enriches them most, what is the contribution of those cultures to their intellectual life.

Many intellectual people travel to India to participate in Vipassana seminars and only there achieve peace of mind, many academics and businessmen travel to Shanghai which is one of the most advanced and beautiful cities in the world, I cannot give an opinion on that as I have never travelled to India or China. I was exposed, by choice and by necessity, more to the European and American culture and way of life, and I don't regret it. Most of the youngsters have a different opinion, they have no prejudices against the old and rich cultures of the Indians, Chinese, or Thai, so they would probably not find any interest in my book. Who is right and what is better? Anyhow as I advocate a cosmopolitan way of life, I recognize that an exposure to the Eastern and South American, African or Maoris civilizations are not less legitimate and maybe even more than an exposure to a European and American civilization. Many of those youngsters, when they come back, study at the university, start their own startups, travel to the US or Germany on business, and are exposed finally to both cultures, every one in due time. Others return confused, addicted to drugs, with exotic diseases, or are even killed in accidents which are very frequent in some of those states. I visited the "jungles" of Australia in the safest way and enjoyed it very much, although it was not so authentic as to visit the jungles of Papua, opposite to Darwin where I was, but Israelis were killed in Papua, as it is not the safest country in the world. They may be killed also in Paris or in Israel, so is it a reason to blame visits to Papua? I advocate a cosmopolitan way of life, centered in the most developed countries (including of course such Eastern countries as Japan, Korea and Singapore), as those are the countries with the "Academic, Business, Culture, Drama, Ethics" that I know, the Western civilization as defined earlier have the best academic, business and ethical results for most of their citizens. As far as culture and drama are concerned I am used, learned and enjoy more Verdi's operas than Chinese opera, European paintings and sculptures than Buddha's statues and Indian painting. I appreciate Eastern culture and drama, but as I am not fluent in them, nor in their languages, I stick to the civilization I know most, to the languages that I have learned, to Rigoletto and Emile Zola.

And here I arrive to an "illumination", why do we need to choose between a cosmopolitan culture based on a western or eastern civilization? Just because my cosmopolitan attitude is based on a European culture? How can I be a true cosmopolitan, citizen of the world, international or global advocate if I adhere to only half of the cosmos? If the cosmos was only half, if planet earth had only Europe and the US it would collapse, as earth is holistic, made of all the 300 countries, rich and poor, east and west, north and south. So, if I write a book on a cosmopolitan approach it has to reach the conclusion that it includes all the cultures of the world. Probably the youngsters, including my children, who returned from India and Thailand, have seen a truth that I have not noticed until now – that the globe is one entity, that we are all part of the same humanity and share the same fate – after all this was also my conclusion in my ethical books, where I analyzed the Golden Rule which is common to all the religions, including Islam, Buddhism and the other Eastern religions. I don't understand modern painting, I don't enjoy watching Picasso's famous works, does it mean that they are uglier than the Impressionists whom I admire? And when they exposed their works in the Salon des Refusés were they not the cause of contempt of all the connoisseurs who laughed at them? Who says that a cosmopolitan attitude should be based only on the Impressionists and not on the Cubists? Only on Leonardo da Vinci and not on Indian painting? In the culture which I know most – films – I appreciate very much Chinese, Japanese, Korean films, which I believe are at the forefront of the film industry and are many times much better than Hollywood or English films. So, why this should be true for films and not for novels?

I don't know much of Japanese or Chinese literature, nor do I know much of African or Maori literature. But billions of people know and enjoy those literatures, music, opera, theater, art, as much as they enjoy their films. So, I should arrive to the conclusion that this book should advocate a holistic cosmopolitan approach, comprising of all the facets of culture throughout the world, from the Aborigines in Australia to the Quechuas in Peru. The fact that I don't know much of those cultures does not mean that they are inferior to the cultures I know most, exactly like the fact that I don't know Hindi means that it is an inferior language as compared to English. I have stated several times in this book that I don't have any racist feelings towards anybody, and the outcome of this belief should be to embrace all the cultures of the world. It is maybe too late for me to start learning Eastern languages, read Indian novels or going to Chinese opera. But the conclusion of this book, and especially the Culture and Linguistics parts of the book, should be that a true cosmopolitan approach includes all the countries of the world. In my other book, I analyze all the 300 countries of the world, not just the West European countries, even the smallest countries, as every entity should be analyzed in the same format and seriousness as the largest and most developed entities. This approach should apply also to culture, and to tell the truth, I have started to do it during my whole career. I started to learn Chinese several times and did not continue not because of the importance of the language but because it is too difficult for me, I went several times to Chinese operas and enjoyed them quite well. In my book I quote Chinese sayings and refer many times to China, doing business there and their culture. I have chapters and references for Haitian, Arabic, Egypt, Africa, Turkey, India, Thailand cultures, I have learned Papiamentu, Haitian, Arabic, tried to learn Turkish and quote many proverbs in this beautiful language. The youngsters who visit India and Africa have found a truth that I tried to find but have only guessed it, that we are all part of the same world, entity, culture & humanity!

The main quote of my website and in many of my books is a quote of Mahatma Gandhi, one of the wisest and most intelligent man in the world, I have read his biography and he is my model:

There are seven things that will destroy us: Wealth without Work, Pleasure without Conscience, Knowledge without Character, Religion without Sacrifice, Politics without Principle, Science without Humanity, Business without Ethics. Mahatma Gandhi

Gandhi was cosmopolitan in the same way that Nehru and Tagore were. Gandhi opposed the British Empire but was willing to keep strong ties with the British nation. Gandhi drew his moral cosmopolitanism from Hindu universalism. He thought that one's right to freedom implied one's duty to allow the same freedom for all others. Gandhi believed as a cosmopolitan that the world should ultimately move toward a friendly non-warring federation of interdependent states. If he would live today he would probably advocate that the European Union is the best example for his theories. While he was an Indian patriot, exalting of Indian civilization, he was not against modernity and Western civilization. But wisdom should not be any culture's monopoly, as he was against the fetishizing of technology and science, the colonizing hegemony of the West and the mindless imitation of the West by the Indians. Or in Aristotelian terms, he opted for the middle way, he was not an Indian nationalist radical, but also not a Westernized imitator.

Gandhi is known for his advocacy of nonviolence (Ahimsa), but this was the means to attain Truth (Satya). Gandhi believed in the unity of humanity based on nonviolence and truth. Truth is both absolute and pluralistic, truth and non-violence are interrelated. Gandhi says: "It is only by firm adherence to Truth that one can live non-violently in a world which is full of violence. I can therefore derive non-violence out of truth. They are like two sides of the same coin. The golden rule of conduct is mutual toleration, seeing that we will never all think alike and we shall see Truth in fragment and from different angles of vision." Gandhi puts forth a cosmopolitan moral perspective that is ontologically grounded in a shared humanity, which requires critical self-examination and the internal transformation of consciousness. To be a cosmopolitan entails an awareness of the essential unity of humanity, and that awareness requires that we undergo an internal self-transformation that moves us from egoic centrality toward unity. This Gandhian perspective is not foreign to Western philosophy and education. It was the dominant paradigm of Ancient philosophy. There is an interconnection between a universal duty of moral consideration and internal transformation. Self-transformation increases the capacity for empathy and compassion. The more self-aware I am, the more I can be aware of the subjectivity of others, and thus, the more empathetic and compassionate I can be. Self-transformation increases one's capacity for tolerance, for restraint from doing harm. It decreases fear which is born of duality, and it drives violence. Therefore, we see how cosmopolitanism is directly linked to ethics and truth, and how there is an holistic harmony between all the components of this book.

12. COSMOPOLITAN COMMUNISM, THE INTERNATIONALE IN 100+ LANGUAGES: FRENCH, RUSSIAN, ENGLISH, CHINESE, SPANISH, SWEDISH, ITALIAN, YIDDISH, PORTUGUESE, GERMAN, HEBREW, DUTCH, ARABIC, KURDISH, LAPPISH, WELSH...

I have been accused of communism because I write about business ethics and the wrongdoing to the minority shareholders, and I denounce the injustice of the neoliberal regimes in the US and Israel. As a matter of fact, I participated during two years (aged 13-15) in Hatnua Hameuhedet, a leftist youth movement of Mapai the ruling party of Ben Gurion, Israel's prime minister. I marched on Haifa's main street on May 1, singing the Internationale in Hebrew (1:25), with red flags preceding us and Israeli flags following us. I voted a couple of times for the socialists, but after studying at Insead, visiting East Berlin, and observing the results of the May 1968 students' revolution, in which I participated, I changed my political views, however I've never supported a neoliberal ideology, but a humane capitalism as in Scandinavia, Netherlands, and France.

Now, that I have "purified" myself from Communism, I have to resort to Communism as one of the pillars of a cosmopolitan/international/global attitude. This movement succeeded to conquer half of the world, much more than the colonialist countries, the British, French, Spanish, Portuguese, Roman or Greek empires, more than the Mongols, the Muslims, and the Ancient Empires of the East. The Communist states included over the years: Afghanistan, Albania, Angola, Benin, Bulgaria, China, Congo-Brazzaville, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, East Germany, Hungary, Ethiopia, Grenada, Kampuchea, Laos, Mongolia, Mozambique, North Korea, Somalia, Vietnam, Poland, Romania, Somalia, South Yemen, Yugoslavia, the Soviet Union – Russia, Armenia, Azerbaijan, Belarus, Estonia, Georgia, Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan, Latvia, Lithuania, Moldova, Tajikistan, Turkmenistan, Ukraine, Uzbekistan. The following states had references to socialism in their constitution: Bangladesh, Guyana, India, Portugal, Sri Lanka, Tanzania, Algeria, Burma, Egypt, Iraq, Libya, Sudan, Syria. There were also many countries with a very strong Socialist/Communist presence – Brazil, Venezuela, Chile, France, UK, Italy, Netherlands.

The song that united most of those regimes was The Internationale, sung in many languages, a true cosmopolitan/international/global hymn emphasizing the unification of the struggle against oppression and ruthless capitalism. Nowadays, it is very easy to condemn communism, in view of the atrocities of the communist regimes in Soviet Union during Stalin, in China during Mao Zedong, in Vietnam, Laos, Afghanistan, etc. But we have to bear in mind that in spite of the failures of the communist system, which failed in all the countries where it was implemented (China is a success story but though it is ruled by the Communist party its economic system is capitalistic), the fear from a communist state was so acute in capitalist states as the US, that they implemented the New Deal, and a welfare society from 1933 until the eighties. The same applies also to France, Italy, UK, and most of the capitalist countries. Only in the eighties when the communist system started to collapse in the Soviet Union and elsewhere, the neoliberal monster dared to reconquer the welfare states of the US, UK, not having to fear from communism and proving that welfare was only meant to appease the communist monster and not from a genuine concern for the population. The neoliberal countries have succeeded to erase most of the achievements of the welfare state, and now their regimes have reached the same inequality as in the roaring twenties when they didn't fear from communism and were not exposed to the failures of the capitalist system in the Great Depression of 1929. The Great Recession of 2008 and only the crises since the end of the eighties are the precursors of the Doomsday Depression that might occur before 2020, if they persevere in their ruthless policies.

So, the communist regimes that caused havoc in the East, brought relief and prosperity to the West as the capitalist regimes implemented the good facets of communism – welfare, health, education, culture, decreasing inequality – without adopting the worst facets – mass murders, dictatorship, total government intervention, oppression, police-ruled states, Gulags, KGB, poverty, stagnant economy, civil unrest, excessive benefits for the party members, etc. There is no justice in this world, we know for sure, how else can we explain the fact that half of the world had to suffer in order that the other half would prosper. But the communist states have also fought against Nazi Germany (although they signed the Molotov-Ribbentrop Pact) and won the war at an awful price of millions casualties that added to the million casualties because of the implementation of the planned regimes. The UK and US would maybe won the war without the assistance of the Soviet Union, but it would have taken many more years with millions casualties. The communist regimes also fought the excessive intervention of the Church, fought ignorance making almost all citizens literate, enhanced industry, abolished de facto serfdom. I have chosen to introduce here those thoughts and compare the most cosmopolitan song: The Internationale, in many languages, with lyrics which are among the fiercest in the world.

First of all, The Internationale in 51 languages, if you want to hear all versions it would take you – 2 hours, 34 minutes, 52 seconds. This is a true universal cosmopolitan anthem of the workers, who were oppressed at the end of the nineteenth century when it was written and composed, as described so vividly by Dickens and Zola. If it was not for communism and the Internationale we would still be in the economic condition that prevailed in the epoch when it was composed, as the governments and capitalists would never have relinquished even part of their profits enabling the workers to earn only minimum wages that would enable them the most elementary food, houses and clothes. The Second International (Socialist International) adopted the song as its official anthem. The author of the anthem's lyrics Eugene Pottier (1816-1887) was a French revolutionary socialist, poet, freemason and transport worker. Pottier was elected a member of the Paris municipal council, the Paris Commune, in March 1871. Following the Commune's defeat in June 1871, he wrote the poem L'Internationale, intended to be sung to the tune of La Marseillaise, Pierre de Geyter (1848-1932) composed the music in 1888, widely used since then. So, the French have contributed one more "contribution" to humanity, after the first Human Rights Revolution in 1789 & La Marseillaise, the first socialist revolution in 1871 and L'Internationale. Well, while the first stanza may sound today rather obsolete, the third stanza can fit very well with the "Occupy Wall Street" protest movement of 2011 and the other protest movements of the 99% oppressed masses by the new Rober Barons and their civil servant and politicians followers: "The State oppresses and the law cheats. Tax bleeds the unfortunate. No duty is imposed on the rich; The rights of the poor is an empty phrase. Enough languishing in custody! Equality wants other laws: No rights without duties, she says, Equally, no duties without rights..."

French lyrics

Literal English translation

First stanza

Debout, les damnés de la terre
 Debout, les forçats de la faim
 La raison tonne en son cratère
 C'est l'éruption de la fin
 Du passé faisons table rase
 Foule esclave, debout, debout
 Le monde va changer de base
 Nous ne sommes rien, soyons tout
 |: C'est la lutte finale
 Groupons-nous, et demain
 L'Internationale

Stand up, damned of the Earth
 Stand up, prisoners of starvation
 Reason thunders in its volcano
 This is the eruption of the end.
 Of the past let us make a clean slate
 Enslaved masses, stand up, stand up.
 The world is about to change its foundation
 We are nothing, let us be all.
 |: This is the final struggle
 Let us group together, and tomorrow
 The Internationale

Sera le genre humain :|

Will be the human race. :|

Second stanza

Il n'est pas de sauveurs suprêmes
Ni Dieu, ni César, ni tribun
Producteurs, sauvons-nous nous-mêmes
Décrétons le salut commun
Pour que le voleur rende gorge
Pour tirer l'esprit du cachot
Soufflons nous-mêmes notre forge
Battons le fer quand il est chaud
|: C'est la lutte finale
Groupons-nous, et demain
L'Internationale
Sera le genre humain :|

There are no supreme saviours
Neither God, nor Caesar, nor tribune.
Producers, let us save ourselves,
Decree the common salvation.
So that the thief expires,
So that the spirit be pulled from its prison,
Let us fan our forge ourselves
Strike the iron while it is hot.
|: This is the final struggle
Let us group together, and tomorrow
The Internationale
Will be the human race. :|

Third stanza

L'État comprime et la loi triche
L'impôt saigne le malheureux
Nul devoir ne s'impose au riche
Le droit du pauvre est un mot creux
C'est assez, languir en tutelle
L'égalité veut d'autres lois
Pas de droits sans devoirs dit-elle Égaux, pas de devoirs sans droits
|: C'est la lutte finale
Groupons-nous, et demain
L'Internationale
Sera le genre humain :|

The State oppresses and the law cheats.
Tax bleeds the unfortunate.
No duty is imposed on the rich;
The rights of the poor is an empty phrase.
Enough languishing in custody!
Equality wants other laws:
No rights without duties, she says,
Equally, no duties without rights.
|: This is the final struggle
Let us group together, and tomorrow
The Internationale
Will be the human race. :|

Fourth stanza

Hideux dans leur apothéose
Les rois de la mine et du rail
Ont-ils jamais fait autre chose Que dévaliser le travail ?
Dans les coffres-forts de la bande
Ce qu'il a créé s'est fondu
En décrétant qu'on le lui rende
Le peuple ne veut que son dû.
|: C'est la lutte finale
Groupons-nous, et demain
L'Internationale
Sera le genre humain :|

Hideous in their apotheosis
The kings of the mine and of the rail.
Have they ever done anything other
Than steal work?
Inside the safeboxes of the gang,
What work had created melted.
By ordering that they give it back,
The people want only their due.
|: This is the final struggle
Let us group together, and tomorrow
The Internationale
Will be the human race. :|

Fifth stanza

Les rois nous saoulaient de fumées
 Paix entre nous, guerre aux tyrans
 Appliquons la grève aux armées
 Crosse en l'air, et rompons les rangs
 S'ils s'obstinent, ces cannibales
 À faire de nous des héros
 Ils sauront bientôt que nos balles
 Sont pour nos propres généraux
 |: C'est la lutte finale
 Groupons-nous, et demain
 L'Internationale
 Sera le genre humain :|

The kings made us drunk with fumes,
 Peace among us, war to the tyrants!
 Let the armies go on strike,
 Stocks in the air, and break ranks.
 If they insist, these cannibals
 On making heroes of us,
 They will know soon that our bullets
 Are for our own generals.
 |: This is the final struggle
 Let us group together, and tomorrow
 The Internationale
 Will be the human race. :|

Sixth stanza

Ouvriers, paysans, nous sommes
 Le grand parti des travailleurs
 La terre n'appartient qu'aux hommes
 L'oisif ira loger ailleurs
 Combien de nos chairs se repaissent
 Mais si les corbeaux, les vautours
 Un de ces matins disparaissent
 Le soleil brillera toujours.
 |: C'est la lutte finale
 Groupons-nous, et demain
 L'Internationale
 Sera le genre humain :|

Workers, peasants, we are
 The great party of labourers.
 The earth belongs only to men;
 The idle will go to reside elsewhere.
 How much of our flesh have they consumed?
 But if these ravens, these vultures
 Disappear one of these days,
 The sun will shine forever.
 |: This is the final struggle
 Let us group together, and tomorrow
 The Internationale
 Will be the human race

With the Internationale humanity will rise up! :|

British Translation

Arise, ye workers from your slumber,
Arise, ye prisoners of want.
For reason in revolt now thunders,
and at last ends the age of cant!
Away with all your superstitions,
Servile masses, arise, arise!
We'll change henceforth the old tradition,
And spurn the dust to win the prize!
So comrades, come rally,
And the last fight let us face.
The Internationale
Unites the human race.
So comrades, come rally,
And the last fight let us face.
The Internationale
Unites the human race.

Billy Bragg's Revision

Stand up, all victims of oppression,
For the tyrants fear your might!
Don't cling so hard to your possessions,
For you have nothing if you have no rights!
Let racist ignorance be ended,
For respect makes the empires fall!
Freedom is merely privilege extended,
Unless enjoyed by one and all.
So come brothers and sisters,
For the struggle carries on.
The Internationale
Unites the world in song.
So comrades, come rally,
For this is the time and place!
The international ideal
Unites the human race.

American version

Arise, ye prisoners of starvation!
Arise, ye wretched of the earth!
For justice thunders condemnation:
A better world's in birth!
No more tradition's chains shall bind us;
Arise, ye slaves, no more in thrall!
The earth shall rise on new foundations:
We have been nought, we shall be all!
'Tis the final conflict;
Let each stand in his place.
The International working class
Shall be the human race!
'Tis the final conflict;
Let each stand in his place.
The International working class
Shall be the human race!

Literal English Translation

Arise, slaves afflicted by hunger and cold,
Arise, suffering people all over the world!
The blood which fills my chest has boiled over,
We must struggle for truth!
The old world shall be destroyed
Arise, slaves, arise!
Do not say that we have nothing,

, 奴隸們起來起來！ 不要說我們一無所有 , 我們要做天下的主人 這是最後的鬥爭， 團結起來到明天， 英特納雄耐爾 就一定要實現。	zhǔrén. Zhè shì zuìhòu de dòuzhēng, Tuánjié qǐlái, dào míngtiān, Yīngtènnàxióngnài'ěr Jiù yídìng yào shíxiàn.	We shall be the masters of the world! This is the final struggle, Unite together towards tomorrow, The Internationale Shall certainly be realised.

SPANISH-

Arriba, parias de la Tierra.
 En pie, famélica legión.
 Los proletarios gritan: Guerra!
 Guerra hasta el fin de la opresión.
 Borrada el rastro del pasado!
 Arriba, esclavos, todos en pié!
 el mundo va a cambiar de base,
 los nada de hoy todo han de ser.

Agrupémonos todos,
 en la lucha final.
 El género humano
 es la internacional.

SWEDISH-

Upp trälär uti alla stater, som hungern bojar langt uppå.
 Det dånar uti rättens krater, snart skall utbrottets timma slå.
 Störtas skall det gamla snart i gruset slav stig upp för att slå dig fri!
 Från mörkret stiga vi mot ljuset, från intet allt vi vilja bli.

Upp till kamp emot kvalen.
 Sista striden det är, ty Internationalen
 åt alla lycka bär.

PORTUGUESE- A Internacional

De pé, ó vítimas da fome!
 De pé, famélicos da terra!
 Da ideia a chama já consome
 A crosta bruta que a soterra
 Cortai o mal bem pelo fundo!
 De pé, de pé, não mais senhores!
 Se nada simos neste mundo,
 Sejamos tudo, oh produtores!

Refrão (bis)
 Bem unidos façamos,
 Nesta luta final,
 Uma terra sem amos
 A Internacional

ITALIAN-

Compagni avanti il gran partito
 Noi siamo dei lavorator.
 Rosso un fiore in petto c'è fiorito.
 Una fede c'è nata in cor.
 Noi non siampo più nell'officina
 Entro terra ai campi al mar
 La plebe sempre all'opra china

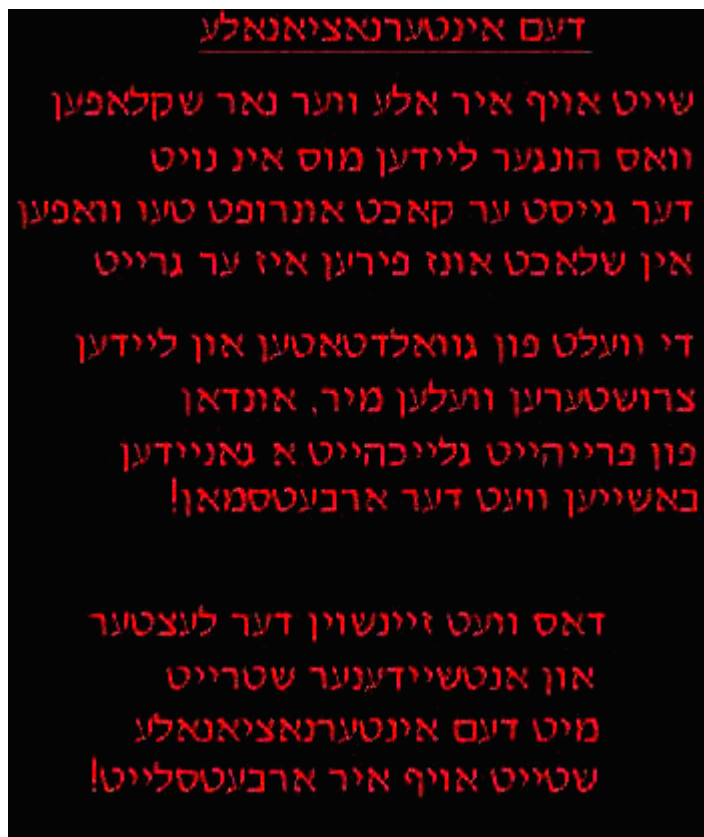

Senza ideale in cui sperar.
 Su lottiamo! L'ideale
 Nostro alfine sarà
 L'Internationale
 Futura umanità.

GERMAN - DIE INTERNATIONALE:	Wacht auf, Verdammte dieser Erde, Die stets man noch zum Hungern zwingt!
------------------------------	---

Das Recht, wie Glut im Kraterherde,
 Nin mit Macht zum Durchbruch dringt.
 Reinen Tisch mach mit den Bedrängern!
 Heer der Sklaven, wachte auf!
 Ein Nichts zu sein, tragt es nicht länger,
 Alles zu werden, strömt zu Hauf!

Völker, hört die Signale!
 Auf zum letzten Gefecht!
 Die Internationale
 erkämpft das Menschenrecht!

De internationale

Ontwaakt, ontwaakt verworpen der aarde!
 Ontwaakt, verdoemde in hongers sfeer!
 Reedlijk wiillen stroomt over de aarde
 En die stroom rijst al meer en meer.
 Sterft, gij oude vormen en gedachten!
 Slaafgeboornen, ontwaakt, ontwaakt!
 De wereld steunt op nieuwe krachten,
 Begeerte heeft ons aangeraakt!

Makkers ,ten laatste male,
 Tot den strijd ons geschaard,
 en D'Internationale
 Zal morgen heerschen op aard.

The Communist Manifesto, (1848; “Manifesto of the Communist Party”), pamphlet written by Karl Marx and Friedrich Engels to serve as the platform of the Communist League. It became one of the principal programmatic statements of the European socialist and communist parties in the 19th and early 20th centuries. The Manifesto embodied the authors’ materialistic conception of history (“The history of all hitherto existing society is the history of class struggles”), and it surveyed that history from the age of feudalism down to 19th-century capitalism, which was destined, they declared, to be overthrown and replaced by a workers’ society. The communists, the vanguard of the working class, constituted the section of society that would accomplish the “abolition of private property” and “raise the proletariat to the position of ruling class.” The Manifesto opens with the dramatic words “A spectre is haunting Europe—the spectre of communism” and ends by stating, “The proletarians have nothing to lose but their chains. They have a world to win. Workingmen of all countries, unite.”

American Labor Party, (ALP), minor U.S. political party that was based in New York state. The ALP was organized in 1936 by the labour leaders Sidney Hillman and David Dubinsky and by liberal Democrats and old-line Socialists, and it had strong ties with labour unions. The party supported President Franklin D. Roosevelt’s New Deal and threw its support to those Democratic or Republican candidates who endorsed liberal social legislation. The party polled more than 270,000 votes for Roosevelt in the 1936 presidential election, and it helped reelect Fiorello La Guardia as mayor of New York City in 1937. It also endorsed Roosevelt for president in 1940 and 1944. From the start there were factional fights between the left and moderate wings of the ALP. Communists had infiltrated the party, and at its convention in 1940 they rioted against the endorsement of Roosevelt. When the Communists gained control of the party in the primary of 1944, Dubinsky and others of the party’s founders withdrew and organized the Liberal Party. The ALP supported the candidacy of Henry A. Wallace for president in 1948 and polled more than 500,000 votes for him, but its support of Wallace drove more voters from the party’s ranks. The New York state committee of the ALP voted to dissolve the party after 20 years of existence; it was unable to reconcile the personal and political differences within its ranks.

V. METHODOLOGY OF READING, BIOGRAPHIES, PLAYS

1. THE METHODOLOGY OF READING, ON HOPE, CRISES, AND BIBLIOTHERAPY

In the past, I read one book after the other, after that I decided to read every day in the week a book in a different language or a biography, then I decided to read a few books in every language on every day in the months, and at last I decided to read in parallel about 500 books in all the languages on all the topics, to get at least the flavor of all those books, and they are only a small fraction of all the books in my library. Then, I encountered health problems, and I decided to take it easy and read once again one book after the other in the languages that I can read fluently. But every time I wrote a book as I am doing now, read professional books, or had a job, I gave it priority, so the reading of the books was postponed, wanting to finish my duties the soonest.

I intend, after I finish writing this book and the book Ethics Pays on all its three facets, to return to a mode of "Sheer Pleasure Reading" – no more new languages to learn, as Chinese, Hungarian, Japanese or Swahili are too difficult anyhow, but reading books in difficult languages – a few pages every day in each of the languages – in a cycle of a fortnight. In addition, reading non-fiction books an hour a day in a cycle of a fortnight: in Art – Claude Monet, Salvador Dali, Italian Renaissance, Encyclopedia of Western Art, Cinema – Movie Directors' Story, Hollywood Musicals, The Jews in American Cinema, The Chronicle of the Movies, Geography/Atlases – Geographica Atlas: B&N Books, Encyclopedic Atlas of the World by Oren Nahari, Dereh Eretz: Adam Veteva/Ecology, Tracks to the Promised Land, Theater – Stella Adler on Ibsen, Strindberg and Tchekhov, The Fireside Companion to the Theater, History of Drama and the Theater, Music – The Lives of the Great Composers, Music in All Time, 100 Great Operas, Les grads createurs de Jazz, History – Power: A Political History of the 20th Century, Age of Optimism, Historic Atlas of the World by Oren Nahai, Histoire du Sionisme, Philosophy – Le systeme totalitaire by Hannah Arendt, The Philosophers: Their Lives and the Nature of Their Thought by Ben-Ami Scharfstein, Res Publica: Lectures on Political Thought by Shlomo Avineri, A Collection of Essays by Ella Shohat, Linguistics – The Languages of the World by Kenneth Katzner, The Cambridge Encyclopedia of Language by David Crystal, Language and Culture by Shaul and Furbee, The Power of Babel: A Natural History of Language by John McWhorter, Poetry – Oeuvres poetiques by Alfred de Vigny, Hugo, Paroles by Jacques Prevert (again), Romansero Sefardi by Moshe Attias (again), Introduction to Spanish Poetry (again), Science, Humor...

Reading plays – one hour a day for the soul: Ibsen, Shakespeare, Racine, Anouilh, Brecht, Euripide, Moliere, Tchekhov, Odets, Shaw, Lorca, Aristophanes, Sobol, Pagnol, Miller, Sartre, Jarry, Bergman, Hugo, Ionesco, Vega... I have a detailed plan which books to continue reading – a different book for every day in a fortnight, instead of reading in parallel 500 books in 50 languages. First – the biography of Emile Zola by Henri Mitterand in three bulky volumes of a thousand pages each, then the biography of Winston Churchill by Martin Gilbert, the biography of Marcel Pagnol, and the biography of Ingmar Bergman. Professional books: first – This Changes Everything: Capitalism versus the Climate by Naomi Klein, and then The Great Divide: Unequal Societies and What We Can Do About Them by Joseph Stiglitz, the biography of Steve Jobs, and the biography of Lee Iacocca. Vieja Nueva Tierra by Theodor Herzl – Altneuland in Ladino, and then Los Misterios de Pirei by Jak Luria, both of them in Rashi letters, La Odisea de Homer, Konsejas i Konsejikas del Mundo Djudeo Espanyol de Matilda Koen-Sarano. O guarani by Jose de Alencar in Portuguese, and then Viagens na minha terra by Almeida Garrett, A reliquia by Eca de Queiroz, Dom Casmurro by Machado de Assis, and occasionally Consolacem as Tribulacoens de Israel by Samuel Usque. Mensogna e sortilegio by Elsa Morante in Italian, Piccolo mondo antico by Antonio Fogazzaro, Se non ora, quando? By Primo Levi, L'isola de giorno prima by Umberto Eco, Kaputt by Curzio Malaparte, La Noia by Alberto Moravia.

Der Zauberberg by Thomas Mann in German, and then Die Wahlverwandtschaften by Goethe, Liebe Deinen Nächsten by Erich Maria Remarque, Die Jugend des Königs Henri Quatre by Heinrich Mann, Ansichten eines Clowns by Heinrich Boll. Los años con Laura Díaz by Carlos Fuentes in Spanish and then El Señor Presidente by Miguel Ángel Asturias, La Bodega by Vicente Blasco Ibáñez, Novelas Ejemplares (again) by Miguel de Cervantes, El Aleph by Jorge Luis Borges, La familia de Pascual Duarte by Camilo José Cela, Conversación en la catedral by Mario Vargas Llosa. North and South by Elizabeth Gaskell in English, and then Dubliners by James Joyce, In Cold Blood by Truman Capote, The Old Curiosity Shop by Charles Dickens, The 42nd Parallel by John Dos Passos, Tender is the Night by F. Scott Fitzgerald, To the Lighthouse by Virginia Woolf, As I Lay Dying by William Faulkner. La vie mode d'emploi by Georges Perec in French, Les hommes de bonne volonté by Jules Romains, and then (again) L'âge de raison/Le sursis/La mort dans l'âme by Jean-Paul Sartre, Fecondità and Lavoro by Émile Zola, Mauprat by George Sand, Les Chouans by Honoré de Balzac, Aurelien by Aragon, Voyage au bout de la mer by Céline. To the End of the Land by David Grossman in Hebrew, and then Mr. Mani by A. B. Yehoshua, The Last Jew by Yoram Kaniuk, Yona Mehatzer Zera by Moshe Shamir, Shira (again) by Shai Agnon, Stories by Benjamin Tammuz, To Know a Woman by Amos Oz. Translations: Kafka On the Shore by the Japanese Haruki Murakami, Half of a Yellow Sun by the Nigerian Chimamanda Ngozi Adichie, The Eleventh Son by the Chinese Gu Long, The Indian Bhagavat Gita (again), novels by Bashevis Singer, Franz Werfel, Solzhenitsyn.

In the other days or in an hour of the mornings of the fortnight - reading of a few pages of books in difficult languages with a translation: Anna Karenina by Leo Tolstoy, Stories by Pushkin, Gogol, Turgenev, Dostoevsky, Chekhov in Russian. Zorba the Greek, by Nikos Kazantzakis, Greek Verse by Homer, Sappho, Seferis, Kavafis in Greek. Midaq Alley by Naguib Mahfouz, Bab al-Shams by Elias Khoury, Season of Migration to the North by Tayeb Salih, in Arabic. Het Achterhuis by Anne Frank, De koperen tuin by Simon Vestdijk in Dutch. Het verdriet van België by Hugo Claus in Flemish. Liljecronas hem by Selma Lagerlöf, Innan du sommar by Linn Ullmann in Swedish. Sult by Knut Hamsun, Salme ved reisens slutt by Erik Fosnes Hansen in Norwegian. Fru Marie Grubbe by J.P. Jacobsen, Stories by Hans Christian Andersen in Danish. Imagini frumoase by Simone de Beauvoir, Frumoasele Garnizoane by Eugen Teodoru, Frăția by John Grisham in Romanian. Le defuncte Mattia Pascal (again) by Luigi Pirandello, Le oie de Columbo e la lingua universal by Marco Waterman in Interlingua. Amphitryon by Plautus, Latin Selections by Cicero, Caesar, Vergil, Ovid, Livy, Seneca, Tacitus, St. Augustine... in Latin. Germinal by Émile Zola in Catalan, Harry Potter e a pedra filosofal by J.K. Rowling in Galego. Stempeniuk and Tevye der milchiger (again) by Sholom Aleichem, Regenbogen by Wanda Wassilevska in Yiddish. La Festa by Robert Lafont in Occitan, and other books according to the list in other languages: Afrikans, Frisian, Icelandic, Aramaic, Ukrainian, Polish, Asturian, Luxembourgish, Plattdeutsch, Gascon, Haitian, Picard, Corsican, Friulian, Alsatian, Esperanto, Rumantsch, Ido, Papiamentu, Italian and German Dialects, Creoles dialects, Slavic languages...

Well, at least this is the plan, we have to take it easy, God knows if it can be achieved, or as said in proverbs in many of the cosmopolitan languages in Yiddish, Ladino, Turkish, Italian, Spanish, French, English, German, Romanian, Arabic, Hebrew, etc: Mann tracht und Gott lacht, Lo ke la vieja keria en el sueño se lo via, allah büyük ama kayak küçük – God is great but the kayak is small in Turkish, il n'est jamais trop tard pour bien faire, langsam aber sicher, chi va piano va sano e va lontano, incet incet nu fugi trenu, alajala min alshaitan, الْعَجَلَةُ مِنَ الشَّيْطَانِ - hastiness is from the devil in Arabic, si non è vero è ben trovato, el ke viva esperando muera..., petit a petit l'oiseau fait son nid, domani è troppo tardi, bukra fil mishmish, a nechtiger tog, a nahr bleibt a nahr, das ist ein altes stueck. Es necesario esperar, aunque la esperanza haya de verse siempre frustrada. Chi crede a sogni è matto; e chi non crede che cos' è? Ken bushka topa. Mi querida más fiel fue la esperanza que me suele engañar y no me deja. Hoy es siempre todavía. La esperanza, no obstante sus engaños, nos sirve al menos para llevarnos al fin de la existencia por un camino agradable. Que más mata esperar el bien que tarda que padecer el mal que ya se tiene. Es mejor viajar lleno de esperanza que llegar. Las decepciones no matan, y las esperanzas hacen vivir. Hope deferred makes the heart sick, but a longing fulfilled is a tree of life. Don't anxiously hope for that which isn't yet come; in Hebrew: Comfort ye, Comfort ye my people, says your God, Isaiah, 40:1 ישעיהו יאמר אלוהיכם. So, hoping will bring me to the desired end.

Three pillars assisted me in the worst moments of my life: Bibliotherapy, Love, and Hope. I have brought in this book many cases in which bibliotherapy was instrumental in overcoming difficult events. I'll deal in this chapter at length on bibliotherapy bringing the scientific foundations of this therapy, on Wikipedia and many other bases, including the researches made by my in-law Zipora Shechtman, mother of the wife of my son Amir, and wife of Dan Shechtman who won the Nobel Prize in Chemistry in 2011. I even wrote an essay on this subject published by News1. Bibliotherapy is an expressive therapy that involves the reading of specific texts with the purpose of healing. It uses an individual's relationship to the content of books and poetry and other written words as therapy. Bibliotherapy is often combined with writing therapy. I can state from experience that the effect of writing therapy is even much stronger than the therapeutic effect of reading. In my worst moment in life when I lost most of my savings in a huge fraud committed by my best friends, and all my attempts to fight it were to no avail, I was rescued from the abyss by writing my play Nelly Doron. Even now, after I had to resign from my teaching career because I lost my hearing, this book that I am writing, together with the other books and activities, has a fantastic therapeutic effect, assisting me not to be depressed. Actually, I was never depressed in my whole life, nor I was ever bored, as I always found what to do, mainly on an intellectual basis, I read or write, worked, and always was hopeful that the situation will improve. I never gave up hope, even on the worst moments of my life. All the three pillars were interwoven. When I was almost depressed in 1969 that I will not be able to find love, I still was hopeful that the situation will change, and indeed it changed, when I met Ruthy, my love.

Let us make some order with all the therapies and the crises that were cured through those therapies, including: Bibliotherapy – reading of novels, plays, poetry, biographies, professional books, non-fiction books. Writing therapy – writing a diary, a play, a novel, academic books, poetry, correspondence, autobiography. Linguistics therapy – learning new languages, reading and writing in those languages, discovering new cultures through the languages. Music therapy – hearing songs, classical music, operas, country, folk music, pop music. Watching films therapy, watching plays therapy, watching concerts, operas, folk music, and any kind of performance music therapy. I could add of course therapy with the family – backing of parents, love of wife and children, therapy with the friends, therapy by visiting countries, having hobbies, therapy by working, by sports, by learning at the university, by hearing lectures on different topics, etc. In short, every method that assists us to overcome a crisis without using medicines, drugs, violence, or going to a psychiatrist is a recommended therapy, and I used most of those non-intrusive methods. In this way I have managed to overcome all the crises that I have encountered in life without incurring any risk, as I have never heard of someone who suffered from bibliotherapy, but many people with depression suffered from unsuitable medicines, psychological treatment...

I bring here the major crises that I had in my life and the therapies I used with lists of books, etc.:

1. Burning of Cairo and almost burning of our own apartments building by the Egyptian Arab/Muslim Shabab, Cairo, Egypt, January 1952, when I was 7.5 years old. I was not affected because I read Alice in the Wonderland and I imagined that I was experiencing what she experienced in the "wonderland" (Egypt was a "wonderland"). To that I could add living in a country that was at war with our people, having a very lonely and unhappy childhood.

Bibliotherapy of my childhood in Egypt with books in French or translated into French: Alice in the Wonderland by Lewis Carroll in French. Sans famille and En famille by Hector Malot. Carlo Collodi – The adventures of Pinocchio in French. Le petit prince by Antoine de Saint-Exupery. Books by la comtesse de Segur: Le general Dourakine, Un bon petit diable, Quel amour d'enfant. Le bossu by Paul Feval. Books by Alphonse Daudet: Lettres de mon moulin, Tartarin de Tarascon, Le petit chose. Books by Jules Verne – Autour du monde en 80 jours, Michel Strogoff, Vingt mille lieues sous les mers, L'île mystérieuse, Les enfants du capitaine Grant.

Songs: Mon amant de Saint-Jean by Lucienne Delyle, 1942. I sang this immensely popular song when I was 2 years old perfectly, and as it is a very sad love song, it always accompanied me in the harsh times in Egypt and even now I cannot hear it without vivid emotions, especially the last lines of the song: C'est du passé n'en parlons plus – It is the past, let us not speak about that.

2. Young Teen Ager: 10-13. When I was in a severe crisis at the age of 11 until 13, I had to fight alone (with the backing of my parents) against the Israeli Ministry of Education, my school's headmaster and teachers, and all my "friends" (I don't wish even to my enemies such friends) that wanted to force me to become a metal worker when I wanted to be a diplomat and go to the university, I was hopeful that the situation will ameliorate and indeed it did. I did not go to school for two years from 1955 to 1957 (only for a couple of hours in the afternoon for the core studies), reading classic books in the mornings, and while going to school in the afternoon for the ordeal I knew waited for me I sang the Israeli song Habibi – a kind of music therapy.

The books in bibliotherapy were in French, English, and translations from English, German, Italian, Dutch, Danish, and Russian into Hebrew: Victor Hugo: Les Misérables, Notre-Dame de Paris, Bug-Jargal, Quatrevingt-treize. Alexandre Dumas pere: Les trois mousquetaires, Vingt ans après, Le vicomte de Bragelone, Le comte de Monte Cristo, Le collier de la reine. Emile Zola: L'assomoir, Nana, La bête humaine, Germinal, La curee, Au bonheur des dames, L'œuvre, Pot-Bouille, La joie de vivre. Charles Dickens: A tale of two cities, Great Expectations, Oliver Twist, Nicholas Nickleby, Dombey and Son, David Copperfield, Curiosity Shop. Mark Twain: The adventures of Tom Sawyer, Adventures of Huckleberry Finn, The prince and the pauper. Robert Louis Stevenson: Treasure Island, Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde. Howard Pyles: The merry adventures of Robin Hood. Henry Rider Haggard: King Solomon's Mines, Allan Quartermain, Montezuma's Daughter. Lew Wallace: Ben Hur. Jerome K. Jerome: Three men in a boat, Three men of the Bummel. Anthony Hope: The prisoner of Zenda. Harriet Beecher Stowe: Uncle Tom's Cabin. Herman Melville: Moby Dick, Billy Budd. German Hauptmann: Till Eulenspiegel. Wilhelm Busch; Max und Moritz. Edmondo de Amicis: Cuore. Lev Tolstoy: War and Peace, Anna Karenina, The Kreutzer Sonata, Childhood. Fyodor Dostoyevsky: Crime and Punishment, The Brothers Karamazov. The diary of Anne Frank. Hans Christian Andersen: Stories. Guy de Maupassant: Bel Ami, Boule de suif, La parure, Les bijoux, Stories. Anatole France: La rotisserie de la reine Pedauque, Le crime de Sylvestre Bonnard. George Sand: La petite Fadette, François le champi, La mare au diable. Theophile Gautier: Le capitaine Fracasse. Gustave Flaubert: Madame Bovary, Salammbô. Karl May: Winnetou, Am Rio de la Plata.

Songs: Habibi, by Yaffa Yarkoni. One of the saddest songs in the Israeli repertoire with words that fit me extremely well. It was recorded by Yaffa Yarkoni on 26.5.1955, the same year of my metal working saga in September 1955 and onwards. Here in Hebrew and English words:

חביבי, הכל עובר חביבי, אל נא תבכה חביבי, חבל על הדמעות.
חביבי, אל תצטער חביבי, חלום עובר חביבי, חבל על חלומות.
ככה זה, ככה זה.

חביבי, גלגל חוזר חביבי, ונפגשים חביבי בשני העולמות.

Habibi/Buddy, Everything passes by buddy, Don't cry buddy, It's a pity to shed tears.
 Habibi/Buddy, Don't be sorry buddy, A dream passes by buddy, It's a pity to waste dreams.
 It's like that, it's like that.

Habibi/Buddy, The wheel is turning buddy, And we meet again buddy, In both worlds.

3. From 1957 to 1959 I studied at an excellent school high school with fantastic friends and attended a marvelous youth movement. But at the age of 15 in 1959 we moved to Haifa and there I was the youngest, poorest, and best pupil at school – a mix that was not so good for social life, although I had some good friends, nerds as I was, and we were not part of the "society", the rich guys and dolls who danced twist and rock'n'roll. I was quite lonely from the age of 15 to 17 until 1961, but it was a fantastic opportunity to become an intellectual reading classics, as written in details in my diary, my first writing therapy. I read plays, poetry, novels by the best authors, mainly French, and instead of having an inferiority complex (social) I had a superiority complex (intellectual). I read in French most of the works by Alfred de Vigny, Racine, Corneille, Moliere, La Bruyere, Boileau, Lamartine, the plays and poetry by Victor Hugo, Alfred de Musset. I read the integral text of Don Quixote by Cervantes in Hebrew, and after studying Spanish at the university a few years later I read it in Spanish, and it was for me a revelation. I read the Greek mythology, Homer's Iliad and Odyssey. I read George Eliot's Daniel Deronda, many biographies. I was bored by the tedious best seller Le parfum de la dame en noir by Gaston Leroux, and wondered how can one enjoy such idiotic novels when he could read La thebaide ou les freres enemis or Alexandre le grand by Racine. I read Horace, Cinna, Polyeucte by Corneille. I read L'etranger by Camus, L'art poetique by Boileau, poetry by Musset, and especially the verses: L'homme est un apprenti, la douleur est son maitre – Man is an apprentice, pain is his master Et nul ne se connait tant qu'il n'a pas souffert. – And none knows himself so long as he has not suffered. I knew that if I suffer from loneliness it helps me to find myself and to mould my intellectual self, making me a man. I felt as Ibn Gavirol, the illustrious Sephardi poet who wrote: I am sixteen years old but my heart is eighty years old. I read also essays by Johnson as On Toleration, Friendship by Bacon. I read Les femmes savantes by Moliere, and more classics.

Two other therapies assisted me in overcoming my loneliness, poverty, and estrangement. Music therapy - I liked very much Paul Anka and especially his songs I'm just a lonely boy, it's time to cry, my way. I liked the songs by Georges Brassens – chanson pour l'auvergnat, la mauvaise reputation, il n'y a pas d'amour heureux. Charles Aznavour – la mamma, je me voyais deja, il faut savoir, that fitted my melancholic mood. Yves Montand – les feuilles mortes, Edith Piaf – Ah, ca ira, Mouloudji – comme un petit coquelicot, Behar – plaisir d'amour, etc. But most of all music therapy came with the classical music. I tell the story from my diary in this book how I decided to hear classical music and operas at the age of 17 on April 30, 1961. I could not suffer anymore pop music which became very noisy and I decided to learn and love classical music. While the passion to novels, plays and films came naturally and evolved to classics without taking any command decision – I started to love Racine, Shakespeare, Hugo and Cervantes not because of a cold decision but as an evolution, and my taste became more and more refined in those fields. However, with classical music it came by a cool decision out of disgust from the loud rock music which didn't fit my temper. It was also like finishing the puzzle of refinement with Arts, classical music and operas, which completed my intellectual education. I came from a family which read and loved the classics in literature, good films, and refined art. But nobody in my family ever heard or played classical music, so it had to come as a logical outcome of my intellectual education. And indeed, within a few months, I started to like very much classical music and even more operas. I read books about the 100 best composers, the 100 best concerti, the 100 best symphonies, the 100 best operas, and so on. I received old records and heard them, I listened to classical concerts on the radio, and went for the first time to concerts and to films with operas, ballets, and classical music, films on composers. I describe at length in this book what my preferred classical music works were, but as a whole it had a fantastic therapy effect on me, it soothed me, it made me forget my troubles, my loneliness, making me a better man. The composers who did it were mainly Beethoven, Mozart, Mendelssohn, Chopin, Grieg, Tchaikovsky, and the operas by Verdi, Offenbach, Bizet, Puccini, Gounod, and Rossini.

Finally, films and my diary therapies were for me instrumental, and complemented bibliotherapy, and music therapy. My diary had a very important value, as I wrote during four years from 1957 to 1961 30 thick notebooks with thousands of pages on my feelings, my ideas, my impressions on life, friends, love, films, music, books, plays, songs and so on. I have included in this book several chapters of this diary, and on my website I have published an important part of the diary. I have included also in the Films chapter of the books a list of 240+ good to excellent films that I have seen from 1956 to 1961 – 5.5 years, from the age of 12 to 17.5 including two periods of crises. Some of the films I've seen were excellent, but the therapeutic value of the films was beyond that, as I enjoyed also seeing musicals, comedy, Indian films, even thrillers, that made me forget the problems and loneliness. In this list, as in other lists of films in other periods with other crises, one can find the medicine to sorrow, as the films took me to enchanted worlds and made me forget the problems in this world. Some of the films were classics, but the therapeutic value of light comedies was also important, as not always serious films by Ingmar Bergman are the therapy for spleen, but rather Raj Kapoor's The Vagabond...

4. The University years, 17-20, from 1961 to 1964. It is quite sad to find out that in my first 20 years of existence, while others had a wonderful childhood and went through their teenager years happily, I had only two happy years from the age of 13 to 15, with good friends – boys and girls, a good school, an excellent youth movement, while I continued, when I had time, to read good books and see good films. I remember of course those years, but recently when I read my diary I noticed the contrast between the years of 13-15 as opposed to the years of 15-17, and in my diary one can find also reminiscences from the earlier unhappy periods, lonely in Cairo, and as an outcast in Israel. But God or fate wanted probably to shape my character in such a way that I will succeed in most of my endeavors in my adult life, including finding love and raising a fantastic family, reaching self fulfilment, and becoming wealthy. I have noticed that many of my friends who were very popular and successful until 20 had a miserable life afterwards as they could not cope with harsh circumstances. I would even say as Musset that early sufferance is a precondition of adult happiness. But, to be honest, I know also many cases that wicked persons had a fantastic, happy and healthy life with financial success, tremendous achievements, while rendering the lives of thousands miserable, stealing "ethically", and never being caught.

At the university I finished the shaping of my intellectual character, as I had plenty of time, and luckily no money. Plenty of time, because in most of the time I didn't find work, and the academic studies were not too demanding, and were mostly uninteresting, especially economics. I was the youngest student, starting studies at the age of 17, and although I did not have any money (my father had to pay from a small salary for my tuition, boarding and lodgings), I could read whatever I wanted from the largest library in Israel – the library of the University of Jerusalem, and as I was too young to date female students I spent days and nights reading the best books in the world literature. I made a road map of all the authors and books that I wanted to read from the ancient Greeks to the most modern in all the languages that I spoke – Hebrew, English, French, Ladino, and after studying German and Spanish at the university also in those languages. But I was not a complete nerd as I took also a course at a dance school that gave special prices to young students, that's how I learned with Henzi de Brettschneider and her daughter: Tango, Rumba, Cha Cha Cha, Samba, Slow, Passo Doble, but I didn't have enough money to take the advanced course and learn Rock'n'roll, Twist, Charleston, I don't think that they had Salsa in those times. But this course assisted me only 3 years later, after I have graduated and moved to Tel Aviv, where I was the oldest conscript officer, lieutenant and BA on top of that, when I was at last invited to parties. So, I was a nerd with a soul of a socialite...

3 years is a lot of time and I succeeded to learn besides Economics and Political Sciences (with mediocre grades, as I was bored by the studies), 2 years of German, 2 years of Spanish, English courses on Shakespeare and poetry, Arts – Renaissance in Italy, Philosophy – Logic, Drama – Comedies, and many other courses, while reading most of the classic books in 6 languages, including the first books that I read in Ladino. I focused my readings on plays, which I discovered was the form of writing that I liked most, and this was even before I started to watch dozens of plays annually all over the world, as when I studied in Jerusalem I didn't have money to go to the theater. I read most of the plays by Shakespeare, Sophocles, Euripides, Aeschylus, Goethe, Schiller, Calderon de la Barca, Lope de Vega, Christopher Marlowe, and reread/read plays by: Racine, Corneille, Moliere, Victor Hugo, Marivaux, Pierre Beaumarchais, Edmond Rostand, George Bernard Shaw, Oscar Wilde... Moliere: Les précieuses ridicules, L'Ecole des femmes, Tartuffe, Don Juan, Le Misanthrope, L'Avare, Le Bourgeois gentilhomme, Les Fourberies de Scapin, Les Femmes savantes, Le Malade imaginaire. Racine: Andromaque, Les Plaideurs, Bérénice, Bajazet, Iphigénie, Phèdre, Britannicus, Esther, Athalie. Corneille: L'Illusion comique, Le Cid, Horace, Cinna, Polyeucte, La Mort de Pompée, Le Menteur, Rodogune, Héraclius. Victor Hugo: Cromwell, Hernani, Marion Delorme, Le roi s'amuse, Lucrezia Borgia, Marie Tudor, Ruy Blas, Les Burgraves. Shakespeare: Hamlet, King Lear, A Midsummer Night's Dream, Twelfth Night, Henry IV, parts 1 and 2, Julius Caesar, Measure for Measure, Troilus and Cressida, A Winter's Tale, All's Well that Ends Well, Othello, Macbeth, Antony and Cleopatra, The Tempest. Oscar Wilde: Lady Windermere's Fan, A Woman of No Importance, An Ideal Husband, The Importance of Being Earnest. George Bernard Shaw: Mrs Warren's Profession, Arms and the Man, Candida, The Man of Destiny, You Never Can Tell, Caesar and Cleopatra, Man and Superman, Androcles and the Lion, Pygmalion, Back to Methuselah, Saint Joan. Edmond Rostand: Cyrano de Bergerac, L'Aiglon: A Play in Six Acts, Chantecler: A Play in Four Acts. Aeschylus: The Persians, Seven Against Thebes, The Suppliants, The Oresteia - a trilogy comprising Agamemnon, The Libation Bearers and The Eumenides, Prometheus Bound. Sophocles: Antigone, Oedipus the King, Oedipus at Colonus, Ajax, The Trachiniae, Electra, Philoctetes. Euripides: Medea, Hippolytus, Electra, Andromache, The Trojan Women, Iphigenia in Tauris, Helen, Iphigenia At Aulis, Orestes, The Bacchae. Goethe: : Faust Part One, Faust Part Two, Götz von Berlichingen, Die Leiden des jungen Werthers (The Sorrows of Young Werther), novel, Iphigenie auf Tauris, Egmont. Schiller: Die Räuber, Kabale und Liebe, Don Karlos, Infant von Spanien, Maria Stuart, Die Jungfrau von Orleans (The Maid of Orleans), Turandot, Prinzessin von China, Wilhelm Tell. Calderon de la Barca: La dama duende (The Phantom Lady), La vida es sueño (Life is a Dream), El mayor encanto, amor (Love, the Greatest Enchantment), El mágico prodigioso (The Mighty Magician). Lope de Vega: El maestro de danzar (The Dancing Master), El perro del Hortelano (The Gardener's Dog), La viuda valenciana (The Widow from Valencia), Fuenteovejuna, Mujeres y criados (Women and Servants), El caballero de Olmedo (The Knight of Olmedo), La dama boba (The Stupid Lady; The Lady-Fool), El amor enamorado, Las bazarías de Belisa, and others.

I do not intend to repeat here all the authors and lists of books that I read during my studies at the University of Jerusalem. I'll just mention that I read the best books of the following authors that are also described at length in this book in my survey on modern literature and elsewhere: French: Marcel Proust, Marcel Pagnol, Jean-Paul Sartre, Jacques Prevert, Albert Camus, Andre Malraux, Andre Gide, Francois Mauriac, Albert Cohen, Louis Aragon, Simone de Beauvoir, Jean Giono, Georges Duhamel, Colette, Maurice Druon, Romain Rolland, Andre Maurois.

English: Ernest Hemingway, D. H. Lawrence, Sinclair Lewis, F. Scott Fitzgerald, John Steinbeck, James Joyce, William Faulkner, Virginia Woolfe, Charlotte and Emily Bronte, Jane Austen, George Orwell, Arthur Conan Doyle, H G Wells, Jack London, William Thackeray.
German: Franz Kafka, Thomas & Heinrich Mann, Sigmund Freud, Stefan Zweig, Franz Werfel, Arthur Schnitzler, Erich Maria Remarque, Erich Kaestner, Lion Feuchtwanger, Vicky Baum.
Spanish: Miguel de Cervantes, Federico Garcia Lorca, Vicente Blasco Ibanez. I read also Israeli authors, mainly Shai Agnon, Italian and Russian authors, biographies, Ladino, and best sellers.

In Jerusalem I did not watch theater, as Jerusalem had no theater, and seldom went to the cinema, as I lived far away from the city's center. I went occasionally to the YMCA to see a concert, but I can state that my intellectual life consisted first of all on the plays and novels that I read, and my studies at the University, mainly to enlarge my intellectual life with new languages and new courses as stated above. I did not write either, as I ceased to write my diary, and the only material that I wrote was the studies' material. But I was totally immersed in my cultural life and felt completely estranged from all my colleagues. I did not have friends or a social life, but I did not need it either, as books and studies occupied me fully. I went home only once a month since a trip from Jerusalem to Haifa in those times was a very long trip and expensive too. As far as folk music was concerned, I became exposed to folk songs in Spanish and in German. I did not travel also abroad, as the first time that I left Israel was in 1967 to study at Insead, France. Yet, I had in the last year a very good friend Mario Diamant, who was my roommate, as in those times students lived in a family flat in a room with a roommate. Mario, coming from Argentina, taught me practical Spanish, I started to read South American Literature and even was a member of the Argentinian Film Club of Jerusalem, where we watched Argentinian films, which were as good as Israeli films. But they had a folkloric value as I became exposed to South America. Mario also taught me anti-Franco songs that I do not dare to repeat, as they contained very harsh words. I will just mention the end of one of the strophes "para que juegan los ninos de Castilla y Aragon" and let the reader imagine what is the beginning of the strophe. Mario met an Egyptian Israeli compatriot, married her, and a few years later returned to Argentina, where he became a very known Journalist. Diamant is now a very famous playwright and I read two of his plays.

5. Les gens heureux n'ont pas d'histoire – happy men don't have history and don't need bibliotherapy. That is the reason that I did not need any therapy whatsoever from the age of 20 to the age of 50. It is not that everything was easy. In the years 1964-1967 I was a lieutenant at the Israeli army, living in Tel Aviv and working as an economist. I had a very dense social life, very good friends, and at last girl friends as well – thank you dear Henzi de Brettschneider as your dance courses assisted me to go to parties. I did not become a Nureyev, but I could dance quite well and this was enough. I did not think of marriage although many friends got married because I had no money and was never really and totally in love. I continued to read books which I borrowed from the libraries of the French Centre Culturel, the British Council, and I read also Spanish, Italian (which I learned at the Dante Institute), and German novels and plays from the language insitutes. I told in one of the chapters of this book how I borrowed for a few years the opera Rigoletto from the American Institute, which was the closest to my apartment, and how it assisted me to attract intellectual women to my room, just to listen to Verdi, of course. I also knew by heart this opera, which was good as I didn't have money to go to discotheques anyhow. In 1967-1968 I studied at Insead in Fontainebleau France, with a full scholarship of the Baron Edmond de Rothschild, preceded by a 6 weeks course in German in Goethe Institut in West Berlin, and as an epilogue – a one month trip to the US financed by David Rockefeller. La dolce vita in a word, and a compensation on all the hardships that I suffered in the previous 20 years.

Back from Insead I found a rewarding job at the Israel Aircraft Industries and a few months later in April 1969 I met Ruthy, we fell in love and we married within in August 1969. However, as both of us didn't have money and we couldn't buy a house, we applied for a lottery for apartments at a low price to young couples, organized by the city of Tel Aviv where we resided in 1969. But a couple of friends who came to the lottery and had already a house told us that the drawing is fixed and they were about to win one of the apartments because of their connections. The old woman who organized the drawing tried to organize community singing but the young couples, most of them from the less favored neighborhoods of Tel Aviv and Orientals did not want to sing the Russian Oldies and preferred to sing Oriental songs. There was a tumult and finally we did not win and our friends won. I wrote a cynic article about the event for Haaretz, the best newspaper in those times (some think that nowadays also although it has become ultra-dovish), and the best columnist introduced it in his column with his remarks. Following that thousands of letters from angry young couples started to write angry articles as well, and I was probably the precursor of a protest movement led by young couples. A couple of years later and still without a home my boss at one of the largest Israeli companies wanted to help me and without telling me he tried to contact his connections at the Tel Aviv municipality. They were ready to oblige him but when he told them my name – his friend said: "This Cory has made us a tremendous electoral harm and he showed him hundreds of letters that followed mine". I thanked my boss but told him that we'll manage to buy our own house without the help of anyone. And indeed a few months later we bought a small apartment and 13 years later we built our spacious home on Mount Carmel without the help of corrupt organizations and illicit connections.

Five years after the lottery, in 1974, the corrupt Labour party lost the elections in Tel Aviv and the center/right parties won for the first time, eight years later, in 1977, the Labour party lost the Israeli elections and for the first time the center/right won the elections. Those days were the happiest in my public experience, the center parties did a lot for the underprivileged populations, for young couples, for orientals and ended the hegemony of the Labour bourgeois party that forgot the socialist credo of its founders and took care mainly for the welfare of the upper middle class Ashkenazis, disregarding the other segments of the population who were the majority – religious, Orientals, lower middle class, Arabs, new immigrants. But history has its irony – the Bible says: "And Jeshurun fattened and kicked" (Deuteronomy 32:15), Jeshurun is the people of Israel. Exactly like the Labour party fattened and forgot its mission, the center/right party Likud after Begin, who was much more socialist than all the socialists and made peace with Egypt withdrawing from all Sinai, what the Labour hawks were unwilling to do, turned to be a "normal" right-wing party – favoring the rich, increasing drastically inequality, becoming one of the fiercest neoliberal regimes adopting religiously the precepts of their Guru Milton Friedman, much more than Thatcher and Reagan, and adopting an ultra-hawkish ideology. That is how when I was poor I voted for the center/right "socialist/humane capitalism" parties, and now when I am wealthy enough I vote for the Labour party "socialist/humane capitalism". My ideology has remained the same, being poor or wealthy, only the parties shifted their positions and I changed my voting accordingly throughout the years from left to right and back to left.

Anyhow, I did not need in all those years any mental or physical therapy – I was sane in body and mind, but some songs reinforced my convictions, as for example We Shall Overcome, sung by Joan Baez, which was my favorite song, when I was low - the song & Baez were there for me.

1. We shall overcome/We shall overcome/We shall overcome some day

Chorus: Oh, deep in my heart/I do believe/That we shall overcome some day

2. We'll walk hand in hand/We'll walk hand in hand/We'll walk hand in hand someday – Chorus

3. We shall all be free/We shall all be free/We shall all be free some day - Chorus

4. We are not afraid/We are not afraid/We are not afraid today - Chorus

5. We are not alone/We are not alone/We are not alone today - Chorus

6. The whole wide world around/The whole wide world around/The whole wide world around some day – Chorus

7. We shall overcome/We shall overcome/We shall overcome some day - Chorus

6. At work I was very successful and attained summits that I haven't even dreamed of. Although I graduated from a business school I was very shy, with a very low self-esteem, probably a relic from my childhood. That is why I worked very hard and with excellent results, but my bosses received all the credit that I deserved. I decided to attend a Social Interaction Laboratory. I spent a whole week with ten colleagues whom I did not know in a course organized by a very competent organization with an excellent coach at an hotel. On the first day I received the lowest social grades and a macho manager received the highest. After a week I received the highest social grades and the macho broke completely. This reinforced my self-esteem, and I became an excellent manager with excellent relations with my employees and my bosses, provided that I respected my boss and thought highly of him. In business you can succeed only if you are a President or a Vice President of a large corporation, and I climbed steadily the hierarchy echelons until I reached the highest position of Vice President in charge of Finance and Sales of one of the largest high tech multinational companies of Israel. Yet, I did not forget from where I came and kept always the interests of the weaker sides, of the employees, until I was called the "Tribune of the People". But also the interests of the customers, the suppliers, the banks, the state, the community, and this attitude was rewarded by a complete trust by them, ultimately increasing the profitability of the company as I believe that ethics pays and corruption destroys.

I had of course many problems, many dilemmas, and I had to fight for my position. When the big boss wanted to bring his friend to be my boss, although I have succeeded on my own, I refused, he came to my office, called all my workers to be present (at this time I had only 10, but later 150), and asked me to say why I refuse to abide the nomination. I answered that it is because he brought his friend, that he was once in this position and failed, that I am much more fit for the job, I have excellent results and very good relations with my employees. When he saw that he could not intimidate me he left and said that I have to chose – to accept his friend as a boss or leave the company. A few days later he was abroad and I brought my letter of resignation to his stand-in. He was much older than me, liked me and appreciated what I have done for the company. When he saw that I still mean to resign, he said: "Look, I have received your letter, but will not do anything with it. I advise you not to cooperate with your new boss and tell your employees to report only to you. In a few months, the big boss will be replaced by a new one, who is a good friend of you and knows your merits. Wait and See!" And this is what I did, and a year later my former "boss" reported to a manager who reported to me. The former big boss had only one subordinate my new boss, who became effectively the CEO of the company.

The first few years were an idyll, we worked very hard as we had to make a turnaround of the company that was almost bankrupt, and I was the motor and planner of the turnaround. We received many shares at the current price of half a dollar that after the turnaround were valued $13, and with this remuneration I built a very spacious villa on Mount Carmel. But after the idyll came the intrigues, loss of ethics, power struggles, until I decided to leave my fantastic highly remunerated post. I became a free lancer, and for the first time in my life was completely free to do what I like, work with whom I like, and not compromise on ethical issues, although even when I operated in an unethical environment I kept my ethical credo, although it was harder and harder to do so. The basis of this credo and my determination to abide it at whatever cost was undoubtedly the thousands of books, films and plays, history, psychology and philosophy, that I read and watched, mostly classics with a humane message. So, it was worthwhile to suffer in my childhood and youth because it toughened me and gave me the foundations to my moral life. Bibliotherapy/intellectual structure, wife and family, and hope for the better were and still are the pillars of my existence. When I was a free lancer I didn't have assignments all the time, and in low tides I continued to read classic books, go to the theater and movies, and enjoy from classical music. I bought a subscription for 6 at the theater – for Ruthy and me, for my three children who were very young, and even for one of their friends. That is how my children too since their early ages saw The Merchant of Venice, An Enemy of the People, All My Sons, Israeli plays, comedies, and many other classics, and when I took them with me on business trips they saw the best plays of the international repertoire in New York, London, and other cities.

7. All the former crises and problems were only a preamble to the major crisis that I encountered in 1994, when my best friends conned me and thousands of other shareholders and I lost most of my savings. I knew from Gordon Gekko's sayings in Wall Street that "if you need a friend get a dog", this is true for Wall Street, Washington and for Israeli business as well. I did not have a dog so I suffered twice as much, although later on we adopted a cat. My employees liked me very much when I was their boss and took care of their interests but when I had later on conflicts with my boss and left they did not climb on barricades for me, but this was OK as I didn't ask that from them and I could take care of my own interests without their risking their very lucrative jobs. The friends that I had after leaving my company were mostly from there, and when the chips were down they went with the strongest side because of their interests and left me to bleed in the battlefield. My mother Pauline used to say always "Tout est interets dans la vie" – All is interest in life, but I didn't listen to her and thought that friendship do prevail in harsh moments, as I and Ruthy conducted in many instances. I was left without friends, without money, without work, as my oponents – the richest men in Israel and the largest companies – took care that nobody would employ the dissident Cory who dared oppose their wrongdoings, became a whistleblower who denounced them to the authorities, to the Israeli and American SEC, went to the press and the auditor firms but was turned down by them, as they also knew where their interests were. I tried for more than two years to make a coalition with other parties who were wronged, with banks, companies, individuals, but all of them were compensated or terrorized and I was left alone. Luckily, not altogether alone, as I head my wife and children on my side.

So, two of the pillars did not leave me – love/family/wife and hope for the better. I was very frustrated, but in December 1994 in the middle of the fight I decided to take a risk and develop my own business in Paris. I had still some money and I started to travel at least once a month to Paris, where I had many friends, trying to make business and find consulting there. Paris was my hope, there I had good friends from the old days of Insead in 1967-1968, friendships that held on during decades. In the decade from 1994 to 2004 all the good news came from Paris – I developed excellent relations with the leading companies, banks, and universities, with the assistance of my good friends. And really, they did it altruistically as they did not have any interest besides friendship. I didn't earn much from these collaborations but it attracted me other businesses from the US and Israeli companies that were not connected with the wrongdoers. I earned much more than what I lost, and could have been among the 500 managers who were best paid in Israel in those years, but because I was a free lance I didn't appear in those lists. The companies with whom I worked in France were the largest, but in Israel and in the US were quite small, under the radar and beyond the malevolent influence of my wrongdoers. I received options which I didn't pay and when I could sell them (I paid all the taxes in Israel, but was I the only one?) I earned enough money to cease completely my business career, make a doctorate in Paris in business ethics, and devote my time fully for teaching and writing of books.

And what about the third pillar – bibliotherapy and the other therapies? Here I experienced on July 6, 1997 a revelation, almost as mystic as a religious revelation. On this day, while I was reading the Odyssey by Homer in my garden, the muse came to me and urged me to write a synopsis of a modern Odyssey, the Odyssey of an ethical businessman who decides to fight all the Olympic Gods from Poseidon onwards, and keep his ethical beliefs in a fight against all the corrupt Israeli Gods or semi-Gods. I did not know what would be the end – for 24 hours I wrote a synopsis in a transcendental trance, a synopsis of 60 pages written by hand, where the heroes of my play (it took finally the form of a classic 5 acts 10 hours long play) dictated me what they want to do in my play, what would be the outcome of the play, while I was completely passive and let them write for me the story in a stream-of-consciousness that depicted the multitudinous thoughts and feelings which passed through my mind, in the same manner of James Joyce's Ulysses, but in my case the final form of the synopsis was a play, while Joyce has chosen a novel. Ulysses is the Latinised name of Odysseus, the hero of Homer's epic poem Odyssey, and the novel establishes a series of parallels between its characters and events and those of the poem – Joyce made the correspondence of Leopold Bloom to Odysseus, Molly Bloom to Penelope, and Stephen Dedalus to Telemachus, while I made the correspondence of Uly Doron to Ulysses/Odysseus, Nelly Doron to Penelope, Arie Simon to Poseidon, Elie Fuchs to Dionysos/Bacchus, Sima Kalifa to Calypso, Hadas Shoten to Hades, etc. All of that in 24 hours! This was writing therapy at its best, it drained all the bitterness, all the venom which was in my blood, it enabled me to recover my peace of mind, as I was before extremely frustrated that I didn't succeed to overcome the schemes of the crooks, that justice was trampled so strongly... In the following 18 days I typed on my computer the 5 acts 10 hours long play, but did not proceed to do anything with it due to the strong opposition of my wife who was afraid that she will be identified with Nelly, while from the initial surprise party which took place Nelly evolved to a completely different personality, who decided to act in such a way that Ruthy would never do.

But this was not the only writing therapy – in the following years I wrote a PhD dissertation on ethics to minority shareholders in two versions – one of a few hundreds pages in French (that was turned down as explained at length in my book because my conclusions seemed unfounded while they were validated two years later in the corporate scandals), and one much shorter but which was presented together with my two books on ethics to minority shareholders published by one of the largest academic publishers Kluwer in 2001. Those dissertations (the last one was published as a separate book in French in 2012, as well as a version of my play Le choix de Nelly) were very pioneering and were the first ones in the world to deal academically on the issues of ethics to minority shareholders. So, like the play, here again I was visited by the muse, but in a much more rational way, I felt elation when I wrote/published my academic books and my novel... (2001, 2004, 2008, 2009, 2010, 2012, etc.), when I prepared and taught my academic courses on all the topics, when I wrote and published my articles as a columnist and publicist, and this was indeed a rewarding writing and teaching therapy, while all the time we visited new countries – expedition therapy (Australia, New Zealand, Canada, Singapore, the Balkans, Portugal, Sweden, Finland, Russia, Estonia, Hungary, Czech Republic, Turkey, Thailand, etc.). We enjoyed also hearing concerts and lectures, watching plays and films, and bibliotherapy.

Bibliotherapy was indeed very effective, almost as writing and teaching therapy, and this time as a free lancer and later as an ethicist, I had much time to read all the books, plays and non-fiction that I always wanted to read but in most of my very busy years I didn't have time to read. This time the reading (and films) was much more focused on ethics, with about 200 professional books (and more than 150 videos) on business ethics, sustainability, social and economic justice, Corporate Social Responsibility, globalization, ethical leadership/biographies, capitalism, etc. Especially the books (details in the lists of this book) by Joseph Stiglitz, Naomi Klein, Joel Bakan, Thomas Friedman, Paul Krugman, Andrew Ross Sorkin, Erin Arvedlund, Charles Gasparino, Paul Hawken, Daniel Kahneman, Nassim Taleb, Dave Kansas, Michael Lewis, Roger Lowenstein, Muhammad Yunus, Henri-Claude de Bettignies, Al Gore, Alice Schroeder, Lee Kuan Yew, Robert Monks, Joseph Badaracco, Charles Derber, Thomas Donaldson, Amitai Etzioni, Francis Fukuyama, Meir Tamari, Manuel Velasquez, Nouriel Roubini, Noam Chomsky, Sheila Bair, Matt Taibbi, Robert Reich, Dan Ariely, Anat Admati, Thomas Piketty, and others. And the best videos on those subjects, such as The Ascent of Money with Niall Ferguson, Capitalism: a Love Story, Sicko, by Michael Moore, The Corporation by Jennifer Abbott and Mark Achbar, The Take by Naomi Klein and Avi Lewis, and Inside Job by Charles Ferguson.

I based most of my courses on plays, novels, and films, and I give in this book, in other books of mine, and on my website, full details. I enjoyed reading plays by the modern playwrights of Russia, US, UK, Ireland, Spain, Italy, France, Germany, Sweden, Norway, Israel, Switzerland, etc. Related to them but also with no connections to ethics were the plays by Arthur Miller – All My Sons, Death of a Salesman, The Crucible, A View from the Bridge, After the Fall, Incident at Vichy, The Price, The Last Yankee, Broken Glass. Tennessee Williams – The Glass Menagerie, A Streetcar Named Desire, Summer and Smoke, The Rose Tattoo, Camino Real, Cat on a Hot Tin Roof, Orpheus Descending, Suddenly, Last Summer, Sweet Bird of Youth, The Night of the Iguana. Henrik Ibsen – Pillars of Society, A Doll's House (Et Dukkehjem), Ghosts, An Enemy of the People (En Folkefiende), The Wild Duck, Hedda Gabler, The Master Builder. August Strindberg – Fröken Julie (Miss Julie), The Father, Dödsdansen (The Dance of Death), Ett drömspel (A Dream Play). Marcel Pagnol – Merchants of Glory, Jazz, Topaze, Marius, Fanny, César, La Femme du boulanger, La Gloire de mon père and Le Château de ma mère (1957, autobiographies) Le Temps des secrets (1959, autobiography), Le Temps des amours (1977, autobiography), L'Eau des collines (Jean de Florette and Manon des Sources) (1964, novels). I want to mention here that from all the autobiographies that I have read the most delightful were the four autobiographies by Marcel Pagnol. I wish that I had the talent of Marcel Pagnol, one of the best authors in history, to write such masterpieces as autobiographies. Ionesco – Rhinoceros, The Bald Soprano, The Lesson, The Chairs. Jean Anouilh: Le Voyageur sans bagage, Le Bal de voleurs, Léocadia, Eurydice, Antigone, L'Invitation au château, Colombe, La Valse des toréadors, L'Alouette, Médée, Cécile, ou L'école des pères, Becket, ou L'Honneur de Dieu.

Jean Giraudoux – Siegfried, Amphitryon 38, The Trojan War Will Not Take Place, Electra, L'Impromptu de Paris, Ondine, The Apollo of Bellac, The Madwoman of Chaillot. Samuel Beckett's Waiting for Godot, Happy Days, Jean Genet's The Maids, The Balcony. Harold Pinter's The Room, The Birthday Party, The Homecoming. Edward Albee's The Zoo Story, Who's Afraid of Virginia Woolf?. Bertolt Brecht: The Threepenny Opera (Die Dreigroschenoper), Happy End, The Rise and Fall of the City of Mahagonny, Life of Galileo, Mother Courage and Her Children, Mr Puntilla and his Man Matti, The Good Person of Szechwan, The Resistible Rise of Arturo Ui, The Caucasian Chalk Circle. Federico Garcia Lorca: Bodas de sangre, Yerma, La casa de Bernarda Alba. Luigi Pirandello: Sei personaggi in cerca d'autore, Enrico IV, Ciascuno a suo modo, Questa sera si recita a soggetto. Anton Chekhov: Ivanov, The Seagull, Uncle Vanya, Three Sisters, The Cherry Orchard. Sean O'Casey: Juno and the Paycock, The Plough and the Stars, The End of the Beginning, Red Roses for Me, Cock-a-Doodle Dandy. Clifford Odets: Waiting for Lefty, Awake and Sing!, Till the Day I Die, Paradise Lost, Golden Boy, Rocket to the Moon. Eugene O'Neill: Anna Christie, The Emperor Jones, The Hairy Ape, Desire Under the Elms, Strange Interlude, Mourning Becomes Electra, Ah, Wilderness!, The Iceman Cometh, Long Day's Journey Into Night, A Moon for the Misbegotten, A Touch of the Poet. Tom Stoppard: The Coast of Utopia, Rosencrantz and Guildenstern Are Dead, Night and Day, The Real Thing, Arcadia, Indian Ink, Hapgood. Alberto Moravia: La mascherata, Beatrice Cenci, Il mondo e quello che e, Gli indifferenti. Friedrich Duerrenmatt: The Visit, The Physicists: A Comedy in Two Acts. Joshua Sobol: WEININGER'S NIGHT, GHETTO, PALESTINIAN GIRL, Jerusalem Syndrome, ADAM, ALMA, Honey, Village, Strangers, Soul of a Jew, Night of the Twentieth. Hanoch Levin: Heffetz, Solomon Grip, Ya'akobi & Leidental, Schitz, Krum, The Rubber Merchants, Suitcase Packers, Job's Passion, The Great Whore of Babylon, The Lost Women of Troy, Everyone Wants to Live, and others.

Besides plays, I read many non-fiction books on arts, cinema, theater, philosophy, poetry, geography, history, I studied languages (linguistic therapy), and read novels and plays with translations in the new/old languages that I learned since 1994, mainly Arabic, Russian, Greek, improving also Portuguese, Romanian, and learning completely new languages: Swedish, Norwegian, Danish, Dutch, Afrikans, Galego, Yiddish, Catalan, Asturianu, Haitian, Papiamentu, Frisian, Rumantsch, Friulian, Interlingua, Polish, Ukrainian, Ido, Esperanto, Icelandic, Luxembourgish, Alsatian, Occitan, Walloon, Flemish, Provencal, Gascon, Latin, Plattdeutsch... An example of the amplitude of watching dozens of plays annually, concerts, hundreds of films, and so on, can be found in this book for 2001-2013, the Haifa Film Festival, plays seen in Berlin, Paris, London, New York, Haifa, Tel Aviv, and other cities, in short - a very rewarding cultural life, partly for pleasure, partly for therapy, for finding the right balance between soul and flesh. I also had a very rewarding correspondence with good friends, Sobol, Goren, which comforted me a lot. The most therapeutical songs of this period, especially in the crisis years of 1994 to 2004 were: the Chilean Violetta Parra's Gracias a la vida – the song I like most. Durme Durme, Los bilbilicos cantan, Arvoles, Avraham Avinu, Adio, and many other Ladino ballads and songs. Spirituals and especially Louis Armstrong's Nobody knows the trouble I've seen, in the past it was Let my people go. Opera arias – first of all Nessun Dorma/Vincero from Puccini's Turandot:

Dilegua, o notte!
Tramontate, stelle!
Tramontate, stelle!
All'alba vincerò!
Vincerò! Vincerò!

Vanish, o night!
Fade, you stars!
Fade, you stars!
At dawn, I will win!
I will win! I will win!

(believing that I also will win/vincero at dawn after the long night). Va pensiero/Chorus of the Hebrew Slaves from Verdi's Nabucco: o t'ispiri il Signore un concerto che ne infonda al patire virtù/ or may the Lord inspire you a harmony of voices which may instill virtue to suffering.

I also continued reading new novels from authors in many languages, mostly in the original languages – details can be found in the many lists of this book: Alberto Moravia, Elsa Morante, Umberto Eco, Italo Svevo, Luigi Pirandello, Manzoni, Jorge Amado, Eca de Queiros, Machado de Assis, Haitian poetry, Romanian Poetry and translated books, Interlingua translated books, Poetry, plays and novels in Ladino, Anthologies of German and Spanish poetry, Italian operas libretti, Selected verse of Federico Garcia Lorca, Jean-Paul Sartre, Marcel Proust, Jules Romains, most of the novels by Balzac, additional novels by Emile Zola, biographies, George Sand, Celine, Jean Cocteau, Aragon, Apollinaire, Abbe Prevost, Isaac Bashevis Singer, Sholom Aleichem, Malraux, Gide, Joseph Kessel, D H Lawrence, Andre Maurois, Lion Feuchtwanger, Flaubert, The Goncourts, Tolstoy, Alarcon, Isabel Allende, Camilo Jose Cela, Gabriel Garcia Marquez, Jose Maria de Pereda, Mario Vargas Llosa, Henry James, Richard Bach, Elias Canetti, Truman Capote, James Clavell, A J Cronin, John Dos Passos, George Eliot, William Faulkner, Jose Saramago, Thomas Mann, Heinrich Mann, Franz Werfel, Sinclair Lewis, Franz Kafka,

Scott Fitzgerald, James Joyce, Ernest Hemingway, Max Frisch, Jonathan Franzen, Virginia Woolf, Somerset Maugham, Erich Segal, Stefan Zweig, Goethe, Heinrich Boll, Ephraim Kishon, A B Yehoshua, Amos Oz, Moshe Shamir, Aharon Appelfeld, David Grossman, Yitzhak Gormezano Goren, Ronit Matalon, Sami Michael, Shai Agnon, Meir Shalev, Arie Avneri.

In the period since 1994 at the age of 50 until 2015/2016 in my 72th year, there were periods of high tide and low tide, and when there were no works, mainly in the period of low tide, but also in the other periods as I didn't have anymore a full schedule since becoming an independent consultant and later on a part-time academic, I had plenty of time to read, learn new languages, write a play, a novel, articles, academic dissertation and books, watching plays, concerts and films, visiting new countries. All the above mentioned books/bibliotherapy and writing therapy apply mainly for the periods in which I had plenty of time and felt lousy although I never was in a state of depression, because of the backing of Ruthy and the children, and the hope for a better future. Another fact worth mentioning is that my father Albert died on December 7, 1993 and my mother Pauline died on October 5, 1995 (when I was on a business trip in Los Angeles). So, the period of the worst crisis happened by coincidence or not in the years 1994-1995 (actually I had the first indications of the fraud since the end of 1993 but didn't pay attention to it). This period brought about the betrayal of friends, the loss of most of the savings, ostracizing from the main Israeli companies, but also finding business in Paris and from small companies in the US and Israel. Another period of low tide was 2000-2004 – when I had almost no work, PhD dissertation problems, but I published two academic books at the well-known Kluwer publishers and a novel in 2001 in Israel, and gave lectures all over the world. The third low tide period was in 2013-2015 – with health problems, no more teaching, but reacting by writing therapy – writing the ebook Ethics Pays and this autobiography. While the high tide were the periods of 1996-1999 – with plenty of works and very high remuneration, writing enthusiastically my PhD dissertation and most of all my play. The other high tide period was in 2004-2013 – getting at last my PhD with distinction, teaching at seven universities in Israel and abroad, receiving excellent feedbacks – as the best lecturer with a valuation of 5 out of 5, befriending the best Israeli friends which I ever had, the most intellectual, the most ethical, the most faithful and good willing. I would say that this autobiographical book that I am writing is first and foremost for me, for achieving writing therapy, and even if nobody will ever read it, it has achieved its purpose, in assisting to overcome my health and other problems successfully. I have no more income, no pension, but I can live modestly from my savings although their value in dollars and euros is shrinking and I get no interests because of the outrageous policy of zero interest. Yet, I really don't care and I am in a very good mood, as the books that I am writing are very rewarding, and give me hope for an intellectual renaissance, and hopefully for reaching readers who would be interested to learn from my experience and get a new and better perspective for their lives.

Bibliotherapy has been shown to be effective in the treatment of depression. These results have been shown to be long-lasting. In its most basic form, bibliotherapy is using books to aid people in solving the issues that they may be facing at a particular time. It consists of selecting reading material relevant to a client's life situation. Bibliotherapy has also been explained as "a process of dynamic interaction between the personality of the reader and literature-interaction which may be utilized for personal assessment, adjustment, and growth." Bibliotherapy for adults is a form of self-administered treatment in which structured materials provide a means to alleviate distress. The concept of the treatment is based on the human inclination to identify with others through their expressions in literature and art. For instance, a grieving child who reads, or is read a story about another child who has lost a parent may feel less alone in the world. As most of the children books that I read were sad books, I identified with the protagonists of the books and thought how lucky am I that I don't suffer as much as they do "without a family", "being so sick" or experiencing ostracism, anti-Semitism, feeling lonely, while at the end all is well.

The concept of bibliotherapy has widened over time, to include self-help manuals without therapeutic intervention, or a therapist "prescribing" a movie that might provide needed catharsis to a client. Well, actually, as we'll see, the Greeks provided catharsis with their plays, and since then bibliotherapy and watching plays and films are indeed a fantastic means of catharsis. There is not as much research on using fiction in bibliotherapy when compared to cognitive self-help books. The recent work of the Israeli Professor Zipora Shechtman (my in-law) has been important in investigating the use of affective literature for bibliotherapy. In her work on counseling with aggressive boys, Shechtman discusses the deficits these children exhibit and describe affect disorders with symptoms of emotional arousal, low levels of empathy, and difficulties in self-expression. Using integrative treatment whereby the patient explores the problem, gains insight, and commits to change, Shechtman found that using affective bibliotherapy techniques achieved therapeutic change while indicating gains in empathy and insight: Shechtman, Z., & Nir-Shfir, R. (2008). The Effect of Affective Bibliotherapy on Clients' Functioning in Group Therapy. International Journal of Group Psychotherapy, 58(1), 103-117.

Bibliotherapy is an old concept in library science. According to the Greek historian Diodorus Siculus, in his monumental work Bibliotheca historica, there was a phrase above the entrance to the royal chamber where books were stored by King Ramses II of Egypt. Considered to be the oldest known library motto in the world, it read: "House of Healing for the Soul." Well, I feel at home, with the ancient Egyptians, the country where I was born, with the Greek catharsis, the homeland of half my family, and with my in-law Zipora Shechtman finding the scientific foundation of bibliotherapy. What is funny is that I felt as Moliere's Le bourgeois gentilhomme who didn't know that he was speaking prose all his life, I didn't know until recently that what assisted me to overcome my problems was bibliotherapy, the prose of the formula that I thought I have invented but which was existant since Ancient Egypt and Greece. This should come as no surprise to bibliophiles that books were thought as salubrious even in Ancient Egypt. Galen, the extraordinary philosopher and physician to Marcus Aurelius of Rome, maintained a medical library in the first century A.D., used not only by himself but by the staff of the Sanctuary Asclepion, a Roman spa famous for its therapeutic waters and considered to be one of the first hospital centers in the world. As far back as 1272, the Koran was prescribed reading in the Al-Mansur Hospital in Cairo as medical treatment – Cairo was of course the city where I was born.

In the early nineteenth century, Dr. Benjamin Rush favored the use of literature in hospitals for both the "amusement and instruction of patients." By the middle of the century, Dr. Minson Galt II, wrote on the uses of bibliotherapy in mental institutions, and by 1900 libraries were an important part of European psychiatric institutions. My problems were never so serious as to be treated by psychiatric institutions, as I never suffered from tragic situations – loss of parents, of family, poverty, serious illness, I never fought at wars, but I lived during all my life in a region stricken by wars and terrorism. After the term bibliotherapy was coined by Samuel Crothers in an August 1916 Atlantic Monthly article, it eventually found its way into the medical lexicon. By the 1920s there were training programs in bibliotherapy. One of the first to offer such training was the School of Library Science at Western Reserve University followed by a program at the University of Minnesota School of Medicine. Hospital librarians were at the forefront of bibliotherapy techniques. E. Kathleen Jones, the editor of the book series Hospital Libraries, was the library administrator for the McLean Hospital in Massachusetts. Actually not all books can be included in bibliotherapy, Tarzan, Stalag stories, or Tintin have not a therapeutic function, but the books which I have read by Zola, Hugo, Scott Fitzgerald, Goethe, Cervantes, Agnon, Balzac, Sartre, Remarque, as well as the plays by Shakespeare, Anouilh, Sophocles, Homer, Rostand, Pagnol, Arthur Miller, Ionesco, Duerrenmatt, films by Bergman or It's a Wonderful Life, have indeed a fantastic therapeutic value, as you can identify with the protagonists and find solace.

But hope was not only instrumental to me. I would say that hope saved the people of Israel throughout its whole history. In Egypt when we were slaves we hoped to return to Israel and we did, in Spain when we were persecuted we hoped that we would find a way out and indeed we found it in Greece and Turkey. At the end of the 19th century when anti-Semitism was so widespread all over Europe, and even in France, Herzl had the vision to found a country in Israel and against all odds we did. In the Holocaust the Jews all over Europe thought that they will survive, and indeed a small number did (including my wife's parents in Romania), those that hoped that we'll find a way out of the abyss. But this was the worst moment of our history, as hope did not help to the six million Jews who were exterminated by the Nazis and their collaborators. When Ben Gurion declared our independence (our national anthem Hatikva is called Hope and relates our hope to return to our homeland) in 1948 most of the world thought that we were doomed, and many Israeli peacelovings as well, as we didn't have any chance to vanquish with a population of half a million the Arab Nations with a population of a hundred millions. Most of the Arabs left the country at the instigation of their leaders, who told them that they will return soon and plunder the huge achievements of the Zionists in the twenty years of the mandate in spite of the pogroms by the Palestinians. Well, they are still hoping that one day they will achieve their goal to exterminate Israel, and many peacelovings believe their saga of the Nakba equals Holocaust, the Right of Return in order to annihilate Israel and turning us into another Syria or Iraq. The people of Israel still hoped that they will overcome the aggression of the Egyptians, Syrians and Jordans in the Six Day War (and I was this time one of them, when I decided to remain in Israel although I had a job in Switzerland), and against all odds we managed to win this time again, as our hope was translated into a fantastic victory. But I must confess that Hope, Love and Bibliotherapy are not effective if we don't assist them actively. The religious Jews think that God was on our side (where was he during the Holocaust?), but actually the Israelis and the Jews achieved all our endeavors, and I achieved mine, in working very hard to make our hopes come through. The Palestinian leaders also hope very hard but it does not help them as they opt only to destructive moves, war, terrorism, incitement, without doing much to ameliorate their situation in the West Bank and Gaza, without progressing, without solving their refugees problems as we did for our refugees – Look at the way how we solved the problems of one million Russian refugees who have become one of the pillars of our country in all fields within less than a decade, as compared to the Palestinian refugees in more than 60 years. French say: Aide-toi et le Ciel t'aidera – Help yourself and Heaven will help you. That is what we did, what I did, as you must work very hard to materialize hope, to feed love, to find a solace in books – while drawing the conclusions and act according to what you have learned in the books.

2. BIOGRAPHIES

The reader can find details on the following books, authors, and eminent personalities on Wikipedia & Encyclopaedias, on Amazon/Local books/Cory's/Eminent Personalities websites

It is fascinating to read biographies of the best politicians, businessmen, composers, musicians, painters, writers, actors, kings and emperors, heads of states and ministers, economists, etc. One can learn a lot from the good and the bad examples, from Churchill, F.D. Roosevelt, De Gaulle, Ben Gurion, Lee Kuan Yew, but also from Hitler, Mussolini, Franco, Mao Zedong, and Stalin. Biographies are probably the form of literature that I enjoy most, as they are a synergy between documentary and fiction. I read about ten biographies/novels of Dona Gracia, finding that probably she was responsible for rescuing my forefathers who were obliged to convert to Christianity in Portugal, and enabling them to escape to the Ottoman Empire. After reading all the books by Emile Zola, my most beloved author, I read several biographies of his life, until I started reading the monumental biography of Zola by Henri Mitterand in 3 volumes of about a thousand pages each, being sure that I'll never finish it, as I read in parallel tens of other biographies, I have postponed reading literature until I finished all the 120 books about Capitalism, and I am writing presently the book Ethics Pays. But, it is very interesting to read in parallel the biographies of the leaders of the world in World War II, and notice how the conflict started and evolved from all the possible angles. I read also in parallel biographies of my most preferred authors from Shakespeare to Thomas Mann, from Cervantes to Marcel Pagnol. But, as I decided to focus on one book of each category, I intend to read once in ten days Zola's biography, and so I may finish it within a couple of years, but I would have to postpone for that reading the biographies of Churchill, Proust, Shaw, Renoir, Moliere, Verdi, Steve Jobs. I can of course read only biographies, but what about the languages that I will forget if I abandon Anna Karenina in Russian, the plays, the geography books, and the books in Spanish and English?

I have read and started reading more than 100 biographies in several languages. I have created my autobiography on my website, with texts, links, audios, pictures and videos. My wife Ruthy mocks me by saying that my website is my pyramid (being born not far from them). I have written a diary in the years 1957-1961 (Opus 1) and an essay A Portrait of the Idealist as a Young Man. The 4'38" audioplay on the wedding anniversary in 1989 and the 1'20" screenplay on Ruthy's birthday in 1992 are also part of Cory's autobiography, as well as this book and the other documents on my website/About Jacques Cory. My academic books with dozens of case studies, my novel and play, etc., are also based on my biography. On my website one can find articles, poetry, eulogies, appreciation letters, videos..., which are part of Cory's autobiography.

Can the writing of my autobiography bring me malocchio/evil eye, as too many people who have written their autobiography died shortly after? Yitzhak Navon, the fifth President of Israel and a renowned author in Ladino, wrote his autobiography at the advanced age of 94 and shortly after he died. But he also got married at the age of 87 with a much younger wife. When he was 90 he used to joke that when someone is 70 he is called Yashish (old), when he is 80 he is called Kashish (not hashish, very old), and when he gets 90 it is just Bakshish (tip). So, he had a 4 years tip, which is not so much – less than 5% tip, as my uncle who died at the age of 104 and he received a tip of 14 years, more than 15%, while he caused Barclays Bank that gave him a pension for 44 years, more than the years he worked for them in Egypt and Israel, to be almost bankrupt. Charlie Chaplin published his autobiography at the age of 75 in 1964, 13 years before he died. Arthur Rubinstein published the second book of his autobiography in 1980 two years before his death at the age of 95, but he left his wife at the age of 90 for Annabelle Whitestone, then 33 years old. Lee Kuan Yew published his memoirs in 2000, 15 years before he died at the age of 92. So, we can not draw any conclusion on the malocchio of writing his autobiography, because you have a span between 1 to 15 years, depending also if you have married again at the age of 90 with a woman of 33 or lived happily married for 63 years as Lee Kuan Yew - his wife died at the age of 90 in 2010. I'll take the risk anyhow, as I remember that I have written my will at the age of 40, and I am almost 72, and ceased my life insurance at the age of 50.

But death of the main protagonist is an interesting issue in world literature and I refer to it in this book. Balzac gives us an advanced notice of the death of Goriot and it comes naturally at the end of the novel. Amado on the other hand kills the husband of Dona Flor Vadinho in the first line of the first sentence of the first page of the first chapter, but his ghost visits Dona Flor throughout the book. But the most surprising death that I have ever read occurred to the Tai-Pan Struan in the middle of his life, while he was making many plans, surprisingly, as no reader expects it, and especially me, who was astonished and grieved by this death. It goes like that: 'Struan and May-may held each other tightly. "Dinna give up, Tai-tai!" "Never! I love you, Husband." And the Supreme Winds fell on them.' Nobody knows when the Supreme Winds will fall on you, it can be from a wind, an earthquake, an explosion of a chemical factory near Haifa, terror, war, sickness, with or without your wife, so if you have still a message to convey for posterity you should do it now and hope for the better afterwards. As I am not afraid of death, I dealt with those issues when I was 17 in my diary, I was much impressed by Shakespeare's Julius Caesar's words on the day that Caesar died, as the valiant never taste of death but once when it comes.

Cowards die many times before their deaths.
The valiant never taste of death but once.
Of all the wonders that I yet have heard,
It seems to me most strange that men should fear,
Seeing that death, a necessary end,
Will come when it will come.

Reading Biographies in English, French, Hebrew, Italian, Spanish, German, being read by Cory in parallel: of Shai Agnon, Woody Allen, Ingmar Bergman, Ludwig van Beethoven, Bertolt Brecht, Lucrecia Borgia, Miguel de Cervantes, Chiang Kai-Shek, Winston Churchill, Leonardo da Vinci, Michelangelo Buonarroti, Alfred Dreyfus, L'annee terrible by Victor Hugo, Eine Kindheitserinnerung des Leonardo da Vinci by Sigmund Freud, Joseph Minc, Emile Zola by Henri Mitterand, The Origins of the Inquisition by Benzion Netanyahu, A History of the English Speaking People by Winston Churchill, Bob Dylan, Francisco Franco, Ernest Hemingway, Henry VIII, Heinrich Heine, Mao Zedong, La Reine Margot, Albert Einstein, A German Requiem on German Jews, Nissim Mishal – Uncensored, Zionism in Egypt, The Jews in Egypt, Isaac Newton, The years of extermination: Nazi Germany and the Jews 1939-1945 by Saul Friedlander, La Commune, histoire et souvenirs by Louise Michel, Napoleon, Moliere, Benito Mussolini, Marcel Pagnol, Pierre-Auguste Renoir, Franklin Delano Roosevelt, Rothschild, William Shakespeare, George Bernard Shaw, August Strindberg, The Brothers Mann (Heinrich and Thomas), Giuseppe Verdi, Tennessee Williams, Israel Meir Lau, The View from Nashville, Yosef Ben Matityahu – Titus Flavius Josephus – History of the Jewish War against the Romans, Hitler/Stalin, The March of Folly by Barbara Tuchman, Steve Jobs, Lee Iacocca, Lorenzo da Ponte, Marcel Proust, Augustus.

Read recently – Don Isaac Abravanel, Dona Gracia (x10), Don Joseph Nasi, Balzac, Ben-Gurion, Brutus, Charles Chaplin, Camondo, Sarah Bernhardt, Coco Chanel, Marcel Dassault, Rachel, Felix Mendelssohn, Fryderyk Chopin, Arthur Rubinstein, The Marranos of Spain, Charles de Gaulle, Le Baron Haussmann, Theodor Herzl, Henrik Ibsen, Tommy Lapid, Lee Kuan Yew, Alma Mahler, Spain and the Jews, Mireille, Karl Marx, Arthur Miller, Alberto

This book that I am writing is a new form of literature, as it combines an autobiography, memoirs, dissertations on the topics that I like most – linguistics (with a focus on the languages that I have learned), literature (with a focus on modern literature), drama (with a focus on the plays that I like most), music (with a focus on the composers I like most), philosophy (expanding on my views on life), geography (expanded in my other book Ethics Pays), films (with a focus on the films of my courses), biographies (especially of the personalities I admire most), ethics (summarizing my pioneering activities), business (focusing on case studies of my career), the Middle East conflict (expanding for the first time on my political agenda), history (a personal view on pages of history), innovation (contribution of peoples and Israel to innovation), humor and saying (focusing on the main topics of the book), arts and museums (the painters I like most), culture (my contribution to culture), cosmopolitanism (my cosmopolitan and multicultural experience), Judaism, Zionism, xenophilia, poetry, religion, my wife and family, links to photos, classical music, plays, operas, books, songs, films, personalities, history, geography, Wikis, etc. My book can be read in an hour – if one chooses from the table of contents a few topics only, a few days – if one reads the full parts of the book that interest him, a few weeks – if one reads all the book, a few months – if one reads and watches all the links of the book, a whole life – if one expands on all the personalities, issues, topics, languages, books, music, countries mentioned.

Before expanding on the biographies I admire most, we'll examine what are the definitions of autobiography, biography, memoirs... An autobiography (from the Greek, αὐτός-autos self + βίος-bios life + γράφειν-graphein to write) is a written account of the life of a person written by that person. In other words, it is the story that a person wrote about themselves. In antiquity such works were typically entitled apologia, purporting to be self-justification rather than self-documentation. John Henry Newman's autobiography (first published in 1864) is entitled Apologia Pro Vita Sua in reference to this tradition. The Jewish historian Flavius Josephus introduces his autobiography (Josephi Vita, c. 99) with self-praise, which is followed by a justification of his actions as a Jewish rebel commander of Galilee. The pagan rhetor Libanius (c. 314–394) framed his life memoir (Oration I begun in 374) as one of his orations, not of a public kind, but of a literary kind that could not be aloud in privacy. Augustine (354–430) applied the title Confessions to his autobiographical work, and Jean-Jacques Rousseau used the same title in the 18th century, initiating the chain of confessional and sometimes racy and highly self-critical, autobiographies of the Romantic era and beyond. In the spirit of Augustine's Confessions is the 12th-century Historia Calamitatum of Peter Abelard, outstanding as an autobiographical document of its period. I prefer not to use the terms of apologia or confession for my autobiography because of the negative connotations of those terms nowadays.

A memoir is slightly different in character from an autobiography. While an autobiography typically focuses on the "life and times" of the writer, a memoir has a narrower, more intimate focus on his or her own memories, feelings and emotions. Memoirs have often been written by politicians or military leaders as a way to record and publish an account of their public exploits. A memoir (from French: mémoire: memoria, meaning memory or reminiscence) is a collection of memories that an individual writes about moments or events, both public or private that took place in the subject's life. The assertions made in the work are understood to be factual. While memoir has historically been defined as a subcategory of biography or autobiography since the late 20th century, the genre is differentiated in form, presenting a narrowed focus. A biography or autobiography tells the story of a life, while a memoir often tells a story from a life, such as touchstone events & turning points from an author's life. The author of a memoir is a memoirist.

One early example is that of Julius Caesar's Commentarii de Bello Gallico, also known as Commentaries on the Gallic Wars. In the work, Caesar describes the battles that took place during the nine years that he spent fighting local armies in the Gallic Wars. His second memoir, Commentarii de Bello Civili (or Commentary on the Civil War) is an account of the events that took place between 49 and 48 BC in the civil war against Gnaeus Pompeius and the Senate. Leonor López de Córdoba (1362–1420) wrote what is supposed to be the first autobiography in Spanish. The English Civil War (1642–1651) provoked a number of examples of this genre, including works by Sir Edmund Ludlow and Sir John Reresby. French examples from the same period include the memoirs of Cardinal de Retz (1614–1679) and the Duc de Saint-Simon.

Notable 18th-century autobiographies in English include those of Edward Gibbon and Benjamin Franklin. Following the trend of Romanticism, which greatly emphasised the role and the nature of the individual, and in the footsteps of Jean-Jacques Rousseau's Confessions, a more intimate form of autobiography, exploring the subject's emotions, came into fashion. Stendhal's autobiographical writings of the 1830s, The Life of Henry Brulard and Memoirs of an Egotist, are both avowedly influenced by Rousseau. An English example is William Hazlitt's Liber Amoris (1823), a painful examination of the writer's love-life. With the rise of education, cheap newspapers and cheap printing, modern concepts of fame and celebrity began to develop, and the beneficiaries of this were not slow to cash in on this by producing autobiographies. It became the expectation—rather than the exception—that those in the public eye should write about themselves—not only writers such as Charles Dickens (who also incorporated autobiographical elements in his novels) and Anthony Trollope, but also politicians (e.g. Henry Brooks Adams), philosophers (e.g. John Stuart Mill), churchmen such as Cardinal Newman, and entertainers such as P. T. Barnum. Increasingly, in accordance with romantic taste, these accounts also began to deal, amongst other topics, with aspects of childhood and upbringing—far removed from the principles of "Cellinian" autobiography. List of autobiographies – of renowned autobiographies.

A biography or simply bio is a detailed description of a person's life. It involves more than just the basic facts like education, work, relationships, and death, but also portrays a subject's experience of these life events. Unlike a profile or curriculum vitae (résumé), a biography presents a subject's life story, highlighting various aspects of his or her life, including intimate details of experience, and may include an analysis of the subject's personality. Biographical works are usually non-fiction, but fiction can also be used to portray a person's life. One in-depth form of biographical coverage is called legacy writing. Works in diverse media, from literature to film, form the genre known as biography. An authorized biography is written with the permission, cooperation, and at times, participation of a subject or a subject's heirs. An autobiography is written by the person himself or herself, sometimes with the assistance of a collaborator or ghostwriter. Fortunately, I don't need a biographer or a ghostwriter for my book.

The list of personalities and their biographies is only a partial list of all the biographies that I have read. I have not included the dozens of biographies that I have only started to read but just the biographies which I have read and enjoyed most. Furthermore, I have not included in this list biographies of negative personalities, but biographies of persons which I admire most, although some of them had quite many negative aspects in their life, but overall they inspired me much. I'll bring here a survey on the best biographies that I have ever read – 36 (twice י"ח or 18 – alive in Hebrew) starting with the historic figure I admire most – Dona Gracia, reading about 10 biographical books on her life, and ending with the most moving autobiography that I have ever read on another remarkable woman, or rather a child – Anne Frank. To this list we can add 36 more biographies that I have started reading, amounting to 72 biographies, in the context of the complete works of the best 72 authors (or even 720 authors in modern literature detailed in this book), works of the 72 best composers, best 72 plays, best 72 films..., as mentioned in this book.

The list of the 36 best biographies on the 36 most prominent personalities includes: Dona Gracia, Honore de Balzac, David Ben-Gurion, Brutus, Charles Chaplin, Felix Mendelssohn, Arthur Rubinstein, Charles de Gaulle, Theodor Herzl, Henrik Ibsen, Lee Kuan Yew, Alma Mahler, Karl Marx, Arthur Miller, Victor Hugo, Mahatma Gandhi, Federico Garcia Lorca, Liv Ullmann, George Sand, Emile Zola, Jean-Paul Sartre, Lev Tolstoi, Rembrandt, Rachel, Verdi, Warren Buffett, Renoir, Paul Hawken, Disraeli, Marcel Dassault, Don Isaac Abravanel, Coco Chanel, Sarah Bernhardt, Shelley, Alberto Moravia, Anne Frank. I could of course add more biographies that I have read, on Chopin, Baron Haussmann, Pereire, Talleyrand, Camondo, Kishon, Freud, Fouche, but I preferred to concentrate on the special mix of those 36 biographies chosen by the quality of the bios, excellence of personalities; their diverse professions – statesmen, painters, musicians, actors, authors/playwrights/poets, businessmen, philosophers, remarkable women (8 – 22%), leaders; from different countries – Portugal, Spain, France (11 – 30%), UK, US, Israel, Austria, Norway, Singapore, India, Germany, Poland, Italy, Russia, Netherlands; about half of them lived in the 19th century and half in the 20th, 3 during the Renaissance, and one Roman – Brutus, 3 of them are still living. Some of them were Jews (13 – 36%), 1 Hindu, 1 Buddhist, 1 Pagan, but most of them are/were Christian. I admire extremely Muhammad Yunus, a Muslim from Bangladesh, but I have not read his biography, although I've read his book, speak and write extensively on him in my courses and in this book. Another woman whom I admire most is not included – Marie Curie – as I have only seen a film on her life and not read a biography. At the end of this survey I bring the additional list of the 36 biographies on most prominent figures that I have started to read. And, as stated before, those lists do not include interesting biographies on negative personalities that I have read or started to read, as Stalin, Hitler, Mussolini, or Franco, and after I finish all the 36 biographies that I have started to read (list – at the end of this chapter) I intend to read the biographies that are in my library waiting patiently that I'll find the time to read them: Lucrezia Borgia, Truman Capote, Chiang Kai-Shek, Gabriel Garcia Marquez, Arthur Koestler, Tommy Lapid (I've read this excellent book written by his talented son Yair Lapid), Charles Lindbergh, Mao Zedong, La reine Margot, Maria Stuart, Marie Antoinette, Madame de Sevigne, Le Duc de Morny, Akio Morita (I've read this excellent autobiography by the founder of Sony), Golda Meir – this list includes Asian personalities from Japan, China, Israel. Altogether more than 100 biographies, not counting hundreds of shorter biographies of philosophers, statesmen, composers, musicians, painters, businessmen, film directors and actors, etc.

DONA GRACIA – BIOGRAPHIES: ANDREE BROOKS, CECIL ROTH, YITZHAK GOREN

We'll start with Dona Gracia, one of the most prominent figures in Jewish history, who was also probably responsible of enabling my forefathers to leave Portugal where they were forced to convert to Christianity and settle in Italy, Greece and Turkey. I have read about ten books/biographies of her life, and I'll bring here only three – The Woman Who Defied Kings – The Life and Times of Dona Gracia Nasi, a Jewish Leader During the Renaissance, by Andree Aelion Brooks. Cecil Roth: Dona Gracia of the House of Nasi, and the four books on Dona Gracia by Yitzhak Gormezano Goren, who is a personal friend and Egyptian/Israeli compatriot. Dona Gracia is for me a model (being a feminist), she was proud of her heritage, she didn't have any inferiority complexes towards kings, Christians, men and businessmen, she was one of the most prominent Sephardi personalities in the last 500 years, and a precursor of Zionism. I feel a personal great empathy to Dona Gracia, and reading the excellent biographies, and especially Goren's masterpiece, I imagine that I lived at this epoch and shared with her her dilemmas.

The Woman Who Defied Kings is the first modern, comprehensive biography of Doña Gracia Nasi, an outstanding Jewish international banker during the Renaissance. A courageous leader, she used her wealth and connections to operate an underground railroad that saved hundreds of her fellow Spanish and Portuguese conversos (Jews who had been forced to convert to Catholicism) from the horrors of the Inquisition. Born in Lisbon in 1510, she later moved onto Antwerp, Venice, and Ferrara where she was constantly negotiating with kings and emperors for better conditions for her people. Doña Gracia Nasi helped lead a boycott of the Italian port of Ancona in retaliation for the burning of 23 of her people by the Inquisition - an outrageous act in an era when Jews were more accustomed to appeasement. Finally settling in Constantinople, she persuaded Sultan Suleiman the Magnificent to grant her a long-term lease on the Tiberias region of Palestine, where she spearheaded one of the earliest attempts to start an independent state for Jews in Isr'l. Doña Gracia Nasi is equally important to history because she shatters the stereotype of how women, especially Jewish women, conducted their lives during the Renaissance period. Some historians have called her the most important Jewish woman since Biblical times.

From Publishers Weekly - In an assiduously researched biography of a 16th-century Jewish woman who managed a powerful business empire, Brooks, an associate fellow at Yale, has illuminated a mostly forgotten corner of history. Famed during her lifetime both in the Sephardic Jewish community for her unstinting philanthropy and in the wider world of the Muslim Ottoman Empire, where she fled to escape the Inquisition, Beatrice de Luna Mendes, better known as Dona Gracia Nasi (1510-1569), was a woman of formidable business acumen, personal courage, outstanding altruism and devotion to the Jewish religion, which, as a Catholic converso, she practiced in secret. Widowed early, Dona Gracia managed both the complex financial affairs of her late husband's merchant empire and its secret activities. The latter included huge bribes to the Church and (never repaid) loans to several monarchs, as well as an underground escape route that rescued thousands of conversos from the Inquisition's fury in Spain, Portugal and Italy. Despite their financial power, the Mendes family were forced by the Inquisition into quick moves and narrow escapes from Lisbon to Antwerp to Venice and Ferrara, back to Venice and then to Constantinople. Brooks's research, which involved previously unavailable documents in 13 languages and seven countries, effectively details 16th-century social, religious and economic conditions, especially as they affected the Jewish community. Her overeager attempt to lionize her subject, however, sometimes results in fulsome, even strident prose. Yet even if Dona Gracia is not a feminist heroine, as Brooks suggests, this saga of her life and times is a significant contribution to Jewish history during the Renaissance. Photos. Review - "An excellent read ! The story of Dona Garcia is riveting. She would be a hero in any age and a role model for women today." --Fayne Erickson, publisher, Ms. Magazine. From the Publisher *FINALIST FOR THE 2002-03 JEWISH BOOK AWARD. About the Author - ANDRÉE AELION BROOKS is a journalist, author and lecturer specializing in Jewish history topics. For nearly two decades she was a contributing columnist and news writer for the New York Times. She wrote the award-winning book Children of Fast Track Parents. She founded the Women's Campaign School at Yale University, where she is an Associate Fellow, and served as the director/editor of an important teaching series for 5-7th graders in Sephardic Jewish history and culture called "Out of Spain." Over forty years of published work including: more than 2,000 articles in the New York Times during an 18 year span; countless pieces in other newspapers and magazines including The New York Times Magazine, European Judaism (academic journal), Equity, McCalls, Glamour, Reform Judaism, Hadassah Magazine, Historic Preservation...

Esther Nebenzahl wrote on Roth's Dona Gracia biography on December 10, 2000 her comments:

This is the biography of Dona Gracia, a Jewish woman who lived in the 15th century and whose personality is characterized by intelligence, shrewdness, generosity, and religious devotion. Born in Spain, she went to Portugal in 1492, following the expulsion of the Jews. In Portugal she was forcibly converted to Christianity and became one amongst many "New Christians," "Marranos," or "Conversos." At the age of 18 she married Francisco Mendes, the richest merchant in Lisbon at that time. Seven years later she became a widow and successfully took over her husband's business. Determined to reach Turkey where under the protection of the Ottoman Empire she would be able to profess her faith freely, she embarked on a long journey, which took 17 years. This journey took her to London, Antwerp, Lyon, Venice, Ferrara, Ancona, Ragusa, Salonika and finally Constantinople. Throughout her perils she proved to be highly courageous and an excellent businesswoman. She used her wealth and contacts to help Jews escape the Inquisition, became the self-appointed protector of the conversos, built houses of prayer and teaching, devoted herself to good works, and was known as "the heart of her people." There are two important factors in the history of Dona Gracia: first, she represents one of the rare examples of fight against repression to the Jews by the use of commercial tactics (the Ancona Boycott), and the first to establish a Jewish colony in Palestine (Tiberias), a self-sustaining settlement for Jews and conversos from an hostile Europe. The author Cecil Roth is a well-known historian. He clearly demonstrates his admiration for Dona Gracia, his praises are many, and openly admits to the fact that he has not been able to find any historical proof to the contrary. Despite this embellishment, Dona Gracia remains a distant character, she carries an aura of mystery which contributes to her "divinity." Had the Jewish faith room for "canonization" Dona Gracia would certainly be a downright candidate. Her name stands amongst famous Jewish women, and as her contemporary the author Samuel Usque says, "she is much a heroine as Miriam, Deborah, and Judith." Cecil Roth was editor in chief of Encyclopaedia Judaica from 1965 until his death, and an exceptional author of more than 600 works.

Yitzhak Gormezano Goren was born in Alexandria, Egypt, in 1941 and immigrated to Israel as a child. He is a playwright and novelist. Goren studied English and French literature at the Hebrew University of Jerusalem and Tel Aviv University, and received a MFA in theater direction in the United States. In 1982, he co-founded the Bimat Kedem Theater, which promotes original Israeli productions with an emphasis on non-European Jewish culture. In 1998, the company established the Bimat Kedem Publishing House. Gormezano Goren has worked as a broadcast editor and is active in the Israeli theater and film world. He has been awarded the National Council for Culture and the Arts Prize for his play, The Gospel According to Midorus (1966), the Ramat Gan Prize for his novel, An Alexandrian Summer (1979), the Govinska-Baratz Prize for his play, A Simple Tale, based on Agnon's novel (1979), and the Prime Minister's Prize (2001). The four books on the biography of Dona Gracia are (the fourth one is about to be published):

The Holy Lie (biographical novel), Hakibbutz Hameuchad/ Siman Kriah, 2010 [Ha-Sheker Ha-Kadosh: Dona Gracia Be-Lisbo'a Portugal] – Dona Gracia in Lisboa, Portugal.

The Queen of Finance (biographical novel), Hakibbutz Hameuchad/ Siman Kriah, 2013 [Malkat Ha-Finansim: Dona Gracia Be-Anversa, Hi Antwerpen Flanderya] – Dona Gracia in Antwerpen.

Venician Fever : Dona Gracia Mendes in Venice (biographical novel), Hakibbutz Hameuchad/ Siman Kriah, 2015 [Kadachat Venetianit: Dona Gracia Be-Venetzia Be-Italia] – In Venice.

Gracia Mendes Nasi (Gracia is Portuguese and Spanish for the Hebrew Hannah, which means Grace; also known by her Christianized name Beatrice de Luna, 1510–1569) was one of the wealthiest Jewish women of Renaissance Europe. She married Francisco Mendes/Benveniste. She was the aunt and business partner of Joao Micas (alias, Hebrew name Joseph Nasi), who became a prominent figure in the politics of the Ottoman Empire. She also developed an escape network that saved thousands of Conversos from the Inquisition. Beatrice de Luna was born in Portugal in 1510. The family was from Aragon in Spain and were forcibly converted Jews known as Conversos (also called Crypto-Jews, Marranos and Secret Jews). So that they could still practice Judaism, the family had fled to Portugal when the Catholic Monarchs, Queen Isabella I of Castile and King Ferdinand II of Aragon, expelled the Jews in 1492. Five years later, in 1497, they were forcibly converted to Catholicism along with all the other Jews in Portugal at that time. Beatrice's father, Alvaro de Luna Micas, was of a family by the name Nasi or Prince in Hebrew. (A link to Dona Gracia's hotel and museum in Tiberias, Israel).

In 1528, Beatrice de Luna married the very rich black pepper trader and new Christian in Lisbon, Francisco Mendes. Francisco also happened to belong to the same very prominent Jewish family as her mother – Benveniste from Castile and Aragon – and was also the great grandchild of Don Abraham Benveniste of Castile. The couple were believed to have been married in the great cathedral of Lisbon, in a public Catholic wedding, and then to have had a Crypto-Judaic ceremony with the signing of a ketubah. Francisco Mendes and his brother, Diogo, were the directors of a powerful trading company and bank of world renown, with agents across Europe and around the Mediterranean. The House of Mendes/Benveniste probably began as a company trading precious objects and currency arbitrage. Following the beginning of the Age of Discovery and the finding, by the Portuguese, of a sea route to India, the Mendes brothers became particularly important spice traders. They also traded in silver – the silver was needed to pay the Asians for those spices. In January of 1538, when Beatrice was only twenty-seven years old, Francisco died. In his will Francisco divided his fortune between Beatrice and his brother and business partner, Diogo; this bold decision put Beatrice on the path to becoming the successful and renowned business woman of the sixteenth century that we know her for today.

A few years before Francisco's death in 1538, his brother, Diogo, had opened a branch office of their house in the city of Antwerp together with his relative Abraham Benveniste. Soon after Francisco's death, Beatrice Mendes moved to Antwerp to join Diogo with her infant daughter, Ana (the future wife of Don Joseph Nasi) and her younger sister, Brianda de Luna. The move from Lisbon was also timely due to the changing political landscape in Portugal, when as of May 23, 1536, the Pope ordered the establishment of a Portuguese Inquisition. Once they settled in Antwerp, Beatrice invested her family fortune in her brother-in-law's business, and started to make a name for herself not only as his business partner but as an independent business woman herself. The relationship between the de Luna and Mendes households became even stronger, with the marriage between Beatrice's sister, Brianda, and Diogo Mendes. But just five years after Beatrice Mendes settled in Antwerp, Diogo also died. It was now 1542, and in his will he left his niece and sister-in-law control of the Mendes commercial empire, making Beatrice Mendes an important businesswoman. The enormous wealth enabled her to influence kings and popes, which she did to protect her fellow Conversos. It also enabled her to finance her escape network. It is believed she was the driving force behind the publication of the Ferrara Bible from Sephardic source texts. The second, public printing of the book was dedicated to her. All the while she had to fend off attempts by various monarchs to confiscate her fortune by trying to arrange a marriage of her only daughter to their relatives. Had this happened, a large portion of the family wealth would have been lost, by coming under the control of her daughter's husband. Beatrice Mendes resisted all these attempts, which often put her in personal peril.

Starting in Antwerp, she began to develop an escape network that helped thousands of fellow Conversos flee Spain and Portugal, where they had been constantly under threat of arrest as heretics by the Inquisition. These fleeing Conversos were first sent secretly to spice ships, owned or operated by the House of Mendes/Benveniste, that sailed regularly between Lisbon and Antwerp. In Antwerp, Beatrice Mendes and her staff gave them instructions and the money to travel by cart and foot over the Alps to the great port city of Venice, where arrangements were made to transport them by ship to the Ottoman Empire, Greece and Turkey in the East. At that time the Ottoman Empire, under the Muslim Turks, welcomed Jews to their lands. The escape route was carefully planned. Even so, many died on the way as they traversed the mountain paths of the high Alps. Under Beatrice Mendes (Doña Garcia Nasi), the House of Mendes/Benveniste dealt with King Henry II of France, Holy Roman Emperor Charles V, his sister Mary, Governess of the Low Countries, Popes Paul III and Paul IV, and Sultan Suleiman the Magnificent, Sultan of the Ottoman Empire. These dealings involved commercial activities, loans, and bribes. Earlier payments to the Pope by the House of Mendes and their associates had delayed the establishment of the Inquisition in Portugal (see History of the Jews in Portugal).

In 1544, she fled once again, this time to the Republic of Venice, and took up residence on the Grand Canal. The city-state offered Jews and conversos a safe base to live and conduct business, although most practicing Jews were confined in crowded ghettos; because of this situation that Jewish people were put into, the Mendes most likely practiced Judaism secretly while still putting up the Catholic charade. She continued the type of business that she did with her brother-in-law, and very successfully traded pepper, grain, and textiles. While in Venice, she had a dispute with her sister, Brianda, Diogo's wife, regarding his estate, and left yet again to the nearby city state of Ferrara to avoid the ruling the Venetian Giudici al Forestier (Tribunal for the Affairs of Foreigners) decided would end the sisters' conflict over equal control of the fortune.

The city of Ferrara was eager accept the Mendes family; Ercole II, Duke of Este (1508-1559), agreed to the terms of Diogo Mendes's will so that the wealthy family would move to his city, and received them gracefully in 1549. In Ferrara, Beatrice Mendes, for the first time in her life, was able to openly practice Judaism with in a distinguished Jewish Sephardi Community and in a city that recognized her rights. This time in her life is most likely when she started to become known as Doña Gracia Nasi. The genealogy of her family starts to get a little confusing here; this is most likely when her sister Brianda adopted the name Reyna, when Beatrice's daughter Ana, became known as Reyna as well, and also when Brianda's daughter, named after Beatrice, was given the name Gracia. The family's new proud Jewish identity brought Doña Gracia beyond the realm of commercial business, and she became a large beneficiary and organizer for resettling Jewish people using her commercial network during the Jewish diaspora. Doña Gracia became very involved with the Sephardic colony in Ferrara, and became an active supporter of the burst of literacy and printing among the Jews of Ferrara. Because of her humanitarian efforts and other successes, such books that were printed during this time, like the Ferrara Bible (published in 1553) and Consolation for the Tribulations of Israel (published 1553, written by Samuel Usque), were dedicated to Doña Gracia Nasi. The move to Ferrara, however, did not end the quarrel between Doña Gracia and her sister, Brianda (now Reyna de Luna), over the control of the estate. To finally end the dispute, Doña Gracia briefly went to Venice to settle with her sister in the Venetian Senate. Doña Gracia was all what Brianda was not, which caused her jealousy.

After the settlement was made, her, her daughter Ana (now Reyna Nasi), and a large entourage moved to Constantinople (now Istanbul), in the Ottoman domains, where she arranged for her daughter to marry her husband's nephew and business partner, Don Joseph Nasi. This move in 1553, just as her others, proved to be just in time as the political atmosphere in Counter- Reformation Italy started to become hostile. In Constantinople, Doña Gracia lived fashionably in the European quarter of Galata. She was very dedicated to her Jewish lifestyle, and assumed a role of leadership in the Sephardi world of the Ottoman Empire. In 1556, soon after Doña Gracia arrived in Constantinople, the Pope sentenced a group of Conversos in Ancona to the stake, claiming they were still practicing Jewish rites. In response, Dona Gracia organized a trade embargo of the port of Ancona in the Papal States. In Istanbul, she built synagogues and yeshivas. One of the synagogues is named after her (La Señora). These institutions were created primarily to help the refugees to return to Judaism, their ancestral faith. In 1558, she was granted a long-term lease on the Tiberias region in Galilee (part of Ottoman Syria at the time), from Sultan Suleiman the Magnificent, in exchange for guaranteeing a substantial increase in the yearly tax revenues. The Ottoman Empire, under the Sultan, had conquered that part of the Holy Land some years earlier, but it was largely a desolate place. As a result, she obtained the ruling authority over the Tiberias area. With the help of the Sultan, she then began to rebuild the area's abandoned towns to make them available to refugees so they could settle there if they wished. Her aim was to make Tiberias into a major new centre of Jewish settlement, trade and learning. A Jewish traveler who visited Tiberias around this time mentions how she had lent support to the Jewish community there, and how that after her death they were compelled to ask for Jewish donations elsewhere. This venture has often been called one of the earliest attempts at a modern Zionist movement. Dona Gracia (Mendes) Nasi died in Istanbul in early 1569.

After reading ten biographies on her life I have become a bit expert on her life. That is why I think that we should change the usual ending of her biography. Most of the biographies mention that Dona Gracia died in Istanbul in 1569, however, we don't have historical substantiation on that. One can read on the Internet the entry "Where did Dona Gracia Die?" Posted on August 22, 2011 by Dona Gracia Admin: "We don't know for sure where Doña Gracia died. Cecil Roth, the distinguished historian, always maintained she died in Tiberias, and that a special mansion had been built for her there. However, we could not find any evidence of this. We did, however, find a letter to the authorities in Dubrovnik, signed by her nephew and partner Don Joseph Nasi, informing them of her recent passing. Its language suggests she was still active in Istanbul right up until her death. I have always believed she died in the comfort of her family home there, rather than take the dangerous journey onwards to Tiberias. The confusion might have occurred because it's possible Doña Gracia left instructions for her body to be taken to holy ground in Tiberias after her death. That's one of the holiest burial places in Israel, second only to the Mt. of Olives in Jerusalem, where she had sent the bones of her late husband, who had died in Lisbon many years before." I, personally think that if Dona Gracia would have died in Istanbul we would have plenty of documentation on that as we have on other events that occurred in this city, which was the capital of the Ottoman Empire. She was one of the most prominent personalities of the capital, knew personally ambassadors and statesmen, and probably the richest person in Turkey. So, it is quite impossible that her death would not have been noticed. That is why she probably died in Tiberias, where she had a mansion, and because of that the event was not noticed in the capital. If we don't know the truth for sure, I think that one is allowed to take an artistic license, and decide that she settled in Tiberias and died there. This is too good to be overlooked, a woman, a Sephardi, a conversa, was the first modern Zionist, founded Tiberias and settled there, and only because of her early death her project of Zionist settlement in the Holy Land did not last. I cannot believe that Dona Gracia preferred to remain in Istanbul when all her life's purpose was to renew the state of Israel in her times. Why did she build a mansion in Tiberias if she did not intend to settle there? Dona Gracia always set the example to all her congregation, she dared opposing the King of Portugal, Charles V Emperor of the Holy Roman Empire, the Pope. All the time she had only one aim – to return to the faith of her ancestors and to renew the Jewish settlement in Tiberias and the Holy Land. So I cannot believe, that a moment before attaining her goal she decided to remain in Istanbul instead of settling in Tiberias.

Though Dona Gracia disappeared into oblivion almost immediately and remained hardly known for the subsequent 500 years, that is now changing, possibly due to a new sense of relevance among today's women and scholars. Instrumental to keeping her rich Jewish past alive for future generations of Jews, the Habsburg Trust headed by family relatives, Baron Corso de Palenzuela et al., have sponsored and supported historical, and testimonial exhibitions that bring to light the efforts of Dona Gracia to keeping and maintaining the Jewish civilization and legacy of the Jewish Diaspora throughout the ages. Indeed, Dona Gracia is fast becoming a cult figure on the world stage. New York City designated a Dona Gracia Day in June 2010, followed by a similar proclamation in Philadelphia a year later. Israel's political leaders honoured her for the first time in October 2010. A dedicated website [\[1\]](#) was launched in 2011. She now has a Facebook page: facebook.com/donagraciaworldwide. The Turkish government sponsored a Dona Gracia evening in New York City and has also sponsored an exhibit in Lisbon. There have been lectures, articles and festivals in her honour all over Europe. The growing numbers of women in business and the professions who attend the programs identify with her ambition, courage and even personal loneliness. An Italian white wine has been named after her. The Israeli mint has produced a commemorative medal. She now has a museum in Tiberias devoted to her life and deeds. She is idolised by the descendants of conversos she saved, now living in southern Italy, the US, Central & South America. In the TV series Muhteşem Yüzyıl, Gracia Mendes Nasi is portrayed by Turkish actress Dolunay Soyser. (A link to a lecture on the life and work of Dona Gracia.)

HONORE DE BALZAC – BIOGRAPHIES BY STEFAN ZWEIG AND ANDRE MAUROIS

I have written extensively on Balzac and his life in this book, so I'll focus in this chapter uniquely on his biographies. One of the best biographies ever written is Balzac's biography written by Stefan Zweig. Such a genius author deserves a biography written by a genius biographer. I like very much Zweig's biographies, Fouché is also a masterpiece and you can at least understand such a despicable person. But I enjoyed even more reading the masterpiece – Prometheus, the Life of Balzac, by Andre Maurois. Here again a genius author - Maurois, much more appreciated than Zweig writes a biography of another genius – Balzac. And you don't get bored by reading both biographies as they describe Balzac in quite different perspectives. I've read many other biographies by Maurois – Lélia ou la vie de George Sand, Disraeli, Ariel ou la vie de Shelley, all of them brilliant. I have read most of the novels by Balzac, but the best novel of Balzac is his life. He had a tumultuous life and it is a miracle how in such harsh conditions he could have written such momentous works. But when he wrote his works he described also multiple facets from his own biography. Both books, but especially Maurois' masterpiece, are read as a suspense story, you share with Balzac his financial problems, you participate in the writing of his masterpieces, especially after I visited Balzac's home in Paris, feeling very sorry that he was to die so young, aged only 51. We missed so many masterpieces because of that!

Zweig devoted ten years of research and writing to Balzac, which he regarded as his crowning achievement. This late work reads like a picaresque novel, with Balzac's quest for "a woman with a fortune" and recurrent episodes of the author chasing an elusive pot of gold driving the story. This biography of one classic author by another is filled with Zweig's characteristic psychological insights. He portrays the energy and "exuberance of imagination" that produced some two thousand characters in La comédie humaine, as well as the daily details of the coffee-chugging writer's life, his manic writing schedule, method of correcting proofs, dealing with publishers and reviewers, signing contracts, doing marketing and publicity. Balzac blends biography and literary history in a highly readable volume that will teach you French cultural history as you laugh out loud. "[Balzac] is sure to entertain, instruct and charm ... It is a work of art, ... alive with the teeming life of its model ... It is true both to facts and to the more elusive psychological and spiritual truth of a man who ... has remained one of the most mysterious of great creators.", Henri Peyre, Sterling professor of French Literature, Yale University, NY Times

An anonymous comment describes Zweig's biography of Balzac in a very vivid way:

According to Stefan Zweig's friend and editor, Richard Friedenthal, his biography of Balzac was intended to be a much more monumental work than this, the culminating achievement of all his biographies. However, the not-altogether-finished manuscript was left behind in Bath when Zweig went to South America in 1940. Zweig continued to work on it briefly, but he quickly lost interest, and eventually he committed suicide in 1941. On at least one occasion the manuscript was narrowly saved from destruction during German air raids before it saw its way to publication in 1946. Balzac was a prolific writer with a marvellous constitution which he proceeded to abuse mercilessly for most of his adult life. At the age of 33 he dedicated himself to writing a comprehensive collection of novels that would attempt to realistically describe every aspect of mid-19th century French society for posterity. This major work he called "La comedie humaine" (The Human Comedy). This monumental opus was projected to consist of 150 novels comprising some 2000 characters. In fact, Balzac achieved about two-thirds of this remarkably ambitious undertaking, which includes such well-known titles as "Le pere Goriot," "La cousine Bette," and "La recherche de l'absolu." Balzac wrote thousands of words virtually every day of his adult life. Or, to be more exact, every night: he slept by day until late afternoon at which time he allowed himself to socialize and, more importantly, to absorb every detail of that which he saw and heard; then at midnight, he would sit down at his desk -- for years in unheated garrets in the poorer neighborhoods of Paris -- and write prodigiously until dawn. During this time Balzac seemed to almost revel in living a life on the edge of financial disaster and emotional collapse; for most of his life he was constantly evading his creditors: "...he adopted a hundred devious ways of holding his creditors at bay, aided by his intimate knowledge of the laws, his inventive skill, and his unscrupulous effrontery."

Yet this remarkably intelligent man always remained optimistic that some day he would finish his great undertaking and eventually would be able to live a life of luxury. To assist him to attain that end, Balzac went through a succession of relationships with women (usually older, usually wealthy, usually married) with whom he had affairs and upon whom he relied for financial assistance and emotional support. He used these women to obtain his objectives. Eventually the tables turned, and it appears as if one of these women ended up using him. In 1833 a bored baroness in the Ukrainian hinterlands, one Eva de Hanska, for a lark sent a panegyric letter of admiration to Balzac. They entered into a lengthy correspondence, arranged to meet in Switzerland where they had an affair virtually under the very nose of her unsuspecting husband, who they both expected would die soon. Unfortunately, it took 10 years for the Baron to die, during which time Balzac, while swearing eternal devotion to Eva, was philandering all over Paris. The very wealthy Baroness Hanska was astute enough and cynical enough to keep Balzac waiting another seven years after her husband's death before finally consenting to marry him. In the meantime, while Balzac waited and daydreamed that his life of financial security would finally be realized, he stopped writing and instead became preoccupied in preparing an elegant house in Paris (Pavillon Beaujon on rue Fortunee) for his future bride to be, which he filled with all kinds of over-priced objets d'art. Baroness Hanska finally consented to leave Russia and marry Balzac in March 1850 only when it was apparent to her that he too would not live long. Although ailing rapidly, Balzac returned in triumph to Paris with his wife, but they hardly took up occupation of Pavillon Beaujon when he became confined to his deathbed; he died on August 18. The Baroness lived another 32 years, shrewdly holding on to his correspondence and unfinished manuscripts, fully aware that these products of Europe's (then) most famous writer, would most certainly some day fetch a fair price. This is a well-written book and it reads like a novel. (One would hardly guess this was translated, by William and Dorothy Rose, from German into English.) It was difficult for me to sympathize with Balzac when reading this account: he is a snob, he shows callous disregard about incurring indebtedness, he uses women, and he never succeeds in looking reality in the face in his own personal life, even though he has done a remarkable job of doing so in the lives of his fictitious characters. Balzac was a remarkably flawed genius.

Kirkus Review: Maurois ends the enormous, sprawling life of Balzac with the question, ""But who would wish to be Balzac?"" A man's query perhaps. A woman might write to him admiringly, at first anonymously, as so many did then. What Maurois evokes here so strongly is the writer and the lover and the always hungry dreamer of fame, greatness and happiness. Balzac's feats were prodigious. Hounded by creditors throughout his life, he bought antiques and jewelled walking sticks, and indulged in one ruinous financial deal after another. He worked for months at a frenzied pace. With a passion for unity, he tried to make a comprehensive world from his many works-- ""La Comedie Humaine."" He was lover to many women but he loved only two--Madame de Berny, his mistress in youth and twenty years his senior, and Madame Hanska, whom he married just before his death. Most of the time the narrative is just shy of the many quotations. Maurois is a little like the wise ""friend of the family"" who tells the story with all the intimate speculations, small reproaches and loving (sometimes sentimental) praise one might expect. Names, places and figures abound, and while many of these particulars are only scantily examined, one doesn't mind. Such a French abundance of ""givens"" is in keeping with the rush and energy of Balzac's life. There are good but simple summaries of Balzac's thought but for the most part this close biography draws one headlong into a fantastic life.

Balzac, the Great, by V.S. Pritchett: 'On n'a jamais peint les exigences de la gueule': the crude, sardonic introduction to the character of le cousin Pons serves Balzac himself. The fat, plebeian, butcher-like figure, shorts legged and larded with the pâtés of Tours, toothless at thirty-two, whose natural openness, goodness, and burning brilliance captivated Paris almost against its will, is the novelist of our appetites. He is Appetite itself—appetite for power, fame, money, things, women, life, mystery, and work. Until the last months of his life he makes nonsense of the moral of Le Peau de chagrin: the skin grows larger with every desire fulfilled. All his desires fed one another and, united, they fed the artist: arresting them by drinking strong coffee killed him. No wonder that at the end of his new biography, M. André Maurois exclaims with emotion, Who would not be Balzac? Any novelist would give his eyes for Balzac's energy and vitality (I beg to differ, I need my eyes...). Of course, he was cut out for his period. Appetite was the note of the day: En somme, voici le jeu que je joue, quatre hommes arront eu une vie immense: Napoleon, Cuvier, O'Connell et je vais être le quatrième. The first, "inocule des armées" had become the life of Europe; the second had married the natural world—épousé le globe; the third had incarnated a people. Balzac intended to be the fourth by carrying a whole society in his head.

THE EXAMPLE OF BALZAC has often been urged on novelists during the last fifty years but the stimulus we get from reading all the Lives by André Billy, Stefan Zweig, and now M. Maurois is illusory. The first lesson to be learned is that to hold a society in our heads it is first of all indispensable not to be completely of our time. Of Balzac, Lamartine noted: "There was nothing in him of the man of this century." And André Maurois's Life, which succeeds as "actualité" in bringing the man and his work together, in the daily process of making each other, leaves one with the same firm conclusion. Balzac belongs to the age of Louis XV and harks even further back to the age of Molière (but I think that Balzac is much more a contemporary author). He could live confidently on the assumption of universal knowledge: what a help that would be to us! Wealth for him was the seventeenth- and eighteenth-century notion of inheritance and Fortune, not the monotonous nineteenth-century system of profit, investment, wages paid, and interest accruing. His extravagances; his strong feeling for aristocracy and practical government; his habit of amassing things of value—“je suis sûr qu’au poids il y aura, dans notre maison, trois mille kilogrammes de cuivres et bronzes dorés”—in the manner of the dukes who filled up their chateaux with the loot of Europe generation after generation; his compulsion to pile up debts as if they were a form of capital; all indicate the naïf parvenu peasant who preserves in himself the ethos of an earlier age long after that age is there to guide him.

DAVID BEN GURION – BIOGRAPHY BY MICHAEL BAR-ZOHAR

In my book, I have written much about Zionism and Zionist authors, including David Ben Gurion. When reading his biography one can understand how one leader can change the whole course of action of a country. There are very few such leaders in the 20th century – Churchill, F.D. Roosevelt, Lee Kuan Yew, De Gaulle, and Ben Gurion. His leadership was instrumental in the establishment of the state of Israel. Ben Gurion had many shortcomings, but one tends to forget them when we compare them to what he has achieved in life and what he has contributed to the state of Israel. He had to combat many peacemongers and warmongers and find the right balance between the different factions of Israel. His fantastic foresight was also due to his profound intellectualism, his interest in philosophy, his grasp of historic movements. Bar-Zohar does a marvelous job in depicting Ben Gurion's personal dilemmas, and in describing him as a human person and not as a myth, as most of Israelis know him. Basically, he was very modest, never enjoyed luxuries, and I feel very sorry that today's politicians are extremely hedonists.

Throughout his long and distinguished career as Israel's principal founding father and prime minister, David Ben-Gurion kept diaries in which he recorded in detail everything from world events to the most trifling family matter. Michael Bar-Zohar has drawn extensively on these diaries and on other hitherto unavailable firsthand sources, including Ben-Gurion's secret, personal files and the hundreds of exclusive informal interviews he had with his subject over an eight-year period. This close personal relationship and access to unique source material gave him an unequalled opportunity to write the definitive biography of Ben-Gurion -- an opportunity he has superbly realized. Revealed for the first time in this biography is new information on Ben-Gurion's longtime feud with Chaim Weizmann; on the Suez War, the secret pact he concluded with Turkey, Iran and Ethiopia, the Lavon Affair, and the Sinai Campaign; and on the establishment of a nuclear reactor and other matters of a political nature. Also discussed for the first time are many details of Ben-Gurion's personal life, including his relationship with his wife and children and the story of the other woman in his life, an Englishwoman. This is the only biography to present the human side of the Israeli leader. Michael Bar-Zohar wrote an earlier book on Ben-Gurion, which was published some time ago. Forced to leave out much important material for security reasons and because Ben-Gurion himself requested it, he felt the work was incomplete. With Ben-Gurion's permission he continued his research for a second, far more ambitious study to be published after the deaths of both Ben-Gurion and his wife. The present book came out first in Israel in three volumes, where it has received wide acclaim. Unquestionably, BEN-GURION: A BIOGRAPHY is a definitive work -- a candid, objective, thorough portrait of one of the most important world figures of our time.

A comment by Harold Y. Grooms on January 6, 2002: Armed Prophet outlines the life of modern Israel's founder, David Ben-Gurion. Long on substance and short on detail, this work highlights the trials and tribulations of a man whose life is synonymous with the rebirth of modern Israel. The text begins with a description of Ben-Gurion's early life, his immigration to Israel at age 20, and the hardships of the early pioneers. Next, he describes the struggles to establish a Jewish state. His difficulties included convincing fellow Jews that statehood was both achievable and desirable in a land inhabited by hostile Arabs and governed by the British who were both openly and sometimes violently opposed to the idea. Next, he describes the campaign against Britain in Palestine/Israel followed by the Israeli War of Independence ending with the proclamation of the Jewish State May 14, 1948. Surrounded by hostile, numerically superior Arab armies and fending off challenges from within, Ben-Gurion ignored all odds and advice. His willingness to take risks, including the risk of civil war, earned him the title of "dictator" by his opponents. Readers should compare his account of the tragic Altalena affair with the one advanced by Menachem Begin in, The Revolt. Clearly, all was not peace and harmony within Israel. The book then describes Israel's role in the 1956 war with Nasser's Egypt in concert with France and Britain. Despite international repercussions, Israel demonstrated its military superiority and put teeth into Ben-Gurion's statement, "Israel depends not on what gentiles think, but on what Jews do." It concludes by enumerating Ben-Gurion's diplomatic initiatives conducted as part of his never ending attempts to provide peace, prosperity, and, most importantly, security, for his beloved Israel. Readers looking for a short, version of the events leading to the establishment of the Jewish state should read The Armed Prophet. It presents the significant events in chronological order & describes the key leaders involved. Clear, concise, & highly readable, it provides background for events that monopolize the world's attention today.

David Ben-Gurion (Hebrew: דָּוִד בֶּן-גּוּרִיּוֹן, born David Grün; 16 October 1886, Płońsk – 1 December 1973, Tel Aviv, Israel) was the primary founder of the State of Israel and the first Prime Minister of Israel. Ben-Gurion's passion for Zionism, which began early in life, led him to become a major Zionist leader and Executive Head of the World Zionist Organization in 1946. As head of the Jewish Agency from 1935, and later president of the Jewish Agency Executive, he was the de facto leader of the Jewish community in Palestine, and largely led its struggle for an independent Jewish state in Mandatory Palestine. On 14 May 1948, he formally proclaimed the establishment of the State of Israel, and was the first to sign the Israeli Declaration of Independence, which he had helped to write. Ben-Gurion led Israel during the 1948 Arab–Israeli War, and united the various Jewish militias into the Israel Defense Forces (IDF). Subsequently, he became known as "Israel's founding father".

Following the war, Ben-Gurion served as Israel's first Prime Minister and Minister of Defense. As Prime Minister, he helped build the state institutions, presiding over various national projects aimed at the development of the country. He also oversaw the absorption of vast numbers of Jews from all over the world. A centerpiece of his foreign policy was improving relationships with the West Germans. He worked very well with Konrad Adenauer's government in Bonn, and West Germany provided large sums (in the Reparations Agreement between Israel and West Germany) in compensation for Nazi Germany's persecution of the Jews during the Holocaust. In 1954 he resigned as both Prime Minister and Minister of Defense, although he remained a member of the Knesset. However, he returned as Minister of Defense in 1955 after the Lavon Affair resulted in the resignation of Pinhas Lavon. Later in the year he became Prime Minister again, following the 1955 elections. Under his leadership, Israel responded aggressively to Arab guerrilla attacks, and in 1956, invaded Egypt along with British and French forces after Egypt nationalized the Suez Canal during what became known as the Suez Crisis. He stepped down from office in 1963, and retired from political life in 1970. He then moved to Sde Boker, a kibbutz in the Negev desert, where he lived until his death. Posthumously, Ben-Gurion was named one of Time magazine's 100 Most Important People of the 20th century.

David Ben-Gurion, original name David Gruen (born Oct. 16, 1886, Płońsk, Pol., Russian Empire [now in Poland]—died Dec. 1, 1973, Tel Aviv–Yafo, Israel), Zionist statesman and political leader, the first prime minister (1948–53, 1955–63) and defense minister (1948–53; 1955–63) of Israel. It was Ben-Gurion who, on May 14, 1948, at Tel Aviv, delivered Israel’s declaration of independence. His charismatic personality won him the adoration of the masses, and, after his retirement from the government and, later, from the Knesset (the Israeli house of representatives), he was revered as the “Father of the Nation.”

Zionism fascinated the young David Gruen, and he became convinced that the first step for the Jews who wanted to revive Israel as a nation was to immigrate to Palestine and settle there as farmers. In 1906 the 20-year-old Gruen arrived in Palestine and for several years worked as a farmer in the Jewish agricultural settlements in the coastal plain and in Galilee, the northern region of Palestine. There he adopted the ancient Hebrew name Ben-Gurion. Suffering the hardships of the early pioneers, including malaria and hunger, he never lost sight of his goal. It was owing to his efforts that the 1907 convention of his Zionist socialist party, Poale Zion (“Workers of Zion”), included the following declaration in its platform: “The party aspires to the political independence of the Jewish people in this land.” With the outbreak of World War I, the Turkish governors of Palestine, their suspicions aroused by his Zionist activity, arrested Ben-Gurion and expelled him from the Ottoman Empire. During the height of the war, he traveled to New York, where he met and eventually married the Russian-born Pauline Munweis. In the last stages of World War I, the British supplanted Turkish rule in the Middle East; and with this change the Jewish settlers and their friends and supporters abroad began to realize that Zionism could rely for future assistance on Britain as well as on the wealthy and influential segments of American Jewry. Following the British government’s publication on Nov. 2, 1917, of the Balfour Declaration, which promised the Jews a “national home” in Palestine, Ben-Gurion enlisted in the British army’s Jewish Legion and sailed back to the Middle East to join the war for the liberation of Palestine from Ottoman rule.

The British had already defeated the Turks when the Jewish Legion reached the battlefield, and, when Britain received the mandate over Palestine, the work of realizing the “Jewish national home” had begun. For Ben-Gurion, the “national home” was a step toward political independence. To implement it, he called for accelerated Jewish immigration to Palestine in the effort to create a Jewish nucleus that would serve as the foundation for the establishment of a Jewish state. That nucleus was the Histadrut—the confederation of Jewish workers in Palestine founded in 1920 by Ben-Gurion (who was elected its first secretary-general) and his colleagues. The Histadrut rapidly became a central force in social, economic, and even security affairs, attaining the position of a “state within a state.” Ten years later, in 1930, a number of labour factions united and founded Mapai, the Israeli Workers Party, with Ben-Gurion at its head. In 1935 he was elected chairman of the Zionist Executive, the highest directing body of world Zionism, and head of the Jewish Agency, the movement’s executive branch. As the Jewish settlement strengthened and deepened its roots in Palestine, anxiety mounted among the Palestinian Arabs, resulting in violent clashes between the two communities. In 1939 Britain changed its Middle East policy, abandoning its sympathetic stand toward the Jews and adopting a sympathetic attitude toward the Arabs, leading to severe restrictions on Jewish immigration and settlement in Palestine. Ben-Gurion reacted by calling upon the Jewish community to rise against England, thus heralding the decade of “fighting Zionism.” On May 12, 1942, he assembled an emergency conference of American Zionists in New York City; the convention decided upon the establishment of a Jewish commonwealth in Palestine after the war. At the end of World War II, Ben-Gurion again led the Jewish community in its successful struggle against the British mandate; and in May 1948, in accordance with a decision of the United Nations

General Assembly, with the support of the United States and the Soviet Union, the State of Israel was established.

David Ben-Gurion became prime minister and minister of defense. Through internal political struggles that incensed both the right and the left, he succeeded in breaking up the underground armies that had fought the British and in fusing them into a national army, which became a model and symbol of the maturing Israeli nation and an effective force against the invading Arab armies from Syria, Jordan, Iraq, and Egypt. Although the fighting ended with an Israeli victory, the Arab leaders refused to enter into formal peace negotiations with the Jewish state. Ben-Gurion viewed the newborn state as the direct continuation of Jewish history that, in his opinion, had been interrupted 2,000 years earlier when the Roman legions had crushed the Hebrew freedom fighters and banished the Jews from Palestine. He saw the Jews' period of exile as a prolonged interlude in the history of Israel and declared that they had now regained their rightful home. In order to strengthen and develop the young nation, Ben-Gurion presented the people of Israel with a series of challenges: the absorption of mass immigration from all over the world; the assimilation of newcomers of diverse communities and backgrounds; the creation of a unified public education system; the settlement of the desert lands. In his foreign policy, he adopted an independent and pragmatic course. He used to say: "What matters is not what the Gentiles will say, but what the Jews will do." His defense policy was firm, and he answered violations of the cease-fire agreements by neighbouring Arab states with military reprisals.

His stronghanded policy inspired little sympathy for him from the governments of the United States and Britain. They preferred more moderate leaders such as Chaim Weizmann, first president of Israel, and Moshe Sharett, who was elected prime minister for a brief term (1953–55) when Ben-Gurion temporarily retired from office. Striving to gain a foothold in the Middle East, the U.S.S.R. alienated Israel by providing the Arabs with vast quantities of arms. At that time, Ben-Gurion found an ally in France. During the war in Algeria, France encountered the opposition of the united Arab front, led by Egyptian President Gamal Abdel Nasser, and consequently drew closer to Israel, supplying it with considerable amounts of military equipment; when Nasser nationalized the Suez Canal in July 1956, French initiative brought Israel to join the Franco-British military campaign against Egypt. On Oct. 29, 1956, following a secret visit to France and a meeting with French and British leaders, Ben-Gurion ordered the army to take over the Sinai Peninsula, while France and Britain were making an abortive attempt to seize the canal. Israel subsequently withdrew from Sinai after having been assured freedom of navigation in the Strait of Tiran and de facto peace along the Egyptian-Israeli border, which was to be supervised by a special United Nations force. Following the Sinai campaign, Israel entered a period of diplomatic and economic prosperity. Ben-Gurion was head of government until 1963. During his last years of office, he initiated several plans (which proved fruitless) for secret talks with Arab leaders with a view to establishing peace in the Middle East. In June 1963 Ben-Gurion unexpectedly resigned from the government for unnamed "personal reasons." His move apparently resulted in part from the bitter internal controversy between his supporters and his rivals in the party, who rose against him for the first time because of the political implications of the 1954 "Lavon Affair," involving Israeli-inspired sabotage of U.S. and British property in Egypt. The affair led Ben-Gurion in 1965 to leave Mapai with a number of his supporters and to found a small opposition party, Rafi, at the head of which he fought, with little success, against his successor, Levi Eshkol. In 1970 Ben-Gurion retired from the Knesset and from all political activity, devoting himself to the writing of his memoirs in Sde-Boquer, a kibbutz in the Negev. He published a number of books, collections of speeches/essays. Through most of his life he had also engaged in researches into history of Jewish community in Palestine & study of the Bible.

Quotes of David Ben Gurion:

Everybody sees a difficulty in the question of relations between Arabs and Jews. But not everybody sees that there is no solution to this question. No solution! There is a gulf, and nothing can bridge it... We, as a nation, want this country to be ours; the Arabs, as a nation, want this country to be theirs. Written statement (6/1919), as quoted in Time magazine (24 July 2006)

Under no circumstances must we touch land belonging to fellahs or worked by them.

There is enough room in the country for ourselves and the Arabs.

"What matters is not what the goyim say, but what the Jews do."

The State of Israel is prepared to make its contribution in a concerted effort for the advancement of the entire Middle East.

To maintain the status quo will not do. We have set up a dynamic State, bent upon creation and reform, building and expansion.

We need to anticipate the character of the times, discern embryonic forms emergent or renewed, and clear the path for circumstantial change.

We kept to our dedication and our missions. By these will the State be judged, by the moral character it imparts to its citizens, by the human values determining its inner and outward relations, and by its fidelity, in thought and act, to the supreme behest: "and thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." Here is crystallized the eternal law of Judaism, and all the written ethics in the world can say no more.

Unless we show the Arabs that there is a high price to pay for murdering Jews, we won't survive.

The most dangerous enemy to Israel's security is the intellectual inertia of those who are responsible for security.

If an expert says it can't be done, get another expert.

In Israel, in order to be a realist you must believe in miracles.

Terrorism benefits the Arabs, it may lay waste the Yishuv and shake Zionism. But to follow in the Arabs' footsteps and ape their deeds is to be blind to the gulf between us. Our aims and theirs run counter: methods calculated to further theirs, are ruinous to us. "On three fronts" (3 August 1938) as quoted in Rebirth and Destiny of Israel, New York: Philosophical Library, 1954, p. 91.

From Jewish terrorism against Arabs it is a short step to Jewish terrorism against Jews. "On three fronts" (3 August 1938) as quoted in Rebirth and Destiny of Israel, New York: Philosophical Library, 1954, p. 91.

We accepted the UN resolution, but the Arabs did not. They are preparing to make war on us. If we defeat them and capture western Galilee or territory on both sides of the road to Jerusalem, these areas will become part of the state. Why should we obligate ourselves to accept boundaries that in any case the Arabs don't accept? BRUTUS – A BIOGRAPHY BY ANNE BERNET

In my books I have adressed the issue of loyalty, patriotism, ethics, whistleblowing, tyranny and treason. Since I studied history, and even more after studying Shakespeare's play Julius Caesar, I have admired Brutus as a symbol of good citizenship, ideals, and conscience. For more than 16 centuries Brutus was the symbol of treason. I have quoted Dante sending him to the deepest pit of hell, Romans thought of him as a parricide because he betrayed his mentor Caesar and killed him. But Brutus was an idealist, sensible, sincere, feeling history's destiny, intellectual. He decides to take side in defending the values of the Republic, resorting to murder which he abhors. As he was too humanistic (if you want to shoot – shoot), he had too many scruples, and does not kill Caesar's friends and especially Marc Anthony. He even let him make a speech to the Roman people, a terrible mistake, that will cause his defeat and death. History shows that only if you don't have inhibitions you succeed, as stipulated by Machiaveli's The Prince, but even then what you have done to others shall be done to you. Anne Bernet succeeds to relate Brutus' story in a very accurate manner, we see Rome alive once again and understand all the other protagonists. Brutus is also a family man, loving very much his young wife, but nevertheless he is willing to sacrifice everything in order to head the revolution. He miscalculates the public support to Caesar and his friends, as unfortunately the public does not opt for those who benefit him most but to demagogues, tycoons, tyrants, who wrong them in the time of Brutus and in our times. And Brutus asks himself if it was worthwhile so much for the Romans who do not appreciate what he has done and rally their oppressors, a question that I have asked myself often, as all what I have done in favor of the minority shareholders, being the world pioneer of ethics to shareholders, was not appreciated at all, they did not read my books, continued to invest in shares and debentures of unscrupulous tycoons who made huge haircuts and caused them to lose their investments in the corporate scandals, the Great Recession of 2008, and the huge frauds in Israel, that I have foreseen long before their occurrence but nobody was willing to listen.

In my book I often quote entries on the issues and personalities from Encyclopedias on the Internet as Encyclopaedia Britannica and Wikipedia. I do not mention the sources, but here I'll do it to illustrate the difference between the two sources, first Britannica and then Wikipedia.

Marcus Junius Brutus, also called Quintus Caepio Brutus (born probably 85 BCE—died 42 BCE, near Philippi, Macedonia [now in northwestern Greece]), Roman politician, one of the leaders in the conspiracy that assassinated Julius Caesar in 44 BCE. Brutus was the son of Marcus Junius Brutus (who was treacherously killed by Pompey the Great in 77) and Servilia (who later became Caesar's lover). After his adoption by an uncle, Quintus Servilius Caepio, he was commonly called Quintus Caepio Brutus. Brutus was brought up by another uncle, Cato the Younger, who imbued him with the principles of Stoicism. In the 50s he opposed Pompey's increasing power, but, upon Caesar's invasion of Italy in 49, Brutus was reconciled with Pompey and served under him in Greece. When Caesar defeated Pompey at the battle of Pharsalus in 48, Brutus was captured. He was soon pardoned by Caesar, probably as a result of his mother's influence. Brutus became a member of the senior priesthood of the pontifices and from 47 to 45 governed Cisalpine Gaul (now northern Italy) for Caesar. Caesar appointed him city praetor (a high-ranking magistrate) in 44 with Gaius Cassius Longinus, and he named Brutus and Cassius in advance as consuls for 41. Brutus married Cato's daughter Porcia after Cato's death in 46.

Long optimistic about Caesar's plans, Brutus was shocked when, early in 44, Caesar made himself perpetual dictator and was deified. Always conscious of his descent from Lucius Junius Brutus, who was said to have driven the Etruscan kings from Rome, Brutus joined Cassius and other leading senators in the plot that led to the assassination of Caesar on March 15, 44 BCE. Driven from Rome by popular outrage, Brutus and Cassius stayed in Italy until Mark Antony forced them to leave. They went to Greece and then were assigned provinces in the East by the Senate. They gradually seized all of the Roman East, including its armies and treasuries. Having squeezed all the money he could out of Asia, Brutus turned the wealth into Roman gold and silver coins, some (following Caesar's example) with his own portrait on them. In late 42 he and Cassius met Mark Antony and Octavian (later the emperor Augustus) in two battles at Philippi. Cassius killed himself after being defeated in the first, and Brutus did likewise after being defeated in the second. Mark Antony gave him an honourable burial. Contrary to the principles he espoused as a Stoic, Brutus was personally arrogant, and he was grasping and cruel in his dealings with those he considered his inferiors, including provincials and the kings of client states. He was admired by Cicero and other Roman aristocrats, and after his death he became a symbol of resistance to tyranny. Shakespeare found in the Parallel Lives of Plutarch the basis for his sympathetic portrayal of the character Brutus in the play Julius Caesar. Brutus was an eminent orator of the Attic school of public speaking— i.e., he adhered to rhetorical principles based on notions of naturalness in reaction to trends toward excessive displays of emotion (of the Asiatic school)—and he wrote many literary works, all lost. Some of his letters survive among Cicero's correspondence.

Marcus Junius Brutus (early June 85 BC – 23 October 42 BC), often referred to as Brutus, was a politician of the late Roman Republic. After being adopted by his uncle he used the name Quintus Servilius Caepio Brutus, but eventually returned to using his original name. He is best known in modern times for taking a leading role in the assassination of Julius Caesar. Marcus Junius Brutus Minor was the son of Marcus Junius Brutus Maior and Servilia Caepionis. His father was killed by Pompey the Great in dubious circumstances after he had taken part in the rebellion of Lepidus; his mother was the half-sister of Cato the Younger, and later Julius Caesar's mistress. Some sources refer to the possibility of Caesar being his real father, despite Caesar's being only 15 years old when Brutus was born. Brutus' uncle, Quintus Servilius Caepio, adopted him in about 59 BC, and Brutus was known officially for a time as Quintus Servilius Caepio Brutus before he reverted to using his birth-name. Following Caesar's assassination in 44 BC, Brutus revived his adoptive name in order to illustrate his links to another famous tyrannicide, Gaius Servilius Ahala, from whom he was descended. Brutus held his uncle in high regard and his political career started when he became an assistant to Cato, during his governorship of Cyprus. During this time, he enriched himself by lending money at high rates of interest. Brutus was also active in the province of Cilicia, in the year before Cicero was proconsul there; Cicero documents how Brutus profited from money lending to the provincials in his Letters. He returned to Rome a rich man, where he married Claudia Pulchra. From his first appearance in the Senate, Brutus aligned with the Optimates (the conservative faction) against the First Triumvirate of Marcus Licinius Crassus, Gnaeus Pompeius Magnus and Gaius Julius Caesar.

When civil war broke out in 49 BC between Pompey and Caesar, Brutus followed his old enemy and present leader of the Optimates, Pompey. When the Battle of Pharsalus began, Caesar ordered his officers to take Brutus prisoner if he gave himself up voluntarily, but to leave him alone and do him no harm if he persisted in fighting against capture. After the disaster of the Battle of Pharsalus, Brutus wrote to Caesar with apologies and Caesar immediately forgave him. Caesar then accepted him into his inner circle and made him governor of Gaul when he left for Africa in pursuit of Cato and Metellus Scipio. In 45 BC, Caesar nominated Brutus to serve as urban praetor for the following year. Also, in June 45 BC, Brutus divorced his wife and married his first cousin, Porcia Catonis, Cato's daughter. According to Cicero the marriage caused a semi-scandal as Brutus failed to state a valid reason for his divorce from Claudia other than he wished to marry Porcia. The marriage also caused a rift between Brutus and his mother, who resented the affection Brutus had for Porcia. Around this time, many senators began to fear Caesar's growing power following his appointment as dictator in perpetuity. Brutus was persuaded into joining the conspiracy against Caesar by the other senators. Eventually, Brutus decided to move against Caesar after Caesar's king-like behavior prompted him to take action.

His wife was the only woman privy to the plot. The conspirators planned to carry out their plot on the Ides of March (March 15) that same year. On that day, Caesar was delayed going to the Senate because his wife, Calpurnia Pisonis, tried to convince him not to go. The conspirators feared the plot had been found out. Brutus persisted, however, waiting for Caesar at the Senate, and allegedly still chose to remain even when a messenger brought him news that would otherwise have caused him to leave.

When Caesar finally did come to the Senate, they attacked him. Publius Servilius Casca Longus was allegedly the first to attack Caesar with a blow to the shoulder, which Caesar blocked. However, upon seeing Brutus was with the conspirators, he covered his face with his toga and resigned himself to his fate. The conspirators attacked in such numbers that they even wounded one another. Brutus is said to have been wounded in the hand and in the legs. After the assassination, the Senate passed an amnesty on the assassins. This amnesty was proposed by Caesar's friend and co-consul Mark Antony (Marcus Antonius). Nonetheless, uproar among the population caused Brutus and the conspirators to leave Rome. Brutus settled in Crete from 44 to 42 BC. In 43 BC, after Octavian received his consulship from the Roman Senate, one of his first actions was to have the people who had assassinated Julius Caesar declared murderers and enemies of the state. Marcus Tullius Cicero, angry at Octavian, wrote a letter to Brutus explaining that the forces of Octavian and Mark Antony were divided. Antony had laid siege to the province of Gaul, where he wanted a governorship. In response to this siege, Octavian rallied his troops and fought a series of battles in which Antony was defeated.

Upon hearing that neither Mark Antony nor Octavian had an army big enough to defend Rome, Brutus rallied his troops, which totalled about 17 legions. When Octavian heard that Brutus was on his way to Rome, he made peace with Antony. Their armies, which together totalled about 19 legions, marched to meet Brutus and Gaius Cassius Longinus. The two sides met in two engagements known as the Battle of Philippi. The first was fought on October 3, 42 BC, in which Brutus defeated Octavian's forces, although Cassius was defeated by Antony's forces. The second engagement was fought on October 23, 42 BC and ended in Brutus' defeat. After the defeat, he fled into the nearby hills with only about four legions. Knowing his army had been defeated and that he would be captured, Brutus committed suicide by running into his own sword being held by two of his own men. Among his last words were, according to Plutarch, "By all means must we fly; not with our feet, however, but with our hands." Brutus also uttered the well-known verse calling down a curse upon Antony (Plutarch repeats this from the memoirs of Publius Volumnius): Forget not, Zeus, the author of these crimes (in the Dryden translation this passage is given as Punish, great Jove, the author of these ills). Plutarch wrote that, according to Volumnius, Brutus repeated two verses, but Volumnius was only able to recall the one quoted. Mark Antony, as a show of great respect, ordered Brutus' body to be wrapped in Antony's most expensive purple mantle (this was later stolen and Antony had the thief executed). Brutus was cremated, and his ashes were sent to his mother, Servilia Caepionis. His wife Porcia was reported to have committed suicide upon hearing of her husband's death, although, according to Plutarch (Brutus 53 para 2), there is some dispute as to whether this is the case: Plutarch states that there is a letter in existence that was allegedly written by Brutus mourning the manner of her death. Brutus' chronology:

- 85 BC: Brutus was born in Rome to Marcus Junius Brutus The Elder and Servilia Caepionis.
- 58 BC: He was made assistant to Cato, governor of Cyprus which helped him start his political career.
- 53 BC: He was given the quaestorship in Cilicia.

- 49 BC: Brutus followed Pompey to Greece during the civil war against Caesar.
- 48 BC: Brutus was pardoned by Caesar.
- 46 BC: He was made governor of Gaul.
- 45 BC: He was made Praetor.
- 44 BC: Murdered Caesar with other liberatores; went to Athens and then to Crete.
- 42 BC: Battle with Mark Antony's forces.

This was the noblest Roman of them all:
 All the conspirators save only he Did that they did in envy of great Caesar;
 He only, in a general honest thought
 And common good to all, made one of them.
 His life was gentle, and the elements
 So mix'd in him that Nature might stand up
 And say to all the world "This was a man!"

William Shakespeare, Julius Caesar, Act 5, Scene 5 (Mark Antony)

The phrase Sic semper tyrannis! ["thus, ever (or always), to tyrants!"] is attributed to Brutus at Caesar's assassination. The phrase is also the official motto of the Commonwealth of Virginia.

The well-known phrase "Et tu, Brute?" ("And you, Brutus?") is famous as Caesar's utterance in the play Julius Caesar, although they are not his last words, and the sources describing Caesar's death disagree about what his last words were.

CHARLES CHAPLIN – AUTOBIOGRAPHY

I admire Charlie Chaplin, I have seen most of his films, included some of them in my courses, and show them to my grandchildren who enjoy them a century after they were produced. Charlie Chaplin had a tumultuous life, he always felt close to the poor and underprivileged, not forgetting where he came from, even when he became a very rich man. He had also the courage of his convictions and dared oppose McCarthyism, exiling from the US and living the last part of his life in Switzerland. Chaplin has written an autobiography, a masterpiece, letting us enter into his life, as only a genius like him could relate and experience, a long and rewarding life. I enjoy most reading autobiographies as no biographers can grasp the life of a person as the person himself, provided of course that the person knows how to write. Chaplin writes in sincerity, in a vivid style, making us witness an entire epoch – the legendary epoch of the silent movies.

Chaplin's heartfelt and hilarious autobiography tells the story of his childhood, the challenge of identifying and perfecting his talent, his subsequent film career and worldwide celebrity. In this, one of the very first celebrity memoirs, Chaplin displays all the charms, peculiarities and deeply-held beliefs that made him such an endearing and lasting character. Re-issued as part of Melville House's Neversink Library, My Autobiography offers dedicated Chaplin fans and casual admirers alike an astonishing glimpse into the heart and the mind of Hollywood's original genius maverick. Take this unforgettable journey with the man George Bernard Shaw called "the only genius to come out of the movie industry" as he moves from his impoverished South London childhood to the heights of Hollywood wealth and fame; from the McCarthy-era investigations to his founding of United Artists to his "reverse migration" back to Europe, My Autobiography is a reading experience not to be missed. "The best autobiography ever written by an actor. An astonishing work." —Chicago Tribune "A moving picture of the hero himself. A truly fascinating book." —The New York Times Book Review "The most original, virile book about the theater in a long, long time.” —Atlantic Monthly “It holds the reader entranced. Every page can be read with pleasure.” —The Times (London) “The crucial artist of the twentieth century.”: The New Yorker “Among the greatest geniuses of film.” —Roger Ebert “Few men in this century in any field attained his stature with the public.” —New York Times

“Chaplin was not just ‘big,’ he was gigantic. In 1915, he burst onto a war-torn world bringing it the gift of comedy, laughter and relief while it was tearing itself apart through World War I. Over the next 25 years, through the Great Depression and the rise of Adolf Hitler, he stayed on the job. . . It is doubtful any individual has ever given more entertainment, pleasure and relief to so many human beings when they needed it the most.” —Martin Sieff “For me, comedy begins with Charlie Chaplin. I know there were screen comedies before he came along . . . But none of them created a persona as unique or indelible as the Little Tramp, and no one could match his worldwide impact.” —Leonard Maltin “For a star who made his fortune in the silent movies, Charlie Chaplin has a surprising way with words. His My Autobiography, published in 1964 and recently reissued, moves along at a quick clip, lit up throughout its many pages by bright anecdotes, easy humor, and a confident way with a good yarn.” —Biographile

SIR CHARLES SPENCER “CHARLIE” CHAPLIN was born in 1889 in London to impoverished parents. He began performing at age ten as a member of a juvenile clog-dance troupe. In 1913, while he was touring with a vaudeville act in the US, Keystone films recruited Chaplin to make films. In only his second short—Kid Auto Races at Venice—he debuted his “Little Tramp” character, and his fame quickly exploded. He went on to write, direct, and star in some of the most critically acclaimed movies ever made, including the classics The Gold Rush, City Lights, The Great Dictator, Monsieur Verdoux, and Modern Times—for which he also wrote the song “Smile,” still a standard. In 1919 he founded the United Artists film studio along with Mary Pickford, Douglas Fairbanks, and D.W. Griffith, and in 1929, the first year of the Academy Awards, he won an award for “versatility and genius” in The Circus. But Chaplin’s career took a dark turn during the McCarthy era, when he was accused of “un-American activities” and monitored by the FBI; he would later satirize the McCarthy committee in his A King in New York, but when he visited the UK in 1952 his re-entry permit to the US was revoked. Objecting to what he described as “lies and propaganda by powerful reactionary groups”, he moved with his family to Switzerland, where he would live until his death on Christmas day 1977.

Comment by Snorre Smari Mathiesen on November 25, 2008: Despite all the exquisite books that have been devoted to Charlie Chaplin through the years, the comedian's own account of his life remains vital to anyone interested in his life and work. In fact, it seems to me that the relevance of MY AUTOBIOGRAPHY increases as every new book is written, as every Chaplin-biographer since has relied so heavily on the vast number of unique recollections provided in this book. Thus to not recognize it in its entirety would likely result in an unbalanced view of the man. First published in 1964, Chaplin had made all but one of his films at this point, being well into his seventies, and presumably felt ready to tell his life story as he recalled it. It seems to be the general standpoint that the first twelve or so out of the twenty-nine chapters are the most fascinating. Born in London in 1889, Chaplin's recollections of the late Victorian era, as seen through the eyes of someone who suffered a confused and insecure childhood, are often heartwrenching. Although Chaplin's early years are told in retrospect, half a century after he became one of the richest and most celebrated personalities of his time, one senses through his writing that feelings of desperation and inferiority never quite left him. I constantly found myself imagine not Chaplin the man, but Charlie the boy telling me his story as though it happened yesterday. His first spontaneous appearance on the stage at five, the constant struggle to make both ends meet, his mother's first and subsequent transmissions to mental asylums, the death of his alcoholic father, his first experience with love, his rise from a child dancer to a major music hall comedian, which led to his first movie contract while on tour in the States; it is all here, told through a vast amount of anecdotes. London of the 1890s-early 1900s is brought to life, I dare say, like no other first-hand account I have ever read on this period.

Having spent about one-third of the book recalling his childhood, Chaplin then devotes an entire chapter on his first year in the movie industry, at Keystone Studios in 1914. We are given access to his thoughts on the various directors and comedians he worked with early on, paving the way to the birth of his famous Tramp character, who within months turned Chaplin into not only a star but also the truly first icon of the movies. The comedian spends some time further into the book analyzing the development of his character, explaining how the Little Fellow (as he always named him) matured from the rather intuitive creature of the first one- and two-reelers, into the far more lovable Tramp most of us remember. When I first read this book as a 12-year old (in an excellent Norwegian translation), I remember being particularly fascinated to be told that Chaplin as early as in 1916 intended to make a science-fiction comedy, having his Tramp character travel to the moon; the film was never made, but a planned sequence involving a feeding-machine was much later included in MODERN TIMES. However, after providing us with much valuable information on his first few years as a film-maker, Chaplin seems to be less willing to directly discuss his working methods. Of course, he does recall in some detail the making of and receptions to his feature-length masterpieces, and also occasionally shares some thoughts on how he was inspired to do these films. Particularly interesting is the part recalling how Chaplin suddenly felt inspired to work again after attending a performance of five-year old child dancer Jackie Coogan, after having experienced a creative block for months. This boost of inspiration persuaded Chaplin to hire young Jackie, which in turn led to his first feature-length film THE KID. On the whole, though, the time spent on his movies is generally not as vast as many fans and historians would possibly expect it to be. Several pages are spent on the comedian's various trips around the world in the 1930s, whereas the making of MODERN TIMES is gained less than two.

One has to keep in mind that Chaplin quite likely wrote these memoirs as much for his own sake as that of any others', and it can be assumed that he didn't find it sufficiently amusing to recall the exhausting periods he spent on his masterpieces. On the other hand, he expressed in interviews that he remembered his youthful years with nostalgia (who doesn't), which may explain why he appears more eager to discuss that part of his life and career. As for his private life, Chaplin appears selective as to what he wishes to cover. His second marriage, which had resulted in a most stressful public scandal in the 1920s, is wrapped up in a few sentences. Even so, Chaplin does not ignore controversial aspects of his life as a public figure; he is frank with his interest in sex, which was mostly present when he had no particular work to attend, and he spends a fair amount of time recalling the awful Joan Barry-scandal in the 1940s. Also thoroughly covered are his feelings on leaving the United States in 1952, after his re-entry permit was revoked; understandably, there is arguably a trace of bitterness to be found, although not nearly as much, I think, as one might expect. Chaplin still prefers not to dwell on these things, though, which is understandable considering that he'd led a very happy life with his fourth wife Oona and their children for twenty years by this time. Charlie's feelings of love for Oona are beautifully expressed towards the end of the book. He also shares his impressions of many famous people he acquainted; among the more interesting of these celebrities are W.R. Hearst, J. Edgar Hoover, Winston Churchill, Mahatma Gandhi, Albert Einstein and Claude Debussy, as well as movie stars such as Douglas Fairbanks and Mary Pickford. Despite some possible, slight disappointments, MY AUTOBIOGRAPHY remains a very engaging read throughout. The first chapters dealing with his youth may be the most enthralling part, but the entire book most definitely deserves to be read -- and re-read. The vocabulary is outstanding. We should be grateful that Chaplin wrote this book; without it, later great biographies on the comedian would unquestionably have been more speculative, especially whereas his early years are concerned.

FELIX MENDELSSOHN – ON WINGS OF SONG – BIOGRAPHY BY WILFRID BLUNT

Jakob Ludwig Felix Mendelssohn Bartholdy (3 February 1809 – 4 November 1847), born and widely known as Felix Mendelssohn, was a German composer, pianist, organist and conductor of the early Romantic period. A grandson of the philosopher Moses Mendelssohn, Felix Mendelssohn was born into a prominent Jewish family. Although initially he was brought up without religion, he was later baptised as a Reformed Christian. Mendelssohn was recognised early as a musical prodigy, but his parents were cautious and did not seek to capitalise on his talent. Mendelssohn enjoyed early success in Germany, where he also revived interest in the music of Johann Sebastian Bach, and in his travels throughout Europe. He was particularly well received in Britain as a composer, conductor and soloist, and his ten visits there – during which many of his major works were premiered – form an important part of his adult career. His essentially conservative musical tastes, however, set him apart from many of his more adventurous musical contemporaries such as Franz Liszt, Richard Wagner and Hector Berlioz. The Leipzig Conservatoire (now the University of Music and Theatre Leipzig), which he founded, became a bastion of this anti-radical outlook. Mendelssohn wrote symphonies, concerti, oratorios, piano music and chamber music. His best-known works include his Overture and incidental music for A Midsummer Night's Dream, the Italian Symphony, the Scottish Symphony, the overture The Hebrides, his mature Violin Concerto, and his String Octet. His Songs Without Words are his most famous solo piano compositions. After a long period of relative denigration due to changing musical tastes and anti-Semitism in the late 19th and early 20th centuries, his creative originality has now been recognised and re-evaluated. He is now among the most popular composers of the Romantic era, and possibly the most liked composer in the world.

The biography On Wings of Song by Wilfrid Blunt is quite good in describing the epoch and Mendelssohn's life, the meeting with Queen Victoria and Prince Albert who admired his music, the Jewish connotations, his music. As I admire Mendelssohn's music, I enjoyed reading this biography, understanding better the composer. The first classical music that I loved were Mendelssohn's works and especially his Violin Concerto which moves me to tears everytime that I hear or see it in concert. I also experienced a "unique" event when, at the age of 18 while I was a young student in Jerusalem, I saw a concert of the Israeli Radio orchestra at the YMCA hall, that was broadcasted live, and when the soloist started to play the second movement of the Violin Concerto he got mixed up, the conductor stopped the concert, and they started to play the Concerto from the beginning. There are all kind of bunglers, you can mix up the name of the Beauty Queen and crown the wrong one, you can tear your evening dress in the middle of a reception, you can even maintain at a strait-laced dinner in London as I did that my family came to England after Spain in 1492 when Jews were not allowed in England until 1657, but the Violin soloist erring in a live broadcast was probably one of the most embarrassed bunglers.

On 21 March 1816, at the age of seven years, Mendelssohn was baptized with his brother and sisters in a home ceremony by Johann Jakob Stegemann, minister of the Evangelical congregation of Berlin's Jerusalem Church and New Church. Although Mendelssohn was a conforming (if not over-zealous) Christian as a member of the Reformed Church, he was both conscious and proud of his Jewish ancestry and notably of his connection with his grandfather Moses Mendelssohn. He was the prime mover in proposing to the publisher Heinrich Brockhaus a complete edition of Moses's works, which continued with the support of his uncle Joseph Mendelssohn. Mendelssohn was notably reluctant, either in his letters or conversation, to comment on his innermost beliefs; his friend Devrient wrote that "[his] deep convictions were never uttered in intercourse with the world; only in rare and intimate moments did they ever appear, and then only in the slightest and most humorous allusions". Thus for example in a letter to his sister Rebecka, Mendelssohn rebukes her complaint about an unpleasant relative: "What do you mean by saying you are not hostile to Jews? I hope this was a joke [...] It is really sweet of you that you do not despise your family, isn't it?" Some modern scholars have devoted considerable energy to demonstrate either that Mendelssohn was deeply sympathetic to his ancestors' Jewish beliefs, or that he was hostile to this and sincere in his Christian beliefs.

In 1835 Mendelssohn was named conductor of the Leipzig Gewandhaus Orchestra. He chose this position although he had also been offered direction of the opera house in Munich and the editorship of the prestigious music journal, the Allgemeine musikalische Zeitung. Mendelssohn concentrated on developing the musical life of Leipzig, working with the orchestra, the opera house, the Choir of St. Thomas Church, and the city's other choral and musical institutions. Mendelssohn's concerts included, in addition to many of his own works, three series of "historical concerts" and a number of works by his contemporaries. He was deluged by offers of music from rising composers and would-be composers; amongst these was Richard Wagner, who submitted his early Symphony, which to Wagner's disgust Mendelssohn lost or mislaid. This is probably one of the reasons why Wagner hated Mendelssohn, it is amazing how small incidents like that may have such an impact. Mendelssohn also revived interest in Franz Schubert. Robert Schumann discovered the manuscript of Schubert's 9th Symphony and sent it to Mendelssohn, who promptly premiered it in Leipzig on 21 March 1839, more than a decade after Schubert's death. A landmark event during Mendelssohn's Leipzig years was the premiere of his oratorio St. Paul, given at the Lower Rhenish Festival in Düsseldorf in 1836, shortly after the death of the composer's father, which much affected him; Felix wrote that he would "never cease to endeavour to gain his approval [...] although I can no longer enjoy it". St. Paul seemed to many of Mendelssohn's contemporaries to be his finest work, and sealed his European reputation.

In 1829 Mendelssohn paid his first visit to Britain, where his former teacher Ignaz Moscheles, already settled in London, introduced him to influential musical circles. In the summer he visited Edinburgh, where he met among others the composer John Thomson, whom he later recommended to be Professor of Music at Edinburgh University. On his eighth visit in the summer of 1844, he conducted five of the Philharmonic concerts in London, and wrote: [N]ever before was anything like this season – we never went to bed before half-past one, every hour of every day was filled with engagements three weeks beforehand, and I got through more music in two months than in all the rest of the year. On subsequent visits he met Queen Victoria and her musical husband Prince Albert, who both greatly admired his music. In the course of ten visits to Britain during his life, totalling about 20 months, Mendelssohn won a strong following, sufficient for him to make a deep impression on British musical life. He composed and performed, and he edited for British publishers the first critical editions of oratorios of Handel and of the organ music of J.S. Bach. Scotland inspired two of his most famous works: the overture The Hebrides (also known as Fingal's Cave); and the Scottish Symphony (Symphony No. 3). On his last visit to Britain in 1847, Mendelssohn was the soloist in Beethoven's Piano Concerto No. 4 and conducted his own Scottish Symphony with the Philharmonic Orchestra before the Queen and Prince Albert. This left him exhausted and ill from a hectic schedule. The death of his sister Fanny on 14 May 1847 caused him great distress. On 4 November, Mendelssohn died in Leipzig after a series of strokes. He was only 38, remaining forever young.

In the immediate wake of Mendelssohn's death, he was mourned both in Germany and England. However, the conservative strain in Mendelssohn, which set him apart from some of his more flamboyant contemporaries, bred a corollary condescension amongst some of them toward his music. Mendelssohn's relations with Berlioz, Liszt and others had been uneasy and equivocal. Listeners who had raised questions about Mendelssohn's talent included Heinrich Heine, who wrote in 1836 after hearing the oratorio St. Paul that his work was "characterized by a great, strict, very serious seriousness, a determined, almost importunate tendency to follow classical models, the finest, cleverest calculation, sharp intelligence and, finally, complete lack of naïveté. But is there in art any originality of genius without naïveté?" Such criticism of Mendelssohn for his very ability – which could be characterised negatively as facility – was taken to further lengths by Richard Wagner. Mendelssohn's success, his popularity and his Jewish origins irked Wagner sufficiently to damn Mendelssohn with faint praise, 3 years after his death, in an anti-Jewish pamphlet Das Judenthum in der Musik: [Mendelssohn] has shown us that a Jew may have the amplest store of specific talents, may own the finest and most varied culture, the highest and tenderest sense of honour – yet without all these pre-eminences helping him, were it but one single time, to call forth in us that deep, that heart-searching effect which we await from art... The washiness and the whimsicality of our present musical style has been... pushed to its utmost pitch by Mendelssohn's endeavour to speak out a vague, an almost nugatory Content as interestingly and spiritedly as possible. Wagner is a member of the disgraceful gallery of anti-Semites who denigrate Jews' works only because they are Jews, or alternatively if they don't like the works of a Jew they generalize this dislike to all Jews. This was the start of a movement to downgrade Mendelssohn's status as a composer which lasted almost a century, the echoes of which still survive today in critiques of Mendelssohn's supposed mediocrity.

In the 20th century the Nazi regime and its Reichsmusikkammer cited Mendelssohn's Jewish origin in banning performance and publication of his works, even asking Nazi-approved composers to rewrite incidental music for A Midsummer Night's Dream. (Carl Orff obliged.) Under the Nazis, "Mendelssohn was presented as a dangerous 'accident' of music history, who played a decisive role in rendering German music in the 19th century 'degenerate'." You have to be completely twisted, degenerate and hateful if you find such divine music as the music of Mendelssohn to be degenerate, and I'll not say a word against Wagner's music, that they thought was divine, as I do not want to sound prejudiced against such a divine anti-Semite. I just advise the reader to compare A Midsummer Night's Dream to the Goetterdaemmerung – the Twilight of the Gods, with Bruennhilde, Woglinde, Wellgunde and Flosshilde, and decide what Gods are most divine... Mendelssohn's reputation in England remained high throughout the 19th century. Prince Albert inscribed (in German), a libretto for the oratorio Elijah in 1847: To the noble artist who, surrounded by the Baal-worship of false art, has been able, like a second Elijah, through genius and study, to remain true to the service of true art. Mendelssohn's Wedding March from A Midsummer Night's Dream was played at the wedding of Queen Victoria's daughter, Princess Victoria, The Princess Royal, to Crown Prince Frederick of Prussia in 1858, and it remains popular at marriage ceremonies. I included the music in the program of the surprise party to Ruthy, as it is one of the best musical works that I admire most. I may be not sophisticated enough to prefer Mendelssohn, Verdi and Offenbach to Wagner, but I also prefer Renoir to Picasso, Paul Anka to the Beatles, the Golden Girls and Dear John to Friends and Seinfeld...

Charles Rosen in a chapter on Mendelssohn in his 1995 book The Romantic Generation both praises and criticizes the composer, calling him a "genius" with a "profound" comprehension of Beethoven and "the greatest child prodigy the history of Western music has ever known". Although Rosen feels that in his later years, without losing his craft or genius, the composer "renounced ... his daring", he calls Mendelssohn's relatively late Violin Concerto in E minor "the most successful synthesis of the Classical concerto tradition and the Romantic virtuoso form". Rosen calls the Fugue in E minor (later included in Mendelssohn's Op. 35 for piano) a "masterpiece"; but in the same paragraph calls Mendelssohn "the inventor of religious kitsch in music". Such opinions are evidence of how a more nuanced appreciation of Mendelssohn's work has developed over the last 50 years, together with the publication of a number of modern biographies placing his achievements in context. Mercer-Taylor comments on the irony that "this broad-based reevaluation of Mendelssohn's music is made possible, in part, by a general disintegration of the idea of a musical canon", an idea which Mendelssohn "as a conductor, pianist and scholar" had done so much to establish. All of Mendelssohn's oeuvre – including the most popular works such as the E minor Violin Concerto and the Italian Symphony – has been explored more deeply, and prior concepts about the Victorian conventionality of the oratorio Elijah have been shed. The frequently intense and dramatic world of Mendelssohn's chamber works has been more fully recognized. Virtually all of Mendelssohn's published works are now available on CD, and his works are frequently heard in the concert hall and on broadcasts. An English Heritage blue plaque commemorating Mendelssohn was placed at 4 Hobart Place in Belgravia, London, in 2013. As the critic H. L. Mencken concluded, if Mendelssohn indeed missed true greatness, he missed it "by a hair". Well, I'd rather miss true greatness by a hair, living a gratifying life, than be great and live a tormented life, although Picasso proves to us that you can be great and have a gratifying life, so in some extraordinary cases you can win them all!

ARTHUR RUBINSTEIN – AUTOBIOGRAPHY

I am not an expert in classical music. Most of the concerts that I have seen were not by the best orchestras nor the best performers. That is why I remember quite good the few concerts that I have seen with Isaac Stern as a soloist, with Daniel Barenboim as a conductor, and I have related them in my book. It goes without saying that I have never seen Arthur Rubinstein, but I heard him many times in records, recorded concerts, and it is almost as being there. I believe that he is the best pianist whom I ever heard, as he was driven more by his emotions than by his technique. I enjoyed much reading his autobiography, as he is not only a very gifted musician, but also a raconteur, as stated in this introduction for his memoirs: With his uncanny memory, with his unsurpassed gift as raconteur, the adored maestro of the piano at last tells the story of his life - the adventures, the struggles, the amours, the mishaps, and the triumphs... Rubenstein's life and music have been illuminated with a radiant energy, a magic that could only have sprung from a gargantuan love of life. His book - bursting with anecdote, information, opinion, with life - is a testament to that great gift. Rubinstein's second part memoir is the continuation of his first earlier work which dealt with his childhood and early adult years. This work covers the year 1917 to 1980. It opens with an account of his South American tour, then goes on to tell of his brief time in New York. It then gives much space to his years in Paris in the 1920's and 1930's. It goes on to tell of his meeting his future wife Nela, their feeling the Gestapo in France and settling in Hollywood. As in Paris Rubinstein rapidly establishes himself as desired social figure and mingles with the social elite. Above all of course Rubinstein is a great master pianist. And he has much to say about the way an artist must use the gift which he has been given. This is a rich work and one most highly recommended. I cannot write an obituary on Arthur Rubinstein, and so I bring here the outstanding obituary written on him by The New York Times on 12/21/1982.

Arthur Rubinstein, one of the greatest pianists of the century, died quietly in his sleep at his home in Geneva yesterday. He was 95 years old. For about 85 of those years he had been playing the piano in public, and he lived to see himself win the highest acclaim. He started at the age of 3, made his debut shortly thereafter, and was still playing until about five years ago. In his youth he was eclipsed by such giants as Sergei Rachmaninoff and Josef Hofmann. But as the pianists of an older generation died, and as Mr. Rubinstein went on from strength to strength, he became the most popular pianist before the public and the most respected. His only rival was Vladimir Horowitz. In his autobiography, Mr. Rubinstein conceded that Mr. Horowitz was the better pianist but not the better musician. Mr. Horowitz, however, was absent from the public from 1952 to 1965, and in those years Rubinstein had no real rival.

Idolized All Over the World - Possible competitors, such as Sviatoslav Richter, did not play that often in the West, and the legendary, eccentric Arturo Benedetti Michelangeli gave relatively few concerts. Mr. Rubinstein had the international field pretty much to himself, and was idolized all over the world. In the pantheon of 20th-century pianists, Mr. Rubinstein's place is assured as one of the titans. With his remarkable technique, golden tone and musical logic, with the elan he brought to his interpretations, with his natural, unforced and unflurried style, he was unique - as, indeed, every great artist is. What Mr. Rubinstein offered, above all others, was the ability to transmit the joy of music. "What good are vitamins?" Mr. Rubinstein demanded when he was asked, at the age of 75, to explain his youthful vivacity and fire. "Eat a lobster, eat a pound of caviar - live! If you are in love with a beautiful blonde with an empty face and no brains at all, don't be afraid. Marry her! Live!" The great pianist conscientiously applied the prescription to himself, and everything he did was con brio. There was dash to his rich mode of life, just as there was to his making of sumptuous music. From his earliest to his latest days he was the embodiment of the grand manner. Even at an age when most musical artists slow down, he was giving concerts on an average of one every three days; he was recording furiously out of his vast repertory; he was the life of innumerable parties and luncheons; he was the irrepressible talker and raconteur; he was, ineffably, Rubinstein. The supreme and serious musician that most Americans knew was Rubinstein since 1937, the year of his historic reappearance at Carnegie Hall that marked a new dedication to his art. "It is said of me that when I was young I divided my time impartially among wine, women and song," he remarked afterward. "I deny this categorically. Ninety percent of my interests were women." There was an element of exaggeration to this comment, but it was certainly true that the post-1937 Rubinstein was a mature artist. His special fusion of Romanticism and intellectualism caught the public fancy. Audiences could not hear enough of him; his concerts were standing-room only; his recordings sold in the millions; he performed all over the world at fees of $6,000 and more a concert, then the highest fee for any artist before the public.

Chopin a Specialty - Rubinstein moved with confident ease through a repertory ("my musical valise") that started with Mozart, proceeded through Beethoven and the entire 19th century and wound up with such moderns as Heitor Villa-Lobos, Igor Stravinsky and Karol Szymanowski. Chopin, however, was his specialty and it was a Chopinist that he was considered by many without peer. As superb an interpreter of Chopin as he was, he counted himself also as a Mozart man. He returned to Mozart "on my knees" in late life. Undeniably, part of the Rubinstein manner (and mystique) was his pianistic pedigree, which went back to many legendary 19th-century musicians. Rubinstein's first big-name enthusiast was Joseph Joachim, the violinist friend of Brahms. His early piano training came from Karl Heinrich Barth, a pupil of Franz Liszt, who had been taught by Carl Czerny, who had in turn been a pupil of Beethoven. Rubinstein, moreover, drew personally from such titans as Camille Saint-Saens, Ignace Jan Paderewski, Eugene Ysaie, Claude Debussy, Cesar Franck, Artur Schnabel and Vladimir de Pachmann.

Played 'Crowd Pleasers' - In his youth Rubinstein tended to perform what he called "the crowd pleasers" - Tchaikovsky, Rachmaninoff and Liszt - and his piano belched fire. With maturity, however, he turned more and more to Chopin, his fellow Pole, whose compositions of delicate expression called for an artist who could make the piano breathe. Rubinstein was so spontaneous and exuberant that he declined to think of his artistry as work. "I can play 10 hours," he remarked in his late 70's. "I don't feel that making art should be called work. Work is something disagreeable that you have to do." That statement, like so many of Rubinstein's about himself, was true and not true; for this most gifted of pianists worked very hard by any other standards than his own to perfect and project his artistry, even if he liked to create the impression that it was all effortless, as it indeed sounded to audiences. In a recording session for RCA Victor Records, in Webster Hall here, he would play and replay a piece until he was satisfied that it was his best; and before a concert he would practice, particularly passages that he thought he might have difficulty with. Nothing less than perfection was tolerated. Practice for its own sake, however, was not Rubinstein's notion of how to extract music from the printed notes. "I was born very, very lazy and I don't always practice very long," he said once. "But I must say, in my defense, that it is not so good, in a musical way, to overpractice. When you do, the music seems to come out of your pocket. If you play with a feeling of 'Oh, I know this,' you play without that little drop of fresh blood that is necessary -and the audience feels it." On another occasion he explained in his tumbling English his philosophy this way: "At every concert I leave a lot to the moment. I must have the unexpected, the unforeseen. I want to risk, to dare. I want to be surprised by what comes out. I want to enjoy it more than the audience. That way the music can bloom anew. It's like making love. The act is always the same, but each time it's different."

Happiness in Performance - One of the elements of freshness in a Rubinstein concert was also the evident happiness with which he played. "Don't tell Hurok" - Sol Hurok, his impresario of many years - he admonished one interviewer, "but I'd play the piano for nothing, I enjoy it so much." This was of the essence of the pianist's attitude toward life generally, which he expressed by saying: "Happiness is to live. It is the only happiness possible." This total joie de vivre undoubtedly lent a special quality to Rubinstein's music ("Music is not a hobby, not even a passion with me; music is me") and lifted him above his contemporaries. Moreover, underneath his panache he possessed insight and a capacity for musical growth that markedly enriched the work of his later years. For example, he recorded the Schumann "Carnaval" at 65; and when he recorded the piece 10 years later "there was no question but that it was a better performance," in the opinion of Harold C. Schonberg, then The New York Times music critic. "His colleagues consider him a miracle, geriatric experts mumble when they talk about him and nobody will put up much of an argument when he is called the greatest living pianist," Mr. Schonberg wrote on Rubinstein's 75th birthday. He continued: "Vladimir Horowitz may have a more glittering technique, Rudolf Serkin may have a better way with German music, Rosalyn Tureck more of an affinity for Bach, Sviatoslav Richter for Prokofiev and Scriabin, and Claudio Arrau may have a bigger repertory. "But no pianist has put everything together the way Rubinstein has. Others may be superior in specific things, but Rubinstein is the complete pianist."

Presence of Majesty - To see and hear Rubinstein at a concert was to be in the presence of majesty. A 5-foot-8-inch figure resembling a cube on sticks in impeccable evening clothes strode briskly on stage and received the homage that his subjects' thunderous applause connoted. He bowed slightly from the waist, and his pearl-gray hair glistened in the stage lights and his blue eyes darted around the hall. Before the applause subsided, he seated himself on the piano bench and carefully draped the tails of his coat over its back. Then he raised his face, masked in concentration, until his nose tilted upward at a 45-degree angle. His back was erect. He kneaded his fingers. He bowed his head for a moment as the last coughs died out and then he eased into the keyboard. Sometimes in playing he seemed about to overwhelm the instrument as he rose off the bench; other times, when the music was lyrical, he moved his arms and hands in graceful symmetry. His eyes appeared fixed on a distant object. "I like to look up over the piano," he explained, "so I can listen and follow the lines of the piece. Looking at your fingers for accuracy is too confusing. I'd rather miss a few notes than play by phrase instead of as a whole." Rubinstein's sound, or tone was elegant. One critic described it as "a firm, clear, colorful sonority that is one of the miracles of 20th-century pianism." "He simply cannot produce an ugly, forced or jagged sound no matter how heavily he comes down on the keyboard," this observer continued. "As soon as his fingers touch the keys, one knows that the Old Master is at work; and the penetrating tone rolls out and fills the house."

Ingredients of Tone - The pianist himself did not know how to account for the distinctiveness of his tone. Contributing to it, however, was his physique, considered perfect for a pianist. His torso was short and muscular; his arms were long, his biceps those of a blacksmith and his fists like a longshoreman's. He would spread his spatulate fingers whose tips were calloused from years at the keyboard, to encompass the 12 notes from C to G -two more than normal. Moreover, his pinkies were nearly as long as his index fingers, and his elongate thumbs extended downward at an obtuse angle. Another ingredient of Rubinstein was an unusually fine ear that, among other things, permitted him to spin music through his mind. "At breakfast, I might pass a Brahms symphony in my head," he said. "Then I am called to the phone, and half an hour later I find it's been going on all the time and I'm in the third movement." This phenomenon was the basis for a game Rubinstein's friends like to play with him, in which they would randomly name musical excerpts that he would then play. He was seldom stumped. "Rubinstein is the only pianist you could wake up at midnight and ask to play any of the 38 major piano concertos," according to Edouard van Remoortel, the conductor. The pianist was usually labeled a Romantic, but that was an error, in the opinion of many critics. Mr. Schonberg, for example, wrote: "Rubinstein today is called - mistakenly - a Romanticist. And he is - in relation to the younger pianists, just as he was a Classicist in relation to the older ones. Today's new style is represented by the young spit-and-polish pianists, who never hit a wrong note, who come to music with the utmost dedication and who all tend to sound alike."

A Born Extrovert - If Rubinstein had not been a pianist, his friends were certain that he could have made an enjoyable living as a stand-up comedian and raconteur. A born extrovert, he loved to meet people, to act out his stories and to tell them in the eight languages in which he was fluent - English, Polish, Russian, French, German, Italian, Spanish and Portuguese. When he told a story, he performed all the roles with appropriate facial expressions and gestures -climbing atop a chair or table and beating time if the anecdote were about a conductor, or simpering coquettishly if it were about a young woman. Even lighting a cigar (he prudently laid in a big stock of Upmann's just before the United States break with Cuba) was an act worth watching. One of his stories concerned the time he and Albert Einstein played a violin and piano sonata. The physicist missed a cue in one passage and came in four beats late. They started again, and once more Einstein missed the cue. Rubinstein turned to his partner in mock exasperation and exclaimed "For God's sakes, professor can't you even count up to four?" In another Rubinstein story which he delighted to tell on himself, he was making a recording in Webster Hall when a porter in overalls carrying a pail and mop came up to the piano, watched silently and then asked, "Do you do this professionally?" Rubinstein always said that at this point he was for the only time in his life nonplussed.

In addition to a sensitive appreciation of the best in cigars, haute cuisine and wines, the pianist was a connoisseur of painting who was able to say, "I knew Picasso before he was Picasso and I was Rubinstein." Apart from his Picassos, Rubinstein's collection was dominated by Vuillards, Chagalls and Dufys. Rubinstein's start in life was much more modest than his eventual eminence. Born in Lodz, Poland, on Jan. 28, 1887, he was the youngest of seven children of Ignace Rubinstein, a textile producer, and Felicia Heyman Rubinstein. (Late in life, Rubinstein became vain about his age, and advanced his birth date to 1889, according to those who knew him.) He took piano lessons at the age of 3, and at 4 he was performing in public and flourishing a calling card that read "Artur the Great Piano Virtuoso." A little later, tired of being asked if he were a relative of the great Anton Rubinstein, he inscribed the words "No Relation" on the cards. By the time he was 8 he had exhausted the teaching resources of the Warsaw Conservatory of Music and was sent to Berlin to perform for Joachim, the violinist. Impressed by the boy's precocity, the friend of Brahms and Schumann assumed responsibility for his study. He was indeed, the conductor at Rubinstein's Berlin debut at the age of 11. There followed recitals in Dresden, Hamburg, Warsaw (where he played under the baton of Emil Mlynarski, his future father-in-law) and a visit to Paderewski in Switzerland. Among Paderewski's guests was a Boston critic who brought Rubinstein to the attention of the Knabe Piano Company, which underwrote his first American tour in 1906. His showpiece was Saint-Saens's Concerto No. 2 in G for Piano and Orchestra, which he performed at Carnegie Hall. The tour lasted 75 concerts and it was not a critical success. He returned to Europe disheartened. He went back to school, so to speak, by playing in private for Paderewski. "I just played and listened, and he would tell me little things," Rubinstein recalled. He did not return to the concert stage until 1910. He lived in Paris, had a series of love affairs, became friends with artists and writers. "I had, often, lobster and champagne, and often I had nothing," he said. "Once I spent two days on a park bench because I could not pay my hotel bill. But I also had wonderful chamber music with Ysaye and Thibaud and Casals."

Recitals for Allied Cause - Back as a performer Rubinstein established himself in Europe as a top-ranking pianist. In the early part of World War I he gave recitals for the Allied cause. At that time he became so enraged with the German treatment of the Poles and the Belgians that he vowed never to appear in Germany, and he never thereafter did. A turning point in Rubinstein's career came in 1916, when he made a tour of Spain. It was a grand success. Four concerts stretched to 125. And from there he went to South America. "They loved me for my improvised way of playing," he recalled. "It was not really intentional with me, because I could not even then work out a conception and stick to it. But to them it was a relief from what they called 'the pedants.'" Convinced that he would now be a hit in the United States, he reappeared in Carnegie Hall in 1919, but his reception was lukewarm. "When I played in the Latin countries they loved me because of my temperament," he said later. "But when I played in England and America, they felt that because they had paid their money they were entitled to hear all the notes. I dropped too many notes in those days, and they felt they were cheated."

Rebuffed but not chastened, he returned to Europe, where he divided his time between concerts and high living with the international set. He was as frequently sitting on the Riviera or palling around with Picasso, the Prince of Wales, an attractive woman or Ernest Hemingway as he was sitting before a concert grand. The late 20's were decisive for the pianist's later career. First, in 1928, he met 15-year-old Aniela Mlynarski, daughter of the Polish conductor. According to them both it was love at first sight, although they were not married until 1932. Second, Rubinstein began recording. Third, he began to take stock of himself as an artist. The result was the end of his days as a playboy and intensive study and practice - six, eight, nine hours a day. In the process he brought discipline to his abundant temperament and intelligence to his grand manner. "I didn't want my kids to grow up thinking of their father as either a second-string pianist or as a has-been," he remarked. Rubinstein's early recordings (now collectors' items) called renewed attention to him, and Mr. Hurok, his agent, persuaded him to have another go at the United States. When he made his reappearance at Carnegie Hall on Nov. 21, 1937, he was acclaimed as "a giant who had transformed his joie de vivre into the strongest alloy of his music." It was the start of the love affair between American music lovers and Rubinstein that never thereafter abated.

Moved to California - In World War II he moved his family from Paris to Beverly Hills, Calif., where he ghosted at the piano for movie actors who played the roles of Schumann, Liszt, Brahms and others. The films were "I've Always Loved You" (1946), "Song of Love" (1947), "Night Song" (1947), "Carnegie Hall" (1947) and "Of Men and Music" (1950), in which he appeared as himself. Meanwhile, Rubinstein toured the world - North Africa, China, Japan, Indonesia, Australia, Europe. In 1958 he returned to Warsaw after an absence of 20 years, and the audience cheered and applauded and brought him back from the wings 10 times after he played Chopin's "Polonaise" in A flat. "He is considered on all levels a great pianist and a great Pole," an American in Warsaw reported recently. "The Poles pay him the great compliment of considering him one of theirs malgre tout."

Became U.S. Citizen - Rubinstein became an American citizen in 1946 and moved to New York in the 1950's. As his career came to a halt, because of his extreme age and loss of sight, Rubinstein found time to concentrate on his autobiography, which he had promised to write for Alfred A. Knopf many years previously. In 1973, the first volume, "My Young Years," was published, and was followed in 1980 by "My Many Years." In his last years his constant companion was his secretary, Annabelle Whitestone. His American audience had a chance to enjoy Rubinstein the man and the musician once more when he was interviewed on a 90-minute television special, as part of the "Great Performances" series, entitled "Rubinstein at 90." The pianist's other honors included Commander of the Legion of Honor, officer of Portugal's Order of Santiago, Commander of the Chilean Republic and Commander of the Crown of Belgium's Order of Leopold I, and he wore Spain's Cross of Alfonso XII. In addition, he had the Bronze Medallion of the City of New York and the Gold Medal of London's Royal Philharmonic Society. He held honorary degrees from Yale, Northwestern, Brown and Rutgers. Mr. Rubinstein is survived by his wife, Aniela, of Paris, and four children, Eva, Paul, Alina A. and John A., all of Manhattan.

CHARLES de GAULLE: MEMOIRES de GUERRE & BIOGRAPHY - JEAN LACOUTURE

Charles André Joseph Marie de Gaulle; 22 November 1890 – 9 November 1970) was a French general, resistant, writer and statesman. He was the leader of Free France (1940–44) and the head of the Provisional Government of the French Republic (1944–46). In 1958, he founded the Fifth Republic and was elected as the 18th President of France, until his resignation in 1969. He was the dominant figure of France during the Cold War era and his memory continues to influence French politics. Born in Lille, he graduated from Saint-Cyr in 1912. He was a decorated officer of the First World War, wounded several times and later taken prisoner at Verdun. He tried to escape with a fellow prisoner, but failed several times. After the war ended, he was released. During the interwar period he advocated mobile armoured divisions. At the beginning of the Second World War, he led an armoured division which counterattacked the invading German army, before being appointed to the French Government as Under-Secretary for War. Refusing to accept his government's armistice with Nazi Germany in 1940, de Gaulle exhorted the French population to resist occupation and to continue the fight against Axis powers in his Appeal of 18 June. He led a government in exile and the Free French Forces against the Axis. Despite frosty relations with Britain and especially the United States, he emerged as the undisputed leader of the French resistance. He became Head of the Provisional Government of the French Republic in June 1944, the interim government of France following its Liberation. As early as 1944, de Gaulle introduced a dirigist economic policy, which included substantial state-directed control over a capitalist economy. It contributed to thirty years of unprecedented growth.

Frustrated by the return of petty partisanship in the new French Fourth Republic, he resigned in early 1946, but continued to be politically active as founder of the RPF Party (Rassemblement du Peuple Français). He retired in the early 1950s and wrote his War Memoirs, which quickly became a classic of modern French literature. When the Algerian war was ripping apart the unstable Fourth Republic, the National Assembly brought him back to power during the May 1958 crisis. De Gaulle founded the Fifth Republic with a strong presidency, and he was elected in the latter role. He managed to keep France together while taking steps to end the war, much to the anger of the Pieds-Noirs (Frenchmen settled in Algeria) and the military; both previously had supported his return to power to maintain colonial rule. He granted independence to Algeria and progressively to other French colonies. In the context of the Cold War, de Gaulle initiated his "Politics of Grandeur", asserting that France as a major power should not rely on other countries, such as the United States, for its national security and prosperity. To this end, de Gaulle pursued a policy of "national independence" which led him to withdraw from NATO's military integrated command and to launch an independent nuclear development program that made France the fourth nuclear power. He restored cordial Franco-German relations in order to create a European counterweight between the "Anglo-Saxon" (American and British) and Soviet spheres of influence. However, he opposed any development of a supranational Europe, favouring a Europe of sovereign Nations and twice vetoed Britain's entry into the European Community. De Gaulle openly criticised the U.S. intervention in Vietnam and the "exorbitant privilege" of the U.S. dollar, and supported an independent Quebec. Although re-elected President in 1965, in May 1968 he appeared likely to lose power amid widespread protests by students and workers, but survived the crisis with backing from the Army and won an election with an increased majority in the Assembly. Nonetheless, de Gaulle resigned in 1969 after losing a referendum in which he proposed more decentralization. He died a year later at his residence in Colombey-les-Deux-Églises, leaving his Presidential memoirs unfinished. Many French political parties and figures claim the gaullist legacy. His autobiography, Memoires de Guerre, is one of the best autobiographies ever written. I was moved extremely by his ordeal, crises, and his success,

My appreciation on Charles de Gaulle is ambiguous – I admire him as one of the best leaders of the 20th century, having the courage to say no to the defeatist conduct of Petain and many other Frenchmen, establishing a Free France organization from almost nothing in 1940-1944, and contributing to the victory of the Allied Powers in World War II, although a modest part. I respect him as he was not willing to compromise and after leading France from the ashes after 1944, he retired from public life to his hometown. He refused to be part of the corrupt and weak Fourth Republic until 1958, and he decided to take the reins of power only after he was assured that he can "restart" France from a robust base, with the solid structure, economy and spirit of the Fifth Republic. I cannot compare of course to De Gaulle, but I think like him that the only way to address the problems of Israel is by establishing a Second Republic, as I have stated many times, including in this book. De Gaulle had a tremendous contribution to France, yet I came to France in 1967 when he was already very old (77 – I was then 23, but now when I'm almost 72 I'm convinced that I am still young, so all is relative...) and has lost contact with the French people, especially the young generation. The French Students Revolution in which I participated in May 1968, was directed against his "monarchical reign" - The de Gaulle administration's attempts to quell those strikes by police action only inflamed the situation further, leading to street battles with the police in the Latin Quarter, followed by the spread of general strikes and occupations throughout France. De Gaulle went to a French military base in Germany, and after the army forces came from Germany through Fontainebleau where we saw them, De Gaulle returned, dissolved the National Assembly, and called for new parliamentary elections for 23 June 1968.

Violence evaporated almost as quickly as it arose. Workers went back to their jobs, and when the elections were finally held in June, the Gaullist party emerged even stronger than before. The June 1968 elections were a major success for the Gaullists and their allies; when shown the spectre of revolution or civil war, the majority of the country rallied to him. Well, like Mme. Angot/Alphonse Karr have said: "Plus ca change plus c'est la meme chose". His party won 352 of 487 seats, but de Gaulle remained personally unpopular; a survey conducted immediately after the crisis showed that a majority of the country saw him as too old, too self-centered, too authoritarian, too conservative, and too anti-American. The general sentiment was that, being a career military man, he almost completely preoccupied himself with foreign and national defense matters, giving scant attention to the economy or domestic problems. French youth also considered the nearly 80-year-old de Gaulle a dinosaur and that it was time for a younger generation to lead the country. I would add to that also that de Gaulle was too anti-Israeli and anti-Jewish, although I would not call him anti-Semitic, as De Gaulle was motivated uniquely by the interests of France. He did so when he betrayed the trust of the French Algerians, who were instrumental in bringing him back to power, awarding independence to Algeria. France recognised Algerian independence on 3 July 1962, while a blanket amnesty law was belatedly voted in 1968, covering all crimes committed by the French army during the war. In just a few months in 1962, 900,000 pied-noirs left the country. After 5 July, the exodus accelerated in the wake of the French deaths during the Oran massacre of 1962. I remember the declarations of both De Gaulle and the Algerian leaders stating that Frenchmen will be allowed to remain in Algeria in a multi-cultural community. The Évian Accords, which were the basis of Algeria's independence, consisted of 93 pages of detailed agreements and arrangements. In essence these covered cease-fire arrangements, prisoner releases, the recognition of full sovereignty and right to self-determination of Algeria, in addition to guarantees of protection, non-discrimination and property rights for all Algerian citizens. The European French community (the colon population), the pieds-noirs and indigenous Sephardi Jews in Algeria was guaranteed religious freedom and property rights as well as French citizenship with the option to choose between French and Algerian citizenship after three years. This was another example of kalam fadi/lies fabrication and misinformation from both sides – the Algerians and De Gaulle. Both parties knew that it would be impossible to maintain this clause, and indeed almost all the Christians and Jews, together with many Muslims who assisted France, had to leave Algeria. In fact, except Morocco, in all Arab states there is no presence whatsoever of Europeans and Jews.

Back to De Gaulle and Israel - With tension rising in the Middle East in 1967, de Gaulle on 2 June declared an arms embargo against Israel, just three days before the outbreak of the Six-Day War. This was an abrupt change in policy. In 1956 France, Britain and Israel had cooperated in an elaborate effort to retake the Suez Canal from Egypt. Israel's air force operated French Mirage and Mystère jets in the Six-Day War, and its navy was building its new missile boats in Cherbourg. Though paid for, their transfer to Israel was now blocked by de Gaulle's government. But they were smuggled out in an operation that drew further denunciations from the French government. The last boats took to the sea in December 1969, directly after a major deal between France and now-independent Algeria exchanging French armaments for Algerian oil. Under de Gaulle, following the independence of Algeria, France embarked on foreign policy more favorable to the Arab side. President de Gaulle's position in 1967 at the time of the Six-Day War played a part in France's new-found popularity in the Arab world. Israel turned towards the United States for arms, and toward its own industry. Actually, De Gaulle was one of the worthiest benefactors of Israel as his embargo forced us to rely only on ourselves, and we established a superb military industry, with high tech weapons, billions of dollars sales and exports throughout the world. I personally have to thank De Gaulle twice – because of his embargo I did not leave Israel to reside for a few years in Europe to supervise the purchase of Sabca and Cobelda and a few days later I met Ruthy, fell in love and shortly after married. Elbit, the company where I worked and became its VP Sales and Finance, flourished because of the embargo, just after it was founded in 1966. In a televised news conference on 27 November 1967, de Gaulle described the Jewish people as "this elite people, sure of themselves and domineering". In his letter to David Ben-Gurion dated 9 January 1968, he explained that he was convinced that Israel had ignored his warnings and overstepped the bounds of moderation by taking possession of Jerusalem, and so much Jordanian, Egyptian, and Syrian territory by force of arms. Apparently, we should have waited for the Arabs who attacked us to conquer us, because they would have done it very moderately and withdrawn immediately following de Gaulle's request. De Gaulle was a fervent Catholic and was outraged by the Jews taking possession of Jerusalem, but he never complained when the Muslims conquered Jerusalem, probably because he got used to it after the Crusaders lost the Holy Land to Saladin, when the Ayyubid army defeated the Crusaders at the decisive Battle of Hattin in 1187, leading the way to the Muslims' re-capture of Palestine from the Crusaders who had conquered it 88 years earlier.

THEODOR HERZL – BIOGRAPHIES BY AMOS ELON AND BY SHLOMO AVINERI

I had the privilege to learn Greek Political Philosophy by the best professor I have ever had – Shlomo Avineri. It was in 1961, when I was only 17 at the Hebrew University of Jerusalem. Avineri was very young but he was already an erudite. I still remember everyone of his lectures during a whole year – Plato, Aristotle, Socrates, the Epicureans, Heraclitus – Panta Rhei:

"πάντα χωρεῖ καὶ οὐδὲν μένει" καὶ "δις ἐς τὸν αὐτὸν ποταμὸν οὐκ ἂν ἐμβαίης"
Panta chōrei kai ouden menei kai dis es ton auton potamon ouk an embaies
 "Everything changes and nothing remains still ... you cannot step twice into the same stream".

Avineri taught me the foundations of Ethics. He was responsible that throughout my whole business career I kept my ethical credo according to the precepts that he taught me and that the Ancient Greeks taught me. It is a scandal and outrage that business ethics is not taught in most or quite all the Economics departments from those days until today. I have tried very hard to convince Economics' deans to let me teach ethics but to no avail. And it is ironic that ethics are taught in Political Sciences and not in Economics where it is needed most. This absurd situation brings about such deplorable phenomenons as Milton Friedman, the supremacy of the unethical neoliberalism, and the absence of moral considerations in most regimes throughout the world. Teaching of business ethics in MBAs has become in most of the cases window dressing, and most of the students enter their business life without any ethical credo. Luckily, I studied both Economics and Political Sciences at the University, and had such outstanding professors as Avineri. I remember him as I had very few excellent professors in my life – Shlomo Avineri, Henri-Claude de Bettignies at Insead, Yvon Pesqueux at CNAM, Teddy Weinshall, Zimna – who taught me Julius Caesar in high school, none of my professors in Economics, and the professor who was so much devoted to her students (Avineri taught us in a huge hall of a hundred or more students) – Ora Bareket, my teacher of Physics at High School in Haifa. Ora succeeded to teach us a very difficult subject Physics (5 unities) in 1960-1961 – we came to the last year just before the matriculation exam without basic knowledge of Physics and she succeeded in six months to teach us brilliantly all the subjects, with a strong, calm, and stable character. Our class was wild (not me – I was always a nerd), but she overcame this hurdle and gained the respect and attention of all the students. She sacrificed herself on our behalf when we had more than a month teachers' strike, she still came to teach us unofficially breaking the strike and while she was pregnant she taught us until one day before the birth of her baby, and also immediately after he was born. She was not obliged to do so, but she did it because she felt responsibility for our success and because she... loved us. And I got 9 the highest grade because of her and many other students got also high grades. I mentioned her in my diary & I do so here.

Well, I was a little bit carried away, as in many other instances in this book, but I allow myself to be governed by the stream of consciousness. It is much more interesting than a structured presentation. I managed to do so during ten years of teaching without any notes, any powerpoint presentation, and the students loved it, and got the essence of ethics like that. Back to Herzl!

Theodor Herzl had been a successful Viennese journalist and a less successful playwright with no political ambitions. That changed in 1896, when he published The Jewish State. In response to the wide resonance that the book received, Herzl convened the first Zionist Congress in Basel, Switzerland, in 1897, which founded the Zionist Organization in order to establish a national home for the Jewish people in Palestine, recognized and guaranteed by public international law. As he transformed himself in just a few years from fin-de-siècle writer and editor into the leader of an international political movement, Herzl learned politics and diplomacy on the run. And while he was not the first to call for the establishment of a Jewish nation-state, his activity was crucial in creating the institutional and organizational structure which helped to bring the idea of a Jewish state to the attention of world leaders and international public opinion. In his efforts to gain broad support for his vision, Herzl met with the Ottoman Sultan; the German Emperor Wilhelm II; Pope Pius X; British, Russian, and German ministers; as well as an enormous number of other government and public opinion leaders of most European countries. By the time of his early death in 1904 at the age of forty-four, Herzl had transformed Jewish public discourse and made the idea of a Return to Zion into a reality, albeit still a weak one, in world politics. In this concise, illuminating biography, the renowned Israeli political scientist and public intellectual Shlomo Avineri portrays Herzl's intellectual and spiritual odyssey from a private and marginal individual into a Jewish political leader and shows how it was the political crisis of the Austro-Hungarian Habsburg Empire, torn apart by contending national movements, which convinced Herzl of the need for a Jewish polity. Drawing extensively on Herzl's diaries as well as his published works, Avineri tells the story of how Herzl became, with the Zionist movement that he founded, a player in international politics, and how he harnessed the power of the word to his goals as no other statesman before him had done. Combining a visionary idea with practical action, Herzl fashioned the policies and institutions that paved the way for the Jewish state.

And after the presentation on Avineri's book, we bring here the presentation and comments on Amos Elon's book: Born in Budapest to a well-to-do assimilated Jewish family, Theodor Herzl (1860-1904) and his family moved to Vienna when he was 18. He studied law before he began writing plays and pieces of journalism. Herzl became the Paris correspondent for Vienna's leading newspaper, the Neue Freie Presse, and covered the Dreyfus affair, which shocked and galvanized him to write The Jewish State: An Attempt at a Modern Solution of the Jewish Question, published in 1896. After the first Zionist congress of 1897, Herzl wrote in his diary: "In Basel I founded the Jewish state. If I said this aloud today, I would be answered by universal laughter. Perhaps in five years, and certainly in fifty, everyone will agree."

"A great dramatic biography." — Alfred Kazin, The New York Times

"Any reader familiar with the sources can appreciate the brilliance, restraint and fidelity of Elon's narrative... the excitement of events and the quality of their prime mover come through admirably." — The New Republic

“You could not put the book down without admiring Theodor Herzl’s courage and practical achievements — his romance turned into a Congress, a bank, a diplomacy.” — Bernard Avishai, The New Yorker

“A quite astonishing portrait... positively rewarding” — Kirkus Reviews

“Elon’s 1975 biography of Herzl... vividly portrayed the man with all his quirks, inventiveness and shortcomings” — Lawrence Joffe, The Guardian

“considered one of the best biographies to date of Zionist founder Theodor Herzl” — Benjamin Spier, Jerusalem Post

“arguably the best biography ever written of the founding father of Zionism, Theodore Herzl” — Tom Segev, Ha’aretz

“A fascinating book ... it has the fascination of a novel on the grand scale.” — Arthur Miller, Washington Post

“A skillfully written human look at the man whose life reads like a novel...” — Miami Herald

Sic transit gloria mundi. The author of the biography of Herzl Amos Elon left Israel in 2004, moving to Italy permanently, disillusioned with developments in Israel since 1967. I have related in this book how I watched his daughter's Danae Elon film at the Haifa Film Festival, with all the veterans of extreme dovish attitudes. Shlomo Avineri has dovish attitudes of the same scope as Elon, he advocated negotiations with the PLO when it was forbidden by law, but Avineri did not leave Israel, and never settled elsewhere. Of course, we live in a democracy where everyone can express himself as he wishes and live where he chooses. But it is ironic that the two best biographers of Herzl, and I enjoyed both biographies, are very dovish, and one of them has left the country for good and died in Italy. I cited the biography of Avineri in my courses, showing how Israel has forsaken Herzl's third way socio-economic ideology. Could it be that the biographers of Herzl have found in his life indications that Israel has forsaken Herzl's message? I differ totally from their points of view, but I remember that Avineri taught me what humanism and ethics are, and I imagine that their belief is that Israel does not act in a humane way towards the Palestinians, like Herzl preconized in his books and lectures. But Herzl had many illusions that reality has shattered. I fully adhere with Herzl's credo that Israel should be the homeland of all its citizens, a Jewish state but with equal rights to all the inhabitants. Herzl envisioned that the Arabs would be grateful for the prosperity that the Jews have bestowed to Palestine, which was an under developed land before Altneuland was established, as he writes so well in his book.

But how do we have to react against the Palestinians' leadership who don't want us to exist at all, in Israel or elsewhere, who say that the Holocaust did not exist, who incite their children to kill as many Jews as possible, who fully adhere to the radical Muslim ideology, to terrorism? I believe that all the blame is to be bestowed on the Palestinian side, as the Jews did their utmost to live in peace, but were attacked in 1948, 1967, 1973, and in all the other wars and aggressions. The conflict has nothing to do with territories, as the territorial issues were resolved with Egypt that received all its territories and we signed a peace agreement. The same applies to Jordan. The problem is that the Arabs who collaborate with Jews, like Altneuland's Reshid Bey, are perceived as traitors, the Israeli Arab leaders denounce those who want to volunteer to Civil Service even within their community, not only they are not grateful of what the Jews have accomplished since Israel was established but they want the right of return for 5 million Arabs that will bring us back to what we were in 1948, that will make us like Iraq, Syria, Yemen, Algeria, Sudan, and Gaza..., poor as Egypt, or with Sharia law as Saudi Arabia and Iran!

I have a problem – I lack completely self-hatred as many of the peacelovings have or Stockholm Syndrome or trying to justify anti-Semitism as some of the peacelovings do. In my 72 years I never forgot nor forgave those who did me wrong, I did not want to take revenge, in some cases I tried to cause them economic harm (never physical harm) that in most cases was not even equivalent to the harm they have done to me (including illicit behaviour), as I never resorted to illicit behaviour as they did. If a friend was not convenient anymore with my friendship because I attacked tycoons his benefactors, I ceased our friendship. If a young woman did not respond to my advances (the Internet is such a wonderful invention – I tried to find an entry on this subject and I found too many) I did not need the Internet which did not exist in the sixties nor the advice of a "shrink", and I ceased right away my attempts. The same goes with jobs, bosses, and... peoples. If some of the Palestinians hate us so much (not all of them, nor most of them, but enough) I do not try to befriend them at all cost, bearing the "cross" of Israel's conduct as the peacelovings do, being always in an apologetic attitude. I do not hate them I just ignore them and of course I don't denounce essential violations of human rights which do occur in reaction to the terrorist attacks (as frequent checks, searches and so on) or casualties because our airforce retaliates to the thousands of rockets of the Hamas to the launching sites which are always among Palestinian population. It goes without saying that the Palestinians never deplore our civilian casualties and give the suicide bombers the title of Shahid, with streets and honor for them. So, why should I be so eager to defend their human rights if they hate us so much? In extreme and very seldom cases when extremist Israelis resort to terrorism I denounce it fully. I am against boycott but if someone or some people boycott me why should I not retaliate and boycott them only if it does not harm me. I would not boycott Wagner because he was an anti-Semite if I enjoy his operas and of course not read his allegations, I would see films by Ken Loach even that he boycotts us as he is an excellent director, listen to the wonderful music of Theodorakis although he is against us, not boycott Israeli singers, actors, playwrights, authors who don't want to perform in the "occupied" territories, but not go to films where Mel Gibson acts, as I really don't lose anything, and visit Ireland only after I've visited 20 more countries which have a much more friendly attitude to Israel as the Balkans states, Russia or the US.

Herzl envisioned a Jewish state that combined modern Jewish culture with the best of the European heritage. Thus a "Palace of Peace" would be built in Jerusalem to arbitrate international disputes, and at the same time the Temple would be rebuilt on modern principles. Herzl did not envision the Jewish inhabitants of the state as being religious, but there was respect for religion in the public sphere. He also assumed that many languages would be spoken, and that Hebrew would not be the main tongue. Proponents of a Jewish cultural rebirth, such as Ahad Ha'am, were critical of Altneuland. In Altneuland, Herzl did not foresee any conflict between Jews and Arabs. One of the main characters in Altneuland is a Haifa engineer, Reshid Bey, who is one of the leaders of the "New Society". He is very grateful to his Jewish neighbors for improving the economic condition of Israel and sees no cause for conflict. All non-Jews have equal rights, and an attempt by a fanatical rabbi to disenfranchise the non-Jewish citizens of their rights fails in the election which is the center of the main political plot of the novel.

Herzl also envisioned the future Jewish state to be a "third way" between capitalism and socialism, with a developed welfare program and public ownership of the main natural resources. Industry, agriculture and trade were organized on a cooperative basis. Along with many other progressive Jews of the day, such as Emma Lazarus, Louis Brandeis, Albert Einstein, and Franz Oppenheimer, Herzl desired to enact the land reforms proposed by the American political economist Henry George. Specifically, they called for a land value tax. He called his mixed economic model "Mutualism", a term derived from French utopian socialist thinking. Women would have equal voting rights—as they had in the Zionist movement from the Second Zionist Congress onwards. In Altneuland, Herzl outlined his vision for a new Jewish state in the Land of Israel. He summed up his vision of an open society: "It is founded on the ideas which are a common product of all civilized nations. ... It would be immoral if we would exclude anyone, whatever his origin, his descent, or his religion, from participating in our achievements. For we stand on the shoulders of other civilized peoples. ... What we own we owe to the preparatory work of other peoples. Therefore, we have to repay our debt. There is only one way to do it, the highest tolerance. Our motto must therefore be, now and ever: 'Man, you are my brother.'"

In his novel, Herzl wrote about an electoral campaign in the new state. He directed his wrath against the nationalist party, which wished to make the Jews a privileged class in Israel. Herzl regarded that as a betrayal of Zion, for Zion was identical to him with humanitarianism and tolerance—and that this was true in politics as well as religion. Herzl wrote: "Matters of faith were once and for all excluded from public influence. ... Whether anyone sought religious devotion in the synagogue, in the church, in the mosque, in the art museum, or in a philharmonic concert, did not concern society. That was his [own] private affair." Altneuland was written both for Jews and non-Jews: Herzl wanted to win over non-Jewish opinion for Zionism. When he was still thinking of Argentina as a possible venue for massive Jewish immigration, he wrote in his diary: "When we occupy the land, we shall bring immediate benefits to the state that receives us. We must expropriate gently the private property on the estates assigned to us. We shall try to spirit the penniless population across the border by procuring employment for it in the transit countries, while denying it any employment in our country. The property owners will come over to our side. Both the process of expropriation and the removal of the poor must be carried out discretely and circumspectly ... It goes without saying that we shall respectfully tolerate persons of other faiths and protect their property, their honor, and their freedom with the harshest means of coercion. This is another area in which we shall set the entire world a wonderful example ... Should there be many such immovable owners in individual areas [who would not sell their property to us], we shall simply leave them there and develop our commerce in the direction of other areas which belong to us". Herzl was wrong all the way because he was too humanistic, but he did not foresee how barbaric Europe will become within 30 years with Nazis and fascists. The Jews contribute to society? Half of the German authors in German language were Jews in the first half of the century? Jews were instrumental in science, physics, economics, psychology? It didn't matter for the Nazis who killed them all, who banned Kafka, Heine and Mendelssohn. It doesn't matter to radical Muslims who want the right of return to Europe and havin the Sharia law in all the countries where they live, with stoning of women, murdering liberals/nonbelievers.

I understand the frustration of Amos Elon, Danae Elon, Shlomo Avineri, and many peace-loving Israelis, who want us to give back all the occupied territories (we did it in Gaza and Lebanon – and as a token of gratitude they send us thousands of rockets), who want no discrimination of Arabs, no walls/fence, no checkpoints. But they live in 1902 with Herzl when Altneuland was published, they think that all Arabs are like Reshid Bey, that if we withdraw from the West Bank we'll become a land of milk and honey. I like very much milk but I am allergic to lactose, I like very much honey but the bees keep stinging me. I am a realist, not an idealist, I was born in Egypt and have experienced the burning of Cairo, I come from the business world where the rights of the weak parties are trampled without pity, and I am aware that all is interests in life like my mother Pauline used to tell me. President Obama says that 99.9% of Muslims reject the radical interpretation of Islam, are looking for the same goals as the others, don't support terrorism. Raheel Raza, a Muslim author and human rights activist gives the figures of radical
